Bike rental Yser Cyclo (☎05.56.92.77.18; closed Sat & Sun) at 104 cours d'Yser has the best value of the various possibilities; town bikes are just €6 per day and €26 per week. Just down the road at 48 cours d'Yser, Station Vélo Services (☎05.57.95.64.21) rents bikes out from €9 per day, and is also the place to go if you need any repairs done.

Books and newspapers Presse Gambetta, on place Gambetta, sells all the main English-language papers in addition to some regional guides and maps, while Bordeaux's largest bookstore, Mollat, 15 rue Vital Carles, has a better selection. They also stock a few English-language titles, though there's more choice at helpful Bradley's Bookshop, 8 cours d'Albret.

Car rental Numerous rental firms are located in and around the train station, including Avis ☎08.20.61.16.74; Budget ☎05.56.91.41.70; Europcar ☎05.56.33.87.40; Hertz ☎05.57.59.05.95; and National/Citer ☎05.56.92.19.62. They all have outlets at the airport as well.

Cinema You're most likely to find original-language (version originale, or v.o.) films at the wonderful art-house cinema Utopia, 5 place Camille-Jullian (☎05.56.52.00.03, ☎www.cinemas-utopia.org), in a converted church. Other good options include Trianon-Jean Vigo, 6 rue Franklin, near place des Grands-Hommes (☎05.56.44.35.17, ☎www jeanvigo.com), and UGC Cinécité, 13–15 rue Georges-Bonnac (☎08.92.70.00.00, ☎www.ujc.fr). For more standard fare, there's the vast, seventeen-screen Megarama (☎08.92.69.33.17, ☎www.megarama.fr) across the Pont de Pierre in the old Gare d'Orléans.

Consulates UK, 353 bd du Président-Wilson ☎05.57.22.21.10. USA, 10 place de la Bourse ☎05.56.48.63.80.

Emergencies To call an ambulance, phone SAMU on ☎15.

Hospital Centre Hospitalier Pellegrin-Tripode, place Amélie-Raba-Léon (☎05.56.79.56.79), to the west of central Bordeaux.

Internet Cyberstation, 23 cours Pasteur is a friendly and helpful cybercafé with rates from €2 per hour (before 2pm), while Artobas, 7 rue Maucouindat just off the place St-Pierre, is more expensive but has a faster connection (Mon–Sat 11am–midnight; €3 per hour). The gare St-Jean claims to have a free Wi-Fi connection, but it seems about as reliable as the wind.

Money exchange American Express, 11 cours de l'Intendance (Mon–Fri 9.30am–5.55pm), handles most travellers' cheques and foreign currencies. The main banks along cours de l'Intendance also offer exchange facilities and 24hr ATMs.

Police Commissariat Central, 23 rue François-de-Sourdis (☎05.57.85.77.77 or ☎17 in emergencies).

The Bordeaux wine region

Touring the vineyards and sampling a few local wines is one of the great pleasures of the Bordeaux region. The wine-producing districts lie in a great semicircle around the city, starting with the Médoc in the north, then skirting east through St-Émilion, before finishing south of the city among the vineyards of the Sauternes. In between, the less prestigious districts are also worth investigating, notably those of Blaye, to the north of Bordeaux, and Entre-Deux-Mers, to the east.

There's more to the region than its wine, however. Many of the Médoc's eighteenth-century châteaux are striking buildings in their own right, while the town of Blaye is dominated by a vast fortress, and there's a far older, more ruined castle at Villandraut on the edge of the Sauternes. St-Émilion is by far the prettiest of the wine towns, and has the unexpected bonus of a cavernous underground church. For scenic views, however, you can't beat the green, gentle hills of Entre-Deux-Mers and its ruined abbey, La Sauve-Majeur.

All these places are relatively well served by public transport. There are train lines from Bordeaux running north through the Médoc to Margaux and Pauillac, and south along the Garonne valley to St-Macaire and La Réole. St-Émilion, meanwhile, lies on the Bordeaux-Sarlat line, but the station is a couple of kilometres out of town. In addition, there's a very comprehensive regional bus network, with connections from Bordeaux to most of the towns mentioned below – you can pick up a route map from the office on allées de Munich in Bordeaux. Buses are operated by several different companies, the largest being Citram Aquitaine (☎05.56.43.68.43), which runs to nearly everywhere around the city. Cycling is yet another option, as many of the towns are interconnected by well-marked, clean, blacktop footpaths that wend their way through the woods.

The Médoc

The landscape of the Médoc, a slice of land northwest of Bordeaux wedged between the forests bordering the Atlantic coast and the Gironde estuary, is itself rather monotonous: its gravel plains, occupying the west bank of the brown, island-spotted estuary, rarely swell into anything resembling a hill. Paradoxically, however, this poor soil is ideal for viticulture – vines root more deeply if they don't find the sustenance they need in the topsoil and, firmly rooted, they are less subject to drought and flooding. The region's eight appellations produce only red wines, from the grape varieties of Cabernet Sauvignon, Cabernet Franc, Merlot and, to a lesser degree, Petit Verdot. Cabernet Sauvignon gives body, bouquet, colour and maturing potential to the wine, while Merlot gives it its "animal" quality, making it rounder and softer. The D2 wine road, heading off the N15 from Bordeaux, passes through Margaux, St-Julien, Pauillac and St-Estèphe and, while the scenery might not be stunning, the many famous – albeit mostly inaccessible – châteaux are.

The problem of accommodation is much worse in the Médoc than in the rest of the wine region, but it's possible to visit the area on a day-trip from Bordeaux. Considering it's one of the most prestigious wine-growing areas in Bordeaux, it's surprisingly unwelcoming to visitors, with places to eat, and particularly affordable ones, also in short supply. There are regular bus and train services to Pauillac and Margaux, but it's worth considering car rental (see Bordeaux "Listings" opposite).

The wines of Bordeaux

With Burgundy and Champagne, the wines of Bordeaux form the “Holy Trinity” of French viticulture. Despite producing as many whites as reds, it is the latter – known as claret to the British – that have graced the tables of the discerning for centuries. The countryside that produces them encircles the city, enjoying near-perfect climatic conditions and soils ranging from limestone to sand and pebbles. It’s the largest quality wine district in the world, turning out around 500 million bottles a year – over half the country’s quality wine output and ten percent, by value, of the world’s wine trade.

The Gironde estuary, fed by the Garonne and the Dordogne, determines the lie of the land. The Médoc lies northwest of Bordeaux between the Atlantic coast and the River Gironde, with its vines deeply rooted in poor, gravelly soil, producing good, full-bodied red wines; the region’s eight appellations are Médoc, Haut Médoc, St-Estèphe, Pauillac, St-Julien, Moulis en Médoc, Listrac-Médoc and Margaux. Southwest of Bordeaux are the vast vineyards of Graves, producing the best of the region’s dry white wines, along with some punchy reds, from some of the most prestigious communes in France – Pessac, Talence, Martillac and Villenave d’Ornon amongst them. They spread down to Langon and envelop the areas of Sauternes and Barsac, whose extremely sweet white dessert wines are considered among the world’s best.

On the east side of the Gironde estuary and the Dordogne, the Côtes de Blaye feature some good-quality white table wines, mostly dry, and a smaller quantity of reds. The Côtes de Bourg specialize in solid whites and reds, spreading down to the renowned St-Émilion area. Here, there are a dozen producers who have earned the accolade of Premiers Grands Crus Classés, and their output is a full, rich red wine that doesn’t have to be kept as long as the Médoc wines. Lesser-known neighbouring areas include the vineyards of Pomerol, Lalande and Côtes de Francs, all producing reds similar to St-Émilion but at more affordable prices.

Between the Garonne and the Dordogne is Entre-Deux-Mers, an area which yields large quantities of inexpensive, drinkable table whites, mainly from the Sauvignon grape. The less important sweet whites of Sainte-Croix du Mont come out of the area south of Cadillac. Stretching along the north bank of the Garonne, the vineyards of the Côtes de Bordeaux feature fruity reds and a smaller number of dry and sweet whites.

The classification of Bordeaux wines is an extremely complex affair. Apart from the usual appellation d’origine contrôlée (AOC) labelling – guaranteeing origin but not quality – the wines of the Médoc châteaux are graded into five crus, or growths. These were established as long ago as 1855, based on the prices the wines had fetched over the previous hundred years. Four were voted the best or Premiers Grands Crus Classés: Margaux, Lafitte, Latour and Haut-Brion. With the exception of Château Mouton-Rothschild, which moved up a class in 1973 to become the fifth Premier Grand Cru Classé, there have been no official changes, so divisions between the crus should not be taken too seriously. Since then, additional categories have been devised, for instance Crus Bourgeois, which has three categories of its own. The wines of Sauternes were also classified in 1855. If you’re interested in buying wines, it’s possible to find bargains at some of the châteaux. Advantages of buying at source include the opportunity to sample before purchasing and to receive expert advice about different vintages. In Bordeaux, the best place to go is La Vinotèque (Mon–Sat 10am–7.30pm), next to the tourist office. There’s a growing fashion for organic methods and “green” wines, already available on many good labels.

To visit the châteaux, ask at the Maison du Vin in each wine-producing village; they will provide information on which châteaux accept visitors. In Bordeaux itself, this service is offered by the tourist office, which also organizes its own half-day guided tours, covering a different area each day (May–Oct daily 1.15pm; Nov–April Wed & Sat 1.15pm; €28). Generally interesting and informative, the guide translates into English the wine-maker’s commentary and answers any questions. Tastings are generous, and expert tuition on how to go about it is part of the deal.

Château Margaux and Fort Médoc

Easily the prettiest of the Bordeaux châteaux, Château Margaux is an eighteenth-century villa in extensive, sculpture-dotted gardens close to the west bank of the Gironde, some 20km north of Bordeaux. Its wine, a classified Premier Grand Cru and world-famous in the 1940s and 1950s, went through a rough patch in the two succeeding decades but improved in the 1980s after the estate was bought by a Greek family. The château (by appointment only Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 2–4pm; closed Aug and during harvest; ☎05.57.88.83.83, 🌐www.chateau-margaux.com; free) is not included in any tours, and it's best to book at least two weeks in advance.

In the small village of MARGAUX itself, there's an unusually friendly Maison du Vin (June–Sept Mon–Sat 10am–7pm, Sun 11am–4pm; Oct–May 3 days only per week; ☎05.57.88.70.82, 📧syndicat.margaux@orange.fr) that can help find accommodation and advise on visits to the appellation's châteaux. At the other end of the village, the enterprising and inviting cellar La Cave d'Ulysse provides free tastings from a variety of Margaux châteaux, giving you a chance to try and buy (and ship, if you need) some very good wines. Prices range from a €5 run-of-the-mill Médoc to €2400 for a delicate, rare 1990 Petrus. Margaux has a somewhat expensive but very comfortable hotel, Le Pavillon de Margaux (☎05.57.88.77.54, 🌐www.marojallia.com; 📍), with a fine restaurant (menus from €28). Otherwise, try the chambre d'hôte (contact M. Péry ☎ & 📞05.56.58.24.80; 📍; closed Christmas & New Year) at Castelnau-de-Médoc, 10km to the west. Besides the hotel, you can eat at Margaux's Auberge de Savoie (☎05.57.88.31.76; closed Sun & Mon evenings), next to the Maison du Vin, with excellent traditional food on menus from €26.

The seventeenth-century Fort Médoc, off the D2 road between Margaux and St-Julien by the banks of the estuary, is a good place to tuck into a few purchases between châteaux. It was designed by the prolific military architect Vauban to defend the Gironde estuary against the British. The remains of the fort are scant but scrambleable, and in summer its Toytown aspect has a leafy charm, marred only by the view of a nuclear power station across the river to the north of Blaye. Since 1990, the annual Fort Médoc jazz festival, with big-name international acts, has been held here in mid-July (☎05.56.94.43.43 for details).

A couple of kilometres south, LAMARQUE is a very pretty village, full of flowers and with a sweet church. It's a pleasant place to stop for lunch, with a very agreeable restaurant, L'Escale (menus from €10; closed Tues & evenings off season), down by the port. From here at least four ferries (one way: passengers €3.10, cycles €1.60, cars €12.60) cross the muddy Gironde daily to Blaye, another place fortified by Vauban, and an important, though less well-known, Bordeaux wine-growing centre.

Pauillac and around

PAUILLAC is the largest town in the Médoc region and central to the most important vineyards of Bordeaux: no fewer than three of the top five Grands Crus come from around here. It has grown rapidly in recent years and, while its little harbour and riverfront are pretty enough, they can't counteract the presence of the nuclear power plant across the Gironde.

Pauillac has a huge Maison du Tourisme et du Vin along the waterfront (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sun 10.30am–12.30pm & 3.00–6pm; ☎05.56.59.03.08, 🌐www.pauillac-medoc.com). It can provide you with a list of gîtes and make appointments for you to visit the surrounding châteaux

(€3.80 per château). To explore the area by bike, head to Sport Nature, 6 rue Joffre (☎05.57.75.22.60), which has decent rates for full-or half-day rental, though it's best to reserve in advance. Pauillac itself is not a great place to stay, but should you wish to, try the Hôtel de France et d'Angleterre, opposite the little harbour (☎05.56.59.01.20, 🌐www.hoteldefrance-angleterre.com; 📍; closed Christmas & New Year), with a good restaurant serving menus from €19.50 (closed Sun & Mon off season), or the welcoming riverfront campsite further south on route de la Rivière (☎05.56.59.10.03; April–Oct). Campsites are rare in the Médoc: the only other alternative is the two-star Camping Le Paradis at ST-LAURENT-DE-MÉDOC (☎05.56.59.42.15; April–Sept). Alternatively, there's an excellent chambre d'hôte about 8km northwest near the village of CISSAC: Château Guges (☎05.56.59.58.04, 🌐www.chateau-guges.com; 📍), in a large eighteenth-century house attached to a vineyard on the road to Gunes.

The most famous of the Médoc châteaux – Château Lafite–Rothschild (☎05.56.73.18.18), Château Latour (☎05.56.73.19.80) and Château Mouton–Rothschild (☎05.56.73.21.29) – can be visited by appointment only, either direct (all have English-speaking staff) or through the Maison du Vin. Their vineyards occupy larger single tracts of land than elsewhere in the Médoc, and consequently neighbouring wines can differ markedly: a good vintage Lafite is perfumed and refined, whereas a Mouton–Rothschild is strong and dark and should be kept for at least ten years. Château Mouton–Rothschild and its wine museum (which can only be visited as part of the tour; €5) is the most absorbing of the big houses: as well as the viticultural stuff, you also get to see the Rothschilds' amazing collection of art treasures, all loosely connected with wine.

St-Estèphe

North of Pauillac, the wine commune of ST-ESTÈPHE is Médoc's largest appellation, consisting predominantly of crus bourgeois properties and growers belonging to the local cave coopérative, Marquis de St-Estèphe, on the D2 towards Pauillac (tastings July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–June by appointment, ☎05.56.73.35.30). One of the appellation's five crus classés is the distinctive Château Cos d'Estournel, with its over-the-top nineteenth-century French version of a pagoda; the chais (warehouses) can be visited by appointment (☎05.56.73.15.50; English spoken). The village of St-Estèphe itself is a sleepy affair dominated by its landmark, the eighteenth-century church of St-Étienne, with its highly decorative interior. The small, home-spun Maison du Vin (May & Oct Mon–Fri 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–5pm; June & Sept Mon–Fri 10am–5pm, Sat 1.30–5.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 10am–7pm; ☎05.56.59.30.59) is hidden in the church square.

For an elegant place to stay, head for Château Pomys (☎05.56.59.73.44, 🌐www.chateaupomys.com; 📍), just south of the village, a mansion set in its own park. There are also several good chambres d'hôte in the area, including Clos de Puyzac in Pez village (☎ & 📞05.56.59.35.28; 📍) and, further along the same road near Vertheuil-en-Médoc, the hacienda-style Cantemerle (☎05.56.41.96.24, 🌐www.bab-medoc.com; 📍), both with tables d'hôte.

Blaye

The green slopes north of the Garonne, the Côtes de Bourg and Côtes de Blaye, were home to wine production long before the Médoc was planted. The wine is a rather heavier, plummier red, and cheaper than anything found on the opposite side of the river, and the Maison du Vin des Premières Côtes de Blaye on cours Vauban (Mon–Sat 8.45am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm), the main street of the pretty little town of BLAYE, serves up a representative selection of the local produce, with some ridiculously inexpensive wines – you can get a good bottle for around €5.

Blaye has long played a strategic role defending Bordeaux, and was fortified by Vauban in the seventeenth century. The citadelle deserves a wander: people still live here, and it's a strange combination of peaceful village and tourist attraction. A beautiful spot, it has grass, trees, birds and a spectacular view over the Gironde estuary. Blaye is also the last resting place of the heroic paladin Roland, whose body was brought here in 778 after the battle of Roncevaux. However, his mausoleum is now no more than a heap of rocks.

The tourist office, at 33 allées Marines (Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; ☎ 05.57.42.12.09; 🌐 www.tourisme-blaye.com), is really helpful and can reserve rooms (€1 per call) and give out details on wine tasting. If you fancy staying here, try the Auberge du Porche, 5 rue Ernest-Régnier (☎ 05.57.42.22.69, 🌐 www.auberge-du-porche.com; 📍; closed one week in March & one week in Oct), a pleasant two-star south along the riverfront with a good-value restaurant (closed Sun evening & Mon; from €15). Alternatively, there's the more expensive Hôtel La Citadelle within the old fort with views over the Garonne (☎ 05.57.42.17.10, 🌐 www.hotel-la-citadelle.com; 📍; restaurant from €22; half-board required July & Aug). Finally, there's a small municipal campsite within the citadelle (☎ 05.57.42.00.20; May–Sept).

St-Émilion

ST-ÉMILION, 35km east of Bordeaux, and a short train trip, is well worth a visit. The old grey houses of this fortified medieval town straggle down the south-hanging slope of a low hill, with the green froth of the summer's vines crawling over its walls. Many of the growers still keep up the old tradition of planting roses at the ends of the rows, which in pre-pesticide days served as an early-warning system against infection, the idea being that the commonest bug, oidium, went for the roses first, giving three days' notice of its intentions.

The Town

The town's belfry belongs to the rock-hewn subterranean Église Monolithe beneath it, which can be visited only on a guided tour from the tourist office (daily every 45 min 10.45am–5pm; €6). The tour starts in a dark hole in someone's backyard, supposedly the cave where St Émilion lived a hermit's life in the eighth century. A rough-hewn ledge served as his bed and a carved seat as his chair, where infertile women reputedly still come to sit in the hope of getting pregnant.

Above is the half-ruined thirteenth-century Trinity Chapel, which was built in honour of St Émilion and converted into a cooperage during the Revolution; fragments of frescoes are still visible, including a kneeling figure who is thought to be the saint himself. On the other side of the yard, a passage tunnels beneath the belfry to the catcombs, where three chambers dug out of the soft limestone were used as ossuary and cemetery from the eighth to the eleventh centuries. In the innermost chamber – discovered by a neighbour enlarging his cellar some fifty years ago – an eleventh-century tombstone bears the inscription: "Aulus is buried between saints Valéry, Émilion and Avic", St Valéry being the patron saint of local wine-growers.

The ninth- and twelfth-century church itself is an incredible place. Simple and huge, the entire structure – barrel-vaulting, great square piers and all – has been hacked out of the rock. The impact has been somewhat diminished, however, by the installation of massive concrete supports after cracks were discovered in the bell tower above in 1990. The whole interior was painted once, but only faint traces survived the Revolution, when a gunpowder factory was installed here. These days, every June, the wine council – La Jurade – assembles in the church in distinctive red robes to evaluate the previous season's wine and decide whether each viticulteur's produce deserves the appellation contrôlée rating.

Behind the tourist office, the town comes to an abrupt end with a grand view of the moat and old walls. To the right is the twelfth-century collegiate church, with a handsome but badly mutilated doorway and a lovely fourteenth-century cloister, accessed via the tourist office (same hours; free).

You should take advantage of the produce of this well-respected wine region, whose most famous wine originates at Château Ausone, immediately south of St-Émilion (not open to the public). If you're interested in visiting local vineyards, ask at the tourist office, which has detailed lists of those that are open, or at the Maison du Vin (Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.30pm; ☎05.57.55.50.55), also at the top of the hill by the belfry.

Practicalities

The super-efficient tourist office on place des Créneaux by the belfry (daily: June–Sept 9.30am–7/8pm; Oct–May 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.45–6/6.30pm; ☎05.57.55.28.28, 🌐www.saint-emilion-tourisme.com) is a good source of information and organizes bilingual (French and English) vineyard tours in season (May–Sept; €9.60). They also have bikes for rent (€14 per day).

If you're short of funds or without your own transport, St-Émilion is best seen as a day-trip from Bordeaux, as there's a chronic shortage of budget accommodation within the town. However, the tourist office can furnish you with an extensive list of chambres d'hôte in the area, many of which are very reasonably priced. Within the town itself, the two-star Auberge de la Commanderie on rue des Cordeliers (☎05.57.24.70.19, 🌐www.aubergedelacommanderie.com; 📍; closed mid-Dec to mid-Feb) offers the cheapest option. Two kilometres northwest on the road to Montagne, there's a fantastic three-star campsite, La Barbanne (☎05.57.24.75.80; April–Sept), with several heated swimming pools.

You should try the town's speciality while you're here: macaroons were devised here by the Ursuline sisters in 1620, and the one authentic place to buy them is at Blanchez, 9 rue Gaudet, where the tiny melt-in-the-mouth biscuits are baked to the original recipe. An excellent place for a meal is the relaxed contemporary-style bistro L'Envers du Décor (closed Sun Nov–April) on rue du Clocher, with plats du jour for €12 and local wine by the glass, which you can accompany with omelettes, cheese, salads and light snacks.

Entre-Deux-Mers

The landscape of Entre-Deux-Mers (literally “between two seas”) – so called because it's sandwiched between the tidal waters of the Dordogne and Garonne – is the prettiest of the Bordeaux wine regions, with its gentle hills and scattered medieval villages. Its wines, including the Premières Côtes de Bordeaux, are mainly dry whites produced by over forty caves coopératives, and are regarded as good but inferior to the Médoc or super-dry Graves to the south. It's also a region which can be explored, at least in part, by public transport, should you feel like avoiding the tourist office tour.

La Sauve-Majeure

The one place you should really try to see is the ruined Abbey (June–Sept daily 10am–6pm; Oct–May Tues–Sun 10am–1pm & 2.30–5.30pm; €4.60) at LA SAUVE-MAJEURE, some 25km east of Bordeaux, an important stop for pilgrims en route to Santiago de Compostela in Spain. Once it was all forest here, the abbey's name being a corruption of the Latin silva major (big wood). It was founded in 1079, and the treasures of what remains are the twelfth-century Romanesque apse and apsidal chapels and the outstanding sculpted capitals in the chancel. The finest are the ones illustrating stories from the Old and New Testaments (Daniel in the lions' den, Delilah shearing Samson's hair and so on), while others show fabulous beasts and decorative motifs. There is a small museum at the entrance, with some excellent photos of the ruins, along with keystones from the fallen roofs. But what makes the visit so worthwhile is not just the capitals themselves, but the remote, undisturbed nature of the site.

St-Macaire and La Réole

If you're heading south through Entre-Deux-Mers, Langon is the first town of any size you come to. But ST-MACAIRE, across the Garonne from Langon, is far better for a rest or food stop. The village still has its original gates and battlements and a beautiful medieval church, the Église-Prieuré. The tourist office, 8 rue Canton (June–Sept daily 10am–1pm & 3–7pm; April & May same hours, closed Mon; March & Oct Tues–Fri 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Nov–Feb same hours, also closed Tues; ☎05.56.63.32.14), doubles as a Maison du Pays, promoting regional produce, which here means honey and wine. Staff can help arrange visits to the chais, and in season (July & Aug daily) they organize tastings hosted by various local wine-makers. Opposite is a good hotel, Les Feuilles d'Acanthe (☎05.56.62.33.75, 🌐www.feuelles-dacanthefr; closed Dec; 📍) with good-sized rooms and a roof solarium and Jacuzzi. A cheaper option, Les Tilleuls (☎05.56.76.83.79; 📍), is located just outside the medieval city next to the Hôtel de Ville; their restaurant, Le Médiéval, has menus from €14.50. There's another good restaurant on rue de Canton, Le Macarien (☎05.56.76.83.79, closed Wed & Sun eve), which serves extremely popular, traditional menus from €13.50 while also offering pizza and omelettes.

LA RÉOLE, on the north bank 18km further east, boasts a wealth of medieval architecture along a well-signposted walk through its narrow, hilly streets. France's oldest town hall, constructed for Richard the Lionheart in the twelfth century, and the well-preserved simple Abbaye des Bénédic-tins – with a fantastic view over the River Garonne and the surrounding countryside – reward a stroll through the town, although little remains of the fortified castle.

La Réole's tourist office is on place Richard-Coeur-de-Lion (June–Sept Mon 3–6pm, Tues–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 3–6pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; Oct–May closed Sun; ☎05.56.61.13.55, 🌐www.entredeuxmers.com), and it conducts tours of the sights in July and August, though only for groups of ten or more (€5 per person). The only hotel in town is the cheap and cheerful Auberge Réolaise on the N113 just east of the centre (☎ & 📍05.56.61.01.33; 📍), though there's also a campsite (June–Sept), in a nice location just over the bridge on the south bank of the Garonne. A good restaurant is Aux Fontaines on rue du Verdun (closed Sun & Wed evenings & all day Mon, also two weeks in Feb & Nov), serving classic French cuisine, albeit with a modern touch, and several menus from €16.50; in the summer you can eat outside in their thatched roof terrace. A lively Saturday market on the esplanade des Quais along the Garonne provides good picnic provisions.

Sauternes and around

The Sauternes region, which extends southeast from Bordeaux for 40km along the left bank of the Garonne, is an ancient wine-making area, originally planted during the Roman occupation. The distinctive golden wine of the area is certainly sweet, but also round, full-bodied and spicy, with a long aftertaste. It's not necessarily a dessert wine, either: try it with some Roquefort cheese. Gravelly terraces with a limestone subsoil help create the delicious taste, but mostly it's due to a peculiar microclimate of morning autumn mists and afternoons of sun and heat which causes Botrytis cinerea fungus, or "noble rot", to flourish on the grapes, letting the sugar concentrate and introducing some intense flavours. When they're picked, they're not a pretty sight: carefully selected by hand, only the most shrivelled, rotting bunches are taken. The wines of Sauternes make up some of the most highly sought-after in the world, with bottles of Château d'Yquem, in particular, fetching thousands of euros.

SAUTERNES itself is a fairly quiet little village surrounded by vines and dominated by the Maison du Sauternes (Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat & Sun 10am–7pm; ☎05.56.76.69.83, 🌐www.maisondusauternes.com) at one end of the village, with a pretty church at the other. The maison is a room full of treasures, the golden bottles with white and gold labels being quite beautiful objects in themselves. It is a non-profit organization, so although staff can offer tastings, they're understandably reluctant about it unless you look like you're going to buy.

For a luxurious place to stay, try the sumptuous Relais du Château d'Arche, on the D125 just outside of Sauternes heading north (☎05.56.76.66.55, 🌐www.chateaudarche-sauternes.com; 📍). The seventeenth-century estate was recently restored to its original lustre and has been refurbished with near-period styling and paraphernalia; rooms are large and plush and many look directly onto the vineyard. There are two good places to eat in Sauternes. By the church, the Auberge Les Vignes (☎05.56.76.60.06; closed Sun & Mon evening & Feb) is a typical country restaurant with regional specialities like grillades aux Sauternes (meats grilled over vine clippings), a great wine list and a lunch menu at €12. The other option is the more refined Le Saprien (☎05.56.76.60.87; closed Christmas & Feb, also Sun & Wed evening), opposite the tourist office, combining regional-style elements with modern eclectic additions and featuring menus from €25.

Ten kilometres south of Sauternes, the ruinous curtain walls and corner towers of a colossal moated château (July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; June & Sept daily 2–6pm; Oct–May Sat & Sun 2–6pm; €3.50) still dominate VILLANDRAUT. Purchasing a ticket to the château gets you a complimentary tasting at the town's friendly Maison des Vins, on the central square a block from the castle (Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 3–7.30pm). The castle itself was built by Pope Clement V, a native of the area who caused a schism by moving the papacy to Avignon in the fourteenth century. You can visit his tomb in the even smaller village of UZESTE en route to BAZAS, 15km east, which has a laid-back, southern air. Bazas' most attractive feature is the wide, arcaded place de la Cathédrale, overlooked by the grey, lichen-covered Cathédrale St-Jean-Baptiste, which displays a harmonious blend of Romanesque, Gothic and classical styles in its west front.

For places to stay in Bazas try the cheap, friendly Hostellerie St-Sauveur, 14 cours du Général-de-Gaulle (☎05.56.25.12.18; 📍; closed early Oct), or the plush Domaine de Fompeyre, on the southern edge of town (☎05.56.25.98.00, 🌐www.domainedefompeyre.fr; 📍), which has a restaurant (closed Sun eve Oct–March; from €33). The best place to eat is 🍷 Bistrot St-Jean (☎05.56.25.18.53), under the colonnades on place de la Cathédrale. It has great lunch menus for €10 with generous helpings and friendly service (closed evenings except weekends in summer). Another good bet is Les Remparts (☎05.56.25.25.52; closed Sun eve and Mon), opposite, which has a good view from its terrace and a menu for €23. Many towns around this area offer chambres d'hotes from around €35 upwards: enquire at Villandraut's tourist office (☎05.56.25.31.39), located on place de la Mairie, for more information.

The Côte d'Argent

The Côte d'Argent is the long stretch of coast from the mouth of the Gironde estuary to Biarritz, which – at over 200km – is the longest, straightest and sandiest in Europe. The endless beaches are backed by high sand dunes, while behind lies the largest forest in western Europe, Les Landes. Despite these attractions, the lack of conventional tourist sights means that outside July and August the coast gets comparatively few visitors, and away from the main resorts it's still possible to find deserted stretches of coastline.

Arcachon

On summer weekends, the Bordelais escape en masse to ARCACHON, the oldest resort on the Côte d'Argent and a forty-minute train ride across flat, sandy forest from Bordeaux. The beaches of white sand are magnificent but can be crowded, and its central jetties, Thiers and Eyrac, are busy with boats going off on an array of cruises.

The town itself is a sprawl of villas great and small, the most exclusive area being the ville d'hiver (winter town), whose wide shady streets are full of fanciful Second Empire mansions overlooking the seaside ville d'été (summer town). Well worth a wander, the area can be reached by following the lively pedestrianized and restaurant-filled rue de Maréchal-de-Lattre-de-Tassigny, running perpendicular to the seafront boulevard de la Plage; at the end of this mouthful of a street, a lift (daily: July & Aug 7am–10pm; Sept–June 8am–7.30pm) carries you up to the flower-filled, wooded Parc Mauresque (same hours; free), with the ville d'hiver beyond it. From the park, there are fine views over the seafront.

Practicalities

A well-stocked tourist office, esplanade Georges-Pompidou (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 10am–1pm & 2–5pm; July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Oct–March Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 9am–5pm; ☎05.57.52.97.97; @www.arcachon.com), can be reached by following avenue Gambetta back from seafront place Thiers. In summer, boats leave the jetties of Thiers and Eyrac on various cruises, including the Île aux Oiseaux (1hr 45min; €13.50), and an exploration of the Arcachon basin with a look at the Dune de Pyla (2hr 30min; €18.50). There's also a regular boat service from here to Cap Ferret on the opposite peninsula (30min; €11 return). Discounted tickets can be purchased for all excursions at the tourist office.

You'll be hard-pushed to find an inexpensive hotel in summer, but the best value is probably at the St-Christaud, 8 allée de la Chapelle (☎05.56.83.38.53; 📍), a short walk from the centre. Up the hill in the ville d'hiver, your only option is the Marinette, 15 allée José-Maria-de-Hérédia (📞05.56.83.06.67, 🌐www.hotel-marinette.com; 📍; closed Oct to mid-March), with pleasant rooms in a shady, villa-style building. For a luxury stay in the heart of the action, try the Grand Hôtel Richelieu at 185 bd de la Plage (📞05.56.83.16.50, 🌐www.grand-hotel-richelieu.com; 📍), where some of the rooms have balconies with sea views. Alternatively, the tourist office can give you a list of the many holiday apartments available to rent. Camping is another option, with plenty of sites around the Arcachon basin, though only the three-star Le Camping Club, allée de la Galaxie (📞05.56.83.24.15, 🌐www.camping-arcachon.com), is actually within the town; set in an expanse of bird-filled woodland beyond the ville d'hiver, it's worth the high summer prices.

For something approximating gastronomique eating, you're best off at Chez Yvette, 59 bd de Général-Leclerc, which offers traditional menus from €19 or immense platters of seafood for €30.

8

Cap Ferret and the north coast

The Atlantic coast between the Bassin d'Arcachon and the Gironde has a wild, undeveloped feel and despite its proximity to Bordeaux and Arcachon, is seldom crowded. No motorable road follows the coast for most of the way, which contributes to the relaxed nature of the place; instead a cycle path, built at the end of World War II, winds through more than 75km of pine-forested dunes from the low-key holiday village of Cap Ferret to the resort of Soulac in the north, from where trains run through the Médoc vineyards to Bordeaux or to the Pointe de Grave and Verdon for the ferry to Royan. Apart from the occasional surf shack or beach restaurant, the only settlement of any size is Lacanau-Ocean, 30km north of Cap Ferret, best avoided unless you're into overpriced hotels and golf courses. Cap Ferret can be reached by boat from Arcachon. There are a few places to stay, including the small, basic HI hostel at 87 av de Bordeaux (📞05.56.60.64.62; July & Aug only) and the characterful 🌳 Hotel des Pins at 23 rue des Fauvettes (📞05.56.60.60.11, 📞05.56.60.67.41; March to mid-Nov; 📍), overlooking the ocean and still decorated in the spirit of the 1920s, when it was built. It also has a restaurant with menus for €24. Some 10km to the north there's a campsite at Grand Crohot, Bremon tier (📞05.56.60.03.99; May to mid-Sept). For more information contact the tourist office in Cap Ferret at 1 av du Général-de-Gaulle (📞05.56.03.94.49, 🌐www.lege-capferret.com).

The Dune du Pyla and Le Teich

The Côte d'Argent's chief curiosity is the Dune du Pyla. At over 100m it's the highest sand dune in Europe – a veritable mountain of wind-carved sand, about 12km south of Arcachon. Bus #611 leaves from the gare SNCF every hour in July and August – two to five a day at other times. From the end of the line the road continues straight on uphill for about fifteen minutes – if you're driving, it costs €2.30–3.05 to use the obligatory car park, though to save a few euros you could park closer to the station for free and make the hike up. There's the inevitable group of stands selling ice cream, galettes and junk, but from the top you get a superb view over the bay of Arcachon and the forest of the Landes stretching away to the south. It's a great sandy slide down to the sea (the sides are as steep as an Olympic ski-jump) and a long haul back up but well worth the effort.

At LE TEICH, about 14km east of Arcachon in the southeast corner of the Bassin d'Arcachon, one of the most important expanses of wetlands remaining in France has been converted into a bird sanctuary, the Parc Ornithologique du Teich (daily 10am–6pm; €6.40; 🌐www.parc-ornithologique-du-teich.com), one of only two in the country. There's no accommodation in Le Teich beyond a couple of campsites, but you can easily come here on a day-trip by train from Arcachon or Bordeaux.

Les Landes

Travelling south from Bordeaux by road or rail, you pass for what seems like hours through an unremitting, flat, sandy pine forest known as Les Landes. Until the nineteenth century it was a vast, infertile swamp, badly drained because of the impermeable layer of grit deposited by the glaciers of the quaternary age and steadily encroached upon by the shifting sand dunes of the coast. Today it supports nearly 10,000 square kilometres of trees and since 1970 has been designated a parc naturel régional.

Mont de Marsan

The administrative centre of Les Landes, MONT DE MARSAN, 100km south of Bordeaux and served by regular trains, makes a good base for exploring the region. The tourist office on place du Général-Leclerc (daily except Sun: July & Aug 9am–6pm; Sept–June 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; ☎05.58.05.87.37) can provide you with large-scale maps for walking and cycling in the area (€1.50 each). The town itself boasts various medieval remnants, most notably a twelfth-century keep which now contains a collection of work by two local sculptors (daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3.40). By far the most attractive part of the centre is the Parc Jean Rameau, on the north bank of the river Douze, where immaculately kept lawns and blooming flowerbeds, interwoven with shady paths, make a great spot to spend a hot afternoon watching the locals play boules.

If you're lucky enough to be in the area at the right time in summer, you should definitely make the effort to see the festival for which Mont de Marsan is best known. Les Fêtes Madeleines (mid-July) consists of a week of parades, sports and carnival atmosphere, when the town's Basque identity is most tangible, with flamenco dancing and bullfighting playing a major role.

Apart from this period, accommodation shouldn't be hard to come by. The nicest place to stay is Le Renaissance, 225 av de Villeneuve (☎05.58.51.51.51, 🌐www.le-renaissance.com; 📍) with its own outdoor swimming pool, plush bar and restaurant (menus from €18). Various cheaper and more central options are also available, another good bet being Le Richelieu, 3 rue Wléric (☎05.58.06.10.20, 📧le.richelieu@orange.fr; 📍), which has comfortable rooms, some with air conditioning. For eating, there are several good-value brasseries along rue Gambetta, while the Crêperie la Floralie on rue Wléric serves up a slice of Brittany for as little as €8.

The Écomusée de Marquèze

At SABRES, 30km north of Mont de Marsan on the N134, you can take a restored steam train to the excellent Écomusée de Marquèze (trains depart every 40min April–May & mid-Sept to Oct Mon–Sat 2–4.40pm, Sun 10am–4.40pm; June to mid-Sept daily 10am–5.20pm; €9.50 including entrance; 🌐www.parc-landes-de-gascogne.fr), set up by the park authorities to illustrate the traditional landais way of life, when shepherds used to clomp around the scrub on long stilts.

Travel details

Trains

Angoulême to: Bordeaux (20 daily; 1hr–1hr 30min); Limoges (6 daily; 1hr 30min–2hr); Poitiers (23 daily; 40min–1hr 10min); Royan (4 daily; 2hr).

Bordeaux to: Angoulême (17 daily; 1hr–1hr 30min); Arcachon (frequently; 40–45min); Bayonne (10–12 daily; 1hr 40min–2hr 10min); Bergerac (6–10 daily; 50min–1hr 30min); Biarritz (6–12 daily; 2hr–2hr 45min); Brive (1–2 daily; 2hr 15min); La Rochelle (6–8 daily; 2hr 20min); Lourdes (4–6 daily; 2hr 30min–3hr); Marseille (5–6 daily; 6–7hr); Mont de Marsan (4 daily; 1hr 30min); Nice (4 daily; 9–10hr); Paris-Montparnasse (8–10 daily; 3hr–3hr 30min); Périgueux (10–12 daily; 1hr–1hr 25min); Pointe de Grave (5 daily; 1hr 45min); Poitiers (8–15 daily; 1hr 45min); Saintes (7–14 daily; 1hr 30min); Sarlat (3–4 daily; 3hr); St-Jean-de-Luz (8–12 daily; 2hr–2hr 40min); Toulouse (10–17 daily; 2hr–2hr 40min).

La Rochelle to: Bordeaux (6 daily; 2hr 20min); La Roche-sur-Yon (5 daily; 1hr); Nantes (4 daily; 1hr 50min); Rochefort (12 daily; 20min); Paris-Montparnasse (8 daily; 3hr 10min); Saintes (9 daily; 50min–1hr).

La Roche-sur-Yon to: Les Sables-d'Olonne (4 daily; 30min).

Les Sables-d'Olonne to: Nantes (8 daily; 1hr 30min).

Poitiers to: Angoulême (17 daily; 1hr); Bordeaux (3–15 daily; 1hr 45min); Châtelleraut (12 daily; 20min); Dax (2–3 daily; 3–4hr); Hendaye (3 daily; 4–5hr); Irun (2 daily; 4–5hr); La Rochelle (12 daily; 1hr 45min); Limoges (4–6 daily; 2hr); Niort (4–12 daily; 45min); Paris-Montparnasse (frequently; 1hr 45min); Surgères (10 daily; 1hr).

Royan to: Angoulême (3–4 daily; 2hr); Cognac (3–4 daily; 1hr); Saintes (3–4 daily; 30min).

Saintes to: Angoulême (9 daily; 1hr); Cognac (9 daily; 20min); Rochefort (9 daily; 30min).

Buses

Bordeaux to: Blaye (4–10 daily; 1hr 30min); Cap Ferret (4–10 daily; 2hr); Lacanau (2 daily; 1hr 15min); La Sauve-Majeure (2–4 daily; 40min); Margaux (2–8 daily; 45min–1hr); Pauillac (2–8 daily; 1hr–1hr 20min).

La Rochelle to: St-Martin de Ré (6–16 daily; 1hr)

Les Sables-d'Olonne to: Luçon (4 daily; 2hr); Nantes (4 daily; 5hr 30min).

Parthenay to: Airvault (several daily; 25min); Niort (8 daily; 50min); Thouars (at least 10 daily; 1hr).

Poitiers to: Châteaoux (3–5 daily; 3hr); Chauvigny (3–5 daily; 45min); Le Blanc (3–5 daily; 1hr 25min); Limoges (daily; 3hr); Parthenay (6–10 daily; 1hr 30min); Ruffec (daily; 2hr 30min); St-Savin (3–5 daily; 1hr).

Rochefort to: Château d'Oléron (4–6 daily; 1hr); La Fumée-Île d'Aix (6–8 daily; 30min).

Saintes to: Rochefort (2 daily; 1hr 20min); St-Pierre d'Oléron (2 daily; 2hr).

8

The Dordogne, Limousin and Lot

- * Cuisine The Dordogne is the place to sample French country cooking at its best. See p.684
- * Monpazier An almost perfectly preserved bastide (fortified town). See p.694
- * Sarlat Wander the narrow lanes of this archetypal medieval town, with its vielle ville of honey-coloured stone buildings. See p.697
- * Grotte de Font-de-Gaume Stunning examples of prehistoric cave-art, including the spectacular frieze of five bison. See p.701
- * Châteaux of Beynac and Castelnaud Two of the region's most majestic castles eye each other across the Dordogne valley. See p.707
- * The carving of Isaiah in Souillac's church of Ste-Marie An extraordinary masterpiece of Romanesque art. See p.710

△ Market day, Sarlat

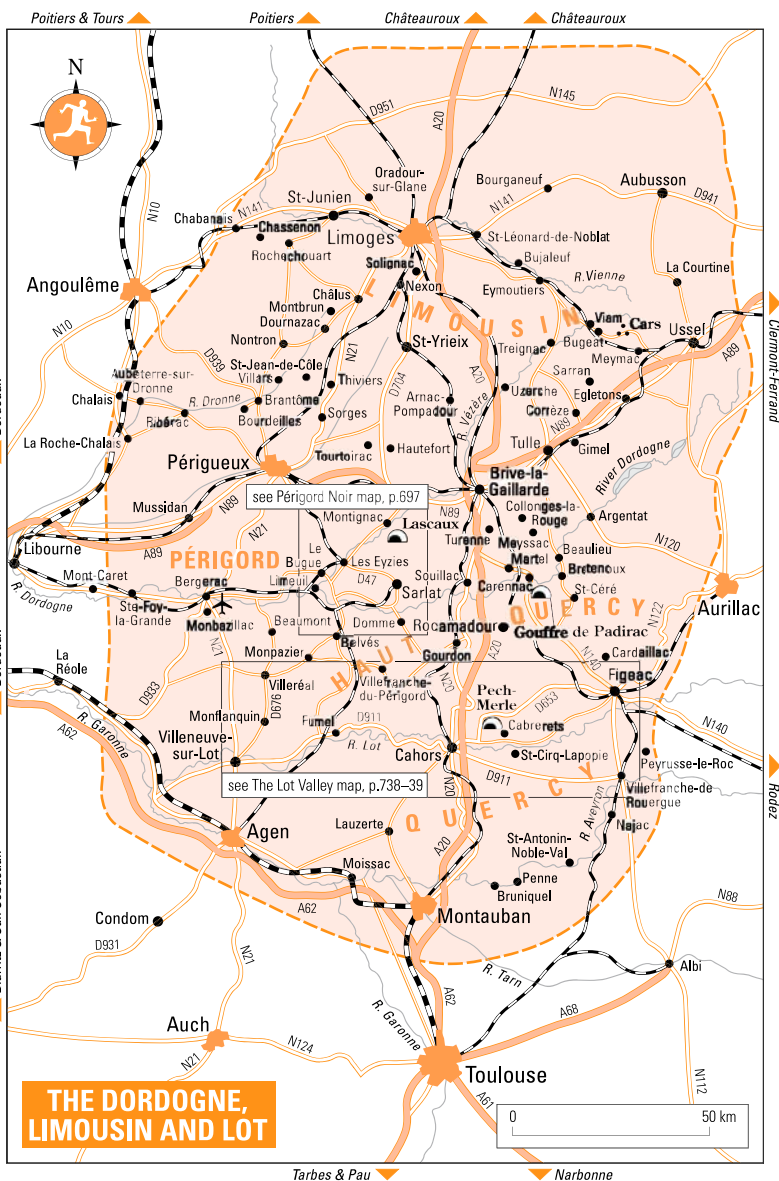

The Dordogne, Limousin and Lot

The land covered in this chapter forms a rough oval bordered to the east by the uplands of the Massif Central and to the west by the Atlantic plains. It's the area which was most in dispute between the English and the French during the Hundred Years War and which has been most in demand among English visitors and second-home buyers in more recent times. Although it doesn't coincide exactly with either the modern French administrative boundaries or the old provinces of Périgord and Quercy, which constitute the core of the region, the land has a physical and geographical homogeneity thanks to its great rivers: the Dordogne, the Lot and the Aveyron, all of which drain westwards from the Massif Central into the mighty Garonne, which forms the southern limit covered by this chapter.

There are no great cities in the area: its charm lies in the landscapes and the dozens of harmonious small towns and villages. Some, like Sarlat and Rocamadour, are so well known that they are overrun with tourists. Others, like Figeac, Villefranche-de-Rouergue, Gourdon, Montauban, Monflanquin and the many bastides (fortified towns) that pepper the area between the Lot and Dordogne, boast no single notable sight but are perfect organic ensembles.

The landscapes are surprisingly homogenous, too. From Limoges in the province of Limousin in the north to Montauban in the south towards Toulouse, the country is gently hilly, full of lush hidden valleys and miles of woodland, mainly oak. Limousin, at the north of this area, is slightly greener and wetter, the south more open and arid. But you can travel a long way without seeing a radical shift, except in the uplands of the Plateau de Millevaches, where the rivers plunge into gorges and the woods are beech, chestnut and conifer plantations. The other characteristic landscape is the causses, the dry scrubby limestone plateaux like the Causse de Gramat between the Dordogne and the Lot and the Causse de Limogne between the Lot and Aveyron. Where the rivers have cut their way through the limestone, the valleys are walled with overhanging cliffs, riddled with fissures, underground stream-beds and caves. And in these caves – especially in the valley of the Vézère around Les Eyzies – are some of the most awe-inspiring prehistoric paintings and reliefs to be found anywhere in the world.

The other great artistic legacy of the area is the Romanesque sculpture, most notably adorning the churches at Souillac and Beaulieu-sur-Dordogne, but all modelled on the supreme example of the cloister of St-Pierre in Moissac. And the dearth of luxurious châteaux is compensated for by the numerous splendid fortresses of purely military design, such as Bonaguil, Najac, Biron, Beynac and Castelnaud.

The wartime Resistance was very active in these out-of-the-way regions, and the roadsides are dotted with tiny memorials to those killed in ambushes or shot in reprisals. There is also one monstrous monument to wartime atrocity: the ruined village of Oradour-sur-Glane, still as the Nazis left it after massacring the population and setting fire to the houses.

The Dordogne

To the French, the Dordogne is a river. To the British, it is a much looser term, covering a vast area roughly equivalent to what the French call Périgord. This starts south of Limoges and includes the Vézère and Dordogne valleys. The Dordogne is also a département, with fixed boundaries that pay no heed to either definition. The central part of the département, around Périgueux and the River Isle, is known as Périgord Blanc, after the light, white colour of its rock outcrops; the southeastern half around Sarlat as Périgord Noir, said to be darker in aspect than the Blanc because of the preponderance of oak woods. To confuse matters further, the tourist authorities have added another two colours to the Périgord patchwork: Périgord Vert, the far north of the département, so called because of the green of its woods and pastureland; and Périgord Pourpre in the southwest, purple because it includes the wine-growing area around Bergerac. This southern region is also known for its bastides – fortified towns – built during the turbulent medieval period when there was almost constant conflict between the French and English. In the reaches of the upper Dordogne, the colour scheme breaks down, but the villages and scenery in this less travelled backwater still rival anything the rest of the region has to offer.

Périgord Vert and Périgord Blanc

The close green valleys of Périgord Vert are very rural, with plenty of space and few people, large tracts of woodland and uncultivated land. Less well known than the much-frequented Périgord Noir, its largely granite landscape bears a closer resemblance to the neighbouring Limousin than to the rest of the Périgord. It's partly for this reason that in 1998 the most northerly tip, together with the southwestern part of the Haute-Vienne, was designated as the Parc Naturel Régional Périgord-Limousin – to give it a sense of identity and draw attention to its natural assets – in an attempt to promote “green” tourism in this economically fragile and depopulated area.

Périgueux, in the centre of Périgord Blanc, is interesting for its domed cathedral and its Roman remains, whose existence is a reminder of how long these parts have been civilized. But it's in the countryside that the region's finest monuments lie. One of the loveliest stretches is the valley of the Dronne, from Aubeterre on the Charente border through Brantôme to the marvellous Renaissance château of Puyguilhem and the picture-postcard village of St-Jean-de-Côle, and on to the Limousin border, where the scenery becomes higher and less intimate. Truffle-lovers might like to take a look at Sorges, where there's a nature trail through truffle country and a museum to explain it all.

The food and wine of Périgord

The two great stars of Périgord cuisine are foie gras and truffles (truffes). Foie gras is best eaten either chilled in succulent, buttery slabs, or lightly fried and served with a fruit compote to provide contrasting sweetness and acidity. Truffle is often dished up in omelettes and the rich périgourdin sauces which accompany many local meat dishes, but to really appreciate the delicate earthy flavour to the full, you really need to eat truffle on its own, with just a salad and some coarse, country bread.

The other mainstay of Périgord cuisine is the grey Toulouse goose, whose fat is used in the cooking of everything, including the flavourful potato dish, pommes sarladaises. The goose fattens well: gavé or crammed with corn, it goes from six to ten kilos in weight in three weeks, with its liver alone weighing nearly a kilo. Though some may find the process off-putting, small local producers are very careful not to harm their birds, if for no other reason than that stress ruins the liver. Geese are also raised for their meat alone, which is cooked and preserved in its own thick yellow grease as confits d'oie, which you can either eat on its own or use in the preparation of other dishes, like cassoulet. Duck is used in the same way, both for foie gras and confits. Magret de canard, or duck-breast fillet, is one of the favourite ways of eating duck and appears on practically every restaurant menu.

Another common goose delicacy is cou d'oie farci – goose neck stuffed with sausage meat, duck liver and truffles; a favourite salad throughout the region is made with warm gésiers or goose gizzards. Try not to be put off by fare such as this, or your palate will miss out on some delicious experiences – like tripoux, sheep's stomach stuffed with tripe, trotters, pork and garlic, which is really an Auvergnat dish but is quite often served in neighbouring areas like the Rouergue. Other less challenging specialities include stuffed cèpes, or wild mushrooms; ballottines, fillets of poultry stuffed, rolled and poached; the little flat discs of goat's cheese known as cabécou or rocamadour; and, for dessert there's pastis, a light apple tart topped with crinkled, wafer-thin pastry laced with armagnac.

The wines should not be scorned either. There are the fine, dark, almost peppery reds from Cahors, and both reds and whites from the vineyards of Bergerac, of which the sweet, white Monbazillac is the most famous. Pécharmant is the fanciest of the reds, but there are some very drinkable Côtes de Bergerac, much like the neighbouring Bordeaux and far cheaper. The same goes for the wines of Duras, Marmande and Buzet. If you're thinking of taking a stock of wine home, you could do much worse than make some enquiries in Bergerac itself, Ste-Foy, or any of the villages in the vineyard areas.

Périgueux

PÉRIGUEUX, capital of the département of the Dordogne and a central base for exploring the countryside of Périgord Blanc, is a small, busy and not particularly attractive market town for a province made rich by tourism and specialized farming. Its name derives from the Petrocorii, the local Gallic tribe, but it was the Romans who transformed it into an important settlement. A few Roman remains, as well as a medieval vieille ville, survive to this day.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The busiest and most interesting part of Périgueux is the square formed by the river, the allées Tourny, boulevard Montaigne and cours Fénélon. At the junction of the latter two is place Francheville, a wide, open square presently being redeveloped as a shopping and cinema complex, on the east side of which you'll find the tourist office (June–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–6pm,

- EATING & DRINKING
- 7 Au Bien Bon
 - 5 Le Canard Laqué
 - 2 Le Clos St-Front
 - 1 La Ferme St-Louis
 - 4 Le Mellow
 - 6 L'Ouvre-Boîte
 - 3 La Vertu

- ACCOMMODATION
- C Bristol
 - A Le Chateau des Reynats
 - D Ibis
 - B Le Midi
 - E Résidence des Jeunes Travailleurs

PÉRIGUEUX

Sun 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–6pm; ☎05.53.53.10.63, 🌐www.tourisme-perigueux.fr), which organizes various guided visits on foot and by bike in summer, and the Tour Mataguerre, the last surviving bit of the town's medieval defences. Périgueux's gare SNCF lies to the west of town at the end of rue des Mobiles-du-Coulmiers, the continuation of rue du Président-Wilson. Regional buses run by CFTA Périgord (☎05.53.08.43.13, 🌐www.cftaco.fr) stop at both the gare SNCF and on place Francheville. For Internet access go to Ouratech on place du Général-Leclerc (daily 10am–8pm; €3 per hour).

Hotels

Bristol 37 rue Antoine Gadaud

☎05.53.08.75.90, 🌐www.bristolfrance.com.

A good find, in a quiet area 2min from the town centre. Rooms are large, and all have a/c and wireless Internet. There is also free parking for guests. 4

Le Château des Reynats 15 av des Reynats

☎05.53.03.53.59, 🌐www.chateau-hotel-perigord.com.

Located 3km north of town in Chancelade district, this luxurious establishment has some rooms available in the château itself (📍), and more with three-star facilities in a neighbouring building (📍). Both have access to the lovely grounds, a swimming pool, tennis court and the high-class restaurant (menus €26–65).

Ibis 8 bd Georges-Saumande ☎05.53.53.64.58,

📧h0636@accor.com. A fairly standard chain hotel, but it's good value in terms of comfort and location; rooms either look out over the river or up to the domes of the cathedral. 4

Le Midi 18 rue Denis-Papin ☎05.53.53.41.06,

🌐www.hotel-du-midi.com. The best value of the row of hotels opposite the station, with a restaurant serving three-course menus from €13.50. The collection of toy cars on display in the dining room is worth a visit in its own right. 2

Hostel

Résidence des Jeunes Travailleurs rue des

Thermes-Prolongés ☎05.53.06.81.40,

📧contact@fjt24.com. Very basic dormitory accommodation is available here for €12. Breakfast is included, and there is also a good canteen serving lunch and dinner for €7 each.

The City

The main hub of the city's contemporary life is the tree-shaded boulevard Montaigne, which marks the western edge of the vieille ville. At its southern end, a short walk along rue Taillefer brings you to the domed and coned Cathédrale St-Front (daily: July & Aug 8am–7pm; Sept–June 8am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.30pm), its square, pineapple-capped belfry surging far above the roofs of the surrounding medieval houses. Unfortunately, it's no beauty, having suffered from the zealous attentions of the purist nineteenth-century restorer Abadie, best known for the white elephant of the Sacré-Coeur in Paris. The result is an excess of ill-proportioned, nipple-like projections serving no obvious purpose: "a supreme example of how not to restore", Freda White tartly observed in her classic travelogue, Three Rivers of France (see Contexts, p.1329). It's a pity, since when it was rebuilt in 1173 following a fire, it was one of the most distinctive Byzantine churches undertaken in France, modelled on St Mark's in Venice and the Holy Apostles in Constantinople. Nevertheless, the Byzantine influence is still evident in the interior in the Greek-cross plan – unusual in France – and in the massive clean curves of the domes and their supporting arches. The big Baroque altarpiece, carved in walnut wood in the gloomy east bay, is worth a look too, depicting the Assumption of the Virgin, with a humorous little detail in the illustrative scenes from her life of a puppy tugging the infant Jesus' sheets from his bed with its teeth.

At the west end of the cathedral, there's a fresh produce market on Wednesday and Saturday mornings in place de la Clautre, at the heart of the renovated streets of the medieval town, the most attractive of which is the narrow rue Limogeanne, lined with Renaissance mansions, now turned into boutiques and delicatessens, intermingled with fast-food outlets. The surrounding streets are also scattered with fine Renaissance houses: particularly handsome are the Logis St-Front, 7 rue de la Constitution, and the more sedate Hôtel de Crenoux at no. 3. Another striking building is at 17 rue de l'Éguillerie, on the corner of the attractive place St-Louis, where a turreted watchtower leans out over the street. There are other old houses down along the river by the Pont des Barris, notably the fifteenth-century Maison des Consuls.

At the northern end of rue Limogeanne, out on the broad tree-lined cours Tourny, the Musée du Périgord (Mon & Wed–Fri 10.30am–5.30pm, Sat & Sun 1–6pm; €4; 📞musee-perigord.museum.com) is best known for its extensive and important prehistoric collection and some beautiful Gallo-Roman mosaics. Exhibits include copies of a 70,000-year-old skeleton, the oldest yet found in France, and a beautiful engraving of a bison's head. More lively but of less general interest is the Musée Militaire, near the cathedral at 32 rue des Farges (Jan–March Wed & Sat 2–6pm; April–Sept Mon–Sat 1–6pm; Oct–Dec Mon–Sat 2–6pm; €4), which contains some unusual exhibits, particularly relating to the French colonial wars in Vietnam.

Roman Périgueux

Roman Périgueux, known as La Cité, lies to the west of the town centre towards the gare SNCF. The most prominent vestige is the high brick Tour de Vésone, the last remains of a temple to the city's guardian goddess, standing in a public garden just south of the train tracks. Beside the tower, the foundations of an exceptionally well-preserved Roman villa form the basis of the new Musée Gallo-Romain (Feb, March & Oct–Dec Tues–Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm, April–June & Sept Tues–Sun 10am–6pm, July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; €5.50; 📞www.semitour.com). This was no humble abode: the villa, complete with under-floor heating, thermal baths and colonnaded walkways around the central garden with its cooling pond and fountains, boasted at least sixty rooms. Around the walls you can see the remains of first-century murals of river and marine life, the colours still amazingly vibrant, and here and there, graffiti of hunting scenes, gladiatorial combat and even an ostrich – no doubt the work of some bored Roman urchin.

A short hop across the train tracks, the atmospheric ruins of the city's amphitheatre are concealed in the Jardin des Arènes, while further remains of fourth-century Roman defences are visible around the nearby Porte Normande off rue Turenne. The rather mutilated church in this neighbourhood – the result of Huguenot anger in 1577 – is the former cathedral, the church of St-Étienne, condemned to life as a traffic island in place de la Cité.

Eating and drinking

Surprisingly, there's no great abundance of good restaurants in Périgueux, but the best place to look is in the vieille ville, particularly around place St-Louis. For the best of Périgueux's limited nightlife, you'd be wise to head for rue de la Sagesse, where you'll find Le Mellow and L'Ouvre-Boîte, both lively bars with music and cocktails.

Restaurants

Au Bien Bon 15 rue des Places 📞05.53.09.69.91.

A good lunch spot on a quiet square. Menus for €10 at midday, featuring traditional, regional food served in a rustic interior. Closed Sat lunch, Sun & Mon eve.

Le Canard Laqué 2 rue de Lanmary

📞05.53.09.15.61. If you fancy a change from the local fare, this restaurant offers Chinese, Thai, Vietnamese and Cambodian dishes. Their speciality is a duck, mushroom and bamboo soup. Closed Sun.

Le Clos St-Front 5 rue de la Vertu

📞05.53.46.78.58. High-quality menus served in a spacious, leafy, walled courtyard. You can eat for €24, but for €52 you get the best of the best and wine included. Closed Sun eve & Mon out of season.

La Ferme St-Louis place St-Louis

☎ 05.53.53.82.77. The best of the many restaurants on the square, it has a small terrace and a homely, stone-walled interior. Food wise, you can't get much more Périgordian than the duck breast in a truffle-based sauce. Closed Sun & Mon.

La Vertu 11 rue Notre-Dame. A lively bar and restaurant, serving tapas and menus for €11 at lunch and dinner. It only opens in summer, when the salsa music and pitchers of sangria go down best.

Brantôme and the valley of the Dronne

Although Brantôme itself is very much on the tourist trail, the country to both the west and east of the town along the River Dronne remains largely undisturbed. It's tranquil and very beautiful, and best savoured at a gentle pace, perhaps by bike or even by canoeing along the river.

9

THE DORDOGNE, LIMOUSIN AND LOT

Périgord Vert and Périgord Blanc

△ River Dronne at Brantôme

Brantôme

BRANTÔME, 27km north of Périgueux on the Angoulême road and beloved of British tourists, sits on an island in the River Dronne, whose still, water-lilyed surface mirrors the limes and weeping willows of the riverside gardens. On the north bank of the river are the church and convent buildings of the former Benedictine abbey that has been Brantôme's focus ever since it was founded, possibly by Charlemagne. The other big name associated with the abbey is that of its most notorious abbot, Pierre de Bourdeilles, the sixteenth-century author of scurrilous tales of life at the royal court. It's worth taking a look inside the abbey church for the palm-frond vaulting of the chapterhouse and the font made from a carved and grounded pillar capital. Brantôme's best architectural feature, however, is the Limousin-style Romanesque belfry, built into the cliff-face behind the church and only accessible on a guided tour arranged by the tourist office (€6).

There are more pleasant views to be had wandering the nearby gardens and the balustraded riverbanks, while in summer you can take a leisurely boat trip on the river (Easter to mid-Oct; €7).

Four days a week (Mon, Wed, Fri & Sun), buses connect Brantôme with Périgueux and the TGV in Angoulême. The tourist office (Feb, March & Oct–Dec daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–5pm; April–June & Sept daily except Tues 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; ☎05.53.05.80.52, 🌐www.ville-brantome.fr) is next to the abbey church. From April to September you can rent canoes from Brantôme Canoë (☎05.53.05.77.24, 🌐www.brantome-canoe.com), just over the bridge on the road to Thiviers, while bikes are available at Spadzone, 2 av des Martyrs (☎05.53.08.02.65, 🌐www.spadzone.com).

The cheapest accommodation is to be found at the friendly Hôtel Versaveau, 8 place de Gaulle, at the north end of town (☎05.53.05.71.42; ①–②; restaurant from €12; closed three weeks in Nov & Christmas/New Year), though prettier and much more comfortable rooms are available at Hôtel Chabrol across the river (☎05.53.05.70.15, 🌐www.logis-de-france.fr; ④; closed Feb & mid-Nov to mid-Dec), whose restaurant, Les Frères Charbonnel, is in the gourmet class, with its cheapest menu at €26 (closed Sun eve & Mon Oct–June). A lovely place to stay is the Maison Fleurie, an English-owned chambre d'hôte at 54 rue Gambetta (☎05.53.35.17.04, 🌐www.maisonfleurie.net; ③), with a pool and quiet courtyard garden. Good eating options include Les Jardins de Brantôme, with an attractive garden, a short walk north of town at 33 rue Pierre-de-Mareuil (closed Wed & lunch Mon & Thurs; menus €18.50–26), and Au Fil de l'Eau, on quai Bertin, which specializes in not too expensive fish dishes (closed mid-Oct to Easter; menus from €24) and spreads along the riverbank in fine weather. Campers should head for the Le Peyrelevalde campsite just east of Brantôme on the D78 Thiviers road (☎05.53.05.75.24, 🌐www.campingterreoceane.com; May to mid-Sept).

Bourdeilles

BOURDEILLES, 16km down the Dronne from Brantôme by a beautiful back road, is relatively hard to reach – perhaps the most appealing way is by canoe. It's a sleepy backwater, an ancient village clustering round its château (Feb, March, Nov & Dec Mon, Wed, Thurs & Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; April–June, Sept & Oct daily except Tues 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; €5.50; 🌐www.semitour.com) on a rocky spur above the river. The château consists of two buildings: one a thirteenth-century fortress, the other an elegant Renaissance residence begun by the lady of the house as a piece of unsuccessful favour-courrying with Catherine de Médicis – unsuccessful because Catherine never came to stay and the château remained unfinished. If you climb the octagonal keep, there's a good view over the town's clustered roofs and along the valley of the Dronne.

The château is now home to an exceptional collection of furniture and religious statuary bequeathed to the state by its former owners. Among the more notable pieces are some splendid Spanish dowry chests and a sixteenth-century Rhenish Entombment with life-sized statues, embodying the very image of the serious, self-satisfied medieval burgher. The salon doré, the room in which Catherine de Médicis was supposed to sleep, has also been preserved.

Lesser mortals wanting to stay the night could try the appealing Hostellerie le Donjon (☎05.53.04.82.81, 🌐www.hostellerie-ledonjon.fr; 📍; menus €12–25; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec, Jan & March), on the main street, or the more upmarket Hostellerie Les Griffons (☎05.53.45.45.35, 🌐www.griffons.fr; 📍; closed Nov–Easter) in a sixteenth-century house beside the old bridge, with a restaurant serving top-notch regional cuisine (three courses from €32).

9

Ribérac

Surrounded by an intimate, hilly countryside of woods and hay meadows and drowsy hilltop villages, RIBÉRAC, 30km downstream from Bourdeilles, is a pleasant if unremarkable town whose greatest claim to fame is its major Friday market, which brings in producers and wholesalers from all around. It makes an agreeable base from which to explore the quiet, lush Dronne landscape, especially if you stay at the attractive and excellent-value De France on the north side of the central square at 3 rue Marc-Dufraisse (☎05.53.90.00.61, 🌐www.hoteldefrancerberac.com; 📍; closed Mon, also mid-Nov to mid-Dec & Jan), with a terrace garden and a locally renowned restaurant serving original cuisine (closed Mon, Tues lunch & Sat; menu at €23). There's also a riverside municipal campsite just outside Ribérac on the Angoulême road (☎05.53.90.50.08; June to mid-Sept).

For further ideas about chambres d'hôtes in the surrounding country, Ribérac's tourist office on place de Gaulle is the place to ask (July & Aug Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–noon; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎05.53.90.03.10, 🌐www.riberac.fr); they can also provide information about the numerous Romanesque churches in outlying villages that could provide a focus for leisurely wandering. Bikes can be rented from Cycle Cum's, 35 rue du 26-Mars-1944 (☎05.53.90.33.23).

Aubeterre-sur-Dronne and around

Rather touristy, but very beautiful with its ancient galleried and turreted houses, AUBETERRE-SUR-DRONNE hangs on a steep hillside above the river some 30km downstream of Ribérac. Its principal curiosity is the cavernous Église Monolithe (daily 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €4), carved out of the soft rock of the cliff face in the twelfth century, with its rock-hewn tombs going back to the sixth. A (blocked-off) tunnel connects with the château on the bluff overhead. There's also the extremely beautiful church of St-Jacques, with an eleventh-century facade sculpted and decorated in the richly carved Poitiers style on the street leading uphill from the square.

The tourist office is beside the main car park (April–June, Sept & Oct Mon 2–6pm, Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug Mon 2–7pm, Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–7pm; Nov–March Mon–Sat 2–6pm; ☎05.45.98.57.18, 🌐aubeterresurdronne.free.fr), round the corner from the simple, rather faded Hôtel de France (☎05.45.98.50.43, 🌐www.hoteldefrance-aubeterre.com; 📍; 2; restaurant from €13) on the central square. Alternatively, you'll find more comfortable accommodation and a fine restaurant just below the village at the Hostellerie du Périgord, beside the bridge (☎05.45.98.50.46, 🌐www.hostellerie-perigord.com; 📍; menus €16.50–28). There's also a campsite (☎05.45.98.60.17; June–Sept) across the other side of the river. An early-morning bus runs to Angoulême (Mon–Sat), while Chalais, which is on the Angoulême train line, is only 12km away.

South of Aubeterre the country gradually changes. Farmland gives way to an extensive forest of oak and sweet chestnut, bracken and broom, interspersed with sour, marshy pasture, very sparsely populated. It's ideal cycling and picnicking country.

St-Jean-de-Côle and around

Twenty kilometres northeast of Brantôme, ST-JEAN-DE-CÔLE ranks as one of the loveliest villages in the Dordogne. Its ancient houses huddle together in typical medieval fashion around a wide sandy square dominated by the charmingly ill-proportioned eleventh-century church of St-Jean-Baptiste and the rugged-looking Château de la Marthonie (not open to the public). The château, which dates from the twelfth century, has acquired various additions in a pleasingly organic fashion.

The tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–7pm, Sat & Sun 2–7pm; Sept–June daily except Wed 2–5.30pm; ☎05.53.62.14.15, 🌐www.ville-saint-jean-de-cole.fr) is also on the square, as well as a couple of restaurants. However, for good traditional fare like truffle omelette you can't beat the wisteria-covered Hôtel St-Jean (☎05.53.52.23.20, 📧lesaintjean@ville-saint-jean-de-cole.fr; 📍; menus from €12, closed Wed out of season) on the main road through the village; it also offers a few simple but clean and comfortable rooms.

Around 10km west of St-Jean, just outside the village of VILLARS, the Château de Puylaugue (daily: July & Aug 10am–7pm; Sept–June 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €5.50; 🌐www.semitour.com) sits on the edge of a valley backed by oak woods. The building you see today was erected at the beginning of the sixteenth century on the site of an earlier military fortress. With its octagonal tower, broad spiral staircase, steep roofs, magnificent fireplaces and false dormer windows, it's a perfect example of French Renaissance architecture. From the gallery at the top of the stairs you get a close-up of the roof and window decoration, as well as a view down the valley, which once was filled by an ornamental lake.

In the next valley south, the ruined Cistercian Boschaud abbey merits a quick visit while you're in the area. Standing on the edge of the woods and reached by a lane not much wider than a farm track, its charm lies as much in the fact that it is – for once – unfenced, unpampered and free, as in the pure, stark lines of its twelfth-century architecture.

A short distance north of Villars, local cavers discovered an extensive cave system in 1958, part of which is open to the public. While the Grotte de Villars (daily: April–June & Sept 10am–noon & 2–7pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; Oct 2–6.30pm; €6.50; 🌐www.grotte-villars.com) boasts a few prehistoric paintings – notably of horses and a still unexplained scene of a man and a bison – the main reason for coming here is the impressive array of stalactites and stalagmites.

Thiviers and Sorges

If you're heading along the main N21 Périgueux–Limoges road, it's worth stopping off at the small market town of THIVIERS, which styles itself as the foie gras capital of the region. Its well-stocked tourist office, on the central square (May–Sept Mon–Sat 10am–1pm & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; Oct–June closed Sun & Mon afternoon; ☎05.53.55.12.50, 🌐www.thiviers.fr), makes the most of this with a small museum dedicated to the history and production of foie gras (same hours; €1.50). A particularly welcoming place to stay is the attractive and characterful Hôtel de France et de Russie, 51 rue du Général-Lamy (☎05.53.55.17.80, 🌐www.thiviers-hotel.com; 📍), between the tourist office and the gare SNCF.

SORGES, closer to Périgueux and strung out along the road, has less to offer aesthetically than Thiviers. However, the tourist office (July & Aug daily 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.30pm; Sept–June Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎05.53.05.90.11, 🌐www.truffe-sorges.org) contains an informative truffle museum (same hours; €4), and staff can also direct you to a nature trail that gives an idea of how and where truffles grow. There's a very reasonable hotel here, too, the Auberge de la Truffe on the main road (☎05.53.05.02.05, 🌐www.auberge-de-la-truffe.com; 📍), with an excellent restaurant (menus €16–70, closed for lunch Mon & Tues).

9

The Château de Hautefort

Forty kilometres east of Périgueux, the Château de Hautefort (daily: Feb, March, Oct & Nov Sat & Sun 2–6pm; April & May daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; June–Sept daily 9.30am–7pm; €8.50; 🌐www.chateau-hautefort.com) enjoys a majestic position at the end of a wooded spur above its feudal village. A magnificent example of good living on a grand scale, the castle has an elegance that is out of step with the usual rough stone fortresses of Périgord. The approach is across a wide esplanade flanked by formal gardens, over the moat by a drawbridge, and into a stylish Renaissance courtyard, opening to the south. Once the property of well-known troubadour Bertrand de Born, it passed into the hands of the Hautefort family in the seventeenth century and was extensively remodelled. In 1968 a fire gutted the castle, but it has since been meticulously restored using traditional techniques; it's all unmistakably new, but the quality of the craftsmanship is superb.

Hautefort has a very pleasant hotel, the Auberge du Parc (☎05.53.50.88.98, ☎05.53.51.61.72; 📍; closed mid-Dec to mid-March; restaurant from €16, closed Sun eve & Wed), just beneath the castle walls. By car, the most attractive route from Périgueux is on the D5 along the River Auvezère via Cubjac and Tourtoirac.

Périgord Pourpre

The area known as the Périgord Pourpre takes its name from the wine-growing region concentrated in the southwest corner of the Dordogne département, most famous for the sweet white wines produced around Monbazillac. The only town of any size is Bergerac, which makes a good base for visiting the Roman remains at Montcaret and the nearby Château de Montaigne, home of the famous sixteenth-century philosopher. The uplands south of Bergerac are peppered with bastides, medieval fortified towns (see box on p.695), such as the beautifully preserved Monpazier, and here also you'll find the Château de Biron, which dominates the countryside for miles around.

Bergerac and around

BERGERAC, “capital” of Périgord Pourpre, lies on the riverbank in the wide plain of the Dordogne. Once a flourishing port for the wine trade, it is still the main market centre for the surrounding maize, vine and tobacco farms. Devastated in the Wars of Religion, when most of its Protestant population fled overseas, Bergerac is now essentially a modern town with some interesting and attractive reminders of the past.

The vieille ville is a calm and pleasant area to wander through, with numerous late medieval houses and some beautiful squares. In rue de l'Ancien-Pont, the splendid seventeenth-century Maison Peyrardède houses an informative Musée du Tabac (Feb–Dec daily except Sun morning & Mon 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3.50), detailing the history of the weed, with collections of pipes and tools of the trade.

Bergerac has a couple of other museums, the best of which is the small Musée Régional du Vin et de la Batellerie in rue des Conférences in the heart of the old town (Tues–Fri 10am–noon & 2–5.30pm, Sat 10am–noon; April–Oct also Sun 2.30–6.30pm; €2.50), with displays on viticulture, barrel-making and the town's once-bustling river-trading past. Nearby, on the very picturesque place de la Myrpe, is a statue in honour of Cyrano de Bergerac, the town's most famous association, on whom a 1990 film starring Gérard Dépardieu was based. The big-nosed lead character in Edmond Rostand's play, though fictional, was inspired by the seventeenth-century philosopher of the same name, who, sadly, had nothing to do with the town.

Wine-lovers should make a beeline for the Maison des Vins, down by the river on quai Salvette (Feb–June & Sept–Dec Tues–Sun 10.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm), which offers free tastings and sells a selection of local wines, as well as providing information about the surrounding vineyards.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is at the end of cours Alsace-Lorraine, ten minutes' walk north from the old town, while the airport (☎05.53.22.25.25) lies 5km southeast of Bergerac (roughly €12 by taxi). The main tourist office is at 97 rue Neuve-d'Argenson, two minutes' walk northeast of the old town (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–7.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9.30am–1pm & 2–7pm; ☎05.53.57.03.11, 🌐www.bergerac-tourisme.com), and a second office opens in summer in the heart of the old town at the Cloître des Récollets (July & Aug daily 10.30am–1pm & 2–6.30pm). You can rent anything with wheels – cars, mopeds and bicycles – from Ucar at 31 bd Victor-Hugo (☎05.53.61.08.16, 🌐www.ucar-location.com), which also offers airport pick-ups. A vast market takes place on Wednesday and Saturday mornings in the covered halles in the old town centre and around Notre-Dame church; Internet access costs €2 per hour at phonebox 24, opposite the train station.

There's a decent range of accommodation to choose from. The best budget option is Le Moderne, opposite the station (☎05.53.57.19.62, ☎05.53.61.80.50; 📅; closed two weeks in Oct), a welcoming, well-kept place with a brasserie restaurant (closed Sun; menus from €16). For something more comfortable, try one of the three-star hotels on place Gambetta between the station and the old town: the De France (☎05.53.57.11.61, 🌐www.hoteldefrance-bergerac.com; 📅), where the more expensive rooms have balconies and a/c, or the De Bordeaux (☎05.53.57.12.83, 🌐www.hotel-bordeaux-bergerac.com; 📅), with a marginally larger swimming pool. There's also a municipal campsite, La Pelouse (☎ & ☎05.53.57.06.67; mid-Feb to Oct), on the south bank of the river.

If you should find yourself here in July, don't miss the magnificent food festival called La Table de Cyrano in the week of July 14. Classical music concerts also take place throughout the month, with jazz on Wednesday evenings throughout July and August. Bergerac is well off for restaurants, the best area to look being the square around the market hall.

Restaurants

La Blanche Hermine place du Marché-Couvert ☎05.53.57.53.42. A popular crêperie, which also serves a range of salads – all at very reasonable prices. It's endearingly decorated with bright, if not exactly sophisticated, children's artwork. Closed Sun & Mon.

Aux Cèpes Enchantés rue de l'Ancien Pont ☎05.53.57.24.90. An excellent spot in summer, with plenty of outside seating and light regional menus from €14.50. There's also a good local wine list to complement the food. April–Sept only.

La Cocotte des Halles ☎05.53.24.10.00. In the covered market itself, this characterful restaurant offers very affordable lunches, with omelettes from €5 and huge plates of salad from €8.

L'Imparfait 8 rue des Fontaines

☎05.53.57.47.92. The most upmarket restaurant in Bergerac: tables surrounded by potted foliage spill out into an attractive pedestrian street. Gastronomic menus from €26. Closed Dec & Sun.

Les Jardins d'Epicure place du Marché-Couvert ☎05.53.57.80.90. A friendly restaurant offering the standard regional dishes, to be enjoyed on the tree-lined pavement. Menus start at €17.

9

Château de Monbazillac

Half a dozen kilometres south of Bergerac, looking out over the gentle slopes of its long-favoured vineyards, stands the handsome Renaissance Château de Monbazillac (Feb, March, Nov & Dec Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; April daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; May & Oct daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; June–Sept daily 10am–7pm; €6), part residence and part fortress, with its corners reinforced by four sturdy towers. Inside is a moderately interesting museum of local traditions and crafts; most engaging are the wine-related displays in the cellar. You can taste – and buy – the velvety sweet white Monbazillac wine here, too; it's generally consumed with desserts or chilled as an aperitif.

Montcaret

West of Bergerac, the main place of interest is MONTCARET, whose biggest draw is a fourth-century Gallo-Roman villa (June–Sept daily 9.45am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; Oct–May daily except Sat 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; €5) with superb mosaics and baths plus an adjoining museum displaying the many objects exhumed on the site. It's another 3.5km to the Château de Montaigne (Feb–April & Nov–Dec Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2–5.30pm; May, June, Sept & Oct Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6.30pm; July & Aug daily 10am–6.30pm; €5.50 entry to château; €2.50 just for the gardens), where Michel de Montaigne wrote many of his chatty, digressive essays on the nature of life and humankind. All that remains of the original building is Montaigne's tower-study, its beams inscribed with his maxims; the rest of the château was rebuilt in pseudo-Renaissance style after a fire in 1885.

Monpazier and around

MONPAZIER, founded in 1284 by King Edward I of England (who was also Duke of Aquitaine), is one of the most complete of the surviving bastides, and still relatively free of the commercialism that suffocates a place like Domme. Picturesque and placid though it is today, the village has a hard and bitter history, being twice – in 1594 and 1637 – the centre of peasant rebellions provoked by the misery that followed the Wars of Religion. Both uprisings were brutally suppressed: the 1637 peasants' leader was broken on the wheel in the square. Sully, the Protestant general, describes a rare moment of light relief in the

From the Occitan word bastida, meaning a group of buildings, bastides were the new towns of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Although they are found all over southwest France, from the Dordogne to the foothills of the Pyrenees, there is a particularly high concentration in the area between the Dordogne and Lot rivers, which at that time formed the disputed “frontier” region between English-held Aquitaine and Capetian France.

That said, the earliest bastides were founded largely for economic and political reasons. They were a means of bringing new land into production – this was a period of rapid population growth and technological innovation – and thus extending the power of the local lord. But as tensions between the French and English forces intensified during the late thirteenth century, so the motive became increasingly military. The bastides now provided a handy way of securing the land along the frontier, and it was generally at this point that they were fortified.

As an incentive, anyone who was prepared to build, inhabit and defend the bastide was granted various perks and concessions in a founding charter. All new residents were allocated a building plot, garden and cultivable land outside the town. The charter might also offer asylum to certain types of criminal or grant exemption from military service, and would allow the election of consuls charged with day-to-day administration – a measure of self-government remarkable in feudal times. Taxes and judicial affairs, meanwhile, remained the preserve of the representative of the king or local lord under whose ultimate authority the bastide lay.

The other defining feature of a bastide is its layout. They are nearly always square or rectangular in shape, depending on the nature of the terrain, and are divided by streets at right angles to each other to produce a chequerboard pattern. The focal point is the market square, often missing its covered halle nowadays, but generally still surrounded by arcades, while the church is relegated to one side, or may even form part of the town walls.

The busiest bastide founders were Alphonse de Poitiers (1249–1271), on behalf of the French crown, after he became Count of Toulouse in 1249, and King Edward I of England (1272–1307), who wished to consolidate his hold on the northern borders of his Duchy of Aquitaine. The former chalked up a total of 57 bastides, including Villeneuve-sur-Lot (1251), Monflanquin (1252) and Ste-Foy-la-Grande (1255), while Edward was responsible for Beaumont (1272) and Monpazier (1284) amongst others. While many bastides retain no more than vestiges of their original aspect, both Monpazier and Monflanquin have survived almost entirely intact.

terrible wars, when the men of the Catholic bastide of Villefranche-du-Périgord planned to capture Monpazier on the same night as the men of Monpazier planned to capture Villefranche. By chance, both sides took different routes, met no resistance, looted to their hearts’ content and returned home congratulating themselves on their luck and skill, only to find in the morning that things were rather different. The peace terms were that everyone should return everything to its proper place.

Monpazier follows the typical bastide layout, with a grid of streets built around a gem of a central square – sunny, still and slightly menacing. Deep, shady arcades pass under all the houses, which are separated from each other by a small gap to reduce fire risk; at the corners the buttresses are cut away to allow the passage of laden pack animals. There’s also an ancient lavoir where women used to wash clothes, and a much altered church.

The well-organized tourist office is on the central square (daily: Jan & Dec 10.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–5.30pm; Feb–June & Sept–Nov 10am–12.30pm

& 2–6.30pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; ☎ 05.53.22.68.59, 🌐 www.pays-des-bastides.com), where you'll also find reasonable accommodation at the Hôtel de France, 21 rue St-Jacques (☎ 05.53.22.60.06, ☎ 05.53.22.07.27; 🍷; closed Nov–March; restaurant from €18.50, closed Tues eve & Wed out of season). A more extravagant option is the Hôtel Edward 1er (☎ 05.53.22.44.00, 🌐 www.hoteledward1er.com; 🍷) at 5 rue St-Pierre, a few minutes' walk from the main square, with its own swimming pool and a restaurant from €27. When it comes to eating though, you can't beat La Bastide, at 52 rue St-Jacques (☎ 05.53.22.60.59; closed Mon & Feb; menus €13.50–48), for traditional atmosphere and classic, regional cooking. The best of the campsites in the vicinity is the luxurious Moulin de David, roughly 3km to the south on the road to Villeréal (☎ 05.53.22.65.25, 🌐 www.moulin-de-david.com; mid-May to mid-Sept).

The Château de Biron

Eight kilometres south of Monpazier, the vast Château de Biron (daily: July & Aug 10am–7pm; Sept–June 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €5.50; 🌐 www.semitour.com) was begun in the eleventh century and added to piecemeal afterwards. You can take a guided tour (in French only), but better to borrow the English-language translation and wander at will around the rooms and the grassy courtyard, where there is a restored Renaissance chapel and guardhouse with tremendous views over the roofs of the feudal village below.

A single street runs through the village of BIRON, past a covered market on timber supports iron-hard with age, and out under an arched gateway, where well-manured vegetable plots interspersed with iris, lily and Iceland poppies lie under the tumbledown walls. At the bottom of the hill, another group of houses stands on a small square with a well in front of the village church, its Romanesque origins hidden by motley alterations. The Auberge du Château, back near the market hall, makes a perfect lunch spot (☎ 05.53.63.13.33; closed Sat lunch & Mon, also Dec & Jan).

Périgord Noir

Périgord Noir encompasses the central part of the valley of the Dordogne, and the valley of the Vézère. This is the distinctive Dordogne country: deep-cut valleys enclosed by the water-smooth cliffs their rivers have eroded, with fields of maize in the alluvial bottoms and dense oak woods on the heights, interspersed with patches of not very fertile farmland. Plantations of walnut trees (cultivated for their oil), flocks of low-slung grey geese (their livers enlarged for foie gras) and prehistoric-looking stone huts called bories are all hallmarks of Périgord Noir.

The well-preserved medieval architecture of Sarlat, the wealth of prehistory and the staggering cave paintings of the Vézère valley, and the stunning beauty of the château-studded Dordogne have all contributed to making this one of the most heavily touristed inland areas of France, with all the concomitant problems of crowds, high prices and tack. If possible, it's worth coming out of season, but if you can't, seek accommodation away from the main centres, and always drive along the back roads – the smaller the better – even when there is a more direct route available.

Sarlat and around

SARLAT-LA-CANÉDA, capital of Périgord Noir, lies in a hollow between hills 10km or so back from the Dordogne River. You hardly notice the modern town, as it's the mainly fifteenth- and sixteenth-century houses of the vieille ville in mellow, honey-coloured stone that draw the attention.

The vieille ville is an excellent example of medieval organic urban growth. The first town centre to benefit from culture minister André Malraux's law of 1962 which created the concept of the secteur sauvegardé (protected area), it boasts no fewer than 65 protected buildings and monuments. The old centre is violated only by the straight swath of the rue de la République which cuts through its middle. The west side remains relatively un-chic; the east side is where most people wander. As you approach the old town from the station, turn right down rue Lakanal which leads to the large and unexciting Cathédrale St-Sacerdos, mostly dating from its seventeenth-century renovation. Opposite stands the town's finest house, the Maison de La Boétie (not open to the public) once the home of Montaigne's friend Étienne de La Boétie, with its gabled tiers of windows and characteristic steep roof stacked with heavy limestone tiles (lauzes).

For a better sense of the medieval town, wander through the cool, shady lanes and courtyards – cour des Fontaines and cour des Chanoines – around the back of the cathedral. On a slope directly behind the cathedral stands the curious twelfth-century coned tower, the Lanterne des Morts, whose exact function has escaped historians, though the most popular theory is that it was built to commemorate St Bernard, who performed various miracles when he visited the town in 1147.

There are more wonderful old houses in the streets to the north, especially rue des Consuls, and up the slopes to the east. Eventually, though, Sarlat's labyrinthine lanes will lead you back to the central place de la Liberté, where the big Saturday market spreads its stands bearing foie gras, truffles, walnuts and mushrooms according to the season, and where various people try to make a living from the hordes who hit Sarlat in the summer.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is just over 1km south of the old town, where on rue Tourny you'll find the tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–7pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.53.31.45.45, 🌐www.ot-sarlat-perigord.fr). For a small fee, they'll help find accommodation, though it can be extremely difficult in high season. You can rent bicycles and scooters from Cycles Sarladais, avenue A.-Briand (☎05.53.28.51.87, ✉cycles.sarladais@wanadoo.fr), while there is Internet access at Easy Planet, 17 av Gambetta – though at €6 per hour, it's daylight robbery.

The nicest and most reasonable place to stay in Sarlat is the Hôtel des Récollets, 4 rue J.-J.-Rousseau (☎05.53.31.36.00, 🌐www.hotel-recollets-sarlat.com; Ⓢ), with comfortable rooms around an attractive patio. The modern, a/c Hôtel de Compostelle at 64 av de Selves, the northern extension of rue de la République (☎05.53.59.08.53, 🌐www.hotel-compostelle-sarlat.com; Ⓢ; closed mid-Nov to Feb), is also good value, while the more upmarket Hôtel de Selves, 93 av de Selves, has a pool and small garden (☎05.53.31.50.00, 🌐www.selves-sarlat.com; Ⓢ; closed mid-Jan to mid-Feb). The nearest camp-site, Les Périères, on Sarlat's northern outskirts (☎05.53.59.05.84, 🌐www.lesperieres.com; April–Sept), is very well equipped but costs almost as much as a hotel; much better to try Les Terrasses du Périgord, about 2.5km north of Sarlat near Proissans village (☎05.53.59.02.25, 🌐www.terrasses-du-perigord.com; May–Sept).

Restaurants tend to be overpriced in Sarlat, particularly those that open only in summer. Two nice choices are Criquetanu's, 5 rue des Armes (menus €16–32; ☎05.53.59.48.10; closed Mon & Nov–March), serving up platters of local delicacies in a lovely fourteenth-century corner house, and Le Jardin des Consuls, 4 rue des Consuls (menus from €13; ☎05.53.59.18.77), which has its own terrace back from the street. For something a bit special try Le Quatre Saisons, 2 Côte de Toulouse (menus €18–34; ☎05.53.29.48.59; closed Tues & Wed out of season), with an interior courtyard, or splash out at Le Présidial, 6 rue Landry (menus €26–40; ☎05.53.28.92.47; closed Sun, Mon lunch & Nov–March), in a lovely seventeenth-century mansion and its walled garden.

Not far away there are some very pleasant alternatives to staying – or eating – in Sarlat. On the banks of the Dordogne at VITRAC, about 7km south of Sarlat, the 🌟 Hôtel La Treille (☎05.53.28.33.19, 🌐www.latreille-perigord.com; Ⓢ–Ⓢ; closed Feb, also Mon & Tues out of season) is great value, with large rooms and an excellent restaurant (menus from €16.50; closed Mon lunch) in a vine-covered building with a sunny terrace. Some 5km to the east, just outside the village of CARSAC, the Hôtel la Villa Romaine (☎05.53.28.52.07, 🌐www.lavillaromaine.com; Ⓢ; closed Feb & 2 weeks in Nov) offers extreme pampering in a cluster of attractive former farm buildings around a swimming pool. One more good choice is the little hilltop hamlet of MARQUAY about halfway to Les Eyzies, where the Hôtel des Bories (☎05.53.29.67.02; Ⓢ; closed Nov–March) offers a marvellous view, pool and attached restaurant, L'Esterel (menus from €14), for which it's vital to book several months in advance for July and August.

Les Jardins d'Eyrignac

The manoir of Eyrignac, 13km northeast of Sarlat, is a very lovely seventeenth-century example of what in English would be called a country house. Its great glory is its garden, which is remarkable for its sculpted bushes and geometric arrangement (guided tours daily: April & May 10am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; June–Sept 9.30am–7pm; Oct–March 10.30am–12.30pm & 2.30pm–dusk; €8; house closed to the public). The original formal garden was the work of an eighteenth-century Italian architect, but it was later converted to an English romantic garden as the owners – still the same family – followed subsequent fashions. Today it is a combination of Italian and French styles, with practically no flowers but lines of evergreens – mainly box, hornbeam, cypress and yew – clipped and arranged in formal patterns of alleys and parterres. A work of art in its own right, it's now classified as a national monument.

The Vézère valley

The valley of the Vézère River between Limeuil and St-Amand-de-Coly justifiably styles itself as the prehistory capital of the world. The high, rocky outcrops which overlook acres of thick forest are riddled with caves which have provided shelter for humans for tens of thousands of years. It was here that the first skeletons of Cro-Magnon people – the first Homo sapiens, tall and muscular with a large skull – were unearthed in 1868 by labourers digging out the Périgueux–Agen train line. Since then, an incomparable wealth of archeological and artistic evidence about the life of late Stone Age people has been revealed in the area, most famously in the breathtakingly sophisticated cave paintings of Lascaux and Font de Gaume.

Away from the throngs of visitors at the caves, there is much to appreciate in the peace and quiet of the Vézère valley. It's best enjoyed from a canoe, where you'll often find yourself alone in a bend of the river, rather than part of a vast armada, as tends to be the case on the Dordogne.

Limeuil

Built into the steep slope at the confluence of the Dordogne and Vézère rivers, the beautiful village of LIMEUIL is a picturesque place to while away a couple of hours. From the riverbank – an ideal picnic spot, with a pebbly beach for those who fancy a dip – the narrow, cobbled rue du Port leads steeply uphill, winding in between the medieval houses and through the old gateways. At the top, the best views out over the village and surrounding countryside have been monopolized by the Parc Panoramique (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 2.30–6pm, Sun 10am–6.30pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; €5), a wilderness of trees, shrubs and crumbling stone walls which provide some welcome shade from which to enjoy the scenery.

Canoes can be rented for trips on either river down by the water, where there are also a couple of cafés. For eating though, by far the best option is up the hill at Au Bon Accueil (☎05.53.63.30.97, 🌐www.au-bon-accueil-limeuil.com; closed Nov–March; 🍴), which serves quality regional menus at €16–37 and also has comfortable rooms.

Les Eyzies

The main base for visiting many of the prehistoric painted caves is LES EYZIES-DE-TAYAC, a one-street village completely dedicated to tourism. While you're here, though, visit the Musée National de Préhistoire (June & Sept daily except Tues 9.30am–6pm; July & Aug daily 9.30am–6.30pm; Oct–May daily except Tues 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; €5; @www.musee-prehistoire-eyzies.fr), at long last in its marvellous new home, which contains all the most important prehistoric artefacts found in the various caves in the region. Look out for the oil lamp from Lascaux and the exhibits from La Madeleine, to the north of Les Eyzies, including a superb bas-relief of a bison licking its flank.

The tourist office, on Les Eyzies' one street (June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.53.06.97.05, @www.leseyzies.com) offers bike rental, Internet access and information on local chambres d'hôtes and gîtes d'étape.

Hotels are pricey and may require half-board in high season. The cheapest is the friendly Les Falaises, in the main street (☎05.53.06.97.35, @hotel-des-falaises@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed Dec), but the slightly more expensive La Rivière, about 1km away on the Périgueux road, has more comfortable rooms (☎05.53.06.97.14, @www.lariviereleseyzies.com; 📍; closed Nov–March; simple meals from €12). There is also a campsite here (April–Oct), under the same management. Moving up a notch, the ivy-covered Hostellerie du Passeur, by the tourist office (☎05.53.06.97.13, @www.hostellerie-du-passeur.com; 📍; closed Nov–Jan; restaurant €26–65), has small but very comfortable rooms, while just east of the centre, in a lovely spot by a millrace, Le Moulin de la Beune (☎05.53.06.94.33, @www.moulindebeune.com; 📍; closed Nov–March) has well-priced rooms and an excellent restaurant (closed Tues lunch, Wed & Sat lunch; menus €29–55). Alternatively, you could stay in CAMPAGNE, a pretty village 6km downstream, where you'll find big, bright rooms and regional menus at the Hôtel du Château (☎05.53.07.23.50, @hotduchateau@aol.com; 📍; closed mid-Oct to Easter; restaurant from €18).

Apart from the hotel restaurants, one place worth trying in Les Eyzies is Le Chateaubriant (☎05.53.35.06.11; closed Jan & Feb, Wed & Sun eve out of season), which has an attractive terrace and good-value menus from €11.

Around Les Eyzies

There are more prehistoric caves around Les Eyzies than you could possibly hope to visit in one day. Besides, the compulsory guided tours are tiring, so it's best to select just a couple of the ones listed below.

Most of these caves were not used as permanent homes, and there are various theories as to the purpose of such inaccessible spots. Most agree that they were sanctuaries and, if not actually places of worship, at least had religious significance. One suggestion is that making images of animals that were commonly hunted – like reindeer and bison – or feared – like bears and mammoths – was a kind of sympathetic magic intended to help men either catch or evade these animals. Another is that they were part of a fertility cult: sexual images of women with pendulous breasts and protuberant behinds are common. Others argue that these cave paintings served educational purposes, making parallels with Australian aborigines who used similar images to teach their young vital survival information as well as the history and mythological origins of their people. But much remains unexplained – the abstract signs that appear in so many caves, for example, and the arrows which clearly cannot be arrows, since Stone Age arrowheads looked different from these representations.

Grotte de Font-de-Gaume

Since its discovery in 1901, dozens of polychrome paintings have been found in the tunnel-like Grotte de Font-de-Gaume (daily except Sat: mid-May to mid-Sept 9.30am–5.30pm; mid-Sept to mid-May 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; €6.10; ☎05.53.06.86.00, ☎05.53.35.26.18), 1.5km along the D47 to Sarlat. Be aware that only 180 people are allowed to visit the cave each day and tickets sell out fast. You are advised to book (by phone or fax) at least a month ahead in high season and well in advance at other times. However, if you want to chance it, fifty tickets are sold on the spot each day; start queuing early.

The cave was first settled by Stone Age people during the last Ice Age – about 25,000 BC – when the Dordogne was the domain of roaming bison, reindeer and mammoths. The cave mouth is no more than a fissure concealed by rocks and trees above a small lush valley, while inside it's a narrow twisting passage of irregular height in which you quickly lose your bearings in the dark. The first painting you see is a frieze of bison, at about eye level: reddish-brown in colour, massive, full of movement, and very far from the primitive representations you might expect. Further on comes the most miraculous image of all, a frieze of five bison discovered in 1966 during cleaning operations. The colour, remarkably sharp and vivid, is preserved by a protective layer of calcite. Shading under the belly and down the thighs is used to give three-dimensionality with a sophistication that seems utterly modern. Another panel consists of superimposed drawings, a fairly common phenomenon in cave painting, sometimes the result of work by successive generations, but here an obviously deliberate technique. A reindeer in the foreground shares legs with a large bison behind to indicate perspective.

Stocks of artists' materials have also been found: kilos of prepared pigments; palettes – stones stained with ground-up earth pigments; and wooden painting sticks. Painting was clearly a specialized, perhaps professional, business, reproduced in dozens and dozens of caves located in the central Pyrenees and areas of northern Spain.

Grotte des Combarelles

The Grotte des Combarelles (same hours as Font-de-Gaume; €6.10; maximum six people per tour), 2km along the D47 towards Sarlat, was discovered in 1910. The innermost part of the cave is covered with engravings from the Magdalenian period (about 12,000 years ago). Drawn over a period of 2000 years, many are superimposed one upon another, and include horses, reindeer, mammoths and stylized human figures – among the finest are the heads of a horse and a lioness.

As with Font-de-Gaume, pre-booking is essential, especially in peak season (same phone and fax); collect tickets from Font-de-Gaume.

Abri du Cap Blanc and the Château de Commarque

Not a cave but a natural rock shelter, the Abri du Cap Blanc lies on a steep wooded hillside about 7km east of Les Eyzies (turn left onto the D48 shortly after Les Combarelles). At the time of writing it had just come under new ownership and was expected to be open year round – check at Les Eyzies' tourist office for exact opening hours. The shelter contains a sculpted frieze of horses and bison dating from the Middle Magdalenian period, about 14,000 years ago. Of only ten surviving prehistoric sculptures in France, this is undoubtedly the best. The design is deliberate, with the sculptures polished and set off against a pockmarked background. But what makes this place extraordinary is not just the large scale, but the high relief of some of the sculptures. This was only possible in places where light reached in, which in turn brought the danger of destruction by exposure to the air. Cro-Magnon people actually lived in this shelter, and a female skeleton has been found that is some 2000 years younger than the frieze.

For a non-cave detour, continue a little further up the heavily wooded Beune valley from Cap Blanc, to the elegant sixteenth-century Château de Laussel (closed to the public). On the opposite side of the valley stand the romantic ruins of the Château de Commarque (daily: April 10am–6pm; May, June & Sept 10am–7pm; July & Aug 10am–8pm; €5.60; @www.commarque.com). Dating from the twelfth century, it was originally a castrum, a fortified village made up of six separate fortresses, each belonging to a different noble family. The ruins have now been made structurally sound and it's possible once again to climb the thirty-metre-high tower for views over the surrounding countryside. The easiest way to reach the château is by a footpath starting below Cap Blanc. Cars have to approach from the south, following signs from the D47 Sarlat road.

Grotte du Grand Roc

As well as prehistoric cave paintings, you can see some truly spectacular stalactites and stalagmites in the area around Les Eyzies. Some of the best examples are off the D47 towards Périgueux, 2km north of Les Eyzies, in the Grotte du Grand Roc (daily: April–June, Sept–Nov & Christmas holidays 10am–6pm; July & Aug 9.30am–7pm; €7; @www.grandroc.com), whose entrance is high up in the cliffs that line much of the Vézère valley. There's a great view from the mouth of the cave and, inside, along some 80m of tunnel, a fantastic array of rock formations.

La Roque St-Christophe

The enormous prehistoric dwelling site, La Roque St-Christophe (daily: March–June, Sept & Oct 10am–6.30pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; Nov–Feb 11am–5pm; €6.80; @www.roque-st-christophe.com), 9km northeast of Les Eyzies along the D706 to Montignac, is made up of about one hundred rock shelters on five levels, hollowed out of the limestone cliffs. The whole complex is nearly a kilometre long and about 80m above ground-level, where the River Vézère once flowed. The earliest traces of occupation go back over 50,000 years. The view is pretty good, and the French guided tour instructive, but most of the finds are on display at the Musée National de Préhistoire in Les Eyzies (see p.700).

Montignac

Some 26km up the Vézère valley, MONTIGNAC is the main base for visiting the Lascaux caves. It's a more attractive place than Les Eyzies, with several wooden-balconied houses leaning appealingly over the river, a good market (Wed & Sat) and a lively annual arts festival in late July, featuring international folk groups. The tourist office is on place Bertran-de-Born (March–June, Sept & Oct Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Nov–Feb Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎05.53.51.82.60, @www.bienvenue-montignac.com) and can provide a list of local chambres d'hôtes.

Hotels, as everywhere around here, get booked up quickly in summer. The Hôtel de la Grotte, on rue du 4-Septembre (☎05.53.51.80.48, @hoteldelagrotte@wanadoo.fr; 🍷; restaurant from €19.50), is a good, reasonably priced option, with a pleasant garden beside a stream, but the cheapest rooms on offer are at Le Petit Monde, just round the corner on the road to Sarlat (☎05.53.51.32.76, @www.le-petit-monde.com; 🍷; restaurant from €12, closed Sun). Then it's a big leap up to the three-star Soleil d'Or, also on the main rue du 4-Septembre (☎05.53.51.80.22, @www.le-soleil-dor.com; 🍷; closed Feb), with its own pool and restaurant (menus from €24). If you fancy some real luxury, you can stay in the pretty period rooms of the ivy- and wisteria-clad Hostellerie de la Roseaie, across the river in quiet place d'Armes (☎05.53.50.53.92, 🌐www.laroseaie-hotel.com; 📍; closed mid-Nov to March; restaurant from €19). And finally there's a well-tended three-star campsite, Le Moulin Bleufond (☎05.53.51.83.95, 🌐www.bleufond.com; April–Oct), on the riverbank 500m downstream.

There are other interesting restaurant and accommodation options in the area. If you book ahead, you're in for a feast at Le Bareil, a farm restaurant near LA CHAPELLE-AUBAREIL, a few kilometres beyond the Lascaux caves (☎05.53.50.74.28; closed Mon), which serves traditional home cooking (menus from €22). A particularly good spot for campers in search of luxury is the four-star Le Paradis site (☎05.53.50.72.64, 🌐www.le-paradis.com; April–Oct) near the exquisite riverside village of ST-LÉON-SUR-VÈZÈRE, some 9km south of Montignac. Further south again at TAMNIÈS, midway between Montignac and Sarlat, the Hôtel Laborderie (☎05.53.29.68.59, 🌐www.hotel-laborderie.com; 📍; closed Nov–March) offers comfortable accommodation and good food (menus from €19).

Grotte de Lascaux and Lascaux II

The Grotte de Lascaux was discovered in 1940 by four boys who were, according to popular myth, looking for their dog and fell into a deep cavern decorated with marvellously preserved paintings of animals. Executed by Cro-Magnon people 17,000 years ago, the paintings are among the finest examples of prehistoric art in existence. There are five or six identifiable styles, and subjects include the bison, mammoth and horse, plus the biggest known prehistoric drawing, of a 5.5-metre bull with astonishingly expressive head and face. In 1948, the cave was opened to the public, and over the course of the next fifteen years more than a million tourists came to Lascaux. Sadly, because of deterioration from the body heat and breath of visitors, the cave had to be closed in 1963; now you have to be content with the replica known as Lascaux II, 2km south of Montignac on the D704 (Feb, March & Oct–Dec Tues–Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; April–June & Sept daily 9am–6pm; July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; closed Jan; €8, combined ticket with Le Thot €10; 🌐www.semitour.com). There are 2000 tickets on sale each day but these go fast in peak season; you can buy them in person a day or so in advance, while telephone bookings are accepted only in July and August (☎05.53.51.96.23). Note also that in winter (Oct–March) tickets are normally on sale at the site, while in summer (April–Sept) they are only available from an office beside Montignac tourist office – the system and opening times are somewhat fickle, however, so it's safest to check in Montignac before heading up to the cave.

Opened in 1983, Lascaux II was the result of eleven years' painstaking work by twenty artists and sculptors, using the same methods and materials as the original cave painters. While the visit can't offer the excitement of a real cave, the reconstruction rarely disappoints the thousands who trek here every year. The guided tour lasts forty minutes (commentary in French or English). If you have bought the joint ticket to include entry into Le Thot prehistoric theme park (same opening times as Lascaux II; €5.50 for Le Thot alone, €10 for joint ticket; 🌐www.semitour.com), 5km down the Vézère near THONAC, it's best to visit the park first for an enhanced appreciation of the cave itself, particularly if you have kids. The video showing the construction of Lascaux II is particularly interesting, and there are Disneyesque mock-ups of prehistoric scenes and live examples of some of the animals that feature in the paintings:

European bison, long-horned cattle and Przewalski's horses, rare and beautiful animals from Mongolia believed to resemble the prehistoric wild horse – notice the erect mane.

St-Amand-de-Coly

Nine kilometres east of Montignac, the village of ST-AMAND-DE-COLY boasts a superbly beautiful fortified Romanesque church, a magical venue for concerts in the summer. Despite its bristling military architecture, the twelfth-century church manages to combine great delicacy and spirituality, with its purity of line and simple decoration most evocative in the low sun of late afternoon or early evening. Its defences left nothing to chance: the walls are 4m thick, a ditch runs all the way round, and a passage once skirted the eaves, with numerous positions for archers to rain down arrows and blind stairways to mislead attackers. Near the church, the simple Hôtel Gardette (☎05.53.51.68.50, 🌐www.hotel-gardette.com; 🍴; restaurant from €16, closed Oct–Easter) makes it possible to stay overnight in this tiny, idyllic place.

The Dordogne valley

The most familiar images of the River Dordogne are of the stretch around Beynac and La Roque-Gageac, when the scenery is at its most spectacular, with cliff-top châteaux facing each other across the valley. The most imposing of these date from the Hundred Years War, when the river marked the frontier between French-held land to the north and English territory to the south. Further upstream, the hilltop bastide village of Domme offers stunning views, but is as crowded as Sarlat in summer.

Just south of the river, the Abbaye de Cadouin lies tucked out of harm's way in a fold of the landscape, hiding a lovely Gothic cloister. The train line from Bergerac to Sarlat runs along the river for this stretch, offering some wonderful views but unfortunately not stopping anywhere very useful; to appreciate the villages covered here, you need your own transport or, better still, a canoe.

The Abbaye de Cadouin

Before setting off up the Dordogne, it's worth taking a detour about 6km south of Le Buisson to the twelfth-century Cistercian Abbaye de Cadouin. For eight hundred years until 1935 it drew flocks of pilgrims to wonder at a piece of cloth first mentioned by Simon de Montfort in 1214 and thought to be part of Christ's shroud. In 1935 the two bands of embroidery at either end of the cloth were shown to contain an Arabic text from around the eleventh century. Since then the main attraction has been the finely sculpted but badly damaged capitals of the flamboyant Gothic cloister (Feb–June & Sept–Dec Mon, Wed, Thurs & Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily except Tues 10am–7pm; €5.50; 🌐www.semitour.com). Beside it stands a Romanesque church with a stark, bold front and wooden belfry roofed with chestnut shingles (chestnut trees abound around here – their timber was used in furniture-making and their nuts ground for flour during the formerly frequent famines). Inside the church, the nave is slightly out of alignment; this is thought to be deliberate and perhaps a vestige of pagan attachments, as the three windows are aligned so that at the winter and summer solstices the sun shines through all three in a single shaft.

You can stay across the road from the abbey at the Restaurant de l'Abbaye (☎05.53.63.40.93, ☎05.53.63.40.28; 🍴; closed Sun eve & Mon), which has four simple en-suite rooms and serves reasonably priced meals (menus from €13), or in the monks' dormitories themselves, now an excellent HI youth hostel (☎05.53.73.28.78, ✉cadouin@fuaj.org; closed mid-Dec to Jan). There's also a small campsite in the village, Les Jardins de l'Abbaye (☎05.53.61.89.30, ✉jardins-abbaye@wanadoo.fr; April–Oct).

Another possibility is to stay in the hilltop town of BELVÈS, some 15km further east along the D54. The Hôtel Le Home, on the through road at the top of the hill, provides good cheap accommodation and food (☎05.53.29.01.65, 🌐www.lehomedebelvels.fr; 📍; closed Sun & two weeks at Christmas; restaurant from €10). Next door is the more upmarket Belvédère (☎05.53.31.51.41, 🌐www.belvedere-perigord.com; 📍; closed two weeks in Nov, and Wed & Thurs out of season; restaurant €19–28). The nearest campsite is the three-star Les Nauves (☎05.53.29.12.64, 🌐www.lesnauves.com; April–Sept), 4.5km off the Monpazier road.

The châteaux of Les Milandes, Fayrac and Castelnau

The first of the string of châteaux that line the Dordogne east of Le Buisson is Les Milandes (daily April–June, Sept & Oct 10am–6.15pm; July & Aug 9.30am–7.30pm; €7.80; 🌐www.milandes.com), perched high on the south bank. Built in 1489, it was the property of the de Caumont family until the

Josephine Baker and the Rainbow Tribe

Born on June 3, 1906, in the black ghetto of East St Louis, Illinois, Josephine Baker was one of the most remarkable women of the twentieth century. Her mother washed clothes for a living, her father was a drummer who soon deserted his family, yet by the late 1920s Josephine was the most celebrated cabaret star in France, primarily due to her role in the legendary Folies Bergères show in Paris. On her first night, de Gaulle, Hemingway, Piaf and Stravinsky were among the audience, and her notoriety was further enhanced by her long line of illustrious husbands and lovers, which included the Crown Prince of Sweden and the crime novelist Georges Simenon. She also mixed with the likes of Le Corbusier and Adolf Loos, and kept a pet cheetah called Mildred, with whom she used to walk around Paris. During the war, she was active in the Resistance, for which she won the Croix de Guerre. Later on, she became involved in the civil rights movement in North America, where she insisted on playing to non-segregated audiences, a stance which got her arrested in Canada and tailed by the FBI in the US.

By far her most bizarre project was the château of Les Milandes, which she rented from 1936 and then bought in 1947, after her marriage to the French orchestra leader Jo Bouillon. Having equipped the place with two hotels, three restaurants, a mini-golf course, tennis court and an autobiographical wax museum, she opened the château to the general public as a model multicultural community, popularly dubbed the “village du monde”. In the course of the 1950s, she adopted babies (mostly orphans) of different ethnic and religious backgrounds from around the world, and by the end of the decade, she had brought twelve children to Les Milandes, including a black Catholic Colombian and a Buddhist Korean, along with her mother, brother and sister from East St Louis.

Over 300,000 people a year visited the château in the 1950s, but the conservative local population were never very happy about Les Milandes and what Josephine dubbed her “Rainbow Tribe”. In the 1960s, Baker's financial problems, divorce and two heart attacks spelled the end for the project, and despite a sit-in protest by Baker herself (by then in her sixties), the château was sold off in 1968. Josephine died of a stroke in 1975 and was given a grand state funeral at La Madeleine in Paris, mourned by thousands of her adopted countryfolk.

Revolution, but its most famous owner was the Folies Bergères star, Josephine Baker (see box opposite), who lived here from 1936 to 1968. The stories surrounding the place are more intriguing than the château itself, which contains a motley collection of Ms Baker's effects. The garden, meanwhile, hosts daily displays by birds of prey.

Further along on the same side of the river, the Château de Fayrac was an English forward position in the Hundred Years War, built to watch over Beynac, on the opposite bank, where the French were holed up. All slated pepper-pot towers, it's unfortunately closed to the public, but you can visit the partially ruined Château de Castelnaud (daily: Feb–April & Oct to mid-Nov 10am–6pm; May, June & Sept 10am–7pm; July & Aug 9am–8pm; mid-Nov to Jan 2–5pm; €7, or €12.40 for a joint ticket with Marqueyssac; 📍 www.castelnaud.com), a little to the south of Fayrac and the true rival to Beynac in terms of impregnability – although it was successfully captured by the bellicose Simon de Montfort as early as 1214. The English held it for much of the Hundred Years War, and it wasn't until the Revolution that it was finally abandoned. Fairly heavily restored in the last two decades, it now houses a highly informative museum of medieval warfare. Its core is an extensive collection of original weaponry, including all sorts of bizarre contraptions, and a fine assortment of armour.

Beynac

Clearly visible on an impregnable cliff edge on the north bank of the river, the eye-catching village and castle of BEYNAC-ET-CAZENAC (generally shortened to Beynac) was built in the days when the river was the only route open to traders and invaders. By road, it's 3km to the château (daily: 10am–6pm; €7) but a steep lane leads up through the village and takes only fifteen minutes by foot. It's protected on the landward side by a double wall; elsewhere the sheer drop of almost 200m does the job. The flat terrace at the base of the keep, which was added by the English, conceals the remains of the houses where the beleaguered villagers lived; one of the houses has been partly excavated. Richard the Lionheart held the place for a time, until a gangrenous wound received while besieging the castle of Châlus, north of Périgueux ended his term of blood-letting.

Originally, to facilitate defence, the rooms inside the keep were only connected by a narrow spiral staircase – in stone, not wood as in the reconstruction, because of the danger of fire. The division of domestic space into dining rooms and so forth only came about when the advent of artillery made these old châteaux-forts militarily obsolete. From the roof there's a stupendous – and vertiginous – view upriver to the Château de Marqueyssac, whose beautiful seventeenth- and nineteenth-century gardens extend along the ridge (same hours as Castelnaud; €6.80, or €12.40 for a joint ticket with Castelnaud).

The best of Beynac's hotels are the Hôtel du Château (☎05.53.29.19.20, 📍 www.hotelduchateau-dordogne.com; 🍷), with a small swimming pool and a restaurant from €20 (closed Dec), and the Hôtel Bonnet (☎05.53.29.50.01, 📍 www.hotelbonnet.com; closed Nov–Feb; 🍷), which has attractively furnished rooms and a terrace overlooking the river. Both hotels are on the main road running along the river, where a little further east there's also a campsite, Le Capeyrou (☎05.53.29.54.95, 📍 www.campinglecapeyrou.com; April–Sept).

La Roque-Gageac

The village of LA ROQUE-GAGEAC is almost too perfect, its ochre-coloured houses sheltering under dramatically overhanging cliffs. Regular winner of France's prettiest village contest, it inevitably pulls in the tourist buses, and since the main road separates the village from the river, the noise and fumes of the traffic can become oppressive. The best way to escape is to slip away through the lanes and alleyways that wind up through the terraced houses towards the ruins of some twelfth-century fortifications built into the cliff face (April–Oct daily 10.30am–6pm; €5). The other option is to rent a canoe and

△ River Dordogne at Domme

Canoeing on the Dordogne and Vézère

Canoeing is hugely popular in the Dordogne, especially during the summer months when the Vézère and Dordogne rivers are shallow and slow-flowing – ideal for beginners. There are rental outlets at just about every twist in both rivers, and although it's possible to rent one-person kayaks or two-person canoes by the hour, it's best to take at least a half-day or longer, and simply cruise downstream. The company you book through will either take you to your departure point or send a minibus to pick you up from your final destination. Prices vary according to what's on offer; expect to pay around €18–22 per day. Most places function daily in July and August, on demand in May, June and September, and are closed the rest of the year. All companies are obliged to equip you with life jackets (gilets) and teach you basic safety procedures, most importantly how to capsize and get out without drowning. You must be able to swim. Below are just a handful of the choices on offer.

River Dordogne

Canoe Dordogne La Roque-Gageac ☎05.53.29.58.50, 🌐www.canoe-dordogne.fr. Hourly rental to enjoy the view from the other side of the river, or distances of 9km, 16km or 25km paddling downstream past Beynac and Castelnaud to finish at the base in La Roque-Gageac.

Canoe Loisirs Vitrac ☎05.53.28.23.43, 🌐www.canoes-loisirs.com. Trips start at Vitrac or Carsac, to be picked up at Castelnaud or Beynac.

Copeyre Canoe Souillac ☎05.65.37.33.51, 🌐www.copeyre.com. Twelve bases from Argentat to Beynac; choose your own day-trip or longer outings of up to seven days. Many of their bases also rent out bikes.

Randonnée Dordogne Cénac ☎05.53.28.22.01, 🌐www.euroriviere.com. Possibilities along the full length of the river, from 10km to seven-day trips.

Safaraid Vayrac ☎05.65.37.44.87, 🌐www.canoe-kayak-dordogne.com. Eight bases from Argentat to Souillac; choose your own route, with rental available by the hour, day, week or longer.

River Vézère

Animations Vézère Canoe Kayak Les Eyzies ☎05.53.06.92.92, 🌐www.canoes-loisirs.com. Various distances available between Montignac and Le Bugue.

Canoe Les 7 Rives Montignac ☎05.53.50.19.26, 📧bernau@wanadoo.fr. Choice of distances downstream to Thonac, St-Léon or La Roque St-Christophe.

Canoe Rivières Loisirs Limeuil ☎05.53.63.38.73, 🌐www.canoes-rivieres-loisirs.com. Day-trips from one to eight hours on either river, always finishing back in Limeuil.

paddle over to the opposite bank, where you can picnic and enjoy a great view of the village, at its best in the burnt-orange glow of the evening sun.

Most people just come here for the afternoon, so there's usually space if you want to stay the night, most pleasantly at 🍷 La Belle Étoile ☎05.53.29.51.44, 📧hotel.belle-etoile@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed Nov–March), whose restaurant serves good traditional cuisine (from €25, closed Mon & lunch Wed), and whose more expensive rooms have lovely views out over the river. Of the many campsites in the vicinity, Le Beau Rivage (☎05.53.28.32.05, 🌐www.camping-beau-rivage.com; March–Sept), on the D703 towards Sarlat, offers the greatest luxury.

Domme

High on the scarp on the south bank of the river, DOMME is one of the best preserved of the bastides, although it's now wholly given over to tourism. Its attractions, in addition to its position, include three original thirteenth-century gateways and a section of the old walls. From the northern edge of the village, marked by a drop so precipitous that fortifications were deemed unnecessary, you look out over a wide sweep of river country. Beneath the village is a warren of caves (Feb, Nov & Dec Mon–Fri 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–4pm; March–June, Sept & Oct daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; €6.50) in which the townspeople took refuge in times of danger. Their main interest lies in an impressive and pretty array of stalactites, stalagmites and other rock formations, which are all explained by the French guided tour. The entrance to the complex is on the main square, opposite the tourist office (same hours as the caves; ☎05.53.31.71.00, 🌐www.ot-domme.com).

The smartest hotel in town is L'Esplanade, right on the cliff edge (☎05.53.28.31.41, 🌐www.esplanade-perigord.com; 📍; closed Nov–March), with a fine restaurant (menus €30–85); note that rooms with a view are premium-rated. A cheaper alternative is Le Nouvel Hôtel, at the top of the Grand'rue (☎05.53.28.38.67, 🌐www.domme-nouvel-hotel.com; 📍; closed Sun eve & Mon, also mid-Nov to Easter), which has several simple, reasonably priced rooms above a restaurant (menus €16–35). The closest campsite is the municipal site (☎05.53.28.31.91, ☎05.53.31.41.32; mid-June to mid-Sept) down by the river at Cénac.

The upper Dordogne

East of Sarlat and Domme, you leave the crowds of Périgord Noir behind, but the Dordogne valley retains all of its beauty and interest. Martel and Carennac are wonderfully preserved medieval villages, and there are exceptional examples of Romanesque sculpture in the churches at Souillac and Beaulieu. Travel is difficult without a car, but Souillac is reachable by train and has bus routes to Sarlat and Martel.

Souillac

The first place of any size east of Sarlat is SOUILLAC, at the confluence of the Borrèze and Dordogne rivers and on a major road junction. Virginia Woolf stayed here in 1937, and was pleased to meet “no tourists ... England seems like a chocolate box bursting with trippers afterward”. There are still few tourists, since Souillac’s only real point of interest is the twelfth-century church of Ste-Marie (daily 8.30am–6pm), just off the main road. Roofed with massive domes like the cathedrals of Périgueux and Cahors, its spacious interior creates just the atmosphere for cool reflection on a summer’s day. On the inside of the west door are some of the most wonderful Romanesque sculptures, including a seething mass of beasts devouring each other. The greatest piece of craftsmanship, though, is a bas-relief of Isaiah, fluid and supple, thought to be by one of the artists who worked at Moissac. Next to the church, the Musée de l’Automate (April, May & Oct Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 3–6pm; June & Sept daily 10am–noon & 3–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; Nov–March Wed–Sun 2.30–5.30pm; €5) contains an impressive collection of nineteenth- and twentieth-century mechanical dolls and animals, which dance, sing and perform magical tricks; look out for the irresistible laughing man.

The tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 3–6pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.65.37.81.56, 🌐www.tourisme-souillac.com) is on the main boulevard

Louis-Jean-Malvy. For accommodation, head to the old quarter, where you'll find good-value rooms in the characterful Auberge du Puits, in the pretty place du Puits (☎05.65.37.80.32, 🌐www.auberge-du-puits.fr; 📍; closed Jan & Feb), with a good restaurant (menus from €15.90; closed Sat lunch, Sun eve and Mon), or, alternatively, more upmarket lodgings in La Vieille Auberge, 1 rue de la Recèze (☎05.65.32.79.43, 🌐www.la-vieille-auberge.com; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec; restaurant from €20, closed Sun eve & Mon), which has a pool, Jacuzzi and sauna and will arrange cycling and canoeing trips for you. There's also a large riverside campsite, Les Ondines (☎05.65.37.86.44; Easter–Sept). You can rent bicycles and canoes from Copeyre Canoë (☎05.65.32.72.61), next to the campsite.

Martel

About 15km east of Souillac and set back even further from the river, MARTEL is a minor medieval masterpiece, built in a pale, almost white, stone, offset by warm reddish-brown roofs. A Turenne-administered town (see p.726), its heyday came during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, when the viscounts established a court of appeal here.

The main square, place des Consuls, is mostly taken up by the eighteenth-century market hall, but on every side there are reminders of the town's illustrious past, most notably in the superb Gothic Hôtel de la Raymondie. Begun in 1280, it served as the Turenne law courts, though it doubled as the town's refuge, hence the distinctive corner turrets. Facing the hôtel is the Tour des Pénitents, one of the many medieval towers which gave the town its epithet, la ville aux sept tours ("the town with seven towers"). The Young King Henry, son of Henry II (see box below) died in the striking building in the southeast corner of the square, the Maison Fabri. One block south, rue Droite leads east to the town's main church, St-Maur, built in a fiercely defensive, mostly Gothic style, with a finely carved Romanesque tympanum depicting the Last Judgement above the west door.

If you'd rather stay here than in Souillac, head for the Auberge des 7 Tours (☎05.65.37.30.16, 🌐www.auberge7tours.com; 📍; restaurant from €13, closed for lunch Sat & Mon), or treat yourself to the luxurious rooms at the 🐾 Relais

The tale of Young King Henry

At the end of the twelfth century, Martel was the stage for one of the tragic events in the internecine conflicts of the Plantagenet family. When Henry Plantagenet (King Henry II of England) imprisoned his estranged wife Eleanor of Aquitaine, his sons took up arms against their father. The eldest son, also Henry (nicknamed the Young King since he was crowned while his father was still on the throne), even went so far as to plunder the viscounty of Turenne and Quercy. Furious, Henry II immediately stopped his allowance and handed over his lands to the third son, Richard the Lionheart. Financially insecure, and with a considerable army of soldiers to feed and clothe, Young King Henry began looting the treasures of every abbey and shrine in the region. Finally, he decided to sack the shrine at Rocamadour, making off with various artefacts, including Roland's famous sword, Durandal. This last act was to be his downfall, for shortly afterwards he fled to Martel and fell ill with a fever. Guilt-ridden and afraid for his life, he confessed his crimes and asked his father for forgiveness. Henry II was busy besieging Limoges, but sent a messenger to pardon him. On the messenger's arrival in Martel, young Henry died, and Richard the Lionheart became heir to the English throne.

Ste-Anne (☎05.65.36.40.56, 🌐www.relais-sainte-anne.com; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-March), in the ivy-covered buildings of a former religious school, surrounded by attractive gardens with a small pool. There's a basic municipal campsite, La Callopie (☎05.65.37.30.03, 📧mairiedemartel@wanadoo.fr; May–Sept), on the northern edge of town, and the more attractive riverside Camping les Falaises (☎05.65.37.37.78, ☎05.65.41.05.32; May–Sept), 5km away in the village of Gluges, where you can also rent canoes and bikes from Copeyre Canoë down by the water (see box, p.709).

Railway enthusiasts might be interested in the steam tourist trains (April–Sept; ☎05.65.37.35.81, 🌐www.trainduhautquercy.info), which run on the recently restored line between Martel and St-Denis. The return trip (€9.50) lasts about an hour and takes in some good scenery, the train puffing along the edges of the cliffs which overlook the river valley.

Carennac and Castelnau-Bretenoux

CARENAC is without doubt one of the most beautiful villages along this part of the Dordogne River. Elevated just above the south bank of the river, 13km or so east of Martel, it's best known for its typical Quercy architecture, its Romanesque priory, where the French writer Fénelon spent the best years of his life, and for its greengages.

Carennac's feature, as so often in these parts, is the Romanesque tympanum – in the Moissac style – above the west door of its church, the Église St-Pierre. Christ sits in majesty with the Book of Judgement in his left hand, with the apostles and adoring angels below him. Next to the church, you can gain access to the old cloisters and chapterhouse (July & Aug daily 10am–1pm & 2–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €2.50), which contain an exceptionally expressive life-size Entombment of Christ.

There are two comfortable and reasonably priced hotels in the village, both with good restaurants specializing in traditional regional cuisine: the Auberge du Vieux Quercy, to the south of the church (☎05.65.10.96.59, 🌐www.vieuxquercy.com; 📍; closed mid-Nov to March), whose restaurant offers menus from €20 (closed for lunch Tues & Wed); and the more rustic Hostellerie Fénelon on the main street, with views over the river (☎05.65.10.96.46, 🌐www.hotel-fenelon.com; 📍; closed Jan & Feb; restaurant from €15, closed Mon lunch & Fri). There's also a campsite, L'Eau Vive, 1km east of Carennac (☎05.65.10.97.39, 🌐www.dordogne-soleil.com; May–Sept).

Another 10km further upstream, the sturdy towers and machicolated red-brown walls of the eleventh-century Château de Castelnau-Bretenoux (May & June daily 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; July & Aug daily 9.30am–7pm; Sept–April daily except Tues 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; €6.50; 🌐www.monum.fr) dominate a sharp knoll above the Dordogne. Most of it has now been restored and refurnished. Below, on the banks of the River Cère, you come to the graceful little bastide of BRETENOUX, with two sides of its cobbled and arcaded square still intact.

Beaulieu-sur-Dordogne

Beautifully situated on the banks of the Dordogne, 8km upriver from Castelnau-Bretenoux, BEAULIEU-SUR-DORDOGNE boasts another of the great masterpieces of Romanesque sculpture on the porch of the church of St-Pierre in the centre of town. This doorway is unusually deep-set, with a tympanum presided over by an oriental-looking Christ with one arm extended to welcome the chosen. All around him is a complicated pattern of angels and apostles, executed in characteristic “dancing” style, similar to that at Carennac. The dead raise the lids of their coffins hopefully, while underneath a frieze depicts monsters crunching heads. Take the opportunity also to wander north along rue de la Chapelle past some handsome sculpted facades and down to the river.

The most appealing hotel is Le Turenne (☎05.55.91.10.16, 🌐www.hotelleturenne.com; 📍; closed Nov; menus €13–30), in a former abbey on place Marbot. The twelfth-century stone spiral staircase is still in use, and rooms have retained a lot of character, with fireplaces left in some. Another nice option is the riverside Les Charmilles (☎05.55.91.29.29, 🌐www.auberge-charmilles.com; 📍; restaurant from €18). The welcoming HI hostel is at the far end of rue de la Chapelle in a magnificent half-timbered and turreted building, with surprisingly modern rooms inside (☎05.55.91.13.82, ✉beaulieu@fuaj.org; closed Nov–March). There are river-bathing and canoeing possibilities and a good riverside campsite, Camping des Îles, close by (☎05.55.91.02.65, 🌐www.camping-des-iles.net; mid-April to mid-Oct).

The Limousin

The Limousin – the country around Limoges – is hilly, wooded, wet and not particularly fertile: ideal pasture for the famous Limousin breed of cattle. This is herdsman’s country, from where – presumably – the widespread use of the shepherd’s cape known as a limousine gave its name to the big, wraparound, covered twentieth-century car.

The modern Limousin region stretches south to the Dordogne valley to include Brive and Tulle. But while these places, together with Limoges itself, are not without interest, the star of the show is the countryside – especially in the east on the Plateau de Millevaches round Eymoutiers, Meymac and La Courtine. Walkers, cyclists and other outdoor sports enthusiasts are well catered for and there are plenty of small hotels, gîtes and campsites to accommodate the wanderer. Although the region is remote and sparsely populated, a mountain rail line still survives, connecting Limoges and Ussel.

Limoges

LIMOGES is a pleasant city, if not one that calls for a long stay. Its main draws are a magnificent Art Deco train station and the craft industries that made the city a household name: enamel in the Middle Ages and, since the eighteenth century, china, including some of the finest ever produced. If these appeal, then the city’s unique museum collections – and its Gothic cathedral – will reward a visit. But it has to be said that the industry today seems a spent tradition, hard hit by recession and changing tastes among the rich. The local kaolin (china clay) mines that gave Limoges china its special quality are exhausted, and the workshops survive mainly on the tourist trade.

Hotels

Atrium Parc du Ciel – Gare des Bénédictins

☎ 05.55.10.75.75, 🌐 www.interhotel-atrium.com. The location is good for catching trains, but not great from any other point of view, with car park, train tracks and ring road to cross before you approach the town centre. Rooms are new, and have all the three-star comforts you would expect. 5

Jeanne d'Arc 17 av de-Gaulle ☎ 05.55.77.67.77, 🌐 www.hoteljeannedarc-limoges.fr. By far the most attractive upmarket option, with tastefully decorated rooms and an extremely grand breakfast hall. All rooms have wireless Internet, and there is off-street parking available. Closed Christmas. 5

Mercure place de la République

☎ 05.55.34.65.30, 🌐 www.mercure.com. The most central option, with rooms looking out over the cafés on the square. The building itself is an unattractive, concrete affair though, and only the most expensive rooms offer real luxury standards. A display of porcelain in the lobby makes some attempt to connect with the city's traditions. 6

Mon Logis 16 rue du Général-du-Bessol

☎ 05.55.77.41.43, 🌐 www.hotel-limoges-monlogis.com. A perfectly acceptable budget option on a quietish street near the station. The rooms are all bare, with uniform white walls, but you can have your own bathroom and a TV for quite a low price. Closed weekends Dec–Feb. 1–2

Orléans Lion d'Or 11 cours Jourdan

☎ 05.55.77.49.71, 🌐 www.orleansliondor.com. Bright, comfortable rooms and a friendly management make this a good choice. They can also put adjoining rooms together, creating a good solution for families. Closed Christmas. 3

De la Paix 25 place Jourdan

☎ 05.55.34.36.00, ☎ 05.55.32.37.06. A wonderful little hotel, doubling as a museum of gramophones, which decorate the breakfast room in all shapes and sizes. Bedrooms are equally characterful: large and nicely furnished for the price. 3

Hostel and campsite

Foyer Accueil 2000 20 rue Encombe-Vineuse

☎ 05.55.77.63.97, ✉ fjt.accueil-2000@wanadoo.fr. A bit of a hike out on the north side of town, but you still need to book well ahead. The €16 per night fee includes breakfast, and there is also a communal kitchen.

Camping municipal d'Uzurat ☎ 05.55.38.49.43,

☎ 05.55.37.32.78. About 5km out of town in Limoges' northern suburbs; take bus #20 from place Jourdan. March–Oct.

The City

The Cathédrale St-Étienne (Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2.30–5.30pm; Sun 2.30–6.30pm; free), a landmark for miles around, was begun in 1273 and planned on the model of the cathedral of Amiens, though only the choir, completed in the early thirteenth century, is pure Gothic. The rest of the building was added piecemeal over the centuries, the western part of the nave not until 1876. The most striking external feature is the sixteenth-century facade of the north transept, built in full flamboyant style with elongated arches, clusters of pinnacles and delicate tracery in window and gallery. At the west end of the nave, the tower, erected on a Romanesque base that had to be massively reinforced to bear the weight, has octagonal upper storeys, in common with most churches in the region. It once stood as a separate campanile and probably looked the better for it. Inside, the effects are much more pleasing, and the rose stone looks warmer than on the weathered exterior. The sense of soaring height is accentuated by all the upward-reaching lines of the pillars, the net of vaulting ribs, the curling, flame-like lines repeated in the arcading of the side chapels and the rose window, and, above all, as you look down the nave, by the narrower and more pointed arches of the choir.

The best of the city's museums – with its showpiece collections of enamelware dating back as far as the twelfth century – is the Musée Municipal de l'Évêché (July–Sept daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Oct–June daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–5pm; free) in the old bishop's palace next to the cathedral. There's an interesting progression to be observed in the museum, from the simple, sober, Byzantine-influenced champlevé (copper filled with enamel), to the later, especially seventeenth- and eighteenth-century work that used a far greater range of colours and indulged in elaborate virtuoso portraiture. By the nineteenth century, however, the spirit and vigour had dissipated, and although there are contemporary artisans in the city using the medium, their work, too – judging from this display – is not much more successful. There's also an exhibition of the wartime Resistance (same hours, but closed mornings Oct–May; free) housed in an outbuilding opposite the museum's main entrance.

Outside, the well-laid-out and interesting botanical garden (daily sunrise to sunset; free) is an inviting prospect, descending gracefully towards the River Vienne. In the garden's northern corner an old refectory now houses the excellent Cité des Métiers et des Arts (Easter–June, Sept & Oct Wed, Sat & Sun 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10.30am–1pm & 2.30–7pm; €5) displaying pieces – mostly carpentry – by France's top crafts' guild members.

The best areas for a relaxed stroll are the network of pedestrianized streets just north of the cathedral, and, over to the west, the partly renovated old quarter of the town, where you'll find rue de la Boucherie, for a thousand years the domain of the butchers' guild. The dark, cluttered chapel of St-Aurélien, with a delicate fourteenth-century cross outside, belongs to them, while one of their former shophouses makes an interesting little museum, the Maison de la Boucherie, at no. 36 (July–Sept daily 10am–1pm & 2.30–7pm; free). At the top of the street is the market in place de la Motte and, to the right, partly hidden by adjoining houses, the fourteenth- and fifteenth-century church of St-Michel-des-Lions, named after the two badly weathered Celtic lions guarding the south door and topped by one of the best towers and spires in the region. The inside is dark and atmospheric, with two beautiful, densely coloured fifteenth-century windows either side of the choir.

Further east, the concrete swathes of place de la République conceal the fourth-century crypt of the long-vanished Abbey of St-Martial (July–Sept daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; free), containing the saint's massive sarcophagus, discovered during building operations in the 1960s. Nearby is the church of St-Pierre-du-Queyroix under another typically Limousin belfry. The interior, partly twelfth-century, has the same slightly pink granite glow as the cathedral. There's more fine stained glass here, including an eye-catching window at the end of the south aisle depicting the Dormition of the Virgin, signed by the great enamel artist Jean Pénicault in 1510.

Limoges' renowned porcelain is best displayed in the Musée Adrien-Dubouché (daily except Tues: July & Aug 10am–5.45pm; Sept–June 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.45pm; €4.50; www.musee-adriendubouche.fr), west of the old quarter on place Winston-Churchill. The well-presented collection is more interesting than you might expect, including samples of the local product and china displays from around the world, as well as various celebrity services ordered for the likes of Napoleon Bonaparte, Charles and Di, and sundry French royals.

Eating, drinking and festivals

Limoges has an abundance of good and not too expensive places to eat. For drinks at any time of the day, people sit out in the not very attractive place de la République; a nicer option is lively place Denis-Dussoubs, a short walk further west, where you'll find fine beers on tap at the Michard micro-brewery (closed Sun). Over on the other side of town, the Lord John pub on avenue de-Gaulle – complete with darts – is a low-key hangout, good for a quiet drink.

Cafés and restaurants

L'Amphitryon 26 rue de la Boucherie

☎ 05.55.33.36.39. There's no better place than this for a real treat of subtle and sophisticated cuisine. Veal, pigeon and tuna steak are all on the menu, combined with light, Mediterranean touches like fresh figs in olive oil. Lunch menus start at €19, while for €60 you get six courses of the chef's finest work. Closed Sun, Mon & three weeks in Aug/Sept.

Bistrot d'Olivier place de la Motte. Another characterful, lunch-only place in the market hall, with communal tables and wooden benches. It also has a bar, providing a sustaining midday tippie for the market workers. Menus from €9. Closed Sun & Mon; also July.

Chez François place de la Motte. For a good-value lunch and a lively atmosphere, head straight to the central market hall to join the locals round communal tables. The dining room is brightened up by colourful pictures of life around the market. Menus €9 & €16. Closed Sun & Aug.

Crêperie de la Cathédrale 3 rue Haute-Cité. One of a cluster of brasseries with outside seating on this attractive pedestrian street by the cathedral. It's good value at lunchtime, with a plat du jour, dessert and wine for €9.

La Louisiane place d'Aine. Elegant salon de thé serving salads, quiches and other light lunches, with great pastries to follow. Open noon–2pm only. Closed Sun & Mon.

Les Petits Ventres 20 rue de la Boucherie ☎ 05.55.34.22.90. This restaurant will delight lovers of brain, brawn, tongue and other unmentionable cuts – though they also do more everyday dishes and even a vegetarian platter. Menus from €14.50. Closed Nov–Feb, Sun & Mon.

Festivals

In late September, there's an interesting and important gathering of writers, dramatists and musicians from other French-speaking countries at the Festival International des Théâtres Francophones (☎ www.lesfrancophonies.com). Gourmets of a certain persuasion should make sure their visit coincide with the third Friday in October for the Frairie des Petits Ventres, when the entire population turns out to gorge on everything from pig's trotters to sheep's testicles in the rue de la Boucherie. Otherwise, there's Urbaka, a festival of street theatre held at the end of June, and the Danse Émoi contemporary dance festival every two years in January, the next one being in 2009.

Around Limoges

There's a clutch of villages within a day's reach of Limoges. A route linking places of interest on the south bank of the Vienne, like the châteaux of Rochechouart, Châlus, Montbrun and Nexon is detailed in the Route Richard-Coeur-de-Lion leaflet (available at local tourist offices), so called because of its associations with the English king. The route also takes you near the Roman baths at Chassenon and Solignac's abbey church, close by which the Château de Châluçet is now reduced to atmospheric ruins. North of the Vienne, the charred walls of Oradour-sur-Glane stand testimony to a World War II massacre, while east of Limoges, beyond the attractive market town of St-Léonard-de-Noblat, the master weavers of Aubusson have been producing tapestries for more than six hundred years.

Visiting all these places really requires a car, but some at least are accessible by a combination of public transport, walking and patient hitching.

Oradour-sur-Glane

Twenty-five kilometres northwest of Limoges and a few kilometres north of the N141 road to Angoulême, the village of ORADOUR-SUR-GLANE stands just as the soldiers of the SS left it on June 10, 1944, after killing 642 of the inhabitants in reprisal for attacks by French maquisards. The village has been preserved both as a shrine and a chilling reminder of human brutality.

Before entering the village, the Centre de la Mémoire, immediately south-east of Oradour on the Limoges road (daily: Feb & Nov–Dec 19 9am–5pm; March to mid-May & mid-Sept to Oct 9am–6pm; May 15–Sept 15 9am–7pm; entry to village free, exhibition €6; 🌐 www.oradour.org), sets the historical context and attempts to answer some of the questions. From here an underground passage leads into the village itself, where a sign admonishes Souviens-toi (“Remember”), and the main street leads past roofless houses gutted by fire. Telephone poles, iron bedsteads and gutters are fixed in tormented attitudes where the fire’s heat left them; prewar cars rust in the garages; cooking pots hang over empty grates; last year’s grapes hang wizened on a vine whose trellis has long rotted away.

To the north of the village a dolmen-like slab on a shallow plinth covers a crypt containing relics of the dead, and the awful list of names, while to the southeast, by the stream, stands the church where the women and children – five hundred of them – were burnt to death. The modern village of Oradour has been constructed beside the old, with a 1950s concrete church that tries to be impressive but struggles with the task of commemorating what happened here.

There are buses from Limoges to Oradour, or alternatively you can take the train to ST-JUNIEN and pick up a bus there. The Relais de Comodoliac, 22 av Sadi-Carnot (☎ 05.55.02.27.26, 🌐 www.comodoliac.com; 📍), about 1km northwest of the train station, with a garden and a popular restaurant (menus €15–36), makes a decent place to stay in St-Junien. There’s also a hostel, 13 rue de St-Amand (☎ & ☎ 05.55.02.22.79), in an old abbey 500m further west along rue Henriette-Perucaud.

Rochechouart and Chassenon

ROCHECHOUART, a beautiful little walled town roughly 45km west of Limoges, has two claims to fame. Two hundred million years ago it was the site of impact of one of the largest meteorites ever to hit earth, a monster 1.5km in diameter and some 6000 million tonnes in weight. The traces of this cosmic calamity still attract the curiosity of astronomers, though the only evidence that a layman might notice is the unusual-looking breccia stone many of the region’s older buildings are made of: the squashed, shattered, heat-transformed and reconstituted result of the collision. A small museum in town, the Espace Meteorite, 16 rue Jean Parvy (July, Aug & during school holidays Mon–Fri 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm, Sat & Sun 2–6pm; rest of year Mon–Fri 2–6pm; €3) attempts to uncover the history of the meteorite with artists’ impressions, but there are plans afoot to make the museum a more high-tech, interactive experience in the near future.

One building using the stone from the impact is Rochechouart’s other source of pride: the handsome château that stands at the town’s edge. It started life as a rough fortress before 1000 AD, was “modernized” in the thirteenth century (the sawn-off keep and entrance survive from this period) and civilized with Renaissance decoration and additions in the fifteenth. Until it was acquired as the mairie in 1832, it had belonged to the de Rochechouart family for 800 years. Today it houses not only the town hall, but also the very well-regarded and adventurous Musée Départemental d’Art Contemporain (daily except Tues: March–Sept 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; Oct to mid-Dec 10am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; €4.60), with an important collection of works by the Dadaist Raoul Hausman who died in Limoges in 1971. In another room decorated with its original sixteenth-century frescoes of the Labours of Hercules, the British artist, Richard Long, has made a special installation of white stones, while in the garden Guiseppe Penone's metal sculpture grapples with a tree.

The Rochechouart tourist office is at 6 rue Victor-Hugo (July & Aug daily 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2.30–5.30pm; ☎05.55.03.72.73). Should you wish to stay, the Hôtel de France, on place Octave-Marquet (☎05.55.03.77.40, 🌐www.logis-de-france.fr; ②–③), provides brand-new, spick-and-span lodgings and interesting food served in an attractive dining room (closed Sun eve; menus from €12).

One side trip worth making if you have come this far is to the Roman baths 5km along the Chabanais road at CHASSENON (daily guided tours: April, May & mid-Sept to mid-Nov 2–5.30pm; June to mid-Sept 10am–noon & 2–7pm; €5; 🌐amis.chassenon.free.fr). The site, known as Cassinomagus in Gallo-Roman times, stood at an important crossroads on the Via Agrippa, the Roman road that connected Lyon to Saintes. A grand temple and theatre were destroyed for their breccia stone, but the baths alone are ample testimony to the magnificence of the place. There are hot and cold pools with some of the original floor tiles in places, and waterproof plastering, boiler rooms and elaborate hypocaust piping systems; you can even see the marks of the shuttering used to make the vaults in some of the subterranean passages.

Châlus and Nexon

The small town of CHÂLUS, 35km southwest of Limoges, is dominated by the ruined Château de Châlus-Chabrol (not open to the public), where in 1199 Richard the Lionheart was mortally wounded by an archer shooting from the still-extant keep. Richard, son of Eleanor of Aquitaine and as much French as English, was campaigning to suppress a local rebellion against English rule. On capturing the castle, Richard – by now on his deathbed – ordered all the rebels hanged save the archer, whom he pardoned. It was a short-lived reprieve; as soon as Richard was dead, the archer was flayed alive by the captain of the English troops.

Of several other castles around Châlus, the most rewarding is the medieval Château de Montbrun (July & Aug daily 11am–6pm; Sept–June Sat & Sun 2.30–4.30pm; €12; 🌐www.montbrun.com), 8km to the southwest. The château, now a private home, has been beautifully restored and furnished, though its best attribute is perhaps its fairy-tale lakeside location – even more spectacular when floodlit at night. It also offers luxury chambres d'hôtes accommodation (☎05.55.78.65.26, 📧montbrun@montbrun.com; ⑤), and one of the outhouses has been converted into an equally atmospheric restaurant, La Taverne (closed Tues & Wed; menus from €15), which has live music on Friday evenings. Otherwise, you can stay in Châlus itself at the simple but reasonably comfortable Auberge Richard Coeur de Lion, 29 av Jean-Jaurès (☎ & 🌐05.55.78.43.42; ②), with menus from €9.50 in its restaurant.

Eighteen kilometres east in the village of NEXON you'll find a fine, heavily restored seventeenth-century château (now the mairie), whose gardens now host a summer festival of circus arts (🌐www.cirquenexon.com).

Châluset and Solignac

A dozen kilometres south of Limoges in the lovely wooded valley of the Briance, the Château de Châluset and the church of SOLIGNAC make the most attractive day's outing from the city. There are buses and trains to Solig-nac-Le Vigen station, a few minutes away on the Limoges–Brive line, and occasional buses to Solignac itself, but beware that in school holidays no combination allows you to see Solignac and get back in one day. You could stay the night at the comfortable hotel opposite the church, Le St-Éloi (☎05.55.00.44.52, 🌐www.lesainteloi.fr; 📍; closed three weeks in Jan & two in Sept; restaurant from €21; closed Sat lunch, Sun eve & Mon).

Approaching from Le Vigen you can see Solignac's Romanesque abbey church ahead of you, with the tiled roofs of its octagonal apse and neat little brood of radiating chapels. The twelfth-century facade is plain with just a little sculpture, as the granite from which it is built is too hard to permit intricate carving. Inside it's beautiful, a flight of steps leading down into the nave with a dramatic view of the length of the church. There are no aisles, just a single space roofed with three big domes, and no ambulatory either – an absolutely plain Latin cross in design. It's a simple, sturdy church, with the same feel of plain robust Christianity as the crypt of St-Eutrope in Saintes.

The Château de Châlucaet is a good five-kilometre walk up the valley of the Briance in the other direction – uphill quite a lot of the way along the D32 and D32a. After about 45 minutes, at the highest point of the climb, there is a dramatic view across the valley to the romantic, ruined keep of the castle, rising above the woods. It's a further kilometre down to the bridge on the Briance, where a path follows the riverbank before climbing steeply up again into the woods. Built in the twelfth century, the château was in English hands during the Hundred Years War and, in the lawless aftermath, became the lair of a notorious local brigand, Perrot le Béarnais. Dismantled in 1593 for harbouring Protestants, it has recently been acquired by the local authorities who are in the middle of major restoration works, including an archeological dig. It's still possible to visit, though you are restricted to safe areas along fenced-off paths. You can borrow an explanatory guide from the visitors' centre (daily: mid-March to mid-June & mid-Sept to mid-Nov 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; mid-June to mid-Sept 9.30am–6.30pm) on the path up to the ruins.

St-Léonard-de-Noblat

ST-LÉONARD-DE-NOBLAT, twenty minutes by train from Limoges or 35 minutes by bus, is an appealing little market town of narrow streets and medieval houses with jutting eaves and corbelled turrets. There's a very lovely eleventh- and twelfth-century church, with a six-storey tower, high dome and simple, barrel-vaulted interior – the whole in grey granite. A couple of kilometres northwest of town on the banks of the Vienne, demonstrations of papermaking and printing are on offer at a lovingly restored fifteenth-century paper mill, the Moulin du Got (Tues–Sat: Feb–June & Sept–Dec 2.30–4pm; July & Aug 2–5pm; €5.50; 🌐www.moulindugot.com). In the town centre, the railway museum, on rue de Beaufort (July & Aug Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €4.50; 🌐www.historail.com), is also good fun, with some excellent, working model railways.

The tourist office on place du Champs-de-Mars (July & Aug Mon–Sat 10am–1pm & 2.30–6.30pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–5pm; ☎05.55.56.25.06) offers ideas for local walks and will point you to chambre d'hôte possibilities round about. A good place to stay is the Relais St-Jacques on the boulevard encircling the old town (☎05.55.56.00.25, 🌐relaisstjacques@aol.com; 📍; closed Sun eve & Mon Oct–May; restaurant from €15), and you can eat well just round the corner at the welcoming 🍷 Le Gay Lussac, 18 rue Victor-Hugo (☎05.55.56.98.45; closed Sun), which offers great-value, imaginative menus from €12 at lunch on weekdays and €18 in the evening. There's a municipal campsite, the Camping de Beaufort (☎05.55.56.02.79, ✉camping.beaufort@wanadoo.fr; mid-June to mid-Sept), beside the river a couple of kilometres out of town on the D39.

Aubusson

AUBUSSON is 90km east of Limoges and served by regular buses and trains. A neat grey-stone town in the bottom of a ravine formed by the River Creuse, it's of no great interest in itself. What makes it unique is its reputation as a centre for weaving tapestries, second only to the Gobelins in Paris. If you're interested, you should aim for the Musée Départemental de la Tapisserie in avenue des Lissiers (July & Aug Mon & Wed–Sun 10am–6pm, Tues 2–6pm; Sept–June daily except Tues 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; €4), which traces the history of Aubusson tapestries over six centuries, up to the modern-day works of Jean Lurçat (see p.731). The Maison du Tapisier next to the tourist office (same hours as tourist office; €5) is also worth a quick look for its broad overview of weaving techniques and local history displayed in the sixteenth-century home of a master weaver.

For information about further exhibitions and workshop visits, ask at the tourist office in pedestrianized rue Vieille (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–6.30pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2.30–5.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2.30–5.30pm; ☎05.55.66.32.12, 🌐www.ot-aubusson.fr). The smartest hotel in town is the two-star De France at 6 rue des Déportés (☎05.55.66.10.22, 🌐www.lefrance-aubusson.com; 4), with elegant rooms and a decent restaurant (menus €25–65). A good budget place is Chapitre, on the main Grande-Rue above a bar at no. 53 (☎05.55.66.18.54, 🌐www.hotellechapitre.com; 2). The town's La Croix Blanche campsite (☎05.55.66.18.00; April–Sept), is by the river on the Felletin road.

The Plateau de Millevaches

Millevaches, the plateau of a thousand springs, is undulating upland country 800–900m in altitude, a sort of step on the northern edge of the Massif Central, with a wild and sparsely populated landscape and villages few and far between. Those that do exist appear small, grey and sturdy, inured like their mainly elderly inhabitants to the buffeting of upland weather. It's a country of conifer plantations and natural woodland – of beech, birch and chestnut – interspersed with reed-fringed tarns, dam-created lakes and pasture grazed by sheep and cows, where you still find people haymaking with rake and pitchfork.

Steam trains on Millevaches

From June to August every year steam trains potter along the beautiful Limoges–Ussel mountain line. Trips cost in the range of €8–40 (adults) and €5–18 (children), according to the length of the journey. There are various options, including Limoges–Meymac, Limoges–Eymoutiers, Eymoutiers–Bujaleuf, Meymac–Ussel and (on a different line) Limoges–Pompador. For dates and times, consult the brochure Train Touristiques à Vapeur en Limousin, the website 🌐www.trainvapeur.com or the tourist offices in any of the towns above.

The small towns, like Eymoutiers and Meymac, have a primitive architectural beauty and an old-world charm largely untouched by modern development. It's an area to walk or cycle in, or at least savour at a gentle pace, and there's a surprisingly large number of attractive old-fashioned hotels.

Obviously, getting around by car is easiest, but there is access by public transport. Ussel, the largest town, is on the main road and rail link between Brive and Clermont-Ferrand, and is also connected by a cross-country line through Meymac and Eymoutiers to Limoges.

Ussel

On the southeastern edge of the plateau is USSEL, some 100km southeast of Limoges and 60km northeast of Tulle, where the land begins its gradual descent to the uppermost reaches of the Dordogne valley, thickly wooded and cut by deep tributary valleys. It's not a place with much to see, though the town is pleasant enough, with some attractive sixteenth- and seventeenth-century houses scattered about the central part, while a giant battered granite eagle on the place Voltaire stands as the sole reminder of a Roman settlement hereabouts.

One building worth a look is the house of the local lords, the Maison Ducal des Ventadour, who moved here from their draughty fortress in the hills to the south (see opposite). On the north side of place de la République, behind the church, it has a very provincial and rather amateurish Renaissance grandeur, perhaps aping their rich metropolitan cousins. Also of interest is the local Musée du Pays d'Ussel (July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2–7pm; free), which is dedicated to traditional crafts and trades of the region and has a surprisingly good collection of tapestries. It's located in the eighteenth-century Hôtel Bonnot de Bay on rue Michelet, on the west side of town.

The tourist office is nearby on the wide place Voltaire (July & Aug Mon–Sat 10am–12.30pm & 3–6.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎05.55.72.11.50, 🌐www.ot-ussel.fr), immediately southwest of the old centre, while the gare SNCF is to the north along avenue Carnot.

The most comfortable place to stay is the striking 1970s Les Gravades (☎05.55.46.06.00, 📞05.55.46.06.10; 📍; closed Christmas holidays; restaurant from €15; closed weekends), a couple of kilometres east of Ussel on the N89 and set in its own grounds. A pair of cheaper options are to be found opposite the station. There's also a municipal campsite, the Camping du Ponty (☎05.55.72.30.05, 📞05.55.72.95.19; mid-June to mid-Sept), just off the road to Tulle. Ussel's best restaurant is 1km to the north of the centre, out by the railway tracks: Le Chateau de la Borde, rue des Buis (☎05.55.72.56.27; closed Sat lunch & Mon), offers grillades and local specialities on menus from a very reasonable €15.

Meymac and around

Pepper-pot turrets and steep slate roofs adorn the ancient grey houses of MEYMAC, 17km west of Ussel. The village is packed tightly around its Romanesque church, whose porch is flanked by striking pink capitals. Adjoining it are the remains of the original Benedictine abbey, whose foundation a thousand years ago brought the town into being. Part of the abbey now houses the innovative Centre National d'Art Contemporain (daily except Mon: July & Aug 10am–1pm & 2–7pm; Sept–June 2–6pm; closed Jan; €4), featuring changing exhibitions of young, local artists as well as big-name retrospectives. It's also worth popping into the adjacent Musée de la Fondation Marius

Vazeilles (daily except Tues: May, June, Sept & Oct 2.30–6.30pm; July & Aug 10am–noon & 2.30–6.30pm; €2.90) to learn about the history and traditions of the plateau.

Grande-Rue, the main street, ends in steps that climb past the round bell tower, the town's landmark, to the lime-shaded square in front of the town hall. The tourist office (June 15–Sept 15 Mon–Sat 10am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; Sept 16–June 14 Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 2–4.30pm; ☎05.55.95.18.43, 🌐www.ot-meymac.visit.org) is opposite the other side of a pretty fountain, and has plenty of information on hiking amongst other things.

There's a reasonable two-star hotel on the main road, the Limousin, 76 av Limousine (☎05.55.46.12.11, 🌐www.logis-de-france.fr; 📍; closed Sat off season & Sun eve all year; restaurant from €20), but better to book ahead for one of the four rooms at 🍷 Chez Françoise, up the hill from the tourist office (☎05.55.95.10.63, ☎05.55.95.40.22; 📍; closed Jan). They also run a well-respected restaurant serving local specialities (closed Sun eve & Mon out of season; menus €15–35) and a wonderful, old-fashioned cheese and wine shop. Finally, there's a municipal campsite, La Garenne (☎05.55.95.22.80, 📧mairie.meymac@wanadoo.fr; mid-June to mid-Sept), close at hand on the Sornac road.

One notable sight in the area is a ruined second-century temple and, a short walk through the woods, a Gallo-Roman villa at CARS, about 20km north-west of Meymac. Although there's nothing very spectacular to see, the very presence of Roman influence in such a remote location on the very edge of the Massif Central is interesting. If you want to stay, the simple, old-fashioned Hôtel des Touristes is just a few kilometres away in the village of PÉROLS-SUR-VÉZÈRE (☎05.55.95.51.71, 📧hotel-des-touristes@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed mid-Dec to Jan), serving up tasty home cooking from €12. A few kilometres further west, just outside BUGEAT, there's also a well-run riverside campsite, the Camping des 3 Ponts (☎05.55.95.50.34, ☎05.55.95.47.26; closed Oct–April).

Five kilometres northwest of Bugeat, the hamlet of VIAM perches prettily on the shores of an artificial lake, its houses clustered around an exquisite and proportionately minute, lopsided church. There's a municipal campsite down by the lake (☎05.55.95.52.05, 📧viam.mairie@wanadoo.fr; mid-June to Sept), but the nearest hotel is 15km southwest, just outside TREIGNAC, where the Du Lac (☎05.55.98.00.44, 🌐www.hotel-lac-vezere.com; 📍; closed Jan, and Mon & Tues out of season) offers bright, modern rooms overlooking a lake, and a well-rated restaurant (closed Mon & lunch Tues; menus from €10).

Egletons and around

Some 20km southwest of Meymac, the ancient market town of EGLETONS flourished during medieval times under the powerful dukes of Ventadour, whose twelfth-century château is now a magnificent ruin on the tip of a narrow spur about 6km southeast of Egletons near the hamlet of Moustier. The celebrated troubadour Bernard de Ventadour was born here, child of a castle servant. The site is now undergoing lengthy restoration work to make it safe; you can get quite close but the ruins themselves are fenced off.

By way of contrast, the area's other main sight is the Musée du Président Jacques Chirac (Jan & Feb Sat & Sun 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; March–June & Sept–Dec Tues–Sun 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; €4; 🌐www.museepresidentjchirac.fr) at SARRAN, in the depths of the country around 10km west of Egletons. This quirky, ultramodern and ever-expanding museum is a showcase of the gifts given to the president during state visits and other official duties. Look out for the natty cowboy boots (from then US President Bill Clinton), the stuffed coelacanth (a gift from the Comoros Islands for the man who has everything) and the delightful South African chess set in which the pieces are caricatures of Mandela, de Klerk, Archbishop Tutu and other famous personalities.

Egletons has a clutch of hotels, of which the smartest is the Ibis on the main road 1.5km east of town (☎05.55.93.25.16, 🌐www.ibishotel.com; 📍; restaurant from €16). A simpler option is the Borie in the centre of town on avenue Charles-de-Gaulle (☎05.55.93.12.00, 🌐www.hotelrestaurantborie.com; 📍; restaurant from €11, closed Sun eve). When it comes to eating, try Le Jardin de Ventadour, immediately north of the centre on place du Marchadial, which serves a range of imaginative dishes (closed Sun eve; menus €15–52).

Eymoutiers

EYMOUTIERS, in the north of the Plateau de Millevaches, 45km southeast of Limoges, is another upland town of tall, narrow stone houses crowding round a much-altered Romanesque church. Not interesting enough for a prolonged stay, it nonetheless makes another agreeable stopover, especially for campers, as it has a simple but magnificently sited municipal campsite, the Château St-Pierre (☎05.55.69.27.81, 🌐www.mairie-eymoutiers.fr; closed Oct–May), on a hill 2km southeast of town off the Treignac–Tulle road. If you prefer a hotel, you’ll find simple rooms and excellent food at Le Ranch des Lacs (☎05.55.69.15.66, 🌐www.le-ranch-des-lacs.com; 📍; menus €12–35) about 7km northeast of Eymoutier, signposted off the Bujaleuf road.

Brive-la-Gaillarde and around

BRIVE-LA-GAILLARDE is a major rail junction and the nearest thing to an industrial centre for miles around, but it makes an agreeable base for exploring the Corrèze département and its beautiful villages, as well as the upper reaches of the Vézère and Dordogne rivers.

Though it has no commanding sights, Brive-la-Gaillarde does have a few distractions. Right in the middle of town is the much-restored church of St-Martin, originally Romanesque in style, though only the transept, apse and a few comically carved capitals survive from that era. St Martin himself, a Spanish aristocrat, arrived in pagan Brive in 407 AD on the feast of Saturnus, smashed various idols and was promptly stoned to death by the outraged onlookers.

Numerous streets fan out from the surrounding square, place du Général-de-Gaulle, with a number of turreted and towered houses, some dating back to the thirteenth century. The most impressive is the sixteenth-century Hôtel de Labenche on boulevard Jules-Ferry, now housing the town’s archeological finds as well as a collection of seventeenth-century tapestries in the Musée Labenche (daily except Tues: April–Oct 10am–6.30pm; Nov–March 1.30–6pm; €4.70; 🌐www.musee-labenche.com). There’s also the Centre National d’Études Michelet at 4 rue Champanatier (Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; free; 🌐www.centremichelet.org), based in the former house of this minister of de Gaulle, and one of the town’s leading résistants, with exhibitions portraying the occupation and Resistance through photographs, posters and objects of the time.

From the gare SNCF, it's a five-minute walk north along avenue Jean-Jaurès to the boulevard ringing the old town. A right turn here brings you to place de Lattre-de-Tassigny and the post office. The tourist office is outside the ring road to the north on place 14-Juillet (May, June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–4pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.55.24.08.80, 🌐www.brive-tourisme.com), where you'll also find a large car park, the modern market hall and the gare routière with a bus information office. The best place to go for Internet access is Le Mulot, on the ring road at 4 bd du Général-Koenig, (closed Thurs pm & Sun; €2.50 per hour).

For alternative places to eat, try Le Corrèze at 3 rue de Corrèze for its good-value regional cooking (closed Sun & two weeks in Sept; menus from €8), or the slightly smarter Viviers St-Martin, at 4 rue Traversière (closed two weeks each in March & Oct; menus from €11), tucked down an alley near St-Martin; both places offer a wide range of menus. Though it doesn't look much from the outside, Le Boulevard at 8 bd Jules-Ferry (☎05.55.23.07.13) hides a cosy dining room where locals come for dishes such as duck breast with mustard (closed Sun eve & Mon; menus from €12).

Accommodation

Brive has no hotels right in its heart, but there are some nice options two minutes' walk away around the ring road, as well as several cheap dives near the station.

L'Andrea 39 av Jean-Jaurès ☎05.55.74.11.84, 🌐www.landrea.com. The nicest of the station hotels, with pleasant rooms, each decorated differently. There's also a friendly bar downstairs serving a good house sangria. 2

Le Chapon Fin 1 place de Lattre de Tassigny ☎05.55.74.23.40, 🌐www.chaponfin-brive.com. Almost all the rooms here have been renovated in the last year, and they're large for the price, too. You'll get a friendly welcome from the proprietress who speaks excellent English, as well as most other major languages. 2–3

Le Collonges 3 place Winston-Churchill ☎05.55.74.09.58, 🌐www.hotel-le-collonges.com. A smart, well-run hotel, also on the ring road.

Rooms are light, with large windows and all the standard comforts. Free wireless Internet is thrown in as well. 3

HI Hostel 56 av du Maréchal-Bugeaud ☎05.55.24.34.00, @aj.brive@wanadoo.fr. East of town, a 25min walk from the station, this is a decent hostel with a kitchen for guests. Beds are €11.50 per night.

La Truffe Noire 22 bd Anatole-France ☎05.55.92.45.00, 🌐www.la-truffe-noire.com. Brive's grandest hotel has an impressive lobby, with an enormous hearth. The rooms are disappointingly ordinary in comparison, but they're new, comfortable and air-conditioned. 6

Uzerche and Arnac-Pompadour

A half-hour train ride north of Brive along the course of the bubbling River Vézère, the town of UZERCHE is impressively located above a loop in the river's course. It's worth a passing visit as the town has several fine old buildings. The tourist office (mid-June to mid-Sept 15 daily 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.30pm; school holidays Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 2.30–5pm, Sat 10am–noon; rest of year Mon–Fri 10am–noon; ☎05.55.73.15.71, 🌐www.pays-uzerche.com), behind the main church, provides a suggested walking route, but the place is so small you can easily find your own way around. If you need a place to stay, the Hôtel Teyssier, down by the river (☎05.55.73.10.05, 🌐www.hotel-teyssier.com; closed Tues & Wed out of season; 🍴; restaurant €19–35) is the nicest option. There's also a three-star municipal campsite (☎05.55.73.12.75, 🌐www.uzerche.fr; May–Sept) at the Minoterie leisure centre, 2km south along the river, from where you can rent canoes and bikes (☎05.55.73.02.84, 🌐www.vezerepassion.com).

Roughly 20km west of Uzerche (40min by train, on a different line, from Brive) is ARNAC-POMPADOUR. It's a town dominated by its grey, turreted château, presented in 1745 by Louis XV to his mistress, Madame de Pompadour, though she never actually visited it. Set in the green countryside of southern Limousin – reminiscent of parts of Ireland – the château is home to one of France's best-known stud farms (haras), created by Louis XV in 1761, where Anglo-Arabs were first bred. Only the château gardens are open to the public (guided visits only: April & Sept daily at 10am, 3pm & 5pm; May & June daily 10am & hourly 2–5pm; July & Aug daily 10am, 11am & half-hourly 2–6pm; Oct Tues–Sun 3pm; Nov Wed–Sun 3pm; Dec–March Tues–Sat 3pm; €4), but it's more interesting to visit the dépôt des étalons where the stallions are kept (visits: Jan–March Tues–Sat 2pm & 4pm; April–June & Sept daily 11am, 2pm & 4pm; July & Aug daily 10am, 11am & half-hourly 2–6pm; Oct Tues–Sun 2pm; Nov Wed–Sun 2pm & 4pm; Dec Tues–Sat 2pm; €6), across the square from the château. The mares live in the Jumenterie de la Rivière (visits: April–June daily hourly 2–5pm; July & Aug Tues, Thurs & Sat hourly 2–5pm; €5), 4km away near the village of Beyssac. All visits are organized by the château, and they may occasionally be cancelled; call ☎05.55.98.51.10 to be safe. In spring the fields around are full of mares and foals, the best being kept for breeding, the rest sold worldwide as 2-year-olds. From March to October there are frequent race meetings on the magnificent track in front of the château, plus events and open days, the biggest of which is the Fête du Cheval on August 15; there's even a special day for donkeys on July 14.

The gare SNCF is 500m southeast of the old town along the main D7 Vigeois road. There's a reasonable place to stay and eat, the Hôtel du Parc (☎05.55.73.30.54, 🌐www.logis-de-france.fr; 📍; closed Christmas to mid-Jan; restaurant from €15), behind the château. Or you could try the modern Auberge de la Mandrie, 4km west on the D7, with chalet rooms around a heated pool (☎05.55.73.37.14, 🌐www.la-mandrie.com; 📍; restaurant from €12, closed Sun eve).

Turenne

TURENNE, just 16km south of Brive, is one of two very picturesque villages close to the town. Capital of the viscounty of Turenne, whose most illustrious seigneur was Henri de la Tour d'Auvergne – the “Grand Turenne”, whom Napoleon rated the finest tactician of modern times – the village today would still seem familiar to him. The same mellow stone houses crowd in the lee of the sharp bluff on whose summit sprout the towers of the castle, one forming part of someone's house. The other, known as La Tour de César, can be visited (April–June, Sept & Oct daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; Nov–March Sun 2–5pm; €3.50; 🌐www.chateau-turenne.com), and it's worth climbing for vertiginous views away over the ridges and valleys to the mountains of Cantal.

Collonges-la-Rouge

COLLONGES-LA-ROUGE, 7km east of Turenne, is the epitome of rustic charm with its red-sandstone houses, pepper-pot towers and pink-candled chestnut trees, although you need to time your visit carefully, as the village is now very much on the tourist bus circuit. Though small-scale, there's a grandeur about the place, as if the resident Turenne administrators were aping, within their means, the grandiloquence of their superiors. On the main square a twelfth-century church testifies to the imbecility of shedding blood over religious differences: here, side by side, Protestant and Catholic conducted their services simultaneously. Outside, the covered market hall still retains its old-fashioned baker's oven.

If you want to stay somewhere nearby, it's best to head downhill a few minutes to MEYSSAC, a town built in the same red sandstone, though less grandly, to the very pleasant Relais du Quercy (☎05.55.25.40.31, 🌐www.relaisduquercy.com.fr; 📍; closed two weeks in Feb; restaurant from €12), or the campsite, Moulin de la Valanne (☎05.55.25.41.59, 🌐www.meyssac.fr; May–Sept).

On weekdays it's possible to get to Collonges by bus from Brive, and with an early start you can see the town and return by the late-afternoon service. The prettiest route on foot from Turenne is along the back lanes through meadow and walnut orchards via SAILLAC (3hr), whose Romanesque church sports an elaborately carved tympanum upheld by a column of spiralling animal motifs.

Tulle

Seen from a distance, TULLE, 29km east of Brive, is a strange, unattractive-looking place. Strung out along the bottom of the narrow and deep valley of the Corrèze, it looks grey, run-down and industrial. But once you get down to the riverside and the area around the cathedral, it reveals itself to be full of fascinating winding lanes and stairways bordered by very handsome houses – many as old as the fourteenth century – with an imposing Hôtel de Ville at the end of rue du Trech, the main commercial street. If not worth a prolonged stay, Tulle certainly makes an interesting stopover.

The Cathédrale Notre-Dame, whose construction was drawn out from the Romanesque to Gothic periods, stands on the riverside quays in place Émile-Zola. The cloister beside it has a small museum (daily 9am–noon & 2–5pm, closed Wed & Sat afternoons; €2.50), containing a mishmash of exhibits ranging from archeology to accordions, with a large contingent of firearms, along with lace, once one of the town's major industries. Around the block, at 2 quai Edmond-Perrier, is a collection of documents to do with the Resistance at the Musée Départemental de la Résistance et de la Déportation (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm; free), particularly the terrible reprisals wreaked by the Germans when they recaptured the town from the Resistance on June 8, 1944, and hanged 99 people. It presents a more balanced view than many Resistance museums, though, and has some interesting examples of Vichy propaganda.

Practicalities

The tourist office is opposite the cathedral at 2 place Émile-Zola (July & Aug Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 10.30am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.55.26.59.61, 🌐www.paysdetulle-developpement.com), while the bus and train stations are side by side on the southwest edge of the town on avenue Winston–Churchill. The market takes place on Wednesday and Saturday mornings by the cathedral.

By far the nicest budget hotel is Le Bon Accueil, 10 rue du Canton (☎ & 📞05.55.26.70.57; 📍; closed two weeks at Christmas; restaurant from €12.50), in an old beamed house with stone mullion windows, across the river from the cathedral. A smarter option, by the train station, is the Hôtel de la Gare (☎05.55.20.04.04, 🌐www.hotel-restaurant-delagare-farjounel.com; 📍; closed two weeks in Aug/Sept; restaurant from €14). There are also a few reasonable, old-fashioned rooms at La Toque Blanche, 29 rue Jean-Jaurès (☎05.55.26.75.41, www.hotel-latoqueblanche.com; ☎; closed Sun), only five minutes from the cathedral, but its real draw is a renowned restaurant, with an affordable menu at €24 (closed Sun eve & Mon). The municipal campsite is by the river on the Ussel side of town (📞 & ☎05.55.26.75.97; July & Aug only).

Gimel

If you're travelling by car, you might consider staying in one of the villages in the hilly wooded country northeast of Tulle. GIMEL-LES-CASCADES, in particular, is very beautiful and, out of season at least, very quiet. It is a minute hamlet, about 10km away and clinging to the edge of a steep valley beside a spectacular waterfall, which has sadly been turned into a paying "sight" (March–Oct daily 10am–6pm; until 7pm in July & Aug; €4). There's also a superb twelfth-century reliquary, known as the Chasse de St-Étienne, in the treasury of the local church.

The attractive Hostellerie de la Vallée (📞05.55.21.40.60, 📧hotel_de_la_vallee@hotmail.com; ☎) in the village has a few simple rooms and a good restaurant from €19. There's also a good three-star campsite (📞05.55.21.26.65; May–Sept) northeast of Gimel by a small but beautiful lake, the Étang de Ruffaud.

The Lot

The core of this section is formed by the old provinces of Haut Quercy and Quercy: the land between the Dordogne and the Lot and between the Lot and the Garonne, Aveyron and Tarn. We have extended it slightly eastwards to include the gorges of the River Aveyron and Villefranche-de-Rouergue on the edge of the province of Rouergue.

The area is hotter, drier, less well known and, with few exceptions, less crowded than the Dordogne, though no less interesting. The cave paintings at Pech-Merle are on a par with those at Les Eyzies. Najac, Penne and Peyrusse have ruined castles to rival those of the Dordogne. Towns like Figeac and Villefranche-de-Rouergue are without equal, as are villages like St-Antonin-Noble-Val, and stretches of country like that below Gourdon, around Les Arques where Osip Zadkine had his studio, and the Célé valley.

Again, without transport, many places are out of reach. Some consolation, however, is the existence of the Brive–Toulouse train line that makes Figeac, Villefranche-de-Rouergue and Najac accessible, while Agen, Moissac and Montauban are on the Bordeaux–Toulouse line.

Rocamadour and around

Halfway up a cliff in the deep and abrupt canyon of the Alzou stream, the spectacular setting of ROCAMADOUR is hard to beat; the town itself must have been beautiful once, too, but for centuries it has been inundated by religious pilgrims and, latterly, more secular-minded tourists. The constant stream has turned the place into something of a nightmare in high season, with every house displaying mountains of unbelievable junk. The reason for its popularity since medieval times is the supposed miraculous ability of the cathedral's Black Madonna. Nowadays, pilgrims are outnumbered by tourists, who come here to wonder at the sheer audacity of its location, built almost vertically into its rocky backdrop.

▲ Rocamadour

Legend has it that the history of Rocamadour began with the arrival of Zacchaeus, husband of St Veronica, who fled to France to escape religious persecution and lived out his last years here as a hermit. When in 1166 a perfectly preserved body was found in a grave high up on the rock, it was declared to be Zacchaeus, known in France as St Amadour. Rocamadour soon became a major pilgrimage site and a staging post on the road to Santiago de Compostela in Spain. St Bernard, numerous kings of England and France and thousands of others crawled up the chapel steps on their knees to pay their respects and seek cures for their illnesses. Young King Henry, son of Henry II of England (see box, p.711), was the first to plunder the shrine, but he was easily outclassed by the Huguenots, who tried in vain to burn the saint's corpse and finally resigned themselves simply to hacking it to bits. A reconstruction was produced in the nineteenth century, in an attempt to revive the flagging pilgrimage.

The area's other main sight is the Gouffre de Padirac, with its vast underground river system, which lies across open country to the northeast of Rocamadour. Further east again, the town of St-Céré is an attractive spot, best known for its museum dedicated to the twentieth-century artist Jean Lurçat.

The Town

Rocamadour is easy enough to find your way around. There's just one street, rue de la Couronnerie, strung out between two medieval gateways. Above it, the steep hillside supports no fewer than seven churches. There's a lift dug into the rock-face (€3 return), but it's far better to climb the 223 steps of the Via Sancta, up which the devout drag themselves on their knees to the smoke-blackened and votive-packed Chapelle Notre-Dame where the miracle-working twelfth-century Black Madonna resides. The tiny, macabre statue of walnut wood is appropriately lit in the mysterious half-light of her protective black cage, but the rest of the chapel is unremarkable. High up in the rock above the entrance to the chapel is a sword, supposedly Roland's legendary blade, Durandal.

There's no relief for the non-religious in the neighbouring Musée d'Art Sacré (📍 www.relaisdesremparts.com), which contains sacred art treasures, reliquaries and various historical documents. It's dedicated to the French composer Francis Poulenc (1899–1963), whose music was inspired by a visit to the shrine. The museum was closed at the time of writing, but expected to re-open soon – check at the tourist office for times. The same goes for the ancient ramparts (usually open daily; €3) higher above Rocamadour in L'Hospitalet, reachable via a winding shady path, La Calvarie, past the Stations of the Cross, with stunning views across the valley, or else in another lift (€4 return).

There are two different wildlife centres worth visiting in L'Hospitalet: the Rocher des Aigles (April to mid-July & Sept daily 1.30–6pm; mid-July to Aug daily 11am–7.30pm; Oct to mid-Nov Tues–Sun 1.30–6pm; €7.50, 📍 www.rocherdesaigles.com), a breeding centre for birds of prey – don't miss the demonstrations of the birds in flight; and the Forêt des Singes, off the D673 (April–June & first two weeks Sept daily 10am–noon & 1–5.30pm; July & Aug daily 9.30am–6.30pm; mid-Sept to Oct Mon–Fri 1–5.30pm, Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 1–5.30pm; €7; 📍 www.la-foret-des-singes.com), where more than a hundred Barbary apes roam the plateau in relative freedom.

Practicalities

Getting to Rocamadour without your own transport is awkward, unless you're prepared to walk or take a taxi the 4km from the Rocamadour-Padirac gare SNCF on the Brive–Capdenac line. If you arrive by car, you'll have to park in L'Hospitalet, on the hilltop above Rocamadour (which has the best view of the town), or else in the car park several hundred metres below the town. There are two tourist offices: the main one in L'Hospitalet (☎05.65.33.22.00, 📍 www.rocamadour.com), and a second next to the Hôtel de Ville, on the main street. Inconveniently, the distribution of hours between the two offices changes significantly most years, though you're assured that at least one will be open on any given day.

Rocamadour's hotels are not too expensive but they're closed for the winter months, and you need to ring ahead in summer. There's good value at the Lion d'Or, on rue de la Couronnerie (☎05.65.33.62.04, 📍 www.liondor-rocamadour.com; 2; closed Nov–March; restaurant from €12), and Le Terminus des Pèlerins, at the bottom of the Via Sancta, with fine views of the valley (☎05.65.33.62.14, 📍 www.terminus-des-pelerins.com; 3; closed Nov–March; restaurant from €15). For a night of luxury, try the Beau Site, also on rue de la Couronnerie (☎05.65.33.63.08, 📍 www.bestwestern-beausite.com; 4; closed mid-Nov to early Feb), which also has an excellent restaurant, the Jehan de Valon (menu from €23). Up in L'Hospitalet, the Bellevue (☎05.65.33.62.10, ☎05.65.33.65.61; 2–3; menu from €14) enjoys prime positioning and has pleasant rooms. Campers should head for the three-star site nearby, Les Cigales (☎05.65.33.64.44, 📍 www.camping-cigales.com; April–Sept). The nicest place to eat is the genuine and homely Chez Anne-Marie, on rue de la Couronnerie (☎05.65.33.65.81), which has good-value menus for €14.50 at lunchtime.

Gouffre de Padirac

The Gouffre de Padirac (daily guided tours: April to mid-July, Sept & Oct 9am–noon & 2–6pm; last two weeks July 9am–6pm; Aug 8.30am–6.30pm;

€8.50; 📍 www.gouffre-de-padirac.com) is about 20km east of Rocamadour on the other side of the main Brive–Figeac road. An enormous limestone sinkhole, about 100m deep and over 100m wide, it contains some spectacular formations of stalactites and waterfalls created by the accumulation of lime, and beautiful underground lakes, but is very, very popular. There is no system for reservations, so you're advised to avoid weekends and afternoons in summer, or you'll wait an age for tickets. Visits are partly on foot, partly by boat, and the guided tours last an hour and a half. In wet weather you'll need a waterproof jacket. If you have no car, the nearest gare SNCF is Rocamadour-Padirac, more than 10km to the west; the only alternative is walking or hitching.

St-Céré

East of Padirac and about 9km from Bretenoux on the River Bave, a minor tributary of the Dordogne, you come to the medieval town of ST-CÉRÉ, full of ancient houses crowding around place du Mercadial, and dominated by the brooding ruins of the Château de St-Laurent-les-Tours, whose two powerful keeps were once part of a fortress belonging to the Turennes. During World War II, the artist Jean Lurçat operated a secret Resistance radio post here; after the war he turned it into a studio, and it's now a marvellous museum of his work, mainly huge tapestries but also sketches, paintings and pottery (mid-July to Sept daily 9.30am–noon & 2.30–6.30pm; also open two weeks at Easter; ☎ 05.65.38.28.21; €2.50). At over 200m altitude, the site is spectacular, with stunning views all around.

St-Céré has one very pleasant and reasonable place to stay: the Hôtel Victor-Hugo, avenue Victor-Hugo, by the river (☎ 05.65.38.16.15, 📍 www.hotel-victor-hugo.fr; 🚫; closed two weeks in Feb & two in Nov; restaurant from €15, closed Sun eve and Mon). Otherwise, there's Le Soulhol riverside campsite (☎ 05.65.38.12.37, 📍 www.campinglesoulhol.com; May–Sept) nearby.

Bikes can be rented from 45 rue Faidherbe (☎ 05.65.38.03.23; closed Sun & Mon) – one of the best trips you could do is to the extremely pretty little village of AUTOIRE, in a tight side valley about 10km to the west of St-Céré. Much hillier but glorious country lies to the east along the road to Aurillac via Souseyrac and Laroquebrou.

Gourdon and around

GOURDON lies between Sarlat and Cahors, conveniently served by the Brive–Toulouse train line, and makes a quiet, pleasant base for visiting some of the major places in this part of the Dordogne and Lot. It's 17km south of the River Dordogne and pretty much at the eastern limit of the luxuriant woods and valleys of Périgord, which give way quite suddenly, at the line of the N20, to the arid limestone landscape of the Cause de Gramat.

In the Middle Ages, Gourdon was an important place, deriving wealth and influence from the presence of four monasteries. It was besieged and captured in 1189 by Richard the Lionheart, who promptly murdered its feudal lords. Legend has it that the archer who fired the fatal shot at Richard during the siege of Châlus was the last surviving member of this family. But more than anything it was the devastation of the Wars of Religion that dispatched the place into centuries of oblivion.

Gourdon is a beautiful town, its medieval centre of yellow-stone houses attached like a swarm of bees to a prominent hilltop, neatly ringed by modern boulevards containing all the shops. The main street through the old town, with a fortified gateway at one end, is rue du Majou. It's lined all the way up with splendid stone houses, some, like the Maison d'Anglars at no. 17, dating as far back as the thirteenth century. At its upper end, rue du Majou leads into a lovely square in front of the massive but not particularly interesting fourteenth-century church of St-Pierre, where in summer there's a farmers' market on Thursday mornings. From the square, steps climb to the top of the hill, where the castle once stood and from where there is a superb view over the Dordogne valley and surroundings.

A couple of kilometres along the Sarlat road in the direction of Cougnac from Gourdon, is a very interesting cave, the Grottes de Cougnac, discovered in 1949 (April–June & Sept daily 10–11.30am & 2.30–5pm; July & Aug daily 10am–6pm; Oct Mon–Sat 2–4pm; €6). It has beautiful rock formations as well as some fine prehistoric paintings rather similar to those at Pech-Merle and, intriguingly, sharing some of the same unexplained symbols.

9

Practicalities

Gourdon's train station is located roughly 1km northeast of the town centre; from the station, walk south on avenue de la Gare, then turn right on to avenue Gambetta to reach the boulevard encircling the old town. Turn left here to find rue du Majou and the tourist office at no. 24 (March–June, Sept & Oct Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 10am–7pm, Sun 10am–noon; Nov–Feb Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎05.65.27.52.50, 🌐www.gourdon.fr), which has lists of B&B options in the area. Bikes can be rented from Nature Évasion, 73 av Cavignac (☎05.65.37.65.12), out on the west side of town.

For an overnight stay, the Hôtel de la Promenade, on the northwestern side of the ring road at 48 bd Galiot-de-Genouillac (☎05.65.41.41.44, 🌐www.lapromenadegourdon.fr; 📍; restaurant closed Sat lunch & Sun, menus from €16), is a cheerful place with pleasant, themed rooms, though you have to put up with the horrendous clutter of English-pub-style tack downstairs. On the opposite side of town, near the post office, is the agreeable Bissonnier, 51 bd des Martyrs (☎05.65.41.02.48, 🌐www.hotelbissonnier.com; 📍), with a restaurant serving international fare such as spaghetti bolognese as well as the more local salade de gésiers (menus from €11 lunch, €20 dinner). There's a well-equipped municipal campsite, Écoute s'il Pleut (☎05.65.41.06.19, ☎05.65.41.09.88; mid-June to mid-Sept), 1km north on the Sarlat road.

In addition to the hotels above, you'll find cafés and restaurants scattered along the main boulevard – the Tour-de-Ville – which encircles the old town.

Les Arques

Twenty-five kilometres southwest of Gourdon on the Fumel road, you come to a pretty but not remarkable bastide called Cazals. A left turn here takes you along the bottom of the valley of the Masse and up its left flank to the exquisite hamlet of LES ARQUES. This is quiet, remote, small-scale farming country, emptied of people by the slaughter of rustic sons in World War I and by migration to the towns in search of jobs and money.

Les Arques' main claim to fame is the Russian Cubist/Expressionist sculptor Osip Zadkine, who bought the old house by the church here in 1934. Some of his sculptures adorn the space outside the church as well as its lovely interior, and there's also a museum with a number of his other works (daily: April–Sept 10am–1pm & 2–7pm; Oct–March 2–5pm; €2.50).

The other reason to come here is the old village school, now transformed into a most unusual restaurant, 🐘 La Récréation (☎05.65.22.88.08; closed Wed & Thurs, also Dec–March except Christmas hols), where you get a copious and delicious meal to eat beneath the chestnut trees of the school yard for €17, including wine, at midday in July and August, or otherwise for €29. On a summer night, with the swifts flying overhead, it's idyllic.

On the other side of the valley and well signposted, the tiny Romanesque chapel of St-André-des-Arques has some very lovely fifteenth-century frescoes discovered by Zadkine; get the key from the museum in Les Arques (see opposite).

Cahors and around

CAHORS, on the River Lot, was the capital of the old province of Quercy. In its time, it has been a Gallic settlement; a Roman town; a briefly held Moorish possession; a town under English rule; a bastion of Catholicism in the Wars of Religion, sacked in consequence by Henri IV; a university town for four hundred years; and birthplace of the politician Léon Gambetta (1838–82), after whom so many French streets and squares are named. Modern Cahors is a sunny southern backwater, with two interesting sights in its cathedral and the remarkable Pont Valentré.

While you're in the Cahors area, don't miss out on the local wine, heady and black but dry to the taste and not at all plummy like the Gironde wines from Blaye and Bourge, which use the same Malbec grape.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The gare SNCF is at the end of avenue Jean-Jaurès off rue du Président-Wilson. For further information on the area, make for the tourist office (Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; July & Aug, also Sun 10am–1pm; ☎05.65.53.20.65, 🌐www.mairie-cahors.fr/tourisme) on place François-Mitterrand, close to the cathedral. You can surf the Internet at INIT, 100 rue Jean-Vidal (€2.50 per hour). The nearest place to rent bikes is Antinea Loisirs (☎05.65.30.95.79, 🌐www.antinea-loisirs.com), some 12km downstream in Douelle; for canoes, head to the base at St-Cirq-Lapopie (see p.736). A leisurely way to enjoy some of the Lot's scenery is through the cruises run by Croisières Fénelon (☎05.65.30.16.55, 📧bateaufenelon@wanadoo.fr). They offer day-trips from around €30 in July and August, for example to St-Cirq, where the boat moors to allow you time to explore the village.

Cahors boasts several attractive, mid-range hotel options, but there's less choice for those on a really tight budget. For campers, there is a riverside site, Camping Rivière de Cabessut (☎05.65.30.06.30, 🌐www.cabessut.com; April–Sept) across the Pont de Cabessut.

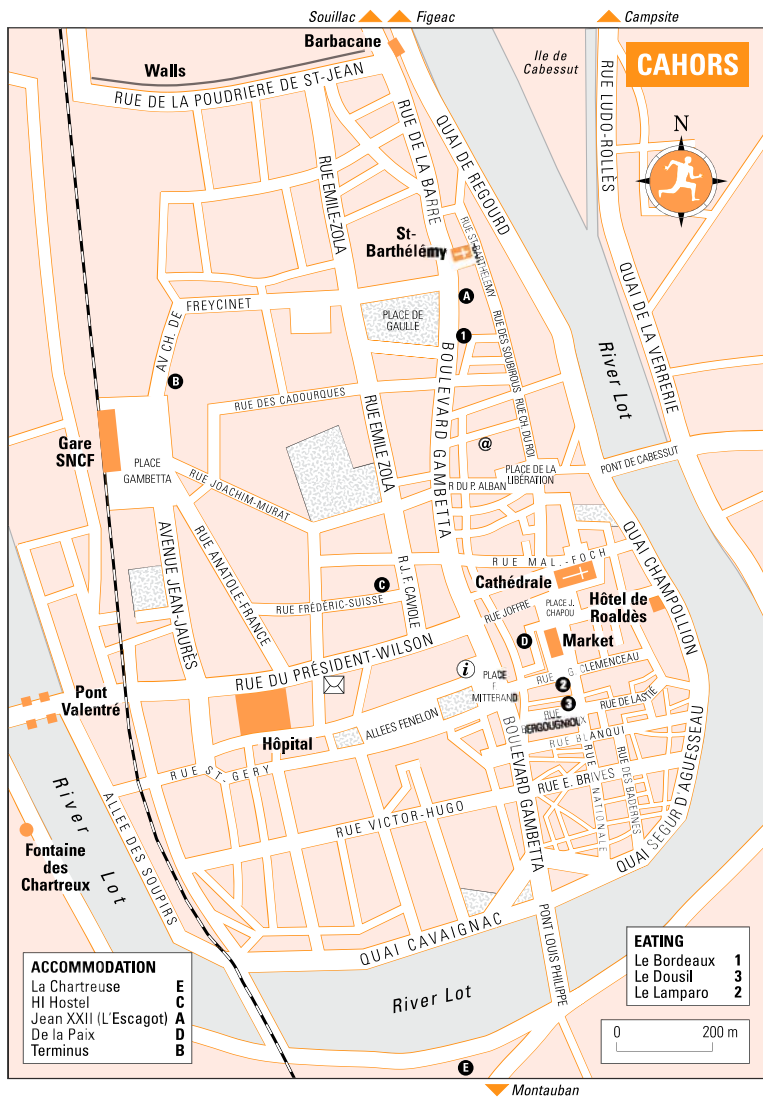

Hotels

La Chartreuse St-Georges ☎05.65.35.17.37, 🌐www.hotel-la-chartreuse.com. In a nice spot on the south bank, over the river from the town centre, this chain hotel has a small pool, a restaurant (menus from €14.50) and a bar with a billiard table. Ask for a room overlooking the river. 4

🐘 Jean XXII or L'Escargot 5 bd Gambetta ☎05.65.35.07.66, 🌐www.hotel-escargot.com. Situated in the fourteenth-century buildings of the Palais Duèze, this hotel offers both charm and comfort. The rooms are recently renovated, and most have a/c. 3

De la Paix 30 place St-Maurice ☎05.65.35.03.40, 🌐www.hoteldelapaix-cahors.com. Right in the thick of the action, opposite the covered market. The rooms are brand-new and sparkling clean, while downstairs is a popular café and bar, The Blue Angel. 3

Terminus 5 av Charles-de-Freycinet

☎ 05.65.53.32.00, 🌐 www.balandre.com. In a grand old house opposite the station, you'll find large, comfortable and attractive rooms here. The restaurant, Le Balandre, is also outstanding (closed Sun & Mon; menus €40–85). A

Hostel

HI Hostel 20 rue Frédéric-Suisse ☎ 05.65.53.97.02, 📧 ftj46@wanadoo.fr. An extremely basic hostel in a fairly dilapidated building. It's central, though, and has a helpful reception and a canteen serving evening meals for €9 – the same price as a bed for the night.

The Town

Small and easily walkable, the town squats on a peninsula formed by a tight loop in the River Lot, and is protected on the northern side by a rank of fourteenth-century fortifications, with the Barbacane de St-Jean making a breach in the walls.

Right in the middle of the town is the cathedral which, consecrated in 1119, is the oldest and simplest in plan of the Périgord-style churches. The exterior is not exciting: a heavy square tower dominates the plain west front, whose best feature is the elaborately decorated portal in the street on the north side, where a Christ in Majesty dominates the tympanum, surrounded by angels and apostles, while cherubim fly out of the clouds to relieve him of his halo. Side panels show scenes from the life of St Stephen. The outer ring over the portal shows a line of naked figures being stabbed in the behind and hacked with axes.

Inside, the cathedral is much like St-Front at Périgueux, with a nave lacking aisles and transepts, roofed with two big domes; in the first are fourteenth-century frescoes of the stoning of St Stephen. The Gothic choir and apse are extensively but crudely painted, while to their right a door opens into a delicate cloister in the flamboyant style, still retaining some intricate, though damaged, carving. On the northwest corner pillar the Virgin is portrayed as a graceful girl with broad brow and ringlets to her waist. In the cloister's northeast corner St Gaubert's chapel holds the Holy Coif, a cloth said to have covered Christ's head in the tomb, which according to legend was brought back from the Holy Land in the twelfth century by Bishop Géraud de Cardaillac.

The area between the cathedral and the river is filled by a warren of narrow lanes and alleys, most of them handsomely restored during the last ten years. Many of the houses, turreted and built of flat, thin, southern brick, date from the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Rue Nationale, rue Bergougnieux and rue de Lastié are particularly interesting, along with rue du Château-du-Roi and its extension, rue des Soubirous, to the north. It's worth taking a look at the impressive, though now rather crumbly, Hôtel d'Issale in rue Bergougnieux and the Hôtel de Roaldès in place Henri-IV; also of interest are the Hôpital Grossia in rue des Soubirous and the Palais Duèze, further north opposite the church of St-Barthélémy, built for the brothers of Pope John XXII in the fourteenth century.

Immediately south of the cathedral, the lime-bordered place Jean-Jacques-Chapou commemorates a local trade unionist and Resistance leader, killed in a German ambush on July 17, 1944. Next to it is the covered market and a building still bearing the name Gambetta, where the family of the famous deputy of Belleville in Paris had their grocery shop.

The reason most people venture to Cahors is the dramatic fourteenth-century Pont Valentré. Its three powerful towers, originally closed by portcullises and gates, made it effectively an independent fortress, guarding the river crossing on the west side of town. One of the finest surviving bridges of its time, it is, rightly, one of the most photographed monuments in France. Just upstream from the bridge is a resurgent river known as the Fontaine des Chartreux, flowing from the valley side. The Roman town was named Divona Carducorum after it, and it still supplies Cahors with drinking water.

9

Eating

In addition to the hotel restaurants mentioned on p.733–734, there's a lively brasserie, Le Bordeaux, at the top end of boulevard Gambetta (with menus from €11) while Le Lamparo (☎05.65.35.25.93; evening menus from €22; closed Sun) on the south side of the market square, is equally popular for its varied menus and generous portions. Le Dousil, a wine bar just round the corner on rue Nationale (closed Sun & Mon), is a great venue to sample the local reds – and it dishes up good food, too: salads, open-sandwiches and cheese and charcuterie platters from around €10.

St-Cirq-Lapopie

If you have your own transport you could easily make a side trip from Cahors to the cliff-edge village of ST-CIRQ-LAPIOPIE, 30km to the east, perched high above the south bank of the Lot. The village was saved from ruin when poet André Breton came to live here in the early twentieth century, and though it's now an irresistible draw for the tour buses with its cobbled lanes, half-timbered houses and gardens, it's still worth the trouble, especially if early or late in the day.

Public transport in the form of an SNCF bus will get you from Cahors to Gare-St-Cirq in the valley bottom at Tour-de-Faure, from where there's no alternative but to leg it up the steep hill for the final two kilometres. For accommodation, there's the pretty Auberge du Sombrol on the central square (☎05.65.31.26.08, ☎05.65.30.26.37; 🍷; closed mid-Nov to March), with attractive, wooden furnishings, or La Pélissaria (☎05.65.31.25.14, 📧perso.orange.fr/hoteldelapelissaria; 🍷; closed Nov–April), in a sixteenth-century house perched on the cliff at the eastern entrance to St-Cirq. There's also a very comfortable gîte d'étape in the village centre (☎05.65.31.21.51, 📧maisonfour.donne@wanadoo.fr; closed Nov to mid-April), and two well-run campsites: Camping de la Plage (☎05.65.30.29.51, 📧www.campingplage.com; open all year), down by the river with swimming and canoeing possibilities, and La Truffière (☎05.65.30.20.22, 📧www.camping-truffiere.com; closed Oct–March), 3km to the southeast over the rim of the valley, with a heated swimming pool.

When it comes to restaurants, you can eat very well at L'Oustal (☎05.65.31.20.17; closed Mon & Nov–March; menus from €9.50 at lunch, €17 evenings), tucked into a corner of rue de la Pélissaria just south of the church. At the top of the village, with views from its terrace over jumbled roofs, Lou Bolat serves a varied menu of crêpes, salads and regional dishes like Cassoulet Campagnard (closed mid-Nov to Feb & Tues; menu €17). For canoeing possibilities, from hourly rental to week-long expeditions on the Lot and Célé rivers, ask at Kalapca Loisirs (☎05.65.30.29.51, 🌐www.kalapca.com; open daily July & Aug, on reservation Sept–June), on the riverbank opposite Tour-de-Faure.

Downstream from Cahors

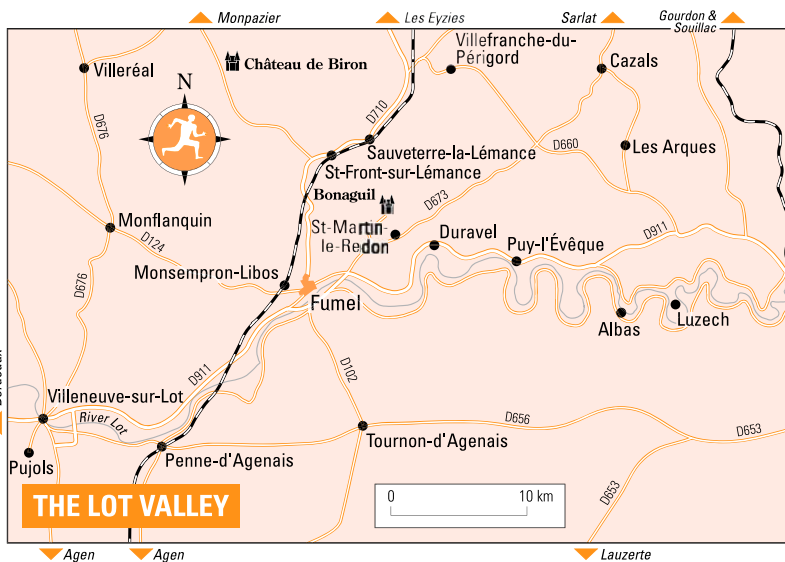

West of Cahors the vine-cloaked banks of the Lot are dotted with small and ancient villages. The first of these, Luzech and the dramatic Puy-l'Évêque, are served by an SNCF bus that threads along the valley from Cahors via Fumel to Monsempron-Libos, on the Agen–Périgueux train line. You'll need your own transport, however, to reach the splendid Château de Bonaguil, in the hills northwest of Puy-l'Évêque, worth the effort for its elaborate fortifications and spectacular position. From here on the Lot valley starts to get ugly and industrial, though Villeneuve-sur-Lot hides a surprisingly attractive old centre and provides a base for exploring the villages around. Prettiest are Pujols, to the south, which also boasts a number of excellent restaurants, and Penne-d'Agenais, overlooking the Lot to the east. Monflanquin, to the north of Villeneuve, is also well worth a visit for its hilltop location and almost perfect arcaded central square.

Luzech, Puy-l'Évêque and the Château de Bonaguil

Twenty kilometres downriver from Cahors you come to LUZECH, with scant Gaulish and Roman remains of the town of L'Impernal, and the Chapelle de Notre-Dame-de-l'Île, dedicated to the medieval boatmen who transported Cahors wines to Bordeaux. The town stands in a huge river loop, overlooked by a thirteenth-century keep, with some picturesque alleys and dwellings in the quarter opposite place du Canal.

Several bends in the river later – 22km by road – PUY-L'ÉVÊQUE is probably the prettiest village in the entire valley, with many grand houses built in honey-coloured stone and overlooked by both a church and the castle of the bishops of Cahors. The best view is from the bridge which crosses the Lot. For an overnight stay, the classy Bellevue (☎05.65.36.06.60, 🌐www.lothotel-bellevue.com; 📍; closed 2 weeks in Nov and 4 weeks in Jan/Feb), perched on the cliff edge, has stylish rooms and a good restaurant (from €25, or €12 in the brasserie; closed Sun & Mon). For something cheaper, at the bottom of the town, the Henry has excellent-value, a/c rooms (☎05.65.21.32.24, ☎05.65.30.85.18; 📍), and there's a well-tended campsite, Camping Les Vignes (☎05.65.30.81.72, 📧lesvignes46700@aol.fr; closed Oct–March), 3km south by the river.

With your own transport, follow the Lot as far as Duravel and then cut across country via the picturesque hamlet of St-Martin-le-Redon to reach the Château de Bonaguil (Feb–May & Sept–Oct daily 11am–1pm & 2.30–5.30pm; June–Aug daily 10am–6pm; Nov Sun only 11am–1pm & 2.30–5pm; Christmas hols 2.30–5pm; €6) some 15km later. It's spectacularly perched at the end of a wooden spur commanding two valleys, about 8km northeast of Fumel. Dating largely from the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries with a double ring of walls, five huge towers and a narrow boat-shaped keep designed to resist artillery, it was the last of a dying breed, completed just when military architects were abandoning such elaborate fortifications.

Villeneuve-sur-Lot and around

VILLENEUVE-SUR-LOT, 75km west and downstream from Cahors, is a pleasant, workaday sort of town but otherwise does not have a great deal to commend it: there are no very interesting sights, though the handful of attractive timbered houses in the old town and the arcaded central square go some way to compensate. If you're reliant on public transport note that there's no train station in Villeneuve itself, but SNCF runs regular bus services to Agen, which is on the Bordeaux–Toulouse line.

The town's most striking landmark is the red-brick tower of the church of Ste-Catherine, completed as late as 1937 in typically dramatic neo-Byzantine style, but rather unusually built on a north–south axis; inside, the church retains some attractive stained glass from the previous fourteenth-century building. In the streets around the main square, place La Fayette, a couple of towers alone survive from the fortifications of this originally bastide town, and to the south the main avenue, rue des Cieutats, crosses thirteenth-century Pont des Cieutat, resembling the Pont Valentré in Cahors but devoid of its towers.

The tourist office, 3 place de la Libération (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.53.36.17.30, 🌐www.tourisme-villeneuve-sur-lot.com), lies just outside the town's northern gate. The best place to look for accommodation is around the former train station, now the gare routière, five minutes' walk south of centre, where the friendly La Résidence, 17 av Lazare-Carnot (☎05.53.40.17.03, 📧hotel.laresidence@wanadoo.fr; ①–③; closed 15 days in Nov), offers unbeatable value for money. Closer to the centre, Les Platanes, 40 bd de la Marine (☎05.53.40.11.40, 🌐www.hoteldesplatanes.com; ④; restaurant from €13), offers attractive, individually decorated rooms. For campers, there's the Camping du Rooy, signed off the Agen road 1.5km south of the centre (☎05.53.70.24.18; mid-April to Sept).

When it comes to eating, Chez Cédine in rue Notre-Dame (☎05.53.70.42.08; closed Sun; menus from €15.50), near the Pont des Cieutat, is a pretty little place offering traditional cuisine, with a tiny balcony jutting out over the river. Otherwise you could try L'Entracte at 30 bd de la Marine (closed Wed & Thurs; menus from €19), where you can sit out under the plane trees. The nearby La Galerie, 38 bd de la Marine (☎05.53.71.52.12; closed Mon & Tues), is the place to go for a bit more luxury and classic cuisine; menus start at €14. Alternatively, head south to Pujols (see below).

Pujols and Penne-d'Agenais

Three kilometres south of Villeneuve the tiny hilltop village of PUJOLS makes a popular excursion, partly to see the faded Romanesque frescoes in the church of Ste-Foy and partly for the views over the surrounding country. But the main reason locals come here is for the quality of its restaurants. Top of the list is the excellent but expensive 🌟 La Toque Blanche (☎05.53.49.00.30, 🌐www.la-toque-blanche.com; closed Sun eve, Mon & Tues eve; menus €25–78), just south of Pujols with views back to the village. The panorama is even better, however, from their less formal outlet, Lou Caliel, overlooking the Lot valley in Pujols itself, where you can sample some beautifully cooked traditional but light menus (☎05.53.70.46.14; closed Tues eve, Wed & lunch Thurs; menus from €18).

Another side trip could be to the beautiful but touristy old fortress town of PENNE-D'AGENAIS, 8km upstream on a steep hill also on the south bank of the Lot, with remains of a thirteenth-century castle teetering on a cliff edge. The tourist office, in rue du 14-Juillet just inside the old town gate (June–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 2–7pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; ☎05.53.41.37.80, 🌐www.penne-tourisme.com), can supply comprehensive lists of B&Bs and gîtes in the area. There's a good municipal campsite (☎05.53.41.30.97; mid-June to Aug) beside the Ferrié leisure lake just south of Penne, down near the gare SNCF on the Agen–Paris line, and another more basic site across the river in St-Sylvestre (☎05.53.41.22.23; mid-May to mid-Sept). If you're looking for somewhere to eat, try Le Bombecul, beside the church, which serves large salads and daily specials with a North African flavour (☎05.53.71.11.76; salads €9, menu €20; open daily in July & Aug, weekends only Sept–June).

Monflanquin

Some 30km north of Villeneuve-sur-Lot, pretty MONFLANQUIN, founded by Alphonse de Poitiers in 1256, is another perfectly preserved bastide (see box p.695), less touristy than Monpazier and even more impressively positioned on the top of a hill that rises sharply from the surrounding country. It conforms to the regular pattern of right-angled streets leading from a central square to the four town gates. The square – place des Arcades – with its distinctly Gothic houses, derives a special charm from being on a slope and tree-shaded. On the square's north side you'll find the high-tech Musée des Bastides (July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 3–5pm; €4), full of information about the life and history of bastides.

Located beneath the museum is the tourist office (same hours as the Musée des Bastides; ☎05.53.36.40.19, 🌐www.cc-monflanquinois.fr), which can furnish you with lists of chambres d'hôtes. The best hotel in Monflanquin is the modern and slightly soulless Monform, just west of town (☎05.53.49.85.85, 🌐www.espace-forme-47.com; 📍; closed Feb), which doubles as a health centre with heated pool, sauna and gym. Campers are better served by the four-star Camping des Bastides (☎05.53.40.83.09, 🌐www.campingdesbastides.com; May–Aug), 10km east of Monflanquin, near the village of Salles. If you're looking for somewhere to eat, try one of the cafés and restaurants on place des Arcades: the Bistrot du Prince Noir (open daily July & Aug; Sept–June closed Tues & Wed; lunch menus from €12, evenings from €25) offers traditional dishes and more unusual specialities like chicken with caramelized raisins.

Figeac and around

FIGEAC lies on the River Célé, 71km east of Cahors and some 8km north of the Lot. It's a beautiful town with an unspoilt medieval centre not too encumbered by tourism. Like many other provincial towns hereabouts, it owes its beginnings to the foundation of an abbey in the early days of Christianity in France, one which quickly became wealthy because of its position on the pilgrim routes to both Rocamadour and Compostela. In the Middle Ages it became a centre of tanning, which partly accounts for the many houses whose top floors have solelhos, or open-sided wooden galleries used for drying skins and other produce. Again, as so often, it was the Wars of Religion that pushed it into eclipse, for Figeac threw in its lot with the nearby Protestant stronghold of Montauban and suffered the same punishing reprisals by the victorious royalists in 1662.

Roads and train line both funnel you automatically into the town centre, where the Hôtel de la Monnaie surveys place Vival. It's a splendid building whose origins go back to the thirteenth century, when the city's mint was located in this district. In the streets radiating off to the north of the square – Caviale, République, Gambetta and their cross-streets – there's a delightful range of houses of the medieval and classical periods, both stone and half-timbered with brick noggings, adorned with carvings and colonnettes, ogees, and interesting bits of ironwork. At the end of these streets are the two small squares of place Carnot and place Champollion, both of great charm. The former is the site of the old halles, under whose awning cafés now spread their tables.

Jean-François Champollion, who cracked Egyptian hieroglyphics by deciphering the triple text of the Rosetta Stone, was born in a house at 4 impasse Champollion, off the square, and the building now houses a museum dedicated to his life and work. At the time of writing, the museum was being extended to include coverage of ancient and modern alphabets from all over the world. Nearby, a larger-than-life reproduction of the Rosetta Stone forms the floor of the tiny place des Écritures, above which is a little garden planted with tufts of papyrus.

On the other side of place Champollion, rue Boutaric leads up to the cedar-shaded church of Notre-Dame-du-Puy, from where you get views over the roofs of the town. More interesting is the church of St-Sauveur off place des Herbes near the tourist office, with its lovely Gothic chapterhouse decorated with heavily gilded but dramatically realistic seventeenth-century carved wood panels illustrating the life of Christ.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is a few minutes' walk to the south of place Vival across the river at the end of rue de la Gare and avenue des Poilus. SNCF buses leave from the train station, and others from the gare routière on avenue Maréchal-Joffre, a few minutes' walk west of place Vival. You'll find the tourist office in the Hôtel de la Monnaie on place Vival (May, June & Sept Mon–Sat 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm, Sun 10am–1pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7.30pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2.30–6pm; ☎ 05.65.34.06.25, 🌐 www.tourisme-figeac.com). For an Internet connection, the most reliable place is Drogoun at 1 av Émile-Bouyssou (closed Sun & Mon), south of the river.

Figeac boasts some excellent restaurants. La Table de Marinette, south of the river at 51 allées Victor-Hugo, has a well-deserved reputation for its traditional Quercy dishes (☎ 05.65.50.06.07; menus €16–43; closed Fri & Sat lunch, also mid-Nov to mid-Dec & two weeks in Jan), while the elegant La Cuisine du Marché, 15 rue Clermont, just north of St-Sauveur church, offers a select range of well-prepared local dishes in menus that range from €12 to €36 (☎ 05.65.50.18.55; closed Sun). For a lighter meal, head for the bars, cafés and crêperies around place Carnot and place Champollion.

The tourist office can recommend chambres d'hôtes, and there's a well-equipped riverside campsite, Les Rives du Célé (☎ 05.65.34.59.00, 🌐 www.domainedesurgie.com; April–Sept), just east of town, with bike and canoe rental next door.

Hotels

Des Bains 1 rue du Griffoul ☎ 05.65.34.10.89, 🌐 www.hoteldesbains.fr. In a lovely spot on the riverbank, just across from the old town. Bright, airy rooms, Internet connection and a/c. Nov–Feb closed Fri–Sun. ④

Champollion 3 place Champollion ☎ 05.65.34.04.37, ☎ 05.65.34.61.69. As central as you can get, located above a lively bar and café. Rooms are simple, but clean and comfortable, with a/c throughout. ④

Chateau du Viguier du Roi rue Émile-Zola ☎ 05.65.50.05.05, 🌐 www.chateau-viguier-figeac.com. Surely the most luxurious hotel in the region. Set in the buildings and gardens of a fourteenth-century château just off place Champollion, rooms have four-poster beds and all four-star comforts. There is also an amazing series of exquisite, aristocratic drawing rooms, and a small swimming pool. May–Sept only. ④

Du Faubourg 59 faubourg du Pin, ☎ 05.65.34.21.82, ☎ 05.65.34.24.19. An excellent budget option with quiet and spotless rooms, 2min walk east of the centre. The cheapest just have a washbasin, but for a little more money you get shower, toilet and TV. ①

Le Pont d'Or 2 av Jean-Jaurès

☎ 05.65.50.95.00, 🌐 www.hotelpontdor.com. A smart chain hotel with sauna, gym and rooftop pool. The riverside rooms also have pleasant balconies, looking across to the church of St-Sauveur. Restaurant from €11.50. ②

Cardaillac

Home of one of the great families of Quercy in the Middle Ages, the old part of the village of CARDAILLAC, about 10km to the north of Figeac off the N140, is gathered on the tip of a steep ridge above wild wooded valleys, an organic pile of houses, primitive machinery and crumbling fortifications of such antiquity you wonder how they're still there. The village has created what they call a musée éclaté, consisting of a tour of several old houses, giving an insight into the lifestyle and practices of yore, like bread-making, drying chestnuts and preparing prunes (tours in French daily except Sat: July 1–13 & Aug 26–Sept 15 3pm; July 14–Aug 25 3pm & 4.30pm; Sept 16–June by appointment on ☎ 05.65.40.10.63 or 05.65.40.15.65; donation expected). A handful of tours are offered in English in summer – check times at Figeac's tourist office, or phone the musée itself. An additional plus point to Cardaillac is the delightfully simple hotel Chez Marcel, on the through road (☎ 05.65.40.11.16, ☎ 05.65.40.49.08; ①; closed Sun–Thurs Jan–March, also closed two weeks in Oct), with a first-rate restaurant which works with locally grown produce to offer such delights as duck breast in a raspberry and honey sauce (menus from €13; closed Sun eve & Mon). They also run a boutique next door, where you can sample and purchase all manner of local specialities from small-scale producers.

Foissac and Peyrusse-le-Roc

Coming out of Figeac on the road to Villefranche-de-Rouerge, keep an eye out on the right for one of the aignilles, or stone needles, that used to ring Figeac. They are 8m high and date from the 1100s; no one knows whether they were milestones, boundary markers for the abbey, or something completely different.

Some 20km further south, and west of the road to Villeneuve, is the village of FOISSAC, which has given its name to a local cave (April, May & Oct daily except Sat 2–6pm; June & Sept daily 10–11.30am & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–6pm; €7.20; 🌐 www.grotte-de-foissac.com). In addition to a variety of weird and wonderful formations, you'll see an unusual prehistoric potter's workshop dating from about 4000 BC.

To the east of Foissac, about 20km by a beautiful lane across the cause, you happen upon one of the most remarkable old villages in this corner of France, PEYRUSSE-LE-ROC. The “modern” village sits astride a ridge above a narrow wooded valley: a tiny huddle of long-eaved, half-timbered houses gathered round a seventeenth-century church. On the slopes below, hidden in the steep woods, lie the remains of a medieval stronghold, abandoned around 1700, that once stood guard over the silver-rich country round about, and which has only recently begun to be excavated. Cobble paths connect the ruins of a Gothic church, a synagogue and a hospital, while a vertiginous ladder gives access to the twin towers of the old fort. The site is gradually being tidied up and some of the buildings restored, but for the moment at least, it remains a moving and atmospheric place.

The valley of the Célé

For the last stretch of its course from Figeac to Conduché, where it joins the Lot, the River Célé flows through a luxuriant canyon-like valley cut into the limestone uplands of the Causse de Gramat. A twisting minor road follows the river here: a silent backwater of a place, hot in summer, frequented mainly by canoeists (with any number of opportunities to rent craft). The GR651 follows the same route, sometimes close to the river, sometimes on the edge of the causse on the north bank.

Espagnac-Ste-Eulalie and Marcilhac-sur-Célé

Travelling downstream from Figeac, two villages in particular are worth a stop. The first is ESPAGNAC-STE-EULALIE, about 18km west of Figeac. It's a tiny and beautiful hamlet reached across an old stone bridge on the south bank of the river, under the limestone outcrops of the causse. An eye-catching octagonal lantern crowns the belfry of the church (guided visits: daily 10.30am, 4pm & 5.30pm by appointment, call Mme Bonzani on ☎05.65.40.06.17; €2), and under a weathered tower next door, an ancient gateway now houses a gîte d'étape (☎05.65.11.42.66; closed early Nov to Feb). There are two quiet riverside campsites in the next hamlet, Brengues: Le Moulin Vieux (☎05.65.40.00.41, ✉blasquez.a@wanadoo.fr; April–Sept), and the smaller municipal site (☎05.65.40.06.82, ☎05.65.40.05.71; May–Sept).

The second village of real interest is MARCILHAC-SUR-CÉLÉ, 9km downstream of Brengues, whose partially ruined abbey (visits possible 1.30–5pm; call ☎05.65.40.65.52 to arrange one; €3), with its gaping walls and broken columns, conjures a strongly romantic atmosphere. Very early and rather primitive ninth-century Carolingian sculpture decorates the lintel, and there are some handsome Romanesque capitals in the chapterhouse. In the damp interior are frescoes from around 1500 and old coats of arms of the local nobility, testimony to Marcilhac's once mighty power, when even Rocamadour was under its sway. During World War II, it was the scene of one of the maquis' first theatrical gestures of turning the tables on the occupier: on November 11, 1943 – Armistice Day – Jean-Jacques Chapou's group (see p.736) briefly occupied the village and laid a wreath at the war memorial.

There's a gîte d'étape in the abbey (☎05.65.40.61.43, ✉secretariat.mairie-de-marcilhac@wanadoo.fr; closed Nov–April), as well as the Pré de Monsieur campsite just outside the village (☎ & ☎05.65.40.77.88; April to mid-Oct).

Musée de Plein Air du Quercy

Set back from the north side of the River Célé, about 13km from Marcilhac, near Cuzals, the Musée de Plein Air du Quercy (May, June & Sept Wed–Sun 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 11am–7pm; €4; 🌐www.patrimoine-lot.com) is one of the better open-air museums, and was set up in the 1980s to preserve the distinctive rural architecture of France. Reconstructions that range from a half-timbered eighteenth-century farmhouse to a garage from the 1920s are scattered around the site, which is centred around a twentieth-century château burnt down by the Nazis in the last war. It's best on Sundays in summer (June–Aug), when many traditional activities like milling, haymaking and blacksmithing are demonstrated. The information is dished out with an appealing blend of humour and didactics, and the whole place is less blatantly commercial than many other écomusées.

Grotte de Pech-Merle

Discovered in 1922, the Grotte de Pech-Merle (mid-Jan to March and Nov to mid-Dec by group reservation only; April–Oct daily 9.30am–noon &

1.30–5pm; ☎05.65.31.27.05, 🌐www.pechmerle.com; €7) is less accessible than the caves at Les Eyzies but still attracts sufficient visitors to warrant restricting numbers to 700 per day; it's advisable to book at least three or four days ahead in July and August. The cave is well hidden on the scrubby hillsides above Cabrerets, which lies 15km from Marcilhac and 4km from Conduché. The cave itself is far more beautiful than those at Padirac or Les Eyzies, with galleries full of the most spectacular stalactites and stalagmites – structures tiered like wedding cakes, hanging like curtains, or shaped like whale baffles, discs or cave pearls. On the downside, the cave is wired for electric light and the guides make sure you're processed through in the scheduled time.

The first drawings you come to are in the so-called Chapelle des Mammouths, executed on a white calcite panel that looks as if it's been specially prepared for the purpose. There are horses, bison – charging head down with tiny rumps and arched tails – and tusked, whiskery mammoths. You then pass into a vast chamber where the glorious horse panel is visible on a lower level; it's a remarkable example of the way in which the artist used the contour and relief of the rock to do the work, producing an utterly convincing mammoth by just two strokes of black. The cave ceiling is covered with finger marks, preserved in the soft clay. You pass the skeleton of a cave hyena that has been lying there for 20,000 years – wild animals used these caves for shelter and sometimes, unable to find their way out, starved to death in them. And finally, the most spine-tingling experience at Pech-Merle: the footprints of an adolescent preserved in a muddy pool.

The admission charge includes an excellent film and museum, where prehistory is illustrated by colourful and intelligible charts, a selection of objects (rather than the usual 10,000 flints), skulls and beautiful slides displayed in wall panels.

There's a campsite, Le Cantal (☎05.65.31.26.61, ☎05.65.31.20.47; May–Oct), close by at CABRERETS, a tiny place which also boasts a pair of two-star hotels: the Auberge de la Sagne, 1km outside the village on the road to Pech-Merle (☎05.65.31.26.62, 📧hotel.auberge.cabrerets@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed mid-Sept to mid-May), which has a pool and a good restaurant (evening only; menus €15 & €23); and the riverside Les Grottes (☎05.65.31.27.02, 🌐www.hoteldesgrottes.com; 📍; closed Nov–Easter), also with a decent restaurant attached (menus from €11.50).

The valley of the Aveyron

Thirty-seven kilometres south of Figeac, Villefranche-de-Rouergue lies on a bend in the River Aveyron, clustered around its perfectly preserved, arcaded market square. From Villefranche the Aveyron flows south through increasingly deep, thickly wooded valleys, past the hilltop village of Najac and then turns abruptly west as it enters the Gorges de l'Aveyron. The most impressive stretch of this defile begins not far east of St-Antonin-de-Noble-Val, an ancient village caught between soaring limestone cliffs, and continues downstream to the villages of Penne and Bruniquel, perched beside their crumbling castles. Bruniquel marks the end of the gorges, as you suddenly break out into flat alluvial plains where the Aveyron joins the great rivers of the Tarn and Garonne.

Villefranche-de-Rouergue

No medieval junketing, not a craft shop in sight, VILLEFRANCHE-DE-ROUERGUE must be as close as you can get to what a French provincial town used to be like, though it is now starting to feature on more tourists' itineraries. It's a small town, lying on a bend in the Aveyron, 35km due south of Figeac and 61km east of Cahors across the Causse de Limogne. Built as a bastide by Alphonse de Poitiers in 1252 as part of the royal policy of extending control over the recalcitrant lands of the south, the town became rich on copper from the surrounding mines and its privilege of minting coins. From the fifteenth to the eighteenth centuries, its wealthy men built the magnificent houses that grace the cobbled streets to this day.

Rue du Sergent-Bories and rue de la République, the main commercial street, are both very attractive, but they are no preparation for place Notre-Dame, the loveliest bastide central square in the region. It's built on a slope, so the uphill houses are much higher than the downhill, and you enter at the corners underneath the buildings. All the houses are arcaded at ground-floor level, providing for a market (Thurs morning) where local merchants and farmers spread out their weekly produce – the quintessential Villefranche experience. The houses are unusually tall and some are very elaborately decorated, notably the so-called Maison du Président Raynal on the lower side at the top of rue de la République.

The east side of the square is dominated by the church of Notre-Dame with its colossal porch and bell tower, nearly 60m high. The interior has some fine late fifteenth-century stained glass, carved choir stalls and misericords.

On the boulevard that forms the northern limit of the old town, the seventeenth-century Chapelle des Pénitents-Noirs (July–Sept daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3.50) boasts a splendidly Baroque painted ceiling and an enormous gilded retable. Another ecclesiastical building worth the slight detour is the Chartreuse St-Sauveur (same hours; €3.50), about 1km out of town on the Gaillac road. It was completed in the space of ten years from 1450, giving it a singular architectural harmony, and has a very beautiful cloister and choir stalls by the same master as Notre-Dame in Villefranche, which, by contrast, took nearly 300 years to complete.

Aside from the pleasing details of many of the houses you notice as you explore the side streets, the town reserves one other most unexpected surprise. The Médiathèque, on rue Sénéchal, includes an amazing collection of jazz records, books, papers, recordings and documents belonging to the late Hugues Panassié, famous French jazz critic and one of the founders of the Hot Club de France. Much of the material is unrecorded or unobtainable elsewhere; if you ring ahead (☎05.65.81.27.36) you can peruse it and get some expert insights from the current curator.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is located a couple of minutes' walk south across the Aveyron from the old town. For information about buses, contact the tourist office just north of the river on promenade du Guiraudet (May–June & Sept Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–7pm, Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug also open Sun 10am–12.30pm; Oct–April Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 9am–noon; ☎05.65.45.13.18, 🌐www.villefranche.com), beside the bridge. They also lay on guided tours of the town in summer, and can provide you with an audio-guide out of season.

The best hotels in town are L'Univers, 2 place de la République at the end of the bridge opposite the tourist office (☎05.65.45.15.63, 📧univerhotelbourdy@wanadoo.fr; 📍; restaurant from €16), which has slightly dated but classically French decor, complete with acquired-taste wallpaper; and, nearby, the more modest Bellevue, 3 av du Ségala (☎05.65.45.23.17, ☎05.65.45.11.19; 📍; closed school hols in Feb & Nov, also Sun & Mon out of season), with a highly rated restaurant (menus €14–32). In a rather unpromising location, 3km out on the Figeac road, Le Relais de Farrou (☎05.65.45.18.11, 🌐www.relaisdefarrou.com; 3–4; restaurant from €15) offers more luxurious surroundings and good food. For cheaper accommodation, there's an excellent Foyer de Jeunes Travailleurs HI hostel (☎05.65.45.09.68, 📧fjt.villefranche@wanadoo.fr), next to the gare SNCF. There's also a gîte d'étape by the river at La Gasse (☎05.65.45.10.80; closed Nov–April), 3km out of town on the D269 back road to La Bastide-L'Évêque, at the start of GR62b, plus a campsite, the Camping du Rouergue (☎05.65.45.16.24, 🌐www.villefranche.com/camping; mid-April to Sept), 1.5km to the south on the D47 to Monteil.

For eating, the Globe, a bustling modern brasserie across the river from the tourist office, has a good range of dishes from around €8–10. For more refined cuisine, try L'Epicurien (☎05.65.45.01.12; menus €14–37), avenue Raymond-St-Gilles opposite the Bellevue, which is highly praised by the locals.

9

Najac

NAJAC occupies an extraordinary site on a conical hill isolated in a wide bend in the deep valley of the Aveyron, 25km south of Villefranche-de-Rouergue and on the Aurillac–Toulouse train line. Its photogenic castle, which graces many a travel poster, sits right on the peak of the hill, while the half-timbered and stone-tiled village houses tail out in a single street along the narrow back of the spur that joins the hill to the valley side.

The château (April, May & Sept daily 10am–12.30pm & 3–5.30pm; June daily 10am–12.30pm & 3–6.30pm; July & Aug daily 10am–1pm & 3–7pm; Oct Sun only 10am–12.30pm & 3–5.30pm; last entry 30min before closing; €4) is a model of medieval defensive architecture and was endlessly fought over because of its commanding and impregnable position in a region once rich in silver and copper mines. You can clearly see all the devices for restricting an attacker once he was inside the castle: the covered passages and stairs within the thickness of the walls, the multistorey positions for archers and, of course, the most magnificent all-round view from the top of the keep. In one of the chambers of the keep you can see the stone portraits of St Louis, king of France, his brother Alphonse de Poitiers and Jeanne, the daughter of the count of Toulouse, whose marriage to Alphonse was arranged in 1229 to end the Cathar wars by bringing the domains of Count Raymond and his allies under royal control. It was Alphonse who “modernized” the castle and made the place we see today – a fine model in one of the turrets shows his fortifications as they were in the castle's prime in 1253. Signatures of the masons who worked here are clearly visible on many stones.

Below the rather dull central square stretches the faubourg, a sort of elongated square bordered by houses raised on pillars as in the central square of a bastide, which reduces to a narrow waist of a street overlooked by more ancient houses and leading past a fountain to the castle gate. At the foot of the castle, in the centre of what was the medieval village, stands the very solid-looking church of St-Jean (daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; free), which the villagers of Najac were forced by the Inquisition to build at their own expense in 1258 as a punishment for their conversion to Catharism. In addition to a collection of reliquaries and an extraordinary iron cage for holding candles, the church has one architectural oddity: its windows are solid panels of stone from which the lights have been cut out in trefoil form. Below the church, by a derelict farm, a surviving stretch of Roman road leads downhill to where a thirteenth-century bridge spans the Aveyron.

The tourist office is on the faubourg (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2.30–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6.30pm, Sun 10am–noon; Oct–March Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2.30–6pm, Sat 9am–noon; ☎05.65.29.72.05). At the eastern entrance to the faubourg, you’ll find a very comfortable hotel, L’Oustal del Barry (☎05.65.29.74.32, 🌐www.oustaldelbarry.com; 📍; closed mid–Nov to March), whose restaurant is renowned for its subtle and inventive cuisine (closed Mon & Tues lunch except July & Aug; menus €15–40). Below Najac is a four-star campsite, Le Pâisserou (☎05.65.29.73.96, or 02.40.82.41.48 off season, ✉cledelles.najac@wanadoo.fr; April–Sept), with a gîte d’étape (same contact details; open all year).

St-Antonin-Noble-Val

One of the finest and most substantial towns in the valley is ST-ANTONIN-NOBLE-VAL, 30km southwest of Najac. It sits on the bank of the Aveyron beneath the beetling cliffs of the Roc d’Anglars, and has endured all the vicissitudes of the old towns of the southwest: it went Cathar, then Protestant and each time was walloped by the alien power of the kings from the north. Yet, in spite of all this, it recovered its prosperity, manufacturing cloth and leather goods, endowed by its wealthy merchants with a marvellous heritage of medieval houses in all the streets leading out from the lovely place de la Halle.

There’s a café most conveniently and picturesquely placed next to the ancient halle, with a view of the town’s finest building, the Maison des Consuls, whose origins go back to 1120. It now houses the town museum, Musée du Vieux St-Antonin (July & Aug daily except Tues 10am–1pm & 3–6pm; Sept–June apply to the tourist office; €2.50), with collections of objects to do with the former life of the place, as well as a section on local prehistoric sites.

The tourist office is in the “new” town hall next to the church (Jan & Feb Mon–Sat 2–5pm; March–June, Sept & Oct daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; July & Aug daily 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; Nov & Dec Tues–Sat 10am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; ☎05.63.30.63.47, 🌐www.saint-antonin-noble-val.com), and will supply information about B&Bs, canoeing on the Aveyron and walks in the region. The only hotel in the village is the newly renovated Du Commerce, at 58 av Paul-Benet (☎05.63.30.62.25; 📍) with five simple rooms and a bar, while the closest of several camping options is the municipal site 500m from the centre (☎05.63.28.21.13; May–Sept).

Penne and Bruniquel

Twenty kilometres downstream of St-Antonin you come to the beautiful ridge-top village of PENNE, once a Cathar stronghold, with its ruined castle impossibly perched on an airy crag. Everything is old and leaning and bulging, but holding together nonetheless, with a harmony that would be impossible to create purposely.

BRNIQUEL, a few kilometres further on, is another hilltop village clustered round its castle (daily: April–June, Sept & Oct 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; €2.50, or €3.50 including guided visit; 🌐www.bruniquel.org). You can also visit a handsome house in the village, the aristocratic Maison des Comtes de Payrol (April–Oct daily 10am–6pm; €3). If you want to stay, Marc de Badouin runs a good chambre d’hôte to the right of the church (☎05.63.67.26.16, 🌐www.chambres-bruniquel.fr; 📍; meals around €20); he’s also a keen mountain-biker and can advise on local trails and footpaths. There’s also a small two-star campsite, Le Payssel (☎05.63.67.25.95, ✉ju2@free.fr; June–Sept), about 700m south on the D964 to Albi.

Montauban and around

MONTAUBAN today is a prosperous middle-sized provincial city, capital of the largely agricultural département of Tarn-et-Garonne. It lies on the banks of the River Tarn, 53km from Toulouse, close to its junction with the Aveyron and their joint confluence with the Garonne. It is also, conveniently, right on the main road and railway between Toulouse and Bordeaux.

The city's history goes back to 1144, when the count of Toulouse decided to create a bastide here as a bulwark against English and French royal power. In fact, it's generally regarded as the first bastide, the model for those rationally laid-out medieval new towns, and that plan is still clearly evident in the beautiful town centre.

Montauban has enjoyed various periods of great prosperity, as one can guess from the proliferation of fine town houses. The first followed the suppression of the Cathar heresy and the final submission of the counts of Toulouse in 1229, and was greatly enhanced by the building of the Pont-Vieux in 1335, making it the best crossing-point on the Tarn for miles around. The Hundred Years War did its share of damage, as did Montauban's opting for the Protestant cause in the Wars of Religion, but by the time of the Revolution it had become once more one of the richest cities in the southwest, particularly successful in the manufacture of cloth.

Arrival, information and accommodation

At Montauban's centre lies the exquisite place Nationale, with the cathedral five minutes' walk to the south on the unattractive place Roosevelt (where, if driving, you'll find the most convenient parking). From here, rue de l'Hôtel-de-Ville leads directly to the Pont-Vieux and across the river to avenue de Mayenne, at the end of which is the gare SNCF. There's no central gare routière, so you'll need to ask for bus information at the tourist office, on the northern corner of boulevard Midi-Pyrénées (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–6.30pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; ☎05.63.63.60.60, 🌐www.montauban-tourisme.com). Internet access is available at Difintel Micro, 4 rue de la République, and car rental near the station at Europcar, 21 rue Salengro (☎05.63.20.29.00).

Montauban has a limited choice of hotels. The best deal is the attractive Du Commerce, 9 place Roosevelt (☎05.63.66.31.32, 🌐www.hotel-commerce-montauban.com; 📍), near the cathedral. Meanwhile the Mercure, opposite at 12 rue Notre-Dame (☎05.63.63.17.23, 🌐www.mercure.com; 📍; restaurant from €14), offers larger rooms and greater comfort, but has less character. A cheaper stay is possible out by the station at the dingy but adequate Le Lion d'Or (☎05.63.20.04.04, ☎05.63.66.77.39; closed July; 📍), which has especially cheap single rooms, and a surprisingly decent restaurant (closed weekends; menus from €13.50).

The Town

Montauban couldn't be easier to find your way around. The greatest delight is simply to wander the streets of the city centre, with their lovely pink brick houses; the town is only a ten- or fifteen-minute stroll from end to end. The visitable part is the small kernel of central streets based on the original bastide, and is enclosed within an inner ring of boulevards between boulevard Midi-Pyrénées on the east and the river on the west. The finest point of all is the place Nationale, rebuilt after a fire in the seventeenth century and surrounded on all sides by exquisite double-vaulted arcades with the octagonal belfry of St-Jacques showing above the western rooftops.

The adjacent place du Coq on rue de la République is also pretty, and if you follow the street down it brings you out by the church of St-Jacques (first built in the thirteenth century on the pilgrim route to Compostela) and the end of the Pont-Vieux with a wide view of the river. At the near end of the bridge, the former bishop's residence is a massive half-palace, half-fortress, begun by the Black Prince in 1363 but never finished because the English lost control of the town. It's now the Musée Ingres (July & Aug daily 10am–6pm; Sept–June Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; €6), so called because it houses drawings and paintings that artist Jean-Auguste-Dominique Ingres, a native of Montauban, left to the city on his death. It's a collection the city is very proud of, though his supremely realistic, luminous portraits won't be to everyone's taste. The museum also contains a substantial collection of sculptures by another native, Émile-Antoine Bourdelle, and hosts special exhibitions every summer.

The Cathédrale Notre-Dame, ten minutes' walk up rue de l'Hôtel-de-Ville, is a cold fish: an austere and unsympathetic building erected just before 1700 as part of the triumphalist campaign to reassert the glories of the Catholic faith after the cruel defeat and repression of the Protestants. Apart from being a rare example of a French cathedral built in the classical style, its most interesting features are the statues of the four evangelists which triumphantly adorn the facade. Those on show now are recent copies, but the weather-beaten originals can be seen just inside.

Eating and drinking

The place Nationale is the hub of all Montauban's evening life, but there are many good possibilities in the streets nearby.

Restaurants and bars

Bistro du Faubourg 111 faubourg Lacapelle
☎ 05.63.63.49.89. An excellent-value, old-fashioned place with lunch menus from €12. Closed Sat & Sun.

Brasserie des Arts 4 place Nationale
☎ 05.63.20.20.90. One of the best spots on the central square. Tables are out under the colonnades and plats du jour are around €7.50, as are various pizza and pasta dishes.

Le Couvert des Drapiers 27 place Nationale
☎ 05.63.92.91.03. Great location, offering standard brasserie fare, with well-priced omelettes, large salads and an evening menu for €18. Closed Mon eve.

Le Flamand 8 rue de la République. With over 80 bottled beers and a long list of cocktails, there should be something to suit everybody's palate here. There's also a brasserie at lunch and dinner. Closed Sun.

Le Raymond 5 place Maréchal-Foch. A popular place to eat at lunchtime, with decent portions for €6. Come the evening, though, the food stops and there's music until 2am.

Le Santa Maria 2 square Léon-Bourjade
☎ 05.63.91.99.09. Owned by a former

Russian rugby captain, this is a truly multicultural place. While specializing in their house paella and Mexican tapas, they also have an astonishing selection of vodkas. There's a great atmosphere, with Latino tunes until 2am, when the nightclub opens downstairs. Closed Sun & Mon.

Les Saveurs d'Ingres 13 rue de l'Hôtel de Ville
☎ 05.63.91.26.42. A small, simple interior masks the highly sophisticated dishes on offer, like salmon smoked over vine clippings. Menus €23–45, closed Sun & Mon.

Le Ventadour 23 quai Villebourbon
☎ 05.63.63.34.58. Magnificently sited in an old house on the riverbank, the ceiling is vaulted with the same pink brick as the Pont-Vieux outside. The food is good too, with pigeon and lobster on offer, as well as the ubiquitous duck. Closed Sat lunch, Sun & Mon.

Lauzerte

As you head north from Montauban towards Cahors, leaving the wide flat valleys of the Tarn and Garonne behind you, the land rises gradually to gently undulating country, green and woody, cut obliquely by parallel valleys running down to meet the Garonne and planted with vines and sunflowers, maize, and apple and plum orchards. It's a very soft landscape, and villages are small and widely scattered. The pace of life seems about equal with that of a turning sunflower.

Should you find yourself taking this route, then the place to make a halt is LAUZERTE, one of Raymond of Toulouse's bastides and once of great military importance as it commanded the road to Cahors. The town is short on sights, but there are some old houses, a pretty arcaded central square and a good Baroque altarpiece in the church, as well as views of the countryside round about.

You'll find a very pleasant hotel at the entrance to the village: Le Quercy (☎05.63.94.66.36, ☎05.63.39.06.56; 📍; closed Sun eve & Mon), which also serves superb food, with lunch menus from €10.50 and dinner from €25. There's also a campsite nearby, Le Melvin (☎ & ☎05.63.94.75.60; May–Oct), and a gîte d'étape in the village for walkers on the GR65 (☎05.63.94.61.94, 📧lauzerte.tourisme@quercy-blanc.net; open March–Oct).

Moissac

There's nothing very memorable about the modern town of MOISSAC, 30km northwest of Montauban, largely because of the terrible damage done by the flood of March 1930, when the Tarn, swollen by a sudden thaw in the Massif Central, burst its banks, destroying 617 houses and killing 120 people.

Luckily, the one thing that makes Moissac a household name in the history of art survived: the cloister and porch of the abbey church of St-Pierre, a masterpiece of Romanesque sculpture and the model for hundreds of churches and buildings elsewhere. Indeed, the fact that it has survived countless wars, including siege and sack by Simon de Montfort senior in 1212 during the crusade against the Cathars, is something of a miracle. During the Revolution it was used as a gunpowder factory and billet for soldiers, who damaged many of the sculptures. In the 1830s it only escaped demolition to make way for the Bordeaux–Toulouse train line by a whisker.

△ Cloister, abbey church of St-Pierre, Moissac

Legend has it that Clovis the Frank first founded a monastery here, though it seems more probable that its origins belong a hundred years or so later in the seventh century, which saw the foundation of so many monasteries throughout Aquitaine. The first Romanesque church on the site was consecrated in 1063 and enlarged in the following century. The famous south porch, with its magnificent tympanum and curious wavy door jambs and pillars, dates from this second phase of building, and its influence can be seen in the decoration of porches on countless churches across the south of France. It depicts Christ in Majesty, right hand raised in benediction, the Book of Life in his hand, surrounded by the evangelists and the elders of the Apocalypse as described by St John in the Book of Revelation. There's more fine carving in the capitals inside the porch, and the interior of the church, which was remodelled in the fifteenth century, is interesting too, especially for some of the wood and stone statuary it contains.

The adjoining cloister (same hours as tourist office – see below; €5) is entered through the tourist office, and is most peaceful first thing in the morning. The cloister surrounds a garden shaded by a majestic cedar, and its pantile roof is supported by 76 alternating single and double marble columns. Each column supports a single inverted wedge-shaped block of stone, on which are carved with extraordinary delicacy all manner of animals and plant motifs, as well as scenes from Bible stories and the lives of the saints. An inscription on the middle pillar on the west side explains that the cloister was made in the time of Abbot Ansqitil in the year of Our Lord 1100.

Practicalities

The tourist office (April–June, Sept & Oct Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Nov–March Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 2–5pm, Sat & Sun 2–5pm; ☎05.63.04.01.85, 🌐www.moissac.fr) is next to the cloister, with the gare SNCF further west along avenue Pierre-Chabré. There's a weekend market in place des Récollets at the end of rue de la République, which leads away from the abbey, a marvel of colour and temptation.

The Moulin de Moissac (☎05.63.32.88.88, 🌐www.lemoulindemoissac.com; 🍷; restaurant from €28), occupying a former mill on the riverfront, rates as the top hotel in town; the building is large and not particularly attractive, but the interior has been beautifully refurbished. Between the river and the abbey church, Le Chapon Fin on place des Récollets (☎05.63.04.04.22, 🌐www.lechaponfin-moissac.com; 🍷) also makes a pleasant place to stay, with a stylish restaurant from €20. For campers, there's a shady site across the river on a little island, the Île du Bidounet (☎05.63.32.52.52, 📧camping-bidounet@moissac.fr; April–Sept), and for walkers a gîte d'étape at 5 sente du Calvaire (☎05.63.04.62.21, 📧accueil.cafmoissac@wanadoo.fr) on the hill above town. The nicest place to eat is the magnolia-shaded Auberge du Cloître (☎05.63.04.37.50; closed Mon & eves on Wed & Sun; menus €21–25), beside the tourist office.

Agen

AGEN, capital of the Lot-et-Garonne département, is a more pleasant town than it first appears. It was quartered by modern boulevards in the nineteenth century in its own version of a Haussmann clean-up, and it's down these roads that you're funnelled into the town, with the result that you see nothing of interest.

The town lies on the broad, powerful River Garonne halfway between Bordeaux and Toulouse, and lived through the Middle Ages racked by war with England and internecine strife between Catholics and Protestants. But it was able to extract some advantage from disputes as it seesawed between the English and French, gaining more and more privileges of independence as the price of its loyalty – a tradition that it maintained during and after the Revolution by being staunchly republican (the churches still bear the legend: Liberté, Fraternité, Égalité).

Its pre-Revolutionary wealth derived from the manufacture of various kinds of cloth and its thriving port on the Garonne, which in those days was alive with river traffic. But the Industrial Revolution put paid to all of that. Agen's prosperity now is based on agriculture – in particular, its famous prunes and plums, said to have been brought back from Syria during the Crusades.

The interesting part of Agen centres on place Goya, where boulevard de la République, leading to the river, crosses boulevard du Président-Carnot. The main shopping area is just to the south around place Wilson and rue Garonne, a left turn at the end of which brings you to the wide place du Dr-Esquirol and an exuberant fin-de-siècle municipal theatre; opposite this is the Musée Municipal des Beaux-Arts (daily except Tues: May–Sept 10am–6pm; Oct–March 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; €3.80), magnificently housed in four adjacent sixteenth- and seventeenth-century mansions. The collections include a rich variety of archeological finds, Roman and medieval, and some fine paintings – among them five Goyas and a Tintoretto rediscovered in the museum basement during an inventory in 1997. Not far from the museum, in place du Bourg at the end of rue des Droits-de-l'Homme, the cute little thirteenth-century church of Notre-Dame is also worth a look.

South of the theatre, rue Beauville, with heavily restored but beautiful medieval houses, leads to rue Richard-Coeur-de-Lion and the Église des Jacobins. The barn-like interior of this big, brick Dominican church of the thirteenth century, is divided by a single centre row of pillars, very like its counterpart in Toulouse; the deconsecrated church is now an annexe of the Musée des Beaux-Arts and hosts temporary exhibitions. Beyond lie the river and the public gardens of Le Gravier, where a market is held every Saturday morning; there's a footbridge across the Garonne, from where you can see a canal bridge dating from 1839 further downstream.

Opposite place Wilson on the north side of boulevard de la République, the arcaded rue Cornières leads through to the Cathédrale St-Caprais, somewhat misshapen but with a finely proportioned Romanesque apse and radiating chapels still surviving. There's a piece of the original fortifications still showing in rue des Augustins close by – the Tour du Chapelet – dating from around 1100. Again nearby, in rue du Puits-du-Saumon, is one of the finest houses in town, the fourteenth-century Maison du Sénéchal, with an elaborate open loggia on the first floor.

Practicalities

From the central place Goya, boulevard du Président-Carnot leads to the gares SNCF and routière. The tourist office is at 107 bd Carnot (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; ☎05.53.47.36.09, 🌐www.ot-agen.org).

There are several reasonable hotel options in Agen. Best value, though a bit out of the way, is Des Îles (☎05.53.47.11.33, ☎05.53.66.19.25; 📍) at 25 rue Baudin, with nicely furnished a/c rooms. More central is the friendly, simple and spotless Des Ambans, 59 rue des Ambans (☎05.53.66.28.60, ☎05.53.87.94.01; 📍), near place Goya. A more comfortable alternative, Le Provence, 22 cours du 14-Juillet (☎05.53.47.39.11, 🌐www.hotel-leprovence.com; 📍) has individually and attractively decorated rooms, but for four-star luxury and buckets of atmosphere, head for the Château des Jacobins, in an elegant nineteenth-century town house beside the Jacobins church (☎05.53.47.03.31, 🌐www.chateaudes-jacobins.com; 📍).

As far as restaurants are concerned, 🍴 L'Atelier, 14 rue du Jeu-de-Paume (☎05.53.87.89.22; closed Sat & Sun; menus €20–28), is the place to go for home cooking with local produce and a friendly atmosphere, though Les Mignardises, 40 rue Camille-Desmoulins (closed Sat lunch, Sun eve & Mon), is good value at lunchtime, with menus from €11.50. More formal is the excellent Mariottat, 25 rue Louis-Vivent to the south of the Jacobins church, in a nice stately house and garden (☎05.53.77.99.77; closed Sun eve, Mon & lunch Sat; menus €25–60).

Travel details

Trains

Agen to: Belvès (2–4 daily; 1hr); Bordeaux (hourly; 1hr 10min–1hr 50min); Le Buisson (2–4 daily; 1hr 10min–1hr 40min); Les Eyzies (2–4 daily; 1hr 40min); Moissac (6 daily; 25min); Monsempron-Libos (6–8 daily; 40min); Montauban (12 daily; 40–50min); Périgueux (2–4 daily; 2hr–2hr 20min); Toulouse (12 daily; 1hr–1hr 20min).

Bergerac to: Bordeaux (8–12 daily; 1hr 10min–1hr 30min); Montcaret (1–3 daily; 30–40min); St-Émilion (2–5 daily; 55min); Ste-Foy-la-Grande (7–12 daily; 20min); Sarlat (3–5 daily; 1hr–1hr 30min).

Brive to: Bordeaux (1–2 daily; 2hr 15min–2hr 45min); Cahors (6–8 daily; 1hr 10min); Figeac (4–5 daily; 1hr 15min–1hr 30min); Gourdon (6 daily; 40min); Limoges (10–15 daily; 1hr–1hr 15min); Meymac (2–6 daily; 1hr 30min); Montauban (6 daily; 1hr 50min); Paris-Austerlitz (9–14 daily; 4hr–4hr 45min); Périgueux (3–5 daily; 50min–1hr); Pompadour (3 daily; 35 min); Rocamadour-Padirac (3–5 daily; 40–50min); Souillac (6–8 daily; 25min); Toulouse (5–8 daily; 2hr–2hr 30min); Uzerche (6–8 daily; 30–45min); Villefranche-de-Rouergue (1 daily; 2hr–2hr 20min).

Cahors to: Brive (8 daily; 1hr–1hr 10min); Montauban (8–10 daily; 45min); Toulouse (6–8 daily; 1hr–1hr 20min).

Figeac to: Brive (5–6 daily; 1hr 30min); Najac (4–5 daily; 1hr); Rodez (4–6 daily; 1hr 20min–2hr); Toulouse (5–7 daily; 2hr 30min); Villefranche-de-Rouergue (6 daily; 40min).

Limoges to: Angoulême (6–8 daily; 2hr); Bordeaux (4 daily; 2hr 30min); Brive (10–15 daily; 1hr–1hr 50min); Eymoutiers (4–7 daily; 45min); Meymac (3–6 daily; 1hr 40min); Nexon (10 daily; 15min); Paris-Austerlitz (10–14 daily; 3hr–3hr 30min); Périgueux (8–15 daily; 1hr–1hr 20min); Poitiers (3–5 daily; 2hr); Pompadour (1–2 daily; 1hr 10min); St-Junien (3–10 daily; 40min); St-Léonard (3–4 daily; 20min); Solignac-Le Vigen (1–3 daily; 10min); Thiviers (6–10 daily; 40–50min); Ussel (3–6 daily; 1hr 35min–2hr).

Montauban to: Agen (10–15 daily; 40–50min); Bordeaux (hourly; 1hr 30min–2hr); Moissac (2–8 daily; 20min); Toulouse (1–2 hourly; 25–35min).

Périgueux to: Agen (2–5 daily; 2hr–2hr 20min); Belvès (2–4 daily; 1hr–1hr 20min); Bordeaux (8–13 daily; 1hr–1hr 40min); Brive (3–6 daily; 50min–1hr); Le Buisson (2–6 daily; 50min); Les Eyzies

(2–6 daily; 35min); Limoges (8–10 daily; 1hr–1hr 30min); Monsempron-Libos (2–4 daily; 1hr 30min).
Sarlat to: Bergerac (4–7 daily; 1hr–1hr 30min); Bordeaux (3–6 daily; 2hr 15min); Le Buisson (4–7 daily; 30–40min); Ste-Foy-la-Grande (4–6 daily; 1hr 20min–1hr 50min).

Buses

Agen to: Auch (6–8 daily; 1hr 20min); Condom (3 daily Mon–Sat; 45min); Villeneuve-sur-Lot (5–10 daily; 45min).

Argentat to: Beaulieu-sur-Dordogne (July & Aug Mon–Sat 3 daily; 1hr 20min); Tulle (1–3 daily; 40min).

Bergerac to: Marmande (Mon–Sat 1 daily; 2hr); Villeneuve-sur-Lot (Mon–Fri 1–2 daily; 1hr 15min).

Brive to: Argentat (Mon–Sat 2–4 daily; 1hr 40min); Arnac-Pompadour (Mon–Sat 1–2 daily; 2hr); Collonges-la-Rouge (Mon–Sat 2–4 daily; 30min); Meyssac (Mon–Sat 1–4 daily; 35min); Montignac (school term Mon–Sat 1–2 daily; 1hr 30min); Sarlat (school term Mon–Sat 1 daily; 1hr 50min); Tulle (Mon–Sat 1–4 daily; 50min); Turenne (Mon–Fri 1–2 daily; 20min); Uzerche (Mon–Sat 2–4 daily; 1hr 10min–1hr 30min); Vayrac (Mon–Sat 1–2 daily; 45min).

Cahors to: Cajarc (2–6 daily; 1hr); Figeac (2–6 daily; 1hr 35min); Fumel (5–6 daily; 1hr 10min); Luzech (6 daily; 20min); Monsempron-Libos (4–6 daily; 1hr 20min); Puy-l'Évêque (4–6 daily; 45min); Tour-de-Faure (4–6 daily; 35mins).

Limoges to: Aubusson (1–3 daily; 1hr 40min); Châlus (Mon–Sat 1–2 daily; 1hr); Nexon (Mon–Sat 1–3 daily; 50min); Oradour-sur-Glane (Mon–Sat 2–5 daily; 30–40min); Rochechouart (July & Aug only, Mon–Sat 2–4 daily; 1hr 10min); St-Junien (Mon–Sat 1–4 daily; 1hr); St-Léonard (3–4 daily; 35min); Solignac (Mon–Sat 1 daily; 30min); Le Vigen (Mon–Sat 2–3 daily; 20–30min).

Périgueux to: Angoulême (Mon, Wed, Fri & Sun 1–2 daily; 1hr 45min); Bergerac (Mon–Fri 3–5 daily; 1hr–1hr 30min); Brantôme (Mon, Wed, Fri & Sun 1–2 daily; 40min); Ribérac (Mon–Fri 3–5 daily; 1hr).

Souillac to: Martel (1–3 daily; 20min); Sarlat (2–3 daily; 50min).

The Pyrenees

- * Cesta punta This variant of the Basque region's favourite sport of pelota is the fastest ball-game in the world. See it most reliably in St-Jean-de-Luz. See pp.759 & 767
- * Surfing the Côte Basque Catch a wave at Biarritz or Anglet, Europe's top destination for both boogie-boarders and classic surfers. See pp.764 & 767
- * Cauterets Several lake-spangled valleys above this agreeable spa offer superb trekking, whether modest day-loops or more ambitious multi-day traverses. See p.797
- * The Cirque de Gavarnie A vast alpine amphitheatre with wind-blown cascades and traces of glacier, best enjoyed off-peak when the crowds subside. See p.801
- * Niaux cave The upper Ariège valley hosts a cluster of prehistoric caves painted by Cro-Magnon humans over 10,000 years ago; Niaux contains the best preserved and most vivid of these images. See p.811
- * Cathar castles The imposing castles of the upper Aude and Corbières region testify to southwestern Languedoc's era of independence. See p.821
- * Petit Train Jaune Travel up the dramatic, winding Têt valley of Roussillon in an open-car, narrow-gauge train. See p.836

△ Niaux cave

The Pyrenees

Basque-speaking, wet and green in the west; craggy, snowy, Gascon-influenced in the middle; dry, Mediterranean and Catalan-speaking in the east – the Pyrenees are physically beautiful, culturally varied and considerably less developed than the Alps. The whole range is marvellous walkers' country, especially the central region around the Parc National des Pyrénées, with its 3000-metre-high peaks, streams, forests and wildlife. If you're a committed hiker, it's possible to traverse these mountains, usually from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean, along the GR10 or the higher, more difficult Haute Randonnée Pyrénéenne (HRP). There are numerous alpine spa resorts as well – Cauterets, Luz-St-Sauveur, Barèges, Ax-les-Thermes – with shorter hikes to suit all temperaments and abilities, as well as skiing opportunities in winter.

As for the more conventional of the tourist attractions, the Côte Basque is lovely, sandy but very popular, suffering from seaside sprawl and a surfeit of caravan-colonized campsites. St-Jean-de-Luz is arguably the prettiest of the resorts, while once-elitist Biarritz is now enjoying a renaissance. Bayonne, just inland, is an attractive, if heavily touristed medieval town at the confluence of two broad rivers. The foothill towns are on the whole rather dull, although Pau merits at least a day, while Lourdes is such a monster of kitsch that it just has to be seen. Catalan-speaking Roussillon in the east, focused on busy Perpignan, has beaches every bit as popular as those of the Côte Basque, nestled into the compact coves of its rocky coast, while its interior consists of craggy terrain split by spectacular canyons, sprouting a crop of fine Romanesque abbeys – of which St-Michel-de-Cuixà, St-Martin-de-Canigou and Serrabona are the most dramatic – and a landscape bathed in Mediterranean heat and light. Finally, the sun-drenched foothills just to the northwest are home to the famous Cathar castles, legacies of the once-independent and ever-rebellious inhabitants of southwestern Languedoc.

Hiking in the Pyrenees

There are plenty of walkers' guidebooks to the area in both French and English (see p.1337), and two series of widely available maps. The most detailed of the latter are the French IGN 1:25,000 "TOP 25" series (www.ign.fr); #1547OT, #1647ET, #1647OT, #1748ET and #1748OT cover the Parc National des Pyrénées, whilst #1848OT covers the ever-popular Luchon area. Less demanding walkers can make do with Rando Éditions' Cartes de Randonnées, which covers the range at 1:50,000 in eleven sheets numbered from west to east (though #9 is out of print).

The walking season usually lasts from mid-June until late September; earlier in the year, few staffed refuges function, and you'll often find snow on parts of the GR10 (let alone the HRP) until early July. Remember that these are big mountains to be treated with respect: tackling any of the main walks means proper preparation and equipment. Before taking to the peaks, check weather forecasts – always posted at the local tourist office – and be properly equipped and provisioned. Above all, don't take chances: mountain conditions change very quickly, and sunny, warm weather in the valley doesn't necessarily mean it will be the same higher up, three hours later. If you don't have any mountain-walking experience, it's probably best not to embark on anything other than a well-frequented path unless you're accompanied by someone who does.

One kilometre in twelve minutes (5kph) is a rather brisk average walking pace for level ground; if you're going uphill, allow an hour for every 350m in elevation gained. If you're out of condition, or have a heavy pack, the same climb will take longer. Much terrain is so steep, and trail surface so uneven, that going downhill isn't any faster. Be mindful of the punishment your knees will take – bring or buy locally telescopic walking poles or a traditional walking stick.

The Pays Basque

The three Basque provinces – Labourd (Lapurdi), Basse Navarre (Behe Nafarroa) and Soule (Zuberoa) – share with their Spanish neighbours a common language – Euskera – and a strong sense of separate identity. The language is widely spoken, and Basques refer to their country as Euskal-herri (or, across the border in Spain, Euskadi). You'll see bilingual French/Euskera signage and events posters throughout the region (sometimes only in Euskera), so in this section we have given the Euskera for all locations in brackets after the French. Unlike some of their Spanish counterparts, few French Basques favour an independent state or secession from France, though a Basque département has been mooted (see below). For decades the French authorities turned a blind eye to the Spanish Basque terrorist organization ETA, which used the region as a safe haven and organizational base. Since the millennium, however, as France has extradited suspected terrorists to Spain, incidents of violence and vandalism associated with nationalists have increased, notably around Bayonne and Pau. Such events, however, are so exceptional as to not concern visitors.

Administratively, the three French Basque provinces were organized together with the county of Béarn in the single département of Basses-Pyrénées (now Pyrénées-Atlantiques) at the time of the 1789 Revolution, when the Basques' thousand-year-old fors (customary privileges) were abolished. It was a move designed to curtail their nationalism, but ironically has probably been responsible for preserving their unity. Of late there have been proposals for the creation of a Pays-Basque département, hived off from the Pyrénées-Atlantiques, with its capital at Bayonne – a notion greeted with horror in the capital of such a centralized nation, but not so inconceivable now in an EU that gives increasing power to regions.

Apart from the language and the traditional broad beret, the most obvious manifestations of Basque national identity are the ubiquitous trinquets (enclosed) or frontons (open), the huge concrete courts in which the national game of

The food of the Basque Country

Although Basque cooking shares many of the dishes of the southwest and the central Pyrenees – in particular garbure, a thick potato, carrot, bean, cabbage and turnip soup enlivened with pieces of pork, ham or duck – it does have some distinctive recipes of its own. One of the best known is the Basque omelette, pipérade, made with tomatoes, peppers and often Bayonne ham, mixed in so that it actually looks more like scrambled eggs. Another delicacy is sweet red peppers, or piquillos, stuffed whole with morue (cod). Poulet basquaise is also common, especially as takeaway food at a traiteur: pieces of chicken browned in pork fat and casserole in a sauce of tomato, ground Espelette chillis, onions and a little white wine. In season there's a chance of salmí de palombe, the wild doves netted or shot as they migrate north over the Pyrenees.

With the Atlantic adjacent, seafood is also a speciality. The Basques inevitably have their version of fish soup, called ttoro. Another great delicacy is elvers or piballes, netted as they come up the Atlantic rivers. Squid are common, served here as txiperons, either in their own ink, stuffed and baked or stewed with onion, tomato, peppers and garlic. All the locally caught fish – tuna (thon), sea bass (bor), sardines (sardines) and anchovies (anchois) – are regular favourites, too.

Cheeses mainly comprise the delicious ewe's-milk tommies and gasna from the high pastures of the Pyrenees. Among sweets, one that is on show everywhere is the gâteau basque, an almond-custard pie often garnished with preserved black cherries from Itxassou.

As for alcohol, the only Basque AOC wine is the very drinkable Irouléguy – as red, white or rosé – while the local digestif liqueur is the potent green or yellow Izzara.

pelota is played. Pairs of players wallop a hard leather-covered ball, either with their bare hands or a long basket-work extension of the hand called a chistera (in the variation known as cesta punta), against a high wall blocking one end of the court. It's extraordinarily dangerous – the ball travels at speeds of up to 200kph – and knockouts or worse are not uncommon. Trials of strength (force Basque), rather like Scottish Highland games, are also popular, including tugs-of-war, lifting heavy weights, turning massive carts and sawing or axing giant tree trunks.

The Côte Basque

Barely 30km long from the Spanish frontier to the mouth of the Adour, the Basque coast is easily accessible by air, bus and train, and reasonably priced accommodation is not difficult to find – except from mid-July through August, when space should be reserved at least six weeks in advance. Bayonne, slightly inland, is the cultural focus and only town with some life apart from tourism. Biarritz, the most prestigious and varied resort, is flanked by magnificent beaches but proves a rather noisy, congested place to stay in high season. Families manifestly prefer St-Jean-de-Luz to the south – an attractive and more manageable town in any case – or distinctly suburban Anglet just to the north, with even better beaches which attract surfers from near and far. At the border, Hendaye itself is rather dull but has another superb beach at the mouth of the Bidas(s)oa River.

Bayonne (Baïona)

BAYONNE stands back some 5km from the Atlantic, a position that until recently protected it from any real touristy exploitation. It bestrides the confluence of the River Adour, which rises in the region of the Pic du Midi d'Ossau, and the much smaller Nive, whose source is the Basque Pyrenees above St-Jean-Pied-de-Port. Although purists dispute whether it's truly a Basque rather than a Gascon city, Bayonne is effectively the economic and political capital of the Pays Basque. To the lay person, at least, its Basque flavour predominates, with tall half-timbered dwellings and woodwork painted in the specifically Basque hues of green and red. Here, too, Basques in flight from Franco's Spain came without hesitation to seek refuge amongst their own. For many years the Petit Bayonne quarter on the right bank of the Nive was a hotbed of violent Basque nationalism, until the French government clamped down on such dangerous tendencies.

The city's origins go back to the Lapurdum of Roman times; this Latin name, corrupted to Labourd (Lapurdi), was subsequently extended to cover the whole of this westernmost of the three Basque provinces. For three centuries until 1453 and the end of the Hundred Years War, it enjoyed prosperity and security under English domination, and this wealth was consolidated when, in the sixteenth century, Sephardic Jews fleeing the Portuguese Inquisition arrived, bringing their chocolate-manufacturing trade with them. The city reached the peak of its commercial success in the eighteenth century, when it was also a centre of the armaments industry (it gave its name to the bayonet). More recent economic activity has included processing of by-products from the natural gas field at Lacq near Pau, although this is approaching exhaustion, leaving Bayonne with a higher-than-national-average level of unemployment.

These issues don't immediately impinge on the visitor, however, and first impressions are likely to be favourable. It's a small-scale, easily manageable city, at the hub of all major road and rail routes from the north and east. Although there are no great sights in Bayonne, it's a pleasure to walk the narrow streets of the old town, bisected by the River Nive and still encircled by Vauban's defences. The cathedral is on the west bank in Grand Bayonne, the museums east of the river in Petit Bayonne.

Arrival and information

From the airport, buses #6 or C take you into town. The gare SNCF and gare routière for points in Béarn, Basse Navarre and Soule are next door to each other, just off place de la République on the north bank of the Adour, across the wide Pont St-Esprit from the city centre. In addition, a bus terminal in place des Basques on the Adour's south bank serves Biarritz and Anglet (though most of these lines stop at the gare SNCF too), as well as destinations in the Nive valley, such as Cambo-les-Bains and St-Jean-Pied-de-Port. The tourist office is also in place des Basques (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–6.30pm, Sat 10am–6pm; ☎05.59.46.01.46, 🌐www.bayonne-tourisme.com). All car rental outfits – for example Ada (☎05.59.50.37.10, 📧ada.bayonne@orange.fr) at 10 bis quai de Lesseps – are in the St-Esprit quarter, within sight of the gare SNCF.

Accommodation

The most agreeable budget hotels are the basic Hôtel des Basques, at the corner place Paul-Bert and rue des Lisses (☎ & 📞05.59.59.08.02; ②) and the Hôtel Monbar, at 24 rue Pannecau in Petit Bayonne (☎05.59.59.26.80; ②), both with en-suite rooms. Three-star alternatives include Best Western Le Grand Hôtel, at 21 rue Thiers (☎05.59.59.62.00, 🌐www.bw-legrandhotel.com; ④–⑦), set in a gorgeous old mansion, and the Hôtel Loustau, on place de la République (☎05.59.55.08.08, 🌐www.hotel-loustau.com; ⑤–⑦), overlooking the river beside Pont St-Esprit; both have affordable attached restaurants. Hostellers can head for the HI hostel at 19 rte des Vignes in Anglet, 6km west of town on the Biarritz road; buses #4 or C from the centre of Bayonne stop right outside.

Grand Bayonne

In Grand Bayonne, just up the avenue from the tourist office, stands the town's fourteenth-century castle (closed to the public). The oldest part, the Château-Vieux, is a genuine example of no-nonsense late-medieval fortification; a plaque on the east wall lists some of the more famous willing or unwilling guests, including the Black Prince, King Pedro the Cruel of Castile, and the notorious mercenary Bertrand de Guesclin. The Jardin Botanique (mid-April to mid-Oct daily 9am–noon & 2–6pm; free) lies just west of the château – an enormous, well-designed garden with plants labelled in French, Basque and Latin.

Just around the corner on the magnolia-shaded place Pasteur, the Cathédrale Ste-Marie (Mon–Sat 10–11.45am & 3–5.45pm, Sun 3.30–6pm), with its twin towers and steeple rising with airy grace above the houses, is best seen from across the grassy expanse of its own cloister (daily 9am–12.30pm & 2–5/6pm) on its south side. Up close, the yellowish stone reveals bad weathering, with most of the decorative detail lost. Inside, its most impressive features are the height of the nave and some sixteenth-century glass (restored in 2002), set off by the prevailing gloom. Like other southern Gothic cathedrals of the period (around 1260), it was based on more famous northern models, in this case Soissons and Reims.

The smartest, most commercial streets in town extend northeast from the cathedral: rue Thiers leading to the Hôtel de Ville, and rue de la Monnaie, leading into rue Port-Neuf, with its aromatic chocolate confiseries. South and west of the cathedral, along rue des Faures, rue d'Espagne, and other streets closest to the old walls, there's a more Iberian feel, with washing strung at the windows, ethnic restaurants and quirky bars.

Petit Bayonne and St-Esprit

East of the cathedral, the riverside quays of the Nive are the city's most picturesque focus, with sixteenth-century arcaded houses on the Petit Bayonne side, one of which at 37 quai des Corsaires contains the worthwhile Basque ethnographic museum, the Musée Basque (May–Oct Tues–Sun 10am–6.30pm, also Mon July–Aug; Nov–April Tues–Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €5.50, €9 with Musée Bonnat). Its exhibits illustrate Basque life through the centuries, and include farm implements such as solid-wheeled oxcarts and field rollers, as well as makhilak – innocent-looking carved, wooden walking sticks with a concealed steel spear tip at one end, used by pilgrims and shepherds for self-protection if need be. The seafaring gallery features a superb rudder handle carved as a sea-monster, a wood-hulled fishing boat, and a model of Bayonne's naval shipyards ca. 1805; Columbus's skipper was a Basque, as was Juan Sebastián de Elakano, who completed the first global circumnavigation in 1522.

The city's second museum, the Musée Bonnat, close by at 5 rue Jacques-Lafitte (daily except Tues & hols: May–Oct 10am–6.30pm; Nov–April 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €5.50, €9 with Musée Basque; 📍www.musee-bonnat.com;), provides an unexpected treasury of art. Thirteenth- and fourteenth-century Italian painting is well represented, as are most periods before Impressionism. Highlights include Goya's Self-Portrait and Portrait of Don Francisco de Borja, Rubens' powerful Apollo and Daphne and The Triumph of Venus, plus works by Murrillo, El Greco and Ingres. A whole gallery is devoted to high-society portraits by Léon Bonnat (1833–1922), whose personal collection formed the original core of the museum. There are also frequent temporary exhibits in the annexe at 9 rue Frédéric-Bastiat, well worth catching.

Apart from savouring the wide river skies, there is little to draw you to the northern bank of the Adour. A deliberately inconspicuous, early nineteenth-century synagogue at 33 rue Maubec serves as a reminder that Bayonne's Jewish community first settled here in France on arrival from Portugal during the sixteenth century. St-Esprit in effect became their ghetto after an expulsion order in 1602, when Grand Bayonne was consecrated to the Virgin and off-limits to unbelievers. The church of St-Esprit, opposite the station, is all that remains of a hostel that once ministered to the sore feet and other ailments of Chemin de St-Jacques pilgrims – it's worth a peek inside for a fine fifteenth-century wood sculpture of The Flight into Egypt. Just above the station is Vauban's massive citadelle; built in 1680 to defend the town against Spanish attack, it actually saw little action until the Napoleonic wars, when its garrison resisted a siege by Wellington for four months in 1813 before falling the next year.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

The best area for eating and drinking is along the Nive quays between Pont Marengo and Pont Pannecau and in the backstreets to either side of the river, especially in Petit Bayonne or the area south and west of the halles. Two of the best restaurants in Petit Bayonne are the seafood-strong, Michelin-starred Auberge du Cheval Blanc, 68 rue Bourg-Neuf (☎05.59.59.01.33; closed Sun eve & Mon except Aug; weekday lunch menu €35, but assume €90 expenditure; booking essential), and La Table de Joël, 28 quai Galuperie (closed Mon lunch & Sun; menu €17, à la carte €28–32), serving mostly meat but a few monkfish and cod dishes, plus creative desserts, at a riverside terrace. In Grand Bayonne, Le Chistera, 42 rue Port-Neuf (closed Mon, part May & Tues & Wed eves except July & Aug; menu €15, à la carte €19–25), is with its pelota decor a worthy option, dishing up hearty Bayonnais specialities based on fish, pork and tripe, best ordered off the daily-specials board.

For bar snacks, head for 🍸 Bar du Marché, 39 rue des Basques in Grand Bayonne (closed all eves & all Sun), decorated with posters for the San Fermín bull-running at Pamplona. It begins serving food and drink – including good beer on tap – at 5am to market sellers and continues with good-value plats du jour at lunchtime. Nearby is Bodega Ibaia, 49 quai Jauréguiberry (closed Sun & Mon Sept–June), a lively, well-loved bar, with plats du jour for €7–12 at lunchtime. Bayonne duly honours its chocolate tradition with several outlets on, or just off, rue du Port-Neuf; Chocolat Cazenave at no. 19 serves hot whipped chocolate and cold cocoa-based desserts at tables under the arcade or in its Art Nouveau interior.

As far as festivals go, Bayonne's biggest annual bash is the Fêtes de Bayonne, which usually starts on the first Wednesday in August and consists of five days and nights of continuous boozing and entertainment. There are corridas (bullfights) the last two days, plus a few more in the run-up to August 15. A well-established jazz festival, La Ruee au Jazz, takes place in mid-July, and every October there's Les Translatines, a Franco-Spanish theatre festival.

Biarritz (Miarritze)

A few minutes by rail or road from Bayonne, BIARRITZ was, until the 1950s, the Monte Carlo of the Atlantic coast, transformed by Napoléon III during the

▲ Surfers, Biarritz

ACCOMMODATION

Atalaye	B
Gardenia	D
Palym	C
Victoria	A
Youth hostel	E

EATING

Le Clos Basque	1
Bistrot des Halles	6
Bar Jean	5
Le Surfing	7

DRINKING

Cayo Coco	4
Salon de Thé
L'Orangerie	2
Ventilo Caffe	3

BIARRITZ

mid-nineteenth century into a playground for monarchs, aristos and glitterati. With the rise of the Côte d'Azur during the 1960s, however, the place went into seemingly terminal decline. But since the 1990s, Biarritz has been rediscovered by Parisian yuppies, the international surfing fraternity and a slightly alternative family clientele, who together have put the place back on the map.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The gare SNCF is 3km southeast of the centre at the end of avenue Foch/avenue Kennedy in the quartier known as La Négresse (STAB bus #2 or B from or to square d'Ixelles). The tourist office is on square d'Ixelles (daily: July & Aug 8am–8pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎ 05.59.22.37.00, 🌐 www.biarritz.fr), also selling tickets for local events and spectacles.

Accommodation is booked out weeks in advance during July and August, especially the more affordable choices. Hôtel Palym at 7 rue du Port-Vieux (☎ 05.59.24.16.56, 🌐 www.le-palmarium.com; 2–6), with a variety of old-fashioned rooms and a ground-floor bar-restaurant, is a solid budget option a stone's throw from plage du Port-Vieux. Nearby stands completely en-suite Hôtel Atalaye, 6 rue des Goélands (☎05.59.24.06.76, 🌐www.hotelatalaye.com; ③–④), with the best rooms having balconies facing a quiet square and, obliquely, the sea. Even quieter, if inland, is popular Hôtel Gardénia, 19 av Carnot (☎05.59.24.10.46, 🌐www.hotel-gardenia.com; ③), though not all rooms are en suite. Those looking for a little more luxury should head for the small but well-appointed Hostellerie Victoria (☎05.59.24.08.21; ⑥), set in a neo-Gothic mansion behind the Grand Plage.

The nearest HI hostel (☎05.59.41.76.07, 📧aubergejeune.biarrizt@orange.fr) is 2km southwest of the centre on the shore of Lac Mouriscot, just walkable from the gare SNCF; otherwise take bus #2 or B from the centre, stop “Bois de Boulogne”. Campers should try Biarrizt-Camping, at 28 rte d’Harcet, the inland continuation of avenue de la Plage (☎05.59.23.00.12, 🌐www.biarrizt-camping.fr; mid-May to late Sept), behind plage de la Milady to the south of town.

The Town

The focus of Biarritz is the Casino Municipal, just behind the Grande Plage, now restored to its 1930s grandeur. Inland, the town forms a surprisingly amorphous, workaday sprawl, with the sole point of interest being the Musée Asiatique, 1 rue Guy-Petit (Mon–Fri 10.30am–6.30pm, Sat & Sun 2–7pm; €7), exhibiting the collection of Indian and Tibetan art specialist Michel Postel.

Between here and the plage du Port-Vieux are the only streets and squares conducive to relaxed strolling. The halles, divided into a seafood wing and a produce, cheese and ham division, is friendly and photogenic, the streets around it crammed with places to eat and drink (see opposite). To the west, the place de l’Atalaye, high above the port and named for a nearby whalers’ lookout tower, is fringed by elegant mansions; just below, characteristic if touristy rue du Port-Vieux leads down to its namesake beach.

The ocean, however, is undeniably beautiful – if sometimes treacherous, and thus heavily lifeguard-patrolled. White breakers crash on sandy strands, where beautiful people bronze their limbs cheek by jowl with families and surf bums, against a backdrop of ocean-liner hotels, ornate churches, Gothic follies and modern apartment blocks. The beaches – served by local bus operator STAB’s La Navette des Plages all day during July and August – extend northwards from plage de la Milady through plage Marbella, Côte des Basques (with several surfing schools), plage du Port-Vieux, Grande Plage and plage Miramar to the Pointe St-Martin with its lighthouse. Most of the action takes place between the plage du Port-Vieux and the plage Miramar, overlooked by the huge Hôtel du Palais (formerly the Villa Eugénie), built by Napoléon III in the mid-nineteenth century for his wife, whom he met and courted in Biarritz.

Just beside the plage du Port-Vieux, the most sheltered and intimate of the beaches – you’ll share it with scuba-divers and kayakers at times – a rocky promontory sticks out into the sea, ending in the Rocher de la Vierge, an offshore rock topped by a white statue of the Virgin, and linked to the mainland by an Eiffel-built iron catwalk. Around it are scattered other rocky islets where the swell heaves and combs. On the bluff above the Virgin stands the Musée de la Mer (daily: June & Sept 9.30am–7pm; July & Aug 9.30am–midnight; Oct–May 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €7.50), which contains interesting displays on the fishing industry and the region’s birds, and an aquarium of North Atlantic fish as well as the obligatory seal tank with twice-daily feedings.

Just below is the picturesque Port des Pêcheurs, most easily approached by a switchback pedestrian lane. The fishermen are long gone, replaced by pleasure boats, two scuba outfitters and pricey seafood restaurants. To the northeast lies the Grande Plage, an immaculate sweep of sand once dubbed the “Plage des Fous” after the 1850s practice of taking mental patients to bathe here as a primitive form of thalassotherapy.

Eating, drinking and nightlife

It's possible to eat well for an affordable price, away from the touristy snack bars on rue du Port-Vieux, especially near the halles. Two of the best options around the market are 🍷 Bar Jean, at 5 rue Halles, a semi-subterranean Spanish-theme outfit with tapas or full seafood meals for about €21, or Bistrot des Halles (☎05.59.24.21.22), at 1 rue du Centre, which serves generously portioned, tasty fish or meat-under-sauce dishes (menu €13, lunch only, allow €28–32 à la carte; closed Sun eve except school hols). Le Clos Basque at 12 rue Louis-Barthou is another favourite bistro with meaty, hearty fare (☎05.59.24.24.96; menu €25; closed Sun eve & some Mon). For a sea view with your meal, Le Surfing, behind plage de Côte des Basques and festooned with antique boards, serves decent seafood grills and frites, while the Littoral Café at 3 esplanade du Port-Vieux does well-presented brasserie grub, strong on moules, galettes and big steins of beer.

More formal nightlife in the town centre includes Cayo Coco, a Cuban theme bar at 5 rue Jaulerry offering free salsa dance lessons Thursday nights, and Ventilo Caffè on rue du Port-Vieux, the favourite haunt of Parisian thirtysomethings. Whether you've slept the night before or not, have a good start to the day at Salon de Thé l'Orangerie (closed Wed) at 1 rue Gambetta, serving forty varieties of tea and a reasonably copious breakfast.

Anglet (Angelu)

Immediately north of Biarritz, suburban ANGLET sprawls up the coast from the Pointe St-Martin to the mouth of the Adour at La Barre. There's nothing to see except a half-dozen contiguous, superb beaches, broader and wilder than any at Biarritz. The most frequented are Chambre d'Amour, so named for two lovers trapped in their trysting place by the tide, and adjacent Sables d'Or and Marinella, both much favoured by the surfers and with schools operating in season.

The summertime Navette des Plages calls here too from the central stops in Biarritz, or you can walk the distance in about thirty minutes, along avenue de l'Impératrice, avenue MacCroskey, then second left down to the seaside boulevard des Plages. Anglet has a HI hostel at 19 rte des Vignes (☎05.59.58.70.00, @anglet@fuaj.org; mid-Feb to mid-Nov; stop “Les Corsaires” on Navette des Plages or STAB bus #4 or C, from Biarritz). For eating and drinking, the most notable seaside establishments are the Havana Café at Chambre d'Amour, a permanently crowded bar that serves plats du jour at lunch for about €9, and the nearby Café Bleu, more of a proper restaurant with a menu for €16 (closed Wed Sept–June). Inland in the Chiberta neighbourhood near the pine forest, the popular La Fleur de Sel, 5 av de la Forêt (closed lunch Mon–Wed; menu €28.50, otherwise €34-plus), serving more nouvelle Basquaise fare.

St-Jean-de-Luz (Donibane Lohitzun)

With its fine sandy bay and magnificent old quarter speckled with half-timbered mansions, ST-JEAN-DE-LUZ remains the most attractive resort on the Basque coast, despite being fairly overrun by large families in peak season. As the only natural harbour between Arcachon and Spain, it has been a major port for centuries, with whaling and cod fishing the traditional preoccupations of its fleets. Even now, St-Jean remains one of the busiest fishing ports in France, and the principal one for landing anchovy and tuna.

Arrival, information and accommodation

St-Jean's gare SNCF is on the southern edge of the town centre, 500m from the beach, while buses operated by the Conseil Général arrive at the halte routière just opposite. The tourist office (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7.30pm, Sun 10am–1pm & 3–7pm; Oct–March Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm, Sun 10am–1pm; ☎05.59.26.03.16, 🌐www.saint-jean-de-luz.com) stands just behind place des Corsaires. Bikes can be rented at Luz Evasion on place Maurice-Ravel and ADO on avenue Labrouche, as well as at the gare SNCF, where ADA car rental (☎05.59.26.26.22) is also based.

Opposite the train station, on and around avenue Verdun, are a few inexpensive (for St-Jean) if uninspiringly located hotels, among them the en-suite, well-kept Hôtel de Paris, 1 bd du Commandant-Passicot, corner avenue Labrouche (☎05.59.85.20.20, 🌐www.hoteldeparis-stjeandeluz.fr; 📍). Slightly more expensive, and better placed, are the Hôtel Ohartzia (☎05.59.26.00.06, 🌐www.hotel-ohartzia.com; 📍), just inland from the beach at 28 rue Garat, with rear rooms overlooking the garden where breakfast is served, and the Lafayette (☎05.59.26.17.74, 🌐www.hotelpaysbasque.com; 📍) at pedestrianized 18–20 rue de la République, the best rooms with balconies. Three-star comfort means either beachfront Hôtel de la Plage (☎05.59.51.03.44, 🌐www.hoteldelaplage.com; 📍–📍); closed mid-Nov to Easter), which has its own (paying) car park, Wi-Fi access and a ground-floor brasserie, or quietly set 🏡 Les Goëlands at 4–6 av d'Etcheverry (☎05.59.26.10.05, 🌐www.hotel-lesgoelands.com; 📍; all year), consisting of two 2004-renovated belle-époque villas, with easy parking and a full-service restaurant (April–Oct) in one wing (HB at 📍–📍 obligatory mid-July to early Sept). There are numerous campsites, all east of town in Erromardie and Acotz districts, seaward of the N10 between St-Jean and Guéthary.

The Town

The wealth and vigour of St-Jean's seafaring past is evident in the town's surviving seventeenth- and eighteenth-century houses of the merchants and shipowners. One of the finest, adjacent to the Hôtel de Ville on the plane-tree-studded place Louis-XIV, is the turreted Maison Louis XIV (guided tours: June & Sept Mon–Sat 10.30am–noon & 2.30–5.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 10.30am–noon & 2.30–6.30pm; €5), built for the Lohobiague family in 1635, but renamed after the young King Louis stayed here for a month in 1660 during the preparations for his marriage to Maria Teresa, Infanta of Castile. She lodged in the equally impressive pink Italianate villa known as the Maison de l'Infante (mid-June to mid-Oct 11am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.30pm; €3), overlooking the harbour on the eponymous quay. The corner house on rue Mazarin, nearby, was the Duke of Wellington's HQ during the 1813–14 winter campaign against Maréchal Soult.

The wedding of King Louis and Maria Teresa was the major event in local history, overshadowing the Spanish destruction of the town in 1558. The couple's sumptuous, not to say extravagant, wedding took place in the church of St-Jean-Baptiste on pedestrianized rue Gambetta, the main shopping- and-tourism street today. Cardinal Mazarin alone presented the new queen with twelve thousand pounds of pearls and diamonds, a gold dinner service and a pair of carriages drawn by teams of six horses – all paid for by money made in the service of France. The door through which they left the church – on the right of the existing entrance – has been sealed up ever since. Even without this curiosity, the church deserves a look inside: the largest French Basque church, it has a barn-like nave roofed in wood and lined on three sides with tiers of dark oak galleries accessed by wrought-iron stairways. These are a distinctive feature of Basque churches, and were reserved for the men, while the women sat at ground level. Equally Basque is the elaborate gilded retable of tiered angels, saints and prophets behind the altar. Hanging from the ceiling is an ex voto model of the Empress Eugénie's paddle-steamer, the Eagle, which narrowly escaped being wrecked outside St-Jean in 1867.

Ciboure (Ziburu), the harbour and Urrugne (Urruñia)

On the other side of the harbour and Nivelle river mouth, CIBOURE seems a continuation of St-Jean but is in fact a separate community, terminating in the little fortress of Socoa (Sokoa), today home to a sailing/windsurfing club. Its streets are prettier (and emptier) than its neighbour's, especially waterfront quai Maurice-Ravel (the composer was born at no. 12) and the parallel rue Pocollette just inland, an exquisite terrace of wide-fronted, half-timbered, balconied Labourdian town houses gaily painted in typical Basque colours. The octagonal tower protruding above the houses belongs to the sixteenth-century church of St-Vincent, where you'll find more characteristic Basque galleries, a Baroque altarpiece and yet another ex-voto model ship; the entrance is in rue Pocollette through a paved courtyard with gravestones embedded in it.

From either side of the Nivelle or the Pont Charles-de-Gaulle linking St-Jean and Ciboure, the fishing harbour dominates proceedings to seaward, with most working tuna boats tied up on the quai de l'Infante or Ciboure's quai Pascal-Elisalt, cheek by jowl with a pleasure-craft harbour.

Also worth considering is a visit to the Château d'Urtubie (guided tours mid-March to early Nov 10.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; €6; 🌐 www.chateaudurtubie.net) at URRUGNE, just outside Ciboure, 3km southwest of St-Jean-de-Luz, which has belonged to the same family since its construction as a fortified château in 1341. It was enlarged and gentrified during the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries, and provided hospitality for the French King Louis XI, as well as for Soult and later Wellington during the Napoleonic Wars. If you fancy following in their footsteps, it's also a very upmarket hotel (☎ 05.59.54.31.15, 🌐 www.chateaudurtubie.net; 🍽) with dinner preferentially for guests and only by prior arrangement; otherwise just visit and take tea in the salon afterwards for an extra fee.

Eating and drinking

Leading off place Louis-XIV – with its cafés, sidewalk artists and free summer-time concerts in the bandstand (Tues–Sun 10pm) – rue de la République has several restaurants, poshest being Le Kaiku at no. 17 (supper only, allow €40 à la carte), with noted seafood; less expensive alternatives on the same lane include cheap and cheerful La Ruelle (closed Mon, also Tues low season) at no. 19, with three seafood menus (€18–25), though service is “relaxed” and drinks stiffly priced. The next street east, rue Tourasse, also offers possibilities, including durable La Vieille Auberge at no. 22 (closed Weds, & Tues lunch), with four menus. Less scenically set but equally popular is friendly Le Buvette des Halles (lunch only to 3pm, closed Mon off season), on the corner of the market hall on boulevard Victor-Hugo, which serves impeccably fresh tuna, crab and sardines, plus pipérade, drink and dessert for around €22 (three courses), though portions could be more generous.

Hendaye (Hendaïa) and the Spanish frontier

HENDAYE, 15km southwest of St-Jean-de-Luz, is the last town in France before the Spanish frontier. Neither the town itself, Hendaye-Ville, nor the seaside quarter, Hendaye-Plage, is of much intrinsic interest, though the latter has a fine, safe beach popular with Spaniards in particular, who reckon it better than anything on their side until reaching San Sebastián.

The town, served by both the Paris–Bordeaux–Irún and Toulouse–Irún train lines, lies on the estuary of the River Bida(s)soa, which forms the border with Spain at this point. Just upstream, a tiny wooded island known as the Île des Faisans was once used as a meeting place for the monarchs of the two countries. François I, taken prisoner at the battle of Pavia in 1525, was ransomed here. In 1659 it was the scene of the signature of the Treaty of the Pyrenees, and in the following year of the marriage contract between Louis XIV and Maria Teresa. The painter Velázquez, responsible for the decor of the negotiations chamber, apparently caught the cold here which resulted in his death. Another interesting encounter was the meeting between Hitler and Franco at Hendaye train station on October 23, 1940. The version promulgated by Franco and his publicists, long believed even by his enemies, had “El Caudillo” preserving Spanish neutrality by parrying the Führer’s threats to annexe Spain; in fact, Franco, dazzled by Hitler’s early victories and the prospect of a greatly enlarged Spanish Morocco at the expense of France, begged to be allowed to fight alongside Germany. But Hitler – mindful of how much assistance the Spanish Nationalists had needed to win their civil war, and aware of Spain’s dire economic state – considered the proposed alliance a liability and was having none of it.

The main local sight is the Château d’Abbadie (📍 www.academie-sciences.fr/abbadia.htm), home of nineteenth-century Dublin-born explorer Antoine d’Abbadie, on the headland closing off Hendaye-Plage on the east, just off the route de la Corniche (Feb–May & Oct to mid-Dec Tues–Sat guided visits only 2–5pm; June–Sept Mon–Fri guided visits 10–11.30am & 2–6pm, without guide 12.30–2pm; Sat & Sun visit without guide 2–6pm; €5.50–6.50). After expeditions in Ethiopia and Egypt, d’Abbadie had the neo-Gothic château built between 1860 and 1870; the architect was Eugène Viollet-le-Duc, the result a bizarre Franco-Hibernian folly, with Arabian boudoirs, Ethiopian frescoes, and inscriptions over the doors and lintels inside in Irish, Basque, Arabic and Ethiopian. It’s also filled with objects collected by d’Abbadie on his travels.

Hendaye’s tourist office is at 12 rue des Aubépines in Hendaye-Plage (April–June & Sept–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7.30pm, Sun 10.30am–1pm; Nov–March Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; ☎05.59.20.00.34, 🌐 www.hendaye.com). Ten local campsites are all found east of Hendaye-Plage, just off the Route de la Corniche; one of the more tent-friendly, and closest to the beach, is Alturan (📍05.59.20.04.55; June–Sept), on rue de la Côte. Hendaye-Ville hotels are generally pretty grim, with proximity to the gare SNCF their only selling point; the most cheerful is Hôtel La Palombe Bleue at 38 rue du Commerce (📍05.59.20.43.80; March–Dec; ②–④). Most people stay down in Hendaye-Plage, where affordable, well-set choices include Hôtel La Fon at 99 bd de la Mer (📍05.59.20.04.67; April–Oct; ④), a rambling, old-fashioned beachfront place with restaurant; Hôtel Uhainak at no. 3 (📍05.59.20.33.63, 🌐 www.hotel-uhainak.com; Feb–Nov; ④), again with some rooms overlooking the beach; and the friendly Hôtel Bergeret-Sport inland at 4 rue des Clématites (📍05.59.20.00.78, 🌐 www.hotel-bergeret-sort.com; June–Sept except by arrangement; ④, HB at ⑤ obligatory July & Aug), with a well-regarded restaurant. Independent restaurants are overwhelmingly fishy if not too numerous; cheap (because prosaically set by a car park) and popular is La Petite Marée at 2 av des Mimosas. For a sea view, head west a few blocks to the yacht and fishing port, where La Cabane du Pêcheur (closed Sun eve & Mon) does full seafood meals (menus €15–24). Just around the corner at 4 rue des Orangers, 🍷 Le Parc à Huîtres (closed Tues, also Mon eve low season) is a superb oyster-bar-cum-takeaway-deli with seating outdoors and in; make a meal of it with salad, assorted tapas, desserts and oyster-compatible wines in every conceivable measure.

Around Hendaye: up the coast and inland

Perhaps the best thing about Hendaye is arriving there, since the stretch of coast from St-Jean southwest has remained miraculously unspoilt, despite being traced by the D912. Drivers will enjoy this route, which is also served by Line 26-1 of the Conseil Général bus service between Hendaye and St-Jean. Behind the Château d'Abbadie stretches a vast nature reserve culminating in the Pointe Ste-Anne promontory; its dramatic shoreline is accessible from the Sentier du Littoral footpath from Hendaye-Plage.

Both trans-Pyrenean walking routes – the GR10 and HRP – officially begin their course in Hendaye-Plage at the former casino on the beach. The first, two-hour stage inland is dull and gives no sense of the glories that lie ahead; if you're not concerned about the romance and purism of starting at the very beginning, splash out on a taxi to BIRIATOU (Biriatu, 7km away), where the walking starts to get interesting. A short steep section leads to a church with a collection of weather-worn typically Basque “keyhole” tombstones, next door to the pretty Auberge Hirribarren, a temporary haven for many escaping Allied soldiers during World War II. From here the main footpaths and a number of local variations rise rapidly to semi-isolation, where only the buzzing power lines (soon left behind) and the occasional rambler disturb the peace.

Inland: Labourd (Lapurdi) and Basse Navarre (Behe Nafarroa)

If you don't have your own transport, the simplest forays into the soft, seductive landscapes of the Basque hinterland are along the St-Jean-de-Luz-Sare bus route or the Bayonne-St-Jean-Pied-de-Port train line. Both give a representative sample of the area.

La Rhune (Larrun), Ascain (Azkaine), Sare (Sara) and Ainhoa

The 900-metre cone of La Rhune, straddling the frontier with Spain, is the westernmost skyward thrust of the Pyrenees before they decline into the Atlantic. As the landmark of Labourd, in spite of its unsightly multi-purpose antennae, and duly equipped with a rack-and-pinion rail service, it is predictably popular as a vantage point, offering fine vistas way up the Basque coast and east along the Pyrenees. Two or three buses a day (July & Aug Mon–Sat; Sept–June Mon–Fri), run by Le Basque Bondissant, ply the route from the halte routière in St-Jean-de-Luz, stopping at Ascain, Col de St-Ignace and Sare.

ASCAIN, where Pierre Loti wrote his romantic novel Ramuntcho, is like so many Labourdan villages – postcard-perfect and in danger of caricaturing itself, with its galleried church, fronton and polychrome, half-timbered houses. Loti's house on place du Fronton is now the hotel-restaurant De la Rhune (☎05.59.54.00.04, @hoteldelarhune@orange.fr; 📍) with a garden at the back, one of several accommodation options in the village.

You could walk up La Rhune from here in about two and a half hours, or take the little tourist train from Col de St-Ignace (mid-March to early Nov, minimum 2 departures daily 9 or 10am & 3pm, extra according to demand and weather conditions; every 35min July/Aug from 8.30am; €12 return; book on ☎05.59.54.20.26, @www.rhune.com). The ascent takes thirty minutes, but you should allow up to two hours for the round trip. Be warned: it's massively popular in peak season, with long waits and two snack bars near the base station taking full advantage of a captive clientele.

With or without the bus, it's worth continuing to SARE, another perfectly proportioned Basque knoll-top village ringed by satellite hamlets. You can either walk on the GR10 from the intermediate station below the summit of La Rhune in about an hour and a quarter, or follow 3km of road from St-Ignace in rather less time. The village's several hotels make for a more attractive overnight than Ascain; most central – and poshest – choice is the three-star Arraya on the village square (☎05.59.54.20.46, @www.arraya.com; April–Oct; 📍), a former hospice on the Santiago pilgrimage route. More affordable are the Baratxartea, 1km northeast in Ihalar hamlet (☎05.59.54.20.48, @www.hotel-baratxartea.com; 📍), or for the impecunious the no-star, non-en-suite Hôtel de la Poste opposite the Arraya (☎05.59.54.20.06; 📍). The only independent restaurant is the popular Lastiry next door, offering nouvelle Basquaise cuisine under the arcade (menus €21–28). The more consistently open of two camp-sites just south of the village is La Petite Rhune (☎05.59.54.23.97; May–Sept).

Instead of going back to St-Jean-de-Luz from Sare, an easy three- to four-hour stint on the GR10 takes you on to AINHOA, another gem of a village. It consists of little more than a single street lined with substantial, mainly seventeenth-century houses, whose lintel plaques offer mini-genealogies as well as foundation dates. Take a look at the bulky towered church with its extravagant Baroque altarpiece of prophets and apostles in niches, framed by Corinthian columns. For accommodation, try the comfortable, good-value Hôtel Oppoca (☎05.59.29.90.72, @www.opopoca.com; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec and most of Jan; 📍) with a good restaurant (closed Mon; four menus €18–45). Campers should head for Camping Harazpy near the village centre (☎05.59.29.89.38; mid-June to mid-Sept).

The valley of the Nive

The valley of the River Nive is the only public transport corridor southeast into the Basque hinterland, with up to five trains a day making the riverside journey from Bayonne to St-Jean-Pied-de-Port. The luminous green landscape on the approach to the mountains is scattered with peaceful villages untouched by speculative development.

Cambo-les-Bains (Kambo)

The first major stop is CAMBO-LES-BAINS, an old spa town whose favourable microclimate made it an ideal centre for the treatment of tuberculosis in the nineteenth century; it's an attractive town, green and open, but suffers from the usual genteel stuffiness of spas. The "new" town, with its ornate houses and hotels, radiates out from the baths over the heights above the River Nive, while the old quarter of Bas Cambo, typically Basque with its whitewashed houses and galleried church, lies beside the river and gare SNCF.

The main local sight is the Villa Arnaga, 1.5km northwest of town on the Bayonne road (guided visits: April–June & Sept 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm; March Sat & Sun 2.30–6pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; Oct Sat 2.30–7pm; €5), built for Edmond Rostand, author of Cyrano de Bergerac, who came here to cure his pleurisy in 1903. This larger-than-life Basque house, painted in red trim, overlooks an almost surreal formal garden with discs and rectangles of water and segments of grass punctuated by blobs, cubes and cones of box, lined by lindens and blue cedars, with a distant view of green hills. Inside, it's very kitsch, with a minstrels' gallery, fake pilasters, allegorical frescoes, chandeliers, numerous portraits and various memorabilia.

The tourist office is in the Parc St-Joseph in the upper town centre (mid-July to Aug Mon–Fri 8.30am–6.30pm, Sat 8.30am–noon & 2–5.30pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; Sept to mid-July Mon–Fri 8.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sat 8.30am–noon & 2–5.30pm; ☎05.59.29.70.25). For an overnight stay, try the Auberge de Tante Ursule in Bas Cambo by the pelota court (☎05.59.29.78.23, @chez.tante.ursule@orange.fr; 🍷), with rooms in a modern annexe, plus an excellent restaurant in an older adjacent building offering menus featuring offal from €15–35. The nearest year-round campsite is Ur-Hégia on route des Sept-Chênes (☎05.59.29.72.03), also in Bas Cambo.

Espelette (Ezpeleta) and Itxassou (Itsasu)

Buses cover the 5km southwest from Cambo to ESPELETTE, a somewhat busy village of wide-eaved houses, with a church notable for its heavy square tower, painted ceiling and keyhole-shaped gravestones. The village's principal source of renown is its dark red chilli peppers – much used in Basque cuisine, hung to dry in summer on many housefronts – and its pottok markets. Pottoks are an ancient Basque breed of stocky pony, once favoured for work in British coal mines but now reared mainly for meat and riding. The annual sales take place on the last Tuesday and Wednesday in January; the pepper jamboree takes place on the last Sunday in October. There's a very good hotel-restaurant in Espelette, the Euzkadi on the main street at the northeast edge of the village (☎05.59.93.91.88, @hotel.euzkadi@orange.fr; 🍷; restaurant closed Mon, also Tues low season), with calmer rear rooms and three menus (€23–31) featuring hearty Basque country cooking.

About the same distance south from Cambo-les-Bains, next stop up the train line (though only one train a day stops here), is the delightful village of ITXASSOU, quieter than most of the others in the area, and surrounded by green wooded hills. The main point of interest is the little seventeenth-century church of St-Fructueux, about 1km out on the minor D349 road towards Pas de Roland and Laxia hamlet, its vast cemetery harbouring a significant collection of both modern and ancient keyhole-shaped gravestones; inside, its three-tiered wooden galleries and sumptuous retable are worth a quick look. Itxassou is a great base for a gentle recharge of the batteries, with about a half-dozen hotel-restaurants scattered locally. Best and quietest of these are – next to St-Fructueux – the excellent-value Hôtel du Chêne (☎05.59.29.75.01, ☎05.59.29.27.39; closed Jan–Feb; 🍷), with large, bright rooms and an equally well-kept restaurant (closed Mon, also Tues low season) where €23 gets a menu with pipérade, salad, game and dessert, and – at bucolic Laxia – the Hôtel Ondoria (☎05.59.29.75.39, ☎05.59.29.25.99; closed Nov 15–Jan & Mon; 🍷), where meals are taken at a wisteria-festooned terrace overlooking the river, swimmable here on hot days.

Bidarray (Bidarrai) and St-Étienne-de-Baïgorry (Baigorri)

The GR10 from Ainhoa, as well as the train line (station Pont-Noblia) and a perilously narrow road beyond Laxia, all converge at BIDARRAY, which at first glance seems restricted to a few houses clustered around its medieval bridge over the Nive, the Pont d'Enfer. Further investigation, however, reveals the upper village, scattered appealingly on a ridge with superb views. On the way into the village on the GR10 is a gîte d'étape spread over two buildings, the Auñamendi (☎05.59.37.71.34; €10pp), while the central place de l'Église is flanked by the characterful Hôtel Barberaenea (☎05.59.37.74.86, 🌐www.hotel-barberaenea.fr; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec), with a mix of sink-only rooms (2) and en-suites (4). There's also a creditable restaurant, but lately the best eating in Bidarray is at Auberge Iparla, next to the shop and fronton, with €22 menus served in the wood-trim salon or on the shaded terrace. Another good staying/eating option down in the riverbank quarter is welcoming 🐾 Hôtel-Restaurant du Pont d'Enfer (☎05.59.37.70.88, 🌐www.hotel-restaurant-du-pont-enfer.com; closed Jan-Feb; 4), also known as Chez Anny after the owner, which has good-sized rooms and a restaurant serving several menus on a river-view terrace in summer. A short walk east, equidistant from upper and riverside quarters, lies tent-only Camping Errekaldia (☎05.59.37.72.36).

Bidarray is the preferred starting point for the classic ridge-trek of the Basque country, the section of the GR10 running roughly south along the Crête d'Iparla, then descending east to St-Étienne-de-Baïgorry. It's seven hours' walking one way, and should only be attempted in settled conditions – when bad weather closes in, you won't get its famous views and close-range sightings of vultures, and you'll be at risk from lightning strikes or falling from the mist-shrouded brink, both of which kill hikers here regularly. Consult current SNCF schedules before setting out so that you coincide with one of the afternoon rail-buses that cover the eight kilometres between St-Étienne and the actual train station of Ossès-St-Martin-d'Arrossa, one stop above Pont-Noblia.

Like most other Basque villages, ST-ÉTIENNE-DE-BAÏGORRY is divided into quite distinct quarters, more like separate hamlets than a unified settlement. A prosperous, sleek place, its business is still predominantly agriculture rather than tourism, with the Pays Basque's only vineyards scattered around, producing the Irouléguay (Iroulegi) wine named after the village 5km east; the vintner's shop on the D15 road offers dégustation and sales. There's little to see here, other than a seventeenth-century, barrel-vaulted church with a fine organ over the southwest door in addition to the usual galleries and altarpiece, plus a picturesque medieval bridge posing against a backdrop of the romantic Château de Etchaz and distant hills.

The tourist office is opposite the church (May–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–1pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.59.37.47.28). For budget accommodation, there's only the municipal campsite Irouléguay (☎05.59.37.43.96; April to mid-Dec), opposite the swimming pool on the St-Jean road, now that the local gîte d'étape has closed, plus Hôtel-Restaurant Juantorena on the through road in Bourg quarter (☎05.59.37.40.78, 📧restaurant.juantorena@orange.fr; 3), with a pleasant terrace and parking in the back. With transport, head for the tranquil, stream-side Hôtel-Restaurant Manechenea, 5km north in the hamlet of Urdos (Urdoze)

(☎05.59.37.41.68, 📧hotel-manechenea@orange.fr; 📍; closed Nov–Feb), with a decent restaurant (menu from €16).

St-Jean-Pied-de-Port (Donibane Garazi)

The old capital of Basse Navarre, ST-JEAN-PIED-DE-PORT lies in a circle of hills at the foot of the Bentarte pass into Spain. It owes its name to its position “at the foot of the port” – a Pyrenean word for “pass”. Only part of France since the 1659 Treaty of the Pyrenees, it was an important centre for the pilgrimage to Santiago de Compostela in the Middle Ages. The routes from Paris, Vézelay and Le Puy converged just northeast of here at Ostabat, and it was the pilgrims’ last port of call before struggling over the pass to the Spanish monastery of Roncesvalles (Roncevaux in French).

The town straddles the young River Nive, the old quarter enclosed by walls of pinky-red sandstone. Above it rises a wooded hill crowned by the Richelieu–Vauban Citadelle, while to the east a further defensive system guards the road to Spain. The pleasant but unremarkable modern town spreads down across the

The GR65 south from St-Jean – and the Chanson de Roland

The final French leg of the GR65 pilgrim route starts from St-Jean and follows the line of the old Roman road across to Roncesvalles in Spanish Navarra, a full day’s walk of 27km or at least seven hours. Follow characteristic star-ray yellow-on-blue signs south from the Porte d’Espagne, soon adopting the one-lane D428 with which you will stay for more than half the route; the typical yellow waymarks of the Chemin de St-Jacques show the way, as do newer red-and-white ones. Though the climb is initially dull, on tarmac, there are attractive farmhouses to look at, with immensely broad roofs – one side short, the other long enough to cover space for stalls and tools – plus long views out across the valleys east and west.

After about ninety minutes you’ll reach the tiny hamlet of HONTO, which for late starters in particular offers excellent chambres d’hôte (as well as cheaper dorm beds at €12) and hearty evening meals at Ferme Ithurburia (☎05.59.37.11.17; 📍; year round). Beyond Honto, the grade sharpens, but there’s only one brief path short cut from the D428 before you arrive, an hour further along, at the well-sited Refuge-Auberge Orisson (☎06.81.49.79.56, 📧refuge.orisson@orange.fr; 18 bunks; April–Oct; €14pp), your last chance for meals (€14) and shelter before Roncesvalles. After passing a pennant-festooned altar, you’ll finally leave the D428 for a proper trail at Pic Urdanarré (1240m), some four hours along and just before the frontier and spring at Col de Bentarte (ca.1340m). The Chemin de St-Jacques was rerouted through the Col de Bentarte some years back, diverted from the Puerto de Ibañeta well inside Spain, to the probable annoyance of purists who were committed to the latter as the locale for the events related in the medieval Chanson de Roland (though Bentarte is just as likely a venue). Roland, the hero of the tale, was a historical character, warden of the Breton marches, who in 778 accompanied Emperor Charlemagne on a campaign to support the Muslim ruler of Zaragoza in his war against the Emir of Córdoba. The mission degenerated into raids for booty, and on their way home the Franks sacked the Navarrese capital of Pamplona. In revenge, local Basques ambushed and massacred Charlemagne’s rearguard, commanded by Roland, as it withdrew up the slopes beyond Roncevaux/Roncesvalles. The medieval romance describes how Roland sounded his horn for aid in vain, and “hewed and smote” various and sundry with his magical sword Durandal – and also labels the dastardly foe as infidel Saracens rather than fellow Christians. This bit of propaganda was concocted four hundred years later during the Crusades, in order to demonize the contemporary Muslim foe.

main road onto lower ground. In season, all of it – except for the further reaches of the new quarters – is packed to the gills with visitors.

The old town consists essentially of a single cobbled street, first as rue de la Citadelle, running downhill from the fifteenth-century Porte St-Jacques – so named because it was the gate by which pilgrims entered the town, St Jacques being French for Santiago – to the Porte d’Espagne, commanding the bridge over the Nive, with a constantly photographed view of balconied houses overlooking the stream. A fourteenth-century Gothic church, Notre-Dame-du-Bout-du-Pont, stands just inside the Porte Notre-Dame and, opposite, short rue de l’Église leads through the Porte de Navarre to place du Général-de-Gaulle and the modern road; south of the Nive the same main thoroughfare continues, as rue d’Espagne, to the southerly Porte d’Espagne.

Practicalities

The tourist office is at 14 place du Général-de-Gaulle (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 9.30am–1pm & 2.30–5pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.59.37.03.57, 🌐www.terre-basque.com), while a handful of newsagents and bookstores sell guides and IGN maps. The gare SNCF lies a ten-minute walk away at the end of avenue Renaud, on the northern edge of the centre, while Cycles Garazi at 32bis av du Jaï Alai rents everything from bikes up to 600cc motorcycles.

Amongst hotels, budget choices include the relatively quiet Les Remparts, 16 place Floquet (☎05.59.37.13.79, 🌐www.touradour.com/hotel-remparts.htm; 📍; closed Nov & Dec), just before you cross the Nive coming into town on the Bayonne road, and the Itzalpea, 5 place du Trinquet (☎05.59.37.03.66, 📧itzalpea@orange.fr; closed Sat; 📍). More comfortable are the Ramuntcho, just inside the city walls at 1 rue de France (☎05.59.37.03.91, ☎05.59.37.35.17; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec, Wed, & Tues low season), with a popular restaurant (menus €13–17.50), and the posh Central on place du Général-de-Gaulle (☎05.59.37.00.22, ☎05.59.37.27.79; 📍; closed Dec–Feb; menu €18–42), with some river-view rooms and free parking.

There are also a few dormitory lodgings for pilgrims and hikers, among them the twelve-bunk, helpful Gîte d’Étape Etchegoin at 9 rte d’Uhart, on the Bayonne road (☎05.59.37.12.08; €10pp), and Dutch-volunteer-run L’Esprit du Chemin, 40 rue de la Citadelle (☎05.59.37.24.68, 🌐www.espritduchemin.org, April–Sept; €20 HB pp; 14 bunks), offering sound advice and moral support to walkers and Santiago pilgrims. The municipal campsite, Plaza Berri (☎05.59.37.11.19; Easter–early November), is on the south bank of the Nive, just off avenue du Fronton.

Independent restaurants are apt to be slapdash bistros and “café-snacks” aimed squarely at the day-tripper trade. Two exceptions are popular Paxkal Oillarburu at 8 rue de l’Église just inside the Porte de Navarre (closed Tues low season, book on ☎05.59.37.06.44 in summer), with a €20.50 menu whose portions aren’t huge but garbure or frites are refilled free and quality is high, and Hurrup Eta Klik at 3bis rue de la Citadelle (☎05.59.37.09.18; closed Wed), just inside the Porte Notre-Dame and serving country cooking and abundant measures of cider.

Estérençuby, Béhérobie and the source of the Nive

From St-Jean, the D301 follows the deepening valley of the Nive to the south-east, past small red- and green-shuttered farms and attractive villages, while the GR10 stays well northeast of the river, first on paved lanes and then on track or trail along Handiamendi ridge. Both routes converge at ESTÉRENÇUBY (Ezterenzubi), 8km from St-Jean and an attractive spot, well supplied with accommodation within sight of the fronton. The budget option is hikers' hangout Auberge Carricaburu (☎05.59.37.09.77; closed Feb, also Tues/Wed low season; 🍷), where all rooms are en suite and some look to the river, with a decent restaurant (€13–18 menu) and the lively village bar. Alternatively, try the larger Hôtel Andreinia-Larramendy over the bridge (☎05.59.37.09.70, 🌐www.hotel-andreinia.com; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec, Wed low season; 🍷), with 2005-remodelled bathrooms and a more elaborate restaurant; they also run a 19-bunk gîte d'étape (€12pp).

Beyond Estérençuby the valley-floor D428 road continues alongside the Nive, now no more than a mountain stream, tumbling down between steep green slopes, covered in hay and bracken. Some 4km from Estérençuby the road reaches tiny Béhérobie (Beherobia) before climbing up to the border by the Col de Bentarte and looping back to St-Jean – an excellent bike-ride or drive. At Béhérobie the Hôtel de la Source de la Nive (☎05.59.37.10.57, 📧source.nive@orange.fr; 🍷; closed Jan and Tues out of season, booked out in Oct for the pigeon shooting season), beside the stream, is ideal for a quiet stay, with a restaurant where frog's legs, trout, eel and pigeon feature on menus (€14–30).

Just before the bridge at Béhérobie, a lane leads to the left, signposted to “Source de la Nive”. With a car, you can drive 400m to the end of the asphalt, then continue on foot along the dirt track going left, not the one going over the bridge. After fifteen minutes, you'll reach the springs, where water percolates a thousand metres down through the karstic slopes to well up as surging rapids. Hidden in dense beech woods, it's a magic spot in any weather, with a faint mist often rising from the surface of the water.

Haute Soule

East of the Nive valley, you enter largely uninhabited country, the old Basque county known as the Haute Soule, threaded only by the GR10 and a couple of minor roads. The border between Basse Navarre and Soule skims the

Transhumance in the Pyrenees

Like other shepherds in south European or Mediterranean climes, the Basques are forced to take their flocks to high mountain pastures in summer in search of better grazing. A few shepherds still live with a couple of dogs out on the treeless slopes in stone-hut sheepfolds called cayolars, milking the ewes twice a day and making cheese, the fromage de brébis, whose soft and hard versions are a speciality throughout the pastoral Pyrenees. Most of the pastures today are accessible by pick-up or 4WD jeep, at least at the gentler Basque end of the Pyrenees, so a shepherd's life is not as harsh and isolated as it used to be – though there are still places accessible only by mule or pony. A measure of the pre-eminence of sheep in the Basque economy is the Basque word for “rich”, aberats, the literal meaning of which is “he who owns large flocks”.

Much of the grazing land is owned in common by various communes, who over the centuries have made elaborate agreements (faceries) to ensure a fair share of the best pasture and avoid disputes. One of the oldest of these, concluded by the inhabitants of Spanish Roncal and French Barétous in 1326, is still in force and renewed each July 13 at the frontier Col de la-Pierre-St-Martin on symbolic payment of three white heifers.

western edge of the Forêt d'Iraty, one of Europe's largest surviving beech woods, a popular summer retreat and winter cross-country skiing area. There are no shops or proper hotels until you reach Larrau, the only real village in these mountains, though the scattered hamlet of Ste-Engrâce in the east of the district has some facilities, as does Licq and Abense-de-Haut, foothill settlements some way down the valley. There's even a downhill ski resort, the westernmost in the Pyrenees, at La-Pierre-St-Martin, technically just over the border in Béarn but included here for convenience.

Haute Soule is a land of open skies, where griffon vultures turn on the thermals high above countless flocks of sheep (their occasional corpses providing sustenance for the vultures), with three vast gorges to explore. Although the overall distance from the Nive valley to Béarn is not great, the slowness of the roads (there's no public transport) or the GR10 – it's two days' hiking from Estérençuby to Larrau – and the grandeur of the scenery seem to magnify it.

The Forêt d'Iraty (Iraty)

To drive to the Forêt d'Iraty, follow the D301 east out of the Nive valley from the junction on the D428, where the forest is signposted. The road is steep, narrow and full of tight hairpins and ambling cows, sheep or ponies – it's best avoided at night or in misty conditions – but as you climb up the steep spurs and around the heads of labyrinthine gullies, ever more spectacular views open beneath you. You can see way back over the valley of the Nive, St-Jean and the hills beyond. Beech copses fill the gullies, shadowing the lighter grass whose green is so intense it seems almost theatrical – an effect produced by a backdrop of purplish rock outcrops.

Once past the north flank of Occabé (Okabe; 1456m), you're in Soule, and from here the road loops down to meet the D18 on the plateau d'Iraty, with its small lake, clutch of snack bars and flat ground to camp on. A minor road, soon a jeep track, leads south towards Ochagavia in Spain via Chalet Pedro (1km), a hikers' gîte (☎05.59.28.55.98, 🌐www.iraty.chaletpedro.com; 8 places, mid-June to Sept 1; €27pp HB) also incorporating the best restaurant in the area. At this point the GR10 emerges from its descent of flat-topped Occabé (75min up from here), with its Iron Age stone circle and views across the forest. Continuing east from the plateau, the D18 road enters the densest part of the forest, climbing past another small lake and a campsite half hidden in the magnificent beeches, to a collection of nine wooden chalets and a gîte d'été at the Col de Bargagiak. An information office at the col (open all year; ☎05.59.28.51.29) takes bookings for the chalets and the gîte; across the car park is a small shop and inexpensive restaurant. From here you descend slightly to the nearby Col d'Orgambidexka, which is one of the prime viewing fields for the autumn bird migrations. As you emerge into the open beyond Bargagiak, the ground drops sharply away on the left into the Vallée de Larrau, 600m lower. To the right, the brilliant grassy swards of the Pic d'Orhy (2017m; allow 5hr return hike) culminate in swirling strata of rock below the summit, barring the way to Spain.

Larrau (Larraïñe) to La-Pierre-St-Martin

The first thing you notice coming into LARRAU from the west is how different the architecture is. In contrast to the painted, half-timbered facades and tiled roofs of Labourd and Basse Navarre, the houses here are grey and stuccoed, with steep-pitched slate roofs to shed heavy snow – much more like Béarnais houses, in fact. And, although it's the biggest place since St-Jean, it's nonetheless very quiet – almost dead out of season. There are two friendly hotels: the simple, old-fashioned Hôtel Despouey (☎05.59.28.60.82; 2–3; closed mid-Nov to Easter), with a mix of showers and tubs in the baths plus the local shop on the ground floor, and the much fancier 🍷 Hôtel-Restaurant Etchémaité (☎05.59.28.61.45, 🌐www.hotel-etchemaite.fr; 3–4, HB urged; closed Jan & late Nov), with state-of-the-art rooms and excellent restaurant serving such treats as eels, cèpes, pigeon and decadent desserts in small portions (closed Sun eve & Mon low season; menus €18–34).

There's one campsite in Larrau, the Ixtila (☎05.59.28.63.09; April to mid-Nov), and the Auberge Logibar, a gîte d'étape with a bar-restaurant 3km away at LOGIBAR (☎05.59.28.61.14; 30 places; €12pp restaurant closed Dec–Feb), close to the mouth of the Gorges d'Holzarte. This gorge is one of several in the region, cutting deep into northern slopes of the ridge that forms the frontier with Spain. A short track leads from Logibar across a lively, chilly stream to a car park, from where a steep, usually very busy path – a variant of the GR10 – climbs through the beech woods to the junction of the Holzarte gorge with the Gorges d'Olhadubi in about 45 minutes. Slung across the mouth of the latter is a spectacular Himalayan-style suspension bridge, the passerelle, which bounces and swings alarmingly as you walk out over the 180-metre drop. You can continue along the GR10 to Ste-Engrâce in seven hours, or down to the beginning of the Gorges de Kakuetta in about six; less ambitiously, the car-bound can fashion a very satisfying four-hour loop-hike taking in the entire Gorges d'Olhadubi by using the old GR10, which takes you over the passerelle, up along the west flank of the gorges, and then crosses it at the Pont d'Olhadubi before returning to Logibar. The route is obviously marked on Carte de Randonnées no. 2, "Pays Basque Est".

Licq and Abense-de-Haut

The Gave (Stream) de Larrau and the Gave de Ste-Engrâce unite downstream from Logibar to form the Saison, the major river of Haute Soule. About 2km below this junction on the D26, the pleasant village of LICQ (Licq-Atherey on old maps; Ligi in Euskera) offers accommodation which, given the scarcity of indoor facilities in the area, might come in handy at high season, especially for those with transport: the rambling, old-style Hôtel des Touristes-Bouchet (☎05.59.28.61.01; closed Dec & Jan; 4), with the best balconied rooms on the first floor and a grassy camping area down by the river. The restaurant is competent but surprisingly pricey; half-board taking in the menu du soir eases the pain. Just under 6km north in ABENSE-DE-HAUT, 🍷 Hôtel Restaurant Uhaltia-Le Pont d'Abense (☎05.59.28.54.60, 📧uhaltia@orange.fr; closed early Dec & Jan; 3) offers better value especially on half-board, with an accomplished restaurant drawing clientele from some distance; the best two rooms have terraces, and the small town of Tardets-Sorholus, with shops and bank ATMs, lies just 800m north.

The Gorges de Kakuetta and Gorges d'Ehujarré

Fifteen kilometres by road east of Larrau, well beyond the turning for Licq and Abense-de-Haut, you reach the Gorges de Kakuetta (mid-March to mid-Nov daily 8am–nightfall; €4), having veered off the D26 and onto the D113. About 4km along the latter, the minuscule hamlet of CASERNES offers a food shop opposite the mairie, and an attractive riverside campsite, the Ibarra (☎05.59.28.73.59; Easter–Oct).

Kakuetta gorge is truly dramatic and, outside peak season, not crowded at all; allow ninety minutes to two hours for the visit. It pays to be well shod – the metal catwalk or narrow path, by turns, are slippery in places and provided with safety cables where needed. The walls of the gorge are up to 300m high and scarcely more than 5m apart in spots, such that little sunlight penetrates except at midday from May to July. The air hangs heavy with mist produced by the dozens of seeps and tiny waterfalls, nurturing tenacious ferns, moss and other vegetation that thrives in the hothouse atmosphere. The path continues for about an hour up to a small cave beyond which only technical climbers need apply; just before it a twenty-metre waterfall (which you can walk behind) gushes out of a hole in the rock.

There's another, scarcely visited gorge, the Gorges d'Ehujarré, a short distance east at Senta, the easternmost of the three hamlets that comprise Ste-Engrâce (see below). It's a straightforward walk up – the route has been used for centuries for moving sheep up to the pastures of Pic Lakhoura – and then down along the gorge floor, but involves a five-hour round trip.

Ste-Engrâce and La-Pierre-St-Martin

Le bout du monde – “the end of the earth” – is what they used to call the tiny settlement of STE-ENGRÂCE, locked in its cul-de-sac valley beneath the Spanish frontier at the easternmost extremity of the Basque country. And, although a road now runs through it to Béarb and La-Pierre-St-Martin, the place remains beautifully remote and peaceful. Life is not so idyllic for the locals – there's no work and the young won't stay – but for an outsider not caught in the rural poverty trap, it has great charm.

Ste-Engrâce's hallmark is the eleventh-century Romanesque church in the hamlet of SENTA, which features in most coffee-table books about the Pyrenees. Focus of a popular festival the last two Sundays in July, it stands with its heavily buttressed walls, belfry and asymmetrical roof, a sharply defined and angular assertion of humanity against the often mist-shrouded bulwarks of the mountains behind. Inside, it has some excellent carved column capitals depicting among other things the Adoration of the Magi, lions devouring Christians, and King Solomon copulating with the Queen of Sheba. There's a 30-bunk gîte d'étape opposite the church, the Auberge Elichalt (☎05.59.28.61.63; €10), with a few chambres d'hôtes (🍷), a back garden to pitch a tent and a café-bar that serves light meals.

The road up to the ski resort of LA-PIERRE-ST-MARTIN (Arette-la-Pierre on old maps) gives fabulous views of the valley of Ste-Engrâce, through magnificent forests of pine and beech, though if the cloud is down, which it often is, you'll be lucky to see much at all. At a little col with a three-way junction, you're just inside the ancient county of Béarn, and can glimpse the descent east into the Vallée d'Aspe. The upper, right-hand turning leads into La-Pierre, an ugly ski resort with eighteen pistes (some very long), and the excellent Refuge Jeandel (☎05.59.66.14.46; 🌐www.refugejeandel.com; May–Sept; €10.50 in 3- to 6-bunk dorms), mostly serving trekkers on the GR10, with enthusiastic management and meals. The skiing here is better than you'd imagine at the modest altitude (2153m top point), owing to moist Atlantic exposure and some quite long runs for beginners and intermediates. There are also two nordic skiing areas nearby.

The Central Pyrenees

The Central Pyrenees, immediately east of the Pays Basque, hosts the range's highest mountain peaks, with the most spectacular southernmost

The Parc National des Pyrénées was created in 1967 to protect at least part of the high Pyrenees from the development engendered by modern tourism – ski resorts, roads, mountain-top restaurants, car parks and other inappropriate amenities. It runs for more than 100km along the Spanish border from Pic de Laraille (2147m), south of Lescun, in the west, to beyond Pic de la Munia (3133m), almost to the Aragnouet–Bielsa tunnel. Varying in altitude between 1070m and 3298m at the Pic de Vignemale, south of Cauterets, the park takes in the spectacular cirques of Gavarnie and Troumouse, as well as over two hundred lakes, more than a dozen valleys and about 400km of marked walking routes.

Through the banning of hunting and all dogs and vehicles (except local herders), the park has also provided sanctuary for many rare and endangered species of birds and mammals. Among them are chamois, marmots, ermines, genets, griffon vultures, golden eagles, eagle owls and capercaillies, to say nothing of the rich and varied flora. The most celebrated animal – extinct as of 2004 – is the Pyrenean brown bear, whose prewar numbers ran to as many as two hundred; the dozen specimens are all descended from introduced Slovenian brown bears. Although largely herbivorous, these bears will take sheep or cows when given the opportunity, and the mountain shepherds are their remorseless enemies. To appease them, local authorities pay prompt and generous compensation for any losses – the restocking programme remains highly controversial, with pro- and anti-graffiti prominent on the road approaches to the park, and troublesome animals being shot illegally by aggrieved farmers or herders on a regular basis.

The GR10 runs through the entire park on its 700-kilometre journey from coast to coast, starting at Argelès-sur-Mer on the Mediterranean and ending up at Hendaye-Plage on the Atlantic shore; the tougher Haute Randonnée Pyrénéenne (HRP) also finishes its course in Hendaye-Plage and runs roughly parallel to the GR10, but takes in much more rugged, alpine terrain. Hikers following either route are strongly advised to heed the warnings on p.758. Though the Pyrenees have a modest maximum altitude by world-mountain standards, their climate can be as extreme as ranges twice their height.

There are Maisons du Parc (park information centres) in Etsaut, Cauterets, Luz-St-Sauveur, Gavarnie, Laruns and Arrens-Marsous, giving information about the park's wildlife and vegetation, lists of accommodation options and the best walks. There are over a dozen wardened refuges in parc territory and plenty of hotels, campsites and gîtes just outside it, listed in the text of this chapter or highlighted on the map on p.792. Backcountry camping (camping sauvage) is forbidden in many areas, except for emergency bivouacs above 2000m elevation which must be disassembled by 9am. For an update on weather conditions in the département of Hautes-Pyrénées, telephone ☎08.92.68.02.65, or ☎3250, option 4.

section by the border protected within the Parc National des Pyrénées. Getting here by public transport is straightforward, at least as far as the foothill towns, served by frequent trains on the Bayonne–Toulouse line. But travelling uphill, and around once there, can be very slow. Buses – and most other traffic – keep mainly to the north–south valleys, making it difficult to switch from one valley system to the next without having to come all the way out of the mountains each time. The GR10 provides a good lateral link if you're prepared to walk, and it's possible to hitch across the main passes such as the Col d'Aubisque and Col du Tourmalet, though you'll often get left on the top by drivers who come up for the view and go back the same way.

Highlights – apart from the lakes, torrents, forests and 3000-metre peaks around Cauterets – are the cirques of Lescun, Gavarnie and Troumouse, each with its distinctive character. And for less sportif interests, there's many a flower-starred mountain meadow accessible by car, especially near Barèges and Luchon, in which to picnic. The only real urban centres are Pau, a probable entry point to the area, dull Tarbes and the tacky pilgrimage target of Lourdes. Great monuments of the bricks-and-mortar kind – with the exception of the fortified churches at Luz-St-Sauveur, St-Savin and St-Bertrand-de-Comminges – are equally scarce, though there are also wonderful Romanesque carvings on smaller churches at Oloron-Ste-Marie, St-Aventin and Valcabrère.

Pau and around

From humble beginnings as a crossing on the Gave de Pau (gave is “mountain river” in Gascon dialect), PAU became the capital of the ancient viscounty of Béarn in 1464, and of the French part of the kingdom of Navarre in 1512. In 1567 its sovereign, Henri d'Albret, married the sister of French King François I, Marguerite d'Angoulême, friend and protector of artists and intellectuals and herself the author of a celebrated Boccaccio-like tale (the Heptameron), who transformed the town into a centre of the arts and nonconformist thinking.

10

THE PYRENEES

Pau and around

Their daughter was Jeanne d'Albret, a philistine Protestant, whose zeal offended her own subjects as well as attracting the wrath of the Catholic king of France, Charles X, thus embroiling Béarn in the Wars of Religion – whose resolution, albeit only temporary, had to await the accession to the French throne of her own son, Henri III of Navarre, in 1589. An adroit politician, he renounced his faith to facilitate his transformation into Henri IV of France, quipping that “Paris is worth a Mass” and then appeasing the regional sensibilities of his Béarnais subjects by announcing that he was giving France to Béarn rather than Béarn to France. He did not incorporate Béarn into the French state; that was left to his heir and successor, Louis XIII, in 1620. As Pau's most famous son, Henri acquired a suitably colourful reputation. He was baptized in traditional Béarnais style with the local Jurançon wine, and his infant lips were rubbed with garlic. In his adult life he was known as the vert-galant for his prowess as a lover. He also gave France one of its more famous recipes, poulet au pot – chicken stuffed and boiled with vegetables: he reputedly said that he did not want anyone in his realm to be so poor as not to be able to afford a poulet in the pot once a week.

The least-expected thing about Pau is its English connection, which dates from the arrival of Wellington and his troops after the defeat of Maréchal Soult at Orthez in 1814. Seduced by its climate and persuaded (mistakenly) of its curative powers by the Scottish doctor Alexander Taylor, the English flocked to Pau throughout the nineteenth century, bringing along their peculiar cultural obsessions – fox-hunting, horse-racing, polo, croquet, cricket, golf (the first eighteen-hole course in continental Europe in 1860 and the first to admit women), tea salons and parks. When the railway arrived here in 1866, the French came, too: writers like Victor Hugo, Stendhal and Lamartine, as well as the socialites. The first French rugby club opened here in 1902, after which the sport spread throughout the southwest. During the 1950s, natural gas was discovered at nearby Lacq, bringing new jobs and subsidiary industries, as well as massive sulphur-dioxide-based pollution, now reduced by filtration – and the steady depletion of the gas fields. In addition, there's a well-respected university, founded in 1972, whose 15,000 students give the town a youthful buzz.

Pau lies within easy reach of numerous small, picturesque villages in north-west Béarn, as well as the GR65 footpath that runs some 60km down to the Spanish border.

Arrival and information

Pau's airport (☎05.59.33.33.00, 🌐www.pau.aeroport.fr), is increasingly busy, with Ryanair arrivals from London (Stansted) exceeding those at Biarritz and four flights weekly from Transavia from Amsterdam. Regular navettes run to the city centre (€5 one way), as well as to Lourdes and Tarbes (€6), but a taxi to town will cost about €20. The town lies on the A64 Autoroute Pyrénéenne and on the main east–west rail route, with connections to Bayonne and Biarritz to the west, and Lourdes, Tarbes and Toulouse to the east, as well as to Bordeaux and Paris. The gare SNCF, for both trains and SNCF buses, is on the southern edge of the city centre by the riverside. TPR buses leave from a terminal at 4 rue Lapouble, near place de Verdun, whilst CITRAM buses leave from a stop at the west end of the Parc Beaumont. Services run south down the Vallée d'Ossau and to Oloron-Ste-Marie, with onward connections from there to the Vallée d'Aspe. Parking is predictably difficult; there are a few free spaces at the far west end of boulevard des Pyrénées and on place de Verdun, otherwise shell out for kerbside meters or use the giant underground car park at place Georges-Clemenceau.

A free funicular (out of service indefinitely) used to carry you up from the train station to the boulevard des Pyrénées, opposite place Royale; until it's repaired, pedestrian rampways help tackle the grade. At the far end of the place is the tourist office (July & Aug daily 9am–6pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 9.30am–1pm; ☎05.59.27.27.08, 🌐www.pau.fr). Librairie des Pyrénées at 14 rue St-Louis stocks a wide range of books and maps on the mountains.

Accommodation

For a friendly, clean and quiet budget hotel, try the Hôtel le Matisse, 17 rue Mathieu-Lalanne, opposite the Musée des Beaux-Arts (☎05.59.27.73.80; ②), all rooms with showers, some with toilets. Mid-range options include the excellent-value 🦋 Central, 15 rue Léon-Daran (☎05.59.27.33.28, 🌐www.hotelcentralpau.com; ③–④), with unusually tasteful room decor and Wi-Fi connection throughout, or the Postillon at 10 Cours Camou behind place de Verdun (☎05.59.72.83.00, 🌐www.hotel-le-postillon.fr; ③), an old coaching inn arrayed around its own courtyard, with parking possible on the place. Amongst a half-dozen three-star contenders, most stylish is 2005-renovated Le Montpensier (☎05.59.27.42.72, 📧hotel.montpensier-pau@orange.fr; ④), at 36 rue Montpensier, an eighteenth-century building with private parking, non-smoking rooms and Internet access.

There is a hostel at 30 rue Michel-Hounau (☎05.59.11.05.05, 🌐www.ldjpau.org), and a single surviving municipal campsite, La Plaine des Sports on boulevard du Cami-Salié, off avenue Sallénave towards the autoroute, on the northern edge of town (☎05.59.02.30.49; May to late Sept).

The Town

Pau has no must-see sights or museums, enabling you to enjoy its relaxed and friendly elegance without any sense of guilt. The parts to wander are the streets behind the boulevard des Pyrénées, especially the western end, which stretches along the rim of the scarp above the Gave de Pau, from the castle to the Palais Beaumont, now a convention centre, in the English-style Parc Beaumont. On a (rare) clear day, the view from the boulevard encompasses a hundred-kilometre sweep of the highest Pyrenean peaks, with the distinctive Pic du Midi d'Ossau slap in front of you.

In the narrow streets around the castle and down in the gully of the chemin du Hédas are numerous cafés, restaurants, bars and boutiques, with the main market in the halles just northeast on place de la République each Saturday morning. The château itself (exterior gardens free, unenclosed) is very much a landmark building, though not much remains of its original appearance beyond the southeasterly brick keep built by Gaston Fébus in 1370. The handsome Renaissance windows and other details on the inner courtyard were added by Henri d'Albret. Louis-Philippe renovated it in the nineteenth century after it had stood empty for two hundred years, and Napoléon III and Eugénie titivated it further with stellar vaulting, chandeliers and coffered ceilings to make it suitable for weekend house parties. The Musée National inside is visible by a skull-thumpingly boring, French-only, one-hour guided tour (daily: mid-June to mid-Sept 9am–12.15pm & 1.30–5.45pm, mid-Sept to mid-June 9.30–11.45am & 2–5pm, €5 except €3.50 Sun), but this is the only way to see the vivid eighteenth-century tapestries with their wonderfully observed scenes of rural life, or Henri IV memorabilia like the giant turtle shell that allegedly served as his cradle.

A short distance northeast of the château, the mildly interesting Musée Bernadotte, 6 rue Tran (Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3), is the birthplace of the man who, having served as one of Napoleon's commanders, went on to become Charles XIV of Sweden. As well as fine pieces of traditional Béarnais furniture, the house contains some valuable works of art collected over his lifetime. Pau's other museum, the Musée des Beaux-Arts in rue Mathieu-Lalanne (daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3), has an eclectic collection of little-known works from various European schools spanning the fourteenth to twentieth centuries; the only really world-class items are Rubens' The Last Judgement and Degas' The Cotton Exchange, a slice of finely observed belle-époque New Orleans life.

Eating and drinking

Pau's smarter restaurants are concentrated in the pedestrianized lanes around the château, on place Royal or in rue du Hédas, though there are a few choices elsewhere. Bars, many themed (Australia, rugby and so on), cluster immediately around the crescent of boulevard Aragon, about halfway along boulevard des Pyrénées.

Le Berry rue Gachet, near corner rue Louis-Barthou. Less than brilliant siting, by the "rabbit hole" of the subterranean car park, but compensated for by the excellent brasserie grub (magret de canard, Chateaubriand steaks). Expect a wait for interior tables; service until 11pm; budget €20–28 à la carte.

Le Champagne 5 place Royale. A newish, popular, upscale brasserie with carte or five formules at €11–22; there's a lovely interior with swirling fans, or eat out on the place in fine weather. Service barely copes with the crush, however.

Chez Maman 6 rue de Château. Simple but palatable crêperie/cidrerie right opposite the castle, which doesn't unduly abuse its unbeatable position; a good option for vegetarians, with big salads – for two courses and a bit of cider you'll have change from a €20 note. Tues–Sun 11am–midnight.

Au Fin Gourmet, 24 av Gaston-Lacoste, opposite the gare SNCF. Trim, modern place with a few game-oriented lunch menus (pigeon, rabbit) from €17, but best allow €35-plus à la carte. Closed Sun eve & Mon, plus 2 weeks in mid-summer.

O'Gascon 13 rue du Château. The most popular and reasonable of the four non-pizzerias on this little place; their €27 menu tradition – big salad, stuffed quail, free dessert choice – is excellent. Supper only except Sun lunch.

La Table d'Hôte 1 rue du Hédas. Elegant bare-brick restaurant in a former warehouse, one of the first to colonize this trendy area and relying on the backbone of traditional French cooking: duck, pork, foie gras, lamb. Affordable menus at €23–29; service can be leisurely. Closed all Sun, Mon lunch.

Around Pau

One excursion worth making from Pau, particularly for families, is to the Grottes de Bétharram (www.grottes-de-betharram.com; guided tours only late March to late Oct daily 9am–noon & 1.30–5.30pm; early Feb to late March groups only Mon–Fri 2.30–4pm; €9.50) at St-Pé-de-Bigorre, just off the D937 between Pau and Lourdes, 14km from the latter. Part of the eighty-minute tour around its spectacular stalactites and stalagmites takes place in a barge on an underground lake; the remaining kilometre is by miniature railway.

In the opposite (northwest) direction from Pau lies tourist-board-dubbed Béarn des Gaves, so called because several gaves – de Pau, de Oloron, the Seleys and the Saison – slant across the landscape before mingling with each other or, ultimately, the Adour. The four major destinations here duly have strategic riverside locations, and three were traditional stops on the Chemin de St-Jacques, though the main variant of the modern GR65 route traces a course across the southeast of the territory.

Orthez

Thirty kilometres northwest of Pau, ORTHEZ was the original capital of Béarn, its wealth due in large part to its beautiful and still-surviving thirteenth-century fortified bridge, which controlled the most important commercial route across the Gave de Pau for English and Flemish textiles, Aragonese wool, olive oil and wine. The town also serves as a gateway to Haute Soule in the Pays Basque: SNCF buses run from Puyôo, 12km west, to Salies-de-Béarn, Sauveterre-de-Béarn and Mauléon.

The tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.59.69.37.50) occupies the sixteenth-century Maison Jeanne d’Albret on rue du Bourg-Vieux, which also hosts a Musée Jeanne d’Albret on the second floor (Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €2.50), tracing the history of local Protestantism. Other fine old houses can be found in the town centre, especially along rue Moncade, the continuation of rue du Bourg-Vieux, where the five-sided Tour Moncade is all that remains of Orthez’s castle. The church of St-Pierre, close to the tourist office, still has some interesting Gothic sculptures, though it was badly damaged when the town was sacked by Jeanne d’Albret’s Protestant general Montgomery in 1569. Should you need to stay overnight, your best option is the historic, en-suite Hôtel Restaurant Au Temps de la Reine Jeanne, opposite the tourist office at 44 rue du Bourg-Vieux (☎05.59.67.00.76, 🌐www.reine-jeanne.fr; 📍; closed late Feb to early March), with a traditional-fare restaurant (menus from €18). The municipal campsite, Camping de la Source is on boulevard Charles-de-Gaulle (☎05.59.69.04.81, 🌐www.camping-orthez.com; April–Oct).

Salies-de-Béarn to Navarrenx

Fifteen kilometres west from Orthez (TPR bus from Pau), SALIES-DE-BÉARN is a typical Béarnais village of winding lanes and flower-decked houses with brightly painted woodwork. The River Saleys, hardly more than a stream here, runs through the middle of it, separating the old village from the nineteenth-century development that sprang up to exploit the powerful saline spring for which it has long been famous. You can try the curative waters yourself at the wonderful nineteenth-century thermal baths (🌐www.thermes-de-salies.com), in place Jardin Public, starting from €8 for a plunge in the outdoor, 32°C pool (daily May–Sept). The tourist office is 150m around the corner on rue des Bains (mid-June to mid-Sept Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; mid-Sept to mid-June Mon–Sat 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.59.38.00.33, 🌐www.bearn-gaves.com).

Accommodation includes the the economical but en-suite Au Petit Béarn (☎05.59.38.17.42, ☎05.59.65.01.75; 📍; closed 2 weeks in Feb, restaurant closed Fri eve & Sat noon Oct–Feb) on rue Bellecave, off the road to Sauveterre. A plusher but good-value option is the Helios Golf (☎05.59.38.37.59, 🌐www.golf.salies.com; 📍), on the northeastern outskirts of town, by the twelve-hole course. The closest local campsite is Mosqueros, 1km from the thermes (☎05.59.38.12.94; mid-March to Oct).

Heading south, the D933 winds over hilly farming country to SAUVETERRE-DE-BÉARN, another pretty country town beautifully sited on an escarpment high above the Gave d’Oloron, just before it mingles with the Saison. From the terrace by the thirteenth-century church of St-André

– over-restored but still retaining a fine west-portal relief of Christ in Glory
– you look down over the river and the remains of fortified, half-ruined Pont de la Légende, while at the west end of the compact cit  médi vale stand the ruins of a ch teau built by Gaston F bus. A pedestrian-only lane leads down to the bridge and river, full of bathers on hot days despite its murky greenness; many come from the adjacent, tent-friendly Camping du Gave ( 05.59.38.53.30; mid-April to mid-Oct). Surviving indoor accommodation comprises Auberge du Saumon ( 05.59.38.53.20; closed mid-Jan to mid-Feb & Sat low season;  ), an old coaching inn across the river on the road south out of town, and less remote La Maison de Navarre in quartier St-Marc ( 05.59.38.55.28,  www.lamaisondenavarre.com; closed Feb, restaurant closed Sun eve low season & Wed;  ), a converted garden-set mansion.

Just across the river, the D936 bears southeast along the flat valley bottom to NAVARENX, 20km away on the Pau–Maul on bus route, a sleepy, old-fashioned market town built as a bastide in 1316 and still surrounded by its medieval walls; having crossed the medieval bridge, you enter from the west by the fortified Porte St-Antoine. The H tel du Commerce just inside on place des Casernes makes an agreeable place to stay ( 05.59.66.50.16,  www.hotel-commerce.fr;  ; closed mid-Dec to Jan; excellent restaurant with menus from  18). GR 65 hikers have two pilgrims' g tes to choose from: the spartan Communal on place du Forail, housed in a medieval arsenal ( 05.59.66.02.67, all year, 35 places,  10 pp) or the higher-standard Charbel some way out on chemin du Moulin ( 05.59.66.07.25,  www.etapecharbel.com; April–Oct; 20 places;  13pp, includes 6 double rooms), set in a parkland with a pond. There's also a riverside campsite, the Beau Rivage, in all e des Marronniers southwest of the ramparts ( 05.59.66.10.00, mid-March to mid-Oct).

Lourdes and around

LOURDES, 37km southeast of Pau by either of two routes, has just one function. Over seven million Catholic pilgrims arrive here each year, and the town is totally given over to looking after and exploiting them. Lourdes was hardly more than a village before 1858, when Bernadette Soubirous, 14-year-old daughter of a poor local miller, had the first of eighteen visions of the Virgin Mary in the Grotte de Massabielle by the Gave de Pau. Since then, Lourdes has become one of the biggest attractions in this part of France, many of its visitors hoping for a miraculous cure for conventionally intractable ailments.

The first large-scale pilgrimage took place in 1873, organized by a fundamentalist Catholic movement called the Assomptionistes, whose avowed purpose was to stem the advancing tide of republicanism and rationalism. They took over the management of Lourdes, shoving aside the local clergy who had wanted to organize the pilgrimages themselves. Adroit propagandists and agitators, the Assomptionistes sought to promote their cause by publishing a cheap mass-circulation paper called La Croix, aimed at the poor and uneducated.

Practically every shop is given over to the sale of the unbelievable (in all senses) religious kitsch: Bernadette and/or the Virgin in every shape and size, adorning barometers, thermometers, plastic tree trunks, key rings, empty bottles that you can fill with holy Lourdes water, bellows, candles, sweets and illuminated plastic grottoes. There's even a waxworks museum, the Mus e Gr vin, at 87 rue de la Grotte (daily: Easter to mid-July & late Aug to Oct daily 9am–noon & 1.45–6.30pm; mid-July to Aug 9am–6.30pm;  6), with over a hundred life-size figures illustrating the lives of Bernadette and Christ. Clustered around the miraculous grotto are the churches of the Domaine de la Grotte, an annexe to the town proper that sprang up in the century following Bernadette's visions. The first to be built was an underground crypt in 1866, followed by the flamboyant double Basilique du Rosaire et de l'Immaculée Conception (1871–1883), and then in 1958 by the massive subterranean Basilique St-Pie-X, which claims to be able to fit in 20,000 people at a time. The Grotte de Massabielle itself is the focus of the pilgrimages – a moisture-blackened overhang by the riverside with a marble statue on high of the Virgin, where pilgrims queue to circumbulate, stroking the grotto wall with their left hand. To one side are taps for filling souvenir containers with the holy spring water; to the other are the bruloirs or rows of braziers where enormous votive candles burn, to prolong the prayers of supplicants.

△ Grotte de Massabielle, Lourdes

Musée Pyrénéen

Lourdes' only secular attraction is its château, poised on a rocky bluff east of the Gave de Pau, guarding the approaches to the valleys and passes of the central Pyrenees. Briefly an English stronghold in the late fourteenth century, it later became a state prison. Inside, it houses the surprisingly excellent Musée Pyrénéen (1hr guided visits daily: April to mid-July & mid-Aug to Sept 9am–noon & 1.30–6.30pm; mid-July to mid-Aug 9am–6.30pm; Oct–March 9am–noon & 2–5/6pm; last tour 1hr before closing; €5). Its collections include Pyrenean fauna, all sorts of fascinating pastoral and farming gear, and an interesting section on the history of Pyrenean mountaineering.

Practicalities

Tarbes-Ossun-Lourdes airport receives only charters (for summer pilgrims) at the moment, but a no-frills airline may serve it in the near future; there's no shuttle bus at present, and a taxi the 11km into Lourdes costs an inflated €22.

Lourdes' gare SNCF is on the northeast edge of the town centre, at the end of avenue de la Gare; the gare routière is in the central place Capdevielle, and the not terribly helpful tourist office is in place Peyramale (Easter–June & Sept to mid-Oct Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 11am–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–6pm; mid-Oct to Easter Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.62.42.77.40, 🌐www.lourdes-infotourisme.com).

Lourdes has more hotels than any city in France outside Paris, mostly modest establishments concentrated in the streets around the castle. A comfortable hotel, opposite the food halles, some 300m south of place Peyramale, is the two-star Hôtel d'Albret (☎05.62.94.75.00, 📧albret.taverne.lourdes@libertysurf.fr; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-March), with the affiliated Taverne de Bigorre on the ground floor offering a range of menus (€19 gets you three hearty courses). The nearest campsite is the cramped Poste, 26 rue de Langelle, just south of the gare SNCF (☎05.62.94.40.35; April to mid-Oct).

Tarbes

Twenty minutes away by train to the north, TARBES is a relatively dull town dominated by its history as a military stronghold, but useful for visiting Lourdes or launching into the mountains to the south. Tarbes' only real highlight is the Napoleonic stud farm, Les Haras, entered from chemin de Mauhourat (🌐www.haras-nationaux.fr; 1hr guided visits by appointment only: tours depart July & Aug Mon–Fri half-hourly 10–11am & 2–5pm, rest of year Mon–Fri 10am, 11am, 2pm, 3pm & 4pm; also some Sun half-hourly 2.30–4pm; ☎05.62.56.30.80; €6), best known for the cheval Tarbais, bred from English, Basque and Arabian stock as a cavalry horse. You can watch them drilling at 3.15pm except February to July when the horses are out to stud.

The gare SNCF is on avenue Maréchal-Joffre, about 500m north of the centre, and the gare routière on the other side of town on place au Bois, off rue Larrey. The tourist office is near the central place de Verdun, at 3 cours Gambetta (Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; ☎05.62.51.30.31, 🌐www.tarbes.com). Tarbes has some reasonably priced hotels in the vicinity of the station, the best of these being Hôtel Isard, 70 av Maréchal-Joffre (☎05.62.93.06.69, ☎05.62.93.99.55; 📍); there's also a HI hostel at 88 av Alsace-Lorraine (☎05.62.38.91.20, 📧aj.tarbes@orange.fr). Most people will probably only stop long enough for a meal, so luckily there's more choice in restaurants. A bit out of the way, but worth the trek east of the Jardin Massey, is 🐾 Chez Patrick at 6 rue Adolphe-d'Eichtal, a cheery working-class institution that fills by 12.30pm and features a sustaining five-course menu (including wine and coffee). Rues Bertrand-Barère and parallel Victor-Hugo in particular are good hunting grounds for everything from Moroccan to local cooking, but the town's best is indisputably L'Ambroiserie occupying an old mansion at 48 rue Abbé-Tornee near the Préfecture, the département's only Michelin-starred restaurant. There's garden seating on fine days, and an affordable weekday lunch menu, but budget €85 à la carte otherwise.

The valleys of the Aspe and Ossau

The parallel north to south valleys of the Aspe and Ossau present the central Pyrenees at their most undeveloped, especially in the Aspe valley, because inappropriate topography and unreliable snow conditions have precluded ski-resort construction – but what tourism has failed to do, a major road-building scheme threatens to achieve (see box below). To see the best of the region you should get out a large-scale map and walk perpendicular to the line of the valleys, using the handful of refuges or camping in permitted areas along the way.

Oloron-Ste-Marie

The valley of the Aspe begins at the grey town of OLORON-STE-MARIE, around 45km west of Lourdes and only 33km southwest of Pau, where the mountain streams of the Aspe and Ossau meet to form the Gave d'Oloron. It's served by train from Pau as well as by CITRAM buses, with daily SNCF buses continuing up the valley to Urdos, a few of these continuing as far as Canfranc in Spain. Oloron was long famous as the manufacturing centre for the famous woollen pancake-shaped beret basque, once the standard headgear for all French men but now seldom seen; the single surviving factory has had to branch out into more fashionable hats.

There is little here to detain the visitor other than the Cathédrale Ste-Marie across the Gave d'Aspe, with its beautiful Romanesque west portal in Pyrenean marble. In the upper arch, the elders of the Apocalypse play violins and rebecs, while in the second arch scenes from medieval life – a cooper, the slaying of

The Vallée d'Aspe autoroute

Since the early 1990s, the Vallée d'Aspe has been the focus of bitter controversies between mainly out-of-area environmentalists, and official planners plus local boosters of a multi-lane autoroute through the valley. This was part of a wider campaign for two or more tunnels under the middle of the range, a strategy with stronger advocacy in Spain, keen to export its heavy and/or perishable goods – paving stones, manufactured goods, farm produce – as quickly and cheaply as possible to northern Europe.

In the case of the Aspe, an all-weather tunnel was finally opened in 2003 under the Col du Somport at the head of the valley, after being delayed some years by cost overruns and design changes required by the environmental litigants, many of them part of the organization CSAVA, based at Cette-Eygun. Locals at first bitterly resented now-defunct CSAVA and its flamboyant chief Eric Pétetin, seeing increased north-south communication as the only hope of keeping valley communities from dying on the vine, but since the tunnel has opened and the next phase of the project looms, there's been a change of heart as implications sink in. The slopes of the Aspe would be blasted and engineered to accommodate a six-lane highway carrying hundreds of articulated lorries daily, blighting the villages which were supposed to be rejuvenated by the project. Everywhere in the area you'll see bumper stickers with a terse "NON" and the silhouette of a truck in the middle of the "O".

As a condition of the tunnel's construction, provision was supposed to have been made to rehabilitate the long-abandoned trans-frontier railway to carry freight as well as passengers; although EU funding has been approved "in principle", the only sign of rehabilitation is the current restoration of Canfranc station, just over the border, as a hotel and convention centre in expectation of increased traffic. Ironically, two factors are conspiring to make the Somport tunnel obsolete within a few years of opening: spiralling costs will soon make the mega-motorway unfeasible, and the low-wage economies of the EU's newest Central European members will render Spanish exports uneconomical in comparison. The likely outcome may instead be massive expansion of port facilities around Perpignan and Bayonne at each end of the range, to take pressure off the hopelessly lorry-congested motorways there.

a wild boar, fishing for salmon – are represented. The gallant knight on horseback over the outer column on the right is Gaston IV, Count of Béarn, who commissioned the portal on his return from the first Crusade at the beginning of the twelfth century – hence the inclusion of Saracens in chains among the sculptures. The magnificent studded doors were a present from Henri IV. Inside, well away from the main area of worship, stands a stoup reserved for use by the Cagots, a stark reminder of centuries-long persecution and segregation of this mysterious group of people, thought by some to have been lepers and by others to have been of Visigothic origin. Across the river in Oloron, hilltop Sainte-Croix is one of the oldest Romanesque structures in Béarn, its unusual interior vaulting created by thirteenth-century Spanish stonemasons in imitation of the Great Mosque in Córdoba.

Oloron's tourist office lies west of the Aspe in the Villa Bourdeu (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; ☎05.59.39.98.00, 🌐www.ot-oloron-ste-marie.fr). Accommodation nearby includes the Hôtel Bristol at 9 rue Carréot (☎05.59.39.43.78, ☎05.59.39.08.19; 🍷) with a restaurant (menus from €18; closed Sun lunch), or the Hôtel de la Paix at 24 av Sadi-Carnot opposite the train station (☎05.59.39.02.63; 🍷), quiet despite the location and with easier parking. The closest campsite is Camping du Stade, on the D919 Arrette road (☎05.59.39.11.26; May–Sept). Independent restaurants are not especially numerous; try cheap and cheerful La Cour des Miracles at 13 place de la Cathédrale, opposite the Romanesque portal, or Samia, a late-serving Moroccan eatery in Oloron on place Amédée-Gabe.

Along the Aspe valley

The narrow enclosed world of the valley proper, an important variant of the Chemin de St-Jacques, begins south of Oloron at the village of Escot. South of there, the road follows the river through a narrow defile, past the attractive riverside village of SARRANCE, where the Ecomusée du Vallée d'Aspe (July–Sept daily 10am–noon & 2–7pm; Oct–June Sat & Sun 2–6pm; €4), devoted to local history, is less interesting than the ancient monastic church of Notre-Dame-de-la-Pierre, particularly its wonderfully rustic cloister with wood columns and pyramidal roofs over the upper gallery.

Some 7km further south is BEDOUS, the largest settlement in the upper valley, with a miniature château, an arcaded mairie and the gîte d'étape Le Mandragot (☎05.59.34.59.33), all on or near place de l'Église. Just outside town on the minor road east to Aydius is the Moulin d'Orcun, the last surviving stone-grinding flour mill in the area, now run as a museum (guided visits July–Aug daily 11am, 3pm, 4pm, 5pm 6pm; Sept–June by appointment only on ☎05.59.34.74.91).

Lescun and its cirque

Six steep kilometres southwest of the N134 and valley floor at L'Estanguet, the ancient stone-and-stucco houses of LESCUN huddle together on the north-east slopes of a huge and magnificent green cirque. The floor of the cirque and the lower slopes, dimpled with vales and hollows, have been gently shaped by generations of farming, while to the west it's overlooked by the great grey molars of Le Billare, Trois Rois and Ansabère, beyond which is the storm-lashed bulk of the Pic d'Anie (2504m). Over 1km below the village by the stream draining the cirque, the grassy Camping Le Lauzart (☎05.59.34.51.77; May–Sept) must be one of the best sites anywhere, with an unimpeded view of the peaks. Lescun itself has a lovely old antique-furnished hotel, the Pic d'Anie (☎05.59.34.71.54, ☎05.59.34.53.22; ③; April–Sept), with a decent restaurant and a gîte d'étape opposite (same number).

The obvious walk in the area is along the GR10 in the direction of La-Pierre-St-Martin. From Lescun, the path keeps close to a minor road as far as the abandoned Refuge de Labéroutat – around a ninety-minute walk – then crosses meadows before entering beech forest beneath the organ-pipe crags of Les Orgues de Camplong, with fantastic views of the pine-stippled ridges of Billare. It emerges above the tree line in a long, hanging valley by the primitive Cabane d'Ardinet, reaching the shepherds' hut at Cap de la Baigt (1689m) in a further ninety minutes. From there you can either continue on the GR towards La-Pierre-St-Martin, or swing south for the Col des Anies and the Pic d'Anie itself – a good two and a half hours to the summit.

Cette-Eygun south to the border

A couple of kilometres beyond the turn-off for Lescun, CETTE-EYGUN offers, in its upper Cette quarter, the excellent, welcoming 🏠 Au Château d'Arance (☎05.59.34.75.50, 🌐www.auchateaudarance.com; ④), a converted twelfth-century manor made very contemporary with Wi-Fi access in the modern rooms; meals (pricy at €26 menu) and leisurely breakfast (7.30–11am) are served on a terrace with unbeatable views, whilst co-managed, 2006-built chambres d'hôtes (③) occupy a nearby house, next to the swimming pool.

Some 3.5km southeast at ETSAUT, there's a Maison du Parc (May to mid-Sept daily 10am–noon & 1.30–6.30pm; ☎05.59.34.88.30) in the old gare SNCF. There's a gîte d'étape beyond the church, Auberge La Garbure (☎05.59.34.88.98, 🌐www.garbure.net; €12pp), and a hotel on the square, Des Pyrénées (☎05.59.34.88.62, ☎05.59.34.86.96; ②; closed mid-Dec to mid-Jan) with a restaurant, though you may find the welcome warmer across the place at Bar Tabac Le Randonneur, which does plats du jour in the bar or full meals in the attractive diner upstairs, as well as offering Wi-Fi Internet access (€1 donation). If you're not travelling with a laptop, the post office has Internet access for slightly higher rates.

BORCE, a more attractive medieval village 1km away on the west flank of the valley, is home to more gîtes: La Communal (☎05.59.34.86.40; 18 places; €10pp) in the centre, above the bar-épicerie, plus the historic Hospitalet de Borce (no phone; 6 places) on the north outskirts, next to the original pilgrims' church which is now an annexe of the Ecomusée in Sarrance.

Further upstream at one of the narrowest, rockiest, steepest points of the Aspe – a serious challenge to would-be motorway builders (see box, p.790) – squats the menacing Fort du Portalet (privately owned), which served as a prison for 1930s Socialist premier Léon Blum under Pétain's Vichy government, and then for Pétain himself after the liberation of France. Just before the fort, the GR10 threads east along the Chemin de la Mâtüre, an eighteenth-century mule path hacked out of the precipitous rock slabs that form the sides of a dizzy ravine, facilitating the transport of tree trunks felled for use as ships' masts. The really spectacular part – which however, has minimal exposure and attracts lots of young families – ends after about 45min from the upper parking area (1hr from the lower car park at Pont de Cebers south of Etsaut); the GR10 continues to the Lacs d'Ayous refuge (see p.796) opposite the Pic du Midi d'Ossau in five-plus hours, but by careful study of Carte de Randonnée no. 3, "Béarn", it's easy to form a three-hour loop hike returning you to the Pont de Cebers area on local trails.

Less than 2km south of the fort, URDOS is the last village on the French side of the frontier, and has arguably the best hotel-restaurant in the valley: Hôtel des Voyageurs (☎05.59.34.88.05, @hotel.voyageurs.urdos.@orange.fr; 📍) – with an annexe across the road known as the Hôtel Somport – which serves a wonderful, four-course set dinner menu (€26). They also keep a basic pilgrims' gîte (€10pp). From here, you can continue through the tunnel under the Col de Somport and on to Canfranc in Spain, the terminus for trains from Jaca, though in fine weather the far more scenic old road over the pass is not that strenuous a drive.

Along the Ossau valley

The Ossau valley is notable mainly for its distinctive Pic du Midi, around which are some beautiful lakes set in rugged country; the usual base for visiting is tiny Gabas hamlet. The main valley market town of Laruns is pleasant enough, and the route east via the spa of Eaux-Bonnes and the ski resort of Gourette has its appeal. Pic Bus runs two daily bus services in summer and winter peak seasons to the top of the valley via Laruns and Gabas, calling once in each direction at the trailhead for the most visited lakes, whilst CITRAM provides service most of the year to Eaux-Bonnes and Gourette.

Pau to Laruns

Between Pau and Laruns, there are only a couple places worth stopping. First is ARUDY, for its Maison d'Ossau (July & Aug 10am–noon & 3–6pm; rest of year Mon 10am–noon, Tues, Thurs & Sat 2.30–5pm, Sun 3–6pm; €3), which offers a comprehensive account of the prehistoric Pyrenees and an exhibition of the flora and fauna of the parc national. Some 7km upvalley from here, ASTE-BÉON is home to La Falaise aux Vautours (@www.falaise-aux-vautours.com; May & Sept daily 2–6pm; June–Aug daily 10.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; rest of year school vacations only daily 2–5pm; €6), a vulture-watching installation where over a hundred breeding pairs and their chicks are observable nesting naturally.

LARUNS, on the valley bottom just before steep wooded heights rise towards the border, comes alive for its August 15–16 festival, with revellers in trad dress and live music. Otherwise it's undistinguished but with ample facilities. The tourist office on the main place de la Mairie (Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sun 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.59.05.31.41) stands back-to-back with a Maison du Parc (mid-June to mid-Sept daily 10am–1pm & 2–6.30pm/no phone). Accommodation includes the central Hôtel d'Ossau (☎05.59.05.30.14; 📍), with a restaurant out front, or the characterful Hôtel de France, at the eastern end of town opposite the disused gare SNCF (☎05.59.05.33.71; 📍). There's also Chalet-Refuge L'Embarcadère (☎05.59.05.41.88; 28 places; cheap meals offered; closed Mon–Tues low season), more or less opposite the Hôtel de France. The nearest all-year camp-sites are Ayguebère (☎05.59.05.38.55) and Pont Lauquère (☎05.59.05.35.99), both in Le Pon quarter. Two of the few independent restaurants are found on rue du Bourguet off the square: L'Arrégalet at no. 37 (closed lunch Mon & Tues), strong on local recipes, and Auberge Bellevue at no.55 (closed Mon eve & all Tues low season), with three varied menus and brasserie grub available between main-meal hours.

Eaux-Chaudes and Gabas

The road to Gabas, 13km south, winds steeply into the upper reaches of the Gave d'Ossau valley, through dozy EAUX-CHAUDÉS spa, whose one bright spot is the excellent 🍷 Auberge La Caverne (☎05.59.05.36.40, 🌐auberge.lacaverne.free.fr; all year), run by a hard-working couple who offer both dorms (€12 pp) and doubles (1) in an atmospheric old building, as well as very salubrious table d'hôte meals (€12 includes house wine and coffee).

Primarily a base for climbers and walkers, there's little to GABAS beyond a minuscule chapel and abundant accommodation – which fills quickly in summer. Most comfortable of this, near the south end of “town”, is Le Chalet des Pyrénées (☎05.59.05.30.51, ☎05.59.05.33.64; closed Nov; 3), with vast common areas including a lawn garden, tennis court and restaurant, with the best small but en-suite rooms facing the river. At Gabas' north entrance, Hôtel Chez Vignau (☎05.59.05.34.06, ☎05.59.05.46.12; all year; 2) has basic rooms with toilets down the hall, but a good restaurant across the road, though the best independent restaurant is Du Pic du Midi up the road (menus €12–22). There's also the well-run CAF Chalet-Refuge (☎05.59.05.33.14; 46 places in dorms; open June–Sept & winter weekends except mid-Oct to mid-Nov; €8.20pp) 700m above Gabas, with unusually good food.

Pic du Midi d'Ossau

The Pic du Midi d'Ossau, with its craggy, mitten-shaped summit (2884m), is a classic Pyrenean landmark, visible for kilometres around. From Gabas, it's a steep 4.5-kilometre climb on the D231 road (1 daily morning bus) to the artificial Lac de Bious-Artigues, so named because it flooded the artigue or “mountain pasture” that formerly existed beside the infant gave. Drivers will be directed by park wardens to one of two car parks, the higher one just above the dam. There are no longer any facilities of note here (though a refuge will supposedly be built in 2008), so come prepared.

A hiking circuit of the peak, excluding the summit – the Tour du Pic du Midi – takes about six hours. It can be broken by a stay at the CAF Refuge de Pombie (☎05.59.05.71.78; open June–Sept, weekends May & Oct), below the southeast flank of the mountain. From Bious-Artigues, follow the GR10, initially a broad track, along the gave; at the turning right to the Lacs d'Ayous (see below), instead cross the Pont de Bious, following a signpost indicating “Pombie Par Peyreget”, and continue upstream across an expanse of flat meadow. There follows a steepish zigzagging climb on a path to the junction with the HRP route, which takes you (1hr 30min from the dam) to the tiny Lac de Peyreget. Once over the Col de Peyreget (2320m), you descend east – with great views – to Refuge de Pombie (about 3hr 30min along). The path continues north via the Col de Suzon – where the standard semi-technical ascent of the pic begins – then finally west back to Bious-Artigues.

The Tour des Lacs

Starting again from the Bious-Artigues trailhead, the loop around the lakes of Ayous, Bersau and Castérou is another, very popular classic, in some ways more impressive than circling the Pic du Midi d'Ossau itself, especially if you spend the night above the lakes to get the quintessential dawn view of the peak silhouetted against the rising sun and reflected in the slaty waters of Lac Gentau.

Begin walking as for the Tour du Pic du Midi, but instead of crossing the Pont de Bious, bear right onto the GR10 – a sign says “Lacs d'Ayous 1hr 30min” – to climb through woods of pine and beech, with ever-widening views of the valley scattered with herds of livestock. Near the top, you reach three small lakes, the third and largest of which is Lac Gentau; on its banks there's an expanse of flat, soft meadow for camping, permitted here as you're just outside the PNP.

Above looms the 2002-rebuilt Refuge d'Ayous (1982m; ☎05.59.05.37.00; 47 places; mid-June to mid-Sept).

Continue south on the obvious path to Lac Bersau, dominated by the peaks – both nearly 2400m high – of Larry and Hourquette; it's a favourite picnicking spot and irresistible for a swim on a hot day. A col (circa. 2150m) just south is the high point of the Tour des Lacs, which now turns east under the shadow of Pic Castéreau (2227m) to pass the eponymous lake and begins a sharp descent, with full-on views of the Pic du Midi. After passing some shepherds' cabanes – a path short cuts the 4WD tracks serving them – you follow the gave northeast to the Pont de Bious and the car park. The circuit's basically four hours' walking, but allow six with stops; many people reverse these directions so as to have lunch at the refuge.

Lac d'Artouste and Le Petit Train

Some 6.5km out of Gabas, the Pourtalet road passes the dammed Lac de Fabrèges, with an access drive around the east shore leading to a burgeoning ski-chalet complex, among which is concealed the billetterie for a télécabine. This attains the base of Pic de la Sagette (2031m) to connect with Le Petit Train, a miniature rail line running 10km southeast through the mountains to the Lac d'Artouste. Built in the 1920s to service a hydroelectric project which raised the lake level 25m, it was later converted for tourist purposes. Weather permitting, the train starts operating in late May and keeps going until late September (June & Sept 10am–3pm, July & Aug 9am–5pm; reserve on ☎05.59.05.36.99 or 🌐www.train-artouste.com). It's a beautiful trip, lasting about four hours, including the télécabine; you've time to walk down to the lake and back (and to Refuge Arrémoulit, ☎05.59.05.31.79; around 40 places) if you set a brisk pace, but allow a half-hour for the télécabine (first departure 8.30–9.30am). Prices start at €18 return; walkers may be able to negotiate one ways. In winter the same lift gives access to the small beginner to intermediate downhill ski centre on the northeast side of the Col de la Sagette.

Eaux-Bonnes, Gourette and the road to the Gave de Pau

The only way of reaching the Gave de Pau by road without going back towards Pau is via the minor D918 east over the Col d'Aubisque, via Eaux-Bonnes and Gourette, 12km east of Laruns and the favourite ski centre of folk from Pau. The base development is ugly but the skiing, on 28 north-facing runs from a top point of 2400m, is more than respectable. You can of course stay here, but the Second Empire spa village of Eaux-Bonnes, 8km below Gourette, is more elegant and pleasant. Here the old-fashioned Hôtel de la Poste on the central park-square (☎05.59.50.33.06, ☎05.59.50.43.03; closed late April & mid-Oct to Christmas; 🍴) represents excellent value, especially at half-board rates with a four-course table d'hôte supper.

The Col d'Aubisque itself (1709m), a grassy saddle with a souvenir stall/café on top, usually sees the Tour de France come through, making the pass an irresistible challenge to any French cyclist worth his salt. Once over the next, lower Col de Soulor, the route descends, 18km in all, to attractive ARRENS-MARSOUS, at the head of the Val d'Azun. Despite being another gateway to the PNP, with information from the Maison du Val d'Azun (☎05.62.97.49.49, 🌐www.valdazun.com; Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 3–6/7pm), accommodation is limited to Gîte Camélat, in a fine, rambling house from 1887 just off the central place (☎05.62.97.40.94, 📧gite-camelat@orange.fr; 50 places; all year) with both doubles (🍴) and dorm space (€15pp). More comfort is available 3km northeast at AUCUN, where 2004-built Hôtel le Picors (☎05.62.97.40.90, 🌐www.hotel-picors.com; open May–Sept, Christmas & mid-Feb to mid-March; 🍷) represents excellent value with a popular on-site restaurant and covered pool.

The Gave de Pau and around

From its namesake city, the Gave de Pau forges southeast towards the mountains, bending sharply south at Lourdes and shortly fraying into several tributaries: the Gave d’Azun, the Gave de Cauterets, the Gave de Gavarnie (draining the eponymous cirque) and the Gave de Bastan, dropping from the Col du Tourmalet. All four of these valleys, and the holiday bases in them, are served by SNCF buses from Lourdes or Argelès-Gazost. Cauterets, 30km due south of Lourdes, and Gavarnie 37km southeast of Argelès, are busy, established resorts on the edge of the PNP, but the countryside they give access to is so spectacular that you forgive their deficiencies. If you want a smaller, more manageable base, then either Barèges, up a side valley from the spa resort of Luz-St-Sauveur, or Luz itself, are better bets. But if you pick your season – or even the time of day – right, you can still enjoy the most popular sites in relative solitude. At Gavarnie few people stay the night, so it’s quiet early or late, and the Cirque de Troumouse, which is just as impressive in its way (though much harder to get to without a car), has very few visitors. The spa-town of Bagnères-de-Bigorre, just east of the gave within striking distance of Lourdes, is fairly dull, primarily a gateway to the Vallée de Campan.

St-Savin

Between Lourdes and Cauterets, some 3km southeast of the congested town of Argelès-Gazost, pleasant, sleepy ST-SAVIN merits a stop for its twelfth-century abbey-church, with later fortifications and a fine Romanesque portal. The interior (daily 9am–7pm) offers an amusing organ cabinet carved with grotesque faces – supposedly those of damned souls – that were designed to grimace as the unbearable (for them) heavenly music played. The treasury (daily: April–June 2.30–6.30pm; July & Aug 10.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.30pm; €2), installed in the vaulted former chapterhouse, is home to a particularly interesting piece, a twelfth-century “black Madonna” which tradition holds was carried back from Syria by Crusaders. Also worth a visit is the little eleventh-century hilltop chapel of Notre-Dame-de-Piétat (Sun year-round 2.30–6pm, otherwise July–Aug Sun–Fri 2.30–6pm, spring/autumn 3–6pm; free), 1km south of the village, which has an elaborately painted ceiling, where birds perch on floral motifs covering every available space.

Cauterets and around

CAUTERETS is a pleasing if unexciting little spa town that owes its fame and its rather elegant Neoclassical architecture (especially on bd Latapie-Flurin) to its waters. In modern times, it has also become one of the main Pyrenean ski and mountaineering centres.

Its origins as a spa began with Count Raymond de Bigorre’s grant of land to the monks of St-Savin in 945 AD. In the seventeenth century, Marguerite d’Angoulême came to take the waters and wrote her Heptameron here. The eighteenth and nineteenth centuries were its heyday, especially the latter with its Romantic worship of mountains. Hugo visited, as did Chateaubriand, Baudelaire, Debussy, Sarah Bernhardt, Edward VII and many other celebrities.

The modern town is small enough to present no difficulties in orientation; most of it is still squeezed between the steep wooded heights that close the mouth of the Gave de Cauterets valley. Next door to the gare routière on the north edge of the centre, where SNCF coaches stop, the Maison du Parc (daily 9.30am–noon & 3.30–7pm; ☎05.62.92.52.56) has a small display of flora and fauna. In the centre, five minutes' walk distant, you'll find the tourist office in place Maréchal-Foch (Mon–Sat: July & Aug 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; Sept–June 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.62.92.50.50, 🌐www.cauterets.com); the nearby Bureau des Guides at 5 place Clemenceau (mid-June to mid-Sept daily 10am–noon & 4.30–7.30pm; ☎05.62.92.62.02), organizes adventure activities.

Inexpensive hotels include Le Grum at 4 rue Victor-Hugo, off rue de la Raillère (☎05.62.92.53.01, ☎05.62.92.64.99; closed mid-Oct to mid-Dec; 🍷), with a mix of rooms en suite and not; and Le Pas de l'Ours, 21 rue de la Raillère (☎05.62.92.58.07, 🌐www.lepasdelours.com; all year; 🍷), which also runs a gîte (€17pp). There's another gîte around the corner: Le Beau Soleil, at 25 rue Maréchal-Joffre (☎05.62.92.53.52, 📧gite.beau.soleil@orange.fr; open ski season to mid-Oct; €21ppB&B). Several well-equipped campsites line the road north of town, the closest being La Prairie (☎05.62.92.54.28; June–Sept).

For a more upmarket hotel, try the atmospheric Lion d'Or at 12 rue Richelieu (☎05.62.92.52.87, 🌐www.hotel-lion-dor.net; closed Oct to mid-Dec & mid-May; 🍷), or the underrated Asterides-Sacca at 11 bd Latapie-Flurin (☎05.62.92.50.02; closed mid-Oct to mid-Dec; 🍷).

As many hotels require half-board in peak season, independent restaurants are thin on the ground: the Giovanni Pizzeria at 5 rue de la Raillère and Casa Bodega Manolo, with Spanish-style tapas, nearby at no. 11 are pretty much it.

Hikes around Cauterets

Most classic excursions around Cauterets begin up the Val de Jéret from the Pont d'Espagne 7km south, where the Gave de Gaube and Gave du Marcadau hurtle together in a boiling spume of spray, before rushing down to Cauterets over a series of spectacular waterfalls. In season there are six daily navettes from the town centre to the giant visitor centre and car park (€4–6 per vehicle) here; purists can walk there in about two hours along an attractive, streamside trail, known first as the “Avenue Demontzey” and, once past the satellite spa of La Raillère, as the “Chemin des Cascades”.

From Pont d'Espagne (1420m), you can proceed southwest some two hours up the Marcadau valley to the Refuge Wallon (1886m; ☎05.62.92.64.28; 115 places; open mid-May to Oct), poised between the HRP and GR10, and the base for numerous walks – the most popular being the five-hour loop north, then east, then back to the refuge via the lakes of Nère, Pourtet and de l'Embarat.

Alternatively, head due south up into the alpine valley of the Gave de Gaube, with picturesque Lac de Gaube (1725m) backed by the snowy north face of Vignemale (3298m). There's even a combined télécabine/télesège (June–Sept; €6.70 return) to spare you most of the ascent from Pont d'Espagne. Beyond the lake, the path continues to the Refuge Oulettes-de-Gaube at the base of Vignemale (☎06.64.45.41.46 or 05.62.92.62.97; 2151m; 120 places; open May–Oct 15; 3hr from Pont d'Espagne), from where you can return to La Raillère via one of two routes.

The HRP from Refuge Oulettes goes over a high (2734m) pass to the Refuge de Bayssellance (☎05.62.92.40.25; 58 places; open June–Sept; weekends April & Oct weather permitting) and then loops broadly around to the Refuge d'Estom

(☎05.62.92.74.86; 1804m; open June–Sept) in the beautiful and quieter Lutour valley; alternatively you can omit Bayscellance and head straight to Estom over the lower (2583m) Col d'Arraillé, and then to La Raillère. Even with bus and télécabine rides at the start and using this lower route, you should allow eight hours for the walking day; if you take in the high country around Bayscellance, it's best to schedule an overnight at one of the three refuges.

A less-frequented walk from Cauterets is to the Lac d'Ilhéou along the GR10 (about 3hr). To avoid the initial steep climb you can take another combined télécabine/télésiège (July–Aug only; €8 one way, €9.50 return; discount for users of those at Pont d'Espagne and vice versa), up to the 2300-metre contour under the Crêtes du Lys. From there it's a 45-minute descent to the popular but expensive Refuge d'Ilhéou (1988m; ☎05.62.92.52.38; open June–Sept) beside its lake – very pretty in June, with snow still on the surrounding peaks and ice floes drifting on its still surface. From the refuge, you can either descend the Gave d'Ilhéou back to Cauterets or, more ambitiously, pop over the Col de la Haugade (2311m) into the Marcadau valley and thence back to Cauterets via the Val de Jéret.

Luz-St-Sauveur and Gèdre

The only road approach to Gavarnie and Troumouse, best known of the Pyrenean cirques, is through LUZ-ST-SAUVEUR, astride the GR10 and a regular SNCF bus route from Lourdes. Like Cauterets, this was a nineteenth-century spa, patronized by Napoléon III and Eugénie, and the left-bank St-Sauveur quarter owes its elegant Neoclassical facades to this period. The principal sight, at the top of Luz's medieval, right-bank quarter, is the church of St-André (daily May 15–Sept 30 3–6pm; €2). Built in the late twelfth century, it was fortified in the fourteenth by the Knights of St John with one of a crenellated outer wall and two stout towers. The north entrance, beneath one of the towers, sports a handsome portal surmounted by a Christ in Majesty carved in fine-grained local stone.

The tourist office (all year minimum hours Mon–Sat 9am–7.30pm, Sun 9am–12.30pm & 4.30–7.30pm; ☎05.62.92.30.30, 🌐www.luz.org), edges the central place du Huit-Mai, by the crossroads for Gavarnie or Barèges. Two worthwhile central hotels, both under new management in 2006, are the fully en-suite Les Templiers (☎05.62.92.81.52, 🌐www.hotellestempliers.com; closed April or May; Ⓜ), opposite the church with half-board offered and the pricier rooms with view, and partly en-suite Les Cimes (☎05.62.92.83.03; Ⓜ), 70m downhill on the same lane. Best of two campsites, also with a gîte on site, is Les Cascades (☎05.62.92.94.14; Dec–Sept), uphill from the church. Restaurants aren't numerous; two reliable ones are La Tasca on place St-Clement, tops for Spanish tapas and seafood, and Chez Christine (closed late autumn & early spring) near the post office, specializing in own-made pasta and desserts plus locally sourced meat and trout.

Eleven kilometres south, just before the turning for the Cirque de Troumouse, is tiny GÈDRE. This can offer a comfortable hotel, La Brèche de Roland (☎05.62.92.48.54, 🌐www.pyrenees-hotel-breche.com; HB only, Ⓜ; May–Sept plus winter weekends/hols), with a reasonable restaurant – plus two highly rated gîtes d'étape nearby: Le Saugué (☎05.62.92.48.73; May–Oct; 25 places; €12pp), and L'Escapade (☎05.69.92.49.37, 🌐www.gite-escapade.com; 28 places; all year; €13pp).

Gavarnie and its cirque

A further 8km up the ravine from Gèdre, GAVARNIE is connected with Luz-St-Sauveur by two daily bus services (July & Aug only; otherwise just 3 weekly, or a taxi from Luz), though you can walk it on the higher variant of the

▲ Cirque de Gavarnie

GR10 from Cauterets in two days. If you drive in, a parking fee (8am–5pm; €4) is charged during peak summer season; otherwise there is plenty of free parking around the shops and hotels. Once poor and depopulated, Gavarnie has found the attractions of mass tourism – much of it the excursion trade from Lourdes – too seductive to resist, and is now an unattractive mess of pricey accommodation, souvenir shops and mediocre snack bars. Like other overly popular sites, the key is to visit in shoulder season and/or before 9am or after 5pm, to avoid the bus-borne hordes.

However, the cirque itself – Victor Hugo called it “Nature’s Colosseum” – is magnificent, a natural amphitheatre scoured out by glaciers. Over 1500m high, it consists of three sheer bands of rock streaked by seepage and waterfalls, and separated by sloping ledges covered with snow and glacier remnants. To the east, it’s dominated by the jagged peaks of Astazou and Marboré, both over 3000m. In the middle, a corniced ridge sweeps round to the Brèche de Roland, a curious vertical slash, 100m deep and about 60m wide, said to have been hewn from the ridge by Roland’s sword, Durandal. In winter, there’s good skiing for beginners and intermediates at the nearby, 24-run resort of Gavarnie-Gèdre, with great views of the cirque from the top point of 2400m.

Practicalities

La Bergerie (☎ 05.62.92.48.41; mid-May to Oct), on the east bank of the gave on the cirque side of the village, must be one of the most stunningly located campsites in the Pyrenees, with views right into the cirque compensating for exceedingly basic, tent-only facilities. The other campsite, Le Pain de Sucre (☎ & ☎ 05.62.92.47.55; June–Sept & mid-Dec to mid-April), 3km north of the village, is really meant for camper-caravans.

In terms of hotels, good-value options include en-suite Le Taillon (☎ 05.65.92.48.20, 🌐 www.letaillon.com; closed Nov to mid-Dec; Ⓢ), with a competent restaurant, and the smallish Hôtel Compostelle by the church (☎ 05.62.92.49.43, 🌐 www.compostellehotel.com; closed Oct to Christmas; Ⓢ), with most rooms facing the cirque. You can park by or close to both but note the village is closed to traffic in high season 10am–6pm. Most idyllically set, by the gave, is non-en-suite La Chaumière (☎05.62.92.48.08, ✉am.garcie@orange.fr; closed Oct–Christmas; ②).

Otherwise, dorm-type accommodation comprises the high-standard Gîte Auberge Le Gypaète (☎05.62.92.40.61; 45 places; all year; €10pp), below the main car park, and the CAF Chalet Refuge La Grange de Holle, 2km above Gavarnie on the Port de Gavarnie road (☎05.62.92.48.77; 50 places; closed Oct to mid-Dec; €13–16pp). The best independent restaurant is Les Cascades, next to the Maison du Parc (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 1.30–6.30pm; ☎05.62.92.42.48) on the north side of the village; other information sources include the tourist office by the car parks (daily summer 9am–7pm; ☎05.62.92.49.10, 🌐www.gavarnie.com), and the CRS mountain rescue unit opposite La Bergerie, for accurate snow and weather reports.

The cirque and around

It's an easy walk from Gavarnie into the cirque, using either the main east-bank track or the longer, steeper west-bank trail beside the gave draining it. Luckily, the scale of the place is sufficient to dwarf humans, but for a bit of serenity it's still best to use the west-bank path, or go up before 10am or after 5pm, when the grandeur and silence are almost alarming. The broad track ends after 45 minutes at the Hôtel du Cirque et de la Cascade, once a famous meeting place for mountaineers and now a popular, surprisingly reasonable snack bar in summer. To get to the foot of the cirque walls, you face a steeper, final half-hour on a dwindling, increasingly slippery path which ends in a spray-bath at the base of the Grande Cascade, at 423m the highest waterfall in Europe. This plummets and fans out in three stages down the rock faces – a fine sight in sunny weather, with rainbows in the wind-teased plumes.

If you don't want to retrace your steps, an enjoyable and not too demanding walk back to Gavarnie runs via the path from the Hôtel du Cirque up the east flank of the Gavarnie valley to the Refuge des Espuguettes (2030m; ☎05.62.92.40.63; 60 places; daily May–Sept, weekends Easter & Oct; 2hr). It's a beautiful path, cut into rocky, pine-shaded slopes, with fine views of the cirque and the Brèche de Roland; at the top, you emerge into open meadows tilting up to the refuge. Those staying overnight here may want to bag Piméné (2801m; 3hr 30min return), the bare peak above you, for unbeatable views over the Cirque d'Estaubé, and Monte Perdido in Spain. To return to Gavarnie, turn right (north) at the signposted trail fork below the refuge (allow 90min from there).

La Brèche de Roland

La Brèche de Roland is the walk to do around Gavarnie. It's high, and involves crossing a glacier, which means being properly equipped with ice-axe and crampons. It is, however, extremely popular in summer, so there's a good chance of being able to team up with someone more experienced. The brèche is about forty minutes above the refuge cited below, with the glacier crossing occupying the final moments.

There are three approaches to the brèche, all converging on the Refuge des Sarradets/Brèche de Roland (2587m; ☎06.83.38.13.24; 60 places; open June–Sept, weekends in Oct); for which reservations are always necessary in high season. The easiest route is from the end of the road to the Port de Boucharo, where a clear path climbs under the north face of Le Taillon to join the footpath coming directly from Gavarnie (1hr-plus). The latter path starts beside the church, climbs steadily up the valley of Pouey Aspé, then zigzags steeply up to join the first-cited path on the flank of Sarradets peak (2hr 45min). From the junction of these two paths, it's about half an hour to the refuge. The third route (4hr 30min from Gavarnie to the hut) is via the Échelle des Sarradets/HRP path above the Hôtel du Cirque, better than it appears from depiction on IGN maps, though scrambling sections, slippery surfaces and cable-holds are found at several points.

The Cirque de Troumouse

A vast, wild place, much bigger than Gavarnie and, in bad weather, rather intimidating, the Cirque de Troumouse lies up a desolate valley whose only habitations are the handful of farmsteads and pilgrimage chapel that make up the hamlet of HÉAS – one of the loneliest outposts in France before the road in was constructed. The only rooms and meals in Héas proper are at Auberge de la Munia (☎05.62.92.48.39, 🌐www.aubergedelamunia.com; HB only 📍). As you reach the head of the valley there's a tollgate (9am–5pm; €4 per car), after which the road climbs in tight hairpins 4km to the Auberge du Maillet (☎05.62.92.48.97; mid-May to mid-Dec; 📍), beside a small tarn. After this the road climbs again, even more steeply over 3km, beneath bare shining crags, to a car park. Nearby, a prominent statue of the Virgin Mary crowns a grassy knoll amidst enough moorland pasture for thousands of animals, enclosed by the wide sweeping walls of the cirque. Beneath the eastern walls of the cirque are scattered a half-dozen blue glacial lakelets, the Lacs des Aires. A parc national path does the circuit from Héas (no toll for walkers, 4hr).

The Vallée de Bastan

Luz-St-Sauveur marks the start of the eighteen-kilometre climb east along the D918 through the Vallée de Bastan, culminating in the Col du Tourmalet (2115m), one of the major torments of the Tour de France and the fulcrum of a giant skiing domaine. North of the pass rises the landmark Pic du Midi de Bigorre (2877m), with its observatory usually reached by funicular.

The only major village in between is BARÈGES, 7km along, linked with Lourdes by SNCF bus (change at Pierrefite-Nestalas). An attractive if one-street town, Barèges has been a popular spa since 1677, when it was visited by Madame de Maintenon with her infant charge, the seven-year-old Duc de Maine, son of Louis XIV. A military hospital opened here in 1744, as its waters became renowned for the treatment of gunshot wounds, and a low-key army connection endures – a mountain warfare training centre and an R&R facility stand opposite each other. But today it's primarily a skiing, mountaineering and paragliding centre, and the most congenial, low-key resort around the Gave de Pau.

The central tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 4–6pm; Sept–June shorter afternoon hours; ☎05.62.92.16.00, 🌐www.bareges.com) can supply accommodation lists and ski-lift plans. The through road is lined with a half-dozen hotels, all fairly similar in standards, opening season (May–Oct) and price (typically 📍); best value among these is Hôtel Le Central (☎05.62.92.68.05, 🌐www.central-tourmalet.com), with a pool, Wi-Fi Internet access and extensive common areas. More distinctive are two high-quality, English-run chambres d'hôtes Les Sorbiers on the main street (☎05.62.92.86.68, 🌐www.lessorbiers.co.uk; 📍; closed late April to mid-May, Oct & Nov), offering

Skiing and hiking around Barèges

With its links to the adjacent, equal-sized domaine of La Mongie over 10km east on the far side of the Col du Tourmalet, Barèges offers access to the largest skiing area in the French Pyrenees, including downhill pistes totalling 125km (1850–2400m) and 31km of cross-country trails running through the wooded Lienz plateau (1350–1700m). The beginners' runs finishing in Barèges village are much too low (1250m) to retain snow, so all skiers usually have to start from the areas of Tournaboup or Tourmalet. Since the millennium, high-speed, state-of-the-art chair lifts are the rule at Barèges, and runs have been regraded to make the resort more competitive, but La Mongie over the hill, despite its hideous purpose-built development, offers even higher, longer pistes. For more information consult www.bareges-tourmalet.com.

The GR10 passes through Barèges on its way southeast into the lake-filled Néouvielle Massif, part of France's oldest (1935) natural reserve, and highly recommended as a hiking area. The best trailhead for day-hikes, with limited parking, lies 3km east at Pont de la Gaubie (1538m), from where the classic loop takes in the Vallée des Aygues Cluses plus the lakes and peak of Madamète, followed by a descent via Lac Nère and Lac dets Coubous back to Gaubie. For those traversing with full packs, a seven-hour walking day from Barèges via either the Col de Madamète or the Horquette d'Aubert brings you into the Néouvielle reserve for an overnight at either the mammoth, modernized Chalet du Lac d'Orédon (☎05.62.23.05.72.60; mid-June to mid-Sept; doubles Ⓢ & dorms), or the Chalet-Hôtel de l'Oule (☎05.62.98.48.62; 28 places; open early June to mid-Sept & ski season).

vegetarian meals on request, and 🏠 Mountain Bug (☎05.62.92.16.39, www.mountainbug.com; Ⓢ) behind the butcher's, a superbly restored eighteenth-century farmhouse with modern bathrooms and tasteful wood-floored common areas; proprietors Robert and Emma are certified guides offering local walking holidays.

There are also two gîtes d'étape, both open year-round except April and October: L'Hospitalet (☎05.62.92.68.08; €13pp), at the southern edge of town on the hillside, somewhat institutional owing to its past as a military hospital, and the welcoming, Anglo-French-run L'Oasis, right behind the spa (☎05.62.92.69.47, www.gite-oasis.com; 40 places, €13pp); both offer evening meals and reasonable half-board rates.

The Col du Tourmalet and the Pic du Midi de Bigorre

Some 3km out of Barèges, the D918 begins climbing in earnest over denuded slopes to the Col du Tourmalet, at 2115m the highest motorable pass in the French Pyrenees. Even in summer it's apt to be desolate and windy, flanked by a café-restaurant on the far side and a sleeker replacement of the rough-hewn, anatomically correct original cyclist-statue, commemorating the first passage of the Tour through here in 1910. By the statue, a dirt road meanders off in the direction of the Pic du Midi, though you can no longer use this to drive to the observatory up top, but must visit either on foot or by téléphérique (June–Sept daily 9am–4.30pm; sporadic, complicated schedule otherwise; €23, includes admission to museum) from La Mongie. The venerable observatory, continuously staffed since opening in 1880 and still a serious research facility, long resisted commercialization but has bowed to the inevitable with an on-site astronomical museum, solar observatory, observation deck and restaurant.

From the col the road (summer only) descends past La Mongie ski centre, down into the gentle green Vallée de Campan.

Bagnères-de-Bigorre and the Vallée de Campan

BAGNÈRES-DE-BIGORRE, nearly equidistant from Tarbes and Lourdes, is yet another pleasant if nondescript Pyrenean spa town which has managed to burnish its somewhat faded image with Aquensis (daily: school hols 10.30am–9pm, otherwise 10.30am/1pm–8pm; 🌐 www.aquensis-bagneres.com), certainly the most striking thermal baths in the Pyrenees with the central pool overarched by a forest of cantilevered wood beams. The town is served by frequent SNCF buses from Tarbes, which call at the gare SNCF on avenue de Belgique, 400m north of the town centre. The tourist office is at 3 allée Tournefort (July & Aug daily 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sept–June Mon–Sat 9/9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎ 05.62.95.50.71, 🌐 www.peDESTRIANIZED.com), close to pedestrianized, central place de Strasbourg with its cafés and nearby halles.

Many hotels can be fusty and/or overpriced. Better-value choices include, just north of the halles on rue de l'Horloge 3bis, the old-fashioned Hôtel l'Horloge (☎ 05.62.91.00.20; March–Nov; 📍); the well-kept Hôtel de la Paix (☎ 05.62.95.20.60, 🌐 www.hotel-delapaix.com; closed mid-Dec to Jan; 📍), with a decent restaurant and room facing away from the noisy avenue; and (especially for drivers) the rambling Hôtel Tivoli (☎ 05.62.91.07.13, ☎ 05.62.91.15.20; all year; 📍), in its own grounds southwest of the centre on avenue du Salut. Restaurants aren't Bagnères' strong point: try Le Bigourdan (closed Mon) at 14 rue Victor-Hugo, corner rue de l'Horloge, with a €25 supper menu encompassing cèpes, monkfish and varied desserts, or cheap-and-cheerful Crêperie d' l'Horloge next door at no. 12, better for sweet or savoury crêpes, salads and cider than the perfunctory plats du jour.

The Vallée de Campan

Upstream from Bagnères, regular daily summer buses serve the meadowy Vallée de Campan, whose architecture is quite distinct from the valleys to the west. Farm roofs are still slate, but house and barn are built in line as one building, with the balconied living quarters always to the right as you face the sun. The valley's "capital" is CAMPAN, with its interesting sixteenth-century covered market, old houses and another curious-looking fortified church with a presumed Cagot door in the west wall. STE-MARIE-DE-CAMPAN, 6.5km further along, has less character as a village but better accommodation and eating choices in Hôtel les Deux Cols (☎ 05.62.91.85.60, ☎ 05.62.91.85.31; closed mid-Oct to mid-Dec; 📍) and the pricey Gîte L'Ardoisière (☎ 05.62.91.88.88; shut Nov–Christmas; doubles 📍 & dorms), both offering half-board. If you're planning on driving or cycling on towards the Pic du Midi and Barèges, remember that the Col du Tourmalet is only reliable from late May/early June until the first snowdrifts (late November).

The Comminges

Stretching from Luchon almost as far as Toulouse, the Comminges is an ancient feudal county encompassing the upper valley of the River Garonne. It also hosts one of the finest buildings in the Pyrenees, the magnificent cathedral of St-Bertrand-de-Comminges, built over three distinct periods. The mountainous southern part is what you want to reach; access is via the unprepossessing little town of Montréjeau, from where there are daily bus and train services to Luchon.

Valcabrière

The village of VALCABRIÈRE lies a short way south of Montréjeau, itself on the main Bayonne–Toulouse rail line. It can be reached by SNCF bus (direction “Luchon”) to the hamlet of Labroquère, by the Garonne, and then a short stroll across the river. It’s a sleepy place of rough stone barns and open lofts for drying hay, with an exquisite Romanesque church, St-Just (daily 9am–noon & 2–7pm; €2), whose square tower rises above a cemetery full of cypress trees. The north portal is girded by four elegant full-length sculptures and overtopped by a relief of Christ in Glory borne heavenward by angels. Between the altar and apse with its blind arches stands a carved Gothic shrine once containing saintly relics, which pilgrims could mount by means of the now off-limits stone staircase. Both interior and exterior are full of recycled masonry from the old Roman settlement of Lugdunum Convenarum, whose remains are visible at the crossroads just beyond the village. Founded by Pompey in 72 BC, this was a town of some 60,000 inhabitants in its prime, making it one of the most important in Roman Aquitaine. Josephus, the Jewish first-century AD historian, says it was the place of exile of Herod Antipas and his wife Herodias, who had John the Baptist beheaded. Destroyed by Vandals in the fifth century and again by Burgundians in the sixth century, it remained deserted until Bishop Bertrand, the future saint, appeared toward the end of the eleventh century.

St-Bertrand-de-Comminges and around

Further southwest 2km is St-Bertrand-de-Comminges, whose grey fortress-like Cathedral (Feb–April & Oct Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; May Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; June–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 2–7pm; Nov–Jan Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; Oct admission to cloister and choir €4) commands the plain from the knoll ahead, the austere white-veined facade and heavily buttressed nave totally subduing the clutch of fifteenth- and sixteenth-century houses huddled at its feet. To the right of the west door a Romanesque twelfth-century cloister with carved capitals looks out across a green valley to the foothills, haunt of Resistance fighters during World War II. In the aisleless interior, the church’s great attraction is the central choir, built by Toulousain craftsmen and installed 1523–1535. The 66 elaborately carved stalls, each one the work of a different craftsman, are a feast of virtuosity, mingling piety, irony and malicious satire – though sadly roped off-limits and difficult to see in detail even from a metre away. Each of the gangways dividing the misericords has a representation of a cardinal sin on top of the end partition. By the middle gangway on the south side, for example, Envy is represented by two monks, faces contorted with hate, fighting a furious tug-of-war over the abbot’s baton of office. The armrest south of the (locked) rood-screen entrance depicts the abbot birching a monk, while the bishop’s throne has a particularly fine back panel in marquetry, depicting St Bertrand himself and St John. In the ambulatory a fifteenth-century shrine depicts scenes from St Bertrand’s life, with the church and village visible in the background of the top right panel.

Practicalities

The former peak-season ban on cars in the village appears to have been suspended, but parking is restricted to two car parks at the south and southwest outskirts. During July and August the cathedral and St-Just in Valcabrière, both with marvellous acoustics, host the musical Festival du Comminges (www.festival-du-comminges.com). The tourist office is installed in the nineteenth-century Olivétain chapel and monastery on the cathedral square (Mon–Sat 10/11am–5/6/7pm, ☎05.61.88.32.00 or 05.61.98.45.35 and also doubles as an adjunct festival box office.

Staying overnight is an attractive proposition, at least outside peak season. Opposite the cathedral, the friendly Hôtel du Comminges (☎05.61.88.31.43, ☎05.61.94.98.22; April–Sept; 2) makes a fine, slightly old-fashioned option, though only breakfast is served (outside in fine weather). The Hôtel L’Oppidum (☎05.61.88.33.50, ☎05.61.95.94.04; mid-March to mid-Nov; 3), north of the cathedral on rue de la Poste, has variable but engaging en-suite rooms, though if you’re not staying you’re made to feel distinctly unwelcome at their restaurant. Other eating options in and around St-Bertrand aren’t up to much, so if you have transport, strike out 6km east to BARBAZAN, where Hôtel-Restaurant Le Rocher (☎05.61.89.58.56, www.hoteldurocher.com; closed Wed eve; 2) offers better value (menu from €17) and less snootiness. The nearest campsite – shady and well laid out – is Es Pibous (☎05.61.94.98.20; May–Sept), north of the road to St-Just.

The Grottes de Gargas

About 6km from St-Bertrand in the direction of St-Laurent, the Grottes de Gargas (45-minute guided tours daily: July & Aug 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm; rest of year by prior arrangement, but reservations almost always necessary ☎05.62.39.72.39, www.gargas.org; last tour 45min before stated closing time; €7) are renowned for their 231 prehistoric painted hand-prints. Outlined in black, red, yellow or white, they mostly seem deformed – perhaps the result of leprosy, frostbite or ritual mutilation, though no one really knows why. There are representations of large animals as well.

Luchon and around

There’s none of the usual spa-town fustiness about LUCHON (formerly known as Bagnères de Luchon), long one of the focuses of Pyrenean exploration. The main street, allées d’Étigny, lined with cafés and brasseries, has a metropolitan elegance and bustle. There is not, however, much to see, apart from the Musée du Pays de Luchon (daily 9am–noon & 2–6pm; €1.60) next to the tourist office, which has an extraordinarily eclectic collection of engravings and travel posters, ancient climbing or skiing gear, and strange rural impedimenta, and the nineteenth-century baths (March–Oct Mon–Sat 7.30–11.45am, also Wed & Sat 5–7pm) at the end of allées d’Étigny behind the Parc des Quinconces. Luchon is best considered as a comfortable base for exploring the surrounding mountains in summer, and for skiing at the nearby centres of Superbagnères and Peyragudes in winter. Because of the peculiar local topography, the valley here is also one of the major French centres for paragliding and light aviation. A long-dormant tunnel campaign has been re-activated locally, advocating a bore from somewhere between the Pont de Jouéu and the Hospice de France (see p.808) to emerge in Spain’s Val de Benasque, but it won’t happen before 2012 – if ever.

The area west of town, en route to the Col de Peyresourde along the D618, is also home to three Romanesque churches. The most accessible of these is St-Aventin, in the eponymous village 5km west of Bagnères. The south portal is completely surrounded by fine relief carving, including a fine Christ in Majesty, a Virgin and Child and the beheading of St-Aventin, followed by a bull discovering his grave. There are more carvings, and frescoes inside; a key can be borrowed from the mairie (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5pm).

Practicalities

The gare SNCF, also the gare routière, is in avenue de Toulouse across the River One in the northern part of the town. The tourist office is at 18 allée d'Étigny (daily: July–Aug & peak ski season 8.30am–7pm, rest of year same hours but closes over lunch; ☎05.61.79.21.21, 🌐www.luchon.com), who stock leaflets detailing currently operating activity outfitters.

You're best off forsaking the obvious accommodation on allées d'Étigny itself for better value in the quieter side streets. Possibilities there include Hôtel des Deux Nations to the west at 5 rue Victor-Hugo (☎05.61.79.01.71, 🌐www.hotel-des2nations.com; 📍1–3), a popular en suite with a busy downstairs restaurant and the best rooms on the lower two floors; Hôtel des Sports, 12 av Maréchal-Foch (☎05.61.79.97.80, 🌐www.hotel-des-sports.net; 📍3), quiet, non-smoking and with secure bike parking; or, east of the main street, Hôtel la Petite Auberge, 15 rue Lamartine (☎05.61.79.02.88, ☎05.61.79.30.03; 📍2), in a belle-époque mansion, with ample parking and a table d'hôte restaurant. Perhaps the most appealing option is romantically sited Hôtel Le Jardin des Cascades, above the church in Montauban-de-Luchon, 2km east (☎05.61.79.83.09, ☎05.61.79.79.16; closed mid-Oct to early April; 📍3; HB obligatory peak season), with just a half-dozen peaceful, wood-decor rooms in a lovely spot backed by a wild, hilly garden nurtured by the falls of the name. There's no gîte or hostel in town, but there are ten campsites in the vicinity; least cramped, and with the best amenities, is Camping La Lanette (☎05.61.79.00.38, 🌐www.camping-la-lanette.com; open mid-Dec to Oct), 1.5km east over the Pique (down rue Lamartine) near Montauban-de-Luchon.

As with lodging, the best eating-out prospects are some distance away from the allée d'Étigny, with the exception of L'Arbesquens at no. 47 (closed Sun eve & Wed), tops for fondue and grilled meat. Alternatively, the shaded terrace restaurant at Le Jardin des Cascades (directions and phone same as hotel, above) serves creative gourmet food, and offers sweeping views west and good service; there are cheaper lunch menus, but normally budget €35 per person, and mandatory reservations. With transport, try L'Auberge de Castel-Vielh, 2.5km south on the D125 (April–Oct daily; Nov–March weekends only; closed Wed; menus from €20), in a converted country house, serving excellent game and regional dishes, including snails, offal and trout; or – 7km west in Billière village – 📍 La Ferme d'Espiau (book on ☎05.61.79.69.69; 5 menus; closed Mon–Wed low season), which excels at local meat or game and foie gras served amidst antique rustic decor.

Hiking and skiing around Luchon

There are several classic hikes south and southwest of Luchon, though there's no public transport to most of the various trailheads. The exception, 14km south-west of Luchon, is Granges d'Astau, jump-off point for the Lac d'Oô, and served by three daily shuttle buses (July–early Sept). Here, you'll find the Auberge d'Astau (☎05.61.79.35.63, 🌐www.astau-pyrenees.com; May–Sept; 📍2), with a restaurant (menus €11–16), though many hikers like Le Mailh d'Astau next door for meals. From the car park here a busy section of the GR10 climbs an hour to the dammed lake, where the pricey Refuge-Auberge du Lac d'Oô (1504m; ☎05.61.79.12.29, 🌐www.refuge-lac-oo.com; 26 places; €18pp; May–Oct) perches beyond the west end of the dam. The onward path leads to the Refuge d'Espingo exactly an hour above Oô, just below the Col d'Espingo. This hut (1967m; ☎05.61.79.20.01; 70 places; June–Oct 15) overlooks the beautiful, undammed Lac d’Espingo, and the frontier ridge; most day-trippers stop here, as beyond nearby Lac Saussat the grade stiffens considerably. You can also get to the lakes by taking the télécabine from Luchon up to Superbagnères (daily April to mid-Oct 1.30–5pm, also July–Aug 9.45am–12.15pm; €11 return, €7 one way), then continuing west on the GR10 to the Refuge d’Espingo (4hr 30min total).

Another possible walking route from Luchon involves following the Pique valley south 11km, partly on the D125, to the derelict Hospice de France (1385m), originally founded by the Knights of St John, from where a signposted path climbs a steep, narrow valley to the Boums du Port (2hr with daypack), four small, scenic lakes; beside the highest sits the small but welcoming Refuge de Vénasque (☎05.61.79.26.46; late May to early Oct), which serves unusually good meals well into the afternoon. Suitably fortified, you can tackle the short, sharp path-climb to the notch on the frontier ridge known as the Port de Vénasque (3hr from Hospice de France), with superb views of the Maladeta massif and the Pico d’Aneto, highest summit of the Pyrenees (3404m). Return the same way, or fashion a classic loop taking in the frontier ridge to the east, then a descent of the Vallée de la Frèche back to the Hospice.

Luchon has two downhill ski resorts within striking distance, of which Peyragudes (🌐www.peyragudes.com) 15km west of Luchon overlooking each approach to Peyresourde, is much better. Its 43 runs, mostly of intermediate calibre and broad by Pyrenean standards, start from 2400m, with superb views of the frontier ridge and a decent lift system. Lower-altitude Superbagnères (🌐www.luchon.com), right above the town and accessible by a 15-kilometre road or the téléphérique (included in ski pass), has 24 mostly beginner-to-intermediate pistes lamentably exposed to morning sun and thus often mushy.

The Eastern Pyrenees

The dominant climatic influence of the Eastern Pyrenees, excepting the misty Couserans region, is the Mediterranean; with more annual days of sunshine than the west, the climate is hotter, the landscape more arid. Dry-weather plants like cistus, broom and thyme make their appearance, and the lower foothills are planted with vines. The proximity of Spain is evident, too, and much of the region belongs to historical Catalonia, definitively incorporated into France only in 1659. As with the rest of the Pyrenees, the countryside is spectacular, and densely networked with hiking trails. Historical sights, with the exception of the painted cave of Niaux and the Cathar castle of Montségur, are concentrated towards the coast in French Catalonia, comprising Roussillon and La Cerdagne (Rosilló and La Cerdanya in Catalan).

The Ariège valley

Whether you’re coming from the western Pyrenees or heading south from the major transport hub of Toulouse, the Valley of the Ariège marks the start of

Walking in France

A high-angle, wide shot of a rugged mountain peak, likely in the French Alps. The mountain is dark and rocky, with patches of snow and ice. The sky is filled with soft, white clouds, creating a misty atmosphere. In the lower right foreground, a hiker wearing a red jacket and a backpack is visible, looking towards the camera. The overall scene is majestic and serene.

France is quite simply a walker's paradise. It has some 60,000km of long-distance footpaths, known as GRs (sentiers de grande randonnée), not to mention thousands of shorter routes (PRs, or sentiers de promenade et de randonnée), all well maintained and signposted. They take you through the best of France's beautiful and varied landscape, including the majestic Alps in the east, the volcanic plugs of the Massif Central and the lofty Pyrenees in the south.

▲ Ibex in the Parc National de la Vanoise

valley, which offers plenty of impressive views of Mont Blanc, and the Parc National de la Vanoise, created to protect the wild ibex; you'll stand a good chance of seeing these wild goats on one of the spectacular high-level hikes through the park.

Generally speaking the peaks of the southern Alps are more accessible to less experienced walkers and don't require mountaineering equipment and skills. A good introduction to the area is the Parc Naturel Régional du Vercors, criss-crossed with around 2850km of waymarked paths. At its heart is the impressive Vercors plateau, edged with craggy limestone cliffs and riven with deep gorges. On the lower slopes beech, fir and scots pine forests thrive, and in spring gentians, yellow wild tulips and lilies bloom. More Mediterranean in appearance is the more southerly Parc Naturel Régional du Queyras, with its scrub-covered mountains and meadows of violets, orchids and pinks.

▼ Cirque de Gavarnie, Pyrenees

The Alps

For sheer mountain grandeur the northern Alps are unbeatable. The area has over a hundred peaks topping 3000m – including the highest, Mont Blanc (4807m) – glaciers, soaring pinnacles, high Alpine meadows and rich flora and fauna. The two main areas for walking are the Chamonix

▲ Gentians in the Parc Naturel Régional du Vercors

The Pyrenees

Generally less formidable than the Alps, the Pyrenees are still serious mountains, with a number of peaks topping 3000m, and offer some of France's finest walking. The classic long-distance path is the GR10, which traverses the whole range from west to east and is about 800km long. There are plenty of shorter walks too, the best of which are to be found in the central Ariège region, characterized by steep lush-green valleys, meadows full of wild flowers and abundant wildlife, including vultures – lammergeiers and griffon vultures – and marmots.

▲ Salers cattle in the Auvergne

The Auvergne

At the heart of France, well away from any coast, sparsely populated and little touched by industry, the Auvergne region of the Massif Central is well and truly France profonde. It's wild and rugged terrain, formed by three volcanic mountain chains, the Monts-Dore, Monts du Cantal and the smaller Monts-Dômes: much of the landscape consists of deep-cut wooded valleys and wide-open treeless uplands, grazed by red Salers cattle. The biggest draw for walkers is the jagged Puy de Sancy (1885m), the highest peak and source of the Dordogne River.

The Cévennes

Just south of the Auvergne, the hilly Cévennes region is equally isolated, though more Mediterranean in feel. The landscape is a picturesque one of deep valleys clothed with chestnut trees, high limestone plateaux and soft rounded granite peaks. It's fairly easy walking country, and a number of long-distance paths wind their way through the area, the best known of which is the GR70, the route famously described by R. L. Stevenson in his book Travels with a Donkey; you can even hire a donkey for the really authentic experience (@www.chemin-stevenson.org).

Provence

This most beguiling region, with its lovely warm light and Mediterranean colours and scents, has numerous walking possibilities. You could hike through the dramatic and vast Gorges du Verdon, Europe's largest gorge, or ramble among the gentle hills and lavender fields of the Luberon. Towards the Italian border is the Parc National du Mercantour, an unspoilt Alpine wilderness, sheltering chamois, golden eagles and and rare species of flowers.

▼ Lavender field, Provence

Corsica

The Mediterranean island of Corsica offers some of the most varied and adventurous walking in France. Scores of footpaths give access to spectacular coastline, rocky gorges and mountainous peaks. It also boasts the most challenging long-distance trail in the country, if not in Europe – the GR20, a breathtaking high ridge path which crosses the island's mountains from north to south. If you're not quite up to this you could try the more straightforward Mare e Monti Nord, a ten-day hike taking in beauty spots such as the Spelunca Gorges and the Scandola bird reserve.

Ten top walks in France

- Northern Alps: the Alpine section of the Routes des Grandes Alpes (GR5), especially the two-day walk from Le Brévent to Sixt via the Lac d'Anterne. See p.987.
- The Chemin de Saint-Jacques, the ancient pilgrimage route that starts in Le-Puy-en-Velay and ends at Santiago de Compostela in Spain (see p.950). To hike the whole thing would take weeks, but you could do just a section, such as the six-day stretch between Figeac and Moissac through the Lot valley, one of the most picturesque parts of the walk.
- A two-day loop walk above Cauterets in the Pyrenees: Pont d'Espagne–Vallée du Gaube–Vallée de Lutour–Pont d'Espagne. See p.798.
- The Crête d'Iparla, one of the best ridge walks in the Pyrenees (a day-hike along the GR10). See p.774.
- Corsica's two hundred-kilometre-long GR20, possibly Europe's most testing walk. See p.1226.
- The Côte de Granit Rose (see p.433). This attractive stretch of Brittany coast is dotted with pink granite rocks sculpted into weird and wonderful shapes by the weather. One of the best stretches is from Trégastel to Tréguier (a three-day hike) along the GR34.
- The ninety-minute walk up and down the rocky headlands from Cassis, on the Côte d'Azur, to the Calanque d'En Vau, with its beautifully secluded beach. See p.1136.
- The circuit of the southern Alps' Parc National des Écrins (along the GR54), hard to beat for the grandeur of its scenery. See p.1017.
- The Canyon du Verdon: the seven-hour walk from La Maline to the Point Sublime is by far the best way to explore the canyon. See p.1106.
- The GR70 "Stevenson trail", which takes about a fortnight to walk, passing through the rugged Gévaudan highlands and the bare hilltops of Mont Lozère. See p.941.

the transition to the Mediterranean zone. The river valley, extending from high peaks along the Andorran border around the spa of Ax-les-Thermes down to agricultural plains north of Foix, forms the main axis of the eponymous département. In between lie a wealth of caves, most notably near Tarascon and Mas d’Azil. Transport is no problem as long as you stick to the valley, but for side trips into the Couserans region on the west you really need a car or cycle.

Foix and around

Administrative centre of the département of Ariège, and France’s smallest provincial capital, FOIX lies 82km south of Toulouse on the Toulouse–Barcelona train line and the N20 road to Ax-les-Thermes and the Spanish border. It’s an agreeable country town of narrow alleys and sixteenth- to seventeenth-century half-timbered houses, with an attractive old quarter squeezed between the rivers Ariège and Arget.

Dominating all are the three distinctive hilltop towers of the Château des Comtes de Foix, which contains a dull handful of themed exhibits (May, June & Sept daily 9.45am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 9.30am–6.30pm; Oct–April Wed–Sun 10.30am–noon & 2–5.30pm; €4.20) – though the views are worth the climb. Determined opponents of the territorial ambitions of the Capetian kings of France and stout defenders of Catharism, the counts of Foix attracted the wrath of Simon de Montfort, who four times laid unsuccessful siege to the castle, though he did capture the town in 1211. Their resistance was finally broken in 1229 when Count Roger-Bernard was obliged to accept the suzerainty of the French king. Foix’s age of glory came in 1290 when its counts married into the house of Béarn and subsequently transferred their court to Orthez in the fourteenth century. This was the beginning of a powerful Pyrenean mini-state, whose influence lasted three centuries and came to include the kingdom of Navarre, leading finally to the throne of France with the accession of Henri IV in 1589.

The gares SNCF and routière are together on avenue de la Gare, off the N20 on the right bank of the Ariège; except on Sundays, there’s a daily bus service east via Lavelanet to Quillan and four buses a day west to St-Girons. The tourist office is on rue Théophile-Delcasse (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.61.65.12.12, 🌐www.ot-foix.fr).

Most accommodation is found in the old town, on the west bank of the Ariège, though little of it is inspiring. The quietest and most comfortable option is three-star Hôtel Lons, on 6 place Duthil, near the Pont-Vieux (☎05.61.65.52.44, 📧hotel-lons-foix@orange.fr; 📍; closed late Dec to early Jan), with a respected restaurant. The Eychenne at 11 rue Noël-Peyrevidal (☎05.61.65.00.04; ☎05.61.65.56.63; 📍) has been upgraded to fully en-suite status, with a busy ground-floor café (but no restaurant). Opposite at no. 16, the Auberge Léo Lagrange (☎05.61.65.09.04, 📧leolagrange-foix@orange.fr; €16pp) offers hostel-style accommodation (72 bunks in doubles or quads), plus economical weekday lunches in its downstairs foyer. The municipal campsite, Lac de Labarre (☎05.61.65.11.58; all year), is 3km down the N20 towards Toulouse.

A prime area for eating is rue de la Faurie, the old blacksmiths’ bazaar at the heart of the old town. At no. 17, 🍷 Le Jeu de l’Oie does classic French country-bistro fare – cassoulet, duck dishes, terrines, offal, good desserts – at friendly prices (formules from under €10), which guarantees a lunch-time crush – though service doesn't suffer unduly. Also popular is Les Quatres Saisons at no. 11 (menus from €13.50–16; closed Sun–Thurs eve low season), whose specialty is pierrade – hot ceramic plates at your table to grill fish and meat.

Labouiche and Mas d'Azil

Six kilometres northwest of Foix, the underground river at Labouiche (April–June & Sept daily 10–11.15am & 2–5.15pm; July & Aug daily 9.30am–5.15pm; Oct–Nov 11 weekends/hols 10am–11.15 & 2–4.30pm, expect a 15-minute wait; €7.50) is the longest navigable subterranean river in Europe. The river consists of a barge trip lasting one and a quarter hours, along 1km of the river, 60m underground, to admire its stalactites and stalagmites.

Twenty-five kilometres west of Foix, the Mas d'Azil was one of the first prehistoric caves to yield evidence of human habitation, but its most impressive feature is a magnificent 500-metre-long natural tunnel, scoured by the River Arize, which now carries the main road (the D119) from here towards Pamiers. Without transport it's not easy to reach as it lies 12km north of the Foix–St-Girons bus route: get off at Ségalas after La-Bastide-de-Sérou and take the D15 – over two hours on foot.

Secondary caves leading off the river-cavern are the focus of historical interest; they were inhabited in prehistoric periods for more than 20,000 years and used as a refuge by Cathars and Protestants in more recent times. The most important galleries are sealed off, though this hasn't stopped damage from road pollution, and those caves you can visit are interesting mainly for their sheer size (March, Oct & Nov Sun 2–6pm; April–May Mon–Fri 2–6pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; June & Sept daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–6pm; €6.10, including museum entry).

A few animal bones and other artefacts found during excavation remain on view in glass cases in the caves, but the best pieces are now on display in the attractive, sleepy village of LE MAS-D'AZIL, 1km to the north, in the Musée de la Préhistoire (same hours and ticket as the cave). Among other engraved tools and weapons, the museum's most outstanding exhibit is the beautiful carved antler known as le faon aux oiseaux (fawn with birds), perhaps used as a spear-thrower. There's just one surviving hotel here, the Hôtel Gardel (☎05.61.69.90.05, ☎04.61.69.70.27; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-March), as well as a municipal campsite (☎05.61.69.71.37; mid-June to mid-Sept) a twenty-minute walk away. The best place to eat is Le Jardin de Cadetou (closed Sat lunch time, Sun eve & Mon; ☎05.61.69.95.23), a homely restaurant with excellent menus of regional cuisine from €23; they also rent rooms (📍). Other accommodation in the area includes British-run chambre d'hôtes La Baquette (☎ & ☎ 05.61.96.37.67; April to mid-Oct; 📍; table d'hôte supper €15) at LESCURE hamlet, near La Baure and the junction of the D119 and D117.

Tarascon and around

TARASCON-SUR-ARIÈGE lies 17km south of Foix, where the N20 crosses the Ariège (a bypass diverts the worst of the traffic). Once a centre for the now-defunct iron-mining industry, it's a hot, unexciting little town enclosed by high wooded ridges. However, Tarascon is useful as a base for visiting the nearby prehistoric caves, and more pleasant than first impressions suggest. From the east bank of the Ariège, where riverside cafés provide vantage points, narrow rue de Barri leads to St-Michel church in the old quarter, presiding over a partly arcaded square. Two parts of the mostly razed medieval walls survive: the Tour St-Michel, and the Porte-d'Espagne.

The combined gare SNCF/halte routière is a few minutes' walk north from the centre, on the west bank. The tourist office is also just west of the bridge in the Centre Multimédia François Mitterrand (Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–6pm, also Sun 9.30am–1pm peak summer/ski season; ☎05.61.05.94.94, 🌐www.paysdetarascon.com). Accommodation options include quiet Hôtel Confort on riverside quai Armand-Sylvestre (☎ & 📞05.61.05.61.90; closed Jan; 📍), with some rooms facing a courtyard; for rooms facing the river, try Hostellerie de la Poste (☎05.61.05.60.41, 🌐www.hostellerieposte.com; all year; 📍), three doors down from the post office on the main street. This also has the best restaurant (closed Nov 15–Dec 15) in town, with summer seating facing a lawn–garden and four menus (including one vegetarian) at €14–35. There's also a campsite, Pré Lombard (☎05.61.05.61.94), on the left bank of the river, ten minutes' walk upstream from the bridge.

Niaux and other prehistoric caves

Just south of Tarascon, the D8 cuts up right into the green valley of Vicdessos; the hamlet of NIAUX lies in the valley bottom, 4km further on. The tiny settlement has an interesting Musée Pyrénéen (daily: July & Aug 9am–8pm; Sept–June 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €8), with an unrivalled collection of tools, furnishings, and old photos illustrating the vanished traditions of peasant Ariège.

But the real reason people descend on this little hamlet is for the Grotte de Niaux, a huge cave complex under an enormous rock overhang 2km north of the hamlet (45min guided tours: July & Aug daily 9.15am–5.30pm, English tours at 9.30am & 1pm; Sept daily 10am–5.30pm, English at 1pm; Oct–June Tues–Sun, tours at 11am, 2.30pm & 4pm; €9.40; max group size 20, advance reservations mandatory on ☎05.61.05.88.37, 🌐www.sesta.org). There are about 4km of galleries in all, with paintings of the Magdalenian period (circa 11,000 BC) scattered throughout, although tours see just a fraction of the complex. The paintings you're allowed to see are in a vast chamber, a slippery 900-metre walk from the entrance of the cave along a subterranean riverbed. No colour is used to depict the subjects – horses, ibex, stags and bison – just a dark outline and shading to give body to the drawings, executed with a “crayon” made of bison fat and manganese oxide. They present an extraordinary mix of bold impressionistic strokes and delicate attention to detail: nostrils, pupils and tendons are all drawn in.

The village of ALLIAT, right across the valley from Niaux, is home to the Grotte de la Vache (1hr 30min guided tours: April–June, Sept & school hols 2.30–4pm; July & Aug daily 10am–5.30pm; otherwise by arrangement; ☎05.61.05.95.06 🌐www.grotte-de-la-vache.org; €9), a relatively rare example of an inhabited cave where you can observe hearths, embossed bones, tools and other remnants in situ. The area's third cave, the Grotte de Bédeilhac (same tour length and schedule as de la Vache, plus all Sun at 3pm; €8) above BÉDEILHAC village is reached by a different road out of Tarascon, the D618 towards Saurat; after 5km, the cave entrance yawns in the Soudour ridge. Inside are examples of every known technique of Paleolithic art; though not as immediately powerful as at Niaux, its diversity – including modelled stalagmites and mud reliefs of beasts – compensates.

Ax-les-Thermes

Twenty-six kilometres east of Tarascon, still on the banks of the Ariège, the spa town of AX-LES-THERMES is completely hemmed in by shaggy mountains, for which it's a good exploration base; Ax is the last place of any size before the Andorran and Spanish frontiers.

The town itself is small and agreeable enough, but there's little to see once you've wandered a couple of streets in the quarter west of the N20, which (until the bypass road is completed) forms the main through road, avenue Delcassé. Rue de l'École and rue de la Boucarie offer a few medieval buildings, and above place du Breilh, the church of St-Vincent retains a Romanesque tower. On place du Breilh you can dangle your feet for free in the Bassin des Ladres, a pool of hot sulphurous water – one of forty local sources – which is all that remains of the hospital founded in 1260 by St Louis for soldiers wounded in the Crusades.

The gare SNCF is off avenue Delcassé on the northwest side of town. The tourist office (July & Aug daily 9am–1pm & 2–7pm; Sept–June 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎ 05.61.64.60.60, 🌐 www.vallees-ax.com) is halfway through town on the north side of the main road. In terms of accommodation, a good if resolutely old-fashioned cheapie at part-pedestrianized 6 place du Marché is Hôtel Le Plaza (☎ 05.61.64.22.01; 🍷). Next niche up in standards is occupied by Hôtel Restaurant Le Grillon on rue St-Udaut, 300m southeast of place du Breilh (☎ 05.61.64.31.64, 🌐 www.hotel-le-grillon.com; closed Easter to late May; 🍷). But much the best deal in town is 🍷 Hôtel Restaurant Le Chalet at 4 av Turrel, opposite the thermes (☎ 05.61.64.24.31, 🌐 www.le-chalet.fr; 🍷), managed by a friendly, energetic young couple and thoroughly overhauled in 2006. All the airy rooms over two wings are unique, but all have parquet floors and plasma TV, and most have balconies overlooking the river. There's also a campsite, Le Malazéou (☎ 05.61.64.09.14; closed Nov), on the riverbank 500m downstream from the gare SNCF.

Eating out, you'll do best for full meals at Le Grillon (€18 weekday menu, otherwise à la carte), or at the riverside diner of Le Chalet (menus €16–40). However there's more of a buzz to drinking at Le Grand Café, on avenue Delcassé, and Brasserie Le Club, on place Roussel, which occasionally hosts live jazz.

Into the Couserans

Back at Niaux, the road continues along the valley bottom, beneath the romantically pinnacled ruins of the Château of Miglos (unrestricted access), to Vicdessos and Auzat, the latter with an unsightly aluminium works. From Vicdessos, the stunning, summer-only D18 climbs the lush, largely abandoned Vallée de Suc to the pass at the Port de Lers (1517m) – from November to May only the D618, via Massat, is kept open. On the far side of the port, cattle graze the alpine meadows down to the Étang de Lers. Then the road climbs again to another col overlooking the head of the Vallée du Garbet, luxuriant with beeches; directly south looms a high-walled crenellated cirque underlined by wedges of snow lying beneath their sheerest faces. From here west lies the Pays de Couserans, one of the poorest, least developed and most depopulated regions of the Pyrenees. Its villages, Aulus-les-Bains in particular, were once renowned for their bear-trainers, who – driven by poverty – toured the lowland towns with their performing beasts.

Aulus-les-Bains

Once in the Garbet valley, the road drops quickly west to AULUS-LES-BAINS, a remote spa-village surrounded by fragrant meadows and dramatic peaks; remote though it feels, Aulus has daily (Mon–Sat) bus links with St-Girons. Like other such spots, Aulus enjoyed its moment of glory and fell again into rustic somnolence, from which it is trying to resurrect itself once more. There's not much to do other than enjoy (and walk through) the scenery; the classic hike here involves heading south on a local path to the Étang de Guzet and then east to the Cascade d'Ars on a bit of the GR10, then returning to Aulus via the stream draining from it (round trip about 5hr). The thermal baths themselves are undergoing phased renovation but remain open (early May to early Oct Mon–Sat 8.30am–noon & 4–8pm; rest of year Sat & Sun only same hours except daily winter holidays & Easter).

For summer bike rental and information on other activities, consult the tourist office in allée des Thermes (daily: July & Aug 10am–1pm & 2–7pm; Sept–June 10am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.61.96.01.79). Among various accommodations, two friendly, good-value choices are Hôtel L'Oustalet (☎05.61.96.00.90, 🌐www.hotel-ariège-loustalet.com; 📍1–2), its 🍴 restaurant in particular a tasty slice of old-fashioned France (weekday lunch menu €12 gets 4 hearty courses plus wine; otherwise €15–23.50; closed Sun eve & Mon, & Nov), and turreted Les Oussailès (☎05.61.96.03.68, 📧jcharrue@free.fr; all year; 📍3), with more modern rooms, English-speaking staff and a competent restaurant (by arrangement in winter), with menus from €14 and wider choice in summer. The better of two gîtes d'étape, at the rear of the old casino, is La Goulue (☎05.61.66.53.01; all year; 16 places, some doubles 📍1), offering meals and bike storage. Le Couledous (☎05.61.96.02.26; all year), 500m west along the river, is the local campsite.

St-Girons

With numerous SNCF buses a day from BousSENS on the main Tarbes–Toulouse rail line, and ordinary bus connections on to Aulus, Ustou, Massat and Seix, ST-GIRONS may be your first taste of the Couserans. Apart from its long association with cigarette–paper manufacture – one pulp plant at the outskirts just survives – the most striking things about St-Girons are its reddish-pink marble paving stones on many pavements. And although there are no other memorable sights, it's a far from unpleasant town, with a lively July music festival.

The simplest point for orientation is the Pont-Vieux, just below picturesque rapids on the River Salat; the bridge points you into the old commercial centre of the town on the right bank, whose old-fashioned shops have alas largely succumbed to modern competitors. To the right, past the tiny cathedral, lies the typically provincial place des Poilus, ringed by elegantly faded period-pieces. Beyond this square, along the river, the asphalted Champ de Mars – shaded by plane trees – hosts general markets on the second and fourth Mondays of every month, plus every Saturday morning: herbs, honey, clothes, produce and African.

Buses arrive at place des Capots on the left bank of the river. The well-stocked tourist office is inside the Maison de Couserans (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.61.96.26.60, 🌐www.ville-st-girons.fr), on the right bank, just downriver from the cathedral. If you want to stay, a good economical option is Hôtel Restaurant La Flamme Rouge (☎05.61.66.12.77, 🌐www.hotel-la-flamme-rouge.com; 📍3) on the west bank at 15 av Galliéni, with simple but cheerful rooms facing a rear garden, pool and secure parking. For more comfort, choose the Domaine de Beauregard at the edge of St-Girons on the road to Seix, comprising two affiliated hotel-restaurants sharing a pool and parkland; the better value of these is 🏰 Château de Beauregard (☎05.61.66.66.66, 🌐www.domeainede.beauregard.com; closed March; 🕒4–5), 2006–renovated rooms in a nineteenth-century manor – upstairs units have bathrooms in the turrets. Their restaurant, L'Auberge d'Antan (eves only; closed Wed/Thurs low season) offers a weekly-changing, five-course menu for €30. The other recommendable local eatery, Les Nourritures Terrestres (closed Sat lunch, Sun lunch) specializing in cheese-based dishes, is in the far northwest of town at 17 av Fernand-Loubet.

St-Lizier

ST-LIZIER, 2km and a short drive downstream along the Salat, totally outclasses St-Girons in the tourism stakes. Full of history on a hilltop, it's walled, arcaded, cobbled, cathedraled, half-timbered, pretty, and utterly lifeless outside of summer.

Architecturally the most interesting building in town is the Cathédrale de St-Lizier (May–Oct daily 9am–noon & 2–7pm; Nov–April Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; free), with its distinctive octagonal tower posing photogenically against the mountains to the south. Inside are some twelfth-century frescoes faded almost to invisibility, and a fine Romanesque cloister, also twelfth century, with an array of unique, sculpted column capitals. The building only comes into its own when used as a venue for the late-July to mid-August classical music festival. A second cathedral, Notre-Dame-de-Sède, within the grounds of the bishop's palace, is closed indefinitely for renovation, though the palace is also home to the Musée Départemental de l'Ariège on the first floor (April, May, Sept & Oct Tues–Sun 2–5.30pm; June daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–6.30pm; €4), which contains a permanent ethnographic collection devoted to the Vallée du Bethmale, not really worth the admission fee. It is, however, worth walking up to the palace for views over St-Lizier, and continuing on around the old ramparts.

The helpful tourist office is located by the lower cathedral (same hours as at St-Girons; ☎05.61.96.77.77). There's just one place to stay, the Hôtel de la Tour (☎05.61.66.38.02, 📧hoteldelatur09@orange.fr; 🕒3–4), in a remodelled old building down by the River Salat on rue du Pont, with the pricier rooms overlooking the water. The on-site restaurant has four seafood-strong menus, but reports indicate quality varies. You'll have a consistently better feed 600m northwest, just over the municipal boundary in LORP-SENTARAILLE, at 🏰 La Petite Maison (closed Mon & Tues; menus €16–46) on the main road, whose blank facade belies pleasant garden seating; the cuisine is minceur but highly creative.

The Pays de Sault

The Pays de Sault – a magnificent upland bounded by the rivers Ariège and Aude, and the D117 road from Foix to Quillan – marks the start of “Cathar country” if you're approaching from the west. The first of their former strongholds encountered is ROQUEFIXADE, roughly 19km east of Foix on the D117 (or a bit less on the minor D9a); the ruinous (free, unenclosed) eleventh-century castle towers above the eponymous village, a thirteenth-century bastide with a quality gîte d'étape (☎05.61.03.01.36; all year; 15 places) which does meals. The region's main town, LAVELANET, is a nondescript but not unattractive place on the banks of the River Touyre, 28km from Foix and 35km from Quillan. However, offers little beyond bus connections – including north to Mirepoix, covered below for convenience though not strictly in the pays – and a tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–7pm, Sun 9am–noon; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–7pm; ☎05.61.01.22.20).

Montségur

From Lavelanet, there's no public transport south towards Montségur, so whether you approach via Montferrier (12km) or via Bélesta and Fougax-et-Barrineuf (21km in all) is a matter of taste. The village of MONTSÉGUR is arrayed in long terraces at the foot of its castle-rock, a modified version of a bastide (the original settlement was up at the foot of the castle). Depopulated now except as a second-home venue, the place comes to life only with the influx of tourists, most of them day-trippers. It's worth having a glance at the one-room museum (daily: May–Sept 10am–noon & 2–7pm, Oct–April 2–5pm; free), with its collection of bits and pieces from around the castle, before going up there.

A footpath from the top of the village shortens the way up to the saddle of the hill and the Prats des Cramats, the field where the Cathar martyrs (see below) were burnt. From here it's a steep twenty-minute climb to the Château (daily: Feb 10.30am–4pm; March 10am–5pm; April & Sept–Oct 9.30am–6pm; May–Aug 9am–7.30pm; Nov 10am–5.30pm; Dec 10.30am–4.30pm; €4), of which all that remain are the stout, now truncated curtain walls and keep. The space within is terribly cramped, and one can easily imagine the sufferings of the besieged. The walls are off-limits, though from the keep you can access the west donjon to gaze out over kilometres of forested hills and snowy peaks.

There's a seasonal tourist office in the village (July–Sept daily 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; ☎05.61.03.03.03, 🌐www.citaenet.com/montsegur). Several accommodation options fill quickly in (and even out of) season; least expensive is the old-fashioned, partly en-suite Hôtel Café Couquet (☎05.61.01.10.28; 🍷), a rambling pension fronted by pollarded lime trees and with an unsigned restaurant on the first floor (3 courses table d'hôte supper with wine €15). An even homier option is 🏠 Maison d'Hôtes L'Oustal at the north end of the village

The fall of Montségur

Between 1204 and 1232, Montségur's castle was reconstructed by Guilhabert de Castres as a strongpoint for the Cathars (see p.821). By 1232 it – and the village at the base of the pog or rock pinnacle – had become the effective seat of the beleaguered Cathar Church under the protection of a garrison commanded by Pierre-Roger de Mirepoix, with a population of some five hundred, clergy as well as ordinary believers on the run from the persecution of the Inquisition.

Provoked by de Mirepoix's raid on Avignonet in May 1242, in which the eleven chief Inquisitors were hacked to pieces, the forces of the Catholic Church and the king of France laid siege to the castle in May 1243. By March 1244, Pierre-Roger, despairing of relief, agreed to terms. At the end of a fortnight's truce, the 225 Cathar civilians who still refused to recant their beliefs were burnt on a communal pyre on March 16.

Four men who had escaped Montségur unseen on the night of March 15 recovered the Cathar "treasure", hidden in a cave for safekeeping since the preceding Christmas, and vanished. Two of them later reappeared in Lombardy, where these funds were used to support the refugee Cathar community established there for another 150 years. More recent New-Agey speculations, especially in German writings, identify this "treasure" as the Holy Grail, and the Cathars themselves with the Knights of the Round Table.

(☎05.61.02.80.70, 📧serge.germa@orange.fr; 📍), with extrovert hosts Serge and Annick laying on a superb, four-course supper (€16); the four rooms, mostly triples/quads, share baths but there are extensive common areas. If Montségur is full and you've transport, consider another excellent chambre d'hôte 8km downhill in FOUGAX-ET-BARRINEUF, opposite the post office: English/Canadian-run Tindleys (☎05.61.01.34.87, 🌐www.tindleys.com; 📍), with three restored rooms, a copious breakfast and supper (€15) on request.

The Gorges de la Frau

From either Montségur or Fougax-et-Barrineuf, you can take an impressive half-day walk through the Gorges de la Frau, emerging at Comus hamlet in the heart of the Pays de Sault. The route from Montségur initially follows the “Sentier Cathare” until linking up with the GR107 (formerly the GR7B) at Pelail in the valley of the Hers river, which has carved out the gorge. Starting from Fougax, just follow the minor D5 south along the Hers until, past Pelail, tarmac dwindles to a rough, steep track as you enter the gorges proper, where thousand-metre-high cliffs admit direct sunlight only at midday. The canyon bottom is densely wooded with beech, ash, cornelian and fir, though it is in fact a major pastoral-migratory route; each mid-October hundreds of cattle who've summered on the Sault plateau are driven down en masse. The defile ends some 3.5km before Comus, where the track broadens and the grade slackens. COMUS itself has a good gîte d'étape in the former school (☎04.68.20.33.69, 🌐www.gites-comus.com; 38 places, some doubles 📍); here you're just 2.5km shy of the D613 road between Ax-les-Thermes and Quillan, with a daily bus to the latter.

Mirepoix and Camon

Heading north from Lavelanet in the direction of Carcassonne, it's definitely worth stopping in at MIREPOIX, a late thirteenth-century bastide built around one of the loveliest surviving arcaded market squares – Les Couverts – in the country. The square is bordered by houses dating from the thirteenth to the fifteenth centuries, and a relatively harmonious modern halle on one side, but its highlight is the medieval Maison des Consuls (council house), whose rafter-ends are carved with dozens of unique portrayals of animals, monsters, and caricatures of medieval social groups and professions, as well as ethnic groups from across the world. Just south of Les Couverts, the early Gothic cathedral of St-Maurice is claimed to have the largest undivided nave in France, supported only by airy rib vaulting.

There's a tourist office in the main square (Mon–Sat 9.15am–12.15pm & 2–6pm; ☎05.61.68.83.76, 🌐www.ot-mirepoix.fr). If you're feeling extravagant, stay at the four-star Hôtel Relais Royal at the edge of the bastide on 8 rue Maréchal-Claudel (☎05.61.60.19.19, 🌐www.relaisroyal.com; 📍), a meticulously restored eighteenth-century palace. Allow €100 à la carte at its in-house restaurant Le Ciel de Or (though there is a €30 menu), but the best-value eating – and thus you often have to reserve – is at modest but salubrious 🌟 Hôtel-Restaurant Le Commerce, 20 cours Docteur-Chabaud by the cathedral (☎05.61.68.10.29, 🌐www.chez.com/lecommerce; 📍), where three generous, expertly prepared à la carte courses (salad chèvre chaud, filets de rougets, sorbet) plus house wine won't much top €24. Falling between these two on the scale, at no. 6 of the arcaded square, is the Maison des Consuls (☎05.61.68.81.81, 🌐www.maisondeconsuls.com; all year; 📍–📍), its plushly furnished units just above the carved rafters. There's a municipal campsite on the Limoux road (☎05.61.01.55.44; closed mid-Sept to mid-June).

△ Market square, Mirepoix

If you've transport, there's another accommodation option 13km southeast in the medieval village of CAMON, easiest reached off the D625 Lavelanet-Mirepoix road. Here the twelfth- to fourteenth-century fortified Benedictine abbey at the summit of things has been transformed by new English owners into chambres d'hôtes with a difference, 🏠 L'Abbaye-Château de Camon (☎05.61.60.31.23, 🌐www.chateaudecamom.com; closed early Jan to mid-March; 🍳, breakfast extra). There's a large pool, part of the original cloister, eighteenth-century canvases in the lounge, a frescoed chapel, plus all the echoing galleries and spiral staircases you could want; the competent restaurant is open to all for supper (€30 table d'hôte).

Along the Aude

South of Carcassonne, the D118 road and the rail line both climb steadily up the twisting valley of the Aude, between scrubby hills and vineyards, past river-straddling Limoux and sleepy Alet-les-Bains, before reaching Quillan where the topography changes. Beyond here, the route squeezes through a series of awesome gorges either side of Axat before emerging once again towards the river's headwaters on the Capcir plateau, east of the Carlit Massif in the high Pyrenees. It's a magnificent drive or slightly hair-raising cycle-ride; buses run to isolated Quérigut three times a week.

Limoux

The first stop 24km south of Carcassonne, LIMOUX is served several times daily by either SNCF trains or buses; those arriving by car will find free parking on the riverbanks by the picturesque old bridge. The town straddles the Aude, which for much of the year is a powerful brownish-green flood of snowmelt. Life revolves around the pretty place de la République in the heart of the old town, with its Friday market, brasseries and cafés, and the nineteenth-century promenade du Tivoli, in effect a bypass road to the west. Known in the past for its woollens and the tanning of hides brought down from the mountains, the town's claim to fame today is the production of its excellent sparkling wine, Blanquette de Limoux, cheaper than champagne.

The tourist office, at promenade du Tivoli 32 (July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎04.68.31.11.82), shares a building with the Musée Petiet (same hours; €3), a collection of not very distinguished local nineteenth-century paintings. Accommodation choices include the overpriced Hôtel Modern & Pigeon just west of place de la République, opposite the halles (☎04.68.31.00.25, @hotelmmodernepigeon@orange.fr; 📍; restaurant closed Wed), and the humbler but better-value Hôtel Les Arcades, north of St-Martin church at 96 rue St-Martin (☎04.68.31.02.57, ☎04.68.31.66.42; closed Dec 15–Jan 1 & Wed; 📍). The municipal campsite (☎04.68.31.13.63; mid-May to Oct) is on the east bank of the river, south of the old bridge.

The best independent restaurant is Maison de la Blanquette, at 46bis promenade du Tivoli, which purveys regional dishes and wines (closed Tues & Wed; menus from €15.95; ☎04.68.31.01.63); otherwise head to one of the hotels above. Menus at the Modern & Pigeon (closed Sun noon & Mon) start at €29.50, probably more interesting than the merely sustaining fare (menus from €15) in Les Arcades' time-warped diner overlooking St-Martin church. If you're interested in buying local wine, the best place to go is the co-operative, Aimery-Sieur d'Arques, in avenue du Mauzac (daily 9am–noon & 2.30–7pm).

Alet-les-Bains and Rennes-le-Château

South of Limoux, the next place to halt is the thermal resort of ALET-LES-BAINS; the spa on the outskirts is incidental to the lovely half-timbered houses and arcaded place inside the fortifications. There's also a ruined Romanesque abbey, next to the tourist office which has the keys (daily: 10am–noon & 2.30–6pm), and an excellent hotel, the Hostellerie de l'Évêché (☎04.68.69.90.25, @www.hotel-eveche.com; April–Oct; 📍), by the abbey in its own vast park-like grounds. They've a restaurant, but meals are for guests only.

With transport, it's worth taking a detour south of Alet, following the D52 as it climbs 4.5km out of Couiza towards the mountain-top village of RENNES-LE-CHÂTEAU. The views alone repay the effort, but the primary reason for the jaunt is the mysterious parish church run by Abbé Bérenguer Saunière from 1885 until 1910, when he was defrocked by the bishop of Carcassonne for failing to explain how he financed his comfortable lifestyle and the lavish redecoration of the fifteenth-century church (free admission). This is supposedly full of veiled symbols and secret codes, which – say some (others will see merely lavish kitsch) – indicate that he had discovered the lost treasure of Solomon, brought here by the Visigoths in the fifth century. This and a host of other theories are explored in the Musée Presbytère de l'Abbé (daily: March–April & mid-Sept to Oct 11am–5.30pm; May to mid-Sept 10am–7pm, Nov–Feb 10am–5pm; @www.rennes-le-chateau.fr; €4.25) comprising Saunière's Villa Béthania – where he lived openly with his mistress Marie Denardaud – and its gardens.

Quillan and Axat

Back on the main road, QUILLAN, 28km upstream from Limoux, is a pleasant little town, useful as a staging post on the way south into the mountains or east to the Cathar castles (see opposite) – it has daily bus connections with Perpignan via St-Paul-de-Fenouillet. The only monument of interest is the ruined castle, burnt by the Huguenots in 1575 and partly dismantled in the eighteenth century. The gare SNCF and gare routière sit together on the main bypass road, whilst the tourist office (June–Sept Mon–Sat 8am–noon & 2–7pm, Sun 9am–noon; Oct–May Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 9am–1pm; ☎04.68.20.07.78, 🌐www.ville-quillan.com) stands opposite in the former Art Deco public baths. Accommodation options on the same (noisy) boulevard include the Canal at no. 36 (☎04.68.20.08.62; ②) and the Cartier, at no. 31 (☎04.68.20.05.14, 🌐www.hotelcartier.com; ②–③; restaurant closed mid-Dec to mid-March & Sat low season). A good independent restaurant is Pizzeria des Platanes at 2 av Pasteur, towards the river by the cinema, with seating outdoors under the namesake trees. The Sapinette campsite is at 21 rue René-Delpech (☎04.68.20.13.52; April–Oct).

Beyond Quillan, the road heads southeast 11km, through the narrow Défilé de Pierre-Lys, to Pont d’Aliès, where there’s another campsite and a clutch of river-rafting outfitters, the Aude being a major venue for water sports. Just 1km south of the pont is AXAT, again covering both banks of the river; you can stay at Auberge La Petite Ourse (☎04.68.20.59.20; ④), at no. 89 on the main highway, or the Hôtel Axat at no. 99 (no phone; ③). Otherwise, Axat is the westerly terminus of the Train du Pays Cathare et du Fenouillèdes (see p.822), and the last town of any size before entering the rocky canyons to the south.

The Aude gorges and Grotte de l’Aguzou

On its first 20km south of Axat, the D618 threads hazardously through two consecutive canyon systems: the Gorges de St-Georges and the Gorges de l’Aude. Beyond the second set of narrows is a magnificent cave, the Grotte de l’Aguzou. It’s expensive to visit, but – accoutred like a pro – as near to real speleology as you can get without being a caver. Visits require a week’s advance notice, and there’s a minimum of four people (contact Philippe Moreno, ☎04.68.20.45.38, 📧grotte.aguzou@orange.fr; €30 half-day, €60 full day). The closest indoor accommodation is 8km up the Aude at ESCOULOUBRE-LES-BAINS, where Chambres d’Hôtes Maison Roque-laure (☎04.68.20.47.29, 📧daniel.bilot@orange.fr; ②), in the old thermal establishment, makes evening meals for hikers and cyclists, and still has an on-site hot spring.

The Donezan: Usson, Mijanès and Quérigut

Upstream, the road divides just after abandoned Usson-les-Bains (the easterly fork goes to Escouloubre-les-Bains). On a shaggy bluff between the arms of the fork, dwarfed in turn by the heights either side, stand the forlorn ruins of the Château d’Usson (complicated, limited hours low season, July & Aug daily 10am–1pm & 3–7pm; €3.50), allegedly the hiding place of the “Cathar treasure” after the siege of Montségur (see box, p.815). This is the gateway to the Donezan region, beautifully forested but the poorest, most neglected and depopulated corner of the Ariège. Passing the castle’s base, the westerly road winds up to the attractive tiered houses of MIJANÈS – where there’s a good hotel-restaurant, the Relais de Pailhères (☎04.68.20.46.97; ②), which should be reserved as it's the only facility in the area comparable in quality to Maison Roquelaure.

From Mijanès a road heads 8km up-valley to QUÉRIGUT, last settlement before the border with Roussillon and end of the summer bus line. The high, chilly village is guarded by the ruined Château de Donezan, last refuge of Cathars who held out for eleven years after the fall of Montségur. There's a single, central, simple hotel-restaurant, Du Donezan (☎04.68.20.42.40, ☎04.68.20.47.06; 📍), plus a campsite below the village. Beyond Quérigut, it's 14km south through forest and meadowland on the D16 to Formiguères, chief village of the Capcir, and as much again to Mont-Louis in the Cerdagne, with more facilities and public transport.

The Cathar castles

Romantic and ruined, the medieval fortresses which pepper the hills to the west and north of Perpignan have become known as the Cathar castles, though in fact many were built either before or after the Cathar era. The south of France, especially Roussillon, Languedoc and the eastern Ariège, was this twelfth-century sect's power-base; their name derives from the Greek word for "pure", katharon, as they abhorred the materialism and worldly power of the established Church, were initially pacifist and denied the validity of feudal vows or allegiances. Although Cathars probably never accounted for more than ten percent of the population, they included many members of the nobility and mercantile classes, which alarmed the powers that were.

Once disputational persuasion by the ecclesiastical hierarchy proved fruitless, Pope Innocent III anathemized the Cathars as heretics in 1208 and persuaded the French king to mount the first of many "Albigensian" crusades, so called after Albi, a Cathar stronghold. Predatory northern nobles, led for a decade by the notoriously cruel Simon de Montfort, descended on the area with their forces, besieging and sacking towns, massacring Cathar and Catholic civilians alike, laying waste or seizing the lands of local counts. The effect of this brutality was to unite both the Cathars and their Catholic neighbours in southern solidarity against the barbarous north. Though military defeat became inevitable with the capitulation of Toulouse in 1229 and the fall of the castle of Montségur (see box, p.815) in 1244, it took the informers and torturers of the Holy Inquisition another 180 years to root out Catharism completely.

The best of the castles stud the arid, herb-scented hills of the Corbières which separate Roussillon from Languedoc. Walking is the most direct way to experience them, and the GR36, crossing from Carcassonne to St-Paul-de-Fenouillet, and the Sentier Cathare, crossing east to west from Port La-Nouvelle to

Intersite Pass

If you're planning on visiting several of the Cathar-related and other medieval sites in the Aude, consider purchasing an Intersite Pass, available for €4 at any of the eighteen participating monuments in the département. The card (valid 1 year) gives €1 off adult admission, and free child tickets, for the ramparts of Carcassonne, Lastours, Saissac, Caunes-Minervois, St-Hilaire, Lagrasse, Fontfroide, Puilaurens, Usson, Peyrepetuse, Queribus, Aguilar and other sites.

Foix, together pass most of the sites. The Sentier Cathare is described in Sentier Cathare Topo-guide (Rando Éditions), available in local bookstores.

Without transport or walking boots, the best way to tackle the castles is from the south, as the most spectacular ones are close to the Quillan–Perpignan road. This route is served by bus, but a better option is the narrow-gauge Train du Pays Cathare et du Fenouillèdes (☎04.68.59.96.18, 🌐www.tpcf.fr) which runs from Rivesaltes, just north of Perpignan, to Axat, stopping at the main towns along the way. The service (sometimes only St-Paul-de-Fenouillet to Axat) runs on weekends in May, June, September and October, daily in July & August (adult fare €8–17 depending on direction and distance).

Puilaurens and Gincla

The westernmost of the Fenouillèdes Cathar castles can be reached by road from Quillan or rail from Axat, from the Lapradelle station of the seasonal train noted on above. Lapradelle, 6km east of Axat, is in turn 2km north of the turnings for dramatically sited Château de Puilaurens (daily: April–June & Sept 10am–5.30pm; July & Aug 9am–7.30pm; Oct–March 10am–4.30pm, but closed Nov 16–Jan 31 & weekdays Feb/March; €3.50). You can either drive up a 1500-metre side road starting 500m south of Puilaurens hamlet, or there's a shorter and fairly gentle path up from the hamlet. The castle perches atop a wooded hill at 700m, its fine crenellated walls sprouting organically from the rock outcrops. Originally the site of a Visigothic citadel, it was fortified to its present extent in the early thirteenth century, when it passed from the king of France to the count of Roussillon, and then to the king of Aragón. It sheltered many Cathars up to 1256, when Chabert de Barbera, the region's de facto ruler, was captured and forced to hand over his citadel here and at Quéribus further east to secure his release. The castle remained strategically important – being close to the Spanish border – until 1659, when France annexed Roussillon and the frontier was pushed south. Highlights of a visit are the west donjon and southeast postern gate, where you're allowed briefly on the curtain wall for views, and the Tour de la Dame Blanche, with a rib-vaulted ceiling.

△ Château de Puilaurens

Six kilometres south of Puilaurens village in the centre of sleepy GINCLA is the Hostellerie du Grand Duc (☎04.68.20.55.02, 🌐www.host-du-grand-duc.com; closed Nov–March; 🍽️), a converted manor house with an equally pricey restaurant, though they also manage chambres d’hôtes (📍).

Quéribus, Cucugnan and Duilhac

The Château de Quéribus (Jan Sat, Sun & school hols 10am–5pm; Feb daily 10am–5.30pm; March, Nov & Dec daily 10am–6pm; April–June & Sept daily 9.30am–7pm; July & Aug daily 9am–8pm; Oct daily 10am–6.30pm; €5), 30km further east towards Perpignan, overlooks the vine-ringed village of Cucugnan (see below) from the ridge which marked the French–Spanish border until 1659. Spectacularly situated above the Grau de Maury pass 6km north of the Quillan–Perpignan road, the castle balances on a storm-battered pillar of rock above sheer cliffs – access is forbidden in bad weather.

Because of the cramped topography, the space within the walls is stepped in terraces, linked by a single stairway and dominated by the polygonal keep. High point, in all senses, is the so-called Salle de Palmier, whose vaulted ceiling is supported by a graceful pillar sprouting a canopy of intersecting ribs. More steep stairs lead to the roof and fantastic views in every direction, including northwest to the next Cathar castle, Peyrepertuse.

The history of Quéribus is similar to that of Puilaurens, holding out until 1255 or 1256; never reduced by siege, its role as their sanctuary ended with the capture of the luckless Chabert, though the Cathar garrison escaped to Spain.

A popular base for visiting Quéribus (and Peyrepertuse) is the small village of CUCUGNAN, in the valley roughly halfway between the two, and its popularity is such that in season you must park vehicles at the outskirts. There’s plenty of accommodation, including Chambres d’Hôtes L’écuri de Cucunan at 10 rue Achille–Mir (☎04.68.33.37.42, 📧ecurie.cucugnan@orange.fr; 🍽️ B&B); fully fledged hotels include the central Auberge du Vigneron at 2 rue Achille–Mir (☎04.68.45.03.00, 📧auberge.vigneron@ataraxie.fr; 🍽️; restaurant, menus from €19, closed Sun eve & Mon, also mid–Nov to March), and the Auberge de Cucugnan (☎04.68.45.40.84, ☎04.68.45.01.52; closed Wed & Jan to mid–March; 📍), downhill from the church (which supposedly contains a statue of a pregnant Virgin), with a restaurant known for its hearty servings of game (from €16; closed on Wed Sept–June). The nearest other rooms are in DUILHAC, about 4km away just below Peyrepertuse (see below), at the unstaffed Auberge du Vieux Moulin de la Source (contact Auberge du Vigneron).

Peyrepertuse, Rouffiac, Gorges de Galamus and Aguilar

If you only have time for one of the Cathar castles, let it be the Château de Peyrepertuse (Feb, March & Nov to early Jan 10am–5pm; April–June & Sept daily 10am–7pm, later closing Easter week; July & Aug daily 9am–8.30pm; Oct daily 10am–6pm; closed 3 weeks in Jan; €5), not only for its unbeatable site and stunning views, but also because the complex is unusually well preserved, staying in use until 1789. The 3.5–km access road starts in Duilhac or, alternatively, you can walk up from Rouffiac des Corbières village to the north via the GR36 – a tough, hot climb of over an hour. But either way the effort is rewarded, for Peyrepertuse is one of the most awe-inspiring castles anywhere in Europe, draped the length of a jagged rock-spine with sheer drops at most points. Access is banned during fierce summer thunderstorms, when (as at Quéribus) the ridge makes an ideal lightning target.

Tickets are sold by the southerly car park, but you then walk fifteen minutes through thickets of box to the entrance on the north side. The bulkiest fortifications enclose the lower, eastern end of the ridge, with a keep and barbican controlling the main gate. Things get increasingly airier as you progress west along the ridge past and through various cisterns, chapels and bastions, culminating in a stairway of over a hundred steps carved into the living rock, which leads to a keep, tower and chapel of San Jordi at the summit. The views – some of the most sweeping in southern France – are as you'd expect; the castle was obtained by treaty with the Kingdom of Aragón in 1258, and most of the existing fortifications were built afterwards.

In sleepy ROUFFIAC-DES-CORBIÈRES, 3km north, there's a hotel, the Auberge de Peyrepertuse (☎04.68.45.40.40; closed Dec 15–Jan 15, plus Tues; €43), with a hearty restaurant (menus €14 & €18) and well-appointed ensuite rooms. For hikers, there's a rudimentary shop; the Sentier Cathare heads west-southwest towards Puilaurens, or generally east via the castles of Quéribus, Padern and Aguilar.

Moving on from Rouffiac by car or bike, you can return to St-Paul-de-Fenouillet, initially via the villages of Soulatgé and Cubières-sur-Cinoble, through the Gorges de Galamus, a short but impressive defile worn through the limestone ridge by the River Agly. From Cubières, a perilously narrow corniche road threads the gorge, with a limited number of turnouts and car parks, from one of which a path lead downs to the bottom via the eagle's-nest Ermitage de St-Antoine (daily 10am–6pm) on the east flank of the ravine. This is a popular canyoning venue, though most just swim in river-pools below the ermitage.

Alternatively, the drive, cycle or hike east from Rouffiac offers more castles, including one at Padern village and the especially fine, isolated Château d'Aguilar (April to mid-June & mid-Sept to mid-Nov 11am–5pm; mid-June to mid-Sept 11am–7pm, closed mid-Nov to March; €3.50), a hexagonal thirteenth-century citadel with six towers just east of Tuchan, overlooking the Côtes de Roussillon-Villages wine domaine.

Roussillon

The area comprising the eastern fringe of the Pyrenees and the lowlands down to the Mediterranean coast is known as Roussillon, or French Catalonia. Catalan power first emerged in the tenth century under the independent counts of Barcelona, who then became kings of Aragón as well in 1162. They attempted to unify with Occitania under the counts of Toulouse, but that ended unhappily with the death of Pere II of Aragón at the battle of Muret in 1213, fighting with Raymond VI of Toulouse against anti-Cathar crusader Simon de Montfort. The Catalan zenith was reached during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, when the Franco-Catalan frontier traced the Corbières hills north of

As in the Aude region (see p.821), there's an Intersite Pass scheme for Roussillon, with the same rules and discounts. The 38 participating attractions include the abbeys of St-Martin-du-Canigou and St-Michel-de-Cuixà, the Palais des Rois de Majorque, the art museum in Céret and the cloister at Elne.

Perpignan. But Jaume I of Aragón and Valencia made the mistake of dividing his kingdom between his two sons at his death in 1276. The Roussillonais part became the kingdom of Mallorca under Jaume II with its mainland capital at Perpignan, but – coveted by the rival brother, King Pere III of Aragón – it immediately allied itself with the French kings, who saw this as a splendid opportunity to expand their southern territories, thus ensuring continuous see-saw battles and annexations that were only ended by the Treaty of the Pyrenees, negotiated by Louis XIV and the Spanish king in 1659.

After the treaty, the French began a ruthless process of Frenchification, more successful in Perpignan where the bourgeoisie tended to identify their commercial interest with a central power. The Pyrenean hinterland, however, was largely unaffected until the late nineteenth century, when the collapse of traditional agriculture, the introduction of compulsory education and the devastation of the vineyards by phylloxera combined to depopulate the mountains – a still on-going process.

Although there's no real separatist impetus among French Catalans today, their sense of identity remains strong: the language is very much alive (not least in bilingual place-signage), and the national red-and-yellow flag is ubiquitous. The Pic du Canigou, which completely dominates Roussillon despite its modest (2784m) elevation, shines as a powerful beacon of Catalan nationalism, attracting hordes of Catalans from across the border to celebrate St John's Eve (June 23–24). At its feet the little town of Prades, place of exile from Franco's Spain of cellist Pau Casals, served as a focus of Catalan resistance until 1975.

Most of the region's attractions are easily reached from Roussillon's capital, Perpignan. The coast and foothills between it and the Spanish frontier are beautiful, especially at Collioure, though predictably crowded and in most places overdeveloped. You'll find the finest spots in the Tech and Têt valleys which slice southwest towards the high peaks, among them the Romanesque monasteries of Serrabona, St-Michel-de-Cuixà and St-Martin-du-Canigou, Vauban's fortress town of Villefranche-de-Conflent, the world-class modern art museum at Céret and Mont Canigou itself, lapped by foothill orchards of peaches and cherries.

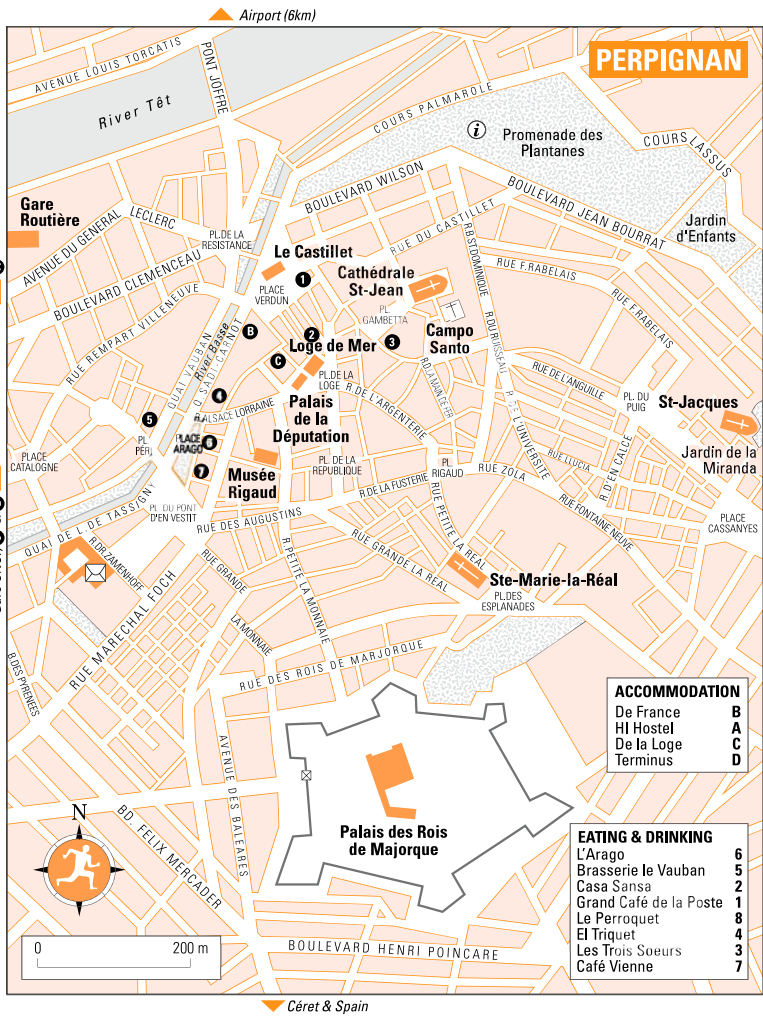

Perpignan

So far south, climate and geography alone would ensure a palpable Spanish influence. But aside from this, a good part of PERPIGNAN's population is of Spanish origin – refugees from the Civil War and their descendants. The southern influence is further augmented by a substantial contingent of North Africans, including both Arabs and white French settlers repatriated after Algerian independence in 1962.

Perpignan's glory days were the late thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries, when the kings of Mallorca held court here, and most of its historical interest derives from this period. Yet there are surprisingly few memorable and visitable monuments, and the city won't necessarily make a good first impression; street life ranges from the lively – flamenco buskers and such – to downright dirty and shabby, with numerous boarded-up business premises evidence of hard contemporary times. Few will want to stay more than a day or two before taking advantage of the good public transport links in every direction; if you've your own transport, you may prefer to base yourself somewhere in the surrounding area.

Arrival, information and accommodation

From the airport at Rivesaltes, 6km north (daily flights from London Stansted with Ryanair), there are up to six daily shuttle buses into town (€5), which call at the gare routière just off avenue Général-Leclerc, near the Pont Arago; a taxi will run about three times as much. The gare SNCF is on avenue Général-de-Gaulle in the west of town. Both stations are a fifteen-minute walk from the municipal tourist office in the Palais des Congrès at the end of boulevard Wilson (mid-June to mid-Sept Mon-Sat 9am-7pm, Sun 10am-4pm; rest of year Mon-Sat 9am-6pm, Sun 9am-noon; ☎04.68.66.30.30, 🌐www.perpignantourisme.com). For information and tickets for city buses, visit Kiosque CTP (Mon-Sat 9am-noon & 1.45-6.15pm) on place Péri, near the regional tourist office.

There's cheap accommodation near the gare SNCF, the best standard being the Hôtel Terminus, 2 av Général-de-Gaulle (☎04.68.34.32.54, ☎04.68.35.48.16; 📍), right opposite the station. However, you're generally better off in the town centre, where the best value is offered by 🏠 Hôtel de la Loge at 1 Fabriques d'en Nabot (☎04.68.34.41.02, 🌐www.hoteldelaloge.fr; 📍), a well-renovated medieval mansion with a central courtyard, on a quiet alley. Next comfort-notch up is occupied by the three-star Hôtel de France at 26 quai Sadi-Carnot (☎04.68.34.92.81, 📧francehotel@orange.fr; 📍), a well-kept nineteenth-century building at the edge of the old quarter, overlooking the canalized Basse River. In addition, there is a welcoming, if somewhat traffic-noisy, HI hostel (☎04.68.34.63.32; closed late Dec to late Jan), behind the public gardens of La Pépinière by Pont Arago (entrance from avenue de Grande-Bretagne), and the closer of two campsites, La Garrigole (☎04.68.54.66.10), on rue Maurice-Lévy (take bus #19), 5km northwest.

The City

The best place to begin your exploration of Perpignan is at Le Castillet, built as a gateway in the fourteenth century and now home to the Casa Païral (Wed–Mon: May–Sept 10am–7pm; Oct–April 11am–5.30pm; €4), an interesting museum of Roussillon's Catalan rural culture and the anti-French rebellions of 1661–74, when the tower held captured Catalan insurgents. A short distance down rue Louis-Blanc you come to the place de la Loge, focus of the pedestrianized heart of the old town, with a voluptuous Venus statue by Aristide Maillol (see p.830) in the centre. Dominating the three cafés and brasseries of the narrow square is Perpignan's most interesting building, the 1397-vintage Gothic Loge de Mer. Designed to hold the city's stock exchange and maritime court, it features gargoyles, lancet windows and lacy balustrades up top. Side by side next door are the sixteenth-century Hôtel de Ville, with its magnificent wrought-iron gates and another Maillol (La Méditerranée) in the courtyard, and the fifteenth-century Palais de la Députation, once the parliament of Roussillon.

From place de la Loge, rue St-Jean leads northeast to the fourteenth-century Cathédrale St-Jean on place Gambetta (Mon & Wed–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm, Tues & Sun 2–5pm; free), its external walls built of alternating bands of river stones and brick. The dimly lit interior is most interesting for its elaborate Catalan altarpieces and for the fourteenth-century, Rhenish polychrome Crucifixion, known as the Dévôt Christ; it's in the fifth side chapel along the north wall, probably brought from the Low Countries by a travelling merchant. Out the side door, a few steps on the left is the entrance to the Campo Santo, a vast enclosure that's one of France's oldest cemeteries, now used for summer concerts (otherwise May & Sept Tues–Sun noon–7pm; Oct–April Tues–Sun 11am–5pm).

South of the cathedral, rue de la Révolution-Française and rue de l'Anguille lead into the teeming, dilapidated maze of the Maghrebian and Romany quarters, where women congregate on the secluded inner lanes but are seldom seen on the busier thoroughfares. Here you'll find North African shops and cafés, especially on rue Lucia, and a daily market on place Cassanyes. Uphill and north from this stands the elegant church of St-Jacques (Tues–Sun 11am–5pm) dating from around 1200, on the edge of La Miranda gardens (daily: June–Sept 8–11.45am & 2–5.45pm; Oct–May 8–11am & 3.30–6pm), laid out on a section of the old city walls.

A twenty-minute walk southwest through place des Esplanades brings you to the main entrance of the Palais des Rois de Majorque (daily: June–Sept 10am–6pm; Oct–May 9am–5pm; €4), crowning the hill that dominates the southern part of the old town. Although Vauban's walls surround it now, the two-storey palace and its great arcaded courtyard date originally from the late thirteenth century. Thanks to the Spanish influence, there's a sophistication and finesse about the Gothic-Moorish architecture and detailing – for instance in the beautiful marble porch to the lower of the two chapels – that you don't often find in heavier northern styles.

Finally, at 16 rue de l'Ange near place Arago, you'll find the Musée Rigaud (Wed–Mon: May–Sept noon–7pm, Oct–April 11am–5.30pm; €4), dedicated to the work of locally born portraitist Hyacinthe Rigaud, who became official painter to the court of Versailles in the late seventeenth century. The collection also includes works by Dufy, Maillol, Picasso, Tapiès and Appel.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

Full-service restaurants are thin on the ground in central Perpignan. A budget choice is popular Le Perroquet, near the station at 1 av de Gaulle, with a good selection of reasonably priced Catalan dishes (closed Wed Sept–April; dinner menus from €20). For something smarter, head for Casa Sansa, 3 rue Fabriques-Couvertes, founded in 1846 and serving traditional Catalan cuisine amidst bullfight posters and old photos. Continuing the Iberian theme, El Triquet at 9 rue Lazare (closed Sun & Mon) gives good-value and decent-sized portions of both tapas and local dishes.

You'll have better luck with brasserie fare or at cafés. Favourites include L'Arago (open daily until late), with big portions, and Café Vienne, on palm-shaded place Arago, or the Art Deco Brasserie le Vauban across the River Basse at 29 quai Vauban. On place Verdun, in front of Le Castillet, the Grand Café de la Poste is a great place to watch the world go by, and it's here, too, that on summer evenings you see the Catalan dance, the sardana, being performed by anyone whom the spirit moves.

The most reliable central bar is Les Trois Sœurs, 2 rue Fontfroide, with tapas to nibble on during novelty acts and dedicated evenings (eg Sun "tea dance" at 6.30pm, Wed jazz night, "hen nights" with male live acts). There's also live street theatre and music in the city centre every Thursday night during July and August (the tourist office has details). The Palais des Rois de Majorque is the venue for the Trobades festival (22–24 June), plus jazz concerts every Friday in July. But Perpignan's best-known spectacle is La Procession de la Sanch, the Maundy Thursday procession of red-hooded penitents that goes from the church of St-Jacques to the cathedral between 3 and 5pm.

Around Perpignan

CANET-PLAGE, 12km due east, is the closest place near Perpignan for a dip in the Mediterranean, although there's nothing to recommend the place, except that its beach is wide and sandy and the sea is wet; take a CTP bus #1 from place Catalogne. Perhaps more interesting, 15km north and served by regular trains, is the Forteresse de Salses (daily: June–Sept 9.30am–7pm; Oct–May 10am–12.15pm & 2–5pm; €6.50). Built by the Catalans during the early fifteenth century, it was one of the first forts to be designed with a ground-hugging profile to protect it from artillery fire, though higher up it exhibits the traits of a pre-cannon-age château.

Another place, with not so much to see but interesting from an anthropological point of view, is the vine-girt village of Tautavel, 25km northwest off the St-Paul-de-Fenouillet road. In 1971 the remains of the oldest known European human being – dated to around 450,000 BC – were discovered near the village, and a reconstruction of the skull is on display in the village's Musée de la Préhistoire (April–June & Sept daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; Oct–March 10am–12.30pm &

2–5.30pm; @ www.tautavel.com; €7). Also on show are other finds from the cave where the skull was unearthed, the Caune d’Arago, a few kilometres north, which can itself be visited (daily: July & Aug 10am–noon & 12.30–5.30pm; Sept–June by arrangement).

Fourteen kilometres southeast of Perpignan, on the way to the resorts of the Côte Vermeille (see below), lies the town of ELNE. This small place once had the honour of seeing Hannibal camp below its walls en route to Rome, and used to be the capital of Roussillon. It was only eclipsed by Perpignan when the latter became the seat of the kings of Mallorca; Elne’s decline accelerated in 1602 when the bishopric moved to Perpignan. Today, it’s worth a stop for its fortified, partially Romanesque cathedral of Ste-Eulalie and extremely beautiful cloister (daily: April & May 9.30am–5.45pm, June–Sept 9.30am–7pm, Oct 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5.45pm, Nov–March 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–4.45pm; €4). The four colonnades of the cloister ably demonstrate a gradual transition from Romanesque to Gothic styles, clockwise from the south bay (twelfth century) to the east bay (fourteenth), intricately carved with biblical and secular scenes, plus mythical creatures. It’s the best possible introduction to Roussillon Romanesque, especially if you’re planning to visit Serrabona and St-Michel-de-Cuixà further west. Around the cathedral are the strollable lanes of the old town, and a certain amount of accommodation, including very pricey, 2006-renovated Hôtel Restaurant Cara Sol at 10 bd Ilibéris (☎ 04.68.22.10.42, @ www.hotelcarasol.com; 🍷); their somewhat more reasonable, competent restaurant has unbeatable view seating on the ramparts outside.

The Côte Vermeille

The Côte Vermeille, where the Pyrenees meet the sea, is the last patch of French shoreline before Spain, its seaside villages once so remote that the Fauvist painters of the early 1900s hid out here. Mass tourism has put paid to any sense of exclusivity or unspoiltness, but in low season at least they remain attractive, and well served by buses and trains from Perpignan. Argèles-Plage is the first resort beyond Elne, but you’re best off bypassing it in favour of the ports of Collioure and Banyuls-sur-Mer.

Argelès and Collioure

ARGELÈS, with the last of the broad sandy beaches on this stretch of coast, is lively and friendly but packed out mostly with foreign tourists. Argelès-Plage resort is now rather bigger than its older inland parent, Argelès-sur-Mer. Short stays are frowned on during summer season; one more flexible place in the inland ville might be Hôtel Clair Logis at 78 Route Nationale (☎ 04.68.81.03.27; all year; 🍷).

Five kilometres southeast, COLLIOURE is achingly picturesque – and achingly expensive. Palm trees line the curving main beach of Port d’Avall, while slopes of vines and olives rise to ridges crowned with ruined forts and watchtowers. Its setting and monuments inspired Henri Matisse and André Derain to embark in 1905 on their explosive Fauvist colour experiments; you can follow the chemin de Fauvisme, with reproductions of twenty of their works fixed to walls around the town. Collioure is dominated by the Château-Royal (daily: June–Sept 10am–6/7pm; Oct–May 9am–5pm; €4), founded by the Templars in the twelfth century and subject to later alterations at the hands of the kings of Mallorca and Aragón, and again after the Treaty of the Pyrenees gave Collioure to France. Sadly, the mediocre permanent “collection” inside scarcely merits the entrance fee; attend instead a concert in the courtyard.

Collioure's other landmark is the distinctive round belfry of the seventeenth-century church of Notre-Dame-des-Anges (daily 9am–noon & 2–6pm), formerly the harbour lighthouse. Behind it two small beaches (the northerly one naturist) are divided by a causeway leading to the chapel of St-Vincent, built on what used to be an islet, while west from here a concrete path follows the rocky shore to the bay of Le Racou.

Just north of the château lies the old harbour, still home to a bare handful of brightly painted lateen-rigged fishing boats – now more likely used as pleasure craft – all that remains of Collioure's traditional fleet. Beyond this, the stone houses and sloping lanes of the Mouré or old quarter are the main focus of interest. The tourist office is here on place de 18-Juin (July & Aug daily 9am–8pm; Sept–June Tues–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6.30pm; ☎04.68.82.15.47, 🌐www.collioure.com).

The most central place to stay is the atmospheric Hostellerie des Templiers (☎04.68.98.31.10, 🌐www.hotel-templiers.com; closed Jan; 3 annexes, 4 main bldg) at 12 av Camille-Pelletan, crammed with artwork and housing overflow in various annexes. With a car (central parking is nightmarish) and/or desire for a sea view, opt instead for Hôtel Triton, Port d'Avall beach (☎04.68.98.39.39, 📧hoteltriton@orange.fr; all year; 3–4) or the remoter Hôtel Caranques (☎04.68.82.06.68, 📧les-caranques@little-france.com; 3–4) at the east side of the bay on route de Port-Vendres, overpriced but very friendly and with direct access to a lido from the terraced gardens. The best campsite is seaside, caravan-free La Girelle (☎04.68.81.25.56; April–Sept), at plage d'Ouille, west of town on the coastal path to Le Racou. Rue Camille-Pelletan and its perpendicular lanes have some cafés and restaurants, but – except at Crêperie Bretonne at 8 rue Camille-Pelletan – you'll usually fork out well over the odds for listless grub. Get, at least, what you pay for at Amphytrion on Port d'Avall, crowded even off season for the sake of good-sized seafood-based menus from €20.

Port-Vendres and Banyuls-sur-Mer

Port-Vendres, 3km further down the coast along the minor D914, is by contrast a functional place, with no special sights. Although the harbour has declined from its heyday during the century-plus after 1830, when it provided the main link with North Africa, it still lands more fish than any other port on this coast. The boats arrive between about 4.30 and 6pm every day except Sunday; you can watch them unload and auction the catch on the dock at the far end of the harbour, and maybe tuck into a seafood meal afterwards at a quayside restaurant.

South towards BANYULS-SUR-MER, 7km further on, the main highway winds through attractive vineyards, with the Albères hills rising steeply on the right. The town itself, built round a broad sweep of pebble beach, is pleasant (and is where the GR10 meets the Mediterranean) but lacks the overt charm of Collioure. There are, however, several things to see and do in Banyuls. One is the seafront aquarium of the Laboratoire Arago (daily: July & Aug 9am–1pm & 2–9pm; Sept–June 9am–noon & 2–6.30pm; €4), run by the Sorbonne's marine biology department, whose tanks contain a comprehensive collection of the region's submarine life; this is protected in a nearby réserve marine, France's best, which can be explored with local scuba outfitters. Also worth a look are the works of sculptor Aristide Maillol (1861–1944), who was born near Banyuls; they are best seen at the Musée Maillol (daily: May–Sept 10am–noon & 4–7pm; Oct–April 10am–noon & 2–5pm; 🌐www.museemaillo.com; €3.50), 4km outside the town in the Vallée de Roume, where he is buried under his statue La Pensée. You might also sample the dark, full-bodied Banyuls dessert wine, an appellation which applies only to the vineyards of the Côte Vermeille.

The tourist office stands diagonally opposite the mairie on the seafront (July & Aug daily 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–7pm; ☎04.68.88.31.58, 🌐www.banyuls-sur-mer.com). Of the cheaper hotels, best is Le Manoir, 20 rue de Maréchal-Joffre (☎04.68.88.32.98; ②), while with a bit more to spend try Al-Fanal (☎04.68.88.00.81; ④) overlooking the yacht port. This also has its own seafood restaurant, but perhaps the best value in town – on an otherwise touristy street – is provided by 🍷 La Casa Miguel at 3 rue St-Pierre, purveying abundant, savoury tapas; inside are original Maillol lithographs and photos of old Banyuls.

Céret and the valley of the Tech

The first tempting stop on the D115, the main road which follows the Tech valley inland all the way up to the Spanish border just past Prats-de-Mollo, is CÉRET, capital of the Vallespir region, and served like the rest of the valley by regular buses from Perpignan. It's a delightful place, with a wonderfully shady old town overhung by huge plane trees; central streets are narrow and winding, opening onto small squares like the Plaça de Nou Reigs ("Nine Spouts" in Catalan), named after its central fountain. There's a large and varied Saturday market, which spills out of place Pablo-Picasso into the main street, avenue d'Espagne, where two remnants of the medieval walls, the Porte de France and Porte d'Espagne, are visible. In summer, Céret is also a big centre for cherries from surrounding orchards, corridas (bullfights) and Pamplona-style running of bulls. Other annual events include the Easter Sunday procession of the Resurrected Christ, and an international sardana jamboree at the end of August.

Céret's main sight, however, is the remarkable Musée d'Art Moderne (July to mid-Sept daily: 10am–7pm; rest of year daily except Tues 10am–6pm; 🌐www.musee-ceret.com; €5.50), just off boulevard Maréchal-Joffre. Between about 1910 and 1935, Céret's charms – coupled with the residence here of the Catalan artist and sculptor Manolo – drew a number of avant-garde artists to the town, including Matisse and Picasso, who personally dedicated a number of pictures to the museum; it also contains work by Chagall, Miró, Pignon and Dufy, among others. The Picassos include a marvellous series of ceramic bowls illustrating bullfighting scenes, executed over just five days in April 1953.

Get current information on festival dates from the tourist office on avenue Clemenceau (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; Sept–May Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5pm, Sat 9.30am–12.30pm; ☎04.68.87.00.53, 🌐www.ceret.fr). There's no better accommodation than friendly 🍷 Hôtel Vidal at 4 place Soutine (☎04.68.87.00.85, 🌐www.hotelvidalceret.com; closed Nov; ③), a tastefully converted episcopal palace with variable-sized but salubrious en-suite rooms. Full-service restaurant options aren't abundant but include the Vidal's very own El Bisbe (closed Tues & Wed low season), with gourmet if minceur menus at €28; Pizzeria Quattrocento on Plaça de Nou Reigs; and Le P'tit Grill at 47 rue St-Ferréol down from the museum, exactly as described, economical and thus hugely popular (reserve on ☎06.13.56.73.35).

Arles-sur-Tech and Gorges de la Fou

West of Céret, past the leaping single span of its fourteenth-century Pont du Diable, the view opens west towards the towering eminence of the Canigou massif. Once past the congested spa of Amélie-les-Bains (8km), it's 4km further to ARLES-SUR-TECH, a more interesting proposition. The Carolingian origins of its Romanesque Abbaye de Ste-Marie (July & Aug 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; also Sun April–Oct 2–5pm; €3.50) are thought to account for the back-to-front alignment of altar at the west end and entrance at the east. Entry is now via the thirteenth-century cloister, pleasant enough though it can't remotely compare in merit to Elne's or St-Michel-de-Cuix's. The unique and compelling feature of the massive church interior is a band of still-vividly coloured twelfth-century fresco high up in the apse of the eastern antichapel dedicated to St-Michel, appropriately featuring the archangel.

Outside next to the east facade – surmounted by an impressive Romanesque relief of Christ and the Tetramorphs — stands a very ancient (fourth- or fifth-century) sarcophagus, known as the Sainte-Tombe, which has the scientifically inexplicable habit of slowly filling with very pure water. Every year, on July 30, when Arles celebrates its fête dedicated to SS Abdon and Sennen (two Roman martyrs whose bones used to lodge in the sarcophagus), the water is siphoned out and distributed after Mass to the pilgrims who have come to worship. The town's other festivals include the probably prehistoric Fête de l'Ours, designed to exorcise human fear of awakening bears, traditionally held at the end of February when hibernation ended; there's also a torchlight Procession de la Sanch at Easter. Arles is also an important stage on the GR10, which from here heads northwest towards the Canigou massif or southeast towards Las Illas.

The tourist office (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; ☎04.68.39.11.99, 🌐www.villes-arles-sur-tech.fr) also serves as the abbey ticket office. Accommodation is limited to the Hôtel les Glycines on rue du Jeu-de-Paume (☎04.68.39.10.09, 📧hotelglycines@orange.fr; 📍), with a terrace restaurant (from €18), and Chambres d'Hôtes La Couvent Sana (☎04.68.83.92.90; 📍), on the edge of town. There's also a campsite, Riuferrier (☎04.68.39.11.06), on the west side of town.

Just west of Arles, on the road to Prats-de-Mollo, is the entrance to the Gorges de la Fou, some 2km in length, very narrow and up to 250m deep (☎04.68.39.16.21; April–Nov daily 10am–6pm weather permitting; €5). It's spectacular, but inevitably a tourist trap, with a car park, snack stalls and a metal catwalk all along the bottom of the gorge.

Prats-de-Mollo and the Spanish frontier

Beyond the gorge, the D115 climbs steadily, between valley sides thick with walnut, oak and sweet chestnut, 19km to Prats-de-Mollo, end of the bus line. Prats is the last French town before the Spanish frontier, 13km beyond at Col d'Ares, but it has none of the usual malaise of border towns and is much the most attractive place in the valley since Céret. Hub of the newer quarter is El Firal, the huge square in use for markets since 1308; the walled and gated ville haute just south makes for a wonderful wander, with steep cobbled streets and a weathered grey church with marvellous ironwork on the door under the porch. The old town's walls were rebuilt in the seventeenth century after the suppression of a local revolt against onerous taxation imposed by Louis XIV on his new, post-Treaty of the Pyrenees holdings. Vauban's Fort Lagarde (April–June & Sept–Oct Tues–Sun 2–5.30pm; July & Aug daily 11am–1pm & 5–7pm; €3.50), on the heights above the town, also dates from this period, built to intimidate the local population as much as to keep the Spanish out.

There's plenty of good-quality accommodation, which makes Prats a good base or transit stopover; in the walled quarter, go for Hostellerie Le Relais at 3 place Joseph de la Trinzeria (☎04.68.39.71.30, 🌐www.hostellerie-le-relais.com; ③), with cheerful pastel-hued rooms and a south-facing garden restaurant. Just outside, overlooking El Firal, is Hôtel Le Bellevue (☎04.68.39.72.48, 🌐www.lebellevue.fr.st; closed Dec to mid-Feb; ③), with more old-fashioned rooms but a credible restaurant (menu from €19). Alternatively, pamper yourself with affordable luxury 8km west at La Preste spa and its associated Grand Hôtel Thermal (☎04.68.87.55.00, 🌐www.sante-eau.com; April to early Nov; ④).

Les Aspres: Trinité and Serrabona

The only direct route between the valleys of the Tech and the Têt, best covered with a small car or cycle, is the D618 from Amélie-les-Bains to Bouleternère, across the eastern spurs of Canigou. It's 44 slow kilometres of mountain road, twisting through alternating hillside meadows and magnificent woods, past isolated masies (Catalan farmsteads), many now tenanted by foreigners or veteran French soixante-huitard idealists drawn to Les Aspres, as this region is known. The only amenities en route, 20km along, are in the tiny village of ST-MARSAL with its broad vistas, at Hôtel Auberge de Saint-Marsal (☎04.68.39.42.68, 🌐www.saintmarsal.net; ②), a converted mas. Some 5km further, the Romanesque Chapelle de la Trinité stands by the road, opposite the mairie of Prunet-Belpuig. Inside (usually open) is a fine, serene majestat, the particularly Catalan wood-carved Crucifixions of the eleventh or twelfth centuries; most of the Spanish examples were destroyed in 1936.

From here the D618 descends into the Boulès River valley, through the pretty hamlet of Boule d'Amont, before reaching the steep D84 side road climbing 4km to the remarkable, bluff-top Prieuré de Serrabona (formerly Serrabonne; daily except major holidays 10am–6pm; €3). One of the finest examples – arguably the finest – of Roussillon Romanesque, the interior of the church (consecrated 1151) is starkly plain, making the beautifully carved column-capitals of its rib-vaulted tribune even more striking: lions, centaurs, griffins and human figures with Asiatic faces and hairstyles – motifs brought back from the Crusades – executed in pink marble from Villefranche-de-Conflent. The altar is made of the same stone, as are the pillars and equally elaborate capitals of the cloister, set to one side of the church on a high terrace. Despite the rigours of monastic life here – long abandoned – the settlement was well developed, and the monks' cultivation terraces and irrigation systems have been partly adapted to support a lush botanical garden.

The valley of the Têt and Canigou

The upper part of the Têt valley, known as the Pays de Conflent, is utterly dominated by the Pic du Canigou. The valley bottoms are lush with fields and orchards, but the mountain presides over all, vast and uncompromising. As you continue upstream, the valley narrows and steepens until you emerge onto the Cerdagne plateau.

Prades and St-Michel-de-Cuixà

Chief valley town is Prades, easily accessible by train and bus on the Perpignan–Villefranche–Latour-de-Carol route, and the obvious starting point for all excursions in the Canigou region. Although there are no great sights beyond the church of St-Pierre in central place de la République, the town enjoys a status out of proportion to its size or economic power. This is largely thanks to Catalan cellist Pau (Pablo) Casals, who set up home here as an exile and fierce opponent of the Franco regime in Spain. In 1950 he instituted the internationally renowned chamber music festival (🌐www.prades-festival-casals.com), held annually from late July to mid-August, the usual venue being the abbey of St-Michel-de-Cuixà (see below). Prades (or Prada) also hosts a Catalan university in mid-August and the first Catalan-language primary school in France.

The tourist office is at 4 rue des Marchands (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 9am–noon; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.68.05.41.02, 🌐www.prades-tourisme.com). Prades has two central hotels, but both have seen better days, and currently the best accommodation lies just west of town on chemin de la Llitera: Chambres d'Hôtes Castell Rose (☎04.68.96.07.57, 🌐www.castellrose-prades.com; 5–6), in a converted manor house set in extensive grounds with a pool and tennis court. If that's beyond your budget, and you've transport, make for the delightful, welcoming 🏠 Hôtel St Joseph, 7km west across the river in gorge-set MOLITG-LES-BAINS (☎04.68.05.02.11, 📧gerard.pommerol@yahoo.fr; all year; rooms 2, studios 3), which has an excellent restaurant (copious table d'hôte suppers €12). The municipal campsite (☎04.68.96.29.83; April–Sept) is by the river on the road to Molitg. Back in Prades, the newest, freshest independent restaurant is La Meridienne at 20 rue des Marchands, with a properly trained chef and menus/formules at €12 and €15.

Three kilometres south of Prades stands one of the loveliest abbeys in France, originally eleventh-century St-Michel-de-Cuixà (May–Sept Mon–Sat 9.30–11.50am & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 9.30–11.50am & 2–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; €4). Although mutilated after the Revolution it is still beautiful, with its crenellated tower (there were two until the 1830s) silhouetted against the wooded – sometimes snowy – slopes of Canigou. You enter via the labyrinthine, vaulted crypt, with a round central chamber, before proceeding to the church with its strange Visigothic-style “keyhole” arches. But the glory of the place is the cloister and its twelfth-century column capitals. Although most of the north and east bays were taken to the Cloisters Museum in New York early in the twentieth century, the remaining west and south series rival Serrabona and Elne for virtuosity. Carved in the same rose marble used at Serrabona, they depict highly stylized figures strongly reminiscent of Sumerian, Assyrian or Persian relief art: often monsters, either alone or being grappled by human keepers displaying an array of Asiatic beards, headgear and corpulent anatomies.

Vernet-les-Bains and St-Martin-du-Canigou

A not unpleasant little hillside spa, VERNET-LES-BAINS, 12km along the minor, foothill-skimming D27 from the abbey, can make a useful base for picking up provisions to climb the Pic du Canigou. It has a tourist office in place de la Mairie (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.68.05.55.35, 🌐www.ot-vernet-les-bains.fr). Several two-star hotels offer a range of amenities: two of the best are the spa hotel itself, Les Sources (☎04.68.05.52.84, 🌐www.thermes-vernet.com; 2), and the Princess, rue de Lavandiers (☎04.68.05.56.22, 🌐www.hotel-princess.com; 3). There are two campsites outside Vernet and a gîte d'étape (☎04.68.05.51.30) next to the municipal pool. For a meal, try roast-meat specialist Le Cortal (closed Oct, Nov & Mon), at the top of the old quarter behind the church.

A half-hour mandatory walk (no car access) above the hamlet of Casteil, itself 2.5km south of Vernet, is the stunning abbey of St-Martin-du-Canigou, founded in 1001. Resurrected from ruins between 1902 and 1982, and now occupied by a working religious community, the monastery at over 1000m altitude occupies a narrow promontory of rock surrounded by chestnut and oak woods, while above it rise the precipitous slopes and eroded pinnacles of Canigou. Below, the ground drops sheerly into the ravine of the Cady stream that rushes down from the Col de Jou. The place is visitable in French-narrated tours (year-round Mon–Sat 10am, 11am, 2pm, 3pm, 4pm; also noon & 5pm June–Sept; Sun/hols 10am & 12.30pm rather than 10am, 11am, noon; closed Jan & Mon low season; €4). What you see is a beautiful little garden and cloister overlooking the ravine, a low dark atmospheric chapel beneath the church and the church itself.

From the reception building, a path leads up to a rocky viewpoint from which most photographs of the monastery are taken. This trail continues to meet the GR10 at the Col de Segalès on the GR10, and from there to the staffed Refuge Grand Mariailles (1718m; ☎04.68.92.22.90 or 04.68.04.49.86; 55 bunks; late May to early Oct) on Canigou's west flank. For a day-loop walk back to Casteil, another path drops down into the Cady ravine just at the start of the monastery buildings.

The Pic du Canigou

You can get at least part of the way up the Pic du Canigou by vehicle, although given the roughness of the road you may not want to risk your own buggy. Sturdy cars (preferably 4WD) can get as far as the Chalet des Cortalets refuge either by the track from Clara-Villerach, near Taurinyà, or the even steeper and rougher mining road that begins by the Al Pouncy campsite near Fillols. Both routes take about an hour at the wheel. Alternatively, you could rent a jeep and driver from Ria (☎04.68.05.27.08) or Corbières Grand Raid (☎04.68.05.24.24) in Prades, plus Garage Villaceque (☎04.68.05.66.58) or Jean-Paul Bouzan (☎04.68.05.62.28) in Vernet-les-Bains. For walkers, the standard ascent is from Vernet on a path that begins about 700m along the road to Fillols, joining up with the GR10 at the Refuge de Bonaigua (about 3hr) which you leave (about 1hr later) below the Pic Joffre to follow an HRP variant up the ridge to the summit (about 1hr). It's not for faint hearts or the inexperienced (some have fallen to their deaths), because the final ascent is rather exposed. There's an easier five-hour alternative, starting from Casteil, passing the aforementioned Refuge Grand Mariailles, then following the HRP for the last stretch via the unstaffed Arago hut.

From the Chalet des Cortalets (2150m; ☎04.68.96.36.19; 111 places; mid-May to late Oct; doubles plus two grades of dorm bunk, restaurant from €13), it's an easy ninety-minute walk to the top. Strike west through the last trees, past a little lake, with a magnificent view into the cirque below the summit, round the back of the Pic Joffre, and up the long stony Crête de Barbet to the cross and Catalan flag that crown the summit.

Although the ascent by this route is straightforward in good weather, you should be properly equipped and have a good map. On the night of June 23, Catalans for kilometres around, including half the population of Barcelona, head for the top to light the bonfire from which a flame is carried to kindle all the focs de Sant Joan of the Catalan villages – though the scene around the refuge can be pretty horrendous, with tents, boom-boxes and litter galore.

Villefranche-de-Conflent and the Petit Train Jaune

A medieval garrison town suffering from arrested development, VILLEFRANCHE-DE-CONFLENT, 6km up the Têt from Prades and a similar distance below Vernet-les-Bains, lives off its tweeness but nevertheless merits a stop. Founded in 1092 by the counts of Cerdagne to block incursions from rivals in Roussillon, then remodelled by Vauban in the seventeenth century after annexation by France, its streets and fortifications have remained untouched by subsequent events. Worth a look is the church of St-Jacques, with a primitively carved thirteenth-century baptismal font just inside the door; you can also walk the perimeter of the walls (daily: Feb–May & Oct–Dec 10.30am–12.30pm & 2–5/6pm; June & Sept 10am–7pm; July & Aug 10am–8pm; closed Jan; €4.50). If you do, you’ll see why in 1681 Vauban constructed the Château-Fort Libéria on the heights overlooking the town to protect it from “aerial” bombardment. Getting up there (daily: June–Sept 9am–8pm; Oct–May 10am–6pm; €5.80) involves taking the free minibus leaving from near the town’s main gate; you can return to Villefranche by descending a subterranean stairway of a thousand steps, which debouches at the end of rue St-Pierre.

The tourist office (Feb–Dec daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; ☎04.68.96.22.96, 🌐www.confrent.com) is in place d’Église. There is no accommodation in the walled town, but just north near the train station are the welcoming, comfortable Chambres d’Hôtes Mireille Pena (☎04.68.96.52.35, 📧mpebafain@aol.com; 📍). The best-value local restaurant, in the old town at 31 rue St-Jean, is La Casa de la Nine (all year closed Sun eve & Mon, Oct–March also closed Tues & all eves except Fri/Sat, all Feb) English-run but well respected by locals.

Villefranche is the terminus for main-line trains from Perpignan. From here up to La Tour-de-Carol on the Spanish frontier, transport is by SNCF bus, or – far nicer – the narrow-gauge, year-round Petit Train Jaune, which climbs along the Têt at a pace that allows you a walker’s or cyclist’s proximity to the scenery, especially in summer when some of the carriages are open-air (☎04.68.96.56.62, 🌐www.ter-sncf.com/trains_touristiques/train_jaune.htm). The summertime frequency of the trains (up to 7 daily) makes it practical to hop off and on, allowing you to explore the areas around the smaller, isolated stations, many of them haltes facultatifs (ask to be set down).

The upper Têt

Some 17km southwest of Villefranche on the south side of the main valley, the wild wooded canyon of the Gorges de Carança cuts south through the mountains towards Spain. A clear path, with catwalks, follows the gorge to the GR10 at the basic Refuge Ras de Carança (3–4hr; 1831m; ☎04.68.04.13.18; 30 places; June–Sept 15), while as much walking again brings hikers to the HRP on the frontier. THUÈS-ENTRE-VALLS is the closest village to the canyon, with a halte facultatif on the Petit Train Jaune, and Luk & Micheline Peters’ unsigned gîte 🏠 Mas de Bordes (☎04.68.97.05.00; all year; doubles 📍, dorm €12, evening meal €13), up the single lane from the train line. This also offers a camping meadow, and an on-site hot spring (free, 40–degrees) a 25-minute tough but scenic walk distant.

At FONTPÉDROUSE, 4km beyond Thuès, there’s one of the better restaurants in the valley – Pyrénéen, with Antillean influences – and a minor side road veering south across the river and up a grassy spur above the River Aigues towards the village of Prat-Balaguer. Bearing right instead at a fork leads, 3km from Fontpédrouse station, to the organized Bains de St-Thomas (daily 10am–7.40pm, last admittance 8.40pm July/Aug; closed Nov 14–Dec 5; €4–4.50), with open pools at a pleasant 37–38°C.

The Cerdagne

Another 10km up the N116 road from Fontpédrouse, or three stops on the train, brings you onto the wide, grassy plateau of the Cerdagne, whose once-powerful counts controlled lands from Barcelona to Roussillon. It’s an area that has never been sure whether it is Spanish or French. After the French annexation of Roussillon, it was partitioned, with Spain retaining – as it still does – the enclave of Llivia. The Petit Train Jaune snakes its way laboriously across the entire plateau, though stations aren't always convenient for the settlements they nominally serve.

Easterly gateway to the region is the little garrison town of MONT-LOUIS, built by Vauban in 1679–82; the top citadel is still a training school for paratroops and marines. There isn't much to see other than the ramparts (Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5/6pm, also Sun July–Aug; €4.50), but it is a far pleasanter place to stay than the monstrous ski resort of Font-Romeu just up the road, far from the best locally (that title is shared between Les Angles and Formiguères in the nearby Capcir). There's a tourist office (July & Aug daily 9.30am–noon & 2–7pm; Sept–June Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎ 04.68.04.21.97, 🌐 www.mont-louis.net), while the best accommodation is Chambres d'Hôtes La Volute (☎ 04.68.04.27.21, 🌐 www.lavolute.monsite.orange.fr; 📍), a B&B set in the seventeenth-century former governor's mansion, with a lawn-garden atop a section of the ramparts.

The Têt ultimately has its source in the Carlit massif, which looms above the dammed Lac des Bouillouesses, 13km northwest of Mont-Louis by the D60 and very crowded in summer. Car access along this road is limited to a navette during peak season, or you can hike in along the GR10 from Mont-Louis in under four hours. On arrival you'll find a triple choice of accommodation; best of the three, east of the dam, is Auberge du Carlit (☎ 04.68.04.22.23; all year), with rooms (📍 HB) and a 32-bunk gîte in a separate building (€27pp HB).

The Petit Train Jaune carries on past Mont-Louis, though the drama of the ride is diminished compared to the lower Têt valley. A good intermediate spot to alight and seek shelter and food is SAILLAGOÛSE, where the dead-central Hôtel Planotel (☎ 04.68.04.72.08, 🌐 www.planotel.fr) offers rooms in the 1895-built vieille maison (📍) or a nearby modern annexe (📍), and excellent-value meals either in its brasserie (€14) or the full-on restaurant. Ur-les-Escalades is the closest (5km) station to more hot springs in DORRES, the Bains Romains (daily 8.30am–8.15pm; €3.90), with open-air granite pools (39–40°C) at their best in ski season. End of the line is LATOURE-DE-CAROL with its fine old quarter 1km northwest of Enveitg station; on the main road the Auberge Catalane (☎ 04.68.04.80.66, 🌐 www.auberge-catalane.fr; 📍) has been going since 1929, with soundproofed rooms and a well-attended restaurant where menus encompass fish, foie gras, gesiers and boudin noir.

Travel details

Trains

Bayonne to: Biarritz (14 daily; 10min); Bordeaux (6–12 daily; 1hr 40min–2hr 10min); Boussens (7–8 daily; 3hr); Cambo-les-Bains (4–5 daily; 25min); Hendaye (14 daily; 35min); Lourdes (5–8 daily; 1hr 45min–2hr); Orthez (5–6 daily; 45min–1hr); Pau (7–8 daily; 1hr 15min); St-Gaudens (7–8 daily; 2hr 45min); St-Jean-de-Luz (16–20 daily; 25min); St-Jean-Pied-de-Port (4–5 daily; 1hr); Tarbes (7–8 daily; 2hr); Toulouse (7–12 daily; 3hr–3hr 30min).
Foix to: Ax-les-Thermes (11–13 daily, some on SNCF bus; 55min); Barcelona (3–4 daily; 5hr 15min–6hr); Latour-de-Carol (7 daily, some on SNCF bus; 1hr 45min–2hr); Tarascon-sur-Ariège (11–13 daily; 15–20min); Toulouse (11–13 daily; 1hr 20min–1hr 45min).

Luchon to: Montréjeau (8 daily; usually SNCF coach; 45–55min).

Pau to: Bordeaux (5–7 daily; 1hr 15min–2hr); Oloron-Ste-Marie (6–9 daily; 35min); Orthez (5–6 daily; 20min).

Perpignan to Argelès-sur-Mer (8–12 daily; 20min); Banyuls-sur-Mer (8–12 daily; 30min); Cerbère (8–12 daily; 40min); Collioure (8–12 daily; 25min); Elne (8–12 daily; 10min); Narbonne (10–13 daily; 35–50min); Prades (5–8 daily; 45min); Salses (7–9 daily; 15min); Toulouse (10–12 daily; 2hr 30min–3hr); Villefranche-de-Conflent (5–8 daily; 55min).

Quillan to: Carcassonne (4–5 daily, mostly SNCF coach; 55min–1hr 15min); Limoux (6–7 daily, mostly SNCF coach; 30–40min).

St-Girons to: Bouspens (6–8 daily on SNCF coach; 45min).

Tarbes to: Bordeaux (6–9 daily; 3hr 15min); Dax (6–9 daily; 1hr 50min); Lourdes (11–14 daily; 15min); Orthez (3–5 daily; 1hr 10min).

Villefranche-de-Conflent to Latour-de-Carol (4–7 daily; 2hr 45min); Mont-Louis (5–8 daily; 1hr 35min).

Buses

Bayonne to: Biarritz (local transport; 15–20min); Cambo-les-Bains (several daily; 30–40min); Orthez (3 daily; 50min); Pau (2–3 daily; 1hr 10min); San Sebastian (2 daily Mon–Sat; 1hr 45min); St-Jean-de-Luz (5–7 daily; 40min).

Biarritz to: Hendaye (5–7 daily; 35min); Orthez (2–3 daily; 1hr 45min); Pau (2–3 daily; 2hr 30min); St-Jean-de-Luz (11–16 daily; 25min); Salies-de-Béarn (2 daily; 1hr 20min).

Foix to: Lavelanet (2–3 daily; 30min); Mirepoix (2–3 daily; 45min); Quillan (1 daily; 1hr 30min).

Laruns to: Bioux-Oumette trailhead (1 daily in morning, summer only; 40min); Fabrèges (2 daily summer and winter ski seasons; 55min); Gabas (2 daily summer and winter ski seasons; 25min).

Lourdes to: Bagnères-de-Bigorre (2–3 daily; 45min); Barèges, usually changing at Pierrefitte-Nestalas (6–7 daily on SNCF coach or SALT bus; 1hr 10min); Cauterets, changing at Pierrefitte-Nestalas (4–7 daily; 50min); Gavarnie, changing at Luz-St-Sauveur (July & Aug 2 daily, otherwise 3 weekly; 1hr 15min); Luz-St-Sauveur (5–7 daily; 45min); Pau (4–8 daily; 1hr 15min).

Oloron-Ste-Marie to: Bedous (4–6 daily on SNCF coach; 30min); Urdos (4–6 daily; 50min).

Pau to: Agen (1–2 daily; 3hr); Bayonne (3–4 daily on TPR; 2hr 15min); Biarritz (2–3 daily on TPR; 2hr 30min); Eaux-Bonnes (3 daily on CITRAM; 1hr 15min); Gourette (2 daily on CITRAM; 1hr 30min); Laruns (5–8 daily via Buzy; 1hr 10min); Oloron-Ste-Marie (2–3 daily on CITRAM; 45min); Orthez (2–3 daily; 45min); Salies-de-Béarn (3 daily; 1hr 10min). Perpignan to: Argelès (3 daily; 30min); Arles-sur-Tech (6 daily; 1hr 15min); Axat (2 daily, 1hr 40min); Banyuls-sur-Mer (3 daily; 1hr 10min); Céret (14 daily; 55min); Collioure (3 daily; 45min); Latour-de-Carol (2–3 daily; 3hr); Mont-Louis (4 daily; 2hr 15min); Port-Vendres (3–6 daily; 55min); Prades (7 daily; 1hr); Prats-de-Molló (6 daily; 1hr 40min); La Preste (3 daily; 2hr 5min); Villefranche-le-Conflent (7 daily; 1hr 15min).

Quillan to: Axat (2 daily; 20min); Carcassonne (2 daily; 1hr 20min); Comus (1–2 daily; 1hr 5min); Perpignan (1 daily; 1hr 30min); Quérigut (3 weekly in summer; 1hr 30min).

St-Girons to: Aulus-les-Bains (Mon–Sat 1–2 daily; 45min); Bouspens (Mon–Sat 7 daily, Sun 5 on SNCF coach; 40min); Foix (4 daily; 1hr); Toulouse (2–3 daily; 2hr).

St-Jean-de-Luz to: Cambo-les-Bains (2–4 daily; 45min); Espelette (2 daily; 35min); Hendaye (9–17 daily; 20min); Sare (2–3 daily; 30min).

Tarbes to: Auch (2–6 daily; 1hr 40min); Bagnères-de-Bigorre (4–6 daily by SNCF coach; 40min); Lourdes (hourly; 30min); Luz-St-Sauveur (5–7 daily on SALT bus; 1hr); Pau (6 daily; 1hr).

Languedoc

- * Bulls Whether in the ring or on your plate as a succulent boeuf à la gardienne, the taureaux of the plains of Languedoc are famous. See p.845
- * Pont du Gard This graceful aqueduct is an emblem of southern France and a tribute to Roman determination. See p.848
- * Water-jousting A Setois tradition, in which teams of rowers charge at each other in gondolas. See p.857
- * St-Guilhem-le-Désert The ancient Carolingian monastery and the tiny hamlet at its feet present a quintessential Occitan panorama. See p.860
- * Carcassonne The Middle Ages come alive in this walled fortress town. See p.872
- * The Canal du Midi Cycling, walking or drifting along this tree-shaded canal is the most atmospheric way of savouring France's southwest. See p.874
- * Les Abattoirs This former slaughterhouse in Toulouse contains an important collection of modern and contemporary art. See p.884
- * Albi's Toulouse-Lautrec The most comprehensive collection of Toulouse-Lautrec's work is in the former Bishop's Palace of his home town. See p.890

△ Pont du Gard

Languedoc

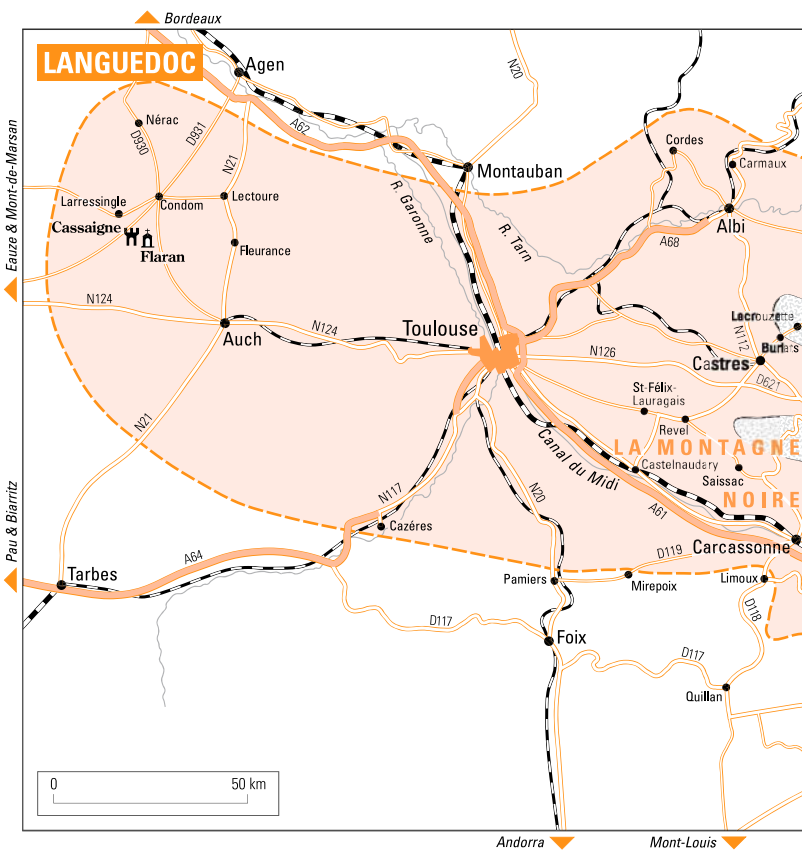

Languedoc is more an idea than a geographical entity. The modern région covers only a fraction of the lands where Occitan or the langue d'oc – the language of oc, the southern Gallo-Latin word for oui – once dominated. These stretched south from Bordeaux and Lyon into Spain and northwest Italy.

The heartland today is the Bas Languedoc – the coastal plain and dry, stony vine-growing hills between Carcassonne and Nîmes. It's here that the Occitan movement has its power base, demanding recognition of its linguistic and cultural distinctiveness. A good part of its character derives from resentment of political domination by remote and alien Paris, aggravated by the area's traditional poverty. In recent times this has been focused on Parisian determination to drag the province into the modern world, with massive tourist development on the coast and the drastic transformation of the cheap wine industry. It is also mixed up in a vague collective folk memory with the brutal repression of the Protestant Huguenots around 1700, the thirteenth-century massacres of the Cathars and the subsequent obliteration of the brilliant langue d'oc troubadour tradition. It is a hostility that has made an essentially rural and conservative population vote traditionally for the Left – at least until the elections of 2002, which saw wide support for Le Pen's resurgent Front National. Although a sense of Occitan identity remains strong in the region, it has very little currency as a spoken or literary language, despite the popularity of university-level language courses and the foundation of Occitan-speaking elementary schools.

Toulouse, the cultural capital of medieval and modern Languedoc, lies outside the administrative région but is included in this chapter and is a high point among numerous other attractions. There are great stretches of dramatic landscape and river gorges, from the Cévennes foothills in the east to the Montagne Noire and Corbières hills in the west. There's ecclesiastical architecture in Albi and St-Guilhem-le-Désert, and medieval towns at Cordes and Carcassonne, which also provides access to the unforgettably romantic Cathar castles to the south. Nîmes has extensive Roman remains, and there are great swathes of beach where – away from the major resorts – you can still find a kilometre or two to yourself.

Eastern Languedoc

Heading south from Paris via Lyon and the Rhône valley, you can go one of two ways: east to Provence and the Côte d'Azur – which is what most people do – or west to Nîmes, Montpellier and the comparatively untouched northern Languedoc coast. Nîmes itself, while not officially part of the modern administrative région, makes for a good introduction to the area, a hectic modern town impressive both for its Roman past and for some scattered attractions – the Pont du Gard for one – nearby. Montpellier is also worth a day or two, not so much for any historical attractions as for a heady vibrancy and ease of access to the ancient villages, churches and fine scenery of the upper Hérault valley. This was the part of Languedoc most affected by the spread of Protestantism in the sixteenth century, an experience that has marked the region’s character more than any other. The Protestants, with their attachment to rationality and self-improvement, espoused the cause of French over Occitan, supported the Revolution and the Republic, fought Napoléon III’s coup against the 1848 Revolution and adhered to the anticlerical and socialist movement under the Third Republic. They dominated the local textile industry in the nineteenth century and were extremely active in the Resistance to the Nazis.

They also suffered a great deal for their cause, as did the whole region. After the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685 – the treaty which had granted religious toleration at the end of the sixteenth century – persecution drove their most committed supporters, especially in the Cévennes to the north, to form clandestine assemblées du Désert, and finally, in 1702, to take up arms in the first guerrilla war of modern times, La Guerre des Camisards, conflicts which still resonate in the minds of both Huguenot and Catholic families.

Nîmes and around

On the border between Provence and Languedoc, the name of NÎMES is inescapably linked to two things – denim and Rome. The latter's influence resulted in some of the most extensive Roman remains in Europe, while the former (de Nîmes), equally visible on the backsides of the populace, was first manufactured in the city's textile mills, and exported to the southern USA in the nineteenth century to clothe slaves. The city is worth a visit, in part for the ruins but also to experience its new-found energy and direction, having enlisted the services of a galaxy of architects and designers – including Norman Foster, Jean Nouvel and Philippe Starck – in a to-date futile bid to wrest southern supremacy from neighbouring Montpellier.

Arrival and information

The Camargue airport, which Nîmes and Arles share, lies 20km southeast of the city. A shuttle service links it to the town centre (2–4 daily; ☎04.66.29.27.29; “Gambetta” or “Imperator” stop; €5). By taxi, the trip will cost at least €28 (€33 at night). The gare SNCF is ten minutes’ walk southeast of the city centre at the end of avenue Feuchères, which leads down from Esplanade Charles-de-Gaulle, with the gare routière (☎04.66.29.52.00) just behind in rue Ste-Félicité (access through the train station). The main tourist office is at 6 rue Auguste, by the Maison Carrée (Easter–Sept Mon–Fri 8am–7/8pm, Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–6pm; Oct–Easter Mon–Fri 8.30am–7pm, Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎04.66.58.38.00, 🌐www.ot-nîmes.fr).

Accommodation

There are several decent hotels in Nîmes, located in two main zones: a cluster north of the train station and in the old city. An attractive HI hostel with tent space can be found on chemin de la Cigale, 2km northwest of the centre (☎04.66.68.03.20, 🌐www.hinîmes; July & Aug membership required; Sept–June no curfew; €9); take bus #2 direction “Alès/ Villeverte” from the gare SNCF to stop “Stade” – the last bus goes at 8pm. The municipal campsite (☎04.66.62.05.82, 🌐www.camping-nîmes.com; year-round) is on route de Générac, 5km south of the city centre, beyond the modern Stade Costières and the autoroute.

Alcanthe du Temple 1 rue Charles About ☎04.66.67.54.61, 🌐www.hotel-du-temple.com. A clean and economical hotel, with friendly staff, good amenities and 24-hour access. This is one of the old town’s best bargains. Closed Jan. ③

La Baume 21 rue Nationale ☎ 04.66.76.28.42, www.new-hotel.com. Set in a renovated mansion, with a courtyard dining area, and appointed with tasteful restraint. The best in the mid-range, with excellent location and price (and off-season reductions). Ⓜ

Central 2 place du Château ☎ 04.66.67.27.75, www.hotel-central.org. Set on the edge of the historic centre in an eighteenth-century building, this hotel is excellent value for money. Ⓜ

Imperator Concorde quai de la Fontaine ☎ 04.66.21.90.30, www.hotel-imperator.com. The city's finest choice, and a favourite of Hemingway's, located by the Jardin de la Fontaine.

The luxuriously appointed rooms have a/c and satellite TV, the service is excellent and there is private parking. Ⓜ

De Provence 5/7 square de la Couronne ☎ 04.66.76.04.92, www.hoteldeprovence.net. Friendly, well kept and set in an eighteenth-century house, with excellent amenities – such as cable TV – for its price. Ⓜ

Royal 3 bd Alphonse-Daudet ☎ 04.66.67.32.89, ☎ 04.66.21.90.30. Atmospheric mid-market hotel near the Maison Carrée, equipped with all mod cons. Also has a good restaurant, with an excellent selection of tapas. Ⓜ

The City

Most of what you'll want to see is contained within the boulevards de la Libération, Amiral-Courbet, Gambetta and Victor-Hugo, and there's much pleasure to be had from just wandering the narrow lanes that they enclose, discovering unexpected squares with fountains and cafés.

Les Arènes

The focal point of the city is a first-century Roman arena, known as Les Arènes (March & Oct 9.30am–5.30pm; April, May & Sept 9am–6pm; June–Aug 9am–7pm; Nov–Feb 9.30am–4.30pm; closed during special events; €7.70), which lies at the junction of boulevards de la Libération and Victor-Hugo. One of the best-preserved Roman arenas in the world, its arcaded two-storey facade conceals massive interior vaulting, riddled with corridors and supporting raked tiers of seats with a capacity of more than 20,000 spectators, whose staple fare was the blood and guts of gladiatorial combat. When Rome's sway was broken by the barbarian invasions, the arena became a fortress and eventually a slum, home to an incredible 2000 people when it was cleared in the early

The bullfight

Nîmes' great passion is bullfighting, and its ferias are acknowledged and well attended by both aficionados and fighters at the highest level. The wildest and most famous is the Feria de Pentecôte, which lasts five days over the Whitsun weekend. A couple of million people crowd into the town (hotel rooms need to be booked a year in advance), and seemingly every city native opens a bodega at the bottom of the garden for dispensing booze. There are corridas, which end with the killing of the bull, courses where cocards are snatched from the bulls head, and semi-amateur courses libres when a small posse of bulls is run through the streets and the daring try to snatch the cocards from their heads. In 1996, Nîmes witnessed the acclamation of the first-ever woman matador, Cristina Sanchez, though she took an early retirement in 1999, blaming the machismo of the profession. In recent years events have been frequently marked by small but vocal protests and in 2006 several organizers of the local tauromachie world were injured by letter bombs. Two other ferias take place: one at carnival time in February, when the inflatable roof of the Arènes is pulled over for protection from the weather; the other in the third week of September at grape-harvest time, the Feria des Vendanges. The tourist office can supply full details and advise you about accommodation if you want to visit at feria time.

1800s. Today it has recovered something of its former role, with the passionate summer crowds still turning out for some real-life blood-letting – Nîmes has the premier European bullfighting scene outside Spain.

The Maison Carrée and Porte d'Auguste

Behind the arena, through the beautiful little place du Marché, rue Fresque leads towards the city's other famous landmark, the Maison Carrée (March & Oct 9am–6pm; April, May & Sept 9am–7pm; June–Aug 9am–8pm; Nov–Feb 10am–5pm; €4.50), a neat, jewel-like temple celebrated for its integrity and harmonic proportions. Built in 5 AD, it's dedicated to the adopted sons of Emperor Augustus – all part of the business of inflating the imperial personality cult. No surprise, then, that Napoleon, with his love of flummery and tendency to ennoble his cronies to boost his own legitimacy, should have taken it as the model for the church of the Madeleine in Paris. The temple stands in its own small square opposite rue Auguste, where the Roman forum used to be, with pieces of Roman masonry scattered around. On the north side of place de la Maison Carrée, there's a gleaming example of French architectural boldness, the Carrée d'Art, by British architect Norman Foster. In spite of its size, this box of glass, aluminium and concrete sits modestly among the ancient roofs of Nîmes, its slender portico echoing that of the Roman temple opposite. Light pours in through the walls and roof, giving it a grace and weightlessness that makes it not in the least incongruous. Housed within the Carrée d'Art is the excellent Musée d'Art Contemporain (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; €4.90), containing an impressive collection of French and Western European art from the last four decades. There's a roof-terrace café at the top, overlooking the Maison Carrée.

Though already a prosperous city on the Via Domitia, the main Roman road from Italy to Spain, Nîmes did especially well under Augustus. He gave the city its walls, remnants of which surface here and there, and its gates, as the inscription on the surviving Porte d'Auguste at the end of rue Nationale – the Roman main street – records. The emperor is also responsible for the chained crocodile, which figures on Nîmes' coat of arms. The device was copied from an Augustan coin struck to commemorate his defeat of Antony and Cleopatra after he settled veterans of that campaign on the surrounding land.

The Cathédrale Notre-Dame-et-St-Castor and around

Running back east into the old quarter from the Maison Carrée, rue de l'Horloge leads to the delightful place aux Herbes, with two or three cafés and bars and a fine twelfth-century house on the corner of rue de la Madeleine. In the former bishop's palace, the Musée du Vieux Nîmes (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; free) has displays of Renaissance furnishings and decor and documents to do with local history. Opposite, the Cathédrale Notre-Dame-et-St-Castor sports a handsome sculpted frieze on the west front, illustrating the story of Adam and Eve, and a pediment inspired by the Maison Carrée. It's practically the only existing medieval building in town, as most were destroyed in the turmoil that followed the Michelade, the St Michael's Day massacre of Catholic clergy and notables by Protestants in 1567. Despite brutal repression in the wake of the Camisard insurrection of 1702, Nîmes was, and remains, a doggedly Protestant stronghold. Apart from that, the cathedral is of little interest, having been seriously mutilated in the Wars of Religion and significantly altered in the nineteenth century. The author Alphonse Daudet was born in its shadow, as was Jean Nicot – a doctor, no less – who introduced tobacco into France from Portugal in 1560 and gave his name to the world's most widely consumed drug.

Banned from public office, the Protestants put their energy into making money. The results of their efforts can be seen in the seventeenth- and eighteenth-century hôtels they built in the streets around the cathedral – rues de l'Aspic, Chapitre, Dorée and Grande-Rue, among others. Their church is the serious-looking Grand Temple on boulevard Amiral-Courbet, a short walk south of Porte d'Auguste. On the same street, the Musée Archéologique and Muséum d'Histoire Naturelle (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; €4.90 for both), housed in a seventeenth-century Jesuit chapel at no. 13, are full of Roman bits and bobs and stuffed animals. There's another museum, the Musée des Beaux-Arts, south of the Arènes in rue de la Cité-Foulc (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; €4.90), which prides itself on a huge Gallo-Roman mosaic showing the Marriage of Admetus, but is otherwise pretty ordinary. If you're planning on making the rounds of the museums, opt for the Billet Global museum passes (available at the tourist office; €9.50, for the Roman ruins, €9 for the museums), which give one-time access to the four sites (including the Musée d'Art Contemporain) listed above.

The interior of the Hôtel de Ville, between rue Dorée and rue des Greffes, has been redesigned by the architect Jean-Michel Wilmotte to combine high-tech design with classical stone. Most of the other major examples of revolutionary building are out on the southern edge of town: Jean Nouvel's pseudo-Mississippi-steamboat housing project off the Arles road behind the gare SNCF, named Nemausus after the deity of the local spring that gave Nîmes its name; and the magnificent sports stadium, the Stades des Costières, by Vittorio Gregotti, close to the autoroute along the continuation of avenue Jean-Jaurès.

Jardin de la Fontaine

Perhaps the most refreshing thing you can do in Nîmes is head northwest of the centre to the Jardin de la Fontaine, France's first public garden, created in 1750. Behind the formal entrance, where fountains, nymphs and formal trees enclose the Temple de Diana, steps climb the steep wooded slope, adorned with grottoes and nooks and artful streams, to the Tour Magne (July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Sept–June daily 10am–5pm; €2.70). The 32-metre tower, left over from Augustus' city walls, gives terrific views out over the surrounding country – as far, it is claimed, as the Pic du Canigou on the edge of the Pyrenees. At the foot of the slope flows the gloriously green and shady Canal de la Fontaine, built to supplement the rather unsteady supply of water from the fontaine, the Nemausus spring, whose presence in a dry, limestone landscape gave Nîmes its existence.

Eating and drinking

The best places to hang out for coffee and drinks are the numerous little squares scattered through the old town: place de la Maison-Carrée, place du Marché and place aux Herbes (breakfast here early at the Café des Beaux-Arts to watch the sun creep up behind the cathedral tower). Les Trois Maures, in boulevard des Arènes, is a classic Nîmes café. For a quiet evening, you can head to Carrée d'Art piano bar on rue Gaston-Bossier, near the canal and the post-modern place d'Assas, while the Victor Hugo, a music-bar at 36 bd Victor-Hugo attracts a younger, livelier crowd.

For eating, boulevard de la Libération and boulevard Amiral-Courbet harbour a stock of reasonably priced brasseries and pizzerias, and the squares are full of possibilities.

Restaurants

L'Ancien Théâtre 4 rue Racine ☎04.66.76.26.30. A short stroll from the Maison Carrée, offering zippy Mediterranean cuisine from €13. Closed Mon out of season.

Le Bouchon et l'Assiette 5bis rue de Sauve, ☎04.66.62.02.93. Serves up elaborate gastronomique variations on traditional Tarnaise themes, with menus from €15 to €44. Closed Tues & Wed.

Le Jardin d'Hadrien 111 rue Enclos-Rey ☎04.66.21.86.65. Inventive southeastern Gardoise cuisine with both fish and beef-based plats such as boeuf à la gardienne at reasonable prices. Menus at €17–26.

Le Magister 5 rue Nationale ☎04.66.76.11.00. Affordable and daringly gastronomique restaurant, with a €30 menu and a pricier carte. Closed Sat noon & Sun.

Le P'tit Bec 87bis rue de la République ☎04.66.38.05.83. The best mid-range place for typical Gardoise cuisine (from €18), such as boeuf à la gardienne. Closed Sun, Mon & Wed eve.

El Rinconcito 7 rue des Marchands ☎04.66.76.17.30. Friendly Chilean restaurant which provides a welcome break from the local fare (lunch menu from €8.50). Closed Sun & Mon.

La Truye qui Filhe 9 rue Fresque. Attractive self-service, where you can eat for around €9. Lunchtimes only, closed Sun & Aug.

The Pont du Gard and Uzès

Some twenty kilometres northeast from Nîmes, the Pont du Gard is the greatest surviving stretch of a fifty-kilometre-long Roman aqueduct built in the middle of the first century AD to supply fresh water to the city. With just a seventeen-metre difference in altitude between start and finish, the aqueduct was quite an achievement, running as it does over hill and dale, through a tunnel, along the top of a wall, into trenches and over rivers; the Pont du Gard carries it over the River Gardon. Today the bridge is a UNESCO World Heritage Site and something of a tourist trap, but is nonetheless a supreme piece of engineering and a brilliant combination of function and aesthetics: it made the impressionable Rousseau wish he'd been born Roman.

Three tiers of arches span the river, with the covered water conduit on the top, rendered with a special plaster waterproofed with a paint apparently based on fig juice. A visit here used to be a must for French journeymen masons on their traditional tour of the country, and many of them have left their names and home towns carved on the stonework. Markings made by the original builders are still visible on individual stones in the arches, such as “FR S III – frons sinistra”, front side left no. 3. The Pont du Gard has recently undergone a massive restoration programme and now features an extensive multimedia complex, the Site de Pont du Gard, which includes a state-of-the-art musuem (daily May–Sept 9.30am–7pm; Oct–April 9.30am–5pm; €6), botanical gardens (April to mid-Oct daily 9.30am–6pm; €4), and a range of regular activities aimed at children. With the swimmable waters of the Gardon and ample picnic possibilities available as well, you could easily spend a day here.

Uzès

Seventeen kilometres further on, near the start of the aqueduct and served by daily buses from Nîmes, UZÈS is a lovely old town perched on a hill above the River Alzon. Half a dozen medieval towers – the most fetching is the windowed Pisa-like Tour Fenestrelle, tacked onto the much later cathedral – rise above its tiled roofs and narrow lanes of Renaissance and Neoclassical houses. The latter were the residences of the seventeenth- and eighteenth-century local bourgeoisie, who had grown rich, like their fellow Protestants in Nîmes, on textiles. From the mansion of Le Portalet, with its view out over the valley, walk past the Renaissance church of St-Étienne and into the medieval place aux Herbes, where there's a Saturday morning market, and up the arcaded rue de la République. The Gide family used to live off the square, the young André spending summer vacations with his granny there. To the right of rue de la République is the castle of Le Duché (1hr 30min guided tours: mid-June to mid-Sept 10am–1pm & 2–6.30pm; mid-Sept to mid-June 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €12), still inhabited by the same family a thousand years on, and dominated by its original keep, the Tour Bermonde (tower only €7). Today, there are guided tours around the castle building and exhibits of local history and vintage cars. Opposite, the courtyard of the eighteenth-century Hôtel de Ville holds summer concerts.

For details of these and other summer events, including more bull-running, consult the tourist office in place Albert-1er on boulevard Gambetta (June–Sept Mon–Fri 9am–6/7pm, Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 1–5pm; Oct–May Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sat 10am–1pm; ☎04.66.22.68.88, 🌐www.uzes-tourisme.com). The gare routière (☎04.66.22.00.58) is further west on avenue de la Libération. Should you need accommodation, head for the friendly Hostellerie Provençal in two old row houses at 1 rue Grand Bourgade, south of the church of St-Étienne (☎04.66.22.11.06, 🌐www.hostellerieprovencale.com; 📍), or the attractively renovated 🏠 La Taverne (☎04.66.22.13.10, 📧lataverne.uzes@orange.fr; 📍) a small and welcoming hotel with good amenities (including Wi-Fi) set behind the tourist office at 4 rue Xavier-Sigalon, and with a good terroir restaurant up the road at no. 7 (€20). The town's deluxe option is the General d'Entraigues, 8 rue de la Calade (☎04.66.22.32.68, 🌐www.hoteldentraigues.com; 📍–📍), in a converted fifteenth-century mansion opposite the cathedral. Alternatively, there's a municipal campsite off avenue Maxime-Pascal (mid-June to mid-Sept; ☎04.66.22.11.79) on the Bagnols-sur-Cèze road running northeast of town.

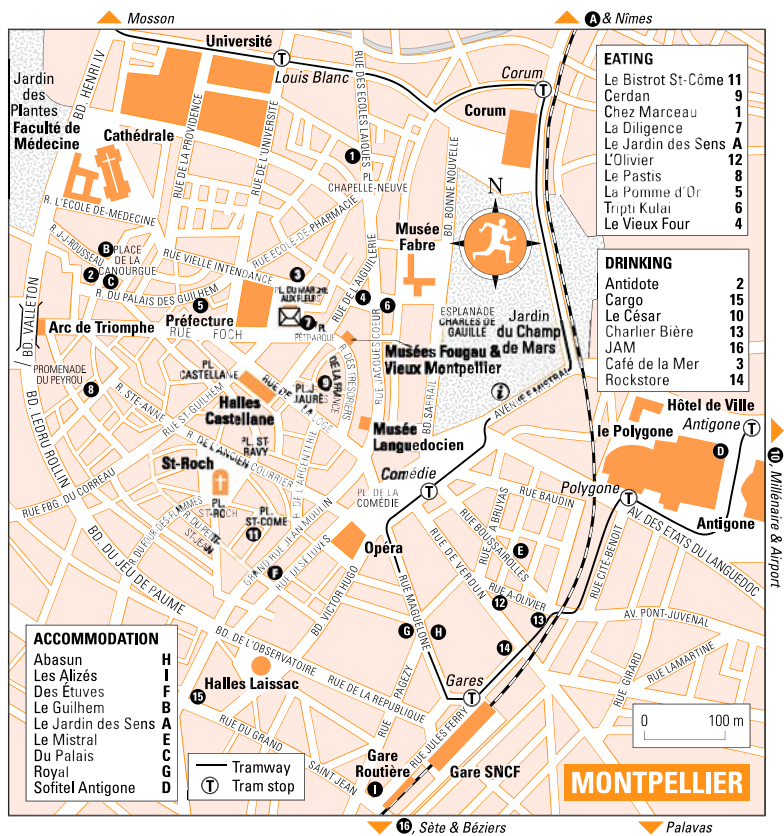

The Via Domitia and Sommières

About 25km west of Nîmes, off the Sommières road out of Lunel and close to the A9 autoroute, the Roman Via Domitia crosses the vineyards from the village of Gallargues to the bank of the River Vidourle, where one isolated arch of the original Roman bridge remains. On the west bank, a fine stretch of the old cobbled way is visible climbing the slopes of the former Roman settlement of Ambrossum, a fortified staging post on the road. From the top of the hill you can look down on the modern international traffic still passing the same way on the autoroute and parallel rail line.

About 10km to the north, 28km from Nîmes and still on the Vidourle, the little medieval town of SOMMIÈRES, with a much-modified Roman bridge, is where author Lawrence Durrell spent the last years of his life. The town itself boasts no major sights, though it's well preserved and atmospheric. However, a visit to the castle of Villevieille (May & June daily 2–7pm; July–Sept daily 2–8pm; Oct–April school hols only 2–7pm; €7), on the hillside 3km above Sommières, should not be missed. Owned by the same family for nearly eight hundred years, the castle is full of exquisite antique furniture. There are daily buses to Sommières from Nîmes; for accommodation, try the L'Estelou (☎04.66.77.71.08, 🌐www.hoteldelestelou.com; 📍), an arty hotel set in the town's old gare, or the chambre d'hôte, La Mas Fontclair in 8 av Émile-Jamais (☎ & 📞04.66.77.78.69; English spoken; 📍). There's also a municipal campsite on rue Eugène-Rouch.

Montpellier

A thousand years of trade and intellectual activity have made MONTPELLIER a teeming, energetic city. Benjamin of Tudela, the tireless twelfth-century Jewish traveller, reported its streets crowded with traders from every corner of Egypt, Greece, Gaul, Spain, Genoa and Pisa. After the king of Mallorca sold it to France in 1349 it became an important university town in the 1500s, counting the radical satirist François Rabelais among its alumni. Periodic setbacks, including almost total destruction for its Protestantism in 1622, and depression in the wine trade in the early years of the twentieth century – have done little to dent this progress. Today it vies with Toulouse for the title of the most dynamic city in the south. The reputation of its university especially, founded in the thirteenth century and most famous for its medical school, is a long-standing one: more than 60,000 students still set the intellectual and cultural tone of the city – the average age of whose residents is said to be just 25.

Montpellier is renowned for its cultural life, and hosts a number of annual festivals. Le Printemps des Comédiens (mid-June to mid-July) is a theatre festival; Montpellier Danse (late June to mid-July) is a festival of dance. There's also a music festival, Le Festival de Radio-France et de Montpellier, held in the second half of July, and the Festival du Cinéma Méditerranéen, in the second half of October and early November. The tourist office provides information about programmes and booking.

Arrival and information

The gare SNCF (☎04.99.74.15.10) and gare routière (☎04.67.92.01.43) are next to each other at the opposite end of rue Maguelone from the central place de la Comédie. The airport, Montpellier-Méditerranée (☎04.67.20.85.00, 🌐www.montpellier.aeroport.fr), is 8km to the southeast beside the Étang de Mauguio; from here a navette (timed for flights; 15min €5) runs to the stop on rue de Crète (by the Léon Blum tramstop); it will cost you €12–30 by taxi depending on the time of day and traffic conditions. Much of the city centre is pedestrianized, but you can street park outside of the centre and there are many well-signalised municipal garages.

The tourist office (daily: Mon–Fri 9am–6.30pm, Sat 10am–6pm, Sun & public hols 10am–1pm & 2–5pm; ☎04.67.60.60.60, 🌐www.ot-montpellier.fr), which has money exchange facilities, lies at the east end of place de la Comédie, opposite the Polygone shopping centre. They also sell the one-, two- and three-day City Card, which includes public transport, free admission to many sites and other discounts. TAM city buses run between the stations and outer districts (as far as coastal Palavas), while the Petibus crosses the city centre – tickets cost €1.30 (day ticket for €3.20) and cover both services for one hour, including transfers. The green transport policies of Montpellier have also resulted in the construction of a tramway, sweeping across town from northwest to southeast, as well as over 120km of bike paths running throughout the city and as far as the sea – information can be found at the tourist office.

Accommodation

Most hotel accommodation is conveniently concentrated in the streets between the train station and place de la Comédie, or in the nearby centre of the old town. There's a well-equipped hostel in a renovated old building in impasse Petite Corratier, off rue des Écoles Laïques (closed mid-Dec to mid-Jan; ☎04.67.60.32.22, 📧montpellier@fuaj.org; bus #6 “Ursulines”; 📍), plus several campsites around Montpellier, particularly in nearby Palavas (bus #28); the most central and expensive is L'Oasis Palavasienne (☎04.67.15.11.61; April to mid-Oct), just south of town on the D21 (to Palavas; bus #28).

Hotels

 Abasun 13 rue Maguelone
☎04.67.58.36.80, 🌐www.abasunhotelmontpelliercentre.com. On a busy street a stone's throw from the train station, this recently renovated hotel is clean, if somewhat basic – a good option for budget-conscious travellers. 📍

Les Alizés 14 rue Jules-Ferry ☎04.67.12.85.35, 🌐www.hotel-alizes.com. Perhaps overpriced, but convenient, with a station-side location. Amenities include en-suite bath, satellite TV in every room, and a restaurant serving from 5am–1am. 📍

Des Étuves 24 rue des Étuves ☎04.67.60.78.19, 🌐www.hoteldesetuves.fr. Simple, spotless rooms in the old city, all with en-suite bathrooms and TV. 📍

Le Guilhem 18 rue J.J.-Rousseau ☎04.67.52.90.90, 🌐www.leguilhem.com. Beautifully restored sixteenth-century town house whose cheerful rooms mostly overlook quiet gardens, with a sunny breakfast terrace. 📍

Le Jardin des Sens 11 av St-Lazare
☎04.67.79.63.38, 🌐www.jardindessens.com.

The best of the upmarket hotels and the epitome of restrained and tasteful luxury, Le Jardin boasts a swimming pool, elegant rooms and one of the region's most acclaimed restaurants. 📍

Le Mistral 25 rue Boussairolles ☎04.67.58.45.25, 🌐www.hotel-le-mistral.com. Decent, comfortable hotel, offering satellite TV and garage parking (€5 extra). 📍

Du Palais 3 rue du Palais ☎04.67.60.47.38, 🌐www.hoteldupalais-montpellier.fr. Tastefully renovated eighteenth-century mansion on the west side of the old town. Cosy rooms, most with en-suite facilities. 📍

Royal 8 rue Maguelone ☎04.67.92.13.36, 🌐www.hotel.royal-34.com. Good amenities in this three-star hotel between the Comédie and the gare, although its old-world ambience does not come cheap. ⑥

Sofitel Antigone 1 rue des Pertuisanes
☎ 04.67.99.72.72, 🌐 www.sofitel-montpellier.com.

Suitably futuristic design, with a somewhat cold predominance of concrete over glass, set in the city's flagship Antigone development. Four-star service and amenities including a pool. ⑨

The City

Montpellier's city centre – the old town – is small, compact, architecturally homogeneous, full of charm and teeming with life, except in July and August when the students are on holiday and everyone else is at the beach. And the place is almost entirely pedestrianized, so you can walk the narrow streets without looking anxiously over your shoulder.

Place de la Comédie and the old town

At the hub of the city's life, joining the old part to its newer additions, is place de la Comédie, or "L'Oeuf" ("the egg") to the initiated. This colossal, oblong square, paved with cream-coloured marble, has a fountain at its centre and cafés either side. One end is closed by the Opéra, an ornate nineteenth-century theatre; the other opens onto the Esplanade, a beautiful tree-lined promenade that snakes its way to the Corum concert hall, dug into the hillside and topped off in pink granite, with splendid views from the roof. South of the Corum, the city's most trumpeted museum, the Musée Fabre, has closed for major renovation. Visitors may have to wait until 2008 to view its large and historically important collection of seventeenth- to nineteenth-century European painting, including works by Delacroix, Raphael, Jan van Steen and Veronese.

From the north side of L'Oeuf, rue de la Loge and rue Foch, opened in the 1880s in Montpellier's own Haussmann-izing spree, slice through the heart of the old city. Either side of them, a maze of narrow lanes slopes away to the encircling modern boulevards. Few buildings survive from before the 1622 siege, but the city's busy bourgeoisie quickly made up for the loss, proclaiming their

11

LANGUEDOC

Montpellier

△ Place de la Comédie, Montpellier

financial power through austere seventeenth- and eighteenth-century mansions. Known as “Lou Clapas” (rubble), the area is rapidly being restored and gentrified. It’s a pleasure to wander through and come upon secretive little squares like place St-Roch, place St-Ravy and place de la Canourgue.

First left off rue de la Loge is Grande-Rue Jean-Moulin, where Moulin, hero of the Resistance, lived at no. 21. To the left, at no. 32, the present-day Chamber of Commerce is located in one of the finest eighteenth-century hôtels, the Hôtel St-Côme, originally built as a demonstration operating theatre for medical students. On the opposite corner, rue de l’Argenterie forks up to place Jean-Jaurès. This square is a nodal point in the city’s student life: on fine evenings between 6 and 7pm you get the impression that the half of the population not in place de la Comédie is sitting here and in the adjacent place du Marché-aux-Fleurs. Through the Gothic doorway of no. 10, place Jean-Jaurès, is the so-called palace of the kings of Aragon, named after the city’s thirteenth-century rulers. Close by is the Halles Castellane, a graceful, iron-framed market hall.

A short walk from place Jean-Jaurès, the Hôtel de Varenne, on place Pétrarque, houses two local history museums of somewhat specialized interest and a rather paltry range of artefacts; the Musée du Vieux Montpellier (Tues–Sat 10.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; €1.50) concentrates on the city’s history, and the more interesting, private Musée Fougau on the top floor (Wed & Thurs 3–6pm; free), deals with the folk history of Languedoc and things Occitan. Off to the right, the lively little rue des Trésoriers-de-France has one of the best seventeenth-century houses in the city, the Hôtel Lunaret, at no. 5, while round the block on rue Jacques-Coeur you’ll find the Musée Languedocien (Mon–Sat 2/2.30–5/5.30pm; €6), which houses a very mixed collection of Greek, Egyptian and other antiquities.

Jardin des Plantes and around

On the hill at the end of rue Foch, from which the royal artillery bombarded the Protestants in 1622, the formal gardens of the Promenade du Peyrou look out across the city and away to the Pic St-Loup, which dominates the hinterland behind Montpellier, with the distant smudge of the Cévennes beyond. At the farther end a swagged and pillared water tower marks the end of an eighteenth-century aqueduct modelled on the Pont du Gard. Beneath the grand sweep of its double tier of arches is a daily fruit and veg market and a huge Saturday flea market. At the city end of the promenade, the vainglorious Arc de Triomphe shows Louis XIV as Hercules, stomping on the Austrian eagle and the English lion, forcefully reminding the locals of his victory over their Protestant “heresy”.

Lower down the hill, on boulevard Henri-IV, the lovely but slightly run-down Jardin des Plantes (July & Aug daily noon–8pm; Sept–June daily 2–5pm; free), with avenues of exotic trees, was founded in 1593 and is France’s oldest botanical garden. Across the road is the long-suffering cathedral, with its massive porch, sporting a patchwork of styles from the fourteenth to the nineteenth centuries. Inside is a memorial to the bishop of Montpellier, who sided with the half-million destitute vine-growers who came to demonstrate against their plight in 1907 and were fired on by government troops. Above the cathedral, in the university’s prestigious medical school on rue de l’École-de-Médecine, the Musée Atger (Mon, Wed & Thurs 1.30–5.45pm; free) has a distinguished academic collection of French and Italian drawings, while the macabre Musée d’Anatomie (daily 2.30–5pm; free) displays all sorts of revolting things in bottles.

Close by is the pretty little place de la Canourgue, and, beyond, down rue d'Aigrefeuille, the old university quarter, with some good academic bookshops on rue de l'Université.

Antigone

South of place de la Comédie stretches the controversial quarter of Antigone, a chain of post-modern squares and open spaces designed to provide a mix of fair-rent housing and offices, aligned along a monumental axis from the place du Nombre-d'Or, through place du Millénaire, to the glassed-in arch of the Hôtel de la Région. It's more interesting in scale and design than most attempts at urban renewal, but it has failed to attract the crowds away from the place de la Comédie and is often deserted. The enclosed spaces in particular work well, with their theatrical references to classical architecture, like oversized cornices and columns supporting only sky. The more open spaces are, however, disturbing, with something totalitarian and inhuman about their scale and blandness.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

Montpellier's year-round vitality supports a variety of restaurants and bars to suit all budgets and tastes. Cafés line every square while some of the more expensive restaurants use the city's ancient interiors to stunning effect. And Montpellier's youthful population ensures an energetic bar and nightclub scene right through to the early hours.

There's always plenty of drinking activity in the place de la Comédie, place du Marché-aux-Fleurs and place Jean-Jaurès, and two very different options are Charlier Bière, a grungy beer bar at 22 rue Olivier, and Antidote, a snappy cocktail joint on place de la Canourgue, which attracts the arty set. The Café de la Mer, at 5 place de Marché-aux-Fleurs, is a popular, gay-friendly establishment with a busy terrace. The old perennial for late-night dancing and live gigs is the Rockstore, near the station at 20 rue de Verdun (☎04.67.58.70.10), while JAM, at 100 rue Ferdinand-Lesseps, and Cargo, on place St-Denis, offer jazz and blues respectively. In addition to its clubs, bars and live music, Montpellier has a very lively theatre scene, as well as a tradition of engaging café-littéraires on a variety of themes; Le César at 17 place Nombre-d'Or (☎04.67.20.27.02) hosts two such gatherings, the café des femmes and the café des arts – check for days and times. For what's on at the various venues, look for posters around town or check the free weekly listings magazines, Le Sortir and Olé. The best central food markets are Halles Castellane, on rue de la Loge, and Laissac, place A. Laissac (daily 7.30am–1pm).

Restaurants and cafés

Le Bistrot St-Côme 2 place St-Côme. The best of a phalanx of open-air eateries dominating the south side of place St-Côme, offering a range of menus and standard but dependable French fare (€12–22). Service from noon till 11.30pm.

Cerdan 8 rue Collot ☎04.67.60.86.96. High-quality cuisine combining Norman and Algerian specialties, just off of the place de la Comédie. Lunch from €10 and dinners €14–27. Closed Sun & noon Mon.

Chez Marceau 7 place de la Chapelle Neuve ☎04.67.66.08.09. Excellent-value Languedocian cuisine (both inland and coastal varieties) with a wonderful shaded terrace. The pâtés de canard are particularly delicious. Menus €12 at lunch and €18 at dinner. Closed Sun & Wed in the off season.

La Diligence 2 place Pétrarque ☎04.67.66.12.21. La Diligence boasts an atmospheric, vaulted medieval setting perfect for a good-value dip into the finest French cuisine. Menus from €18–60. Closed Sat lunch, Sun & Mon lunch.

Le Jardin des Sens 11 av St-Lazaire ☎04.67.79.63.38. Located just north of Le Corum and run by the Pourcel twins, scions of a local vintner family renowned for their gastronomique creativity, this is one of the highest-rated restaurants in Languedoc. The ever-changing carte features excellent terroir-based creations ranging from pigeon pie to stuffed squid, served in elegant surroundings. Menus €50–190. Closed Sun, Mon, Tues & Wed lunch.

L'Olivier 12 rue Aristide-Olivier ☎04.67.92.86.28. Pretty little restaurant north of the station offering excellent-value traditional French cuisine. Menus at €32–47. Closed Sun, Mon and Aug.

Le Pastis 3 rue Terral ☎04.67.02.78.59. Great southern French cooking in a fine old mansion. Lunch menu at €14, dinner from €26. Closed Sat.

La Pomme d'Or 23 rue du Palais des Guilhem ☎04.67.52.82.62. Arty restaurant-bar with a predominantly gay clientele. A very wide selection of inventive menus at €18.

Tripti Kulai 20 rue Jacques-Coeur. Quirky, friendly women-run vegetarian restaurant. Dishes with oriental-influenced flair, including a good choice of salads, start at €9. Closed Sun.

Le Vieux Four 59 rue de l'Aiguillière ☎04.67.60.55.95. Meat-eaters should head for this cosy, candlelit place specializing in grillades au feu de bois. Menus from €14–25. Eves only; closed Sun in summer.

Listings

Bike rental Bikes can be rented at Vill'a Vélo at the gare routière (☎04.67.92.92.67).

Books English books at: As You Like It, 8 rue du Bras de Fer; Book Shop, 4 rue de l'Université. Travel books at: Les Cinq Continents, 20 rue Jacques-Coeur.

Internet There are lots of cybercafés around town; try Cybersurf, 22 place du Millénaire in Antigone (Mon–Fri 8am–9pm, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm).

Medical emergency ☎04.67.22.81.67 or ☎15; Centre Hospitalier de Montpellier, 555 rte de Ganges (☎04.67.33.93.02) – take bus #16 from the gare to “Route de ganges” or the tram to “Hôpital Lapeyronie” and walk.

Post office The main office is on place Rondellet, 34000 Montpellier (Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat 9am–noon).

Shopping The most convenient place is the Polygone mall, which contains a FNAC and Galeries Lafayette.

Swimming The nearest beaches for a dip are at Palavas (tram direction “Odysseum” to Port Marianne, then bus #28), but the best are slightly to the west of the town.

The coast: Aigues-Mortes to Agde

On the face of it, the Languedoc coast isn't particularly enticing, lined with bleak beaches and treeless strands, often irritatingly windswept and cut off from the sea by marshy étangs (lagoons). The area does, however, have long hours of sunshine, 200km of only sporadically populated sand and relatively unpolluted water. Resorts – mostly geared towards families who settle in for a few weeks at a time – have sprung up, sometimes engulfing once quiet fishing towns, but there's still enough unexploited territory to make this coast a good getaway from the crowds, and many of the old towns have managed to sustain their character and traditions despite the summer onslaught.

La Grande-Motte, Le Grau-du-Roi and Aigues-Mortes

The oldest of the new resorts, on the fringes of the Camargue, LA GRANDE-MOTTE is a 1960s vintage beach-side Antigone – a “futuristic” planned community which has aged as gracefully as the bean bag and eight-track tape. In summer, its seaside and streets are crowded with semi-naked bodies; in winter, it's a depressing, wind-battered place with few permanent residents. If you plan on staying, both Camping Louis Pibols (☎04.67.56.50.08; April–Oct) and Camping le Garden (☎04.67.56.50.09; March–Oct) offer excellent facilities and are just a couple of minutes' walk from the beach. The most appealing among the town's dozen or so near-identical hotels is the Azur Bord du Mer (☎04.67.56.56.00, 🌐www.hotelazur.net; 📍); set out dramatically on the extremity of the town's quay.

A little way east are Port-Camargue, with a sprawling, modern marina, and LE GRAU-DU-ROI, which manages to retain something of its character as a working fishing port. Tourist traffic still has to give way every afternoon at 4.30pm when the swing bridge opens and lets in the trawlers to unload the day's catch onto the quayside, from where it's whisked off to auction – la criée – conducted today largely by electronic means rather than the harsh-voiced shouting of former times. For a reasonable place to stay, try the Bellevue et d'Angleterre, quai Colbert (closed Jan; ☎04.66.51.40.75, 🌐www.hotelbellevueetdangleterre.com; 📍), or the huge Camping L'Eden (April–Oct; ☎04.66.51.49.81, 🌐www.campingeden.fr), just east of town.

Eight kilometres inland lies the appealingly named town of AIGUES-MORTES (“dead waters”), built as a fortress port by Louis IX in the thirteenth century for his departure on the Seventh Crusade. Its massive walls and towers remain virtually intact. Outside the ramparts, amid drab modern development, flat salt pans lend a certain otherworldly appeal, but inside all is geared to the tourist. If you visit, consider a climb up the Tour de Constance on the northwest corner of the town walls (daily: May–Aug 10am–7pm; Sept–April 10am–5pm; €6.50), where Camisard women were imprisoned (Marie Durand was incarcerated for 38 years), and a walk along the wall, where you can gaze out over the weird mist-shrouded flats of the Camargue.

Palavas and Maguelone

A dozen kilometres south of the city by road, PALAVAS is the bathing station for the citizens of Montpellier – a concrete sprawl with little to recommend it apart from the presence of the sea, though there's plenty of summertime activity in the discos and the rip-off quayside bars and restaurants. The best place to swim and sunbathe is a little way to the west off the long flat strand that borders the marsh, where some of Europe's few flamingos feed, and herons, egrets and other sea birds squabble and dive. The Cathédrale de Maguelone (daily 9am–7pm), dating mainly from the twelfth century, stands pale, grey and fortress-like on an island of vines and pines in the middle of the marsh. In the Middle Ages there was a thriving town here, and its cathedral was declared by Urban II to be “second only to that of Rome” in spiritual importance. However, the cathedral is all that remains of the settlement, which was largely destroyed by Louis XIII because of its Protestant leanings. Cavernous and cool, the strong, simple church interior serves as the venue for a sacred music festival in the second half of June.

Sète

Some 28km southeast of Montpellier, twenty minutes away by train, SÈTE has been an important port for three hundred years. The upper part of the town straddles the slopes of the Mont St-Clair, which overlooks the vast Bassin de Thau, a breeding ground of mussels and oysters, while the lower part is intersected by waterways lined with tall terraces and seafood restaurants. It has a lively workaday bustle in addition to its tourist activity, at its height during the summer joutes nautiques (see box opposite).

Arrival, information and accommodation

The gare routière is awkwardly placed on quai de la République, and the gare SNCF further out still on quai Maréchal-Joffre – though it is on the Water-jousting is a venerable coastal tradition which pits boat-borne jousting teams against each other in an effort to unseat their opponents. Two sleek boats, each manned by eight oarsmen and bearing a lance-carrying joust, charge at each other on a near head-on course. As the boats approach, the jousters attempt to strike their adversary from his mount. There are about a dozen sociétés des joutes in Sète itself, and you can see them in action all through the summer.

Joutes nautiques

main bus route, which circles Mont St-Clair (last bus about 7pm). Ferries for Morocco (1–2 weekly) and Mallorca (1–3 weekly) depart from the gare maritime at 4 quai d'Alger (☎04.67.46.68.00). Be warned that hitching out of Sète is horribly difficult; you're better off taking a train or bus to the nearest town and trying from there. The tourist office, at 60 Grand'Rue Mario-Roustan (April–June Mon–Fri 9.30am–6pm, Sat & Sun 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; July & Aug daily 9.30am–7.30pm; Sept–March Mon–Fri 9.30am–6pm, Sat & Sun 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; ☎04.67.74.71.71, 🌐www.ot-sete.fr), has a good array of English-language information.

For accommodation, try the decaying but funky Grand Hôtel de Paris (☎04.67.74.98.10; May–Sept; Ⓞ) at 2 rue Frédéric-Mistral. For somewhere more comfortable, there's the belle-époque splendour of the Grand Hôtel, 17 quai de Lattre-de-Tassigny (☎04.67.74.71.77, 🌐www.legrandhotelsete.com; Ⓞ), and 🏠 L'Orque Bleu at 10 quai Aspirant-Herber (☎04.67.74.72.13, ✉lorque-bleue@orange.fr; Ⓞ). The HI hostel (mid-Jan to Nov; ☎04.67.53.46.68, 🌐www.fuaj.org; Ⓜ – €20 half-pension only) is high up in the town on rue Général-Revest. Campers should ask the tourist office for details of the numerous campsites in the area.

The Town

Sète's crowded and vibrant pedestrian streets are scattered with café tables. A short climb up from the harbour is the cimetière marin, the sailors' cemetery, where poet Paul Valéry is buried. A native of the town, he called Sète his "singular island", and the Musée Paul Valéry, in rue Denoyer (July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–June Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3), opposite the cemetery, has a room devoted to him, as well as a small but strong collection of modern French paintings. If you're feeling energetic, you can continue through the pines to the top of the hill for a view that's fabulous when it's not engulfed in sea mist. Below the sailors' cemetery, and neatly poised above the water, is Vauban's Fort St-Pierre, now home to an open-air theatre.

Over on the west side of the hill, George Brassens, associate of Sartre and the radical voice of a whole French generation, is buried in the Cimetière le Py, in spite of his song Plea to be Buried on the Beach at Sète. In Éspace Brassens (June & Sept daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2–7pm; Oct–May Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €5), overlooking the cemetery, the locally-born singer-songwriter lives again through his words and music, narrating his life-story (in French only) on the museum's headsets. Closer to the centre of town you'll find the quirky new Musée International des Arts Modestes (July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–June daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm) at 23 quai Maréchal-Lattre, containing a collection of art made from cast-off goods and spinning on popular culture themes.

Eating and drinking

There's a barrage of restaurants along quai Général-Duran, from the Pont de la Savonnerie right down to the fish market at the mouth of the pleasure port, all offering seafood in the €15–30 bracket. Local favourite 🍷 La Palangrotte (☎04.67.74.80.35; closed Sun lunch & Mon & Wed off season) at 1 rampe Paul-Valéry, is famous for its mussels and bouillabaisse (€23–36) and solid wine list. Another good choice is La Galinette, 26 place des Mouettes (closed Jan–June & Sun eve, Fri lunch & Sat lunch Sept–Dec; ☎04.67.51.16.77), on the north side of town.

Agde and around

Midway between Sète and Béziers, at the western end of the Bassin de Thau, AGDE is the most interesting of the coastal towns. Originally Phoenician, and maintained by the Romans, it thrived for centuries on trade with the Levant. Outrun as a seaport by Sète, it later degenerated into a sleepy fishing harbour.

Today, it's a major tourist centre with a good deal of charm, notably in the narrow back lanes between rue de l'Amour and the riverside, where fishing boats tie up. The town's most distinctive and surprising feature is its colour – which comes from the black volcanic stone of the Mont St-Loup quarries. There are few sights apart from the impressively fortified cathedral, though the waterfront is attractive, and by the bridge you can watch the Canal du Midi slip modestly into the River Hérault on the very last leg of its journey from Toulouse to the Bassin de Thau and Sète.

The tourist office is in place Molière near the bridge (daily 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.67.94.29.68, 🌐www.ville-agde.fr). The pick of the town's hotels is 🍷 La Galiote (☎04.67.94.45.58, 🌐www.lagaliote.fr; 🍷), located in the old bishop's palace on place J.-Jaurès, with its excellent service and restrained elegance while Le Donjon (☎04.67.94.12.32, 🌐www.hotelledonjon.com; 🍷) in another atmospheric old building next door, comes a close second. For cheaper but still comfortable rooms, try Hôtel des Arcades (☎04.67.94.21.64; 🍷), in an old convent at 16 rue Louis-Bages. Aside from the numerous places to eat around La Promenade, a good bet is La Fine Fourchetté (☎04.67.94.49.56) at 2 rue du Mont-Saint-Loup, featuring a delightful carte (menus from €9.45) with imaginative culinary combinations. One of the area's best restaurants is at Le Jardin de Beaumont (04.67.21.19.23), set in a wine domaine 3km north of town, where you can dine on tapas and excellent wines indoors or out (about €30).

An hourly bus service operates between the town and the sea at Cap d'Agde (see below); you can pick it up at the gare SNCF at the end of avenue Victor-Hugo, at the bridge and on La Promenade. Should you want to explore the Canal du Midi, boat trips are organized by Bateaux du Soleil, 6 rue Chasseyères (☎04.67.94.08.79).

Cap d'Agde

CAP D'AGDE lies to the south of Mont St-Loup, 7km from Agde. The largest (and by far the most successful) of the newer resorts, it sprawls out from the volcanic mound of St-Loup in an excess of pseudo-traditional modern buildings that offer every type of facility and entertainment – and are all expensive. It is perhaps best known for its colossal quartier naturiste, one of the largest in France, with the best of the beaches, space for 20,000 visitors, and its own restaurants, banks, post offices and shops. Access is possible if you're not actually staying there (€9 per car, €2.80 on foot; both until 8pm only).

If you have time to fill, head for the Musée de l'Éphèbe (daily 9am–noon & 2–6pm; €4), which displays antiquities discovered locally, many of them from the sea. Alternatively, the Fort de Brescou (mid-June to early Sept; €3), which dates back to 1680, lies on a rocky, seagull-infested island just offshore; it can be reached by ferries departing from the centre port at Cap d'Agde (Sarl Croisières: July & Aug Thurs–Mon 10.30am, 2.30 & 6.30pm; €6) or le Grau d'Agde (Ile de Brescou: July & Aug 2.30 & 4.30pm; €7).

Inland from Montpellier

For getting out into the country of the Bas Languedoc, there are two good routes from Montpellier, both served by regular buses: the D986 to Ganges and the N109 to Lodève. This out-of-the-way corner of Languedoc is best for its relatively untouristed villages, as well as excellent hiking and rafting opportunities.

The Ganges route

The Ganges road weaves north across the Plateau des Garrigues, a landscape of scrubby trees, thorns and fragrant herbs cut by torrent beds. The plateau is dominated by the high limestone ridge of the Pic St-Loup until you reach the first worthwhile stopping place, ST-MARTIN-DE-LONDRES, 25km on, whose name derives from the old Celtic word for “swamp”. It's a lovely little town of arcaded houses and cobbled passageways set around the roadside place de la Fontaine. The pride of the place is an exceptionally handsome early Romanesque church, reached through a vaulted passage just uphill from the square. The honey-coloured stone is simply decorated with Lombard arcading, the plain rounded porch with a worn relief of St Martin on horseback, while the interior has an unusual clover-shaped ground plan. For accommodation, there is an excellent and welcoming chambre d'hôte, De ci...De là! (☎04.67.86.36.83, 🌐www.decidela.fr; 📍) on the edge of town at 6 rte des Cévennes. The campsite, Pic de Loup (☎04.67.55.00.53, 📧camping-pic@tourisme.com; April–Sept), is just east on the main road.

About 6km south, off the Gignac road near Viols-le-Fort (on the main Clermont–Montpellier bus route) and the Château de Cambous, the marvel-

The Camisards

By issuing the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685, Louis XIV ended religious freedom in France, outlawing the Calvinist Protestantism of the Huguenots. Some five hundred thousand chose to flee the country, including many merchants and textile workers, while those who remained were subjected to oppression; some feigned conversion, some were deported to the colonies, and others fled to the “desert” – the wild and isolated hills of the Cévennes. It was here that they staged the Camisard revolt, so-called for the shirts they wore as a sign of recognition (from “chemise”, French for “shirt”).

In July 1702, the parish priest of Chayla arrested a small group of fugitive Protestants, and was killed in the ensuing struggle. Knowing that retribution would be swift and cruel, Protestants across the Cévennes began a guerrilla war which pitted their forces, numbering between three and five thousand, against some thirty thousand royal troops. Unable to conclude the struggle militarily against the rebel guerrillas, the French army succeeded in bribing one of the leaders to change sides, precipitating the defeat of the movement in 1704.

lous prehistoric village of Cambous (May, June & Sept–Nov Sat & Sun 2–6pm; July & Aug Tues–Sun 2–7pm; €2.50) dates from 2500 BC and was only discovered in 1967. The site consists of a group of cabins, each about 20m long, their outlines clearly delineated, with the holes for the roof supports and door slabs still in place. A reconstruction shows them to have been much like the sheep stalls in the old bégeries that dot the plateau.

Further north, through dramatic river gorges almost as far as Ganges, you reach the Grotte des Demoiselles (March & Oct daily 10–11am & 2–4.30pm; April–June & Sept daily 10am–5.30pm; July & Aug daily 10am–6pm; Nov–Feb Mon–Fri 2–4pm, Sat & Sun 10–11am & 2–4pm; 📞 www.demoiselles.com; €8), the most spectacular of the region's many caves: a set of vast cathedral-like caverns hung with stalactites descending with millennial slowness to meet the limpid waters of eerily still pools. Located deep inside the mountain, it's reached by funicular (hourly departures).

Ganges

GANGES itself, 46km from Montpellier and connected by regular buses (which continue to Le Vigan on the southern edge of the Cévennes), is a rather nondescript but busy market town (Friday's the day), whose old quarter is notable for its vaulted alleys, designed for defence in the Wars of Religion. This, too, was a Protestant town, peopled by refugees from the plains, who made it famous for its silk stockings. It was here that the last-ditch revolt of the Camisards (see box, p.859) earned its name; the rebels sacked and pillaged a shirt factory and went off wearing the shirts (chemises/camises). Heading north from Ganges on your own steam will lead you deeper into Protestant territory, to the Huguenot villages around Le Vigan (see p.944).

The tourist office (Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm, plus July & Aug Sun 10am–noon; 📞 04.67.73.00.56, 📧 www.ot-cevennes.com) is on plan de l'Ormeau. On the same square you'll find the basic De la Poste (📞 04.67.73.85.88, 📧 www.hoteldelaposteganges.com; closed Jan; 📍), the best overnight choice in town. West of town, on the road towards Navacelles, is the splendid Château de Madières (closed Nov–March; 📞 04.67.73.84.03, 📧 www.chateau-madieres.fr; 📍), a renovated fourteenth-century castle. The municipal campsite (mid-June to Aug; 📞 04.67.57.92.97), along the river at the southern end of town, has the only laundry. You'll find an excellent, homely Lyonnais restaurant here, Le Melodie (📞 04.67.73.66.02; closed Wed; menus €9 at lunch, €14 at dinner), at 4 place Fabre-d'Olivet.

The Lodève route

The second inland route runs due west from Montpellier, passing Gignac – the turn-off for the spectacular Gorges de l'Hérault and St-Guilhem-le-Désert – before reaching Clermont-l'Hérault, a transport hub from where you can access the Haut Languedoc to the west or the old cathedral town of Lodève further north.

St-Guilhem-le-Désert and around

The small town of Gignac lies amid vineyards 30km west of Montpellier. It is here that buses turn off for the glorious abbey and village of ST-GUILHEM-LE-DÉSERT, which lies in a side ravine, 6km further north up the Hérault beyond the famed medieval Pont du Diable. A ruined castle spikes the ridge above, and the ancient tiled houses of the village ramble down the banks of the rushing Verdus, which is everywhere channelled into carefully tended gardens. The grand focus

▲ St-Guilhem-le-Désert

11

LANGUEDOC

Inland from Montpellier

is the tenth- to twelfth-century abbey church, founded at the beginning of the ninth century by St Guilhem, comrade-in-arms of Charlemagne. The church is a beautiful and atmospheric building, though architecturally impoverished by the dismantling and sale of its cloister – now in New York – in the nineteenth century. It stands on place de la Liberté, surrounded by honey-coloured houses and arcades with traces of Romanesque and Renaissance domestic styles in some of the windows. The interior of the church is plain and somewhat severe compared to the warm colours of the exterior, best seen from rue Cor-de-Nostra-Dama/Font-du-Portal, where you get the classic view of the perfect apse.

There are a couple of easy and worthwhile walks you can make from here – up the valley of the Verdus into the red-stained walls of the Cirque du Bout-du-Monde (from place de la Liberté, take rue du Bout-du-Monde out of the village and continue for about 30min), or up the zigzagging path of the GR74, through the sweet-scented shrubs and flowers towards the castle ridge (also about 30min). From the crest of the ridge the view down onto the village is magnificent. The path divides here: one branch leads back right to the ruins of the castle, while the other continues along the GR74 to the Ermitage Notre-Dame-de-Belle-Grâce (1hr 30min), and on to join the GR7 at St-Maurice-Navacelles on the Causse de Larzac.

In season the village is on every tour operator's route, making early mornings and late afternoons the best times for visiting. The best hotel is Le Guillaume d'Orange (☎04.67.57.24.53, @www.guilhaumedorange.com; Ⓜ), while budget travellers should head to the English-speaking Gîte de la Tour (☎ & ☎04.67.57.34.00; Ⓜ). The nearest campsite is Le Moulin de Siau (☎04.67.57.51.08, @www.camping-moulin-de-siau.com; June–Aug), near Aniane on the road back down to Gignac. Nearby, cave enthusiasts will enjoy the Grotte de Clamouse (daily: June, Sept & Oct 10am–6pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; Nov–May noon–5pm; €8). This extensive and beautiful stalactite cave is entered along a subterranean river and opens up into three expansive grottoes.

Clermont-l'Hérault and around

Eight kilometres west of Gignac, the market town of CLERMONT-L'HÉRAULT – accessible by bus from Montpellier – is a rather dull little cantonal capital, whose only recommendation is that it is a good jumping-off point for visiting the area around Lac Salagou to the west, an attractive man-made reservoir sited amidst striking iron-rich terrain. The sole interesting site in town is a thirteenth-century church, fortified in the fourteenth century to defend it against the English.

The tourist office (Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sat 9am–noon & 2–5/6pm; plus July & Aug Sun 10am–noon; ☎04.67.96.23.86, 🌐www.ot-clermont-l-herault.com) is at 9 rue René-Gosse, close to the cathedral. By far the best place to stay is Le Terminus, on allées Roger-Salengro near the old station (☎04.67.88.45.00, ✉leterminus@orange.fr; 📍). If you're camping, head for the year-round site Le Salagou (☎04.67.96.13.13), northwest of Clermont near the lake. Reasonable meals can be had at Clermont-l'Hérault at L'Arlequin, tucked under the south wall of the church on place St-Paul (closed Sun & Mon; menus from €14).

Around Clermont-l'Hérault

Three kilometres west from Clermont-l'Hérault, along the main road to Bédarieux, lies VILLENEUVETTE. This model factory and workers' settlement was created in the seventeenth century for the production of high-quality wool for sale in the Mediterranean. Initially successful, the factory eventually closed down in 1954, but the settlement still boasts 85 inhabitants. There's a very nice, if somewhat pricey, hotel tacked on to the village walls – La Source (closed Jan to mid-Feb & late Nov; ☎04.67.96.05.07, 🌐www.hoteldelasource.com; English spoken; 📍), with a good restaurant (€18–30), pool and garden. Eight kilometres further west just off the Bédarieux road, in the picturesque little village of MOURÈZE, you'll find an alternative hotel, Les Hauts de Mourèze (☎04.67.96.04.84, ☎04.67.96.25.85; closed Nov–March; 📍). Further accommodation options are available about 4km west in Salasc, at the Auberge Campagnard (☎04.67.96.15.62, 🌐www.aubergedusalagou.fr; 📍 with breakfast), and at Octon in La Calade (☎04.67.96.19.21, 🌐www.hotel-lacalade.com; March to mid-Dec; 📍), a comfortable old hotel in the village centre (closed Tues & Wed out of season; menus from €15).

Three other interesting and little-visited places west of Clermont are only feasible if you have a car. The first is a very fine dolmen on the end of a low ridge overlooking the D32 – best reached from the village of LE POUGET, 7km to the southwest, where it is signposted. Continuing along the D139, you come within sight of the pale grey ruins of the keep and chapel of the Château d'Aumelas, romantically silhouetted on the edge of the cause (limestone plateau). To reach it by road – you'll need to take a rather long and steep detour (about 6km in total) – bear right onto the D114 and then take a dirt track opposite a farm. It's a beautiful and silent place, and the chapel is in near-perfect condition. Two kilometres further along the D114, down an unsigned and bumpy track leading right onto the cause, there is a marvellous and remote silvery chapel, St-Martin-de-Cardonnet, built in the twelfth century – all that remains of an ancient priory.

On to Lodève

Heading north from Clermont to LODÈVE, 19km away, the swift A75 auto-route brings heavy traffic down from Clermont-Ferrand. It passes through countryside further scarred by uranium mining – the area around the village of St-Martin-du-Bosc has some of the highest soil concentration of radioactivity in the world.

Lodève, entirely enclosed by vine-terraced hills at the confluence of the Lergues and Soulondres rivers, is almost in the shadow of the Causse de Larzac. There are no real sights here, but it's a pleasant, old-fashioned place to pause on your way up to Le Caylar or La Couvertoirade on the causse. The cathedral – a stop on the pilgrim route to Santiago de Compostela – is worth a look, as is the unusual World War I Monument aux Morts, in the adjacent park, by local sculptor Paul Dardé. This spooky mise en scène of civilians mourning a soldier fall on the field is a departure from the usual stiff commemorations of the “Morts pour la France”. More of his work is on display at the town museum in the Hôtel Fleury (Tues–Sun 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; €3.20, €6 during special exhibitions) and the Halle Dardé (daily 9am–7pm; free) in the place du Marché. With a bit of organizing it's also possible to visit the Atelier National de Tissage de Tapis (Tues–Thurs 1.30–3.30pm; €3.20; call ahead, ☎04.67.96.40.40), on the outskirts of Lodève, where priceless Gobelins tapestries are woven.

The tourist office is at 7 place de la République (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 9.30am–noon; ☎04.67.88.86.44, 🌐www.lodeve.com), next door to the gare routière, where you can catch buses to Montpellier, Béziers, Millau, Rodez and St-Afrique. The best place to stay in town is the Hôtel du Nord (☎04.67.44.92.78, 🌐www.hotellodeve.com; ②) at 18 bd de la Liberté, or the family-run Hôtel de la Paix (☎04.67.44.07.46, 🌐www.hotel-dela-paix.com; ③; closed Jan & Feb) on 11 bd Montalangué. There's a big market on Saturdays, and local farmers bring in their produce three times a week in summer.

Southern Languedoc

Southern Languedoc presents an exciting and varied landscape, its coastal flats stretching south from the mouth of the Aude towards Perpignan, interrupted by occasional low, rocky hills. Just inland sits Béziers, its imposing cathedral set high above the languid River Orb, girded in the north by the amazingly preserved Renaissance town of Pézenas and in the south by the pre-Roman settlement of the Ensérune. It's also a gateway to the spectacular uplands of the Monts de l'Espinouse and the Parc Naturel Régional du Haut Languedoc, a haven for ramblers. Just south of Béziers, the ancient Roman capital of Narbonne guards the mouth of the Aude. Following the course of this river, which is shadowed by the historic Canal du Midi, you arrive at the quintessential medieval citadel, the famous fortress-town of Carcassonne. Once a shelter for renegade Cathar heretics, Carcassonne is also a fine departure point for the Cathar castles – a string of romantically ruined castles covered on pp.821–824.

Béziers and around

Though no longer the rich city of its nineteenth-century heyday, BÉZIERS has risen out of its recent dreariness with admirable panache. The town is the capital of the Languedoc wine country and a focus for the Occitan movement, as well as being the birthplace of Resistance hero Jean Moulin. The fortunes of the movement and the vine have long been closely linked; Occitan activists have helped to organize the militant local vine-growers, and there were ugly events during the mid-1970s, when blood was shed in confrontations with the authorities over the import of cheap foreign wines and the low prices paid for the essentially poor-grade local product. Things are calmer now, the conservatism of Languedoc farmers giving way to more modern attitudes in the face of public demand for something better than the traditional table wine. As a result, some of the steam has also gone out of the movement; interest today is more in the culture than in anti-Paris separatist feelings. The town is also home to two great Languedocian adopted traditions: English rugby and the Spanish corrida, both of which are followed with a passion. The best time to visit is during the mid-August feria, a raucous four-day party that can be enjoyed even if bull-fighting isn't to your taste.

The City

The finest view of the old town is from the west, as you come in from Carcassonne: crossing the willow-lined River Orb by the Pont-Neuf, you can look upstream at the sturdy arches of the Pont-Vieux, above which rises a steep-banked hill crowned by the Cathédrale St-Nazaire which, with its crenellated towers, resembles a castle more than a church. The best approach to the cathedral is up the medieval lanes at the end of Pont-Vieux, rue Canterelles and passage Canterelletes. Its architecture is mainly Gothic, the original building having been burnt in 1209 during the sacking of Béziers, when Armand Amaury's crusaders massacred some seven thousand people at the church of the Madeleine for refusing to hand over about twenty Cathars. "Kill them all", the pious abbot is said to have ordered, "God will recognize his own!"

From the top of the cathedral tower, there's a superb view out across the vine-dominated surrounding landscape. Next door, you can wander through the ancient cloister (free) and out into the shady bishop's garden overlooking the river. In the adjacent place de la Révolution, a monument commemorates the people who died resisting Napoléon III's coup d'état in 1851 and their leader, Mayor Casimir Péret, who was shipped off to Cayenne where he drowned in a Papillon-style escape attempt. Also on the square, the Hôtel Fabrégat houses a Musée des Beaux-Arts (Tues–Sun: July & Aug 10am–6pm; Sept–June 9/10am–noon & 2–5/6pm; €2.45) which, apart from an interesting collection of Greek Cycladic vases, won't keep you long. Nearby, Hôtel Fayet, at 9 rue Capus (same hours and ticket), has been pressed into service as an annexe to the museum, though it's as much of interest for its period interiors as its collection of nineteenth- and early twentieth-century art and works by local sculptor Jean-Antoine Injalbert.

The city's other museum, the Musée du Biterrois (Tues–Sun: July & Aug 10am–6pm; Sept–June 9/10am–noon & 2–5/6pm; €2.45), in the old St-Jacques barracks on avenue de la Marne near the train station, displays a variety of entertaining exhibits, ranging from Greek amphorae and nineteenth-century door knockers to distilling manuals, clogs and winepresses. You might also take a look at the modest remains of the Roman amphitheatre two streets to the north of the museum off of rue St-Jacques, which at the time of writing was being developed as an open-air museum. It once had a capacity of over 13,000 spectators, and its stones were used to construct the medieval walls.

Away from the medieval streets round the cathedral, the centre of life in Béziers is the allées Paul-Riquet, a broad, leafy esplanade lined with cafés, crêpe stalls, restaurants, banks and shops; it's named after the seventeenth-century tax collector who lost health and fortune in his obsession with building the Canal du Midi to join the Atlantic and the Mediterranean. Laid out in the last century, the allées runs from an elaborate nineteenth-century theatre on place de la Victoire to the gorgeous little park of the Plateau des Poètes, whose ponds, palms and lime trees were laid out in the so-called English manner by the man who created the Bois de Boulogne in Paris.

Practicalities

From the gare SNCF on boulevard Verdun, the best way into town is through the landscaped gardens of the Plateau des Poètes opposite the station entrance and up the allées Paul-Riquet. The gare routière is in place de Gaulle, at the northern end of the allées, while the tourist office is in the new Palais des Congrès at 29 av Saint-Saëns (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon/12.30pm & 1.30/2–6pm; ☎04.67.76.47.00, 🌐www.ville-beziers.fr).

For a central place to stay, try the Hôtel des Poètes, 80 allées Paul-Riquet (☎04.67.76.38.66, 🌐www.hoteldespoetes.net; 📍), at the southern end overlooking the gardens, the smarter Hôtel du Théâtre, 13 rue Coquille (☎04.67.49.13.43 📧hoteldutheatre.beziers@9online.com; 📍), right beside the municipal theatre, or the new France (☎04.67.28.44.72, 🌐www.hotel2france.com; 📍) at 36 rue Boïédieu. The town's deluxe option, Hôtel Emperor (☎04.67.49.02.25, 🌐www.hotel-imperator.fr; 📍), at 28 allées Paul-Riquet, is a notch above the rest but won't break the bank. There's no campsite in Béziers, but you can head to Les Berges du Canal (☎04.67.39.36.09, 🌐www.lesbergesducanal.com; mid-April to mid-Sept) in nearby Villeneuve-lès-Béziers, about 4km southeast of the town centre, or 6km east to Clariac (☎04.67.76.78.97; April–Sept).

A string of restaurants with patios are lined along the west side of allées Paul-Riquet, serving the usual steak-frites-type menus for about €12. Better fare can be found in the old quarter; rue Viennet has a good choice of places. The best choice is probably 🍷 Le Cep d'Or, at no. 7, a bistro with a charming old-fashioned air, serving mostly seafood (menus from €13–20; closed Sun eve & Mon out of season), while Les Deux Lombard, at no. 32, is more upmarket, with menus from €30. Lighter fare can be found at La Table Bretonne (closed Mon), at no. 21, an airy crêperie with a large street-side patio where savoury or sweet pancakes start at €9. L'Ambassade (closed Sun & Mon; ☎04.67.76.06.24), at 22 bd de Verdun is one of the town's best places.

Béziers has one of the star rugby clubs in France, A.S.B.H., based at the Stade de la Méditerranée in the eastern suburbs (☎04.67.11.03.76, 🌐www.asbh.net). If you fancy pottering along the Canal du Midi, you can rent bikes at La Maison du Canal (☎04.67.62.18.18) beside the Pont-Neuf, south of the gare SNCF.

Pézenas

PÉZENAS lies 18km east of Béziers on the old N9. Market centre of the coastal plain, it looks across to rice fields and shallow lagoons, hazy in the heat and dotted with pink flamingos. The town was catapulted to glory when it became the seat of the parliament of Languedoc and the residence of its governors in 1465, and reached its zenith in the late seventeenth century when the prince Armand de Bourbon made it a “second Versailles”. The legacy of this illustrious past can be seen in the town's exquisite array of fourteenth- to seventeenth-century mansions.

The town also plays up its association with Molière, who visited several times with his troupe in the mid-seventeenth century, when he enjoyed the patronage of Prince Armand. He put on his own plays at the Hôtel d'Alfonse on rue Conti, including the first performance of Le Médecin Volant, according to local tradition. The building is now privately owned, but in summer you can visit the courtyard that served as Molière's theatre (July & Aug Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €2). When in town, he lodged at the Maison du Barbier-Gély in the unspoiled place Gambetta, today occupied by the tourist office (July & Aug Mon, Tues, Thurs & Sat 9am–7pm, Wed & Fri 9am–10pm, Sun 10am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎ 04.67.98.36.40, 🌐 www.ot-pezenas-valdherault.com). Although Molière features in the eclectic Musée Vulliod St-Germain (Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; €2), housed in a sixteenth-century palace just off the square, it's the grand salon, with its Aubusson tapestries and collection of seventeenth- and eighteenth-century furniture, that steals the show.

The tourist office distributes a guide to all the town's eminent houses, taking in the former Jewish ghetto on rue des Litanies and rue Juiverie, but you can just as easily follow the explanatory plaques posted all over the centre, starting at the east end of rue François-Outrin where it leaves the town's main square, place du 14-Juillet.

Practicalities

The gare routière is on the opposite side of the square on the riverbank, with buses to Montpellier, Béziers and Agde, while an enormous market takes place each Saturday on cours Jean-Jaurès, a five-minute walk away.

There are two hotels in old Pézenas: Genieys, at 9 rue Aristide-Briand (☎ 04.67.98.13.99, 🌐 www.logis-de-france.fr; 📍), and the splendid Molière, 18 place du 14-Juillet (☎ 04.67.98.14.00, 🌐 www.hotel-le-moliere.com; 📍). There are plenty of restaurants to choose from, most with menus for under €18. Le Pomme d'Amour (March–Dec; closed Mon eve & Tues in winter), on rue Albert-Paul-Alliés, has good duck dishes and Le Conti, 27 rue Conti (closed Sun & out of season Mon), is a popular pizzeria. The best spot, however, is Les Palmiers on 50 rue de Mercière (☎ 04.67.09.42.56; June–Sept only), a beautiful and welcoming establishment featuring inventive Mediterranean-style cuisine from about €28. For those with a sweet tooth, there are two local delicacies to sample: flavoured sugar-drops called berlingots, and petits pâtés – bobbin-shaped pastries related to mince pies, reputedly introduced by the Indian cook in the household of Clive of India, who stayed in Pézenas in 1770.

Narbonne and around

On the Toulouse–Nice main train line, 25km west of Béziers, is NARBONNE, once the capital of Rome's first colony in Gaul, Gallia Narbonensis, and a thriving port in classical times and the Middle Ages. Plague, war with the English and the silting-up of its harbour finished it off in the fourteenth century, though a tentative prosperity returned in the late nineteenth century with the birth of the modern wine industry. Today, despite the ominous presence of the Malvesi nuclear power plant just 5km out of town, it's a pleasant provincial city with a small but well-kept old town, dominated by the great truncated choir of its cathedral and bisected by a grassy esplanade on the banks of the Canal de la Robine.

In the early 1990s Narbonne acquired notoriety as a flash point in France's continuing problems with its ethnic minorities, as the Harkis – Algerians who had enlisted in the French forces and fought with them against their own people in the Algerian war of independence in the late 1950s – began angrily to protest official neglect of their community. The discontent has rumbled on, and the Harkis have organized a political group, the Mouvement Harki, to counter the city's far-right municipal administration.

The Town

One of the few Roman remnants in Narbonne is the Horreum, at the north end of rue Rouget-de-l'Isle (April–Sept 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; Oct–March 10am–noon & 2–5pm), an unusual underground grain store divided into a series of small chambers leading off a rectangular passageway. At the opposite end of the same street, close to the attractive tree-lined banks of the Canal de la Robine, is Narbonne's other principal attraction, the enormous Gothic Cathédrale St-Just-et-St-Pasteur. With the Palais des Archevêques and its forty-metre high keep, it forms a massive pile of masonry that completely dominates the restored lanes of the old town, and – like the cathedral of Béziers – can be seen for kilometres around. In spite of its size, it's actually only the choir of a much more ambitious church, whose construction was halted to avoid wrecking the city walls. The immensely tall interior has some beautiful fourteenth-century stained glass in the chapels on the northeast side of the apse and imposing Aubusson tapestries – one of the most valuable tapestries is kept in the Salle du Trésor (April–Sept 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; Oct–March 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €2.20), along with a small collection of ecclesiastical treasures.

The adjacent place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville is dominated by the great towers of St-Martial, the Madeleine and Bishop Aycelin's keep. From there the passage de l'Ancre leads through to the Palais des Archevêques (Archbishops' Palace), housing a fairly ordinary museum of art and a good archeology museum (both museums have the same hours and ticket as the Horreum), whose interesting Roman remains include a massive 3.5-metre wood and lead ship's rudder, and a huge mosaic. Across into the southern part of the town, beyond the bisecting Canal de la Robine and the built-over Pont des Marchands, the small early Christian crypt of the church of St-Paul, off rue de l'Hôtel-Dieu (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm & Sun 9am–noon; free), is worth a quick look, as is the deconsecrated church of Notre-Dame-de-Lamourguié, which now houses a collection of Roman sculptures and epigraphy (same hours and cost as the Horreum).

Practicalities

The gare routière and the gare SNCF are next door to each other on avenue Carnot on the northwest side of town. The tourist office is on place Salengro, next to the cathedral (mid-June to mid-Sept Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; rest of year Mon–Sat 8.30am–noon & 2–6pm, plus Sun 9.30am–12.30pm May & June only; ☎04.68.65.15.60, 🌐www.mairie-narbonne.fr).

The best budget accommodation is the modern and friendly MJC Centre International de Séjour, in place Salengro (☎04.68.32.01.00, 🌐www.cis-narbonne.com; Ⓜ€25). Two of the more reasonable hotels are Will's Hotel, 23 av Pierre-Sémard (☎04.68.90.44.50, 🌐www.willshotel-narbonne.com; Ⓜ), a homely backpackers' favourite near the station, and the spruce Hôtel de France, 6 rue Rossini (☎04.68.32.09.75, 🌐www.hotelnarbonne.com; Ⓜ), beside the attractive market hall. A fancier option is the plush La Résidence, 6 rue du 1er-Mai (☎04.68.32.19.41, 🌐www.hotelresidence.fr; Ⓜ), in a nineteenth-century renovated house, but best is 🏠 Grand Hôtel du Languedoc, 22 bd Gambetta, ☎ 04.68.65.14.74, 🌐 www.hoteldulanguedoc.com; 📍, set in a dignified nineteenth-century house. The nearest campsite is Les Folralys (☎ 04.68.32.65.65, 🌐 www.lesfolralys.com), on the route de Gruissan to the south of town (take bus #2 from the Hôtel de Ville).

As for food, you'll find a string of alfresco snack bars and brasseries along the terraces bordering the Canal de la Robine in the town centre, while L'Estagnol (☎ 04.68.65.09.27; closed Sun & Mon eve; menus €10–28), across the canal on Cours Mirabeau, attracts the crowds with its simple, good-value fare. For something a little fancier, try Aux Trois Caves, at 4 rue Benjamin-Crémieux (menus €10–22), with terroir dining in a medieval cellar. 🍷 L'Alsace, at 2 av Pierre-Sémard (☎ 04.68.65.10.24; closed Tues & Wed) is Narbonne's best restaurant, hands down, featuring mammoth servings of excellent terroir and northeastern French dishes as well as local seafood dishes at €10–29 – the baked sea wolf is a house speciality.

Fontfroide and the Étang de Bages

For a side trip from Narbonne – only 15km southwest, but nigh impossible without transport of your own – the lovely abbey of FONTFROIDE enjoys a beautiful location, tucked into a fold in the dry cypress-clad hillsides. The extant buildings go back to the twelfth century, with some elegant seventeenth-century additions in the entrance and courtyards, and were in use from their foundation until 1900, first by Benedictines, then Cistercians. It was one of the Cistercian monks, Pierre de Castelnau, whose murder as papal legate set off the Albigensian Crusade against the Cathars in 1208.

Visits to the restored abbey are only possible on a guided tour (daily: 10am–noon & 2–4pm on the hour; €9). Star features include the cloister, with its marble pillars and giant wisteria, the church itself, some fine ironwork and a rose garden. The stained glass in the windows of the lay brothers' dormitory consists of fragments from churches in north and eastern France damaged in World War I.

Just south of Narbonne, the Étang de Bages et de Sigean forms a large lagoon frequently visited by flamingos. A scenic drive leads out over the étang to the village of Bages. It's a notably arty community, and some houses feature unusually decorous ceramic drainpipes. From Bages the road continues south along the edge of the étang to PEYRIAC-DE-MER and the Réserve Africaine Sigean (9am–4/6.30pm – check website for closing times; €22; 🌐 www.reserveafricainesigean.fr). This immense (and better than average) drive-through park (no motorcycles) contains over 150 species from Africa and the rest of the world.

The coast: Valras to Gruissan

The coast close to Béziers and Narbonne enjoys the same attributes – and problems – as the rest of the Languedoc shoreline: fantastic sand but not a stitch of shade, and endless tacky development buffeted by a wind that would rip the shell off a tortoise.

For a quick escape from Béziers, you can take a thirty-minute bus ride across the flat vine-covered coastal plain to VALRAS, at the mouth of the River Orb, whose old-fashioned family resort status is still just discernible. Further south, St-Pierre and Narbonne-Plage (reachable by bus from Narbonne) are uninspiring, modern resorts, and the only redeeming feature of this stretch of coast is the mini-landscape of the Montagne de la Clape, a former island, pine-covered and craggy, and not more than 200m above sea level, despite its name. At its far end the fishing village of GRUISSAN, 13km from Narbonne (there are buses), built in concentric rings around the hub of the Tour Barberousse, is the only real place of character left, and it, too, is under assault from developers. Out along the beach, plages des chalets, is a section of houses originally built on stilts to keep them clear of the sea, but since the danger of flooding has receded many have now added ground floors.

The one really worthwhile thing to visit near Gruissan is the Chapelle Notre-Dame-des-Auzils. It's about 4km up a winding lane into the Montagne and stands in a quiet and highly atmospheric spot in the pine woods. All along the road leading to it are moving memorials to the people of Gruissan lost at sea in merchant ships, trawlers and warships, from Haiti to the Greek island of Skiros. If the chapel's open, take a peek inside at the ex votos offered by grateful seamen and their families, many of them now painted onto the walls, the originals having been stolen in the 1960s.

Parc Naturel Régional du Haut Languedoc

Embracing Mont Caroux in the east and the Montagne Noire in the west, the Parc Naturel Régional du Haut Languedoc is the southernmost extension of the Massif Central. The west, above Castres and Mazamet, is Atlantic in feel and climate, with deciduous forests and lush valleys, while the east is dry, craggy and calcareous. Except in high summer you can have it almost to yourself. Buses serve the Orb valley and cross the centre of the park to La Salvetat and Lacaune, but you really need transport of your own to make the most of it.

Bédarieux to St-Pons: the valleys of the Orb and Jaur

Some 34km north of Béziers, the pleasant if unremarkable town of BÉDARIEUX lies on the edge of the park. Served by buses from both Béziers and Montpellier, and by train from Béziers, it makes a good base for entering the park, especially as the bus service continues along the Orb and Jaur valleys to St-Pons beneath the southern slopes of the Monts de l'Espinouse.

The best part of town is to the east of the river, where the tall, crumbly old houses are redolent of a rural France long since vanished in more prosperous areas. You'll find the tourist office on place aux Herbes (June–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 3–6pm; Oct–May Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 2–6pm, Sun 3–6pm; ☎04.67.95.08.79, 🌐www.bedarieux.fr). The town's only hotel, Hôtel de l'Orb (☎04.67.23.35.90, 🌐www.hotel-orb.com; 📍) is on route de St-Pons, near the station, and there's a municipal campsite on boulevard Jean-Moulin (☎04.67.23.30.19; closed Oct to mid-June). The best restaurant deal can be had at Le Rapièr, by the Hôtel de Ville on rue de la République, where a four-course meal including dessert, coffee and wine runs to around €17.

The Orb valley and Mons

Continuing west, the D908 (on the Bédarieux bus route) moves through spectacular scenery, with the peaks of the Monts de l'Espinouse rising up to 1000m on your right. The spa town of LAMALOU-LES-BAINS, 8km on, is notably livelier than neighbouring settlements, boasting the attraction of recuperative springs where the likes of André Gide and crowned heads of Spain and Morocco soothed their aches and pains. At the west end of the town by the main road, the cemetery is an untypically grand necropolis crowned with ornate mausoleums, while the ancient church on the north side of town contains carvings left by Mozarab (Christian) refugees from Moorish Spain.

At the village of Colombières, 5km to the west, a path leaves the road to take you up into the Gorges de Madale. Here it joins the GR7, which crosses the southern part of the park to Labastide-Rouairoux beyond St-Pons.

Seven or eight kilometres further along the D908 is MONS, which features a comfortable B&B, Manoir le Trivalle (☎04.67.97.85.56, 🌐www.monslatrivalle.com; Ⓜ). Some 2km away on the D14, there's a municipal campsite mid-April to mid-Sept; ☎04.67.97.71.50). From Mons a road climbs 5km up the dramatic Gorges d'Héric to the hamlet of Héric, with the Gorges de l'Orb winding their way southwards back to Béziers along the D14.

Olargues and St-Pons-de-Thomières

Five kilometres after Mons, you reach the medieval village of OLARGUES, scrambling up the south bank of the Jaur above its thirteenth-century single-span bridge. The steep twisting streets, presumably almost unchanged since the bridge was built, lead up to a thousand-year-old belfry crowning the top of the hill. With the river and gardens below, the ancient and earth-brown farms on the infant slopes of Mont Caroux beyond, and swifts swirling round the tower in summer, you get a powerful sense of age and history. There's a tiny tourist office on rue de la Place near the church (July & Aug daily 9am–1pm & 4–7pm; Sept–June Mon, Tues & Thurs–Sat 9am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎04.67.97.71.26, 🌐www.olargues.org), as well as an old train station now served only by SNCF buses. There is a deluxe country hotel, the Domaine de Rieumégé (☎04.67.97.73.99, 🌐www.domainederieumege.com; Ⓜ) just outside of town on the St-Pons road, but a better deal the homely 🐾 Les Quatr' Farceurs in rue de la Comporte (☎04.67.97.81.33, 🌐www.olargues.co.uk; Ⓜ), which also serves huge meals with free-flowing wine for €20. Campers should head for Camping Le Baous, down by the river (mid-April to mid-Sept; ☎04.67.97.71.50).

ST-PONS-DE-THOMIÈRES, 18km further west, is a little larger and noisier: it's on the Béziers–Castres and Béziers–La Salvetat bus routes, as well as the Bédarieux–Mazamet route. This is the “capital” of the park, with the Maison du Parc housed in the local tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.20am–1pm & 2–7pm & Sun 9.30am–1pm; Sept–June Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.67.97.06.65, 🌐www.saint-pons-tourisme.com) on place du Forail. Sights include the cathedral – a strange mix of Romanesque and classical – and a small and reasonably interesting Musée de la Préhistoire (mid-June to Oct daily 10am–noon & 2.30–6pm; Nov to mid-June Wed, Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €3.50), across the river from the tourist office.

If you need to stay, try the basic Le Somail (☎04.67.97.00.12, ☎04.67.97.05.84; Ⓜ). The municipal campsite (☎04.67.97.34.85) is on the main road east to Bédarieux. Deluxe accommodation can be found at the 🐾 Bergeries de Ponderach 1km east of town (☎04.67.97.02.57, 🌐bergeries-ponderach.com; Ⓜ), a luxurious seventeenth-century country estate with a fine restaurant. Head north up the D907 and you'll reach the Col du Cabaretou and the stunningly situated Relais du Cabaretou (☎04.67.95.31.62, 🌐www.lecabaretou.com; Ⓜ; closed mid-Jan to mid-Feb), with a terroir restaurant serving menus starting at €30. North of here the D907 leads to La Salvetat in the heart of the park.

The park's uplands

The uplands of the park are a wild and little-travelled area, dominated by the towering peak of Mont Caroux and stretching west along the ridge of the Monts de l'Espinouse. This is prime hiking territory, where thick forest of stunted oak alternates with broad mountain meadows, opening up on impressive vistas. Civilization appears again to the west in the upper Agout valley, where Fraïsse and La Salvetat have become thriving bases for outdoor recreation, and to the north, at the medieval spa town of Lacaune. There's no transport crossing the uplands, but the D180 takes you from Le Pujol-sur-Orb, 2km west of Lamalou-les-Bains, to Mont Caroux and L'Espinouse.

Into the Agout valley

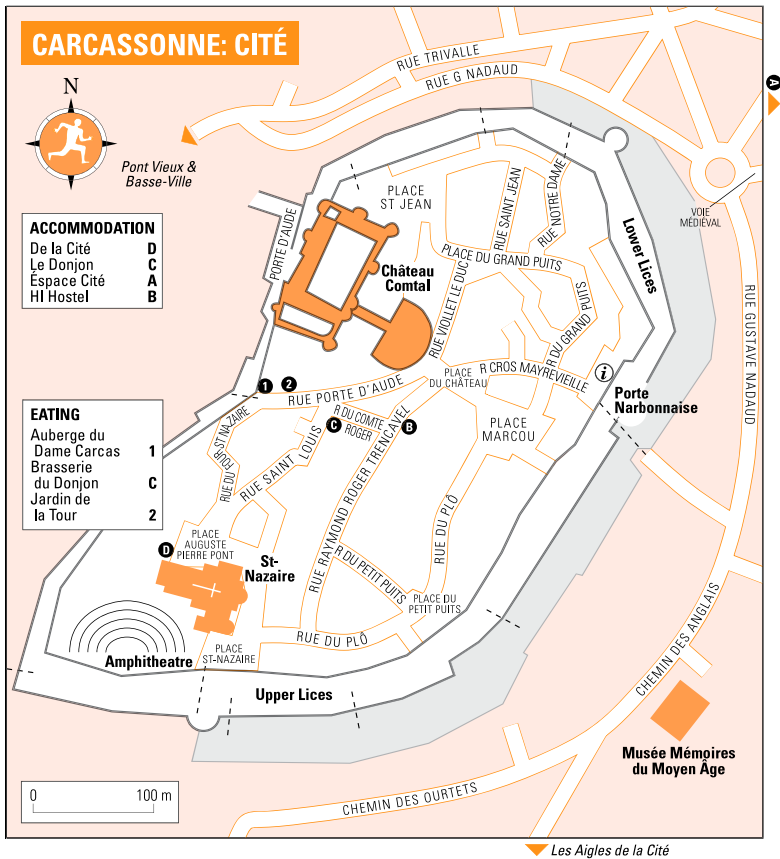

The D180 is the most spectacular way to climb into the park. Soon after leaving the main highway, you'll pass the Forêt des Écrivains-Combattants, named after the French writers who died in World War I. Just above the hamlet of Rosis, the road levels out in a small mountain valley, whose slopes are brilliant yellow with broom in June. Continuing north, the D180 climbs another 12km above deep ravines, offering spectacular views to the summit of L'Espinouse. The Col de l'Ourtigas is a good place to stretch your legs and take in the grandeur surrounding you. Here the landscape changes from Mediterranean cragginess to marshy moor-like meadow and big conifer plantations, and the road begins to descend west into the valley of the River Agout. It runs through tiny Salvergues, with plain workers' cottages and a striking fortress-church; Cambon, where the natural woods begin; postcard-pretty FRAÏSSE-SUR-AGOUT – where you can stay at the homely Auberge de l'Espinouse (☎04.67.95.40.46; 🌐aubergespainouse.net; 📍) which also has a good terroir restaurant (May–Nov; menu €17).

Next, you'll reach LA SALVETAT-SUR-AGOUT, another attractive mountain town built on a hill above the river, with car-wide streets and houses clad in huge slate tiles, situated between the artificial lakes of La Raviège and Laouzas. It's usually half-asleep except at holiday time, when it becomes a busy outdoor activities centre. With several campsites, including La Blaquièrre (June–Aug; ☎04.67.97.61.29, 🌐www.blaquiere.fr.st) on allée St-Étienne de Cavall just north of the centre, and the friendly, English-owned La Pergola hotel (☎04.67.97.60.57, ☎04.67.97.56.76; 📍), it's a convenient stopover for the centre of the park. There's a tourist office in place des Archers at the top of the hill (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm, Sept–June closed Sun; ☎04.67.97.64.44, 🌐www.lasalvetatot.com).

Lacaune

Twenty kilometres further north, LACAUNE makes another agreeable stop if you're heading for Castres. Surrounded by rounded wooded heights that stand around the 1000m mark, it's very much a mountain town, one of the centres of Protestant Camisard resistance at the end of the seventeenth century, when its inaccessibility made the region ideal for clandestine worship.

The air is fresh, and the town, though somewhat grey in appearance because of the slates and greyish stucco common throughout the region, is cheerful enough. For a place to stay, try Fusiés, an erstwhile coaching inn opposite the church on rue de la République (☎05.63.37.02.03, 🌐www.hotelfusies.fr; 📍), offering an old-fashioned class, or the simpler Hôtel Calas, a little way up the hill (☎05.63.37.03.28, 🌐www.pageloisirs.com/calas; 📍; closed mid-Dec to mid-Jan), which has a good restaurant (menus €11–35). There are bus connections train station, cross the canal bridge by an oval lock, pass the Jardin Chénier and follow rue Clemenceau, which will take you through the central place Carnot and out to the exterior boulevard on the southern side of town (a fifteen-minute walk). The gare routière (in fact a series of bus stops with no actual building) is on boulevard de Varsovie on the northwest side of town, south of the canal, while the airport (☎04.68.71.96.46, 🌐www.carcassonne.cci.fr) lies just west of the city. An hourly service (15min; €5) leaves from outside the terminal and stops in town at the gare SNCF, square Gambetta and the Cité; a taxi to the centre will cost €8–15. If you are planning on visiting other medieval sites in the vicinity of Carcassonne (including the Cathar castles), you might purchase the Intersite Card, which gives you a discounted admission price to many castles and monuments (see p.821 for details).

The tourist office is at 15 bd Camille-Pelletan (July, Aug daily 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 9am–noon; ☎04.68.10.24.30, 🌐www.carcassonne-tourisme.com), at the end of square Gambetta, where the main road from Montpellier enters the town across the Pont-Neuf and the River Aude. There’s also an annexe (daily: June–Sept 9am–6/7pm; Oct–May 9am–5pm) just inside the main gate to the medieval Cité, Porte Narbonnaise. For

Canal du Midi

The Canal du Midi runs for 240km from the River Garonne at Toulouse via Carcassonne to the Mediterranean at Agde. It was the brainchild of Pierre-Paul Riquet, a minor noble and tax collector, who succeeded in convincing Louis XIV (and more importantly, his first minister, Colbert) of the merits of linking the Atlantic and the Mediterranean via the Garonne.

The work, begun in 1667, took fourteen years to complete, using tens of thousands of workers. The crux of the problem from the engineering point of view was how to feed the canal with water when its high point at Naurouze, west of Carcassonne, was 190m above sea level and 58m above the Garonne at Toulouse. Riquet responded by building a system of reservoirs in the Montagne Noire, channelling run-off from the heights down to Naurouze. He spent the whole of his fortune on the canal and, sadly, died just six months before its inauguration in 1681.

The canal was a success and sparked a wave of prosperity along its course, with traffic increasing steadily until 1857, when the Sète-Bordeaux railway was inaugurated, reducing trade on the canal to all but nothing. Today, the canal remains a marvel of engineering and beauty, incorporating no fewer than 99 locks (écluses) and 130 bridges, almost all of which date back to the first era of construction. A double file of trees lines most of its length, giving it a distinctive "Midi" look and impeding loss of water through evaporation, while the greenery is enhanced in spring by the bloom of yellow irises and wild gladioli. With all of this and the occasional glimpses afforded of a world beyond – a distant smudge of hills and the towers of Carcassonne – the canal is a pleasure to travel. You can follow it by road, and many sections have foot or bicycle paths, but the best way to travel it, of course, is by boat.

Outfits in all the major ports rent houseboats and barges, and there are many cruise options to choose from as well. For boat rental and cruises, contact Crown Blue Line, Le Grand Bassin, BP1201, 11492 Castelnaudary (☎04.68.94.52.72, ✉boathols@crown-blueline.com), or Locaboat, Le Grand Bassin (☎03.86.91.72.72, 🌐www.locaboat.com), both of which have a number of branches in Languedoc and the Midi; or Nautic in Carcassonne (☎04.68.71.88.95, ☎04.67.94.05.91). Canal information can be found at the port offices of Voies Navigables de France, at 2 Port St-Étienne in Toulouse (☎05.61.36.24.24, 🌐www.vnf.fr), who also have English-speaking offices at the major canal ports. For a quicker taste of the locks, the cruise barge Lou Gabaret does ninety-minute and longer excursions; contact Allan Millian, 27 rue des 3 Couronnes, Carcassonne (☎04.68.71.61.26).

information on the Cathars, consult the Centre National d'Études Cathares, 53 rue de Verdun (☎04.68.47.24.66), while local bookshops offer plenty of Cathar literature and souvenir picture books, some in English.

Accommodation

With the exception of the modern, clean, but frequently booked-up HI hostel on rue Trencavel (☎04.68.25.23.16, ✉carcassonne@fuaj.org), which offers beds for €14, the price of staying in the Cité can be high. If you don't mind paying, the 🏠 Hôtel de la Cité (☎04.68.71.98.71, 🌐www.hoteldelacite.com; 🍷) offers rooms and suites in the opulent surroundings of a medieval manor house, with a heated swimming pool and stunning views from the battlemented walls. Le Donjon, 2 rue Comte-Roger (☎04.68.11.23.00, 🌐www.hotel-donjon.fr; 🍷), is more economical, but still luxurious. Hôtel Espace Cité, just outside the main gate at 132 rue Trivalle (☎04.68.25.24.24, 🌐www.hotel.espacecite.fr; 🍷), has all mod cons and efficient service at reasonable prices.

△ Canal du Midi

There are, however, some very well-priced hotels in the ville basse. Pride of place goes to the Hôtel du Soleil Terminus, at 2 av de Maréchal-Joffre (☎ 04.68.25.25.00, ☎ 04.68.75.53.09; 📅; closed Dec–Feb), a station-side hotel of decaying steam-age luxury, with a splendid fin-de-siècle facade. The Montségur, 27 allée d'Iéna (☎ 04.68.25.31.41, 🌐 www.hotelmontsegur.com; 📅), is a comfortable nineteenth-century town house, with ample-size rooms, but is not very close to the Cité. A good economy option is the surprisingly well-equipped La Bastide, at 81 rue de la Liberté (☎ 04.68.71.96.89, ☎ 04.68.71.36.28; 📅).

There's a campsite, Camping de la Cité, on route St-Hilaire (☎ 04.68.25.11.17, 🌐 www.campeoles.fr; mid-March to Oct), with good shady sites, a shop and some bungalows. Tucked off among parkland to the south of town, it can be reached by local bus (line 8) or by foot (about 20min) from the Cité.

The Cité

The attractions of the well-preserved and lively ville basse notwithstanding, what everybody comes for is the Cité, the double-walled and turreted fortress that crowns the hill above the River Aude. From a distance it's the epitome of the fairy-tale medieval town. Viollet-le-Duc rescued it from ruin in 1844, and his “too-perfect” restoration has been furiously debated ever since. It is, as you would expect, a real tourist trap. Yet, in spite of the chintzy cafés, arty-crafty shops and the crowds, you'd have to be a very stiff-necked purist not to be moved at all.

To reach the Cité from the ville basse, take bus #2 from outside the station, or a navette from square Gambetta. Alternatively, you can walk it in under thirty minutes, crossing the Pont-Vieux and climbing rue Barbacane, past the church of St-Gimer to the sturdy bastion of the Porte d'Aude. This is effectively the back entrance – the main gate is Porte Narbonnaise, round on the east side.

There is no charge for admission to the streets or the grassy lies – “lists” – between the walls, though cars are banned from 10am to 6pm. However, to see the inner fortress of the Château Comtal and walk the walls, you'll have to join a guided tour (daily April–Sept 9.30am–6pm, Oct–March 9.30am–5pm; 35–40min; €6.50). These – including several per day in English from June to September – assume some knowledge of French history, and point out the various phases in the construction of the fortifications, from Roman and Visigothic to Romanesque and the post-Cathar adaptations of the French kings.

In addition to wandering the narrow streets, don't miss the beautiful church of St-Nazaire (mid-June to mid-Sept Mon–Fri 9–11.45am & 1.45–6pm, Sun 9–10.45am & 2–4.30pm; rest of year closes at 5pm), towards the southern corner of the Cité at the end of rue St-Louis. It's a serene combination of nave with carved capitals in the Romanesque style and a Gothic choir and transepts, along with with some of the loveliest stained glass in Languedoc. In the south transept is a tombstone believed to belong to Simon de Montfort. You can also climb the tower (same hours; €1.50), for spectacular views over the Cité.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

With over fifty restaurants within its walls, the Cité is a good place to look for somewhere to eat, though it tends to be expensive. First choice is the Auberge de Dame Carcas, 3 place du Château (☎04.68.71.23.23; closed Sun eve, Mon lunch & Feb; menu at €13.50), a traditional bistro offering cassoulet and other regional dishes. Otherwise try the Jardin de la Tour, 11 rue Porte d'Aude (open eves only Tues–Sat; closed Nov), with outside tables, or the smart Brasserie du Donjon, in the hotel of the same name; both serve terroir menus from €20.

There's a much greater variety of affordable places in the ville basse: among these Le Petit Couvert, at 18 rue de l'Aigle d'Or, has good cheap menus (closed Sun & Mon & March; from €11) and a small street-side terrace. Nearby, at 29 bd Jean-Jaurès, the Divine Comédie serves a varied menu of pasta, pizzas and regional dishes in generous portions (closed Sun; from €12). For something more sophisticated, try 🍷 L'Écurie (☎04.68.72.04.04) at 43 bd Barbès, offering local cuisine with adventurous touches, such as roast lamb with thyme and garlic (menus €15–28; closed Sun eve & Wed). For picnic provisions, head for the market on place Carnot (Tues, Thurs & Sat mornings).

Carcassonne hosts two major festivals: the month-long Festival de la Cité in July, with dance, theatre and music, the highpoint of which is the mammoth fireworks display on Bastille Day (July 14); and the elaborate medieval pageant, Les Médiévaux, held in the first fortnight of August.

Castelnaudary

Thirty-six kilometres west of Carcassonne, on the main road from Toulouse, CASTELNAUDARY is one of those innumerable French country towns that boast no particular sights but are nonetheless a real pleasure to spend a couple of hours in, having coffee or shopping for a picnic in the market. Today it serves as an important commercial centre for the rolling Lauragais farming country hereabouts, as it once was for the traffic on the Canal du Midi. In fact, the most flattering view of the town is still that from the canal's Grand Bassin, which makes it look remarkably like a Greek island town, with its ancient houses climbing the hillside from the water's edge.

In town you'll find some fine old mansions, a restored windmill and an eighteenth-century semaphore tower. However, Castelnaudary's chief claim to fame is as the world capital of cassoulet, which, according to tradition, must be made in an earthenware pot from Issel (a cassolo) with beans grown in Pamiers or Lavelanet, and cooked in a baker's oven fired with rushes from the Montagne Noire. To try it, go to the Grand-Hôtel Fourcade, 14 rue des Carmes ☎04.68.23.02.08, 📧hotelfourcade@ataraxie.fr; closed Jan; ②), where you can gorge yourself for €15, then sleep off the after-effects by taking a room upstairs. More attractive alternatives for spending the night are the modern Hôtel du Canal, 2 av Arnaut-Vidal (☎04.68.94.05.05, 🌐www.hotelducanal.com; ③), in a shady position beside the canal just west of the Grand Bassin, and the Hôtel du Centre et du Lauragais (☎04.68.23.25.95, ☎04.68.94.01.66; ④; closed Jan to mid-Feb), a converted nineteenth-century house that's centrally located at 31 cours de la République, close to the post office. The tourist office is in Castelnaudary's central Halle aux Grains (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–7pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm & 3–6pm; ☎04.68.23.05.73).

Minerve

The village of MINERVE lies a dozen kilometres north of the Canal du Midi, halfway between Carcassonne and Béziers in the middle of the Minervoise wine country. Its location is extraordinary, isolated on an island of rock between the gorges of the Briant and Cesse rivers, the latter of which has cut its course through two enormous tunnels in the rock known as the Ponts Naturels.

The village turned Cathar at the beginning of the thirteenth century, which made it a target for Simon de Montfort's crusade. On July 22, 1210, after a seven-week siege, he took the castle and promptly burnt 180 parfaits (or "purified souls"). Nothing remains of the castle save for the ruins of a wall, but there's a memorial to the parfaits by the church – and, inside, one of the most ancient altars in Gaul, dated 456 AD. If you are looking to stay, head to the Relais Chantouvent (☎04.68.91.14.18, ☎04.68.91.81.99; ④), which is also one of the better places in town to get a meal (menus from €18); alternatively, there's free camping in the valley bottom by the cemetery. The tourist office (July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.68.91.81.43) has information about other accommodation possibilities in the area.

The Montagne Noire

There are two good routes from Carcassonne north into the Montagne Noire, which forms the western extremity of the Parc Naturel Régional du Haut Languedoc: Carcassonne–Revel and Carcassonne–Mazamet by the valley of the Orbiel. Neither is served by public transport, but both offer superlative scenery.

The Revel route

The Revel route follows the N113 out of Carcassonne, then the D629 through Montolieu (17km) and Saissac. MONTOLIEU, semi-fortified and built on the edge of a ravine, has set itself the target of becoming France's secondhand book capital (a conscious imitation of Wales's Hay-on-Wye), with shops overflowing with dog-eared and antiquarian tomes. Drop in at the Librairie Booth, by the bridge over the ravine, for English titles.

SAISSAC, 8km further on, is much more an upland village. Conifers and beech wood, interspersed with patches of rough pasture, surround it, and gardens are terraced down its steep slopes. Remains of towers and fortifications poke out among the ancient houses, and on a spur below the village stand the romantic ruins of its castle and the church of St-Michel.

If you wish to stay in the area, try the rather aged Montagne Noire (☎04.68.24.46.36, ☎04.68.24.46.20; ③) on the road through Saissac. To eat, head to Au Beau Site (☎04.68.24.40.37; closed Sat & Sun Sept–June) in the town below, which has good views and menus from €30. More idyllic accommodation is available north of town at Domaine du Lampy-Neuf (☎04.68.24.46.07, 🌐www.domainedulampy-neuf.com; 📍), a chambre d'hôte by the banks of the Bassin du Lampy, which also functions as a gîte. If you have your own transport, the best campsite hereabouts, and an experience in itself, is the Camping du Bout du Monde (☎04.68.94.20.92; all year round), at a beautiful tumbledown farm near Verdun-en-Lauragais, 5km west of Saissac. You camp among the broom at the edge of the woods.

Some 14km west of Saissac on the D103 (or just a few kilometres south-west of the Bout du Monde campsite), the ancient village of ST-PAPOUL, with its walls and Benedictine abbey, makes for a gentle side trip. The abbey is best known for the sculpted corbels on the exterior of the nave, executed by the “Master of Cabestany”. These can be viewed at any time without charge, although the interior of the church and its pretty fourteenth-century cloister (daily April–June, Sept, Oct 10–11.30am & 2–5.30pm; July & Aug 10am–6.30pm; Nov–March Sat, Sun & hols 10–11.30am & 2–6.30pm; €3.50) are also worth a peek.

Back on the “main” D629, the road winds down through the forest, past the Bassin de St-Ferréol, constructed by Riquet to supply water to the Canal du Midi, and on to REVEL. Revel is a bastide dating from 1342, featuring an attractive arcaded central square with a superb wooden-pillared medieval halle in the middle. Now a prosperous market town (Saturday is market day), it makes an agreeable provincial stopover. The Auberge du Midi at 34 bd Gambetta (closed late Nov to early Dec; ☎05.61.83.50.50, 🌐www.logis-de-france.fr; 📍) is set in a refined old nineteenth-century mansion, and also has the town’s best restaurant (menus €29–43). Close by at 7 rue de Taur, you’ll find the Commanderie Hôtel (05.34.66.11.24; closed part Feb, part June, part Sept; 📍), a good second choice, with an old timber-frame facade and a remodelled interior.

Lastours and the valley of the Orbiel

The alternative route from Carcassonne into the Montagne Noire takes you through the region known as the Cabardès. Cut by the deep ravines of the Orbiel and its tributary streams, it’s covered with Mediterranean scrub lower down and forests of chestnut and pine higher up. The area is extremely poor and depopulated, with rough stone villages and hamlets crouching in the valleys. Until relatively recently, its people lived off beans and chestnut flour and the meat from their pigs, and worked in the region’s copper, iron, lead, silver and gold mines. Nothing now remains of that tradition save for the gold mine at Salsigne, a huge and unsightly open pit atop a bleak windswept plateau.

The most memorable site in the Orbiel valley is the Châteaux de Lastours (Feb, March, Nov & Dec Sat, Sun & hols 10am–5pm; April–June & Sept daily 10am–6pm; July & Aug daily 9am–8pm; Oct daily 10am–5pm; €4), the most northerly of the Cathar castles (see p.821), 16km north of Carcassonne. As the name suggests, there is more than one castle – four in fact, their ruined keeps jutting superbly from a sharp ridge of scrub and cypress that plunges to rivers on both sides. The two oldest castles, Cabaret (mid-eleventh century) and Surdespine (1153), fell into de Montfort’s hands in 1211, after their lords had given shelter to the Cathars. The other two, Tour Régine and Quertineux, were added after 1240, when the site became royal property, and a garrison was maintained here as late as the Revolution. Today, despite their ruined state, they look as impregnable and beautiful as ever. A path winds up from the roadside, bright in early summer with iris, cistus, broom and numerous other flowers.

About 7km upriver from Lastours, the road and river divide. The left fork leads to the village of Mas-Cabardès, hunkered down defensively in the river bottom. The right goes to Roquefère, whose ancient château hosts summer-time theatre. From here a steep, serpentine road winds up through magnificent scenery to the tiny hamlet of Cupservies, balanced on the edge of a sudden and deep ravine where the Rieutort stream drops some 90m into the bottom. A couple of kilometres further, by the crossroads at Caninac, there's a tenth-century chapel, St-Sernin, in the middle of the woods. To get here without transport, there's a marked footpath from Roquefère, which then returns via Labastide-Esparbairègne (a 4hr 30min round trip).

Toulouse and western Languedoc

11

LANGUEDOC

Toulouse

With its sunny, cosmopolitan charms, Toulouse is a very accessible kick-off point for any destination in the southwest of France. Of the immediately surrounding places, Albi, with its highly original cathedral and comprehensive collection of Toulouse-Lautrec paintings is the number-one priority. Once you've made it that far, it's worth the extra hop to the well-preserved medieval town of Cordes. West of Toulouse the land opens up into the broad plains of the Gers, a sleepy and rather dull expanse of wheat fields and rolling hills. Those in search of a solitary little-visited France will enjoy its uncrowded monuments, especially lovers of rich terrines and Armagnac.

Toulouse

TOULOUSE, with its beautiful historic centre, is one of the most vibrant and metropolitan provincial cities in France. This is a transformation that has come about since World War II, under the guidance of the French state, which has poured in money to make Toulouse the think-tank of high-tech industry and a sort of premier trans-national Euroville. Long an aviation centre – St-Exupéry and Mermoz flew out from here on their pioneering airmail flights over Africa and the Atlantic in the 1920s – Toulouse is now home to Aérospatiale, the driving force behind Concorde, Airbus and the Ariane space rocket. The national Space Centre, the European shuttle programme, the leading aeronautical schools, the frontier-pushing electronics industry – it's all happening in Toulouse, whose 110,000 students make it second only to Paris as a university centre. But it's not to the burgeoning suburbs of factories, labs, shopping and housing complexes that all these people go for their entertainment, but to the old Ville Rose – pink not only in its brickwork, but also in its politics.

This is not the first flush of pre-eminence for Toulouse. From the tenth to the thirteenth centuries the counts of Toulouse controlled much of southern

TOULOUSE

DRINKING

L'Ambassade	12
Le Café des Artistes	15
Bibent	9
Bodega-Bodega	7
Le Chat d'Oc	20
Erich Coffie	21
Le Florida	8
The Frog & Rosbif	6
Hey Joe	2
Jour de Fête	5
Le Petit Voisin	19
Le Shenti	18
L'Ubu	14

EATING

Les Abbatoirs	16
La Bascule	23
Benjamin	13
Cantine du Curé	22
Au Chat Dingue	19
Chez Atilla	4
Faim des Haricots	17
Les Jardins de l'Opéra	10
Michel Sarran	11
Au Pois Gourmand	1
Le Sept Place St-Sernin	3

ACCOMMODATION

Albert 1er	H	Grand Hôtel de l'Opéra	L
Des Ambassadeurs	B	Mermoz	A
Des Arts	M	Ours Blanc	G
Beausejour	F	St-Sernin	D
Castellane	K	Terminus	C
Le Clochez de Rodez	E	Wilson Square	J
France Belossi	I

LANGUEDOC

Place St-Cyprien, Les Abattoirs & Arènes
Aerospatiale, Auch, Camping La Bouriette
Foix

Jolivet
Cité de l'Espace & Casters
George-Labrit Museum
Montpellier

France. They maintained the most resplendent court in the land, renowned especially for its troubadours, the poets of courtly love, whose work influenced Petrarch, Dante and Chaucer and thus the whole course of European poetry. The arrival of the hungry northern French nobles of the Albigensian Crusade put an end to that; in 1271 Toulouse became crown property.

Arrival and information

The gare SNCF (better known to locals as gare Matabiau), and gare routière (☎05.61.61.67.67), stand side by side in boulevard Pierre-Sémard on the bank of the tree-lined Canal du Midi. This is where you might find yourself if you arrive by air as well – the airport shuttle (every 20min; 20min; €4) puts you down at the bus station (with stops in allées Jean-Jaurès and at place Jeanne-d'Arc). It's also the best spot to aim for if you're in a car: leave the boulevard périphérique at exit 15.

To reach the city centre from the train station takes just five minutes by métro to Capitole (€1.30, covering one hour's transport by métro and Tisseo-Connex city buses within the city centre), or twenty minutes on foot. Turn left out of the station, cross the canal and head straight down allées Jean-Jaurès, through place Wilson and on into place du Capitole, the city's main square. Just before it lie the shady and much-frequented gardens of the square Charles-de-Gaulle, where the main tourist office (June–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm & 2–6.15pm; Oct–May Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; ☎05.61.11.02.22, 🌐www.ot-toulouse.fr) is housed in a sixteenth-century tower that has been restored to look like a castle keep; the Capitole métro stop is right outside.

The top guides to what's on in and around the city – and usually there is a lot, from opera to cinema – are the weekly listings magazines Toulouse Hebdo (€0.50) and Flash (€1). More highbrow interests are covered in the free monthly Toulouse Culture, available from the tourist office, among other places.

Accommodation

The best place to stay is in the city centre, where there are a number of excellent-value hotels, as well as many more upmarket establishments. The area around the train station, though charmless and still retaining some of its red-light seediness, has a few acceptable options. There's no hostel, but there are a number of accommodation centres for visitors who plan on staying for more than a few days: the CRIJ (☎05.61.21.20.20, 🌐crij-tlse.org) can provide details. The closest campsite is Camping de Rupé, chemin du Pont du Rupé (☎05.61.70.07.35; bus #59, stop "Rupé").

Hotels

Albert 1er 8 rue Rivals ☎05.61.21.17.91, 🌐www.hotel-albert1.com. This small, comfortable and good-value establishment is set in a quiet side street just off the Capitole and close to the central market in place Victor-Hugo. Special weekend deals are sometimes available. ⑤

Des Ambassadeurs 68 rue Bayard ☎05.61.62.65.84, 🌐www.hotel-des-ambassadeurs.com. Very friendly little hotel run by a young couple, just down from the station. All rooms have TV, en-suite bath and phone – a surprisingly good deal given the price. ②

Des Arts 1bis rue Cantegril ☎05.61.23.36.21, ☎05.61.12.22.37. On a corner diagonally opposite the Augustins museum, this is a top choice in the lower price range, with large, quirky rooms (some with a fireplace) in a superb old building. ②

Beausejour 4 rue Caffarelli ☎ & ☎05.61.62.77.59. Basic, but dirt-cheap and with a great copper-balconied facade and soundproofed rooms. This is the best of the hotels in the slightly dodgy but engagingly gritty neighbourhood around place de Belfort. ①

Castellane 17 rue Castellane ☎05.61.62.18.82, 🌐www.castellanehotel.com. A cheerful hotel with a wide selection of room types and sizes – most of which are bright and quiet. One of the few wheelchair-accessible hotels in this price range. 4

Le Clochez de Rodez 14 de Jeanne-d'Arc
 ☎ 05.61.62.42.92, 🌐 www.leclochezderodez.com. Comfortable and central, with secure parking and all mod cons. Despite its size, it exudes a very personal hospitality. 5

France Belossi 5 rue d'Austerlitz
 ☎ 05.61.21.88.24, 🌐 www.hotel-france-toulouse.com. One of the better options in the rue d'Austerlitz/place Wilson area. Clean rooms with cable television and air conditioning. 5

Grand Hôtel de l'Opéra 1 place du Capitole
 ☎ 05.61.21.82.66, 🌐 www.grand-hotel-opera.com. The grand dame of Toulouse's hotels presides over the place du Capitole in the guise of a seventeenth-century convent. The rich decor, peppered with antiques and artwork, underlines the atmosphere of sophistication. Has a fitness centre for working off that second helping of foie gras. 5

Mermoz 50 rue de Matabiau ☎ 05.61.63.04.04, 🌐 www.hotel-mermoz.com. Immaculate, comfortable rooms in a 1930s Art Deco-style hotel close to the station. Also has wheelchair access and a parking garage. 7

Ours Blanc 25 place de Victor-Hugo
 ☎ 05.61.21.62.40, 🌐 www.hotel-ours-blanc.fr. Right by the covered market and steps from the Capitole, this welcoming hotel is one of the city's better bargains. The entire building has recently been redecorated and each room has TV, a/c, Wi-Fi and telephone, as well as a private bath. 4

St-Sernin 2 rue St-Bernard ☎ 05.61.21.73.08, ☎ 05.61.22.49.61. Well-renovated old hotel in one of the best districts of the old town, around the basilica – close to all the action, but far enough away to provide peace in the evening. 5

Terminus 13 bd Bonrepos ☎ 05.61.62.44.78, 🌐 www.terminus31.com. This old three-star station-side hotel has large, reconditioned rooms that make it worth the price, and there are special room prices for off-season weekends. Parking and buffet breakfast (€8) available, the only drawback being that the hotel is rather far from the sights. 4

Wilson Square 12 rue d'Austerlitz
 ☎ 05.61.21.67.57, 🌐 www.hotel-wilson.com. Clean and well-kept place at the top end of rue Austerlitz, with TV, air conditioning and a lift. Also has a great patisserie on street level. 4

The City

The part of the city you'll want to see forms a rough hexagon clamped round a bend in the wide, brown River Garonne and contained within a ring of nineteenth-century boulevards, including Strasbourg, Carnot and Jules-Guesde. The Canal du Midi, which here joins the Garonne on its way from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic, forms a further ring around this core. Old Toulouse is effectively quartered by two nineteenth-century streets: the long shopping street, rue d'Alsace-Lorraine/rue du Languedoc, which runs north-south; and rue de Metz, which runs east-west onto the Pont-Neuf and across the Garonne. It's all very compact and easily walkable, and the city's métro is of little use for getting to sites of interest.

In addition to the general pleasure of wandering the streets, there are three very good museums and some real architectural treasures in the churches of St-Sernin and Les Jacobins and in the magnificent Renaissance town houses – hôtels particuliers – of the merchants who grew rich on the woad-dye trade. This formed the basis of the city's economy from the mid-fifteenth to the mid-sixteenth century, when the arrival of indigo from the Indian colonies wiped it out.

Place du Capitole is the centre of gravity for the city's social life. Its smart cafés throng with people at lunchtime and in the early evening, when the dying sun flushes the pink facade of the big town hall opposite. This is the scene of a mammoth Wednesday market for food, clothes and junk, and a smaller organic food market on Tuesday and Saturday mornings. From place du Capitole, a labyrinth of narrow medieval streets radiates out to the town's other squares, such as place Wilson, the more intimate place St-Georges, the delightful triangular place de la Trinité and place St-Étienne, in front of the cathedral.

For green space, you have to head for the sunny banks of the Garonne or the lovely formal gardens of the Grand-Rond and Jardin des Plantes in the southeast corner of the centre. A less obvious but attractive alternative is the towpath of the Canal du Midi; the best place to join it is a short walk southeast of the Jardin des Plantes, by the neo-Moorish pavilion of the Georges-Labit Museum, which houses a good collection of Egyptian and Oriental art.

The Capitole and the hôtels particuliers

Occupying the whole of the eastern side of the eponymous square, the Capitole has been the seat of Toulouse's city government since the twelfth century. In medieval times it housed the capitouls, who made up the oligarchic and independent city council from which its name derives. This institution, under the name of consulat, was common to other Languedoc towns and may have been the inspiration for England's first parliamentary essays, often attributed to Simon de Montfort, son of the general who became familiar with these parts in the course of his merciless campaigns against the Cathar heretics in the early 1200s. Today, these medieval origins are disguised by an elaborate pink and white classical facade (1750) of columns and pilasters, from which the flags of Languedoc, the Republic and the European Union are proudly flown. If there are no official functions taking place, you can have a peek inside (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9am–1pm; free) at the Salle des Illustres and a couple of other rooms covered in flowery, late nineteenth-century murals and some more subdued Impressionist works by Henri Martin.

Many of the old capitouls built their hôtels in the dense web of now mainly pedestrianized streets round about. The material they used was almost exclusively the flat Toulousain brick, whose rosy colour gives the city its nickname of Ville Rose. It is an attractive material, lending a small-scale, detailed finish to otherwise plain facades, and setting off admirably any wood- or stonework. Although many of the hôtels survive, they are rarely open to the public, so you have to do a lot of nonchalant sauntering into courtyards to get a look at them. The best known, open to visitors thanks to its very handsome Bemberg collection of paintings, is the Hôtel d'Assézat, at the river end of rue de Metz (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm, Thurs until 9pm; €4.60, plus €3 for temporary exhibits, @ www.fondation-bemberg.fr). Started in 1555 under the direction of Nicolas Bachelier, Toulouse's most renowned Renaissance architect, and never finished, it is a sumptuous palace of brick and stone, sporting columns of the three classical orders of Doric, Ionic and Corinthian, plus a lofty staircase tower surmounted by an octagonal lantern. The paintings within include works by Cranach the Elder, Tintoretto and Canaletto as well as moderns like Pissarro, Monet, Gauguin, Vlaminck, Dufy and a roomful of Bonnard. From April to October there's also a salon de thé in the covered entrance gallery.

Other fine houses exist just to the south: on rue Pharaon, in place des Carmes, on rue du Languedoc and on rue Dalbade, where the Hôtel Clary (also known as de Pierre) at no. 25 is unusual for being built of stone. To the north, it's worth wandering along rue St-Rome, rue des Changes, rue de la Bourse and rue du May, where the Hôtel du May at no. 7 houses the Musée du Vieux-Toulouse (Tues–Sun 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; €2.20), a rather uninspiring museum of the city's history.

The Musée des Augustins, the cathedral and the riverside

Right at the junction of rue de Metz and rue d'Alsace-Lorraine stands the Musée des Augustins (Thurs–Tues 10am–6pm, Wed 10am–9pm; @ www.augustins.org; €3). Outwardly unattractive, the nineteenth-century building incorporates two surviving cloisters of an Augustinian priory (one now restored as a monastery garden) and contains outstanding collections of Romanesque and medieval sculpture, much of it saved from the now-vanished churches of Toulouse's golden age. Many of the pieces form a fascinating, highly naturalistic display of contemporary manners and fashions: merchants with forked beards touching one another's arms in a gesture of familiarity, and the Virgin represented as a pretty, bored young mother looking away from the Child who strains to escape her hold.

To the south of the museum, just past the Chambre de Commerce, the pretty rue Croix-Baragnon, full of smart shops and galleries, opens at its eastern end onto the equally attractive place St-Étienne, which boasts the city's oldest fountain, the Griffoul (1546). Behind it stands the lopsided cathedral of St-Étienne, whose construction was spread over so many centuries that it makes no architectural sense at all. But there's ample compensation in the quiet and elegant streets of the quarter immediately to the south, and in the Musée Paul-Dupuy, a few minutes' walk away along rue Tolosane and rue Mage at 13 rue de la Pléau (daily 10am–5pm; June–Sept until 6pm; €3), which has a beautifully displayed and surprisingly interesting collection of clocks, watches, clothes, pottery and furniture from the Middle Ages to the present day, as well as a good display of religious art.

If you follow the rue de Metz westward from the Musée des Augustins, you come to the Pont-Neuf – begun in 1544, despite its name – where you can cross over to the St-Cyprien quarter on the left bank of the Garonne. At the end of the bridge on the left, an old water tower, erected in 1822 to supply clean water to the city's drinking fountains, now houses the Galerie Municipale du Château d'Eau (Tues–Sun 1–7pm; free), a small but influential photography exhibition space and information centre, with frequently changing exhibitions. Next door in the old hospital buildings, there's a small medical museum (Mon–Sat 2–6pm; free), housing a selection of surgical instruments and pharmaceutical equipment.

But the star of the left bank is undoubtedly Toulouse's new contemporary art gallery, Les Abattoirs, at 76 allées Charles-de-Fitte (Tues–Sun 11am–7pm; €8, free first Sun of month; @www.lesabattoirs.org). This splendid venue is not only one of France's best contemporary art museums, but an inspiring example of urban regeneration, constructed in a vast brick abattoir complex dating from 1828. The space itself is massive, with huge chambers perfectly suited to display even the largest canvases. The collection comprises over 2000 works (painting, sculpture, mixed- and multimedia) by artists from 44 countries, but the most striking piece is undoubtedly Picasso's massive 14m by 20m theatre backdrop, La dépouille du Minotaure en costume d'Arlequin, painted in 1936 for Romain Rolland's Le 14 Juillet, which towers over the lower gallery.

The churches of Les Jacobins and St-Sernin

A short distance west of place du Capitole, on rue Lakanal, you can't miss the church of the Jacobins. Constructed in 1230 by the Order of Preachers (Dominicans) which St Dominic had founded here in 1216 to preach against Cathar heretics, the church is a huge fortress-like rectangle of unadorned brick, buttressed – like Albi cathedral – by plain brick piles, quite unlike what you'd normally associate with Gothic architecture. The interior is a single space divided by a central row of ultra-slim pillars from whose minimal capitals spring an elegant splay of vaulting ribs – 22 from the last in line – like palm fronds. Beneath the altar lie the bones of the philosopher St Thomas Aquinas. On the north side, you step out into the calming hush of a cloister with a formal array of box trees and cypress in the middle, and its adjacent art exhibition hall (daily 10am–7pm; €3). Nearby, at the corner of rue Gambetta and rue Lakanal, poke your nose into the stone-galleried courtyard of the Hôtel de Bernuy, one of the city's most elaborate Renaissance houses.

From the north side of place du Capitole, rue du Taur leads past the belfry wall of Notre-Dame-du-Taur, whose diamond-pointed arches and decorative motifs represent the acme of Toulousain bricklaying skills, to place St-Sernin. Here you're confronted with the largest Romanesque church in France, the basilica of St-Sernin, begun in 1080 to accommodate the passing hordes of Santiago pilgrims, and one of the loveliest examples of its genre. Its most striking external features are the octagonal brick belfry with rounded and pointed arches, diamond lozenges, colonnettes and mouldings picked out in stone, and the apse with nine radiating chapels. Entering from the south, you pass under the Porte Miégeville, whose twelfth-century carvings launched the influential Toulouse school of sculpture. Inside, the great high nave rests on brick piers, flanked by double aisles of diminishing height, surmounted by a gallery running right around the building. The small fee for the ambulatory (daily 10am–6pm; €2) is well worth it for the exceptional eleventh-century marble reliefs on the end wall of the choir and for the extraordinary wealth of reliquaries in the spacious crypt.

Right outside St-Sernin is the city's archeological museum, Musée St-Raymond (June–Sept 10am–6pm; Oct–May 10am–5pm; €3), housed in what remains of the block built for poor students of the medieval university and containing a large collection of objects ranging from prehistoric to Roman, as well as an excavated necropolis in the basement. On Sunday mornings the whole of place St-Sernin turns into a marvellous, teeming flea market.

The suburbs

To see something of the modern face of Toulouse, it's necessary to venture out into the suburbs, where you can visit a high-tech amusement park and a very specialized but surprisingly interesting aircraft assembly plant. The first of these is the Cité de l'Espace (early-Feb to late April daily 9am–5/6pm; late April–Aug daily 9am–5/6/7pm; Sept to early Jan Tues–Sun 9am–5/6pm; @www.cite-espace.com; €18.50, children under 5 €12), beside exit 17 of the A612 périphérique on the road to Castres, or take bus #19 from place Marengo (school hols only). The theme is space and space exploration, including satellite communications, space probes and, best of all, the opportunity to walk inside a mock-up of the Mir space station – fascinating, but absolutely chilling. Many of the exhibits are interactive and, though it's a bit on the pricey side, you could easily spend a half-day here, especially if you've got children in tow.

In 1970 Toulouse became home to Aérospatiale, which, along with the aerospace industries of Germany, Britain and Spain, now manufactures Airbus passenger jets. The planes are assembled, painted and tested in a vast hangar, L'Usine Clément Ader, before taking their maiden flights from next-door Blagnac airport. Members of the public are allowed inside the plant on a highly informative guided tour (July & Aug contact the tourist office, Sept–June call ☎05.61.18.06.01, @www.taxiway.fr; €14; normally in French), but you need to apply at least two weeks before with your passport details, or a few days before for citizens of EU-member countries. After a brief bus tour round the site and a short PR film, you climb high above the eerily quiet assembly bays where just one hundred people churn out five planes a week, ably assisted by scores of computerized robots. Look out for the latest Airbus, the A380, a two-storey superliner which dwarfs even the Jumbo.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

Regular daytime café-lounging can be pursued around the popular student-artistry hangout of place Arnaud-Bernard, while place du Capitole is the early evening meeting place. Place St-Georges remains popular, though its clientele is no longer convincingly bohemian, and place Wilson also has its enthusiasts.

There are several good areas to look for a place to eat. One of the most attractive and fashionable, with a wide choice, is the rue de la Colomchette, in the St-Aubin district just across boulevard Carnot. Another is place Arnaud-Bernard and the tiny adjacent place des Tiercerettes, just north of St-Sernin. Rue du Taur has a number of Vietnamese places and sandwich bars, and the narrow rue du May has a crêperie, pasta place and restaurant. For lunch, however, there is no surpassing the row of five or six small restaurants jammed in line on the mezzanine floor above the gorgeous food market in place Victor-Hugo, off boulevard de Strasbourg. They only function at lunchtime, are all closed on Monday, and cost as little as €12 for market-fresh menus. Both food and atmosphere are perfect.

Cafés

Le Café des Artistes place de la Daurade. Lively young café overlooking the Garonne. A perfect spot to watch the sun set on warm summer evenings, as floodlights pick out the brick buildings along the quais.

Bibent 5 place du Capitole. On the south side of the square, this is Toulouse's most distinguished café, with exuberant plasterwork, marble tables and cascading chandeliers.

Le Florida 12 place du Capitole. Relaxed café with a retro air. One of the most pleasant places to hang out on the central square.

Jour de Fête 43 rue de Taur. Trendy tearoom and brasserie with a small street-side patio. Friendly service and a young university-set crowd.

Le Shanti 21 rue Peyrolières. A funky "Indian" tea house where you can enjoy a narghile (Arab water-pipe).

Restaurants

Les Abbatoirs 97 allée Charles-de-Fitte ☎05.61.42.04.95. Family-run for two generations, this is one of the last of the traditional slaughterhouse-side meat emporia, with a reputation for top-of-the-line intestinal delicacies, such as calves' brains and pig's feet. Menus from €18. Closed Sun, Mon & Aug.

La Bascule 14 av Maurice-Hauriou ☎05.61.52.09.51. A Toulouse institution. Its chrome interior is pure Art Deco and the food well prepared and presented. The menu includes regional dishes like cassoulet, foie de canard and oysters from the Bay of Arcachon. Menus from €20. Closed Sun.

Benjamin 7 rue des Gestes ☎05.61.22.92.66. A long-standing institution for economical terroir food; service is pleasant and professional, although the atmosphere is somewhat anonymous. The wide selection of duck-based lunch and dinner menus are €11–23. Open daily.

Cantine du Curé 2 rue H.-de-Grosse. Cosy terroir restaurant, housed in a small but atmospheric old building, complete with wooden beams, by the entrance to the Dalbade church. One of the two tiny dining areas has a fireplace. Evening menu from €28. Closed Sun eve & Mon.

Au Chat Dingue 40bis rue Peyrolières. Small, hip bistro with cool blue decor across from the Petit Voisin bar. The selection is not overly imaginative, with a solid southern French base and occasional Italian incursions (usually in the form of pasta). Menus are €18–22, but considerably more à la carte. Closed Sun.

Chez Atilla in the market at place Victor-Hugo. The best of the market restaurants, this no-nonsense lunchtime establishment is also one of Toulouse's best options for seafood – their Spanish zarzuela stew is a fish-lover's dream. Menus from €12. Closed Mon & part Aug.

Faim des Haricots 3 rue de Puits Vert ☎05.61.22.49.25. Toulouse's newest vegetarian option, with generous all-you-can-eat salad and dessert buffets (both €9), bottomless bowls of soup and a plat du jour. Open Mon–Sat lunch & Thurs–Sat dinner; closed first half Aug.

Les Jardins de l'Opéra 1 place du Capitole ☎05.61.21.05.56. The Grand Hôtel's restaurant is Toulouse's best and most luxurious. If you fancy a splurge you will pay for it – a basic menu starts at €40 – but the food is outstanding. Closed Sun & Mon lunch & part Aug.

 Michel Sarran 21 bd Armand-Duportal ☎05.61.12.32.32. Justifiably renowned gastronomique restaurant, a fifteen-minute walk from the place du Capitole (follow rue des Lois and rue des Salenques to the end, and turn left). Imaginative dishes with a strong Mediterranean streak are served with style and warmth. Menus from €45 at lunch and €95 at dinner. Closed part Aug.

Au Pois Gourmand 3 rue Émile-Heybrard ☎05.61.31.95.95. Great location in a riverside nineteenth-century house with a beautiful patio. The quality French cuisine does not come cheap here (menus €22–64), but is of a predictably high standard, and the carte presents a pleasant departure from purely regional dishes. Bus #66 or #14 from métro St-Cyprien-République. Closed Sat lunch & Sun.

Le Sept Place St-Sernin 7 place St-Sernin ☎05.62.30.05.30. A small house behind the basilica conceals a lively and cheerful restaurant serving inventive and original cuisine with a constantly changing carte, followed by dazzling desserts. Menus €18–45. Closed Sat lunch & Sun.

Bars and clubs

L'Ambassade 22 bd de la Gare. Downbeat club where funk and soul rule. Live jazz on Sunday nights. Mon–Fri 7pm–2am, Sat & Sun 7pm–5am.

Bodega-Bodega 1 rue Gabriel-Péri. The old Telegraph newspaper building makes a superb venue for this bar-restaurant, with its hugely popular disco after 10pm. Daily 7pm–2am, till 4am on Sat.

Film, theatre and live music

Drinking and dancing aside, there's plenty to do at night in Toulouse. Several cinemas regularly show vo. films, including: ABC, 13 rue St-Bernard (☎05.61.29.81.00); Cinémathèque, 68 rue de Taur (☎05.62.30.30.10, 🌐www.lacinemathequedetoulouse.com); Cratere, 95 Grande-Rue St-Michel (☎05.61.52.50.53); and Utopia, 24 rue Montardy (☎05.61.23.66.20, 🌐www.cinemas-utopia.org). There's also an extremely vibrant theatre culture here. The tourist office can give you a full list of venues, which range from the official Théâtre de la Cité, 1 rue Pierre-Baudis (☎05.34.45.05.05, 🌐www.tnt-cite.com), to the workshop Nouveau Théâtre Jules-Julien, 6 av des Écoles-Jules-Julien (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎05.61.25.79.92). The larger venues, such as Odysseus, 4 av du Parc Blagnac (☎05.61.71.75.15; bus #66), feature both theatre and opera, while the Orchestre National du Capitole has its base in the Halle aux Grains on place Dupuy (☎05.61.99.78.00, 🌐www.onct.mairie-toulouse.fr). The city's biggest concert venue (9000 seats), specializing in rock, is Zénith, at 11 av Raymond Badiou (☎05.62.74.49.49; métro Arènes), while Cave-Poesie at 71 rue de Taur (☎05.61.23.62.00) is home to literary workshops and gatherings of a decidedly bohemian spirit.

Listings

Airport Aéroport Toulouse-Blagnac
☎05.61.42.44.00 and 05.24.61.80.00,

Le Chat d'Oc 7 rue de Metz. Hip bar near the Garonne, attracting a mixed crowd which gets younger as the night progresses. Nightly animations include DJs and occasional live acts. Mon–Fri 7am–2am, Sat 9am–5am.

Erich Coffie 9 rue Joseph-Vié ☎05.61.42.04.27. Just west of the river in the quartier St-Cyprien, this is one of the city's liveliest and most enjoyable music bars (food available), with an eclectic music policy. Live bands most evenings. Open Tues–Sat from 10pm.

The Frog & Rosbif 14 rue de l'Industrie. Stop by this friendly British pub, just off boulevard Lazare-Carnot, for a pint of Darktagan stout, or one of their other excellent home-brews. Quiz nights, football and fish and chips draw a surprisingly international crowd. Mon–Fri & Sun 5.30pm–2am, Sat 2pm–4am. Closed part Aug.

Hey Joe place Héraclès. Popular disco with theme nights on Thursdays. Men pay €8, women get in free; happy hour midnight–1am. Open daily 11pm–5am.

Le Petit Voisin 37 rue Peyrolières. A neighbourhood place, just like the name says, laid-back during the day, and with DJs at night. Open Mon–Fri 7.30am–2am, Sat 8am–4am. Closed mid-Aug.

L'Ubu 16 rue St-Rome ☎05.61.23.26.75. Long-standing pillar of the city's dance scene, which remains as popular as ever. Mon–Sat 11pm till dawn.

🌐www.toulouse.aeroport.fr; for shuttle bus information ☎05.34.60.64.00.

Bicycle rental The municipal bike co-op Movimento (Min–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat & Sun 10am–7pm; @movimento.coop), has branches at square Charles-de-Gaulle (opposite the tourist office) and 5 Port Saint-Saveur. Holiday Bikes, 9 bd des Minimes (☎05.34.25.79.62, @toulouse@holiday-bikes.com) also has scooters and motorcycles.

Books For English-language books, Books and Mermaides, 3 rue Mirepoix, specializes in secondhand tomes and will exchange, while The Bookshop, 17 rue Lakanal, stocks new titles. There are book markets on Thursday mornings in place Arnaud-Bernard, and all day Saturday in place St-Etienne.

Car rental A2L, 81 bd Déodat-de-Séverac ☎05.61.59.33.99; Avis, gare SNCF ☎05.61.63.71.71; Budget, 49 rue Bayard ☎05.61.63.18.18; Europcar, 15 bd Bonrepos ☎05.61.62.52.89; Hertz, gare SNCF ☎05.61.62.94.12.

Consulates Canada, 10 rue Jules de Resseguier

☎05.61.52.19.06, @consulat.canada.toulouse@orange.fr; USA, 25 allées Jean-Jaurès ☎05.34.41.36.50, @www.amb-usa.fr; the closest British Consulate is in Bordeaux at 353 bd Wilson (☎05.57.22.21.10).

Gay and lesbian For information contact the gay and lesbian students' group Jules et Julies (Comité des Étudiants, Université du Mirail, 5 allée Machado, 31058) or Gais et Lesbiennes en Marche (☎06.11.87.38.81, @gelem@altern.org).

Internet Cyber Media-Net, 19 rue de Lois (Mon–Fri 9am–11.30pm, Sat 10am–midnight), or @fterbug, 12 place St-Sernin (Mon–Fri noon–2am, Sat noon–5am, Sun 2.30–10.30pm).

Pharmacy The Pharmacie de Nuit, 70–76 allées Jean-Jaurès (entry on rue Arnaud-Vidal) is open 8pm–8am.

Police 23 bd de l'Embouchure ☎05.61.12.77.77.

Taxi Capitole ☎05.34.25.02.50; Taxi Radio Toulousain ☎05.61.42.38.38. For taxis to the airport call ☎05.61.30.02.54.

Albi and around

ALBI, 77km and an hour's train ride northeast of Toulouse, is a small industrial town with two unique sights: a museum containing the most comprehensive collection of Toulouse-Lautrec's work (Albi was his birthplace); and one of the most remarkable Gothic cathedrals you'll ever see. Its other claim to fame comes from its association with Catharism; though not itself an important centre, it gave its name – Albigensian – to both the heresy and the crusade to suppress it.

The town hosts three good festivals over the course of the year: jazz in May, theatre at the end of June and beginning of July, and classical music at the end of July and beginning of August. During July and August there are also free organ recitals in the cathedral (Wed 5pm & Sun 4pm).

The Town

The Cathédrale Ste-Cécile (daily: June–Sept 9am–6.30pm; Oct–May 9am–noon & 2.30–6.30pm; free; entry to choir €1, to treasury €3), begun about 1280, is visible from miles around, dwarfing the town like some vast bulk carrier run aground, the belfry its massive superstructure. The comparison sounds unflattering, and this is not a conventionally beautiful building; it's all about size and boldness of conception. The sheer plainness of the exterior is impressive on this scale, and it's not without interest: arcading, buttressing, the contrast of stone against brick – every differentiation of detail becomes significant. Entrance is through the south portal, by contrast the most extravagant piece of flamboyant-Gothic sixteenth-century frippery. The interior, a hall-like nave of colossal proportions, is dominated by a huge mural of the Last Judgement, believed to be the work of Flemish artists in the late fifteenth century. Above, the vault is covered in richly colourful paintings of sixteenth-century Italian workmanship, while a rood screen, delicate as lace, shuts off the choir: Adam makes a show of covering himself, Eve strikes a flaunting model's pose beside the central doorway, and the rest of the screen is adorned with countless statues.

ALBI

ACCOMMODATION
Georges V	E
Mercure Albi Bastides	A
La Régence	D
St-Clair	B
Le Vieil Alby	C

Palace de la Berbie

Musée de Toulouse-Lautrec

Cathédrale Ste-Cécile

Gabares Pier

Covered Market

St-Salvy

Hôtel du Ville

Gare Routière

EATING
Auberge du Pont Vieux	1
L'Esprit du Vin	2
La Tête de l'Art	3
Tournesol	4

△ Albi Cathedral

Next to the cathedral, a powerful red-brick castle, the thirteenth-century Palais de la Berbie, houses the Musée Toulouse-Lautrec (April–June & Sept daily 9am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 9am–6pm; Oct–March Wed–Mon 10am–noon & 2–5/6pm; €5). It contains paintings, drawings, lithographs and posters from the earliest work to the very last – an absolute must for anyone interested in belle-époque seediness and, given the predominant Impressionism of the time, the rather offbeat painting style of its subject. But perhaps the most impressive thing about this museum is the building itself, its parapets, gardens and walkways giving stunning views over the river and its bridges.

Opposite the east end of the cathedral, rue Mariés leads into the shopping streets of the old town, most of which has been impeccably renovated and restored. The little square and covered passages by the church of St-Salvy are worth a look as you go by. Eventually you come to the broad Lices Georges Pompidou, the main thoroughfare of modern Albi, which leads down to the river and the road to Cordes. Less touristy, this is the best place to look for somewhere to eat and drink.

Practicalities

From the gare SNCF on place Stalingrad it's a ten-minute walk into town along avenues Maréchal-Joffre and de-Gaulle; you'll see the gare routière on your right in place Jean-Jaurès as you reach the limits of the old town. The tourist office is in one corner of the Palais de la Berbie (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–5pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–5pm; ☎05.63.49.48.80, 🌐www.albi-tourisme.fr); ask for a copy of their English-language leaflet describing three walking tours round Albi.

There are two attractive hotels near the station on avenue Maréchal-Joffre: La Régence, at no. 27 (☎05.63.54.01.42, 🌐www.hotellaregence.com; 📍), and the slightly more expensive Georges V, at no. 29 (☎05.63.54.24.16, 🌐www.hotelgeorgev.com; 📍). On the opposite side of the town, on the north bank of the river, you'll find the luxurious Mercure Albi Bastides (☎05.63.47.66.66, 📧mercure.albi@orange.fr; 📍) at 41 rue Porta. In the heart of old Albi near the cathedral, the Hôtel St-Clair, 8 rue St-Clair (☎05.63.54.25.66, 📧michelandrieu@hotmail.com; 📍) is a good bargain, but 🏠 Le Vieil Alby, 25 rue Toulouse-Lautrec (☎05.63.54.15.69, ☎05.63.54.96.75; 📍) is a real find – cheap and comfortable, with a friendly owner and excellent home-cooked food available. Otherwise, there's a municipal campsite (☎05.63.60.37.06; closed mid-Oct to March) in the Parc de Caussels, about 2km east on the D999 Millau road.

Albi's cuisine is predominantly terroir – local cooking notable only for lou tistou, the local version of tapas. One of the best terroir restaurants is Auberge du Pont Vieux, at 98 rue Porta (☎05.63.77.61.73; closed Oct–May & Wed lunch & Thurs outside midsummer; from €16), on the north bank of the Tarn. La Tête de l'Art, 7 rue de la Piale (☎05.63.38.44.75; Tues & Wed off season & Aug; from €14), is set apart by unrestrained atmosphere and wacky decor, while L'Esprit du Vin, 11 quai Choiseul (☎05.63.54.60.44; closed Sun eve, all Mon & mid-Feb to May; from €42), has imaginative gastronomique cuisine. Tournesol, off place du Vigan (☎05.63.38.44.60; closed Sun & Mon, lunch only), is Albi's vegetarian option (from €15).

Cagnac-les-Mines and Cordes

The country between Albi and Carmaux, 16km to the north, has long been a coal-mining and industrial area, associated in particular with the political activity of Jean Jaurès, father figure of French socialism. Elected deputy for Albi in 1893, after defending the striking miners of Carmaux, he then championed the glassworkers in 1896 in a strike that led to the setting up of a pioneering workers' co-operative, La Verrerie Ouvrière, which still functions today. The tourist office in Albi can provide a list of interesting industrial sites in the area, including the pit at CAGNAC-LES-MINES, just north of Albi, where the Musée Mine de Cagnac (May, June, Sept & Oct daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm, July & Aug daily 10am–7pm, Nov–April Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €7), presents a vivid recreation of the world of the coal mine, and is undoubtedly the region's most original museum.

Of more conventional tourist interest is the town of CORDES, perched on a conical hill 24km northwest of Albi, from which it's a brief trip by train (as far as Cordes-Vindrac, 5km away, with bike rental from the station) or bus (daily except Sun). Founded in 1222 by Raymond VII, Count of Toulouse, Cordes was a Cathar stronghold, and the ground beneath the town is riddled with tunnels for storage and refuge in time of trouble. As one of the southwest's oldest and best-preserved bastides, complete with thirteenth- and fourteenth-century houses climbing steep cobbled lanes, Cordes is inevitably a major tourist attraction: medieval banners flutter in the streets and artisans practise their crafts. The Musée Charles-Portal (Easter–June & Sept–Oct Sun & hols 3–6pm; July & Aug daily 11am–1pm & 3–7pm; €2.30) depicts the history of the town. Also of interest is the Musée d'Art Moderne et Contemporain (Feb–March & Nov–Dec 2–5pm; April–May & Oct 11.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; June–Sept 11am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; €4), which features works by the figurative painter Yves Brayer, who lived in Cordes from 1940. The best hotel in town is the splendid 🏰 Grand Écuyer (☎05.63.53.79.50, 🌐www.thuries.fr; closed mid–Oct to Easter; Ⓜ–Ⓜ) – from its gargoyles-studded facade to the ponderous stone of the interior, this former palace of Count Raymond VII of Toulouse is an evocative combination of medieval atmosphere and modern amenities. Just down the street, the Vieux Cordes (closed Jan; ☎05.63.53.79.20, 🌐www.thuries.fr; Ⓜ) is housed in a medieval building. There's also a campsite (☎ & ☎05.63.56.11.10; closed Oct–March) 1km southeast down the Gaillac road.

Castres and around

In spite of its industrial activities, CASTRES, 40km south of Albi and 55km east of Toulouse, has kept a lot of its charm, in the streets on the right bank of the Agout and, in particular, the riverside quarter where the old tanners' and weavers' houses overhang the water. The centre is a bustling, businesslike sort of place, with a big morning market on Saturdays on place Jean-Jaurès. By the rather unremarkable old cathedral, the former bishop's palace holds the Hôtel de Ville and Castres' Musée Goya (July & Aug daily 9am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–June Tues–Sun 9am–noon & 2–5/6pm; €2.30), home to the biggest collection of Spanish paintings in France outside the Louvre. Goya is represented by some lighter political paintings and a large collection of engravings, and there are also works by other famous Iberian artists, like Murillo and Velázquez.

Castres' other specialist museum is the Musée Jean-Jaurès (same hours as Musée Goya; €1.50), dedicated to its famous native son. It's located in place Péliçon, and getting to it takes you through the streets of the old town, past the splendid seventeenth-century Hôtel Nayrac, on rue Frédéric-Thomas. The museum was opened in 1988 by President Mitterrand – appropriately enough, because Mitterrand's Socialist Party is the direct descendant of Jaurès' SFIO, founded in 1905, which split at the Congress of Tours in 1920, when the “Bolshevik” element left to form the French Communist Party. The slightly hagiographic museum nonetheless pays well-deserved tribute to one of France's boldest and best political writers, thinkers and activists of modern times. Jaurès supported Dreyfus, founded the newspaper L'Humanité, campaigned against the death penalty and colonialism, and was murdered for his courageous pacifist stance at the outbreak of World War I – oddly enough by a man called Villain.

There could be no better epitaph than his own last article in L'Humanité, in which he wrote: "The most important thing is that we should continue to act and to keep our minds perpetually fresh and alive ... That is the real safeguard, the guarantee of our future."

Practicalities

Arriving from Toulouse by train, you'll find the gare SNCF a kilometre southwest of the town centre on avenue Albert-1er. The gare routière is on place Soult, with bus services to Mazamet and Lacaune. The tourist office stands beside the Pont Vieux at 3 rue Milhau-Ducommun (July & Aug daily 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm; otherwise Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎ 05.63.62.63.62, 🌐 www.ville-castres.fr).

Castres has two marvellous seventeenth-century mansions converted into luxurious but affordable hotels; the marginally more deluxe 🏠 Renaissance is at 17 rue Victor-Hugo (☎ 05.63.59.30.42, 🌐 www.hotelrenaissance.fr; 📍), while L'Europe, is up the same street, at no. 5 (☎ 05.63.59.00.33, 🌐 www.hotelrenaissance.fr; 📍). Otherwise, the Rivière, 10 quai Tourcaudière (☎ 05.63.59.04.53, 📧 hotelriviere@orange.fr; 📍), has pleasant views over the Agout and helpful staff, and the very friendly and clean Le Périgord, 22 rue Zola (☎ & 📞 05.63.59.04.74; 📍), is a bargain. The municipal campsite (☎ 05.63.59.72.30; closed Oct–March) is in a riverside park 2km northeast of town on the road to Roquecourbe, which you can also reach by river-taxi (round trip €4).

For simple, inexpensive meals, you can't beat the upstairs dining room in the Brasserie des Jacobins, on place Jean-Jaurès. In the evening, the best bet is the Renaissance or L'Europe (see above) both of which offer all-you-can eat buffets for €10.

Le Sidobre and Lacrouzette

Just east of Castres rises the westernmost extremity of the Parc Naturel Régional du Haut Languedoc, cut by deep river valleys and covered with marvellous woods. This is Le Sidobre, an area renowned for its granite: huge boulders litter the woods, often carved by the millennia into zoomorphic or other shapes – Les Trois Fromages and L'Oie, for example – that give them commercial value in the eyes of the tourist industry. Exploration is best done on foot: the GR36 footpath passes this way.

LACROUZETTE, 15km from Castres, is the main town and capital of the granite industry. The demand for tombstones being impervious to recession, the town continues to prosper, though it's not the most beautiful place. If you're on your way up the Agout and Gijou valleys to Lacaze and Lacaune, head for the chambres d'hôtes of the luxurious fourteenth- to sixteenth-century castle in Burlats, 10km northeast of Castres (☎ 05.63.35.29.20, 📧 le.castel.de-burlats@orange.fr; 📍).

The Gers

West of Toulouse, the département of Gers lies at the heart of the historic region of Gascony. In the long struggle for supremacy between the English and the French in the Middle Ages it had the misfortune to form the frontier zone between the English base at Bordeaux and the French at Toulouse – hence the large number of fortified villages, or bastides, dominating the hilltops.

The attractive if unspectacular rolling agricultural land is dotted with ancient, honey-stoned farms. Settlement is sparse and – with the exception of Auch, the capital – major monuments are largely lacking, which keeps it well off the beaten tourist trails, although the gently varied topography and tranquillity make it an ideal region for biking and hiking.

The region's traditional sources of renown are its stout-hearted mercenary warriors – of whom Alexandre Dumas' d'Artagnan and Edmond Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac are the supreme literary exemplars – its rich cuisine and its Armagnac. The food and brandy still flourish: Gers is the biggest producer of foie gras in the country. Other traditional dishes are magret de canard, Henri IV's poulet au pot (the chicken that he promised to provide for every peasant's Sunday dinner), confit of duck and goose, thick garbure soup and daube de por. Then there's croustade, a tart of apple and Armagnac, the speciality of Gascon pâtisseries. The red wines of Madiran, Buzet and St-Mont and the whites of Pacherenc du Vic-Bilh wash it all down.

Auch

The sleepy provincial capital of the Gers, AUCH is most easily accessible by rail from Toulouse, 78km to the east. The old town, which is the only part worth exploring, stands on a bluff overlooking the tree-lined River Gers, with the cathedral towering dramatically over the town.

It is this building – the Cathédrale Ste-Marie – which makes a trip to Auch worthwhile. Although not finished until the latter part of the seventeenth century, it is built in broadly late Gothic style, with a classical facade. Of particular interest are the choir stalls (daily: April–June & Sept 8.30am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug 8.30am–6.30pm; Oct–March 8.30am–noon & 2–5pm; €1.50) and the stained glass; both were begun in the early 1500s, though the windows are of clearly Renaissance inspiration, while the choir remains Gothic.

Armagnac

Armagnac is a dry, golden brandy distilled in the district extending into the Landes and Lot and Garonne départements, divided into three distinct areas: Haut-Armagnac (around Auch), Ténarèze (Condom) and Bas-Armagnac (Éauze), in ascending order of output and quality. Growers of the grape like to compare brandy with whisky, equating malts with the individualistic, earthy Armagnac distilled by small producers, and blended whiskies with the more consistent, standardized output of the large-scale houses. Armagnac grapes are grown on sandy soils and, importantly, the wine is distilled only once, giving the spirit a lower alcohol content but more flavour. Aged in local black oak, Armagnac matures quickly, so young Armagnacs are relatively smoother than corresponding Cognacs.

Distilled originally for medicinal reasons, Armagnac has many claims made for its efficacy. Perhaps the most optimistic are those of the priest of Éauze de St-Mont, who held that the eau de vie cured gout and hepatitis. More reasonably, he also wrote that it “stimulates the spirit if taken in moderation, recalls the past, gives many joy above all else, conserves youth. If one retains it in the mouth, it unties the tongue and gives courage to the timid.”

Many of the producers welcome visitors and offer tastings, whether you go to one of the bigger chais of Condom or Éauze, or follow a faded sign at the bottom of a farm track. For more information, contact the Bureau National Interprofessionnel de l'Armagnac, place de la Liberté, 32800 Éauze (☎05.62.08.11.00, 🌐www.cognacnet.com/armagnac).

The stalls are thought to have been carved by the same craftsmen who executed those at St-Bertrand-de-Comminges, and show the same extraordinary virtuosity and detail. The eighteen windows, unusual in being a complete set, parallel the scenes and personages depicted in the stalls. They are the work of a Gascon painter, Arnaud de Moles, and are equally rich in detail.

Immediately south of the cathedral, in the tree-filled place Salinis, is the forty-metre-high Tour d'Armagnac, which served as an ecclesiastical court and prison in the fourteenth century. Descending from here to the river is a monumental stairway of 234 steps, with a statue of d'Artagnan gracing one of the terraces. From place de la République, in front of the cathedral's main west door, rue d'Espagne connects with rue de la Convention and what is left of the narrow medieval stairways known as the pousterles, which give access to the lower town. On the north side of place de la République, the tourist office inhabits a splendid half-timbered fifteenth-century house on the corner with rue Dessoles, a pedestrianized street boasting an array of fine buildings. Just down the steps to the east of rue Dessoles, on place Louis-Blanc, the former convent, now the Musée des Jacobins (May–Sept daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; rest of the year Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €3) houses one of the best collections of pre-Columbian and later South American art in France, left to the town by an adventurous son, M. Pujos, who had lived in Chile in the last years of the nineteenth century. Also of interest is its small collection of traditional Gascon furniture, religious artefacts and Gallo-Roman remains.

Practicalities

The tourist office (mid-July to mid-Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–6.30pm & Sun 10am–12.15pm & 3–6.15pm; mid-Aug to mid-July Mon–Sat 9.15am–noon & 2–6/6.30pm; also open Sun 10am–12.15pm May–Oct; ☎05.62.05.22.89, 🌐www.mairie-auch.fr) stands at the corner of place de la République and rue Dessoles. West of here, place de la Libération leads to the allées d'Étigny, with the gare routière off to the right.

In terms of accommodation, the only choice in the centre is the relatively luxurious Hôtel de France at 2 place de la Libération (☎05.62.61.71.71, 🌐www.hoteldefrance-auch.com; 📍), right by the mairie and only a few minutes' walk west of the cathedral. The only other alternative is the more economical Hôtel de Paris, 38 av de la Marne (☎05.62.63.26.22, ☎05.62.60.04.27; 📍; closed Nov). To get there from the gare SNCF, turn right on avenue de la Gare, follow it to the end, then turn left. Otherwise, the municipal campsite (☎05.62.05.00.22; mid-April to mid-Sept) is beside the river on the south side of town.

Avenue d'Alsace, in the lower town, is the best place to look for inexpensive places to eat. Alternatively, up by the cathedral, place de la République and place de la Libération boast a fair selection of cafés and brasseries; try Café Daroles by the fountain (menus from €16 or €10.50 at lunch). For something traditional, La Table d'Oste, off rue Dessoles at 7 rue Lamartine, offers good Gascon fare from €16 (closed Sat–Mon, depending on season). The well-regarded restaurant of the Hotel de France has menus from €11.50, although à la carte will set you back considerably more.

Around Auch

Outside Auch are a couple of quiet country towns, Lectoure and Condom, with no great sights, but which, along with the surrounding countryside, make for a lazy taste of French provincial life. They are all connected by bus from Auch, but away from the main roads – the N21 for Fleurance and Lectoure, and the D930 for Condom – you'll be stuck without your own transport.

Lectoure

Thirty-five kilometres north of Auch sits LECTOURE, the smallest and prettiest of the surrounding towns, built along a narrow escarpment looking out over the surrounding farmland. Capital of the colony of Novempopulania in Roman times and of the counts of Armagnac until their demise at the hands of Louis XI in 1473, it's now renowned for its melons. In the middle of the main street, the Cathédrale de St-Gervais-et-de-St-Protais raises its enormous tower above the town, while down the rue Fontelié, behind the tourist office, among scarcely altered medieval houses, you come to the unremarkable thirteenth-century vaulted Gothic Fontaine de Diane. The real reason for stopping here is the Musée Lapidaire (10am–noon & 2–6pm, closed Tues Oct–Feb; €3), in the basement of the mairie (the former wine cellar of the bishops' palace). Here you'll find some impressive rarities including a collection of Roman funerary stones, testament to the once popular local oracular cult of the bull, and various Merovingian-era decorated clothing clasps.

The tourist office is on place de la Cathédrale (Jan & Feb Tues & Thurs–Sat 3–6pm; mid-June to mid-Sept 10am–1pm & 3–7pm; rest of year Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–noon & 3–6pm, Sun 10am–noon; ☎05.62.68.76.98, 🌐www.lectoure.fr). Close by is the superb but unfortunately named Hôtel de Bastard in rue Lagrange (☎05.62.68.82.44, 🌐www.hotel-de-bastard.com; 🍷; closed late Dec to Jan; menus from €40), while the Auberge des Bouviers, at 8 rue Montebello near the central market hall, makes for an atmospheric place to eat (from €20). Heading on to Condom with your own transport, stop in at La Romieu, halfway between the two towns, where the badly weathered collegiate church, once a stop on the Santiago trail, contains a sacristy with worn but notable fourteenth-century murals. (May–Sept Mon–Sat 10am–6.30/7pm & Sun 2–6.30/7pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; €4.50).

Condom

Some 43km north of Auch and 21km west of Lectoure lies the town of CONDOM. Contrary to what one might assume, there's no connection between the place and the device. Unremarkable in every other field, Condom is nonetheless good for a quick visit or an overnight stop, and makes an ideal base for exploring several interesting sights in the neighborhood. With its uniformly honey-brown houses, the old town retains some atmosphere, but the sixteenth-century cathedral, completed just in time to be ravaged by the Wars of Religion, is badly damaged and nondescript. Armagnac drinkers will be interested in the Musée de l'Armagnac, 2 rue Jules-Ferry (Wed–Sun: April–Sept 10am–noon & 3–6pm; Oct–March 2–5pm; €2.20), and the Chais Ryst-Duperon, where the spirit is aged (July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–June Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; free). For other places to taste and buy Armagnac, ask the tourist office in place Bossuet (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10.30am–12.30pm; Sept–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎05.62.28.00.80, 🌐www.tourisme-teneraze.com).

The cheapest place to stay is the Relais de la Ténarèze, at 20 av d'Aquitaine (☎05.62.28.02.54, 🌐www.logisdefrancegers.com; 🍷). Two more appealing options, both with pools, are the Hôtel des Cordeliers, in rue de la Paix (☎05.62.28.03.68, 🌐www.logisdescordeliers.com; 🍷), and, if you want to treat yourself, the Hôtel des Trois Lys (☎05.62.28.33.33, 🌐www.lestroislys.com; 🍷); closed Feb; restaurant from €40). For a straightforward place to eat, try Pizzéria l'Origan, at 4 rue Cadéot in the town centre (closed Sun & Mon) or Café des Sports, on rue Charron by the cathedral, which also does pizzas and a reasonable menu at €18. A more upmarket alternative is Le Moulin du Petit Gascon (☎05.62.28.28.42; closed Dec–Feb, also Sun eve & Mon; menus from €18), out of town by the campsite, and attractively sited beside a canal lock.

Around Condom

The sights around Condom can be visited in a morning by car, but are equally accessible (time permitting) by bicycle or hiking trail. Just 5km west of Condom, the tiny twelfth-century village of LARRESSINGLE was once home to Condom's bishops, who lived in fortified splendour away from the hoi polloi. The compact village is girded by a moat and walls and contains the bishop's keep and stout church. It is best visited in low and shoulder seasons, preferably before 10am or after 7pm; it's now an obligatory stop on local tours and one busload is enough to dissipate its considerable charms.

Just off the main road to Condom sits the abbey of FLARAN (July & Aug 9.30am–7pm, Sept–June 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €4). This Cistercian monastery dates back to 1151, and although compact maintains the key elements of the monastic house: the weighty and austere Romanesque church, a cloister, a beautiful chapterhouse, luxurious pre-Revolution monks' apartments and a refectory. All the more remarkable is the tale of its reconstruction after a member of the family who owned Flaran set fire to the monastery as part of an insurance scam in 1972. Justice was served, the culprit was imprisoned and the local authorities impounded the site and converted it into public patrimony.

Travel details

Trains

Béziers to: Agde (18 daily; 45min); Arles (10–14 daily; 2hr 10min); Avignon (4–10 daily; 2hr); Bédarieux (4–8 daily; 40min); Carcassonne (22 daily; 15min); Clermont-Ferrand (3 daily; 6–7hr); Marseille (8 daily; 3hr 10min); Millau (4–6 daily; 2hr); Montpellier (26 daily; 45min); Narbonne (18 daily; 14min); Nîmes (20 daily; 1hr 15min); Paris (30 daily; 4hr 30min–12hr); Perpignan (18 daily; 40min–1hr); Sète (23 daily; 25min).

Carcassonne to: Arles (4–8 daily; 2hr 40min–3hr 30min); Béziers (22 daily; 45min); Bordeaux (18–22 daily; 3hr 20min–4hr 30min); Limoux (16 daily; 25min); Marseille (12–18 daily; 3hr 20min–5hr 30min); Montpellier (18 daily; 1hr 30min–4hr); Narbonne (22 daily; 35min); Nîmes (26 daily; 2hr 5min–3hr 10min); Quillan (6 daily; 1hr 15min); Toulouse (22 daily; 45min–1hr).

Montpellier to: Arles (10–14 daily; 1hr 20min); Avignon (22 daily; 1hr 15min–2hr); Béziers (18 daily; 40min); Carcassonne (22 daily; 1hr 15min); Lyon (18 daily; 1hr 40min–3hr 30min); Marseille (18–22 daily; 2hr 20min); Mende (18 daily; 3hr 40min–4hr 30min); Narbonne (26 daily; 45min–1hr 15min); Paris (16 daily; 3hr 15min–6hr); Perpignan (12 daily; 2hr 15min); Sète (22 daily; 15–20min); Toulouse (18 daily; 2hr 15min–2hr 55min).

Narbonne to: Arles (18–22 daily; 2hr); Avignon (4–8 daily; 2hr 10min); Béziers (18 daily; 14min); Bordeaux (18–22 daily; 3hr 45min–6hr); Carcassonne (22 daily; 35min); Cerbère (12–16 daily; 1hr–1hr 30min); Marseille (20 daily; 2hr 40min–3hr 30min); Montpellier (26 daily; 45min–1hr 15min); Nîmes (20 daily; 1hr 45min); Perpignan (24 daily; 36–45min); Sète (23 daily; 45min); Toulouse (18 daily; 1hr 30min).

Nîmes to: Arles (22 daily; 30–40min); Avignon (14–18 daily; 30min); Béziers (36 daily; 1hr 15min); Carcassonne (26 daily; 2hr 5min–3hr 10min); Clermont-Ferrand (12–16 daily; 5–6hr); La Bastide-St-Laurent (6–8 daily; 1hr 45min–2hr 40min); Marseille (20 daily; 40min–1hr 15min); Montpellier (26 daily; 30min); Narbonne (20 daily; 1hr 45min); Paris (23 daily; 3–9hr 30min); Perpignan (12 daily; 2hr 45min); Sète (22 daily; 48min);.

Toulouse to: Albi (17 daily; 1hr); Auch (18–20 daily; 1hr 15min–2hr 30min); Ax-les-Thermes

(6 daily; 1hr 55min); Bayonne (18–22 daily; 2hr 25min–3hr 45min); Bordeaux (18–22 daily; 2hr 30min); Castres (11 daily; 1hr 5min); Foix (13 daily; 47min–1hr 15min); La-Tour-de-Carol (6 daily; 2hr 30min) Lourdes (8–16 daily; 1hr 40min); Lyon (14–18 daily; 4–6hr); Marseille (22 daily; 3hr 30min–6hr); Mazamet (11 daily; 1hr 30min–1hr 55min); Pamiers (13 daily; 50min – 1hr 10min); Paris (13 daily; 5hr 20min–6hr 45min); Pau (6–10 daily; 2hr–2hr 30min); Tarascon-sur-Ariège (13 daily; 1hr 20min); Tarbes (6–13 daily; 1hr 45min).

Buses

Albi to: Cordes-sur-Ciel (2 daily; 35min).

Auch to: Agen (6–10 daily; 1hr 30min); Bordeaux (1 daily; 3hr 40min); Condom (1–2 daily; 40min); Lectoure (4–8 daily; 40min); Montauban (0–3 daily; 2hr); Tarbes (3–4 daily; 2hr); Toulouse (1–4 daily; 1hr 30min).

Bédarieux to: Olargues (1–2 daily; 40min); St-Pons-de-Thomières (3 daily; 1hr 20min).

Béziers to: Agde (2 daily & 4–6 in summer; 25min); Bédarieux (0–2 daily; 1hr); Castres (2 daily; 2hr 50min); La Salvetat (0–2 daily; 2hr 10min) Mazamet (2 daily; 2hr); Pézenas (4–11 daily; 32min); St-Pons-de-Thomières (4 daily; 1hr 20min).

Carcassonne to: Castelnaudary (3–5 daily; 45min); Quillan (2 daily; 1hr 20min).

Montpellier to: Aigues-Mortes (2–4 daily; 1hr); Bédarieux (3–4 daily; 1hr 35min); Clermont-l'Hérault (3–4 daily; 1hr); Ganges (4–5 daily; 1hr 15min); Gignac (for St-Guilhem: 6–8 daily; 40min); La Grande-Motte (8–12 daily; 1hr 5min; hourly in summer); Grau-du-Roi (4–8 daily; 1hr 10min); Le Vigan (3–5 daily; 1hr 40min); Lodève (4 daily; 1hr 15min); Millau (2–8 daily; 2hr 20min); Palavas (local service); Rodez (1–3 daily; 3hr 55min); St-Martin-de-Londres (2–4 daily; 50min); St-Pons-de-Thomières (1–3 daily; 2hr 55min); Viols-le-Fort (2–9 daily; 40min).

Narbonne to: Gruissan (3–6 daily; 45min); Narbonne-Plage (2–8 daily; 45min).

Nîmes to: Aigues-Mortes (17 daily; 55min); Ganges (2–3 daily; 1hr 30min); La Grande-Motte (2–9 daily; 1hr 30min); Le Grau-du-Roi (12–18 daily; 1hr 15min); Le Vigan (3–5 daily; 1hr 50min) Pont du Gard (8 daily; 45min); Sommières (8 daily; 45min); Uzès (8–12 daily; 30min–1hr).

Sète to: Montpellier (3–15 daily; 1hr 5min).

Toulouse to: Albi (12–16 weekly; 2hr 40min); Carcassonne (1 daily; 2hr 20min); Castres (8–12 weekly; 1hr 40min–2hr); St-Girons (3 daily; 2hr 30min).

The Massif Central

- * Cheese The pasture lands of France's central region produce some of its best cheeses: Roquefort, Laguiole and St. Nectaire. See p.903
- * Puy de Dôme Four hundred metres above Clermont-Ferrand, this long-extinct volcano offers staggering vistas of the Massif Central. See p.909
- * Conques Once an important way-station on the medieval Chemin de St-Jacques, modern pilgrims trek to this monastery town for the church's Romanesque facade and treasury of early medieval reliquaries. See p.929
- * Canoeing The river gorges of the Tarn, Lot and Ardèche provide near limitless opportunities for kayaking and canoeing. See pp.938 & 947
- * Cirque de Navacelles Cutting 150m down into the limestone causse, the River Vis doubles back on itself, leaving a tiny island that was capped centuries ago by a farming hamlet. See p.944
- * Gorges de l'Ardèche From the natural bridge at Pont d'Arc, the rushing Ardèche has carved out a dramatic descent through wooded and cave-riddled cliffs. See p.947

△ Pont d'Arc, Gorges de l'Ardèche

The Massif Central

One of the loveliest spots on earth . . . a country without roads, without guides, without any facilities for locomotion, where every discovery must be conquered at the price of danger or fatigue . . . a soil cut up with deep ravines, crossed in every way by lofty walls of lava, and furrowed by numerous torrents.

Thus one of George Sand's characters described the Haute-Loire, the central département of the Massif Central, and it's a description that could still be applied to some of the region. Thickly forested and sliced by numerous rivers and lakes, these once volcanic uplands are geologically the oldest part of France and culturally one of the most firmly rooted in the past. Industry and tourism have made few inroads here, and the people remain rural and somewhat taciturn, with an enduring sense of regional identity.

The Massif Central takes up a huge portion of the centre of France, but only a handful of towns have gained a foothold in its rugged terrain: Le Puy, spiked with theatrical pinnacles of lava, is the most compelling, with its steep streets and majestic cathedral; the spa town of Vichy has an antiquated elegance and charm; even heavily industrial Clermont-Ferrand, the capital, has a certain cachet in the black volcanic stone of its historic centre and its stunning physical setting beneath the Puy de Dôme, a 1464-metre-high volcanic plug. There is pleasure, too, in the unpretentious provinciality of Aurillac and in the untouched medieval architecture of smaller places like Murat, Besse, Salers, Orcival, Sauveterre-de-Rouergue, La Couvertourade and in the hugely influential abbey of Conques. But, above all, this is a country where the sights are landscapes rather than towns, churches and museums.

The heart of the region is the Auvergne, a wild and unexpected scene of extinct volcanoes (*puy*s), stretching from the grassy domes and craters of the Monts-Dômes to the eroded skylines of the Monts-Dore, and deeply ravined Cantal mountains to the rash of darkly wooded pimples surrounding Le Puy. It's one of the poorest regions in France and has long remained outside the main national lines of communication: much of it is above 1000m in height and snowbound in winter. However, the Clermont–Montpellier autoroute is now near completion, providing a convenient means of travel from the capital to the gorges of the Tarn and Ardèche. There's little arable land in the region, just thousands of acres of upland pasture, traditionally grazed by sheep brought up from the southern lowlands for the summer. Nowadays, cows far outnumber the sheep, some raised for beef and some still for the production of Auvergne's four great cheeses (see box, p.903). The population has emigrated for generations, especially to Paris, where the café and restaurant trade has long been in

MASSIF CENTRAL

12

THE MASSIF CENTRAL

902

The food of the Massif Central

Don't expect anything very refined from the cuisine of the Auvergne and Massif Central: it's solid peasant fare as befits a poor and rugged region. The best-known dish is potée auvergnate, basically a kind of cabbage soup. It's easy to make and very nourishing. The ingredients – potatoes, pork or bacon, cabbage, beans, turnips – though added at different intervals, are all boiled up together. Another popular cabbage dish is chou farci, cabbage stuffed with pork and beef and cooked with bacon.

Two potato dishes are very common – la truffade and l'aligot. For truffade, the potatoes are sliced and fried in lard, then fresh Cantal cheese is added; for an aligot, the potatoes are puréed and mixed with cheese. Less palatable for the squeamish, tripoux, usually a stuffing of either sheep's feet or calf's innards, cooked in a casing of stomach lining. Fricandeau, a kind of pork pâté, is also wrapped in sheep's stomach.

By way of dessert, clafoutis is a popular fruit tart in which the fruit is baked with a batter of flour and egg simply poured over it. The classic fruit ingredient is black cherries, though pears, blackcurrants or apples can also be used.

The Auvergne and the Ardèche in the east produce some wines, though these are not of any great renown. Cheese, however, is a different story. In addition to the four great cow's milk cheeses – St-Nectaire (see p.917), Laguiole, Cantal, Fourme d'Ambert and Bleu d'Auvergne – this region also produces the prince of all cheeses, Roquefort, made from sheep's milk at the edge of the Causse du Larzac (see p.937).

the hands of Auvergnats. The same flight of population has affected the equally infertile but beautiful and more Mediterranean southern part of the region: the hills and valleys of the Cévennes, where Robert Louis Stevenson and his donkey made one of the more famous literary hikes in 1878.

Many of France's greatest rivers rise in the Massif Central: the Dordogne in the Monts-Dore, the Loire on the slopes of the Gerbier de Jonc in the east, and in the Cévennes the Lot and the Tarn. It is these last two rivers which create the distinctive character of the southern parts of the Massif Central, dividing and defining the special landscapes of the causses, or limestone plateaux, with their stupendous gorges. This is territory tailor-made for walkers and lovers of the outdoors, and everywhere you go tourist offices will supply ideas and routes for walks and bike rides.

The Parc des Volcans d'Auvergne

The Parc Naturel Régional des Volcans d'Auvergne encompasses the whole of the western edge of the Massif Central, from Vichy in the north to Aurillac in the south. It consists of three groups of extinct volcanoes – the Monts-Dômes, the Monts-Dore and the Monts du Cantal – linked by the high plateaux of Artense and the Cézallier. It's big, wide-open country, sparsely populated and with largely treeless pasture grazed by the cows whose milk produces Cantal and St-Nectaire cheese.

The park organization, whose headquarters are at the Maison du Parc, Château de Montlosier, 20km southwest of Clermont-Ferrand just off the Mont-Dore road (May–Oct Mon–Fri 8.30am–12.30pm & 1–5pm; ☎04.73.65.64.00, @www.parc-volcans-auvergne.com), oversees various subsidiary maisons du parc, each a kind of museum devoted to different themes or activities: fauna and flora, shepherd life, peat bogs and so on.

The best way to understand the park, its landscapes and activities is to walk or bike around it. Four GR footpaths cross or make circuits within the park. The GR40 runs from north to south. The GR441 makes a circuit round the Monts-Dômes, called the Tour de la Chaîne des Puys. The GR400 encircles the Cantal mountains, and the GR30 the lakes of the Artense plateau and Cézallier, under the title of the Tour des Lacs d'Auvergne. There are also lots of shorter walks; ask at local tourist offices for more information, and for details of mountain bike rental.

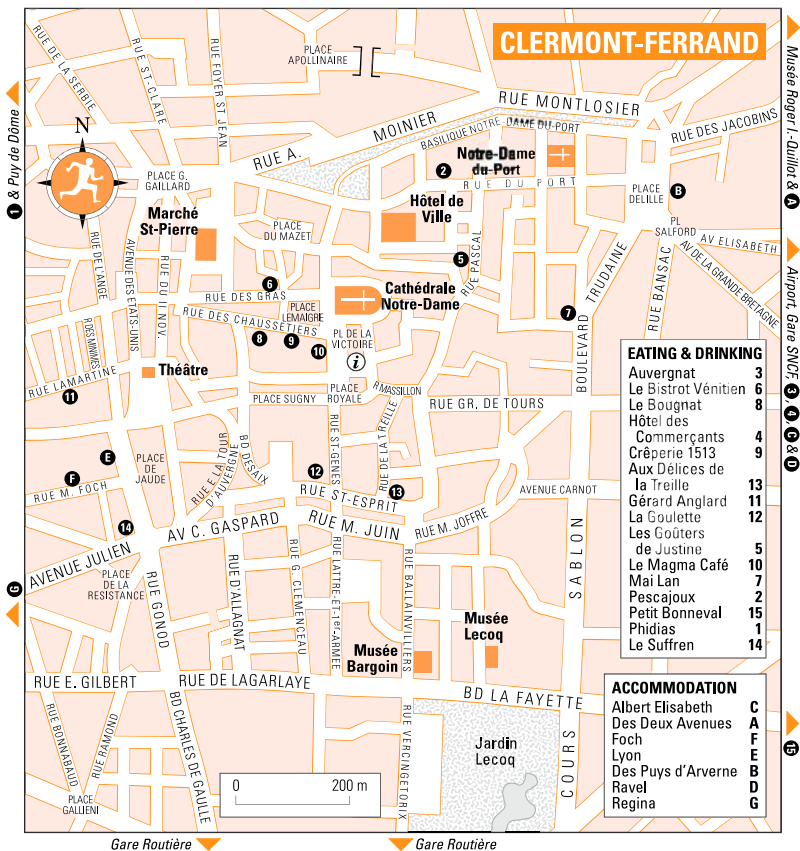

If only because of the practicalities of transport, you will likely pass through Clermont-Ferrand, the capital of the département. Given its rather dramatic historical associations – it was the site of Pope Urban II's speech which launched the Crusades in 1095 – the city may disappoint, but nonetheless the town is worth an afternoon of rambling. Otherwise, the towns in the area are few and of secondary interest, although Orcival, Murat and Salers are unexpectedly attractive; St-Nectaire contains an exceptionally beautiful small church in the distinct Auvergne version of Romanesque; and St-Flour and Aurillac have an agreeable provincial insularity.

Clermont-Ferrand and around

CLERMONT-FERRAND lies at the northern tip of the Massif Central. Although its situation is magnificent, almost encircled by the wooded and grassy volcanoes of the Monts-Dômes, it has for over a century been a typical smokestack industrial centre, the home base of Michelin tyres, which makes it a rather incongruous capital for the rustic, even backward province of the Auvergne.

Its roots, both as a spa and a communications and trading centre, go back to Roman times. It was just outside the town, on the plateau of Gergovia to the south, that the Gauls under the leadership of Vercingétorix won their only victory against Julius Caesar's invading Romans. In the Middle Ages, the rival towns of Clermont and Montferrand were ruled respectively by a bishop and the count of Auvergne. Louis XIII united them in 1630, but it was not until the rapid industrial expansion of the late nineteenth century that the two really became indistinguishable.

Michelin came into being thanks to the inventions of Charles Mackintosh, the Scotsman of raincoat fame. His niece married Edouard Daubrée, a Clermont sugar manufacturer, and brought with her some ideas about making rubber goods that she had learnt from her uncle. In 1889, the company became Michelin and Co, just in time to catch the development of the automobile and the World War I aircraft industry. The family ruled the town and employed 30,000 of its citizens until the early 1980s, when the industry went into decline. In the years since, the workforce has been halved, causing rippling unemployment throughout Clermont's economy.

As in many other traditional industrial towns hit by recession and changing global patterns of trade, Clermont has had to struggle to reorientate itself, turning to service industries and the creation of a university of 34,000 students. Nonetheless, many people have moved elsewhere in search of work, reducing the population by nearly a tenth. The town has changed physically, too, as many of the old factories have been demolished. Despite all of this, the old centre has a surprisingly hip and youthful feel, with pavement bars packed out in the evenings as the boutiques and galleries which have sprung up wind down for the day.

Arrival and information

The gare SNCF is on avenue de l'Union Soviétique, from where it is a ten-minute bus journey to place de Jaude, at the western edge of the cathedral hill. The gare routière (☎04.73.35.05.62) is on boulevard François-Mitterrand, with a city transport information kiosk called Boutique T2C at 24 bd Charles-de-Gaulle (☎04.73.28.70.00). The city airport (☎04.73.62.71.00, 🌐www.clermont-fd.cci.fr) is at Aulnat, 7km east, with daily flights to and from Paris and other internal destinations, as well as to London during the summer. A navette (€4 one way) connects the airport with both the train and bus station.

The main tourist office is opposite the cathedral in place de la Victoire (May–Sept Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat & Sun 10am–7pm; Oct–April Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 10am–1pm & 2–6pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎04.73.98.65.00, 🌐www.ot-clermont-ferrand.fr), and there’s another conveniently placed annexe immediately to the left outside the train station exit (June–Sept Mon–Sat 9.15–11.30am & 12.15–5pm; Oct–May closed Sat; ☎04.73.91.87.89). At the main office you can pick up a Passé Découverte (€10) which will admit you once to each of the town’s museums. The departmental office is on place de la Bourse (☎04.73.42.22.50, 🌐planetepuydedome.com), and the regional office at 44 av des États-Unis (☎04.73.29.49.49, 🌐www.crt-auvergne.fr). Specific hiking or mountain-bike information is available from Chamina, 5 rue Pierre-le-Vénéral (☎04.73.92.81.44). Bikes are available from the SNCF, at the main station and at a central office at 20 place Remoux (☎04.73.14.12.36). For Internet access your best bet is CyberFrag at 3 rue de la Boucherie near the cathedral (Mon–Sun 11am–11pm; ☎04.73.91.51.64) or closer to the train station there is CyberStrike at 31 av de Grande-Bretagne (Mon–Sat 10am–2am, Sun noon–2am, ☎04.73.92.96.78)

12

Accommodation

Most of Clermont’s hotels are concentrated just off the lively place de Jaude, close to the town’s main shops, and around the rather characterless station area. There’s not a tremendous choice, but they are generally good value. Campers will find municipal campsites at Royat (L’Oclède), 4km to the southwest (☎04.73.35.97.05; closed Nov–March; bus #41); Ceyrat (Le Chanset), 5km to the south (☎04.73.61.30.73; bus #4C & #41, stop “Preguille”); and Cournon (Le Pré des Laveuses), 10km to the east, on the River Allier (☎04.73.84.81.30; bus #3, stop “Plaine de jeux”).

Albert Elisabeth 37 av Albert-Elisabeth
☎04.73.92.47.41, 🌐www.hotel-albertelisabeth.com. Well-run family hotel, with pastel-decorated rooms; handy for the train station. ③

Des Deux Avenues 4 av de la République
☎04.73.92.37.52, 📧hotel.2avenues@wanadoo.fr. Located a few minutes walk from place Delille. This funky place is the best option in town and offers clean airy rooms at budget rates; about five minutes’ walk from the station. ①

Foch 22 rue Maréchal-Foch ☎04.73.93.48.40,
🌐www.hotel-foch-clermont.com. Tucked away down a side street off place de Jaude, this is a good-value budget hotel, with bright, summery rooms. ②

Lyon 16 place de Jaude ☎04.73.17.60.80,
📧hotel.de.lyon@wanadoo.fr. Tastefully furnished, though the lively bar and brasserie below can get a little noisy at night (plats around €8.50). ③

Des Puys d’Arverne 16 place Delille
☎04.73.91.92.06, 🌐www.hoteldespuys.com. A modern, top-of-the-range hotel, offering spacious rooms, some with balconies. Its first-rate gourmet restaurant has splendid views of the town and Le Puy de Dôme (menus from €14.50–44). ⑤

Ravel 8 rue de Maringues
☎04.73.91.51.33, 📧hotelravel63@wanadoo.fr. Opposite the old Marché St-Joseph, this friendly hotel offers attractive rooms, with sunny Mediterranean decor and good value for money. The proximity to the train and bus stations makes it specially convenient for travellers passing through. Closed Jan. ②

Regina 14 rue Bonnabaud ☎04.73.93.44.76,
🌐www.hotel-foch-clermont.com. Looks a little grubby from the outside, but inside an elegant spiral staircase leads up to fresh, clean rooms. ③

The City

The most dramatic and flattering approach to Clermont is from the Aubusson road or along the scenic rail line from Le Mont-Dore, both of which cross the chain of the Monts-Dômes just north of the Puy de Dôme. This way you descend through the leafy western suburbs with marvellous views over the town, dominated by the black towers of the cathedral sitting atop the volcanic stump that forms the hub of the old town.

The Cathédrale Notre-Dame and around

Clermont's reputation as a ville noire becomes immediately understandable when you enter the appealing medieval quarter, clustered in a characteristic muddle around the cathedral. The colour is due not to industrial pollution but to the black volcanic rock used in the construction of many of its buildings. The Cathédrale Notre-Dame stands at the centre and highest point of the old town; Freda White evocatively described its sombre grey-black-stone lava from the quarries at nearby Volvic as being "like the darkest shade of a pigeon's wing". Begun in the mid-thirteenth century, it was not finished until the nineteenth, under the direction of Viollet-le-Duc, who was the architect of the west front and those typically Gothic crocketed spires, whose too methodically cut stonework at close range betrays the work of the machine rather than the mason's hand. The interior is swaddled in gloom, illuminated all the more startlingly by the brilliant colours of the rose windows in the transept and the stained-glass windows in the choir, most dating back to the fourteenth century. Remnants of medieval frescoes survive, too: a particularly beautiful Virgin and Child adorns the right wall of the Chapelle Ste-Madeleine and an animated battle scene between the crusaders and Saracens unfolds on the central wall of the Chapelle St-Georges.

If the day is fine, it's worth climbing the Tour de la Bayette (Mon–Fri 10am–5.15pm, Sun 3–6pm; €1.50) by the north transept door: you look back over the rue des Gras to the Puy de Dôme looming dramatically over the city, with white morning mist retreating down its sides like seaweed from a rock.

Northeast of the cathedral, down the elegant old rue du Port, stands Clermont's other great church, the Romanesque Basilique Notre-Dame-du-Port – a century older than the cathedral and in almost total contrast both in style and substance, built from softer stone in pre-lava-working days and consequently corroding badly from exposure to Clermont's polluted air. For all that, it's a beautiful building in pure Auvergnat Romanesque style, featuring a Madonna and Child over the south door in the strangely stylized local form, both figures stiff and upright, the Child more like a dwarf than an infant. Inside, it exudes the broody mysteriousness so often generated by the Romanesque style. Put a coin in the slot and you can light up the intricately carved ensemble of leaves, knights and biblical figures on the church's pillars and capitals. It was here in all probability that Pope Urban II preached the First Crusade in 1095 to a vast crowd who received his speech with the Occitan cry of Dios lo volt (God wills it) – a phrase adopted by the crusaders in justification of all subsequent massacres.

For general animation, shopping, drinking and eating, the streets between the cathedral and place de Jaude are best, with the main morning market taking place in the conspicuously modern place St-Pierre just off rue des Gras. Place de Jaude remains another monument to planners' deviation in spite of the shops, the cafés well placed to take in the morning sun and an attempt to make it more attractive with trees and a fountain. Smack in the middle of the traffic, the Romantic equestrian statue of Vercingétorix stands vigil, his sword raised dramatically in salute of the Puy de Dôme.

Outside the city centre

Away from these central streets, there are a few concrete sights to tempt the pedestrian. Among these are rue Ballainvilliers, whose eighteenth-century facades recall the sombre elegance of Edinburgh and lead to the Musée Bargoin (Tues–Sat 10am–noon 1–5pm, Sun 2–7pm; €4), with displays of archeological finds. These include an array of fascinating domestic bits: Roman shoes, baskets, bits of dried fruit, glass and pottery, as well as a remarkable burial find from nearby Martres-de-Veyre dating back to the second century AD. There is also a diverse collection of tapestries and textiles. Though not of great interest, the Musée Lecoq, directly behind the Musée Bargoin (May–Sept Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; Oct–April 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €4), is devoted mainly to natural history – and named after the gentleman who also founded the public garden full of beautiful trees and formal beds just across the street.

Clermont-Ferrand's most impressive museum, the Musée d'Art Roger-Quillot (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; €4), is situated on place Louis-Deteix in Montferrand, some 2.5km northeast of the centre (bus #1, #9 or #16 from place de Jaude). Housed in a daringly renovated eighteenth-century Ursuline convent, this museum holds a broad collection of over two thousand works of art from the medieval to the contemporary. Notable pieces include a collection of carved capitals and a stunning enamelled reliquary of Thomas Becket. Montferrand is today little more than a suburb of larger Clermont, standing out on a limb to the north – if you journey out for the museum you should take time to stroll around. Built on the bastide plan, its principal streets, rue de la Rodade and rue Jules-Guesde (the latter named after the founder of the French Communist Party, as Montferrand was home to many of the Michelin factory workers), are still lined with the fine town houses of its medieval merchants and magistrates.

Eating and drinking

For a daytime drink, Le Suffren, on the corner of place de Jaude, is one of the most popular places to hang out. More unusual is Les Goûters de Justine, a salon de thé, tucked away in old rue Pascal and furnished with antique chairs, old sofas and oriental carpets. At night one of the most fashionable places is Le Magma Café on place de la Victoire, while young rockers head for the suburban village of Orcines, beneath the Puy de Dôme, to long-standing Phidias, aka Boudu's, on route de la Baraque (☎04.73.62.18.34; until 5am; closed Sun & Mon).

Restaurants

Auvergnat 27 av de l'Union Soviétique. Possibly the best option in the station area: the restaurant is oak-beamed and rustic-looking. The menu includes standard Auvergne dishes such as truffade.

Le Bistrot Vénitie 36 rue des Gras. Serves good pizza and pasta from €15. Closed Sun.

Le Bougnat 29 rue des Chaussetiers. Offers local regional cuisine at affordable prices; from €12. Closed Sun & Mon eve, Tues lunch.

Hôtel des Commerçants opposite the station. Inexpensive and very friendly, with a terrace at the back (menus from €9.80).

Crêperie 1513 3 rue des Chaussetiers. Sited opposite the cathedral, this is the best of the cheaper places and very popular. The restaurant occupies a superb Renaissance mansion built in 1513. Lunchtime menu €9.

 Aux Délices de la Treille 33 rue de la Treille ☎04.73.91.26.90. A well-known and quirky place where customers pack into the tiny and flamboyant dining room or eat in the narrow street: €12 at lunchtime, otherwise €16 plus.

Gérard Anglard 17 rue Lamartine, off place de Jaude ☎04.73.93.52.25. Provides a specialized gastronomic experience, with refined and inventive cooking. The lunchtime menu starts at €18. Closed Sun & first two weeks Aug.

La Goulette 12 rue St-Esprit. Offers excellent and cheap North African briques for as little as €3.50.

Mai Lan 41 bd Trudaine. Serves first-class Vietnamese cooking for around €20. Closed Sun & Mon lunch.

Pescajoux 13 rue du Port. A good place for a quick snack with a lunch crêpe-menu starting from €9.

Petit Bonneval 5km southeast off the N9 Issoire road at Pérignat-lès-Sarliève ☎04.73.79.11.11.

A delicious stop for dinner on a summer evening; menus from €19. Closed Sun eve.

The Puy de Dôme

Visiting Clermont without going to the top of the Puy de Dôme (1464m) would be like visiting Athens without seeing the Acropolis. And if you choose your moment – early in the morning or late in the evening – you can easily avoid the worst of the crowds.

Clearly signposted from place de Jaude, it's about 15km from the city centre by the D941. The last 6.5km is a private road and costs €4.50 (March, April, Oct & Nov 8am–sunset; May–Sept 7am–sunset); there is also a shuttle bus (10am–6pm: May–June & Sept Sat & Sun; July–Aug daily; €4) serving the route when the road is closed to vehicles. If you're driving, make sure to pump your brakes on the descent; otherwise you may find yourself waiting for a long time before driving off, while your brakes cool down. Alternatively, you can leave the car at the Col de Ceysnat and climb the Puy on foot in about an hour. The route is reserved for cyclists in summer (May–Sept Wed & Sun 7–9am).

The result of a volcanic explosion about 10,000 years ago, the Puy is an abrupt 400m from base to summit. Although the weather station buildings and enormous television mast are pretty ugly close up, the staggering views and sense of airy elevation more than compensate. Even if Mont Blanc itself is not always visible way to the east – it can be if conditions are favourable – you can see huge distances, all down the Massif Central to the Cantal mountains. Above all, you get a bird's-eye view of the other volcanic summits to the north and south, largely forested since the nineteenth century and including the perfect 100-metre-deep grassy crater of the Puy de Pariou.

Immediately below the summit are the scant remains of a substantial Roman temple dedicated to Mercury (free entry), some of the finds from which are displayed in the Musée Bargoin in Clermont-Ferrand. Beside it is a memorial commemorating the exploits of Eugène Renaux, who landed a plane here in 1911 in response to the offer of a 100,000-franc prize by the Michelin brothers. Today the aviators are hang-gliders and paragliding enthusiasts, drifting like gaudy birds around the stern of a ship.

Riom and around

Just 15km north of Clermont-Ferrand, RIOM is sedate and provincial. One-time capital of the entire Auvergne, its Renaissance architecture, fashioned out of the local black volcanic stone, now secures the town's status as a highlight of the northern Massif. In 1942, just before the first trains of Jewish deportees were shipped to Nazi Germany, Léon Blum, Jewish prime minister and architect of the Socialist Popular Front government, was put on trial in Riom by Marshal Pétain, France's collaborationist ruler, in an attempt to blame the country's defeat in 1940 on the Left. Defending himself, Blum turned the trial into an indictment of collaboration and Nazism. Under pressure from Hitler, Pétain called it off, but nonetheless deported Blum to Germany, an experience which he survived, to give evidence against Pétain himself after the war.

You may only want to spend a morning here, but Riom does provide a worthwhile stopover for lunch if you're on the way up to Vichy. It's an aloof, old-world kind of place, still Auvergne's judicial capital, with a nineteenth-century Palais de Justice that stands on the site of a grand palace built when the dukes of Berry controlled this region in the fourteenth century. Only the Gothic Ste-Chapelle survives of the original palace, with fine stained-glass windows taking up almost the entirety of three of the walls (guided visits only, every 30min: May Wed 3–5pm; June & Sept Mon–Fri 3–5pm; July & Aug Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 2.30–5.30pm; €0.50).

The best way to admire the town's impressive ensemble of basalt-stone houses, with their red-tiled roofs, is to climb up to the viewing platform of the sixteenth-century clock tower, at 5 rue de l'Horloge, off the main street, rue du Commerce (May, June & Sept Mon & Sun 2–6pm, Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €0.50). There's an interesting museum on the region's folk traditions at 10bis rue Delille, the Musée Régional d'Auvergne (daily except Mon: April–June & Sept 10am–noon & 2–5.30pm; July & Aug 10am–6pm; €4.30, or €6 joint ticket with the Musée Mandet; free on Wed), with the Musée Mandet's displays of Roman finds and bland paintings not far away at 4 rue de l'Hôtel-de-Ville (same hours; €4, free on Wed). At 44 rue du Commerce, the church of Notre-Dame-du-Marthuret holds Riom's most valued treasures, two statues of the Virgin and Child – one a Black Madonna, the other, the so-called Vierge à l'Oiseau, a touchingly realistic piece of carving that portrays the young Christ with a bird fluttering in his hands. A copy stands in the entrance hall of the church (its original site), where you can see it with the advantage of daylight.

Practicalities

Riom's tourist office is at 27 place de la Federation (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–1pm & 2–6.30pm, Sun 10am–1pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎04.73.38.59.45, 🌐www.tourisme-riomlimagne.fr). The town's basic cheapie accommodation is Hôtel le Square, 26 bd Desaix (☎04.73.38.46.51, ☎04.73.38.50.16; 🍷), which runs a decent restaurant (crêpes and omelettes for around €12). Le Magnolia at 11 av du Commandant Madeline is one of Riom's finest restaurants for local cuisine (open Tues–Fri, Sat eve, Sun lunch; menus €24–40). Alternatively follow the locals to Ane Gris at 13 rue Gomot (Tues eve–Sat), which serves truffade (€14) and aligot (€12). For Internet access there is Internet Cyberiom at 42 rue du Commerce (Mon–Fri 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sat 10am–2pm).

Around Riom

From Riom SNCF buses run to MOZAC, on the edge of town, with a twelfth-century abbey church whose Romanesque sculpture is as beautiful as you'd expect, and continue to the bourgeois spa resort of CHÂTEL-GUYON in around twenty minutes. With thirty different hot springs, great views over the surrounding countryside and *puy*s, and a couple of well-equipped camp-sites, this is as good a place as any if you want to rest up for a night. For an easy stroll from here, you can wander out along the leafy valleys of the Sardon and Prades.

The little town of VOLVIC is also close by, renowned for its spring water and the quarries that furnished the black rock for Clermont's cathedral, as well as so many other Auvergnat buildings. Its Maison de la Pierre, on rue Viillard (closed for refurbishment at time of writing), features a surprisingly engaging display about the use of lava rock, including a historical and geological explanation, as well as a tour of the disused quarries – a warm jacket is advised.

Vichy

VICHY is famous for two things: its World War II puppet government under Marshal Pétain, and its curative sulphurous springs, which attract thousands of ageing and ailing visitors, or aristes, every year. There's no mention of Pétain's government in town, but the fact that Vichy is one of France's foremost spa resorts colours everything you see here. The town is almost entirely devoted to catering for its largely elderly, genteel and rich population, which swells several-fold in summer; they come here to drink the water, wallow in it, inhale its steam or be sprayed with it. An attempt is now being made to rejuvenate the image of Vichy by appealing to a younger, more fitness-conscious generation.

The Town

All of this makes Vichy seem unappealing, and yet it has a certain element of charm. There's a real fin-de-siècle atmosphere about the place and a curious fascination in its continuing function. The town revolves around the Parc des Sources, a stately tree-shaded park that takes up most of the centre. At its north end stands the Hall des Sources, an enormous iron-framed greenhouse in which people sit and chat or read newspapers, while from a large tiled stand in

Volvic to Laschamp walk

For a good day's walk and a thorough exploration of the *puy*s, take the train from Clermont to Volvic-Gare. Follow the D90 road beside the train line for about 1km until you join up with the GR441 path, where the road turns right under the track. Keep along your side of the train track for a few minutes longer and follow the GR441 round to the left, almost doubling back southwest along the line of the wooded Puy Nugères, Jumes and Coquille to the northern foot of the Puy de Chopine (2–3hr). Here you join up with the GR4 and follow the combined GR4–441 across the Orcines–Pontgibaud road to the summit of the Puy de Dôme (about 2hr 30min from the road). From the Puy, descend to the Col de Ceyssat in half an hour (good chance of a lift back to Clermont), or continue to Laschamp (50min), where there is a gîte d'étape (7–8hr, though a fit walker could do it in 6hr).

You should not set off without either the relevant section of the GR4 Topo-guide or, preferably, the IGN 1:25,000 map, the *Chaîne des Puy*s, which also marks the GR441 from Volvic-Gare. If you don't feel up to a walk, there's a really beautiful train ride from Clermont to the town of Le Mont-Dore, which follows the chain of the *puy*s.

the middle the various waters emerge from their spouts, beside the just-visible remains of the Roman establishment. The curistes line up to get their prescribed cupful, and for a small fee you can join them. The Célestins is the only one of the springs that is bottled and widely drunk: if you're into a taste experience, try the remaining five. They are progressively more sulphurous and foul, with the Source de l'Hôpital, which has its own circular building at the far end of the park, an almost unbelievably nasty creation. Each of the springs is prescribed for a different ailment and the tradition is that, apart from the Célestins, they must all be drunk on the spot to be efficacious – a dubious but effective way of drawing in the crowds.

Although all the springs technically belong to the nation and treatment is partially funded by the state, they are in fact run privately for profit by the Compagnie Fermière, first created in the mid-nineteenth century to prepare for a visit by the Emperor Napoléon III, whose interest in the waters brought Vichy to public notice. The Compagnie not only has a monopoly on selling the waters but also runs the casino and numerous hotels – even the chairs conveniently dotted around the Parc des Sources are owned by it.

Directly behind the Hall des Sources, on the leafy Esplanade Napoléon III, is the enormous, Byzantine-style Grand Établissement Thermal, the former thermal baths, decorated with Moorish arches, gold-and-blue domes and blue ceramic panels of voluptuous mermaids. All that remains inside of the original baths is the grand entrance hall, with its fountain and two beautiful murals, La Bain and La Source, painted by Osberd in 1903. The arcades leading off either side of the hall, once the site of gyms and treatment rooms, now house expensive boutiques.

To provide distraction for the curistes, a grand casino and opera house were built at the southern end of the Parc des Sources. From May to September the opera house is the venue for regular concerts and opera productions, while lighter music oompahs out from the open-air bandstand in the park behind it.

After the waters, Vichy's curiosities are limited. There's a pleasant, wooded riverside in the Parc de l'Allier, also created for Napoléon III. And, not far from here, the old town boasts the strange church of St-Blaise, actually two churches in one, with a 1930s Baroque structure built onto the original Romanesque one – an effect that sounds hideous but is rather imaginative. Inside, another Auvergne Black Virgin, Notre-Dame-des-Malades, stands surrounded by plaques offered by the grateful healed who stacked their odds with both her and the sulphur.

Practicalities

Vichy's gare SNCF is about a ten-minute walk from the centre, on the eastern edge of the city centre at the end of rue de Paris. The gare routière sits on the corner of rue Doumier and rue Jarlet, by the central place Charles-de-Gaulle, and there's a public transport information line on ☎04.70.30.17.30. The building that used to house the wartime Vichy government at 19 rue du Parc is now home to the tourist office (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm & 3–7pm; July & Aug 9am–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm & 3–7pm; Oct–March Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 1.30–6pm, Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 2.30–5.30pm; ☎04.70.98.71.94, 🌐www.vichy-tourisme.com). Internet access is available at Echap Internet Café (12 rue Source de l'Hôpital, Tues–Sat noon–midnight, Sun 2pm–midnight).

There is an abundance of hotels and finding a place to stay is not difficult. You'll find several around the station, but more pleasant are the friendly, grand neo-Baroque Midland, 4 rue de l'Intendance, in a quiet street off rue de Paris (☎04.70.97.48.48, 🌐www.hotel.midland.com; 4–5; closed mid-Oct to mid-April; good restaurant with menus from €17), and the Hôtel Londres, 7 bd de Russie, behind the casino (☎04.70.98.28.27, 🌐www.hoteldelondres.fr; 2–5; closed Nov to Feb), which was the secret meeting place for Jean Moulin and fellow Resistance fighters in 1941. There's a municipal campsite, La Gravière, at the Centre Omnisports (☎04.70.59.21.00; closed Oct to late-May).

For eating, apart from the hotel-restaurants listed above, the simplest solution is to head for the area around the junction of rue Clemenceau and rue de Paris, where there are several brasseries and cafés. To do so, however, would be to miss out on the best that Vichy has to offer – a surprising range of top-notch restaurants. Two of the best include the frenetically eclectic Jacques Decoret on 7 av de Gramont (☎04.70.97.65.06; closed Tues & Wed & Aug), which has menus drawing on flavours from places as jarringly diverse as Oaxaca and Marseille from €40–95, and the more affordable and less daring La Table d'Antoine at 8 rue Burnol (☎04.70.98.99.71; closed Sun lunch & Mon; from €21).

The Monts-Dore

The Monts-Dore lie about 50km southwest of Clermont. Also volcanic in origin – the main period of activity was around five million years ago – they are much more rugged and more obviously mountainous than their gentler, younger neighbours, the Monts-Dômes. Their centre is the precipitous, plunging valley of the River Dordogne, which rises on the slopes of the Puy de Sancy, at 1885m the highest point in the Massif Central, just above the little town of Le Mont-Dore.

In spite of their relative ruggedness, there are few crags or rock faces and their upper slopes, albeit steep, are grassy and treeless for miles and miles. They are known as montagnes à vaches – mountains for cows – as they traditionally provided summer pasture land for herds of cows, raised above all for their milk and the production of St-Nectaire cheese. The herdsmen who milked them and made the cheese set up their primitive summer homes in the dozens of (now mainly ruined) stone huts, or burons, that scatter the landscape.

Although these traditional activities still continue, many of the upland herds are now beef cattle being fattened for the autumn sales, often for export to Italy, Germany and Spain. And tourism has become an important part of the local economy, although mostly unobtrusive and low-key, with mainly walkers in summer and cross-country skiers in winter.

Le Mont-Dore and the Puy de Sancy

Squeezed out along the narrow wooded valley of the infant Dordogne, grey-slated LE MONT-DORE, 50km southwest of Clermont, is a long-established spa resort, with Roman remnants testifying to just how old it is. Its popularity goes back to the eighteenth century, when metalled roads replaced the old mule paths and made access possible, but reached its apogee with the opening of the rail line around 1900. It is an altogether wholesome and civilized sort of place.

The Établissement Thermal – the baths, which give the place its raison d'être – are in the middle of town and are certainly worth visiting (30min guided tours Mon–Sat: mid-May to mid-Oct on the hour; €2). Early every morning, the curistes stream into its neo-Byzantine halls – an extravaganza of tiles, striped columns and ornate ironwork – hoping for a remedy in this self-proclaimed “world centre for treatment of asthma”. For many Parisians, of all ages and walks of life, this is their annual mecca: whiling away their days sniffing sulphur from bunsen burner tubes, and sitting in thick steam.

Walkers also frequent the town, the principal attraction being the Puy de Sancy (1885m), whose jagged skyline blocks the head of the Dordogne valley, 3km away (mid-May to Sept; 4 buses daily from the tourist office; €3.10). Accessible by téléphérique (€6.50 return) since the 1930s, it's one of the busiest tourist sites in the country. As a result, the path from the téléphérique station to the summit has had to be railed and paved with baulks of timber to prevent total erosion. Combined with the scars of access tracks for the ski installations, this has done little for its beauty.

However, with a little sweat and effort you can escape to wilder areas of the mountain. The GR30 passes this way and on down to La Bourboule, giving a good sense of the typical landscape: long views over meadows full of gentians and violets, grazed by sheep and cows. Start out along the summit path and at the first intermediate peak, take a right and go downhill. The GR30 is signposted. It follows the western ridge of the Dordogne valley for about an hour and a half, before turning ninety degrees left, away from the valley. Keep straight ahead at this point, go down a gravelly track, with the rocky dome of Le Capucin, above Le Mont-Dore, directly in front of you. The track enters the woods to the left of this bump by a ruined house. Five minutes later, on the right, just past a concrete water-pipe junction, a path drops steeply down through beech trees to Le Capucin funiculaire station and down again to Le Mont-Dore (3hr).

Practicalities

Without a car, Le Mont-Dore is most easily accessible by train from Clermont. The train and bus stations are at the entrance to the town. A ten-minute walk down avenue Michelet takes you to the centre, where the tourist office sits in the park on avenue de la Libération (May & June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–7pm, Sun 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.73.65.20.21, 🌐www.sancy.com); the helpful staff will advise about other walking and cycling possibilities (VTT rental), as well as day bus excursions to some otherwise rather inaccessible places in the area. Internet access can be found at Sancyber at 4 rue Georges-Lagaye (Mon–Sun 10am–midnight).

Accommodation is not hard to come by, as the town is brimming with hotels. Close to the baths, at 8 rue Favart, Hôtel aux Champs d'Auvergne (☎04.73.65.00.37, 🌐www.auxchampsdauvergne.com; 📍; closed Nov to mid-Dec; restaurant from €12) is very welcoming and serves copious breakfasts, while the elegant Hôtel de la Paix, nearby on rue Rigny (☎04.73.65.00.17, 🌐www.hotel-de-la-paix.info; 📍), has comfortable, clean rooms and an excellent restaurant (menus €19–49). One of the best deals, with mod cons at a bargain price, is the Beau Site at 17 rue des Déportés (☎04.73.65.05.51, ☎04.73.65.26.88; 📍–📍; closed mid-Oct to Dec & mid-March to April; restaurant from €13), beside the main baths. There's an efficient modern hostel on the Puy de Sancy road, with a stunning view of the mountains (☎04.73.65.03.53, 📧le-mont-dore@fuaj.org; closed Nov), and a very cheap gîte, Les Hautes Pierres (☎04.73.65.25.65, 🌐www.gite-les-hautes-pierres.com; Jan–Oct or by request) on chemin de Vergnes. The municipal campsite, Les Crouzets (☎ & ☎04.73.65.21.60; closed mid-Oct to mid-Dec), is nearby, opposite the station. The other municipal campsite is L'Esquiladou (☎04.73.65.23.74; closed Nov–April), off to the right on the road to La Bourboule.

As far as eating is concerned, there are large numbers of brasseries and cafés in the centre offering plats for €6.50–8. A particularly pleasant place is rustic Le Bognat, 23 av Clemenceau, which serves various Auvergnat traditional dishes, as well as raclette and fondue (☎04.73.65.28.19; closed Mon; menus from €15). A great place for a drink is the atmospheric, 1940s-style Café de Paris, located on rue Jean-Moulin.

La Bourboule

LA BOURBOULE is just 7km down the road from Le Mont-Dore. Known as the sister to Le Mont-Dore, it's another traditional spa – the “capital of allergies” – but with a more open feel and, because of its lower altitude, temperatures are a degree or two warmer. The big casino, the domed Grands Thermes baths and several other belle-époque buildings which once housed privately run baths are ornate, gilded and wonderfully vulgar, with a faded, permanently off-season look to them, though the town has a certain Parisian flair that sets it apart from the smaller more provincial towns in the region. All in all, it's a cool, tranquil place to unwind: as the tourist office's leaflet says, “You will be able to put your vital node to rest in La Bourboule”.

Behind the Hôtel de Ville, the large wooded Parc Fenestre has a télécabine taking you right up to Plateau de Charlanes (1300m), where it's possible to stroll in the woods or ski in winter; the tourist office in the Hôtel de Ville on place de la République (April–June & Sept daily 9.30am–noon & 1.30/2–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm & Sun 9am–6pm; Oct–March Mon–Sat 9.30am–noon & 1.30–5.30pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; ☎04.73.65.57.71, @www.sancy.com) sells a booklet of local walks.

Hotels here are plentiful, three good bargains being the Aviation Hôtel, in rue de Metz (☎04.73.81.32.32, @www.aviation.fr; 🍷; closed Oct–Dec 20; restaurant from €15), with indoor pool; the welcoming, Art Deco-style Le Pavillon, 209 av d'Angleterre (☎04.73.65.50.18, @hotel.lepavillon@wanadoo.fr; 🍷; closed Oct–March; restaurant from €16); and the more basic Les Fleurs on avenue de Mussy (☎04.73.81.09.44, @www.hotellesfleurs.com; 🍷; closed Nov & Dec; vegetarian restaurant from €11–26). There's also a good selection of campsites, with the camping municipal on avenue Maréchal Lattre-de-Tassigny (☎04.73.81.10.20), and another at Murat-le-Quaire, 4km away, along the Mont-Dore road (☎04.73.65.54.81).

Orcival

Twenty-seven kilometres southwest of Clermont and about 20km north of Le Mont-Dore, lush pastures and green hills punctuated by the abrupt eruptions

Walking and skiing around La Bourboule

Fit and serious walkers may want to conquer the Puy de Sancy, a six-hour hike south of La Bourboule on the GR30–41, passing after about two hours the two fine waterfalls of the Cascade de la Vernière and Plat à Barbe – themselves a satisfying destination. For the summit of Puy de Sancy, see the account of Le Mont-Dore, p.913. An easier walk out of La Bourboule is to the summit of the Banne d'Ordanche (1500m): pick up the GR path to the east of the town where it crosses the D130 road and the train line, then take the signposted GR41 where it diverges from the GR30. During winter months, both Le Mont-Dore and La Bourboule double as ski resorts – centres of a ski-de-fond (cross-country) network of circular pistes, some over 20km long, and there is limited downhill skiing as well, although at a maximum of 1150m this is not a resort for enthusiasts. Skiable paths also connect La Bourboule to other ski centres in the locality – Sancy, Besse, Chastreix and Picherande.

of the pays enclose the small village of ORCIVAL, the home town of ex-President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing. A pretty, popular, place, founded by the monks of La Chaise-Dieu in the twelfth century, it makes a suitable base for hiking in the region.

Orcival is dominated by the stunning Romanesque church of Notre-Dame (daily 8am–noon & 2–7pm), built of the same dark-grey volcanic stone as the cathedral in Clermont and topped with a spire and fanned with tiny chapels. Once a major parish, it counted no less than 24 priests in the mid-1200s, and the ironwork on the north door, with its curious forged human head motif, dates from that era. Inside, attention focuses on the choir, neatly and harmoniously contained by the semicircle of pillars defining the ambulatory. Mounted on a stone column in the centre is the celebrated Virgin of Orcival, a gilded and enamelled twelfth-century statue in typical Romance style; the object of a popular cult since the Middle Ages and still carried through the streets on Ascension Day.

There's no public transport to Orcival itself; the nearest bus station is at Rochefort-Montagne, 6km away, served by buses from Clermont-Ferrand. There is, however, a helpful tourist office (July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2–7pm; rest of year holiday periods only Tues–Sat 2–5pm; ☎04.73.65.89.78), just below the church. Modest accommodation can be found at the Hôtel des Touristes (☎04.73.65.82.55, ☎04.73.65.97.37; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-Feb; restaurant from €12) near the church. There's a lakeside campsite, Camping de l'Étang de Fléchat (☎04.73.65.82.96; closed mid-Sept to April), 2km outside Orcival, but a better bet is the municipal site at St-Bonnet, 5km to the north of the village (☎04.73.65.83.32; closed Oct–April), set on a hillside with wonderful views of the surrounding mountains.

St-Nectaire and around

ST-NECTAIRE lies some way to the southeast of Orcival, midway between Le Mont-Dore and Issoire. It comprises the tiny spa of St-Nectaire-le-Bas, whose main street is lined with grand but fading belle-époque hotels, which was

Walks around Orcival

Walking possibilities from Orcival include trips to Lac de Servières and Lac de Guéry. The first takes two and a half hours, the second some five hours. For Lac de Servières, follow the GR141–30 south through the woods above the valley of the Sioule. The lake is a beauty; it's 1200m up, with gently sloping shores surrounded by pasture and conifers. You can either head southeast to the gîte d'étape at Pessade (☎04.73.79.31.07), or continue to the larger Lac de Guéry, lent a slightly eerie air by the black basalt boulders strewn across the surrounding meadows, where there's a romantically situated lakeside hotel, the Lac de Guéry (☎04.73.65.02.76, 🌐 www.auberge-lac-guery.fr; 📍; closed mid-Oct to mid-Jan; restaurant from €16).

If you're driving to Le Mont-Dore, only 9km further on from here, just before the Lac de Guéry, the road takes you round the head of the Fontsalade valley, where two prominent rocks composed of banks of basalt organ-pipes rise spectacularly from the woods: the Roche Tuilière and the Roche Sanadoire. A footpath takes you on a two-hour walk round the valley, starting from the roadside belvedere overlooking Sanadoire. A little higher up, on the bare slopes of the Puy de l'Aiguiller, a roadside memorial commemorates some English airmen killed in an accident while making a parachute drop to the maquis in March 1944.

A detailed Topo-guide to the region is available from both the Orcival and Bourboule tourist offices (€6).

St-Nectaire cheese

St-Nectaire is an appellation contrôlée, to which only cheeses made from herds grazing in a limited area to the south of the Monts-Dore are entitled. It is made in two stages. First, a white creamy cheese or tomme is produced. This is matured for two to three months in a cellar at a constant temperature, resulting in the growth of a mould on the skin of the cheese which produces the characteristic smell, taste and whitish or yellowy-grey colour.

There are two kinds: St-Nectaire fermier and St-Nectaire laitier. The fermier is the strongest and tastiest and some of it is still made entirely on the farm. Increasingly, however, individual farmers make the tomme stage, but then sell it on to wholesalers for the refining. The laitier is much more an “industrial” product, made from the milk of lots of different herds, sold onto a co-operative or cheese manufacturer for all its stages.

added on to the old village of St-Nectaire-le-Haut, overlooked by a magnificent Romanesque church (daily 9am–7pm). Like the church in Orcival and Notre-Dame-du-Port in Clermont, this is one of the most striking examples of the Auvergne’s Romanesque architecture. The carved capitals around the apse retain the tantalizing hues of the paint which once covered the whole interior, while the church’s treasures are guarded in the north transept and include a magnificent gilded bust of St Baudime (the third-century missionary of the Auvergne and parish-founder), a polychrome Virgin in Majesty, and two enamelled plaques, all dating from the twelfth century. Among the town’s other curiosities are a couple of caverns, the spa (a two-hour basic session from €12), and the Maison du Saint-Nectaire where you’ll find an exhibition on the cheese-making process and a chance to visit a cheese-ripening cellar. The surrounding countryside is notable for its menhirs and other pre-historic megaliths; the tourist office has information on how to find them.

The tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.15pm & 2–6.45pm, Sun 9.30am–12.15pm & 2–4.45pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9.30–11.45am & 2–4.45pm; ☎04.73.88.50.86, 🌐www.ville-saint-nectaire.fr) is located in the “Grandes Thermes” complex on the main road and has information on six different circuit walks of various lengths that take from two to five hours to complete. For a place to stay, Hotel de la Paix, situated at the base of the GR30 footpath below the church, offers comfortable rooms and a reasonably priced restaurant (☎04.73.88.49, ✉hotelpaix63710@aol.com; 🍴; menus from €13; April–Oct). Greater comfort can be found at the Mercure, near the town centre, a converted spa renovated as a hotel (☎04.73.88.57.00, ✉H1814@accor-hotels.com; 🍴; closed Nov, Dec & part Jan & March), also with a fine restaurant (menu €21). The best-value campsite is the Clé des Champs (☎04.73.88.52.33, 🌐www.campingcleschamps.com) located on the D996 on the right when heading in the direction of Champeix. For walkers, the GR30 heads north from here to Lac Aydat in five hours, or west to the forest-girt Lac Chambon in three hours via Murol. There’s a gîte on the way at Phialeix (☎04.73.79.32.43; closed Nov–March).

For shorter walks out of St-Nectaire, take the D150 past the church through the old village towards the Puy de Mazeires (919m), and turn up a path to the right for the final climb to the summit (1hr), where you get a superb aerial view of the surrounding country. Alternatively, follow the D966 along the Couze de Chambon valley to SAILLANT, where the stream cascades down a high lava rock face in the middle of the village.

Muroi

MUROL, 6km west of St-Nectaire by road (July & Aug twice-daily bus to Clermont) or 5.5km by footpath, is an attractive, sleepy little place best known for its powerful medieval château, dramatically situated on top of a basalt cone commanding the approaches for kilometres around (April–June & Sept daily 10am–noon & 1.30–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; Oct–March Sat, Sun & hols 2–5pm; €4). In summer, a local organization re-enacts the medieval life of the castle in costume (€7.50).

There are several small family-run hotels here. Try the Hôtel des Pins, on rue de Levat (☎04.73.88.60.50, ☎04.73.88.60.29; 📍; closed Oct to May; restaurant from €10), or the Hôtel de Paris, on place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville (☎04.73.88.60.09, 📍planeix.hotelparis.murol@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed Nov to Easter). Of the campsites, the best value is the Ribeyre, a short distance away at JASSAT (☎04.73.88.64.29, 📍laribeyre.free.fr; closed mid-Sept to April).

Besse

Eleven kilometres due south of Muroi, BESSE is one of the prettiest and oldest villages in the region. Its fascinating winding streets of noble lava-built houses – some fifteenth-century – sit atop the valley of the Couze de Pavin, with one of the original fortified town gates still in place at the upper end of the village.

Its wealth was due to its role as the principal market for the farms on the eastern slopes of the Monts-Dore, and its co-operative is still one of the main producers of St-Nectaire cheese (see p.917). The annual festivals of the Montée and Dévalade, marking the ascent of the herds to the high pastures in July and their descent in autumn, are still celebrated by the procession of the Black Virgin of Vassivière from the church of St-André in Besse to the chapel of La Vassivière, west of Lac Pavin, and back again in autumn (July 2 & first Sun after Sept 21).

Lac Pavin lies 5km west of the village, on the way to the purpose-built downhill ski resort of SUPER-BESSE (both are connected to Besse by an hourly navette). It's a perfect volcanic lake, filling the now wooded crater. The GR30 goes through, passing by the Puy de Montchal, whose summit (1407m) gives you a fine view over several other lakes and the rolling plateau south towards ÉGLISENEUVE-D'ENTRAIGUES, 13km by road, where the Parc des Volcans' Maison du Fromage gives a detailed account of the making of the different cheeses of Auvergne (daily: mid-May to June & Sept 2–6pm; July & Aug 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm; €3.50).

Besse's tourist office is next to the church on place du Dr-Pipet (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–noon 2–4pm; ☎04.73.79.52.84, 📍www.sancy.com), and will provide information and advice about walking, mountain biking and skiing. Good, simple fare can be had next door at the Le Sancy, which has a plat du jour for €6.50. For a place to stay, there's none better than the attractive old Hostellerie du Beffroi, 24 rue Abbé-Blot (☎04.73.79.50.08, ☎04.73.79.57.87; 📍–📍), whose good restaurant serves up a range of local specialities from €20.

The Monts du Cantal

The Cantal Massif forms the most southerly extension of the Parc des Volcans. Still nearly 80km in diameter and once 3000m in height, it is one of the world's largest (albeit extinct) volcanoes, shaped like a wheel without a rim. The hub is formed by the three great conical peaks that survived the erosion of the original single cone: Plomb du Cantal (1855m), Puy Mary (1787m) and Puy de Peyre-Arse (1686m).

From this centre a series of deep-cut wooded valleys radiates out like spokes. The most notable are the valley of Mandailles and the valleys of the Cère and Alagnon in the southwest, where the road and rail line run, and in the north the valleys of Falgoux and the Rhue. Between the valleys, especially on the north side, are huge expanses of gently sloping grassland, including the Plateau du Limon, and it's these which for centuries have been the mainstay of life in the Cantal: summer pasture for the cows whose milk makes the firm yellow Cantal cheese, pressed in the form of great crusty drums. But this traditional activity has long been in serious decline; as elsewhere, many of the herds are now beef cattle. And tourism is on the increase, in particular walking, horse-riding and skiing.

The main walking routes are the fairly arduous GR400, which does a circuit of the whole massif, and the GR4, which crosses it from the north to the southeast. There are also more than fifty shorter routes, details of which are obtainable through Chamina Publications (see p.906). The two main summits, Plomb du Cantal and Puy Mary, are – for better or worse – accessible to all: the former by téléphérique from Super-Lioran, the latter by a veritable highway of a footpath from the road at Pas de Peyrol. The best section of the GR4–400 for an experienced hiker with limited time is the three-hour stretch between Super-Lioran and the Puy Mary, with the possibility of taking in a couple of extra summits on the way. For motorists, there's the long, sinuous Route des Crêtes, which does a rather wider circuit than the GR400. But, be warned, if you hit a period of bad weather, you'll drive a long way seeing no more than white banks of mist illumined by your headlights.

The main centres within the massif lie on the N122 between Murat and Aurillac: LE LIORAN, where the road and rail tunnels begin, and SUPER-LIORAN, the downhill and cross-country ski centre, with many hotels, including the rustic and comfortable Rocher de Cerf (☎04.71.49.50.14, ☎04.71.49.54.07; Ⓜ; half-pension normally required, otherwise Ⓜ) and several gîtes d'étape, as well as a tourist office (Mon–Sat: July & Aug 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; Sept–June 8.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; ☎04.71.49.50.08, 🌐www.lélioran.com). THIEZAC, 10km south, also has a tourist office (July & Aug daily 9.30am–12.30pm & 3.30–7pm; Sept–June Tues–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; ☎04.71.47.03.50, as well as the Hôtel La Belle Vallée (☎04.71.47.00.22, 🌐www.elanceze.com; Ⓜ; closed Nov–Dec 20; restaurant €14–28), three gîtes d'étape and a municipal campsite, La Bedisse (☎04.71.47.00.41; closed mid-Sept to May). Further south at VIC-SUR-CÈRE there's a tourist office (July & Aug daily 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–7.30pm; June & Sept daily 9.30–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.71.47.50.68), and accommodation at the Hôtel des Bains, 9 av de la Promenade (☎04.71.47.50.16, 🌐www.cantal-logis.com/vicsurcere/hoteldesbains; Ⓜ; closed Oct–April; restaurant from €20), and the riverside municipal campsite (☎04.71.47.54.18; closed mid-Sept to March).

Aurillac

AURILLAC, the provincial capital of the Cantal, lies on the west side of the mountains, 98km east of Brive and 160km from Clermont-Ferrand. In spite of its good main-line train connections and the fact that its population has almost doubled in the last forty years to around 30,000, it remains one of the most out-of-the-way French provincial capitals. It was until recently a major manufacturer of umbrellas, though that seems doomed to eventual extinction, like its older traditional lace-making and tanning industries. It is now mainly an administrative and commercial centre, with important cattle markets in the suburb of Sistrières on Mondays. Although there are no important sights, it makes a pleasant and unpretentious place to stop over on your way into the Massif Central from the west.

The most interesting part of town is the kernel of old streets, now largely pedestrianized and full of good shops, just to the north of the central place du Square. Rue Duclaux leads through to the attractive place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville, where the big Wednesday and Saturday markets are held in the shadow of the handsome grey-stone Hôtel de Ville, built in restrained Republican-classical style in 1803. Beyond it, the continuation of rue des Forgerons leads to the beautiful little place St-Géraud, with a round twelfth-century fountain overlooked by a Romanesque house that was probably part of the original abbey guesthouse, and the externally rather unprepossessing church of St-Géraud, which nonetheless has a beautifully ribbed late Gothic ceiling.

At the back of the church, past a delightful small garden, rue de la Fontaine comes out on the riverbank by the Pont du Buis, with a shady walk back along cours d'Angoulême on the other side to the Pont-Rouge and place Gerbert, where there is an ancient lavoir, or washing place. On a steep bluff overlooking this end of town towers the eleventh-century keep of the Château St-Étienne, containing the town's only worthwhile museum, the Muséum des Volcans (Tues-Sat: mid-June to mid-Sept 10am–6.30pm; mid-Sept to mid-June 2–6pm; €4), with a good section on volcanoes and a splendid view over the mountains to the east.

Southeast of the town towards Aubrac, the road leads through Carlat, once an important feudal fiefdom, as well as the particularly attractive villages of Mur-de-Barrez, Brommat and Albinhac, with some lovely old houses and curious churches in the latter two villages.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF and gare routière are together on place Sémard, a ten-minute walk from the central place du Square along avenue de la République and rue de la Gare. The tourist office occupies a small kiosk on the downhill side of place du Square (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6.30pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Oct–March Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6.30pm; ☎04.71.48.46.58), with a number of guidebooks and maps on sale, as well as a money-changing facility when the banks are closed. There's Internet access at the Faisan Doré cyber café, 8 place d'Aurignès.

For a place to stay in the centre of town, try the smart and comfortable Le Square, 15 place du Square (☎04.71.48.24.72, 🌐www.cantal-hotel.com; 🍷), with a restaurant whose stuffed cabbage has won several prizes (from €15). Rather more deluxe accommodation can be found at the Grand Hotel de Bordeaux at 2 av République (☎04.71.48.01.84, 🌐www.hotel-de-bordeaux.fr; 🍷), set in a nineteenth-century mansion.

There are a number of restaurants where you can sample Auvergnat specialities. Two of the most popular are the atmospheric Le Tiroir du Cantal, 5 rue du Buis (closed Sun pm & Mon; from €15), with its rough-stone walls and wooden benches, and Poivre et Sel, 4 rue du 14-Juillet (closed Sun & Mon; menus from €11), featuring classic dishes such as magret de canard. The pretty, riverside Birdland, by the Pont-Rouge, done out in the French version of pub style, serves pizzas for around €8.50 and menus for €17 (closed Sun); if you're looking for nightlife, the L'Aventure disco is part of the same establishment (Thurs–Sun 11pm–4/5am; €10). Finally, Aurillac's most unexpected event is an annual international street theatre festival (📧 www.aurillac.net) during the last full week in August, which attracts performers from all over Europe and fills the town with rather more exotic characters than are normally to be seen in these provincial parts.

Salers

SALERS lies 42km north of Aurillac, at the foot of the northwest slopes of the Cantal and within sight of the Puy Violent. Scarcely altered in size or aspect since its sixteenth-century heyday, it remains an extraordinarily homogeneous example of the architecture of that time. If things appear rather grand for a place so small, it's because the town became the administrative centre for the highlands of the Auvergne in 1564 and home of its magistrates. Exploiting this past is really all it has left, but Salers still makes a very worthwhile visit.

If you arrive by the Puy Mary road, you'll enter town by the church, which is worth a look for the super-naturalistic statuary of the Entombment of Christ (1496), hidden in a side chapel near the entrance. In front of you, the cobbled rue du Beffroi leads uphill, under the massive clock tower, and into the central place Tyssandier-d'Escous. It is a glorious little square, surrounded by the fifteenth-century mansions of the provincial aristocracy with pepper-pot turrets, mullioned windows and carved lintels, among them the sturdy Maison du Bailliage, and, nearby, the Maison des Templiers, housing the small Musée de Salers (mid-April to Sept daily 10.30am–noon & 2–7.30pm, closed Tues except July & Aug; €3). Though the museum itself is rather dull, with exhibitions on the Salers cattle breed, traditional costumes and the local cheese-making industry, it's worth having a look at the vaulted ceiling of the entrance passageway, with its carved lions and heads of saints, such as St John the Baptist, framed by wild flowing hair. Before you're done, be sure to make your way to the Promenade de Barrouze for the view out across the surrounding green hills and the Puy Violent.

The tourist office is in place Tyssandier-d'Escous (July & Aug 10am–7pm; Sept–June Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎ 04.71.40.70.33, 🌐 www.pays-de-salers.com). If you want to stay, try the Hôtel des Remparts, near the Promenade de Barrouze (☎ 04.71.40.70.33, 🌐 www.salers-hotel-remparts.com 📍; closed mid-Oct to mid-Dec), whose restaurant specializes in Auvergnat cuisine (from €13), or the more luxurious Le Gerfaut in route du Puy-Mary (☎ 04.71.40.75.75, 🌐 www.salers-hotel-gerfaut.com; 📍; closed Nov–Easter). There's a municipal campsite, Le Mouriol, on the Puy Mary road (☎ 04.71.40.73.09, ☎ 04.71.40.72.33 off season; closed mid-Oct to mid-May).

Murat

MURAT, on the eastern edge of the Cantal, is the closest town to the high peaks and a busy little place, its cafés and shops bustling uncharacteristically for the region. It is also the easiest to access, lying on the N122 road and main train line, about 12km northeast of Le Lioran. Rather than any particular sight, it's the ensemble of grey-stone houses that attracts, many dating from the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Crowded together on their medieval lanes, they make a magnificent sight, especially as you approach from the St-Flour road, with the backdrop of the steep basalt cliffs of the Rocher Bonnevie, once the site of the local castle and now surmounted by a huge white statue of the Virgin Mary. Facing the town, perched on the distinctive mound of the Rocher

Bredons, on your left as you approach, there's the lovely Romanesque Église de Bredons (July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 2.30–6.30pm; free), containing some fine eighteenth-century altarpieces. One of the finest of the old houses is now open to the public as the Maison de la Faune (July & Aug Mon–Sat 10am–12.30 & 2–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 3–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; €4), full of stuffed animals and birds illustrating the wildlife of the Parc des Volcans.

The monument to deportees on place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville and the name of the avenue des 12-et-24-Juin-1944, opposite the tourist office, both commemorate one of the blackest days in Murat's recent history. On June 12, 1944, a local Resistance group interrupted a German raid on the town and killed a senior SS officer. In reprisal, the Germans burnt several houses down on June 24 and arrested 120 people, 80 of whom died in deportation. Near the river, below the Rocher Bredons, a stone with an inscription marks the spot where the villagers were assembled before being deported.

Practicalities

The tourist office is at 2 rue du Faubourg Notre-Dame (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.71.20.09.47, 🌐www.paysdemurat.fr/tourisme), and you can rent mountain bikes from La Godille, opposite, or from Bernard Escure, in place Gandilhon-Gens-d'Armes. The gare SNCF is on the main road, avenue du Dr-Mallet, where there are also some good places to stay. The most comfortable is the Hôtel des Breuils, a handsome, ivy-covered bourgeois house at no. 34 (☎04.71.20.01.25, 📧hostellerie.les.breuils@wanadoo.fr; 🍷; closed Nov–Christmas & April), with a heated outdoor pool, while at no. 22 there is the equally friendly and simple Les Globe-Trotters (☎04.71.20.07.22, 📞04.71.20.16.88; 🍷; closed mid-Oct to mid-Nov). A few doors down at no. 18, Les Messageries (☎04.71.20.04.04, 📞04.71.20.02.81; 🍷) has somewhat clinical rooms, but the restaurant (from €12–25) serves up good hearty cooking, including home-made terrines and fruit tarts. The town's campsite, Les Stalapos, is southwest of the centre in rue du Stade (☎04.71.20.01.83, 📧ville-de-murat@wanadoo.fr; closed Oct–April).

St-Flour and the Margeride

Seat of a fourteenth-century bishopric, ST-FLOUR stands dramatically on a cliff-girt basalt promontory above the River Ander, 92km west of Le Puy and 92km south of Clermont-Ferrand. Prosperous in the Middle Ages because of its strategic position on the main road from northern France to Languedoc and the proximity of the grasslands of the Cantal whose herds provided the raw materials for its tanning and leather industries, it fell into somnolent decline in modern times, only partially reversed in the last thirty-odd years.

While the lower town that has grown up around the station is of little interest, the wedge of old streets that occupies the point of the promontory surrounding the cathedral has considerable charm. The best time to come is on a Saturday morning when the old town is filled with market stalls selling sausages, cheese and other local produce. If you're in a car, leave it in the car park in the chestnut-shaded square, Les Promenades. One end of the square is dominated by the memorial to Dr Mallet, his two sons and other hostages and assorted citizens executed in reprisals by the Germans during World War II.

The narrow streets of the old town lead off from here and converge on the place d'Armes, where the fourteenth-century Cathédrale St-Pierre stands, backing onto the edge of the cliff, with a terrace giving good views out over the countryside. From the outside, the plain grey volcanic rock of the cathedral makes for a rather severe and uninspiring appearance; it's an impression that is partly mitigated inside by the fine vaulting of the ceiling and the presence of a number of works of art, most notably a carved, black-painted walnut figure of Christ with a strikingly serene expression, dating from the thirteenth century.

Facing the cathedral on the place d'Armes are some attractive old buildings, housing a couple of cafés under their arcades, while at the north and south extremities of the square stand the town's two museums. At the north end, the fine fourteenth-century building that was once the headquarters of the town's consuls contains the Musée Alfred Douët's somewhat ragbag collections of furniture, tapestries and paintings (mid-April to mid-Oct daily 9am–noon & 2–6pm; mid-Oct to mid-April closed Sun; €3.30, joint ticket with Haute-Auvergne museum €3.40); the view from the cliffs behind the museum gives a sense of the impregnable position of the town. At the south end of the square, the current Hôtel de Ville, formerly the bishop's palace built in 1610, houses the more interesting Musée de la Haute-Auvergne (mid-April to mid-Oct daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; mid-Oct to mid-April closed Sun; same prices as above), whose collections include some beautifully carved Auvergnat furniture and exquisitely made traditional musical instruments, such as the cabrette, a kind of accordion peculiar to the Auvergne.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is on avenue Charles-de-Gaulle in the lower town. A few trains from Clermont-Ferrand and Aurillac stop here, but most journeys involve changing at Neussargues onto a SNCF bus, which can drop you off on the Promenades in the old town, saving you the walk up. The tourist office is on the Promenades, opposite the memorial (April–June & Sept–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 3.30–5.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm & 3–7pm; Nov–March Mon–Sat 9am–6pm; ☎ 04.71.60.22.50, @www.saint-flour.com). Internet access can be found at Cg-Net on rue Marchande (daily 9.30am–9pm).

The best deal for accommodation in the atmospheric upper town is the magnificent, old-style La Maison des Planchettes at 7 rue des Planchettes (☎ 04.71.60.10.08, @www.maison-des-planchettes.com; 🍷) which has half-pensions for as low as €30 and a terroir restaurant with menus from €12. Another great option is the Hotel de France, 28 rue de Lacs (☎ 04.71.60.04.75, @le-france3@wanadoo.fr; 🍷), a welcoming, family-run establishment. The town's municipal campsite, Les Orgues, is off avenue des Orgues in the old town (☎ 04.71.60.44.01; closed mid-Sept to mid-May). The best place for both local cuisine and gastronomique is Le Nautilus on 23 av Charles-de-Gaulle (☎ 04.71.60.11.36; closed Oct–Easter) with menus from €15–55. For a delicious snack visit the famous 🍩 La Fouac L'Roux patisserie on rue des Lacs.

The Margeride

South and east of St-Flour stretch the wild, rolling, sparsely populated wooded hills of the Margeride, one of the strongholds of the wartime Resistance groups. If you have your own transport, the D4 makes a slow but spectacular route east (92km) to Le Puy, crossing the forested heights of Mont Mouchet, at 1465m the highest point of the Margeride. A side turning, the D48 (signposted), takes you to the national Resistance monument by the woodman's hut that served as HQ to the local Resistance commander during the June 1944 battle to delay German reinforcements moving north to strengthen resistance to the D-day landings in Normandy. There's an eco-museum here (La Tour, Ruynes-en-Margeride; May to mid-Sept daily 9.30am–noon & 2–7pm; mid-Sept to mid-Oct Mon–Fri 9.30am–noon & 2–7pm, Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; @www.ecomusee-margeride.org; €4), sketching the progression of the Resistance movement in the area. The views back west from these heights to the Cantal are superb.

Further south, the modern autoroute crosses the gorge of the River Truyère beside the delicate steel tracery of the Viaduc de Garabit, built by Gustave Eiffel (of Tower fame) in 1884 to carry the newly constructed rail line; experience he put to important use in the Tower. Not far away, about 20km south of St-Flour and perched above the waters of the lake created by the damming of the Truyère for hydroelectric power, are the romantic ruins of the keep of the Château d'Alleuze, stronghold in the 1380s of one Bernard de Garlan, a notorious leader of lawless mercenaries employed by the English in the Hundred Years War to sow panic and destruction in French-held parts of the country.

12

THE MASSIF CENTRAL

The southwest: Aubrac and Rouergue

The southwest: Aubrac and Rouergue

In the southwest corner of the Massif Central, the landscapes start to change and the mean altitude begins to drop. The wild, desolate moorland of the Aubrac is cut and contained by the savage gorges of the Lot and Truyère rivers. To the south of them, the arid but more southern-feeling plateaux of the causses form a sort of intermediate step to the lower hills and coastal plains of Languedoc. And they in turn are cut by the dramatic trenches formed by the gorges of the Tarn, Jonte and Dourbie, along with the spectacular caves of the Aven Armand and Dargilan. These are places best avoided at the height of the holiday season, when they turn into overcrowded outdoor playgrounds for amateur canoeists, parties of schoolchildren, motorists and campers.

The bigger towns, like Rodez and Millau in the old province of the Rouergue, also have much more of a southern feel. Both are worth a visit, although their attractions need not keep you for more than half a day. Rodez has a fine cathedral and Millau is worth considering as a base for exploring the causses and river gorges of the Tarn and Jonte.

The two great architectural draws of the area are Conques, with its medieval village and magnificent abbey, which owes its existence to the Santiago pilgrim route (now the GR65), and the perfect little bastide town of Sauveterre-de-Rouergue.

The mountains of Aubrac

The Aubrac lies to the south of St-Flour, east of the valley of the River Truyère and north of the valley of the Lot. It's a region of bleak, windswept uplands with long views and huge skies, dotted with glacial lakes and granite villages hunkered down out of the weather. The highest points are between 1200m and 1400m, and there are more cows up here than people; you see them grazing the boggy, peaty pastures, divided by dry-stone walls and turf-brown streams. There are few trees: a scatter of willow and ash and the occasional stand of hardy beeches on the tops, and only abandoned shepherds' huts testify to more populous times. It's an area that's invisible in bad weather, but which, in good conditions, has a bleak beauty, little disturbed by tourism or modernization.

Aumont-Aubrac and Aubrac

The waymarked Tour d'Aubrac footpath does a complete circuit of the area in around ten days, starting from the town of AUMONT-AUBRAC, where you'll find Chez Camillou at 10 rue Languedoc (☎04.66.42.80.22, @camillou @clubinternet.fr; 🍴; restaurant from €16; periodic closings mid-Nov to mid-Feb), the Relais de Peyre, across the street at no. 9 (☎04.66.42.85.88, ☎04.66.42.90.08; 🍴; closed Jan; restaurant €14.50–23.50), and a municipal campsite (☎04.66.42.80.02). The tourist office is on a small side street to the right of the town hall (Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm & 3–6pm). There is also a daily train connection on the Millau–St-Flour line.

The marathon GR65 from Le Puy to Santiago de Compostela in Spain also crosses the area from northeast to southwest en route to Conques. In fact, the tiny village of AUBRAC, which gave its name to the region, owes its existence to this Santiago pilgrim route; around 1120, a way-station was opened here for the express purpose of providing shelter for the pilgrims on these inhospitable heights. Little remains of it today, beyond the windy Tour des Anglais, into which is incorporated the friendly Hôtel de la Dômerie (☎05.65.44.28.42, ☎05.65.44.21.47; 🍴; closed mid-Nov to April; restaurant €18–37).

St-Urcize and Nasbinals

This is the wildest and most starkly beautiful part of the Aubrac. The close-huddled village of ST-URCIZE, 13km north of the town of Aubrac, hangs off the side of the valley of the River Lhère, with a lovely Romanesque church at its centre and a World War I memorial, with so many names on it you wouldn't have thought it possible such a small place could furnish so much cannon fodder. The village is ghostly out of season, with most of the unspoiled granite houses owned by people who live elsewhere. Should you wish to stay, there's a campsite and the welcoming Hôtel Remise (☎04.71.23.20.02, ☎04.71.23.20.02; 🍴; excellent food for around €15; closed Jan). On the other hand, if you can afford it, it would be a shame to pass up Guy Prouhèze, on 2 rte de Languedoc (☎04.66.42.80.07, 🌐www.prouheze.com; closed Nov–March; 🍴), a hotel featuring a famed gastronomique restaurant (menus €31–89; closed Sun noon & Mon). Those on a budget can enjoy a gourmet experience at L'Ousta Bas (☎04.66.42.87.44; closed off season Tues & Wed and weekdays Nov–March), which has terroir menus from €14.50.

NASBINALS, 8km to the southeast, is rather bigger and livelier, and something of a cross-country ski resort in winter. It, too, has a beautiful small-scale church of the twelfth century, joined onto the adjacent house with a round fortified tower incorporated in the transept wall by the entrance. Just above the building, the Hôtel de La Route d'Argent (☎04.66.32.50.03, ☎04.66.32.56.77; ②) provides comfortable accommodation and good food (from €18). The friendly English- and German-speaking village tourist office is on the other side of the road (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–noon & 2.30–6pm, Sun 10am–noon; Sept–June Mon & Wed–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎04.66.32.55.73). For Internet access there's a computer at Café Du Foirail on place du Foirail on the edge of town. A campsite (☎04.66.32.50.17) and gîte d'été (☎04.66.32.50.65; meals available) are located on the St-Urcize road.

Laguiole

Seventeen kilometres west of St-Urcize and 24km north of Espalion, LAGUIOLE passes for a substantial town in these parts. Derived from the Occitan word for “little church”, it's a name which now stands for knives and cheese. The knives, which draw hordes of French to the town's many shops, are characterized by a long, pointed blade and bone handle that fits the palm; the genuine article should bear the effigy of a bee stamped on the clasp that holds the blade open. It's an industry that started in the nineteenth century, then moved to industrial Thiers, outside Clermont-Ferrand, before returning to Laguiole in 1987, when the Société Laguiole (the only outlet for the genuine article) opened a factory designed by Philippe Starck on the St-Urcize road, with a giant knife projecting from the roof of the windowless all-aluminium building. They have a shop on the main through-road, on the corner of the central marketplace (🌐www.forge-de-laguiole.com). Laguiole's cheese-making tradition dates back to the twelfth century; unpasteurized cow's milk is formed into massive cylindrical cheeses, and aged up to eighteen months. The hard, tangy result is a world apart from neighbouring Roquefort; to sample or buy, the factory outlet on the north edge of town is the best bargain.

There's nothing of great significance to see in the village, though the Musée du Haut-Rouergue (irregular hours; free), with its collection of objects illustrative of the pastoral life, might be of interest. Nonetheless, it is a relatively metropolitan base for exploring round about.

The tourist office is in place du Mairie (Mon–Sat 10am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 10.30am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; ☎05.65.44.35.94, 🌐www.laguiole-online.com). For first-class accommodation, Michel Bras, a highly rated hotel (☎05.65.51.18.20, 🌐www.michel-bras.fr; ③) with one of the country's finest restaurants (menus €49–143) is located just outside of town on the route d'Aubrac. For the more budget conscious there are several hotels on the main street. Try the Aubrac opposite the marketplace (☎05.65.44.32.13, 🌐www.hotel-aubrac.fr; ②; restaurant from €9.70), or the Grand Hôtel Auguy (☎05.65.44.31.11, 🌐www.hotel-auguy.fr; ④), 2 allée de l'Amicale, with a good restaurant with menus at €28–72. For more alternative accommodation try the tiny Hotel Nou 4 on rue Bardière, a cosy cross between a café-restaurant, boutique and hotel (☎05.65.51.68.30, 🌐www.nou4.com; ②).

Out of town, there's a sort of chambre d'hôte at Le Combaire, in a quiet rural setting 3km west on the D42 (☎05.65.44.33.26, ☎05.65.44.37.38; ②); gîtes d'été at Le Vaysaire (☎05.65.48.44.69) and Soulages-Bonneval (☎05.65.44.42.18, ☎05.65.44.42.80; meals available), 5km away on the D54; and a municipal campsite (☎05.65.44.39.72; closed mid-Sept to mid-May) on the St-Urcize road. Communications, however, are not good, and if you don't have a car your only chance of getting in or out is the daily bus to Rodez.

Marvejols

MARVEJOLS lies at the southeast extremity of the Aubrac, on the main N9 road and the Paris–Béziers train line. The country changes drastically as you approach. The bare, granite-strewn plateau opens into a wide deep basin, wooded with pines and punctuated by the erosion-formed table-topped pinnacles known hereabouts as trucs. It's a small, undeveloped and unpretentious country town, whose ancient streets are contained within surviving medieval gates, and there's little to do beyond savouring the atmosphere.

The tourist office is in the main gateway on the main road (June–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–7pm, Sun 10am–noon; Oct–May Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.66.32.02.14, 🌐www.ville-marvejols.fr). Should you need to stay, the pleasant Hôtel les Rochers (☎04.66.32.10.58, 📧hotel.rocher@worldonline.fr; 🍽️; good restaurant at €14–30), is opposite the gare SNCF, which is 800m uphill to the right off the N9 in the direction of Chirac. The Domaine de Carrière (☎04.66.32.28.14, ☎04.66.32.49.60; 🍴) an eighteenth-century mansion on the edge of town also offers rooms, as well as excellent dining (from €22). There's a campsite beside a tributary stream on the other side of the River Colagne from the town.

Rodez and the upper valley of the Lot

A particularly beautiful and out-of-the-way stretch of country lies on the southwestern periphery of the Massif Central, bordered roughly by the valley of the River Lot in the north and the Viaur in the south. The upland areas are open and wide, with views east to the mountains of the Cévennes and south to the Monts de Lacaune and the Monts de l'Espinouse. Rodez, capital of the Rouergue, with a fine cathedral, is the only place of any size, accessible on the main train and bus routes. But the most dramatic places are in the river valleys, in particular the great abbey of Conques and the small towns of Entraygues and Estaing.

Wolves and the Bête du Gévaudan

In Marvejols, at the junction of the bridge across the Colagne and the N9, there stands a hideous, flattened-out bronze statue of a semi-wolf, which represents the terrible legendary Bête du Gévaudan, supposedly the culprit of a series of horrific attacks in the eighteenth century. Between 1764 and 1767, the whole area between here and Le Puy was terrorized, and 25 women, 68 children and 6 men were slain. The king sent his dragoons, then his best huntsman, who eventually found and killed an enormous wolf, but the mysterious deaths continued until one Jean Chastel shot another wolf near Saugues.

It has never been established if a wolf was really guilty of these deaths – a wolf that attacked women and children almost exclusively, that moved about so rapidly, that never touched a sheep – and the question remains whether it was perhaps a human psychopath.

If you would like reassurance about the temperament of real wolves, visit the Parc Zoologique du Gévaudan in the hamlet of Ste-Lucie just off the N9, 9km north of Marvejols, where more than a hundred wolves live in semi-liberty (🌐www.loupsdugevaudan.com; guided visits roughly every one and a half hours: daily 10am–6pm; €6.50), the first to do so in France since the beginning of the last century.

Rodez

Until the 1960s, RODEZ and the Rouergue were synonymous with back-country poverty and underdevelopment. Today it's an active and prosperous provincial town with a charming, renovated centre, even though the approach, through spreading commercial districts, is uninspiring.

Built on high ground above the River Aveyron, the old town, dominated by the massive red-sandstone Cathédrale Notre-Dame, is visible for kilometres around. No matter from what direction you approach, you'll find yourself in the place d'Armes, where the cathedral's plain, fortress-like west front and the seventeenth-century bishop's palace sit side by side – both buildings were incorporated into the town's defences. The Gothic cathedral, its plain facade relieved only by an elaborately flowery rose window, was begun in 1277 and took three hundred years to complete. Towering over the square is the cathedral's 87-metre belfry, decorated with pinnacles, balustrades and statuary almost as fantastical as that of Strasbourg cathedral. The impressively spacious interior, architecturally as plain as the facade, is adorned with a magnificently extravagant seventeenth-century walnut organ loft and choir stalls that were crafted by André Sulpice in 1468.

Leaving by the splendid south porch, you find yourself in the tiny place Rozier in front of the fifteenth-century Maison Cannoniale, whose courtyard is guarded by jutting turrets. From the back of the cathedral to the north and the south, a network of well-restored medieval streets connects place de-Gaulle, place de la Préfecture and the attractive place du Bourg, with its fine sixteenth-century houses. In place Foch, just south of the cathedral, the Baroque chapel of the old lycée is worth a look for its amazing painted ceiling, while in place Raynaldy, the modern Hôtel de Ville and the médiathèque are interesting examples of attempts to graft modern styles onto old buildings.

Practicalities

The tourist office is situated on place Foch, just off boulevard Gambetta and the place d'Armes, near the cathedral (June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm & Sun 10am–noon; Oct–May Mon 2.30–6pm, Tues–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm, Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm; ☎05.65.75.76.77, 🌐www.ot-rodez.fr). The gare routière is on avenue V.-Hugo (☎05.65.68.11.13), and the gare SNCF on boulevard Joffre, on the northern edge of town.

For reasonable, if somewhat charmless, hotel accommodation, try the Hôtel des Voyageurs at 22 av Maréchal-Joffre (☎05.65.42.08.41; 📞05.65.78.90.23; 📍1), or the better Hôtel du Clocher, off the east end of the cathedral at 4 rue Séguy (☎05.65.68.10.16; 📍2). More upmarket is La Tour Maje, on boulevard Gally behind the tourist office (☎05.65.68.34.68, 🌐www.hotel-tour-maje.fr; 📍3), a modern building tacked onto a medieval tower. Hotel Le Broussy, recognizable by its beautiful Art Deco facade on avenue Victor-Hugo next to the cathedral, provides stylish accommodation and a leisurely terrasse restaurant (☎05.65.68.18.71; 📍4; menus €10).

Budget accommodation is available at the HI hostel in ONET-LE-CHÂTEAU, 3km to the north at 26 bd des Capucines, Quatre-Saisons (☎05.65.77.51.05, 📧ft-aj-rodez@wanadoo.fr; bus #1 or #3, direction “Quatre Saisons”, stop “Marché d'Oc/Les Rosiers/Capucine”), with a good canteen serving local specialties for around €7. Rodez' municipal campsite (☎05.65.67.09.52; closed Oct–May) is on the riverbank in the quartier Layoule, about 1km from the centre.

As for eating, one of the best places to sample local cuisine is La Taverne, 23 rue de l'Embergue (closed Sun; menus from €10.50), with an attractive terrace at the back, while the place to go for more gourmet food is the classy Goûts et Couleurs, 38 rue Bonald (closed Sun & Mon), where menus range from €26 to €60. Le Bistroquet, 17 rue du Bal, off place d'Olmet (closed Sun & Mon), does good salads and grills for around €11. For a drink, head for the Café de la Paix, on place Jean-Jaurès, or Au Bureau, in the Tour Maje. The most central Internet access, Resolument Plus Net, is at 11 rue Bêteille (☎05.65.75.66.87, Tues–Thurs 11am–10pm, Fri–Sat 11am–midnight).

Sauveterre-de-Rouergue and the gorges of the Viaur

Forty kilometres southwest of Rodez and 6.5km northwest of Naucelle, SAUVETERRE-DE-ROUERGUE makes the most rewarding side trip in this part of the Rouergue. It is a perfect, otherworldly bastide, founded in 1281, with a large, wide central square, part cobbled, part gravelled, and surrounded by stone and half-timbered houses built over arcaded ground floors. Narrow streets lead off to the outer road, lined with stone-built houses the colour of rusty iron. On summer evenings, pétanque players come out to roll their boules beneath chestnut and plane trees, while swallows and swifts swoop and dive overhead.

In summer, a bus runs once a weekday here in the late afternoon from Rodez. The tourist office is in the main square (June–Sept Mon–Sun 10am–1pm & 2.30–7pm, Fri until 9pm; ☎05.65.72.02.52). There are several agreeable hotels, including the cheap and charming 🏠 Hôtel La Grappe d'Or, on the outer road (☎05.65.72.00.62; 📍), whose restaurant (closed Oct–April) offers an excellent menu at €13.50, with dishes like gésiers chauds, tripoux, cheese, ice cream and fouace (a kind of sweet cake). More upmarket is the Sénéchal, at the entrance to the village (☎05.65.71.29.00, 🌐www.senechal.net; 📍; closed Jan to late March), with an indoor pool and an excellent restaurant (closed Mon plus Tues lunch; menus €24–99). There's also a camp-site, just off the D997 (☎05.65.47.05.32).

The country round about, known as the Ségala, is high (around 500m) and wide, cut by sudden and deep river valleys full of lush greenery. The most spectacular of these is the valley of the River Viaur to the south and west of Sauveterre, where a car is essential. If you're heading west towards Najac, there's a marvellous backcountry route through La Salvetat, crossing the Viaur at Bellecombe and again at Moulin-de-Bar, where there's a riverside campsite, Le Gonnassou. The wartime Resistance was very active hereabouts and there are numerous memorials to the Resistance fighters who lost their lives in the aftermath of the D-day landings. There is a particularly interesting one beside the tiny church in Jouqueviel, further downstream, dedicated to a unit of Polish volunteers and 161 escaped Soviet POWs.

Conques

CONQUES, 37km north of Rodez, is one of the great villages of southwest France. It occupies a spectacular position on the flanks of the steep, densely wooded gorge of the little River Dourdou, a tributary of the Lot. For all its glory, Conques is not easy to get to. The only public transport to the village is a seasonal bus that runs up the Tarn valley from Entreaygues via Vieilleville and as far as St-Geniez d'Olt. The shuttle makes one run in each direction (June & Sept Mon; July–Aug Tues, Thurs & Sat; confirm departure times with the tourist office at Conques), allowing you to visit Conques and return the same day.

It's the abbey which brought the village into existence. Its origins go back to a hermit called Dadon who settled here around 800 AD and founded a community of Benedictine monks, one of whom pilfered the relics of the martyred girl, Ste Foy, from the monastery at Agen. Known for her ability to cure blindness and liberate captives, Ste Foy's presence brought the pilgrims flocking to Conques in ever-increasing numbers, which earned the abbey a prime place on the pilgrimage route to Compostela.

The abbey church

At the village's centre, dominating the landscape, stands the renowned Romanesque church of Ste-Foy, whose giant pointed towers are echoed in those of the medieval houses that cluster tightly about it. Begun in the eleventh century, its plain fortress-like facade rises on a small cobbled square beside the tourist office and pilgrims' fountain, the slightly shiny silver-grey schist prettily offset by the greenery and flowers of the terraced gardens.

In startling contrast to this plainness, the elaborately sculpted Last Judgement in the tympaanum above the door admonishes all who see it to espouse virtue and eschew vice (ask at the tourist office for guided tours of the tympanum and the tribunes; 45min; €3.30). Christ sits in judgement in the centre, with the chosen on his right hand, among them Dadon the hermit and the emperor Charlemagne, while his left hand directs the damned to Hell, as usual so much more graphically and interestingly portrayed with all its gory tortures than the boring bliss of Paradise, depicted in the bottom left panel.

The inside of the church was designed to accommodate the large numbers of pilgrims and channel them down the aisles and round the ambulatory. From here they could contemplate Ste Foy's relics displayed in the choir, encircled by a lovely wrought-iron screen, still in place. There is some fine carving on the capitals, especially in the triforium arches, too high up to see from the nave: you need to climb to the organ loft, which gives you a superb perspective on the whole interior. This is also a good place to admire the windows, designed by the Abstract artist Pierre Soulages, which consist of plain plates of glass that subtly change colour with the light outside.

The unrivalled asset of this church is the survival of its medieval treasure of extraordinarily rich, bejewelled reliquaries, including a gilded statue of Ste Foy, bits of which are as old as the fifth century, and one known as the A of Charlemagne, because it is thought to have been the first in a series given as presents by the emperor to monasteries he founded. Writing in 1010, a cleric named Bernard d'Angers gave an idea of the effect of these wonders on the medieval pilgrim: "The crowd of people prostrating themselves on the ground was so dense it was impossible to kneel down. ... When they saw it for the first time [Ste Foy], all in gold and sparkling with precious stones and looking like a human face, the majority of the peasants thought that the statue was really looking at them and answering their prayers with her eyes." The treasure is kept in a room adjoining the now ruined cloister (daily: April–Sept 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; Oct–March 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €6); the second part of the Conques museum, displayed on three floors of a house on the cathedral square, consists of a miscellany of sixteenth-century and later tapestries, furnishings and assorted bits of medieval masonry.

By far the best way to experience the beauty of Conques is by visiting the church at around 9.30pm on a summer evening for the Nocturne des Tribunes. The church is opened to the public and is beautifully illuminated while an organist or pianist fills it with music (€5).

△ Abbey church of Ste-Foy, Conques

The village

The village of Conques is very small, largely depopulated and mainly contained within the medieval walls, parts of which still survive, along with three of its gates. The houses date mainly from the late Middle Ages. The whole ensemble of cobbled lanes and stairways is a pleasure to stroll through. There are two main streets, the old rue Haute, or “upper street”, which was the route for the pilgrims coming from Estaing and Le Puy and passing onto Figeac and Cahors through the Porte de la Vinzelle; and the lane, now rue Charlemagne, which leads steeply downhill through the Porte de Barry to the river and the ancient Pont Romain, with the little chapel of St-Roch off to the left, from where you get a fine view of the village and church. Better still: climb the road on the far side of the valley. The rather grandiose-sounding European centre for medieval art and civilization, hidden in a bunker right at the top of the hill (9am–noon & 2–6pm), sometimes has exhibitions and displays. Throughout August, the village hosts a prestigious classical music festival, most of the concerts taking place at the abbey church; contact the tourist office for more information.

Walkers can use sections of the GR65 and GR62, both of which pass through the village; the tourist office will provide information about shorter local walks.

Practicalities

The tourist office is on the square beside the church (daily: April–Sept 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; Oct–March 10am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎08.20.82.08.03, 🌐www.conques.fr; Internet access available). For somewhere central to stay, the Auberge St-Jacques (☎05.65.72.86.36, 🌐www.aubergestjacques.fr; 📍), near the church, provides good-value, old-fashioned accommodation and also has a popular restaurant, with menus from €15 and plats du jour at €8–11. A good alternative is the Auberge du Pont Romain, on the main road below the hill on which Conques stands (☎05.65.69.84.07, ☎05.65.69.85.12; 📍; closed first two weeks Nov; menus from €13) – it’s a twenty-minute walk from here to the church. A little way upstream, the attractive Moulin de Cambelong (☎05.65.72.84.77, 🌐www.moulin-de-cambelong.com; 📍) offers more comfort – some rooms have spacious wooden balconies with great views of the river – and a first-rate restaurant, specializing in duck dishes (à la carte from €45).

There are several campsites in Conques: try Beau Rivage (☎05.65.69.82.23; closed Oct–March), on the banks of the Dourdou, just below the village, St-Cyprien-sur-Dourdou (☎05.65.72.80.52), 7km to the south, or Le Moulin (☎05.65.72.87.28; closed Nov–March), at Grand-Vabre, 5km downstream.

The upper valley: Grand-Vabre to Entraygues

The most beautiful stretch of the Lot Valley is the 21.5km between the bridge of Coursavy, below Grand-Vabre, just north of Conques, and Entraygues: deep, narrow and wild, with the river running full and strong, as yet unaffected by the dams higher up, with scattered farms and houses high on the hillsides among long-abandoned terracing. The shady, tree-tunnelled road is level and not heavily used, making it ideal for cycling.

There are two hotels 6.5km east in VIEILLEVIE, where canoe rental is also available: the Hôtel de la Terrasse (☎04.71.49.94.00, 📧hotel-de-la-terrasse@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed mid-Nov to April; restaurant €16–32) and the ramshackle but homely Le Cantou (☎04.71.49.98.82; 📍; restaurant from €13.50). A further possibility is the delightful Auberge du Fel, some 10km further on, high on the north slopes of the valley in the hamlet of LE FEL (☎05.65.44.52.30, 🌐www.auberge-du-fel.com; 📍; closed mid-Nov to March; excellent restaurant with menus from €18–36), which by an unexpected quirk of climate produces a little local wine. There is also a beautifully sited municipal campsite high on the hillside (☎05.65.44.51.86; closed Oct–May).

Entraygues and around

ENTRAYGUES, with its riverside streets and attractive grey houses, has an airy, open feel that belies its mountain sleepiness. It lies right in the angle of the junction of the Lot with the equally beautiful River Truyère. The brown towers of a thirteenth-century château overlook the meeting of the waters, and a magnificent four-arched bridge of the same date crosses the Truyère a little way upstream, alongside the ancient tanners' houses.

The tourist office is on place de la République (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 3–7pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon 2–6pm, Tues–Fri 10am–12.15pm & 2–6pm, Sat 10am–12.15pm & 2–5pm; ☎05.65.44.56.10). It frequently remains open outside of its official hours and will provide information about walking, mountain biking and canoeing in the area. Reasonable places to stay include the Hôtel Le Centre, on the main street (☎05.65.44.51.19, ☎05.65.48.63.09; 🍷; menus €11–29), and the Lion d'Or, on the corner of the main street and the bank of the Lot (☎05.65.44.50.01, ☎05.65.44.55.43; 🍷), with a covered swimming pool and garden and attached restaurant (from €15). There's also a campsite, Le Val-de-Saures (☎05.65.44.56.92; closed Oct–April), and two gîtes d'étape – Mme Galan (☎05.65.44.58.44) and Le Battedou (☎05.65.48.61.62) – on the GR65 at GOLINHAC, about 7km south of Entraygues on the other side of the Lot. There is a bus to Aurillac (Tues–Fri 12.50pm from the post office) in the north and Rodez (Mon–Sat) to the south.

There are further accommodation options at ESTAING, another beautiful village huddled round a rocky bluff and castle in a bend of the Lot about 10km beyond Golinac. The Hôtel aux Armes d'Estaing, named after the family who occupied the castle for five hundred years, offers attractive rooms and very good food in the centre of the village (☎05.65.44.70.02, ✉remi.catusse@wanadoo.fr; 🍷; closed mid-Nov to mid-March; restaurant from €14–35). There's also a municipal campsite (☎05.65.44.72.77; closed Oct–April) and gîte d'étape on the GR65 (☎05.65.44.71.74). A date to watch out for is the first Sunday in July when the place fills up with people, many in medieval dress, who come to honour the relics of St Fleuret, bishop of Clermont, who died here in 621 AD and is buried in the fifteenth-century church by the castle.

Espalion

The substantial little town of ESPALION lies in a mild, fertile opening in the valley of the Lot, 10km from Estaing and 32km northeast of Rodez. It was the “first smile of the south” to the muleteers, pilgrims and other travellers coming down from the rude heights of the Massif Central and places north. Home town of Benoît Rouquayrol and Auguste Denayrouze, inventors of diving suits, Espalion is best known in France for its exiles, in particular its countless sons and daughters who set up in the café business in Paris from the 1850s onwards.

The only interesting part of town is the riverside quarter, with its galleried and balconied old houses, once used as tanneries, hanging over the water. The finest view of the area is from the Pont Neuf, where the main road to Rodez crosses the Lot, as just upstream there's a lovely red sandstone packhorse bridge with the domed and turreted château dating from 1572 right behind it.

Surprisingly, there's an interesting museum dedicated principally to the life of the region: Musée Joseph Vaylet, in an old medieval church, on the main road, boulevard Poulenc (daily July–Sept 10am–noon & 2–7pm; Oct–June Wed–Sat & Sun 2–6pm; €4) contains mainly furniture and domestic objects. Here you will also find the Musée du Scaphandre which showcases the diving gear invented by the two Espalionnais mentioned above as well as other objects of a sub-aquatic nature (📞 www.musee-scaphandre.com).

Don't miss the glorious little twelfth-century Romanesque church of St-Hilarion de Perse, built on the spot, so the story goes, where, in the reign of Charlemagne, the Saracens lopped off the head of St Hilarion. It sits on the edge of the cemetery, about fifteen minutes' walk to the left of the bridge on the château side of the river, past the campsite. Built in red sandstone, with a wall belfry and wide porch with sculpted tympanum and dozens of figures adorning the corbel ends of the apse, it's a delight.

Also well worth a visit is the Château de Calmont d'Olt (July & Aug daily 9am–noon & 2–7pm; €6.75; 📞 www.chateaucalmont.org), for its unbeatable views of the town and the country beyond. It's a rough and atmospheric old fortress dating from the eleventh century, on the very peak of an abrupt bluff, 535m high and a stiff 1km climb above the town on the south bank. Particularly good for children is a regular programme of activities throughout the day (afternoon only out of season), including demonstrations of medieval siege engines and artillery.

Practicalities

The tourist office is just across the PontVieux in rue St-Antoine (June & Sept Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm & Sat 10am–noon & 2.30–5.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Fri 10am–1pm & 2–7pm, Sat 10am–1pm & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; Oct–May Tues–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 10am–noon & 2.30–5.30pm; 📞 05.65.44.10.63, 📞 www.ot-espalion.fr). For accommodation, there's no better place to stay than the Hôtel Moderne on the crossroads in the middle of town at 27 bd de Guizard (📞 05.65.44.05.11, 📞 www.hotelmoderne12.com; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec). The rooms are comfortable but, more importantly, its restaurant is first-rate, especially for river fish (menus from €12–45). There's also a municipal gîte (📞 06.77.58.53.08) at 5 rue St-Joseph. A riverside campsite, Roc de l'Arche, sits behind the château (📞 05.65.44.06.79; closed Sept to mid-April), but better if you have the time and the means, is the prettier, simpler and cheaper riverside Belle Rive (📞 05.65.44.05.85; closed Oct to mid-May) in the attractive village of ST-CÔME D'OLT, another 4km upstream, where there's also a gîte d'étape in a beautiful old house on rue St-Joseph (📞 05.65.51.10.30, 📧 mairie-espalion@wanadoo.fr; closed Nov–Feb) where you'll find the GR65, GR6 and GR620.

Espalion has a second superb restaurant, Méjane, by the old bridge (📞 05.65.48.22.37; closed Sun eve, & Mon lunch & Wed in July & Aug; menus €16–53), specializing in regional cuisine with a post-nouvelle influence, while for uncomplicated eating, there are several brasseries on the main through-street.

Millau, Roquefort and the Gorges du Tarn

MILLAU, sub-prefecture of the Aveyron département and second town after Rodez in the old province of Rouergue, occupies a beautiful site in a bend of the River Tarn at its junction with the Dourbie. It's enclosed on all sides by impressive white cliffs, formed where the rivers have worn away the edges of the causses, especially on the north side, where the spectacular table-top hill of the Puech d'Andan stands sentinel over the town. From medieval until modern times, thanks to its proximity to the sheep pastures of the causses, the town was a major manufacturer of leather goods, especially gloves. Although outclassed by cheaper producers in the mass market and suffering serious unemployment as a result, Millau still leads in top-of-the-range goods.

△ Grand Viaduc du Millau

In recent years the town hit the headlines with the construction of the astonishing Grand Viaduc du Millau in 2004, a 2.5-kilometre bridge supported by seven enormous pillars that, at times, puncture through the cloud level (the tallest is 326m high, taller than the Eiffel tower). Designed by British architects Foster and Partners (of Sir Norman Foster fame), French engineer Michel Virbgeux (whose previous credits include the wonderful Pont de Normandie) and Eiffage, a construction firm that traces its heritage back to Gustave Eiffel, it is as much a work of art as it is a way of getting traffic to the Côte d'Azur from Paris faster than of old.

Arrival, information and accommodation

From the bus and train stations it's about a ten-minute walk down rue Alfred-Merle to the main square, place du Mandarous. The tourist office is on place du Beffroi in the centre of the old town (July & Aug Mon–Sun 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sat 9am–6.30pm, Sun 9.30am–4pm; ☎ 05.65.60.02.42, 🌐 www.ot-millau.fr). Bikes and outdoor equipment can be rented from Roc et Canyon, 55 av Jean-Jaurès.

For an overnight stay, try the good-value Hôtel du Commerce, 8 place du Mandarous (☎ 05.65.60.00.56, ☎ 05.65.47.66.01; 📍), with clean, well-furnished rooms; those at the back are best to avoid any noise from the square. A bit more expensive, but with more character, is Des Causses, in an attractive building on the N9 at 56 av Jean-Jaurès (☎05.65.60.03.19; ①–④), which has a reasonable restaurant (from €30). Even more evocative is the Emma Calvé at 28 rue Jean-Jaurès (☎05.65.60.13.49, @emmacalve.iffance.com; ⑤), once home of the popular nineteenth-century singer of that name and with decor and furnishings evocative of the old bourgeoisie. Though modern and characterless, Hotel de la Capelle (☎05.65.60.14.72; ①) is a good-value option with its clean rooms and pleasant location, overlooking the Puech d'Andan at 7 place de la Fraternité. There are several gîtes, and scattered round about are several campsites: one of the best is Cureplat (☎05.65.60.15.75; closed Oct–March) at 121 av de Millau Plage, on the left bank of the Tarn, north of the confluence with the Dourbie – take the bridge at the end of avenue Gambetta. For Internet access, Cyber-café at 5 rue Droite is the most central option (Mon–Sat 10am–8pm).

The Town

Millau is a very pleasant, lively provincial town whose clean and well-preserved old streets have a summery, southern charm. It owes its original prosperity to its position on the ford where the Roman road from Languedoc to the north crossed the Tarn, marked today by the truncated remains of a medieval bridge surmounted by a watermill jutting out into the river beside the modern bridge.

Whether you arrive from north or south, you'll find yourself sooner or later in place du Mandarous, the main square, where avenue de la République, the road to Rodez, begins. South of here, the old town is built a little way back from the river to avoid floods and contained within an almost circular ring of shady boulevards. The rue Droite cuts through the centre, linking the three squares: place Emma-Calvé, place des Halles and place Foch. The prettiest by far is place Foch, with its cafés, shaded by two big plane trees and bordered by houses supported on stone pillars; some are twelfth century. In one corner, the church of Notre-Dame is worth a look for its octagonal Toulouse-style belfry, originally Romanesque. In the other, there's the very interesting Musée de Millau (May–Sept daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug 10am–6pm; Oct–March closed Sun; €5), housed in a stately eighteenth-century mansion. Its collections revolve around the bizarre combination of archeology and gloves, and include the magnificent red pottery of the Graufesenque works (see below), as well as a complete 180-million-year-old plesiosaurus. Millau's other two squares have been the subject of some rather questionable attempts at reconciling old stones and Richard Rogers-inspired contemporary urban design. Off one of these squares, place Emma-Calvé, the clock tower (June & Sept Mon–Sat 10–11.30am & 3–5.30pm; July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 3.30–6pm; €3.50) is worth a climb for the great all-round view. Take a look also in the streets off the square – rue du Voultre, rue de la Peyrollerie and their tributaries – for a sense of the old working-class and bourgeois districts.

Clear evidence of the town's importance in Roman times is to be seen in the Graufesenque pottery works archeology museum, just upstream on the south bank (Tues–Sun: May & Sept 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm; Oct–April 9am–noon & 2–5pm; €4), whose renowned red terracotta ware (terra sigillata) was distributed throughout the Roman world.

Millau has some of the best conditions in France for paragliding due to the constant currents of warm air that blow down the causee. To try yourself arrange a tandem flight with the professional pilots at ✈️ challeng'Air (☎06.33.43.08.63, 🌐www.challeng-air.com; English speaking; €65), a friendly family-run company located across the River Tarn on route de Millau-Plage next to Le Golf café.

Eating and drinking

If you're just looking for a quick meal, you'll find numerous brasseries and cafés on place du Mandarous. For something more traditional, dine in the magnificent surroundings of ✈️ La Mustardière at 34 av de la République (☎05.65.60.20.63; closed Dec–Feb; €33–50) which serves excellent gastronomique and terroir specialities, or the less upmarket La Braconne, on place Foch (☎05.65.60.30.93; closed Sun eve & Mon; from €17), offering high-calorie fare such as stuffed goose and pork with juniper berries. Alternatively, head for boulevard de la Capelle on the northeast side of the old town, where two good establishments spread their tables under the trees: La Mangeoire, at no. 8 (☎05.65.60.13.16; closed Mon; menu from €18–45), which serves grilled fish, meat and game dishes; and next door, La Marmite du Pêcheur, featuring menus from €18, including aligot. A popular place for a drink is La Locomotive, at 33 av Gambetta (till 2am), which has live music on summer evenings.

Roquefort-sur-Soulzon and the Abbey of Silvanès

Twenty-one kilometres south of Millau, the little village of ROQUEFORT-SUR-SOULZON has nothing to say for itself except cheese, and almost every building is devoted to the cheese-making process. What gives the cheese its special flavour is the fungus, penicillium roqueforti, that grows exclusively in the fissures in the rocks created by the collapse of the sides of the valley on which Roquefort now stands. Legend has it that once upon a time a local shepherd one day forgot his lunch of bread and cheese, and found it some months later, covered with mould. He bit tentatively and discovered to his surprise that instead of ruining the cheese, the mould had much improved its taste.

While the sheep's milk used in the making of the cheese comes from different flocks and dairies as far afield as the Pyrenees, the crucial fungus is grown here, on bread. Just 2g of powdered fungus are enough for 4000 litres of milk, which in turn makes 330 Roquefort cheeses; they are matured in Roquefort's many-layered cellars, first unwrapped for three weeks and then wrapped up again. It takes three to six months for the full flavour to develop.

Two of the cheese manufacturers have organized visits: Société (daily: July & Aug 9.30am–6.30pm; Sept–June 9.30am–noon & 1.30–5.30pm; €3) and Papillon (April–June & Sept daily 9.30–11.30am & 1.30–5.30pm; July & Aug daily 9.30am–6.30pm; Oct–March Mon–Fri 9.30–11.30am & 1.30–4.30pm; free). Each visit consists of a short film, followed by a tour of the cellars and tasting – not, in fact, very interesting.

Some 25km further south, deep in the isolation of the causses, squats the twelfth-century Cistercian Abbey of Silvanès (daily 9.15am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €2), founded in 1137 and the first Cistercian house in the region. Having largely survived the depredations of war and revolution, the abbey serves today as an important religious and cultural centre. Although you'll have to manage your own transport, it's worth visiting not only for the evocative setting, but also for the excellently preserved thirteenth-century church as well as the surviving monastic buildings, including a refectory and scriptorium dating back to the 1100s. There are a couple of hotels in the village by the abbey, but only 4km from the monastery you can stay at the magnificent sixteenth-century Château de Gissac (☎05.65.98.14.60, 🌐www.sylvanes.com; 🍷) which also offers half and full pensions.

The Gorges du Tarn

Jampacked with tourists in July and August, but absolutely spectacular nonetheless, the Gorges du Tarn cuts through the limestone plateaux of the Causse de Sauveterre and the Causse Méjean in a precipitous trench 400–500m deep and 1000–1500m wide. Its sides, cloaked with woods of feathery pine and spiked with pinnacles of eroded rock, are often sheer and always very steep, creating within them a microclimate in sharp distinction to the inhospitable plateaux above. The permanent population is tiny, though there's plenty of evidence of more populous times in abandoned houses and once-cultivated terraces. Because of the press of people and the subsequent overpricing of accommodation, the best bet, if you want to stay along the gorge, is to head up onto the Causse Méjean, where there are several small family-run hotels and chambres d'hôte, among which is the attractively sited Auberge de la Cascade in St-Chély-du-Tarn (☎04.66.48.52.82, 🌐www.aubergecascade.com; 🍷; closed Nov–March; restaurant from €15).

The most attractive section of the gorge runs northeast for 53km from the pretty village of LE ROZIER, 21km northeast of Millau, to ISPAGNAC. If you want to stay in Le Rozier, good accommodation can be found at the Grand Hôtel Voyageurs (☎05.65.62.60.09, 🌐www.hotelvoyageurs.com; 🍷; menu from €17; closed Nov–Easter) and there's a municipal campsite (☎05.65.62.63.98, ☎05.65.62.60.83; closed Oct–April). A better bet, however, is Le Vallon (☎04.66.44.21.24, 🌐www.hotel-vallon.com; 🍷) in Ispagnac, a small hotel with an excellent terroir restaurant (from €16) and which has family-size rooms and good-value half-pensions.

A narrow and very twisty road follows the right bank of the river from Le Rozier, but it's not the best way to see the scenery. For the car-borne, the best views are from the road to St-Rome-de-Dolan above Les Vignes, and from the roads out of La Malène and the attractive STE-ÉNIMIE, where you'll find a well-informed tourist office (Easter–June & Sept–Oct Mon–Fri 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–5.30pm, Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm & Sun 9am–12.30pm; Nov–Easter Mon–Fri 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–5.30pm; ☎04.66.48.53.44, 🌐www.gorgesdutarn.net). La Malène has a municipal campsite (☎04.66.48.58.55; closed mid-Oct to March) and La Blanquière site (☎04.66.48.54.93, 📧camping.blaquière@wanadoo.fr; closed mid-Sept to May), which is beautifully sited on the main road towards Les Vignes some 6km from town.

But it's best to walk if possible, or follow the river's course by boat or canoe – there are dozens of places to rent canoes (€15 per person for 2–3hr, plus pick-up). For walkers, the GR6a, a variant of the GR6 which crosses the causses, climbs steeply out of Le Rozier between the junction of the Tarn with the equally spectacular gorges of the River Jonte onto the Causse Méjean, then follows the rim of the Tarn gorge for a while before descending to rejoin the GR6 at Les Vignes (4–5hr).

Also eminently worth seeing are two beautiful caves about 25km up the Jonte from Le Rozier. Aven Armand (daily: 10am–noon, 1.30–5pm; May–Sept opens at 9.30am, 🌐www.aven-armand.com; €8.30), on the edge of the Causse Méjean, which is fitted with a funicular, claims the world's tallest stalagmite towering 30m above the cave floor. The Grotte de Dargilan (daily: April–June & Sept 10am–noon & 2–5.30pm; July & Aug 10am–6.30pm; Oct 10am–noon & 2–4.30pm; @www.grotte-dargilan.com; €8.30), on the south side of the river on the edge of the Causse Noir, known as the “pink cave” from the colour of its rock, is known as one of the country’s most beautiful stalactite caverns. HYELZAS, near the Aven Armand cave, has a gîte d’étape (☎04.66.45.66.56).

The Cévennes and Ardèche

The Cévennes mountains and River Ardèche form the southeastern defences of the Massif Central, overlooking the Rhône valley to the east and the Mediterranean littoral to the south. The bare upland landscapes of the inner or western edges are those of the central Massif. The outer edges, Mont Aigoual and its radiating valleys and the tributary valleys of the Ardèche, are distinctly Mediterranean: deep, dry, close and clothed in forests of sweet chestnut, oak and pine.

Remote and inaccessible country until well into the twentieth century, the region has bred rugged and independent inhabitants. For centuries it was the most resolute stronghold of Protestantism in France, and it was in these valleys that the persecuted Protestants put up their fiercest resistance to the tyranny of Louis XIV and Louis XV. In World War II, it was heavily committed to the Resistance, while in the aftermath of 1968, it became the promised land of the hippies – zippies, as the locals called them; they moved into the countless abandoned farms and hamlets, whose native inhabitants had been driven away by hardship and poverty. The odd hippy has stuck it out, true to the last to the alternative life. In more recent times, it has been colonized by Dutch and Germans.

The author Robert Louis Stevenson crossed it in 1878 with Modestine, a donkey he bought in miserable Le Monastier-sur-Gazeille near the astounding town of Le Puy and sold at journey’s end in the former Protestant stronghold of St-Jean-du-Gard, a now-famous route described in Travels with a Donkey (see p.1329).

The Parc National des Cévennes

The Parc National des Cévennes was created in 1970 to protect and preserve the life, landscape, flora, fauna and architectural heritage of the Cévennes. North to south, it stretches from Mende on the Lot to Le Vigan and includes both Mont Lozère and Mont Aigoual. Access, to the periphery at least, is surprisingly easy, thanks to the Paris–Clermont–Alès–Nîmes train line and the Montpellier–Mende link.

Numerous walking routes crisscross the area: GRs 6, 7 and 60 cross all or part of the range, and other paths complete various circuits. The GR66 does the tour of Mont Aigoual in 78.5km, the GR68 of Mont Lozère in 110km. Another good route is the 130-kilometre Tour des Cévennes on the GR67. If you do go off hiking, remember that these are proper mountains for all their southerly latitude. You need good hiking boots, warm and weatherproof clothing, emergency shelter, adequate food, maps and guidebooks. The current weather situation is obtainable on: ☎07.08.36.68.02 (Ardèche); ☎08.36.68.02.30 (Gard); ☎08.36.68.02.48 (Lozère).

The main information office for the park is at Florac (see p.942). It publishes numerous leaflets on the flora, fauna and traditions of the park, plus activities and routes for walkers, cyclists, canoeists and horse riders. It also provides a list of gîtes d'étape in the park and can provide information for those following Stevenson's route, including where to hire a donkey. In July and August, it's wise to book ahead for accommodation; otherwise you could find yourself sleeping out.

Mende and Mont Lozère

Capital of the Lozère département, MENDE lies well down in the deep valley of the Lot at the northern tip of the Parc des Cévennes, 28km east of Marvejols and 40km north of Florac, with train and bus links to the Paris–Nîmes and Clermont–Millau lines. It's an attractive southern town, though much of its charm is lost in the newly commercialized streets of the city centre. What Mende lacks in authenticity it makes up for in practicality: it's a great place to purchase last-minute supplies before you head off to the mountains.

Standing against the haze of the mountain background, the town's main landmark, the cathedral, owes its construction to Pope Urban V, who was born locally and wished to give something back to his native soil. Although work began in 1369, progress was hampered by war and natural disasters and the building wasn't completed until the end of the nineteenth century. The most obvious signs of its patchy construction are the two unequal towers that frame the front entrance, from where there's a fine view back along the pine-clad Lot valley. Inside is a handsome choir, and, suspended from the clerestory, eight great Aubusson tapestries, depicting the life of the Virgin. She's also present in one of the side chapels of the choir in the form of a statue made from olive wood, thought to have been brought back from the Middle East during the crusades.

Aside from the cathedral, most pleasure resides in a quiet wander in the old town's minuscule squares and narrow medieval streets, with their houses bulging outwards, as though buckling under the weight of the upper storeys. In ruie Notre-Dame, which separated the Christian from Jewish quarters in medieval times, the thirteenth-century house at no. 17 was once a synagogue. If you carry on down to the river, you'll see the medieval packhorse bridge, the Pont Notre-Dame, with its worn cobbles.

Twenty-two kilometres east of Mende, route 901 passes through a tunnel under the impressive ruins of the twelfth-century Château du Tournel. A footpath leads 500 twisting metres up above the motorway to the ruins. From this height, especially at dusk, the dark towers have an eerie looming presence above the surrounding hills giving a strong sense of its defensive advantage over the region.

Practicalities

The tourist office is on place du Foirail located at the southern end of boulevard Henri-Bourrillon, the ring road that encircles the city centre (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 3–5pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sat 9am–noon; ☎04.66.94.00.23, @www.ot-mende.fr). The gare SNCF (☎04.66.49.00.39) lies across the river, north of the centre. Buses depart from either the station or place du Foirail.

For a place to stay, best choice is the Lion d'Or at 12–14 bd Britexte (☎04.66.49.16.46, 🌐www.liondor-mende.com; 📍), set in a beautiful, renovated old building and featuring an excellent terroir restaurant (from €18). Another good choice is the pretty Hôtel de France on boulevard Lucien-Arnault, the northern part of the inner ring road (☎04.66.65.00.04, 🌐www.hoteldefrance-mende.com; 📍; closed Dec & Jan; menu from €12). Slightly further out of town, on the river at 2 av du 11-Novembre, the classy Hôtel Pont-Roupt (☎04.66.65.01.43, 🌐www.hotel-pont-roupt.com; 📍) offers such luxuries as an indoor pool, terrace and good restaurant: dishes include truite au lard and salade au Roquefort (menus €24–52). For budget travellers there's the basic and slightly dingy Hôtel Du Gévaudan (☎04.66.65.14.74; 📍) on rue d'Aigues Passes where you can take a room for as little as €18. The best restaurant in town is La Safranière in Chabrits (☎04.66.49.31.54), which daringly blends terrior and gastronomique styles (menus €20–44). Another good choice is Le Mazel (☎04.66.65.05.33; closed Mon eve & Tues; from €14), though the setting – in the only modern square in the old town – is a little disappointing. More atmospheric, Les Voutes, in a renovated medieval building at 13 rue d'Aigues-Passes, specializes in pizzas and plats du jour (from €7).

Mont Lozère

Mont Lozère is a windswept and desolate barrier of granite and yellow grassland, rising to 1699m at the summit of Finiels, still grazed by herds of cows, but in nothing like the numbers of bygone years when half the cattle in Languedoc came up here for their summer feed. Snowbound in winter and wild and dangerous in bad weather, it has claimed many a victim among lost travellers. In some of the squat granite hamlets on the northern slopes, like Servies, Auriac and Les Sagnes, you can still hear the bells, known as clochers de tourmente, that tolled in the wind to give travellers some sense of direction when the cloud was low.

If you're travelling by car from Mende, the way to the summit is via the village of LE BLEYMARD, about 30km to the east on the bank of the infant River Lot, with accommodation in the form of the comfortably rustic Hôtel La Remise (☎04.66.48.65.80, 🌐www.hotel-laremise.com; 📍; terroir restaurant from €16). From here, the D20 winds 7km up through the conifers to another country-style hotel/gîte and restaurant, the Chalet-Hotel du Mont Lozère (☎04.68.48.62.84, 🌐www.chalet-mt-lozere.fr; 📍), where it's joined by the GR7, which has taken a more direct route from Le Bleymard. This is the route that Stevenson took, waymarked as the "Tracé Historique de Stevenson". Road and footpath run together as far as the Col de Finiels, where the GR7 strikes off on its own to the southeast. The source of the River Tarn is about 3km east of the col, the summit of Lozère 2km to the west. From the col, the road and Stevenson's route drop down in tandem, through the lonely hamlet of FINIELS to the pretty but touristy village of LE PONT-DE-MONTVERT.

At Le Pont, a seventeenth-century bridge crosses the Tarn by a stone tower that once served as a tollhouse. In this building in 1702, the Abbé du Chayla, a priest appointed by the Crown to reconvert the rebellious Protestants enraged by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, set up a torture chamber to coerce the recalcitrant. Incensed by his brutality, a group of them under the leadership of one Esprit Séguier attacked and killed him on July 23. Reprisals were extreme; nearly 12,000 were executed, thus precipitating the Camisards' guerrilla war against the state (see p.859).

At the edge of the village, there's also an écomusée on the life and character of the region, the Maison du Mont Lozère (May–Sept daily 10.30am–12.30pm

& 2.30–6.30pm; €3.50). If you're tempted to stay, there's the small and atmospheric Auberge des Cévennes (☎04.66.45.80.01; 📍; closed mid-Nov to March; restaurant from €15), overlooking the bridge. There's also a gîte d'étape in the Maison du Mont Lozère (☎04.66.45.80.10 or 04.66.45.80.73; closed Jan & Feb; reservations obligatory).

Florac and Mont Aigoual

Situated 39km south of Mende, FLORAC lies in the bottom of the trench-like valley of the Tarnon just short of its junction with the Tarn. Behind the village rises the steep wall that marks the edge of the Causse Méjean. When you get here, you will have already passed the frontier between the northern and Mediterranean landscapes; the dividing line seems to be the Col de Montmirat at the western end of Mont Lozère. Once you begin the descent, the scrub and steep gullies and the tiny abandoned hamlets, with their eyeless houses oriented towards the sun, speak clearly of the south.

The village, with some 2000 inhabitants, is strung out along the left bank of the Tarnon and the main street, avenue Jean-Monestier. There's little to see, though the close lanes of the village up towards the valley side have their charms, especially the plane-shaded place du Souvenir. It is worth visiting on a Thursday during summer for the market, when you'll find the tiny streets packed with merchants and local produce. A red-schist castle stands above the village, housing the Centre d'Information du Parc National des Cévennes (Easter–Oct daily 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; Oct–Easter Mon–Fri 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎04.66.49.53.01, ✉pnc@bsi.fr). The tourist office is on avenue Jean-Monestier (Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–1pm; ☎04.66.45.01.14, 🌐www.mescvennes.com); they provide details on the year-round “Festival of Nature” programme, with guided treks around the national park. Mountain bike rental is available from Cévennes Evasion, in place Boyer (☎04.66.45.18.31).

The accommodation on offer is not fantastic. The best place is the Grand Hôtel du Parc on avenue Jean-Monestier (☎04.66.45.03.05, 🌐www.grandhotelduparc.fr; 📍; closed Dec to March; restaurant €15–30), with pleasant gardens and a pool. Les Gorges du Tarn at 48 rue de Pecheur (☎04.66.45.00.63, ✉gorges-du-tarn.adonis@wanadoo.fr; 📍) is the most comfortable option, while Au 21 Esplanade, a restaurant in the middle of the Esplanade, has six simple rooms (☎04.66.32.83.46, 📍). Local gîtes d'étape include La Carline, 18 rue du Pêcher (☎04.66.45.24.54, 🌐www.causses-cevennes.com/lagrange.htm; closed mid-Nov to Jan) and the gîte d'étape communal, 1 rue du Four (Mme Rives: ☎04.66.45.14.93, ✉mairie@ville-florac.fr; closed Dec). The best-value campsite is the municipal one at Le Pont-du-Tarn out on the road towards Ispagnac (☎04.66.45.18.26; closed mid-Oct to March).

Florac's Esplanade is a good place to look for somewhere to eat, otherwise the Adonis restaurant in the Les Gorges hotel serves high-quality local cuisine (menus €17–35; closed Sun lunch), while another good choice is the riverside La Source du Pêcher at 1 rue de Rémuret in the old town (☎04.66.45.03.01; menus from €15–30; closed Nov–Easter). Internet access can be found on rue du Pêcher at Florac-Online (Tues–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 3–7pm).

Mont Aigoual

It's 24km by road up the beautiful valley of the Tarnon to the Col de Perjuret, where a right turn will take you on to the Causse Méjean and to the strange rock formations of Nîmes-le-Vieux, and a left turn along a rising ridge a further 15km to the 1565-metre summit of Mont Aigoual (GR6, GR7, GR66). From the latter, it is said that you can see a third of France, from the Alps to the Pyrenees, with the Mediterranean coast from Marseille to Sète at your feet. It's not a craggy summit, although the ground drops away pretty steeply into the valley of the River Hérault on the south side, but the view and the sense of exposure to the elements is dramatic enough. At the summit is an observatory which has been in use for over a century. A small but interesting exhibition (May–Sept daily 10am–6pm; free) shows modern weather-forecasting techniques alongside displays of old barometers and weather vanes. The observatory also harbours a CAF refuge and gîte d'étape (☎04.67.82.62.78; closed Oct–April).

The descent to Le Vigan by the valley of the Hérault is superb; a magnificent twisty road follows the deepening ravine through dense beech and chestnut woods, to come out at the bottom in rather Italianate scenery, with tall, close-built villages and vineyards beside the stream. The closest accommodation to the summit is the Hôtel du Touring (☎04.67.82.60.04, ☎04.67.82.65.09; 🍴; restaurant menus €11–20; closed April & Nov to mid-Dec) at L'ESPÉROU, a rather soulless mountain resort just below the summit. Better to go down to the charming village of VALLERAUGUE, with its brown-grey schist houses and leafy riverside setting. There are a number of hotels here, including the welcoming Petit Luxembourg (☎04.67.82.20.44, ☎04.67.82.24.66; 🍴; menus €15–30).

The Causse du Larzac

In the 1970s, the Causse du Larzac was continually in the headlines over sustained political resistance to the high-profile presence of the French military. Originally there was a small military camp outside the village of LA CAVALLERIE on the N9, long tolerated for the cash its soldiers brought in. But in the early 1970s the army decided to expand the place and use it as a permanent strategic base, expropriating a hundred or so farms. The result was explosive. A federation was formed – Paysans du Larzac – which attracted the support of numerous ecological, left-wing and Occitan groups in a protracted campaign of resistance under the slogan “Gardarem lo Larzac” (“Let’s protect Larzac”). Successful acts of sabotage were committed, and three huge peace festivals were held here, in 1973, 1974 and 1977. The army’s plans were scotched by Mitterrand when he came to power in 1981, but you still find Larzac graffiti from here to Lyon, shorthand for opposition to the army, the state and the Parisian central government, and in favour of self-determination and independence for the south.

The best way to immerse yourself in the empty, sometimes eerie atmosphere of Larzac is to walk: GRs 7, 71 and 74 cross the plateau, though you shouldn’t attempt them without a Topo-guide. If you have no time for anything else, the area between La Couvertoirade, Le Caylar and Ganges in the foothills of the Cévennes will give you a real sense of life on the causse.

LA COUVERTOIRADE lies 5km off the main road (parking €3). Billed as a perfect “Templar” village, its present remains postdate the dissolution of that Order in the late thirteenth century. Anomalies aside, it is a striking site, still completely enclosed by its towers and walls and almost untouched by renovation. Its forty remaining inhabitants live by tourism, and you have to pay to walk around the ramparts (daily: March–June & Sept to mid-Nov 10am–noon & 2–5/6pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; €5, including a video presentation; English audio-guide available). Just outside the walls on the south side is a lavogne, a paved water hole of a kind seen all over the causse for watering the flocks, whose milk is used for Roquefort cheese. If you want to stay, there's the municipal gîte d'étape (☎05.65.58.17.75 or 06.12.50.09.86; 📍) in the far corner from the entrance, serving the GR71 and GR71C. A bus from Millau (Mon, Wed & Fri) serves the village during July & August. Half a dozen kilometres south, the closest point served by regular public transport, the village of LE CAYLAR clusters in similar fashion at the foot of a rocky outcrop, the top of which has been fashioned into a fortress – worth clambering up for the aerial view of the surrounding causse.

St-Maurice-Navacelles and the Cirque de Navacelles

If you've got your own transport and a good map, the back road from here, via St-Michel to ST-MAURICE-NAVACELLES, is strongly recommended. Wild box grows along the lanes, often meticulously clipped into hedges. Here and there among the scrubby oak and thorn or driving along the road at milking time, you pass flocks of sheep. Occasional farmhouses materialize, like Les Besses – one of the few still in use – huge, self-contained and fortress-like, with the living quarters upstairs and the sheep stalls down below. St-Maurice-Navacelles, on the GR7 and GR74, is a small and sleepy hamlet with a fine World War I memorial by Paul Dardé at its centre. Its services include a summer-only shop and a gîte (04.76.44.62.55) which also does meals. There's no official campsite, but if you ask they'll direct you to a grassy place by the cemetery, where a traditional glacière – a stone-lined pit for storing snow for use as ice before the days of refrigerators – has been restored. Its chief advantage is as a base for visiting the Cirque de Navacelles, 10km north on the D130 past the beautiful ruined seventeenth-century sheep farm of La Prunarède. The cirque is a widening in the 150-metre deep trench of the Vis gorges, formed by a now dry loop in the river that has left a neat pyramid of rock sticking up in the middle like a wheel hub. An ancient and scarcely inhabited hamlet survives in the bottom – a bizarre phenomenon in an extraordinary location, and you get literally a bird's-eye view of it from the edge of the cliff above. Both road and GR7 go through. Continuing to Le Vigan or Ganges via Montdardier, you pass a prehistoric stone circle on the left of the road, a silent and evocative place, especially in a close causse mist.

Le Vigan and the Huguenot strongholds

Only 64km from Montpellier and 18km from Ganges, LE VIGAN makes a good starting point for exploring the southern part of the Cévennes. It's a leafy, cool and thoroughly agreeable place, at its liveliest during the Fête d'Isis at the beginning of August and the colossal fair that takes over the Parc des Châtaigniers on September 9 and 22.

The prettiest part of the town is around the central place du Quai, shaded by lime trees and bordered by cafés and brasseries. From here it's only a two-minute walk south, down rue Pierre-Gorlier, to reach the gracefully arched Pont Vieux. Beside it stands the Musée Cévenol (April–Oct daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Nov–March Wed only 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €4.50), a well-presented look at traditional rural occupations in the area, including the woodcutter, butcher, shepherd and wolf-hunter. There's also a room devoted to the area's best-known twentieth-century writer, André Chamson, noted for his novels steeped in the traditions and countryside of the Cévennes. Interestingly, Coco Chanel also features in the museum: she had local family connections and it seems found inspiration for her designs in the cévenol silks.

The tourist office occupies a modern block in the centre of the place du Marché, at the opposite end of the place du Quai from the church (July & Aug Mon–Sat 8.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sat 8.30am–1pm; ☎04.67.81.01.72). For somewhere to stay, try the simple but attractive Hôtel du Commerce, with its wisteria-covered balcony and little garden, at 26 rue des Barris (☎04.67.81.03.28, 📧sarreboubee.serge@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed mid-Oct to mid-Nov). The best alternative is a couple of kilometres out of town, south towards Montdardier on the D48: the handsome old Auberge Cocagne in the village of AVÈZE (☎04.67.81.02.70, 📧auberge-cocagne@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-Feb; restaurant from €13). There are also campsites in Avèze (☎04.67.81.95.01; closed mid-Sept to mid-June), or 2km upriver from Le Vigan, on the opposite bank, is the well-shaded riverside Val de l'Arre (☎04.67.81.02.77, 🌐www.valdelarre.com/valdelarre; closed Oct–March). There's a gîte d'étape at 1 rue de la Carrierasse (☎04.67.81.01.71). One of the best places to eat in Le Vigan is Le Jardin (closed Mon), in place du Terral, just off the main square; menus start at €18 and feature French classics with a local twist, such as filet mignon with a chestnut sauce. A good alternative is Le Chandelier (closed Mon), housed in a converted cellar on rue du Pouzadou; the €13 menu includes confit de canard and a choice of delicious desserts.

From Le Vigan, or more particularly from the Pont de l'Hérault bridge, a beautiful lane (D153) slowly winds around 45km northeast through typical south Cévennes landscape – deep valleys thick with sweet chestnut and thinly peopled with isolated farms half-buried in greenery – from Sumène to St-Jean-du-Gard.

St-Jean-du-Gard and around

Thirty-two kilometres west of Alès, ST-JEAN-DU-GARD was the centre of Protestant resistance during the Camisard war in 1702–04 (see below). It straggles along the bank of the River Gardon, crossed by a graceful, arched eighteenth-century bridge, with a number of picturesque old houses still surviving in the main street, Grande-Rue. One of them contains the splendid Musée des Vallées Cévenoles (April–Oct daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; Nov–March Tues–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; €4), a museum of local life with displays of tools, trades, furniture, clothes, domestic articles and a fascinating collection of pieces related to the silk industry. The work of spinning the silk was done by women in factories and lists of regulations and rules on display give some idea of the tough conditions in which they had to work.

The tourist office is just off the main street by the post office (July & Aug Mon & Wed–Fri 9am–1pm & 3–6pm, Tues & Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–noon; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–5pm, Sat 10am–12.30pm; ☎04.66.85.32.11, 🌐otsi.st.jeandugard.free.fr). They can advise you about the times of the steam train that operates between St-Jean and Anduze (April to mid-Sept daily; mid-Sept to Oct Tues–Sun; €11 return). There's a big market all along Grande-Rue on Tuesday mornings.

The best bet for accommodation is Auberge du Peras on route de Nîmes (☎04.66.85.35.94, 🌐www.aubergeduperas.com; 📍; good restaurant from €13). There's a gîte d'étape 3km north on the D907 at LE MOULINET; contact Mme Laurtay on ☎04.66.85.10.98.

The Musée du Désert

Signposts at St-Jean direct you to the museum at MAS SOUBEYRAN, a minuscule hamlet of beautiful rough-stone houses in a gully above the village of Mialet, about 12km east. The Musée du Désert (daily: March–June & Sept–Nov 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug 9.30am–7pm; €4.50) is in the house that once belonged to Rolland, one of the Camisards' self-taught but most successful military leaders, and it remains much the same as it would have been in 1704, the year of his death. It catalogues the appalling sufferings and sheer dogged heroism of the Protestant Huguenots in defence of their freedom of conscience; and the “desert” they had to traverse between the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685 and the promulgation of the Edict of Tolerance in 1787, which restored their original rights (full emancipation came with the Declaration of the Rights of Man in the first heady months of the Revolution in 1789). During this period, they had no civil rights, unless they abjured their faith. They could not bury their dead, baptize their children or marry. Their priests were forced into exile on pain of death. The recalcitrant were subjected to the infamous dragonnades, which involved the forcible billeting of troops on private homes at the expense of the occupants. As if this were not enough, the soldiers would beat their drums continuously for days and nights in people's bedrooms in order to deprive them of sleep. Protestants were also put to death or sent to the galleys for life and their houses were destroyed.

Not surprisingly, such brutality led to armed rebellion, inspired by the prophesying of the lay preachers who had replaced the banished priests, calling for a holy war. The rebels were hopelessly outnumbered and the revolt was ruthlessly put down in 1704 (see box, p.859). On display are documents, private letters and lists of those who died for their beliefs, including the names of five thousand who died as galley slaves (galériens pour la foi) and the women who were immured in the Tour de Constance prison in Aigues-Mortes. Also on show are the chains and rough uniform of a galérien.

Prafrance and the Mine Témoin

Twelve kilometres southeast of St-Jean in the direction of Anduze, PRAFRANCE is noteworthy for La Bambouseraie (March to mid-Nov daily 9.30am–closing time dependent on season and weather; €7.50), an extraordinary and appealing garden consisting exclusively of bamboos of all shapes and sizes; the project was started in 1855 by local entrepreneur Eugène Mazel. An easy way to get here is to take the steam train (see p.945) from St-Jean-du-Gard; it takes just ten minutes.

If you want to leave the area by main-line train, the place to head for is ALÈS on the Nîmes–Paris line. This was a major coal-mining centre, though 25,000 jobs have been lost and all but two open-cast pits closed in the last four decades. Today, it has a superb museum on the history and techniques of coal-mining, known as the Mine Témoin, in the underground workings of a disused mine on chemin de la Cité Ste-Marie in the Rochebelle district (French-only guided tours daily: June 10am–7pm; July & Aug 9am–6pm; Sept–May 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–5.30pm; €6.70; last visit 1hr 30min before closing).

Aubenas and the northern Cévennes

A small but prosperous and surprisingly industrial town of around 12,000, AUBENAS sits in the middle of the southern part of the Ardèche département, high up on a hill overlooking the middle valley of the River Ardèche. Located 91km southeast of Le Puy and 42km west of Montélimar, the town, with a character and non-tourist-dependent economy of its own, makes a much better base than overly crowded places further downstream around Vallon-Pont-d'Arc.

The central knot of streets with their cobbles and bridges, occupying the highest point of town around place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville, have great charm, particularly towards place de la Grenette and place 14-Juillet. Place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville is dominated by the eleventh-century château, from which the local seigneurs ruled the area right up until the Revolution (90-min guided tours: April–June & Sept Tues & Thurs–Sat 10.30am & 2pm; July & Aug daily 11am, 2pm & 5pm; Oct & Dec–March Tues, Thurs & Sat 2pm; closed on hols; €3.50). Other sights include the heavily restored thirteenth-century St-Laurent church, which has an elaborate fifteenth-century chapel (July & Aug Mon–Fri 5pm; €3.50), and the curious seventeenth-century hexagonal Dôme Benoît chapel (July & Aug Mon–Fri 5pm; €3.50). There's a magnificent view of the Ardèche snaking up the valley from under an arch beside the castle, as there is from the end of boulevard Gambetta 200m downhill, where the tourist office is located on the (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.75.89.02.03, 🌐www.aubenasvals.com). To use the Internet go to Espace Informatique at 10 bd Saint-Didier (Mon noon–7pm, Tues–Sat 10am–7pm).

For somewhere to stay, the budget choice is the old-fashioned Hôtel des Négociants, right next to the château on place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville (☎04.75.35.18.74; 🍴; closed Oct), which does nourishing meals from €9. Hotel Le Provence on boulevard de Vernon is another cheap option (☎04.75.35.28.43, 🍴) with clean simple rooms. At the top end of the scale the 5-room La Bastide du Soleil (☎04.75.36.91.66, 🌐www.chateauxhotels.com/bastidesoleil; 🍴–🍷; closed Dec–Jan) offers a splendid blend of antique charm and modern convenience (restaurant from €30). There are many campsites to choose from in between Aubenas and Vallon. Cafés and brasseries line boulevard de Vernon on the south side of town; the best place for both food and atmosphere is Le Fournil, 34 rue du 4-Septembre, set in a fifteenth-century house at the end of Béranger-de-la-Tour, in the heart of the old town (closed Sun eve & Mon; from €18–33), or Le Coyote, 13 bd Jean-Mathon (☎04.75.35.01.28; menus from €16.50), whose specialities are fish and foie gras.

The Gorges de l'Ardèche

The Gorges de l'Ardèche begin at the Pont d'Arc, a very beautiful arch that the river has cut for itself through the limestone, just downstream from VALLON, itself 39km south of Aubenas. They continue for about 35km to ST-MARTIN-D'ARDÈCHE in the valley of the Rhône.

The fantastic gorges wind back and forth, much of the time dropping 300m straight down in the almost dead-flat scrubby Plateau des Gras. Unfortunately they are also an appalling tourist trap; the road following the rim, with spectacular viewpoints marked out at regular intervals, is jammed with traffic in summer. The river, down in the bottom, which is where you really want to be to appreciate the grandeur of the canyon, is likewise packed with canoes in high season. It is walkable, depending on the water level, but you would need to bivouac midway at either Gaud or Gournier. Generally speaking, if you can't go out of season, you're better off giving it a miss.

The plateau itself is riddled with caves. Aven Marzal, a stalactite cavern north of the gorge (daily 11am–5.30pm; €8, joint ticket with zoo €13.80), has a prehistoric zoo, which consists of reconstructions of dinosaurs and friends (Feb, March, Oct & Nov Sun & school hols 10.30am–6pm; April–Sept daily 11.30am–5pm; €8), but the frequency of visits to the cave depends on the number of visitors waiting – they are approximately every twenty minutes in July and August, falling to four per day in other months. Best of the area's caves is the Aven Orgnac, to the south of the gorge (90-min tour daily: Feb, March, Nov & Dec hols 10.30am–4.45pm; April, June & Sept 9.30am–5.30pm; July & Aug 9.30am–6.30pm; Oct 9.30am–5.15pm; €9.40), one of France's most spectacular and colourful stalactite formations. In addition to the normal tours, you can also opt for the “visites spéléologiques” hard-core caving tours; they last three and eight hours respectively and it's best to reserve two weeks ahead (☎04.75.38.65.10). There's also a very good prehistory museum (daily: March–June & Sept to mid-Nov 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug 10am–6pm; €5, joint ticket €9.20).

Further upstream near Vallon-Pont-d'arc, a complex series of cave paintings was discovered in December 1994, after being left untouched for 30,000 years, making the Chauvet-Pont d'Arc cave the oldest-known decorated cave in the world. The cave system is currently being investigated by archeologists and causing a major rethink about the history of art. The paintings depict woolly rhinos, bison, lions and bears, and display a remarkable mastery of perspective. It's unlikely that Chauvet-Pont d'Arc will ever be open to the public. However, there is a small but rewarding exhibition on the cave complex at Vallon, behind the mairie. The highlight is a video taken inside the caves, showing many of the paintings close up (Tues–Sun: mid-March to May & Sept to mid-Nov 10am–noon & 2–5.30pm; June–Aug 10am–1pm & 3–8pm; €4).

Practicalities

Accommodation in the area can be a problem during the high season. By far the best is Le Manoir du Raveyron, rue Henri-Barbusse (☎04.75.88.03.59, @le.manoir.du.raveyron@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed Oct to mid-March), with a good restaurant from €20, while another good option is the Hôtel du Tourisme, on rue du Miarou in Vallon (☎04.75.88.02.12, @www.hotel-tourisme-pont-darc.com; closed Dec–Feb; 📍). The river is lined with campsites, the cheapest being the municipal one (☎04.75.88.04.73; closed Oct–March). There's a gîte d'étape on place de la Mairie (☎04.75.88.07.87), and a tourist office on the south side of town (April & Oct Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–5pm, Sat closed at 4pm; May, June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat closed at 5pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 3–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30; Nov–March Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5pm, Sat 9am–noon ☎04.75.88.04.01, @www.vallon-pont-darc.com). Eight kilometres upstream is a well-priced municipal campsite at RUOMS (☎04.75.93.99.16; closed Oct to mid-May).

The valley of the Chassezac and the Corniche du Vivarais

Between Aubenas and Les Vans, 27km to the southwest, several wild mountain streams flow out of the northern part of the Cévennes to join the Ardèche. One of the most beautiful is the Chassezac, which rises north of Villefort and carves a dry, twisting ravine covered with pine, bracken and sweet chestnut down to LES VANS.

The centre of the town is occupied by the wide and cheerful place Léopold-Ollier. Nearby you'll find the comfortable Vivaraïs (☎04.75.37.22.73, 🌐www.le-vivaraïs-hotel.com; 📍; closed mid-Sept to April), which has a terroir restaurant (menus €13) and offers full pensions. Worth seeking out, however, is the beautifully renovated former convent, Le Carmel, at 7 montée Carmel (☎04.75.94.99.60, 🌐www.le-carmel.com; 📍; closed mid-Dec to Feb), home to one of the area's best restaurants (€25). You must book either place well in advance in high season. Other attractions are the remains of the old town and, just outside, the bizarre rock formations of the Bois de Paolive. There's a gîte d'étape across the river at Chambonas (☎04.75.37.24.99).

Thines to the Col de Meyrand

THINES is a dozen twisting kilometres up the Chassezac from Les Vans, past isolated farms, abandoned terracing and numerous tumbling streams, then a further 5km or so up a side valley. The lane that leads to it is no wider than a car, and nature encroaches on either side. Traces remain of the old mule road, and in the torrent bed stand the stumps of packhorse bridges long since carried away. Tourists are to leave their vehicles in a car park about 500m from Thines (be sure to lock up and take your valuables with you as the isolated location of the parking lot makes it a prime target for thieves). The village itself is at the end of the road high on a spur, looking back down the valley: just a handful of squat, grey-stone houses tightly grouped around a very lovely twelfth-century church, decorated with bands of red and white stone, the faces of its sculptures smashed during the Wars of Religion. At the top of the village, where the GR4 and the local GRP enter from the scrubby heights behind, there is a strange rock-cut relief commemorating Resistance people killed here in August 1943. There's also a gîte, Chez Estelle (☎04.75.36.94.33; closed Oct–March). If you call and make a reservation you can have a meal at the tiny ferme auberge, Chez Chantal (☎04.75.36.94.47, closed mid-Nov to Easter).

If your car is reasonably robust, you can get up onto the D4 on the 1000m ridge above Thines by a track that starts just above the bridge over the stream below the village. This is the so-called Corniche du Vivaraïs Cévenol, which you would otherwise have to make a long detour to reach. SABLIÈRES, another desolate Cévennes village, lies in the valley of the Drobie down to your right.

The landscape changes completely up here. The Mediterranean influence is left behind; it's windswept moorland, with natural beechwoods and mountain ash around the few bleak farms and plantations of conifers on the tops. The land rises steadily to over 1400m above the Col de Meyrand, itself at 1370m, from where it's possible to head back down to the main road and train line at LUC, 18km to the west.

Le Puy-en-Velay and the northeast

Right in the middle of the Massif Central, 78km from St-Étienne and 132km from Clermont, LE PUY-EN-VELAY, often shortened to Le Puy, is one of the most remarkable towns in the whole of France, with a landscape and architecture that are totally theatrical. Slung between the higher mountains to east and west, the countryside erupts in a chaos of volcanic acne: everywhere is a confusion of abrupt conical hills, scarred with dark outcrops of rock and topknotted with woods. Even in the centre of the town, these volcanic thrusts burst through.

▲ Church of St-Michel, Le Puy-en-Velay

In the past, Le Puy enjoyed influence and prosperity because of its ecclesiastical institutions, which were supported in part by the production of the town's famous green lentils. It was – and in a limited way, still is – a centre for pilgrims embarking on the 1600-kilometre trek to Santiago de Compostela. The specific starting point is place du Plot (also the scene of a lively Saturday market) and rue St-Jacques. History has it that Le Puy's Bishop Godescalc, in the tenth century, was the first pilgrim to make the journey. During the Wars of Religion the town managed to resist the Protestant fervour of much of the Massif Central. Recently, however, it has fallen somewhat on hard times, and its traditional industries – tanning and lace – have essentially gone bust. Even today Le Puy is somewhat inaccessible for the capital of a département: the three main roads out all cross passes more than 1000m high, which causes problems in winter.

Arrival, information and accommodation

If you arrive at the gare SNCF or gare routière (☎04.71.09.25.60), facing each other in place Maréchal-Leclerc, you'll find yourself barely a ten-minute walk from the central place du Clauzel and the tourist office (Easter–June & Sept–Oct Mon–Sat 8.30am–noon & 1.30–6.15pm, Sun 9am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 8.30am–7.30pm; Nov–Easter Mon–Sat 8.30am–noon & 1.30–

6.15pm, Sun 10am–noon; ☎04.71.09.38.41, 🌐www.ot-lepuyenvelay.fr). The town hall at 1 place Monsieur de Galard is home to the Comité Départemental du Tourisme (June–Aug Mon–Sat 8.30am–7.30pm, Sun 9am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–May Mon–Sat 8.30am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.71.07.41.54, 🌐www.mididelauvergne.com). Here you'll find information useful for venturing into the countryside. There are quite a few places to access the Internet, the best option being Cyb'Aire at 17 rue Général-Lafayette.

Le Puy doesn't have a superabundance of hotels, so it's wise to book ahead in peak season. The budget options include the clean and pleasant Dyke Hôtel, at no. 37 (☎04.71.09.05.30, ☎04.71.02.58.66; 2), and the basic Régional, at no. 36 (☎04.71.09.37.74; 1), both on boulevard Maréchal-Fayolle, the main boulevard connecting the station and place du Clauzel. On the same street but more luxurious is the renovated old mansion, at no. 34 (☎04.71.09.14.71, 🌐www.hotelrestregina.com; 3–6; restaurant €15–35). Best of all is 🐘 Le Bristol, 7 av Foch (☎04.71.09.13.38, 🌐www.hotelbristol-lepuy.com; 3), set in one of the area's oldest buildings, a former pilgrim's hostel, with a restaurant offering an excellent regional set menu from €10. For those on a tight budget, there's a good HI hostel, the attractive Centre Pierre-Cardinal at 9 rue Jules-Vallès (☎04.71.05.52.40, ✉auberge.jeunesse@mairie-le-puy-en-velay.fr; closed weekends Oct–March), just off rue Lafayette, in the heart of the old town.

Campers should head for the municipal Camping d'Audinet, near the River Loire in the northeast corner of town.

The Town

It would be hard to lose your bearings in Le Puy, for wherever you go there's no losing sight of the colossal, brick-red statue of the Virgin and Child that towers above the town on the Rocher Corneille, 755m above sea level and 130 abrupt metres above the lower town. The Virgin is cast from 213 guns captured at Sebastopol and painted red to match the tiled roofs below. You can climb up to the statue's base and, irreverent though it may seem, even up inside it (daily: mid-March to April 9am–6pm; May–Sept 9am–7pm; Oct to mid-March 10am–5pm; €3). From here you get stunning views of the city, the church of St-Michel atop its needle-pointed pinnacle a few hundred metres northwest, and the surrounding volcanic countryside.

In the maze of steep cobbled streets and steps that terrace the Rocher, lace-makers – a traditional, though now commercialized, industry – do a fine trade, with doilies and lace shawls hanging enticingly outside souvenir shops. The main focus here, in the old town, is the Byzantine-looking Cathédrale Notre-Dame-de-France, begun in the eleventh century and decorated with particoloured layers of stone and mosaic patterns and roofed with a line of six domes. It's best approached up the rue des Tables, where you get the full theatrical force of its five-storeyed west front towering above you. In the rather exotic eastern gloom of the interior, a black-faced Virgin in spreading lace and golden robes stands upon the main altar, the copy of a revered original destroyed during the Revolution; the copy is still paraded through the town every August 15. Other lesser treasures are displayed at the back of the church in the sacristy, beyond which is the entrance to the exceptionally beautiful eleventh- and twelfth-century cloister (daily: June & Sept 9am–noon & 2–6.30pm; July & Aug 9am–6.30pm; Oct–March 9am–noon & 2–5pm; €5), with its carved capitals, cornices and magnificent views of the cathedral and the towering Virgin and Child overhead. The passageway to the cloisters takes you past the so-called Fever Stone, whose origins may have been as a prehistoric dolmen and which was reputed to have the power of curing fevers. The surrounding ecclesiastical buildings and the place du For, on the south side of the cathedral, all date from the same period and form a remarkable ensemble.

It's a ten-minute walk from the cathedral to the church of St-Michel (signposts lead the way), perched atop the 82-metre needle-pointed lava pinnacle of the Rocher d'Aiguilhe. The little Romanesque church, built on Bishop Godescalc's return from his pilgrimage and consecrated in 962, is a beauty in its own right, and its improbable situation atop this ridiculous needle of rock is quite extraordinary – it's a long haul up 265 steps to the entrance (daily: Feb to mid-March 2–5pm; mid-March to April & Oct to mid-Nov 9.30am–noon & 2–5.30pm; May–Sept 9am–6.30pm; €2.75).

The new town and Pagès Verveine distillery

In the new part of town, beyond the squat Tour Pannessac, which is all that remains of the city walls, place de Breuil joins place Michelet and forms a social hub backed by the spacious Henri Vinay public gardens, where the Musée Crozatier (May–Sept daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm, but closed Tues & Sun afternoons mid-June to mid-Sept; Oct–April Mon & Wed–Sat 10am–noon & 2–4pm, €3.20) is best known for its collections relating to the region's traditional lace-making activities. Busy boulevard Maréchal-Fayolle converges with place Cadelade, where there's another of Le Puy's crazier aspects: the extraordinary bulbous tower of what used to be the Pagès Verveine distillery. The verveine (verbena) plant is normally used to make tisane (herb tea), but in this region provides a vivid green, powerful digestive liqueur instead. Production has now moved to a distillery 5km outside Le Puy, which is open for guided tours and tasting (March–June & Sept–Dec Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 1.30–6.30pm, July–Aug daily 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm; €5.80). To get there take the N88 and exit at the zone industrielle Blavozy.

Eating and drinking

For a city its size, Le Puy has an impressive array of fine yet economical restaurants, so there is little need to resort to the row of anonymous brasseries on the main street. The best of the eateries is the creative cuisine of the 🌿 François Gagnaire Restaurant at 4 av Charbonnier (☎04.71.02.75.55, 🌐www.francois-gagnaire-restaurant.com; closed Sun eve, Mon and Tues lunch, July & Aug closed Sun, Mon, Tues lunch; menus €23–75); try the Saint-Jacques with green lentils. Other good choices include Restaurant Tournayre, set in a seventeenth-century building at 12 rue Chênebouterie (☎04.71.09.58.94; closed Sun & Wed eve, Mon & Jan), specializing in the regional fare (menus €21–65), and the gastronomique Lapierre at 6 rue Capucins (☎04.71.09.08.44; closed Dec & Jan, Sun out of season & Sat) with menus from €24. Two cheaper establishments, both on rue Raphaël beginning at the bottom of rue des Tables, are the Nom de la Rose, at no. 48 (closed Mon), offering Mexican food, with menus from €14.60, and La Felouque, at no. 49 (closed Feb & Sept–May and Tues year round; menus €8–20), which serves Middle Eastern dishes and excellent grilled salmon. Try the local green lentil beer which is also available in many of Le Puy's pubs. For salads and crêpes, Le Croco on 5 rue Chaussade is a local favourite (closed Sun, menus from €13).

For a drink or light snack, the terrace of Le Petit Gourmande, at the bottom of rue des Tables, makes a pleasant stop in summer (closed Wed; galettes for €5, à la carte from €13). Though lacking atmosphere, the large La Distillerie pub on place du Breuil has an impressive selection of regional speciality beers and liqueurs. Le Bistrot at 7 place de la Halle is a lively place for an evening drink.

North of Le Puy

North of Le Puy, the D906 crosses a vast and terminally depopulated area of pine-clad uplands – now the Parc Naturel Régional Livradois-Forez – and continues all the way to Vichy, via the historic town of La Chaise-Dieu and the old industrial centres of Ambert and Thiers.

La Chaise-Dieu

After 42km you come to the little town of LA CHAISE-DIEU, renowned for the abbey church of St-Robert (daily: June–Sept 9am–noon & 2–7pm; Oct–May 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €3), whose square towers dominate the town. Founded in 1044 and restored in the fourteenth century at the expense of Pope Clement VI, who had served as a monk here, the church was destroyed by the Huguenots in 1562, burnt down in 1692, and remained unfinished when the Revolution brought a wave of anticlericalism. It was only really finished in the twentieth century. Its interior contains the tomb of Clement VI, some magnificent Flemish tapestries of Old and New Testament scenes hanging in the choir, which also boasts some fine Gothic stalls, and a celebrated fresco of the Danse Macabre, depicting Death plucking at the coarse plump bodies of 23 living figures, representing the different classes of society (open May–Oct; €3.70 or €1.80 for treasury only). “It is yourself”, says the fifteenth-century text below, as indeed it might easily have been in an age when plague and war were rife.

Nearby on the place de l'Echo, the Salle de l'Echo (10am–6pm, until 5pm Nov–April; free) is another product of the risk of contagion – if not from plague, then from leprosy. For in this room, once used for hearing confession from the sick and dying, two people can turn their backs on each other, stand in opposite corners and still have a perfectly audible conversation just by whispering.

A classical music festival takes place here in late August and early September, details of which are available from the tourist office, on place de la Mairie (Easter–June & Sept Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–7pm; Oct–March Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.71.00.01.16, 🌐www.tourisme.fr/lachaisedieu). The Hôtel Monastère et Terminus, on avenue de la Gare (☎04.71.00.00.73, 🌐www.hotel-monastere-terminus.com; 📍; closed Nov–March; menus at €12–22), and De La Casadei in place l'Abbaye (☎04.71.00.00.58, ✉casadei@es-conseil.com; 📍; restaurant from €14), offer reasonable comfort for a night's stay. There's also a municipal campsite, Les Parades, on the Vichy side of the D906 (☎04.71.00.07.88; closed Oct–May).

Ambert

Twenty-five kilometres north of La Chaise-Dieu, the little town of AMBERT was, from the fourteenth to eighteenth centuries, the centre of papermaking in France. It especially supplied the printers of Lyon, a connection that brought the region into contact with new ideas, in particular the revolutionary teachings of the Reformed Church. Although those small-scale operations have long since been sidelined, there is still a paper mill in operation at Richard-de-Bas just east of the town, with its Musée Historique du Papier (daily: July & Aug 9am–8pm; Sept–June 9am–noon & 2–6pm; €5), featuring exhibits and explanations from papyrus to handmade samples from medieval days. In the town itself, there's a small museum (July & Aug daily 9am–noon & 2–7pm; Sept–June Tues & Thurs–Sat 9am–noon & 2.30–7pm; €4) devoted to the manufacture of the soft blue Fourme d'Ambert cheese, the region's speciality. An old diesel train panoramique runs between Ambert and Sembadel stopping at La Chaise-Dieu on the way (€13 return); a leisurely way to see the region. There is also an authentic steam train named “Picasso” that will take you from Ambert to Arlanc (€11 return).

Thiers

THIERS, another 49km to the north, has an illustrious industrial history as the country's greatest manufacturer of knives. In spite of serious decline, especially since decolonization and the loss of such huge captive markets, it still accounts for some seventy percent of French production. It's an interesting little town, built over the steep slopes of the valley of the Durolle, whose water power drove the forges and blade-makers' wheels for centuries. There's the Maison des Couteliers, devoted to local knife-crafting, at 58 rue de la Coutellerie in the centre (July & Aug daily 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm; Sept–June Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €4.75), while all along the deep valley bottom you can see where the old workshops were. You probably wouldn't want to stay overnight – there are frequent trains from Clermont-Ferrand (30min).

East of Le Puy

East of Le Puy lies the barrier of the mountains of the Vivarais, rounded and wooded with beech, pine and fir, interspersed with open cow pastures. The highest points are the Gerbier de Jonc (1551m) and Mont Mézenc (1753m), with long views west across the whole of the Massif Central.

The Gerbier is a curious wooded mound rising out of the otherwise flattish surrounding uplands, about 50km southeast of Le Puy, with the River Loire rising on its upper slopes – home to a bucolic and still-isolated countryside. To get out there, take the D535 through MONASTIER-SUR-GAZEILLE, where R. L. Stevenson bought his donkey and started his famous journey. Although the village is pretty, with a particularly lovely church, there's something forlorn and unfriendly about it. The rather bleak Hôtel Le Provence above the village would do for a night's stay (☎04.71.03.82.37, ✉info@le-provence.fr; 📍; restaurant €11–21). The riverside municipal campsite (☎04.71.03.82.24; closed Oct–May) and gîte d'étape (☎04.71.03.82.24) are more welcoming. From here, thirty kilometres of winding lanes lead to the summit itself.

St-Étienne

ST-ÉTIENNE, 78km northeast of Le Puy, was until recently a particularly bland town. Almost unrelievedly industrial, it was a major armaments manufacturer, enclosed for kilometres around by mineworkings, warehouses and factory chimneys. Like so many other industrial centres, it fell on hard times, and the demolition gangs have moved in to raze its archaic industrial past. Only in recent years has an equilibrium been restored thanks to a concerted programme to revitalize the town.

The centre is now quite cheerful, buoyed by a collection of small new museums, the best of which is the Musée d'Art Moderne at La Terrasse (La Terrasse station is served by frequent trains from St-Étienne's central station, Châteaureux), in the north of the city (daily except Tues 10am–6pm; €4.50). This justifies a detour for anyone with an interest in twentieth-century art – a quite unexpected treasure house of contemporary work, both pre- and post-World War II, with a good modern American section, in which Andy Warhol and Frank Stella figure prominently, along with work by Rodin, Matisse, Léger and Ernst, and rooms filled entirely with French art, imaginatively laid out to exciting effect. The Musée d'Art et d'Industrie, 2 place Louis-Comte, is also good on St-Étienne's industrial background, including the development of the revolutionary Jacquard loom, and an impressive exhibition of arms and armour (daily except Tues 10am–6pm, closed on Mon 12.30–2.30pm; €4.40).

St-Étienne's small airport (☎04.77.55.71.71, ✉www.saint-etienne.aeroport.fr) is mainly used for internal flights to and from Paris. The tourist office on 16 av de la Liberation (April–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–7pm & Sun 9am–noon; Oct–March Mon–Sat 9am–6pm & Sun 10am–noon; ☎08.92.70.05.42, ✉www.tourisme-st-etienne.com) is around ten minutes' walk from Châteaureux train station along avenue D.-Rochereau. If you decide to stay, try Hôtel de la Tour, 1 rue Mercière (☎04.77.32.28.48, ✉hoteldelatour@libertysurf.fr; 📍), Le Cheval Noir, 11 rue François-Gillet (☎04.77.33.41.72, ✉www.hotel-chevalnoir.com; 📍), or Hôtel Terminus du Forez, 29–31 av D.-Rochereau (☎04.77.32.48.47, ✉hotel.forez@wanadoo.fr; 📍). For a truly fine meal dine at La Bouche Pleine at 2 place Chavanelle (☎04.77.33.92.47; closed Sat & Sun in Aug; menus from €20).

Travel details

Trains

Alès to: Nîmes (6–9 daily; 35min); Villefort (6–8 daily; 1hr).

Aurillac to: Brive (4 daily; 1hr 40min); Le Lioran (3–5 daily; 40min); Murat (3–5 daily; 50min); Neussargues (3–5 daily; 1hr); Toulouse (3–7 daily; 2hr 40min); Vic-sur-Cère (3–5 daily; 15min).

Clermont-Ferrand to: Aurillac (4–6 daily; 2hr 30min–5hr); Béziers (3 daily; 6–7hr); La Bourboule (4 daily; 1hr 20min); Brive (3 daily; 3hr 40min); Limoges (4 daily; 3hr 30min–4hr); Le Lioran (3–4 daily; 2–4hr); Le Mont-Dore (4 daily; 1hr 30min); Lyon (12–18 daily; 2hr 45min–3hr 30min); Marvejols (4 daily; 2hr 15min–3hr); Millau (1 daily; 4hr 15min); Murat (5–7 daily; 1hr 40min); Neussargues (12–14 daily; 1hr 30min–3hr 30min); Nîmes (12–16 daily; 5–6hr); Paris (5–10 daily; 2–5hr); Riom (12–14 daily; 10min); St-Étienne (2–3 daily; 2hr 10min) St-Flour (4 daily; 1hr 20min–2hr); Thiers (6 daily; 35min); Vic-sur-Cère (5–7 daily; 2hr 15min); Vichy (12–14 daily; 40min); Volvic (5 daily; 24min).

Le Puy to: St-Étienne (8 daily; 1hr 20min).

Mende to: La Bastide-Puylaurent (2–3 daily; 50min); Marvejols (3–5 daily; 40min); Montpellier (16–20 daily; 3hr–4hr 30min); Nîmes (16–20 daily; 2hr 30min–4hr); St-Flour (1–2 daily; 1hr 40min).

Millau to: Aumont-Aubrac (4 daily; 1hr 30min); Béziers (3 daily; 2hr); Marvejols (5 daily; 1hr 10min); Paris (2 daily direct; 8hr–9hr 30min).

Rodez to: Millau (7 daily; 1hr 10min–2hr 30min).

St-Étienne to: Clermont-Ferrand (3–6 daily; 2hr 40min); Lyon (3 daily; 45min); Paris (3 daily; 2hr 50min); St-Germain-des-Fosses (2 daily; 3hr).

St-Flour to: Neussargues (2–3 daily; 25min).

Vichy to: Clermont-Ferrand (12–14 daily; 40min); Nîmes (12–16 daily; 7–9hr); Paris (4 daily; 3hr 30min).

Buses

Ambert to: St-Étienne (1 daily; 2hr).

Aubenas to: Alès (2–3 daily; 2hr 10min); Enraygues (1–4 daily; 1hr); Les Vans (4 daily; 1hr 10min); Valence (7 daily; 2hr); Vallon-Pont-d'Arc (1–2 daily; 45min); Les Vans (4 daily; 1hr 10min).

Aurillac to: Brommat, changing at Mur-de-Barrez (3 weekly; 2hr); Carlat (3–4 daily; 30min); Enraygues (1 daily; 1hr 30min); Mandailles (1 daily; 1hr 20min); Murat (1 daily; 1hr 40min); St-Flour (1 daily; 2hr 10min); Super-Lioran (1 daily; 1hr 20min); Vic-sur-Cère (2–3 daily; 40min).

Clermont-Ferrand to: Ambert (1–2 daily; 1hr 40min); Aydat (1–2 daily; 40min); Besse (July & Aug 2 daily; 1hr 35min); La Chaise-Dieu (1 Mon; 2hr); Lyon (daily; 4hr); Mauriac (1–2 daily; 2hr 45min); Moulins (4 daily; 2hr 30min); Murrol (July & Aug 2 daily; 1hr 10min); Le Puy (1 daily; 2hr 15min); Riom (2 daily; 40min); St-Flour (2 weekly; 2hr); St-Nectaire (July & Aug 2 daily; 1hr); Superbesse (July & Aug 2 daily; 1hr 45min); Thiers (several daily; 1hr); Vichy (5 daily; 1hr 45min).

Conques to: Enraygues (June & Sept Tues, July & Aug Tues, Thurs & Sat 1 daily; 35min); Espalion (June & Sept Tues, July & Aug Tues, Thurs & Sat 1 daily; 1hr 20min); Najac (June & Sept Tues, July & Aug Tues & Fri 1 daily; 2hr 30min); St-Geniez-d'Olt (June & Sept Tues, July & Aug Tues, Thurs & Sat 1 daily; 2hr 15min).

La Bourboule to: Le Mont-Dore (3–5 daily; 10min); Le Sancy (3–5 daily; 35min).

Le Puy to: Aubenas (2 weekly; 3hr 15min); La Chaise-Dieu (2 daily; 1hr); Clermont-Ferrand (1 daily; 3hr); St-Étienne (4 daily; 2hr 10min).

Le Vigan to: Ganges (1–6 daily; 25min); Montpellier (3 daily; 2hr); Nîmes (3–5 daily; 1hr 50min); Valleraugue (July & Aug 1 daily; 30min).

Mende to: Le Puy (2 daily; 2hr); Marvejols (3 daily; 50min); St-Chély (1 daily; 1hr 10min); St-Étienne (1 daily; 3hr).

Millau to: Aven Armand (July & Aug daily; 1hr 45min); Le Caylar (2–6 daily; 40min); Le Rozier (1–4 daily; 40min); Montpellier (3–8 daily; 2hr 20min); Rodez (4 daily; 1hr 30min); Roquefort (July & Aug 3 weekly; 30min); St-Affrique (3–6 daily; 45min); Ste-Énimie (July & Aug daily; 2hr 25min); Toulouse (2 daily; 4hr).

Neussargues to: Allanche (2–3 daily; 20min); Condat (2–3 daily; 30min); Riom-ès-Montagnes (2–3 daily; 1hr 15min); St-Flour (2 daily; 30min).

Riom to: Volvic (4–8 daily; 25min).

Rodez to: Albi (3 daily; 2hr); Conques (1 daily; 1hr); Enraygues (1–2 daily; 2hr); Espalion (3–4 daily; 45min); Laguiole (1 daily; 1hr 45min); Le Caylar (1–4 daily; 2hr 40min); Mende (1 daily; 3hr 30min); Millau (3–8 daily; 1hr 40min); Montauban (1 daily; 3hr 15min); Montpellier (1–4 daily; 3hr 55min); Mur-de-Barrez (1 daily; 2hr 45min); Sauveterre-de-Rouergue (5 weekly; 55min); Séverac-le-Château (several daily; 45min); Toulouse (2–4 daily; 3hr 30min).

St-Chély-d'Aubrac to: Espalion (1 daily; 30min).

St-Flour to: Laguiole (Tues, Thurs & Sat 1 daily; 3hr).

St-Martin-d'Ardèche to: Avignon (1 daily; 1hr 40min); Pont St-Esprit (2 daily; 15min); Vallon-Pont-d'Arc (2 daily; 1hr 10min).

Vichy to: Ambert (4 daily; 2hr 10min); La Chaise-Dieu (daily; 2hr 45min); Thiers (several daily; 40min).

Villefranche-de-Rouergue to: Conques (July & Aug Tues & Fri 1 daily; 2hr); Najac (July & Aug Tues & Fri 1 daily; 30min).

The Alps and Jura

- * Lake Geneva Enjoy the sedate pleasures of the spa towns on the French side of this huge lake, or hop on one of the frequent ferries to Switzerland. See p.975
- * Skiing and snowboarding From December to April a thick blanket of snow covers the world-class resorts of Chamonix, Méribel and Val d'Isère. See p.983, p.996 and p.1000
- * Aiguille du Midi Brave one of the world's highest cable-car ascents for a truly spectacular view of Mont Blanc. See p.986
- * Anancy Anancy's picture-postcard views and beautiful lake more than make up for the crowds and commercialism. See p.988
- * Grenoble The "Capital of the Alps" is a modern, thriving city, offering lively nightlife and fine museums. See p.1003
- * Chartreuse Carthusian monks have been making this famous green liqueur since the seventeenth century. See p.1011
- * Parc Régional du Queyras Walk or drive through mountains specked with old forts and ruined castles to St-Véran, one of the highest villages in Europe. See p.1020

△ Aiguille du Midi

The Alps and Jura

“I need torrents, rocks, firs, dark woods, mountains, steep roads to climb or descend, abysses beside me to make me afraid”; so wrote Rousseau in his Confessions, and he certainly found what he was looking for in the Alps. Formed by the collision of two continental plates two hundred million years ago, the range contains some of France’s most dramatic landscapes, with roads, rail lines and population confined to the deep valley floors. To get the best out of this region you have to walk – or in winter, ski (the box on p.981 has a short roundup of the resorts). There are seven national or regional parks in the area covered by this chapter – Vanoise, Chartreuse, Bauges, Écrins, Queyras, Vercors and Haut Jura – all with round-the-park trails, requiring one to two weeks’ walking. The classic long-distance Tour of Mont Blanc path is of similar length. Then there is the transalpine Route des Grandes Alpes, which crosses all the major massifs from Thonon-les-Bains on Lake Geneva to Menton.

All these routes are clearly marked, equipped with refuge huts and gîtes d’étape, and described in Topo-guides (see Basics, p.61). The Bureau Info Montagne office in Grenoble will provide information on all GR paths, and in addition local tourist offices often produce detailed maps of walks in their own areas. The Alps are also an ideal place for rock climbing, since many of the best faces are already bolted. You can find plenty of day walks from bases in or close to the parks; and there are some spectacular road routes, too. The Vercors, Chartreuse, Aravis, Faucigny and Chablais areas are the gentlest and quietest introductions to Alpine walking.

As for accommodation, you can camp freely on the fringes of the parks, but once inside you’re supposed to pitch only in an emergency and move on after one night. Hotels are often seasonal (closed in late spring and late autumn), overbooked and overpriced – if you’re on a budget but don’t want to carry camping equipment, using gîtes and refuges is a better solution. The Alps are almost as crowded in midsummer as they are in winter (the Chamonix-Mont Blanc area is the worst black spot), but you’re more or less obliged to go in high season if you want to walk: unreliable weather aside, anywhere above 2000m may be snowbound until the beginning of July. Drivers should remember that some high passes such as the Col du Galibier and the Col de l’Iseran in the east of the region can remain closed well into June, requiring long detours or excursions into Italy via expensive Alpine tunnels.

Alpine cuisine overall is heavy, its obvious intent being to line the stomach in cold weather, while the drink is light and often disappointing. One of the best regional items is the rock-hard cured sausage, or saucisson, which is exported from here to butchers shops all over the country, and can be found in large quantities in the weekly morning markets held in every town.

In the départements of Savoie and Haute Savoie, many restaurants serve fish from local lakes, as well as lots of cheese, from the familiar fondue to the lesser-known raclette and tartiflette, both cheese-based dishes with ham and potatoes. In Savoie the main cheeses are Roblochon (for the tartiflette), Emmental, Chèvre (often in a form that's good for melting), Comté and Beaufort – in the fromagerie make sure to ask for the Beaufort d'Été, which is more flavourful since it's made when the cows have better access to grass and flowers. In the Hautes-Alpes near Briançon, food takes a more Provençal turn – expect desserts to be accompanied by honey, and saucisson to be surrounded by or filled with flavourful herbs. For more interesting and creative food head to Grenoble, where chefs are more likely to take the local ingredients and turn them into something new.

In the Jura the Ognon and Doubs rivers provide a plentiful supply of fish, particularly salmon, and the forests are a good source of game. Other specialities include brési (cured beef in thin slices) and poulet au vin jaune (chicken and morels in a creamy sauce flavoured with the local wine).

As for drink, as early as lunchtime you'll start to see the ever-present pastis, the regional rosé, and the local red wine that is so magenta that it resembles rosé. These wines are light and fruity, and most are without much complexity. In contrast the white vin jaune from the Jura is a potent, golden wine, made from Sauvignon grapes with a fermentation process similar to that of sherry – it remains in the cask for 6–10 years before being bottled. You may not see many people drinking the génépy, a local mountain liqueur, but you may be able to taste it as a sauce in your dessert or as a parfum in a local ice cream.

The towns in the Alps offer good facilities for campers and hikers, and often provide attractions of their own. Grenoble is the economic and intellectual capital of the region, and has a lively cultural scene; Chambéry and picturesque Annecy are good bases for expeditions into the Parc des Bauges and Massif de Chartreuse, and the countryside around the Lac d'Annecy respectively; and Briançon, the highest town in Europe, is close to the Écrins and Queyras parks. The websites www.rhonealpes-tourisme.com and www.alpes-guide.com are useful introductions to the region.

The Jura mountains – gentle in the west, precipitous in the east, with wide, high-forested plateaux in between – cover most of the old county of Franche-Comté, once part of the realms of the Grand Dukes of Burgundy, but properly French only since the late seventeenth century. Within its four départements – the Territoire de Belfort, the Haute-Saône, the Doubs and, largest of all, the Jura – the towns, especially the capital Besançon, are beautiful and tranquil, with the River Doubs flowing through, and some of the villages are exceptionally pretty. Otherwise, what there is to see is countryside – hundreds of square kilometres of woodland, lake and pasture that are hard to reach without a car – but are best explored once you're there on foot or by bicycle. There are several GR footpaths in the area, including the marathon GR5 from the Netherlands to the Mediterranean, and the GR9, which snakes its way through the Parc Régional du Haut-Jura.

Belfort and around

Nestled in the gap between the southern reaches of the Vosges and the northern outliers of the Jura mountains – the one natural chink in France’s eastern geological armour and the obvious route for invaders – BELFORT is assured of a place in French hearts for its deeds of military daring. Its name is particularly linked with the 1870 Prussian War, when its long resistance to siege spared it the humiliating annexation to Germany suffered by much of neighbouring Alsace-Lorraine. The commanding officer at the time, Colonel Denfert-Rochereau (the “Lion of Belfort”), earned himself the honour of numerous street names as well as that of a Parisian square and métro station. These days it’s an interesting town with mixed Franco-German influences in architecture and cuisine. Belfort is also a good base for exploring the towns of Ronchamp, Montbéliard, the northeastern corner of the River Doubs and for organizing treks into the southern Vosges (see “Hiking in the southern Vosges” box, p.319).

The Town

Finding your way around Belfort is easy enough. The town is sliced in two by the River Savoureuse: the new town to the west is the commercial hub; to the east lies the quieter old town, laid out below the massive red château. Built by the ubiquitous fortress architect Vauban on the site of a medieval fort, it now houses the Musée d’Art et d’Histoire (May–Sept daily 10am–7pm; Oct–April daily except Tues 10am–noon and 2–5pm; ☎03.84.54.25.51/52; €2.90, or €3.20 including entry to the viewing platform at the lion – see opposite), containing works by Dürer, Doré and Rodin. The other collections include military objects from Belfort’s centuries of conflicts, and Bronze and Iron Age artefacts, including painted pottery, jewellery and tools, found in the funeral cave 5km north at Cravanche in 1876. Vauban is also responsible for the fortifications surrounding Belfort, which created a five-sided old town whose street plan is still largely unchanged.

Belfort’s other museum, the Donation Maurice Jardot (daily except Tues 10am–6pm; €4), is a ten-minute walk away from the tourist office down rue de Mulhouse, at no. 8, and will be of interest to fans of Cubism. Jardot was an associate of Daniel-Henry Kahnweiler, one of the great twentieth-century art dealers: his collection, left to the town of Belfort on his death in 1997, contains 110 works of art, including some by Braque, Léger and Picasso.

The most famous and photographed phenomenon in town is the eleven-metre-high red sandstone lion carved out of the rock-face that you pass on the way up to the castle, Bartholdi’s monument to commemorate the 1870 siege. From the viewing platform at the front paw of the lion (€1, or €3.20, combined ticket to the Musée d’Art et d’Histoire), you get some stunning views over the town and surrounding countryside.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF and departure point for local buses are at the end of Faubourg-de-France, the main pedestrianized shopping drag in the new town. The tourist office (mid-June to mid-Sept Mon–Sat 9am–7pm; mid-Sept to mid-June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.45–6pm; ☎03.84.55.90.90, 🌐www.ot-belfort.fr) is at 2bis rue Clemenceau, a ten-minute walk from the station down Faubourg-de-France as far as the river, then left along quai Charles-Vallet until you reach rue Clemenceau; the castle houses a tourist information annexe during the summer (July & Aug daily 10am–12.30pm and 2–6.30pm).

There is an excellent choice of hotels: the Au Relais d'Alsace, 5 av de la Laurencie (☎03.84.22.15.55, 🌐www.arahotel.com; 📍), is where out-of-town musicians stay when they perform in Belfort, and the staff will be happy to advise you about what's happening in the region. Other options include the Hôtel Vauban, 4 rue du Magasin (☎03.84.21.59.37, 🌐www.hotel-vauban.com; 📍), where the artist-owner's paintings brighten the individually decorated rooms, and the rather more impressive Grand Hôtel du Tonneau d'Or, 1 rue Reiset (☎03.84.58.57.56, 🌐www.tonneaudor.fr; 📍), though the columns and architraves that adorn the lobby are more impressive than the functional but clean rooms. Belfort's hostel, Résidence Madrid, is 1km west of the railway line at 6 rue de Madrid (☎03.84.21.39.16, ✉ft.belfort@wanadoo.fr), and its camp-site, Camping International de l'Étang des Forges, is on rue du Général-Béthouart, north of the old town (☎03.84.22.54.92, 🌐www.campings-belfort.com; May to mid-Oct).

Inexpensive places to eat can be found in the place d'Armes and place de la République, while rue de la Porte de France, linking the two squares, is lined with antique shops and old-fashioned grocery stores such as l'Épicerie de Lion. Boeuf-Carottes, 14 rue Lecourbe (☎03.84.21.15.40; closed Sun eve & Mon), is a good option, with menus at €17–22. Café Théâtre, behind the theatre on place Corbis, has outdoor tables by the river and is a pleasant place for a coffee, while La Poudrière, place de l' Arsenal (closed late July & Aug), is the best place for live music.

Ronchamp

Before taking to the hills, there is one day-trip from Belfort worth undertaking – to the mining town of RONCHAMP, 20km west (connected by train and bus), where the architect Le Corbusier built one of his most enduring and atypical masterpieces in the 1950s, the Chapelle de Notre-Dame-du-Haut (daily 9.30am–6.30pm; €2; 🌐www.chapellederonchamp.com). Visible from miles away and white, reflective and all in concrete, it stands above the town

Cross-country skiing and mountain biking in the Jura

The nature of the Jura's terrain – its high plateaux guaranteeing winter snow but without excessively steep gradients – has made it France's most popular destination for cross-country skiing, or ski de fond. The goal of any superfit fondeur is the 210-kilometre Grande Traversée du Jura (GTJ), which roughly follows the long-distance GR5 footpath across the high plateau from Villers-le-Lac to Hauteville-Lompnes.

The same gentle topography and established infrastructure that enable cross-country skiing have made this region an ideal high-summer venue for mountain biking, with hundreds of waymarked cross-country skiing pistes used out of season as trails for adventuresome mountain bikers. The 300-kilometre GTJ-VTT, starting near Montbéliard, has become the greatest long-distance challenge in the area. Many people cycle on the road; there aren't that many cars, so if you can handle the hills, go for it.

The headquarters of the departmental tourist board, the Comité Départemental du Tourisme de Jura (☎03.84.87.08.88, 🌐www.jura-tourism.com), can supply plenty of information, maps and literature – in English – on outdoor leisure opportunities of all kinds in the Jura.

on the top of a wooded hill, with its aerodynamic tower and wave-curved roof cutting into the sky beyond. Inside, the rough-textured walls are pierced with unequal embrasures, several closed by patterns of primary glass, whose reds, blues and yellows stain the dipping floor. With its pared-down crucifix and steel altar rail, it's highly atmospheric.

The tourist office is on place 14-Juillet (daily 9am–noon and 2–7pm; ☎03.84.63.50.82). If it's getting late and you're worried about a place to stay, try La Pomme d'Or, 34 rue le Corbusier, alongside the train line (☎03.84.20.62.12; 📍). Hostellers can take another twenty-minute train ride west to Vesoul, where there's a HI hostel by the Lac de Vesoul-Vaivre (☎03.84.76.48.55; bus #1, stop "Peugeot"), but check the train timetables: there are not many trains to or from either Belfort or Vesoul.

Montbéliard and around

MONTBÉLIARD, 16km south of Belfort, thrives mainly thanks to the Peugeot factory in its southern suburb of Audincourt (see below), the second car production plant to be created in Europe. There are some unexpected features to Montbéliard, however: the town has been part of France only since 1793, so the architecture of the old town has a strong Germanic look. The imposing Château des Ducs de Wurtemberg (daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €1.50), constructed during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, has been restored to house various exhibitions: there's always a specialist international exhibition as well as the permanent display of the collection of famous French zoologist Georges Cuvier, who was born in Montbéliard and whose work paved the way for Darwin. Also on display are some Gallo-Roman objects found nearby at the remains of the huge Roman theatre at Mandeuve, just off the D437 8km south of Montbéliard. The old houses around the château have been repainted in their original colours. Note the circular stairwells, always at the back of the house – this architectural curiosity developed in the days when space was taxed as part of an elaborate tax-avoidance scheme. The Bourg des Halles covered market was built in the sixteenth century, and is another fine Germanic building. An outdoor Christmas market, Lumières de Noël, is held annually around the St-Martin church, and there's also a three-kilometre labyrinth at the Parc du Près-la-Rose.

The tourist office is at 1 rue Henri-Mouhot (Mon 1.30–6pm, Tues–Sat 9am–noon & 1.30–7pm; mid-Sept to mid-June also Sun 10am–noon and 2–4pm; ☎03.81.94.45.60, 🌐www.ot-pays-de-montbeliard.fr). For accommodation, the choice is better in Belfort, but you could try the Hôtel de la Balance, 40 rue de Belfort (☎03.81.96.77.41, 🌐www.hotel-la-balance.com; 📍), in the old town, which also has a restaurant with menus at €12–22. There are plenty of outdoor cafés in the old town area: Café de la Paix, 12 rue des Febvres, near Les Halles, is a great place to relax. Both Belfort and Montbéliard have some good music and art festivals – to find out details, pick up the free cultural magazine Atmosphere, or Montbéliard Magazine, available in tourist offices.

The Doubs valley

The River Doubs runs a course like a series of hairpins, doubling back on itself repeatedly, with its most dramatic change of course at AUDINCOURT, where the chief sight is the modern church of Sacré-Coeur, which has windows and a tapestry by Fernand Léger. Just north of Audincourt, Sochaux, another Montbéliard suburb, is home to the Musée Peugeot (daily 10am–6pm; €7), which displays the products of over a century of automotive manufacturing, from the Bey of Tunis's one-off quadricycle to contemporary rally winners and concept cars.

From Audincourt, southwards and upstream, the D437 follows the valley of the Doubs, winding and climbing steadily between steep, wooded banks to the bridging point at ST-HIPPOLYTE, where you'll find the riverside Hôtel Bellevue (☎03.81.96.51.53, ☎03.81.96.52.40; 📍) and a campsite (May–Sept). Seven kilometres west along the D39, the Auberge de Moricemaison, in Valoreille (☎03.81.64.01.72, 🌐www.moricemaison.fr; 📍), offers rustic simplicity and wholesome evening meals from €15.

A less congested scenic route from Besançon follows the D464 south of the river, but without a car you'd have to hitch all this – manageable but slow. Beyond St-Hippolyte the road climbs onto a wide plateau at an altitude of around 850m, with grassy cattle pastures encompassed by fir-clad ridges and dotted with broad-roofed farms and barns. Once up here, cycling is easy enough. Alternatively, it's a lovely but long hike of well over 50km along the GR5 footpath from St-Hippolyte across the plateau and up the Doubs valley to the plunging waterfall of the Saut du Doubs outside Villers-le-Lac – the beginning of the GTJ marathon cross-country ski piste. To reach the fall, it's a four-kilometre walk from the last houses above the north end of the lake in VILLERS along a track through the woods.

By road, Villers is 47km south of St-Hippolyte along the D437, which turns east at MORTEAU, a village with nothing more than a much-altered, thirteenth-century priory church to recommend it. The D437 is part of the Route du Comté, so if you like cheese, it's worth the detour. There is accommodation up on the plateau at the welcoming Hôtel des Montagnards (☎03.81.67.08.86, 🌐www.hotelles-montagnards.newfr.net; 📍; closed Sun out of season).

Besançon and around

The capital of Franche-Comté, BESANÇON is an ancient and attractive grey-stone town at the northern edge of the Jura mountains, enclosed in a loop of the River Doubs, whose lugubrious meanders define the layout of the old town. The tongue of land on which it sits has been protected since Roman times, when it lay on a major trading route; the indefatigable Vauban added the still-extant fortifications and a citadelle to guard the natural breach in the river. Once a major centre of French clock-making, Besançon was also the birthplace of artificial silk – or rayon – in 1890. It counts among its native sons both the pioneering Lumière brothers and epic novelist Victor Hugo.

The River Doubs rises on the high plateau 100km to the south of here, making a diversion far to the northeast of the town, gathering tributaries and broadening as it briefly crosses the Swiss border before entering Besançon. A lazy journey upstream to Pontarlier can make a rewarding excursion over a couple of days. From Pontarlier a direct return north to Besançon can be made by following the River Loue's steep descent through its heavily wooded valley past the pretty mill town of Ornans. To the west, the former regional capital of Dole was the birthplace of the chemist Louis Pasteur.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The gare SNCF is at the end of avenue Maréchal-Foch, while the gare routière is at 9 rue Proudhon off rue de la République; buses for Pontarlier and Ornans leave from here. The best way to reach the town centre from the gare SNCF is to take the underground passage (next to the monument in front of the station) and cut across the park down to the quais – the old town is on the other side of the river. The tourist office is upstream on the right bank by the Pont de la République on place de la Première Armée-Française (Mon–Sat 10am–7pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎03.81.80.92.55, 🌐www.besancon.com). On the other side of the Pont de la République from the tourist office is the departure point for the bateaux-mouches (daily April–Oct; €10), which tour round the outer limits of the town centre.

Hotels include the comfortable and friendly family-run Granvelle, 13 rue Lecourbe, close to the citadelle (☎03.81.81.33.92, 🌐www.hotel-granvelle.fr; 📍); the central Regina, with rooms around a quiet court on 91 Grande-Rue (☎03.81.81.50.22, 🌐www.besancon-regina.fr; 📍); the Hôtel de Paris, 33 rue des Granges (☎03.81.81.36.56, 🌐www.hotel-deparis.com; 📍), in an old town house with free parking for guests; and the Hôtel du Nord, at 8–10 rue de Moncey in the centre (☎03.81.81.34.56, 🌐www.hotel-du-nord-besancon.com; 📍), with large rooms. For something more upmarket, the 🍷 Castan, 6 square Castan (☎03.81.65.02.00, 🌐www.hotelcastan.fr; 📍) is housed in a beautiful seventeenth-century town house and offers supreme comfort. Besançon's hostel, Les Oiseaux, is a couple of kilometres northeast of the train station at 48 rue des Cras (☎03.81.40.32.00, ✉fjtleoiseaux@yahoo.fr; bus #7, stop “Les Oiseaux”; 📍), or €15.70 for a bed in a small dorm). Camping is at Camping de Chalezeule, 5km out on the Belfort road (☎03.81.88.04.26; April–Oct; bus #1 towards Palente).

The Town

Once you're in the old town, getting around is simple. Rue de la République leads from the river to the central place du 8-Septembre and the sixteenth-century Hôtel de Ville. The principal street, Grande-Rue, cuts across the square along the line of an old Roman road. At its northwestern end – the livelier part of town with shops and cafés – is the place de la Révolution and the excellent Musée des Beaux-Arts (daily except Tues 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; €3.20, free Sun), with some good nineteenth- and twentieth-century works, two magnificent Bonnards and a wonderful clock collection. Midway down Grande-Rue, the fine sixteenth-century Palais Granvelle (Wed–Sun 1–7pm; €3, free Sat) contains an interactive museum paying homage to the town's history of clock-making, the Musée du Temps. Continuing up the street, you pass place Victor-Hugo (he was born at no. 140) and arrive at the Porte Noire, a second-century Roman triumphal arch spanning the street and partially embedded in the adjoining houses. Beside it, in the shady little square Archéologique A.–Castan, are the remains of a nymphaeum, a small reservoir of water fed by an aqueduct. Beyond the arch is the pompous eighteenth-century Cathédrale St-Jean (closed Tues) which houses the nineteenth-century Horloge Astronomique (hourly guided visits in French: Feb, March & Oct–Dec Mon & Thurs–Sun 9.50–11.50am & 2.50–5.50pm; April–Sept daily except Tues same hours; closed Jan; €2.50), detailing over a hundred terrestrial and celestial positions and containing some 30,000 parts.

The spectacular citadelle (daily: April–June & Sept to mid-Nov 9am–6pm; July & Aug 9am–7pm; mid-Nov to April 10am–5pm; €7.80) is a steep fifteen-minute climb from the cathedral, and has a crow's-nest view of the town and the noose-like bend in the river that contains it. It houses many worthwhile museums (all times as citadelle): there's the Musée d'Histoire Naturelle for animal lovers, with aquarium, insectarium and zoo; the Musée Comtois, with pottery, furniture and a good collection of nineteenth-century marionettes, as well as some marvellous old farming implements; the Espace Vauban, devoted to the military architect; and – best of all – the Musée de la Résistance et de la Déportation, a superb aid to understanding postwar France's political consciousness (English audio commentary available).

Eating, drinking and entertainment

There are plenty of lively and inexpensive restaurants, cafés and bars by the Doubs near place Battant, particularly along the little streets running parallel to the river. The busy Brasserie du Commerce, 31 rue des Granges, has rather grand decor, an impressive wine list and a traditional quality brasserie menu served by attentive waiters, while the Brasserie du Palais Granvelle, in a lovely shady park next door to the Palais Granvelle, is the best place for breakfast and coffee. For a substantial meal try: the century-old Restaurant au Petit Polonais, 81 rue des Granges (☎03.81.81.23.67; closed Sat eve & Sun; menus from €12), which serves regional food; or Le Poker d'As, 14 square St-Amour (☎03.81.81.42.49; closed Sun eve & Mon; menus from €21), a touch old-fashioned but one hundred percent reliable. For lunch, there's the superb Le Café-Café, 5bis rue Luc-Breton (☎03.81.81.15.24; Mon–Sat lunch only; plats from €10); or the trendy La Femme du Boulanger, 6 rue Morand (☎03.81.82.86.93; Mon–Sat 7.30am–8pm, Sun 9am–7pm), where fresh salads cost around €11.

The two biggest cultural events of the year in Besançon are Jazz en Franche-Comté, which takes place in June and July, and an international young conductors' competition in the first two weeks of September.

Pontarlier and around

Sixty kilometres southeast of Besançon lies PONTARLIER, one of the bigger Jura towns, and not very interesting in itself except as a transit point and recreational base. Just south of town, though, past a divinely aromatic chocolate factory, a steep road to the left ascends for 11km to Le Grand Taureau, whose 1328-metre summit is just a short walk from the road's end and offers a view over the whole Jura Massif and across Switzerland to the Alps. A couple of kilometres further south of Pontarlier, the Château de Joux (French guided tours daily: Jan–June & Sept–Oct 10am, 11.30am, 2pm & 3.30pm; July & Aug every 30min 9am–4.30pm; closed Nov & Dec; €5.80; 🌐www.chateaudejoux.com) stands over the defile known as La Cluse et Mijoux, the ancient Franco–Swiss frontier. It was originally constructed in the eleventh century, and Vauban had a hand in remodelling and modernizing it, but most of what you see today is less than a century old. The fort's history and impressive appearance are of more interest than its collection of military uniforms.

Pontarlier's tourist office, 14bis rue de la Gare (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; June–Sept also Sun 10.30am–noon & 5.30–7pm; ☎03.81.46.48.33, 🌐www.pontarlier.org), has some good hiking and VTT maps. If you need accommodation in town, try the Hôtel de Morteau, 26 rue Jeanne-d'Arc, near the river (☎03.81.39.14.83, 🌐www.hoteldemorteau.com; 📍), which has an excellent restaurant. There's also an HI hostel at 2 rue Jouffroy, near the station (☎03.81.39.06.57, 📧pontarlier@fuaj.org); plus a municipal campsite in rue de Toulombief. For places to eat, try the rue de Besançon, which is full of cafés and brasseries, or, for a fuller meal, the Brasserie de la Poste, 55 rue de la République. Good-quality mountain bikes can be rented from Cycles Pernet, 15–23 rue de la République (☎03.81.46.48.00).

Ornans and the valley of the Loue

Some 17km north of Pontarlier, the D67 splits west off the N57 and plunges precipitously into the valley of the Loue. A couple of kilometres above the village of Ouhans lies the source of the river, issuing from an enormous rock beneath a tiered cliff, in winter entirely fringed with icicles. From this point you can continue on foot along the GR595 footpath down the valley bounded by densely wooded limestone cliffs, a descent no less dramatic by road, passing through a string of pretty villages.

Roughly halfway between Pontarlier and Besançon, ORNANS is the prettiest village of all, an archetypal Franche-Comté town that has become the touristic focal point of the valley. The Loue here is an abrupt trench, the river washing the foundations of ancient balconied houses, and the town is easily appreciated from its numerous footbridges. Pierre Vernier, inventor of the eponymous gauge, and the painter Gustave Courbet were both born here: the latter's house is now the Musée de la Maison Natale de Gustave Courbet (April–June, Sept & Oct daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–6pm; Nov–March daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3, €6 during summer exhibitions; @ www.musee-courbet.com), displaying some of his drawings, sculpture and locally painted scenes. The tourist office is at 7 rue Pierre-Vernier (April–June, Sept, Oct & school hols Mon–Sat 9.30am–noon and 2–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 3–6pm; Nov–March Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 3–5pm; ☎03.81.62.21.50). There's accommodation in the form of the simple riverside Hôtel Restaurant La Table de Gustave, 11 rue Jacques-Gervais (☎03.81.62.16.79, ☎03.81.62.19.10; 🍷). There are campsites and gîtes d'étape dotted around the countryside between Ornans and the village of Vuillifans, 8km southeast.

Dole

Halfway between Besançon and Dijon, on the edge of the flat and fertile valley of the Saône, DOLE is a quiet and provincial town. The medieval capital of the Comté region until Louis XI ordered its destruction in 1479, it's a peaceful place to pause, and attractive enough in a subdued way. Grey-stone houses with barred ground-floor windows stand on narrow streets around the vast, stolid collegiate of Notre-Dame, with its lofty belfry (July & Aug guided visits roughly three times a week; check with the tourist office for the days and times; €4) – worth climbing for the view. Inside the church, there are beautiful windows and a wonderful Rococo organ. The Rhône–Rhine canal washes the feet of the town, and along its bank below the church runs the narrow rue Pasteur, birthplace of the French biologist and chemist Louis Pasteur. The son of a tanner, he is best known for discovering the rabies virus (and its cure), and is commemorated in the process of “pasteurization”, another of his discoveries. His house, like those of his father's tanner workmates, backs onto a pretty waterside walkway leading to an island. The house is now a museum (April–June, Sept & Oct Mon–Sat 10am–noon and 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; Nov–March Sat 10am–noon and 2–5pm, Sun 2–5pm; €3). Whatever happens in Dole happens between the Grande-Rue – the street leading to the main bridge over the Doubs – and place Grévy. At the top of Grande-Rue is the delightful place aux Fleurs, with a fountain and amusing bronze sculpture of Les Trois Commères (“The Three Gossips”).

Dole’s gare routière is next to the gare SNCF, a ten-minute walk northeast of the Collegiate Notre-Dame down avenue A.-Briand. The tourist office is on the northern side of place Grévy at no. 6 (June Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Fri 8.30am–6.30pm, Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–May Mon 2–6pm, Tues–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 9am–noon; ☎03.84.72.11.22, 🌐www.dole.org). There are some reasonable hotels in Dole, including Le Grand Cerf, 6 rue Arney, near place Grévy (☎03.84.72.11.68; 📍). For more comfort and prices to match, try La Chaumière, across the river on avenue Maréchal-Juin (☎03.84.70.72.40, ☎03.84.79.25.60; 📍). The cheapest rooms, as usual, are at the HI hostel, St-Jean, place Jean-XXIII (☎03.84.82.36.74, ✉lestjean@wanadoo.fr); take bus #1, direction “Mesnils-Poiset”, stop “Les Paters”. The local campsite, Camping du Pasquier, is down by the river (☎03.84.72.02.61; mid-March to mid-Oct). For food, there are various pizzerias and crêperies – such as La Demi-Line, 39 rue Pasteur, and place Grévy is good for cafés. Real gourmands though should try Le Bec Fin, 67 rue Pasteur (☎03.84.82.43.43), for the contemporary haute cuisine of laid-back chef Romuald Fassenet (menus €21–65).

Lons-le-Saunier to Arbois

Around fifty kilometres southeast of Dole, at the base of the central plateau’s west-facing rim and set picturesquely astride rivers and in the midst of fertile soils, are a number of towns that have supported centuries of agriculture and have more recently accommodated the small, specialist industries so typical of the Jura. The spa town and departmental capital of Lons-le-Saunier is a tranquil place, with fireworks on July 14, and on July 31 for St-Désiré, and outdoor music concerts throughout the summer. North of the town a string of vineyards traces the plateau’s edge to just beyond Arbois, the Jura’s wine-making capital. This is the eighty-kilometre Route des Vins du Jura, where the region’s distinctive wines – such as the sherry-like vin jaune – are cultivated and manufactured from a variety of vines. South of Arbois at Poligny, more wines and the long-refined Comté cheese, produced in the Jura since the thirteenth century, are available for sampling at the Maison du Comté.

Lons-le-Saunier

Once the site of a Neolithic settlement, LONS-LE-SAUNIER was all but destroyed by a fire in the early seventeenth century. Most buildings today date from this era, and a wander around some of the older examples is an agreeable way to fill half a day.

The central place de la Liberté is a good place to start. Should you happen to be in the square on the hour, the theatre clock at the eastern end will chime a familiar half-dozen notes from La Marseillaise to honour Lons’ most famous son, Rouget de Lisle, the anthem’s composer. Just north of the square is the attractive, colonnaded thoroughfare of rue du Commerce, where some of Lons’ oldest buildings line the street in which de Lisle was born. Continuing north through the place de la Comédie and past the ancient salt well, Le Puits Salé, you arrive at the Musée Municipal d’Archéologie, 25 rue Richebourg (Mon & Wed–Fri 10am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 2–5pm; €2). It presents some absorbing prehistoric displays, including a touching Neolithic family scene circa 4000 BC, a dug-out canoe found locally and a life-size replica of a 210-million-year-old plateosaurus, France's oldest-known dinosaur. The museum, which also mounts various temporary exhibitions, is housed in the old Bel cheese factory, whose enduringly popular La Vache Qui Rit ("Laughing cow") cheese spread is now produced in larger premises near the station. Returning south along rue Richebourg to avenue Jean-Moulin, you come to the inevitable statue of Rouget de Lisle, designed by Frédéric Bartholdi, the sculptor who went on to refine de Lisle's stirring pose on a much grander scale in the Statue of Liberty. A left turn here leads to the pleasant Parc Edouard Guenon, where you'll find the Salines, or mineral baths (☎03.84.24.20.34 for admission details), with their ornate fin-de-siècle exterior, which are lavishly equipped with a sauna, Turkish bath and Jacuzzi. The saline immersions not only soothe the usual aches and pains, but are also renowned for their ability to cure juvenile bed-wetting.

△ Lons-le-Saunier

Practicalities

Lons' gare SNCF is a ten-minute walk south of place de la Liberté. The tourist office is in the same building as the theatre (Mon–Fri 8am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 8am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎03.84.24.65.01, 🌐www.ville-lons-le-saunier.fr). For information about the Jura region, the Comité Départemental du Tourisme is at 8 rue Louis-Rousseau (Mon–Fri: April–Nov 8.30am–12.30pm and 2–6pm; Dec–March 8.30am–6pm; ☎03.84.87.08.88). Two good hotels are the smart Terminus, 37 av Aristide-Briand, by the gare SNCF (☎03.84.24.41.83, 🌐www.hotel-terminus-lons.com; 📍), and the cosy Nouvel Hôtel, 50 rue Lecourbe (☎03.84.47.20.67, 🌐www.nouvel-hotel-lons.fr; 📍), just west of place de la Liberté. There's a campsite, Camping de la Marjorie (☎03.84.24.26.94; April to mid-Oct), on the northeast edge of town. For a truly inspired meal in a charming setting, pay a visit to the Bistrot des Marronniers, 22 rue de Vallière, west off rue St-Désiré (closed Sun; à la carte from €11), and for a coffee or drink, head for the Grand Café de Strasbourg, next to the theatre and boasting a beautiful interior.

Poligny and Arbois

North of Lons along the Route des Vins du Jura, the attractive medieval town of POLIGNY, at the southern end of the Culée de Vaux valley, is noteworthy for its well-preserved, early Romanesque buildings, including the church of St-Hippolyte, which features the characteristic bell-like tower seen all over Franche-Comté. But the town's principal attraction is the hallowed Maison du Comté (July & Aug daily 1hr guided tours at 10am, 11am, 2pm, 3.30pm & 4.30pm; ☎03.84.37.23.51; €2) on avenue de la Résistance, which leads south from the central place des Déportés, an old fromagerie that now forms the headquarters of the Comité Interprofessionnel du Gruyère du Comté, France's favourite cheese.

The town's attractive medieval houses and other sites of interest are indicated on the blue Walking Through the Old Town leaflet available from the friendly tourist office at 20 place des Déportés (July & Aug Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm, Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sun 9am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sat 9am–noon and 2–5pm; ☎03.84.37.24.21, 🌐www.ville-poligny.fr). There are a handful of hotels in Poligny but Arbois has a better choice.

Arbois

There's no mistaking that ARBOIS, 10km to the north, is the capital of this region's viticulture. Glittering wine emporia line the central place de la Liberté, entreating you to sample the unusual local wines. Of these, the sweet vin de paille is the rarest; it's so called because its grapes are dried on beds of straw, giving the wine a strong aftertaste. Chocolatier M. Hirsinger has developed chocolates to eat with wines, especially the Jura's own vin jaune, a wine flavoured with walnuts. A visit to the Hirsinger chocolate shop on place de la Liberté is a must, especially for its delicious ice cream.

Louis Pasteur lived in Arbois after his family moved from Dole, and his boyhood home, the Maison de Louis Pasteur on avenue Pasteur, is open to the public (guided visits daily: April, May & Oct hourly 2.15–5.15pm; June–Sept hourly 9.45–11.45am & every 30min 2.15–6.15pm; €5.50). In the basement of the tourist office (see p.972) is the Musée de la Vigne et du Vin (March–June, Sept & Oct daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; Nov–Feb daily except Tues 2–6pm; €3.20), which details the development and production of wine in the Jura.

The tourist office is at 10 rue de l'Hôtel-de-Ville (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; Sept–June Mon 3–6pm, Tues–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎03.84.66.55.50 🌐www.arbois.com); If you're staying overnight in town, try Les Messageries (☎03.84.66.15.45, 🌐www.hoteldesmessageries.com; 📍) a large, old stone town house with character and atmosphere, up from the Maison Pasteur. There's a campsite, Camping Municipal Les Vignes, on avenue Général-Leclerc (☎03.84.66.14.12, ☎03.84.66.25.50; April–Sept), 1km east of the centre. For a meal, head to La Balance, 47 rue de Courcelles (☎03.84.37.45.00), where a range of interesting menus (€23–55) has been concocted to complement the local wines.

The Central Plateau and the Haut Jura

On the broad upland plateau, the Jura landscape unrolls, stretches and rises in increasingly abrupt steps to the mountains bordering the Swiss frontier. With its lakes and pine forests, small farming communities and – at the higher altitudes – huge ski resorts enveloping tiny villages, semi-deserted in summer, this is the most beautiful area of the Jura and, as you might expect – despite trains linking Champagnole, Morez and St-Claude with Arbois and Pontarlier – best appreciated with your own transport.

13

Champagnole, Nozeroy and the Forêt de la Joux

Situated at a major crossroads on the plateau, CHAMPAGNOLE, an industrial town largely rebuilt after a major fire in 1798, holds little intrinsic interest for the passing visitor, with the exception of an archeological museum, 26 rue Baronne-Delfort (July & Aug daily except Tues 2–6pm; €2), above the tourist office, which displays an interesting array of Gallic and Roman artefacts found in the vicinity. However, the town does serve as a useful base for exploring the surrounding countryside, in particular the Forêt de la Joux, to the northeast.

The tourist office is in an annexe of the mairie at 26 rue Baronne-Delfort (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 9am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎03.84.52.43.67), and provides lots of information about exploring the surrounding forests and lakes, including hiking and mountain biking kits for €5 each. For central accommodation, try the Hôtel de la Londaie, 31 rue du Général-Leclerc (☎03.84.52.06.69; 📍) or, for some old-style glitz, the Grand Hôtel Ripotot, 54 rue Maréchal-Foch (☎03.84.52.15.45, ☎03.84.52.09.11; 📍), which is definitely the nicest hotel in town. The campsite, Camping de Boyse, is on rue Georges-Vallery (☎03.84.52.00.32; 🌐www.camping.champagnole.com; June to mid-Sept).

A couple of kilometres north at the source of the River Ain, spread over a small hill surrounded by pastures, is the old walled village of NOZEROY, ancestral home of the Chalon family, who dominated regional politics in feudal times. The town preserves much of its medieval charm today, with the Porte de l'Horloge – once part of the town's fortifications – framing the beginning of the Grande-Rue. This thoroughfare, lined with many ancient houses, ends at the place des Annonciades and the ruins of the thirteenth-century castle.

Forêt de la Joux

North of Nozeroy, on the other side of the D471 Champagnole–Pontarlier road, the Forêt de la Joux is considered one of the most beautiful of France's native pine forests. It's crisscrossed by a net of narrow fire roads – paths cut into the forest to prevent the spread of wild fires – but if you don't have a car, you can use the Gare de la Joux, in the heart of the forest on the Champagne–Pontarlier train line, from where you can explore further on foot or by bicycle. There are many well-marked walking trails through the forest: the most popular area is the Sapins de la Glacière. The Route des Sapins is the approved tourist drive, signposted for 50km from the D471 to the village of Levier, passing lookouts and the 45-metre-high Sapin Président (a two-hundred-year-old fir tree) along the way. But the less regimented can just as easily enjoy getting mildly disorientated by following any number of lesser, unmarked roads and discovering the wonder of the forest for themselves.

The Région des Lacs

South of Champagne, the flattened plateau, unable to shed the Haut Jura's winter run-off, collects the meltwaters in a series of natural and not-so-natural lakes known as the Région des Lacs, or Lake District, loosely strung along the valley of the River Ain. Here the ground begins to crumple upward to the eastern summits, gorges and waterfalls highlighting each successive step, and the views down to the tiny villages, each huddled around its characteristic mosaic-domed church, become more impressive with each bend. Some of the lakes charge parking fees during the day, but after 6pm, when the crowds and swimming supervisors go home, the lakes are deserted and peaceful – perfect for an evening picnic watching the sun set.

Clairvaux-les-Lacs and the Cascades du Hérisson

The region's main resort town is CLAIRVAUX-LES-LACS. It's here that the northern tip of the serpentine Lac de Vouglans, dammed 25km downstream, reverts to the River Ain that feeds it. The Grand Lac, just south of town, is the focus of summer resort activity, with a beach area and watersports facilities. It's calm and scenic, in spite of all the camping activity going on around it. The Office du Tourisme du Pays des Lacs, 36 Grande-Rue (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 9am–noon; July & Aug also Sun 10am–noon; ☎03.84.25.27.47, 🌐www.juralacs.com), is the place to find information about the region and outdoor activities such as boat and bike rental. For hiking, the 63 Circuits de Petite Randonnée (€7 from the tourist office) has maps and descriptions of the circuits. Simple, reasonably priced accommodation can be found on the Grand Lac, at the Chaumière du Lac (☎03.84.25.81.52, ☎03.83.25.24.54; 📍; closed Oct–March).

Surrounded by hills, Lac de Chalain, 16km north of Clairvaux and near the village of DOUCIER, has a much more impressive setting. It's also a very popular spot for camping, hence the prices can be high, especially in mid-summer. Of the five campsites in town the jointly run Fayolan and Le Grand Lac, both on the lake (☎03.84.25.26.19, 🌐www.campingfayolan.com; May to mid-Sept), are the nicest.

By far the most interesting sight around here – and one of the Jura's best-known natural spectacles – is the Cascades du Hérisson, a septet of waterfalls descending nearly 300m in just 3km. Well-marked from either end of the gorge, the easiest walk, accessible by road via Val-Dessous southeast of Doucier, leads to the best-known and prettiest of the falls, the Éventail. A ten-minute stroll from the car park leads to the cascade, which spreads out in ever-widening tiers, giving it the fan-like appearance after which it is named. Continuing upstream, you'll shake off most casual spectators and pass through the woods of wild oak and springtime daffodils to the dramatic Grand Saut, with its clear drop of sixty metres; the pathway passes behind the waterfall – an alarmingly windy spot to shower in. A steep climb leads to smaller springs feeding the odd swimming-hole, past a drinks kiosk – at the intersection of another path which leads south to the village of Bonlieu – to the uppermost Saut Girard, 3km up from the Éventail and close to the village of ILAY. There's a choice of restaurants in Ilay, but only one hotel, the Auberge du Hérisson, 5 rue des Lacs (☎03.84.25.58.18, 🌐www.herisson.com; 📍; closed Nov–Jan; restaurant menus €15–40); they'll also be able to provide some tourist information.

A short drive up the N78 east of Ilay leads to a lookout atop Pic de l'Aigle: at nearly 1000m high, this is one of the best spots from which to view the Jura's topography. On fine days, the views extend as far as Mont Blanc to the east, and west to the plain of the Saône.

Up to Morez and Les Rousses

The main trans-Jura route into Switzerland, the N5, begins its ascent to the frontier around St-Laurent-en-Grandvaux, which is great as a base for cross-country skiing but unmemorable apart from the picturesque Lac de l'Abbaye, 4km south of town on the D437. The Arbois–St-Claude train passes this way, stopping at MOREZ, 12km southeast of St-Laurent-en-Grandvaux. Squeezed along the narrow valley floor, the town is noted for the manufacture of watches and spectacles. Its tourist office is in the central place Jaurès (mid-July to mid-Aug Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–noon; rest of year Mon 2–6pm, Tues–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 10am–noon; ☎03.84.33.08.73, 🌐www.haut-jura.com), along with the gare routière, from where buses depart for La Cure on the Franco–Swiss border. Once on the Swiss side, you can catch trains down to Nyon on Lac Léman and to Geneva itself.

A couple of kilometres before the frontier, LES ROUSSES exists purely for skiing – downhill and especially cross-country – but just before it a lane leads down to a very attractive HI hostel in an old, red-shuttered farmhouse by a stream, 2km away at Bief-de-la-Chaille (☎03.84.60.02.80, 📧les-rousses@fuaj.org; closed mid–April to mid–May & Oct to mid–Dec); from here you can see the eerie spheres of the satellite-tracking station on the summit of La Dôle (1677m), the Jura's highest peak, just over the Swiss border. The GR9 footpath passes through here, beginning a magnificent hiking section all along the crest of the ridge to the Col de la Faucille and beyond.

There are plenty of hotels in Les Rousses itself: the Hôtel le France, 323 rue Pasteur (☎03.84.60.01.45, ☎03.84.60.04.63; 📍), is the town's best, but less extravagant lodgings can be found at the Du Gai Pinson, 1465 rte Blanche (☎03.84.60.02.15; 🌐www.hotelgaipinson.com; 📍), or Le Village, 344 rue Pasteur (☎03.84.34.12.75; 📍) both of which are chalet-style buildings with cosy wood-clad rooms. For a meal try the Restaurant Les P'Losses (☎03.84.60.06.68; à la carte from €10), in the winter sports centre on the Geneva road southwest of town. There are also plenty of cafés and pizzerias.

St-Claude and beyond

From Morez, the train line leaves the N5 and heads along the Gorges de la Bienne to the industrial town of ST-CLAUDE to the southwest, hemmed in by even higher mountains than those around Morez. It's famous for pipes (the smoking kind) and diamonds and other cut stones, with a museum, the Musée des Pipiers, Diamantaires et Lapidaires (Jan–April & Oct Mon–Sat 2–6pm; May, June & Sept daily 9.30am–noon & 2–6.30pm; July & Aug daily 9.30am–6.30pm; closed Nov & Dec; €4), dedicated to the makers of all three, opposite the fortified cathedral of St-Pierre on rue du Marché. The tourist office, 1 av de Belfort (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug also open Sun 10am–1pm; ☎03.84.45.34.24), distributes a free leaflet in English, The City's Discovery Tour, which gives a florid description of a two-hour walk around town.

Should you wish to stay here, try the Hôtel de la Poste, on rue Reybert (☎03.84.45.52.34; 📍). Plusher accommodation can be found at the Jura Hôtel, 40 av de la Gare (☎03.84.45.24.04, ☎03.84.45.58.10; 📍), or Le Joly (☎03.84.45.12.36; 📍) in Le Martinet, 3km southeast of town on the Col de la Faucille road, right next to a campsite (☎03.84.45.00.40). Wholesome, inexpensive food is served at the restaurant of Hôtel St-Hubert on the place St-Hubert and at Brasserie le Lacuzon, at 5 rue Victor-Hugo.

What gives purpose to the rest of the onward route from either St-Claude or Les Rousses are the superb views from the crest of the great fir-clad ridge that overlooks Lac Léman to the east. The N5 crosses the ridge at the Col de la Faucille (1323m). If it's clear, the view is unbelievably dramatic from the Col or the GR footpath; the whole range of the western Alps stretches out before you, dominated by Mont Blanc, with the steely cusp of Lac Léman at your feet. There's an even better view from the top of nearby Mont Rond (1534m), accessible by chair lift. Of course, if it's not clear, the journey will have been in vain, but if you're carrying on south of Geneva, 30km away, it's downhill all the way – with the thought of some revitalizing bars of Swiss chocolate at the day's end.

Lake Geneva

The dolphin-shaped expanse of Lake Geneva (Lac Léman to the French) forms a natural border with Switzerland. Over 70km long, 14km wide and an amazing 310m deep, the lake is fed and drained by the Rhône. It's a real inland sea, subject to violent storms, as Byron and Shelley discovered to their discomfort in 1816. On a calm day, though, sailing slowly across its silky-smooth surface is a serene experience. The largest town on the French side, Thonon-les-Bains, is far less touristy than its surrounding neighbours, the world-famous spa town of Évian and ancient, picturesque Yvoire, and makes a good base for exploring the lakeside and the surrounding Chablais region.

Thonon-les-Bains

Though the town itself is only of minor interest, THONON-LES-BAINS' position overlooking the lake is stunning. It's also the starting point of the 700-kilometre-long Route des Grandes Alpes, a popular, signposted tourist route which winds its way through the mountains to Menton, on the Mediterranean coast (🌐www.routedesgrandesalpes.com).

The waterfront, connected to the upper town by funicular railway (daily every 2–4min: April–June & Sept 8am–9pm; July & Aug 8am–11pm; €1.80 round trip), is a pleasant place to while away a summer afternoon, with its tiny fishermen's cottages, cafés, restaurants and snack kiosks. Running northwards, the flower-decked lakefront promenade, the quai de Ripaille, leads past the marina and the fantastic public swimming pools (daily May–Sept 9am–7pm; €3.50) to the Château de Ripaille (guided tours daily: Feb, March, Oct & Nov 3pm; April–June & Sept 11am, 2.30pm & 4pm; July & Aug 11am & on the half-hour 2.30–5pm; €6; 🌐www.ripaille.fr). The château was built in the fifteenth century by Amédée VIII, the colourful first duke of Savoie, who later served ten years as anti-pope before retiring from the post to become Bishop of Geneva. In fact, despite its turrets it looks more like a lovely country manor than a castle, due in part to major restoration in the late nineteenth century, which left a rich legacy of Art Nouveau interiors. The vineyard attached to the property produces one of the region's best-regarded wines, which are available to taste and buy at the château on weekdays.

Practicalities

From the gare SNCF, avenue de la Gare leads to place des Arts, from which rue des Granges takes you to the port via the tourist office on place du Marché (Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm; Sat 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm; ☎04.50.71.55.55, 🌐www.thononlesbains.com). There's also a summertime tourist office kiosk at the harbour (July & Aug daily 10.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; ☎04.50.26.19.94). As Thonon is itself compact, its hotels are modest but pleasant two-star affairs. Try the lakeside Le Port, 1 quai de Ripaille (☎04.50.26.01.62; 🍷), or the basic but comfortable Le Comte Rouge, 10 bd du Canal (☎04.50.71.06.04, 📞04.50.81.93.49; 🍷), near the gare SNCF and the town centre. There's a campsite, Le Saint-Disdille (April–Sept ☎04.50.71.14.11, 🌐www.disdille.com) on the eastern edge of town just off the avenue de St-Disdille. One of Thonon's best restaurants is Le Scampi, 1 av du Léman, which specializes in fresh fish from the lake, with menus starting at €18 (☎04.50.71.10.04). A less expensive option is the Chinese Royal Thonon, 3 rue des Ursules (☎04.50.71.92.03).

13

THE ALPS AND JURA

Lake Geneva

Yvoire

Some 16km to west of Thonon lies the pretty medieval village of YVOIRE, famous for its extravagant flower displays, which seem to drip in profusion from every building in summer, when the narrow cobbled lanes are frequently choked with hordes of day-trippers. The main attraction is the lovely Labyrinthe-Jardin des Cinq Sens, off rue du Lac (April to mid-May daily 11am–6pm; mid-May to mid-Sept 10am–7pm; mid-Sept to Oct 1–5pm; €8), a spread of immaculate formal gardens laid out with a huge variety of plants, and designed to appeal to each of the five senses. The tourist office is on place de la Mairie (April–Oct daily 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–5pm; Nov–March closed Sat & Sun; ☎04.50.72.80.21, 🌐www.yvoiretourism.com). Finding a room in the village can be difficult, especially in high season, though you could try Hôtel le Pré de la Cure on place de la Mairie (☎04.50.72.83.58, 🌐www.pre-delacure.com; closed mid-Nov to March; 🍷); the tourist office may also be able to help locate a room. Finding somewhere to eat is rather easier, with several harbour-side restaurants serving up fresh fish dishes to the tourist crowds.

Évian

Moving eastwards, ÉVIAN, or Évian-les-Bains as it is known officially, is a pleasant and peaceful spa resort, though there isn't a great deal to see or do other than simply enjoy the serenity of the waterfront, or take leisurely trips on the lake. The mineral water for which the town is famous is now bottled at Amphion, 3km along the lakeside (reserve at the tourist office for one of the four daily tours; ☎04.50.26.80.29; €1.70), but the Source Cachat on avenue des Sources still gushes away behind the Évian company's Art Nouveau offices in rue Nationale, providing unlimited free and refreshing water round the clock. There's a funicular that begins from just above the casino; though the views are underwhelming, it has the advantage of being free (mid-May to mid-Sept 10am–7pm; every 20min).

The waterfront is elegantly laid out with squares of billiard-table grass, brilliant flower-beds and exotic trees, mini-golf, water slides and other peaceful ways of amusing oneself. There are ferries to explore other towns around the lake, including Lausanne (12 daily; €40.30 return) and Geneva (2 daily; €38.50 return) in Switzerland and Yvoire (3 daily; €25.80 return) and Thonon-les-Bains (4 daily; €15.80 return) on the French side. CGN Ferries also runs a number of sightseeing cruises (📧 www.cgn.ch), which do circuits of the lake, stopping at picturesque spots; enquire at the tourist office for details. The tourist office also reserves spaces on a boat that goes to Les Pré-Curieux water gardens, picturesque lakeside gardens, each organized around a water-based ecosystem. The tour includes a visit to a colonial house that contains educational exhibitions on the wetlands (open May–Sept; reserve at the tourist office or email 📧 info@precurieux.com).

Practicalities

The tourist office is on place d'Allinges (May–Sept Mon–Fri 8.30am–noon & 2–7pm, Sat 9am–noon & 3–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 3–6pm; Oct–April Mon–Fri 8.30am–noon & 2–7pm; 📞 04.50.75.04.26, 🌐 www.eviantourism.com). The town has a few top-notch four-star hotels if you're after some full-on luxury, but there are many more affordable options available too, the best of which is the Hôtel Continental, 65 rue Nationale (📞 04.50.75.37.54, 🌐 www.continental-evian.com; 📍), in the centre of town, with rooms on the top floor that have a view of the lake. The nearby Bourgogne, place Charles-Cottet (📞 04.50.75.01.05, 🌐 www.hotel-evian-bourgogne.com; 📍), offers large rooms and a higher standard of comfort, while the Terminus, at 32 av de la Gare (📞 04.50.75.15.07, 🌐 www.hotel-terminus-evian.com; 📍), is a basic option directly across from the gare SNCF. On the waterfront, the Savoy, 17 quai Besson (📞 04.50.83.15.00, 🌐 www.savoy-hotel.com; 📍), provides comfortable, contemporary rooms, some of which overlook the lake, without breaking the bank. There's also a private hostel, Côté Lac Evian, on avenue de Neuvecelle (📞 04.50.75.35.87, 🌐 www.cotelacevian.com; 📍) – the D21 towards Abondance – and four-star camping at De la Plage, 304 rue de la Garenne (📞 04.50.70.00.46; 🌐 www.camping-dela-plage.com; closed Oct–April), less than 1km from the town centre. There are plenty of places to eat: at the cheaper end, try Le Siam, 5 rue Clermont, with good Thai food starting at €10, or some of the pizzerias on the east end of rue Nationale. The restaurants at the Bourgogne and the Savoy hotels offer more upmarket menus, with prices starting at €16.

Lake Geneva to Mont Blanc: Chablais, Faucigny and Aravis

Softer, greener and a lot less crowded than the mighty ranges further south, the Northern pre-Alps climb up in steps from the shores of Lake Geneva. The first of the mountainous regions is the Chablais, whose sleepy farming hamlets of Morzine and Les Gets spring into life both during the ski season from December to April, and increasingly in July and August for mountain bikers. South over Mont Buet lies the Faucigny and the pretty village of Samoëns, a contrast with its neighbour the purpose-built 1960s ski village of Flaine. And to the east is the Aravis, divided from the Chablais and the Faucigny by a deep U-shaped valley created during the last Ice Age. This cut has provided a route through the mountains since Roman times and is now shared by the Autoroute Blanche, railway lines and heavy industry around the valley towns along the river Arve. To the south, and just west of Mont Blanc, Mégève is one of the most upmarket of French ski resorts.

Morzine and the Chablais region

From Thonon the D902 winds south through a narrow gorge cut by the raging River Dranse. As the road climbs higher the cliffs and tunnels disappear, replaced by the lush fields and charming hamlets of the Chablais. At the head of the valley sits MORZINE, a market town made rich through tourism. Despite the heavy development of skiing and biking, the village, with its narrow streets and wooden chalets, has retained much of its original character. A handful of older farmhouses and prospectors' cottages date back to 1734 when slate mining began in the Prodains valley 2km east of Morzine. Mining by hand continues to this day and the mines can be visited: contact Franck Buet (☎04.50.79.12.21, 🌐www.ardoise-morzine.com), a young slate worker who offers weekly guided tours. Agriculture also plays an important part in the local economy, and tomme, Réblochon and Abondance cheeses are all produced locally; Nicolas Baud at the Fruitière de Morzine, l'Alpage (☎04.50.79.12.39; Wed & Thurs 9am; free) gives visitors the chance to take part in the cheese-making process.

In the winter season (Dec–April) the town's ski lifts link into the Portes du Soleil area, which stretches across the border into Switzerland, making it one of the largest areas in the world. The Super Morzine télécabine and the téléphérique at Prodains take you to the purpose-built resort of Avoriaz above Morzine, while the Pleney and Nyon lifts head towards Les Gets. During the summer season (July & Aug) several of the main lifts remain open to mountain bikers, walkers and paragliders.

Practicalities

Morzine's tourist office, on the place de l'Office du Tourisme (daily 9am–12.30pm & 3.30–6.30pm; ☎04.50.74.72.72, 🌐www.morzine.com), offers helpful hiking maps, with mountain refuge phone numbers listed. There are a mass of ski hire shops in the village; try Starski on route du Téléphérique. The École de Ski Français on the same road (☎04.50.79.13.13, 🌐www.esf-morzine.com) is one of five ski schools organizing instructors for individual private lessons or group lessons.

Accommodation, mainly in small, chalet-style hotels and guesthouses, is not cheap, especially in high season, and must be booked in advance. Try the central Le Sporting Hotel, rond-point de Joux Plane (☎04.50.79.15.03, 🌐www.hotelsporting-morzine.com; compulsory half-board 🍷); or the rustic Farmhouse, in a 1771 grand manoir overlooking the village on chemin de la Coutettaz (☎04.50.79.08.26; 🌐www.thefarmhouse.co.uk; closed Oct & Nov; summer 🍷, winter compulsory half-board 🍷). Catered chalets operate during the main winter and summer season: try Chilly Powder, Les Prodains (☎04.50.74.75.21, 🌐www.chillypowder.com; winter season €495–995 per person per week chalet board, rest of year 🍷). In summer, there's the option of camping at Les Marmottes, 3km north in Essert Romand (☎04.50.75.74.44; closed Oct, Nov & May).

Most local restaurants serve pizzas and cheese-based dishes; Café Chaud (☎04.50.79.03.31) is the best. Up in the mountains, La Pointe de Nyon, accessible from the téléphérique de Nyon 1.5km south, is worth the trek, with panoramic views of the Plateau de Nyon (☎04.50.79.11.74; à la carte from around €15); Pascal's team serve delicious mountain cuisine, including wild mushroom risotto. Nightlife in town centres around the Taille de Mas Plenev, just by the tourist office, where revellers spill out of the many bars and crowd onto the pavement.

Samoëns and the Faucigny

A fine place to absorb the region's atmosphere is the gentle and attractive village of SAMOËNS, south of Morzine on the main Geneva–Chamonix Autoroute Blanche lying at the foot of the Aiguille de Criou (2207m) with the tall peak of Mont Buet (3099m) in the distance. The village's architectural claim to fame is its sixteenth-century Gothic church, Notre-Dame de l'Assomption, built on Romanesque foundations, with a doorway with crouching lions. The village is also known as the birthplace of Marie-Louise Cognacq-Jay, who left to seek her fortune in Paris at the age of 15 in 1853, and found it as the founder of the famous French department store, La Samaritaine. There's also a beautiful botanical garden (daily: summer 8am–noon & 1–7pm; winter 8am–noon & 1.30–5.30pm; free), on the slope above the old part of the village, created by Madame Jay and planted with specimens of mountain flora from all over the world. Despite its low altitude, Samoëns is becoming more popular with skiers thanks to a short transfer time from Geneva and a new télécabine, the Express du Grand Massif, 2km south of the village, which links it to the main ski area.

Buses arrive at place de l'Autogare, opposite the tourist office (☎04.50.34.40.28, 🌐www.samoens.com), which has excellent walking and VTT maps of the surrounding area, and sells ski passes (which are also available at the télécabine). There are dozens of sports shops both in town and around the base of the ski lift that rents ski equipment; try Anthonioz Ski on avenue Cognac-Jaÿ, which also rents out VTT bikes during summer months. Next door the ESF (☎04.50.34.43.12, 🌐www.esfsamoens.com) is one of four ski schools in the village offering instruction for both adults and children. For accommodation, try Hotel Les Drugères (☎04.50.34.43.84, 🌐hotel.lesdrugeres.com; Ⓢ; closed May & Nov) or Hotel Les Glaciers (☎04.50.34.40.06, 🌐www.hotel-les-glaciers.com; closed May, June & Sept to mid-Dec; Ⓢ). Both hotels have restaurants and good-sized, comfortable rooms; the latter also has an indoor and outdoor pool. The most beautiful option in town are the chambres d'hôtes at 🐿️ La Maison de Fifine (☎04.50.34.10.29, 🌐www.fifine.com; Ⓢ), a rustic and cosy old farmhouse converted with a contemporary touch, while at the other end of the scale there's a municipal campsite, Le Giffre (☎04.50.34.41.92, 🌐www.camping-samoens.com) by the River Giffre.

Flaine

South of Samoëns, FLAINE is the second major resort making up the local ski area. Built at 1600m in the late 1960s by the eminent Bauhaus architect Marcel Breuer, the proposed fusion between man, mountains and art became more of a monument to concrete, its four arcaded tower blocks surrounding a square, which has at its centre Picasso's La Tête de Femme sculpture. The resort is only open during the winter (Dec–April) and summer (July & Aug) seasons, and accommodation is principally in apartments; contact the tourist office on Galerie Marchande Forum (☎04.50.90.80.01, 🌐www.flaine.com) for information. An alternative is the Chalet La Cascade (☎04.50.90.87.66, 🌐www.lacascade-flaine.fr; compulsory half-board Ⓢ) a cosy, chalet-style hotel-restaurant on the edge of the village.

Sixt and the Cirque du Fer-à-Cheval

East of Samoëns, the valley narrows into the Gorges des Tines before opening out again at SIXT, 7km away, another pretty village on the confluence of two

Skiing in the Alps

The French Alps offers some of the best (and best-value) skiing in Europe, with long and varied runs, extensive lift networks, and excellent facilities, often using the latest technology, such as artificial snow. Skiing first became a recreational sport in the early 1900s but the industry really began to boom in the 1960s with the construction of dozens of high-altitude, purpose-built resorts that ensured good lasting snow cover. Some of the resorts have their detractors: the modernist architects often neglected visual aesthetics and the need for living space, earning France a reputation for “ski factories”. But few can knock their efficiency – at many, you can clip your skis on at the door and have some of the largest ski circuses in the world stretching out in front of you. And at the foot of the major resorts, traditional farming villages, linked to the resorts by fast, modern lifts, provide plenty of accommodation options, equipment outlets and ski schools.

The ski season runs from December to late April, with high season over Christmas and New Year, February half-term and to a lesser extent Easter; the weekends are also busy with crowds descending on resorts close to big urban centres and those with short airport transfers. During the summer more and more resorts are turning their hand to catering for mountain bikers, operating some of their lifts for walkers and VTT (velo tout terrain).

For information on where to ski, see the “Alpine ski resorts at a glance” box opposite.

Alpine ski resorts at a glance

Resort name	Altitude	Towns	Round-up	Km of Piste	Cross-country	Ski-lifts	Six-day pass	Page
Chamonix Valley	1000–3842m	Chamonix, Argentière, Les Houches	Six unconnected areas, strung along a traffic-ridden valley, ascending to high mountains and spectacular off-piste for advanced skiers. Popular year round with tourists, the town's hip bars filled with gnarly mountaineers and dreadlocked skiers.	155km	45km	47	€186	987
Megève	1000–2350m	Megève, St-Gervais	The Monaco of skiing; poodles with fur coats, giant chalets and gentle intermediate skiing amongst stunning scenery.	300km	76km	82	€216	983
Massif des Aravis	1200–2600m	La Clusaz, Le Grand Bornand	Pretty traditional villages with a very French feel a short transfer away from Geneva. Good value but limited nightlife. Family-oriented resorts with intermediate skiing amongst beautiful mountains covered in fir trees but may be a bit low so snow is less certain.	220km	70km	98	€156	982
Grand Massif	900–2480m	Samoëns, Flaine	The very pretty, low-altitude village of Samoëns has plenty of bars and even a market but no direct ski access while the soulless, concrete, high mountain blocks of Flaine provide ski-in-ski-out apartments and hotels linking into the intermediate and beginner-suited area.	265km	110km	75	€174	979
Portes du Soleil	900–2350m	Morzine, Avoriaz, Châtel-les-Gets	Pretty, low-altitude, traditional family resorts of Morzine and Les Gets link into the modern, purpose-built Avoriaz situated at the top of a cliff via a tenuous link. Avoriaz is popular with pro snowboarders, and has bars to match. Area provides excellent skiing for all levels.	650km	130km	260	€184	978
Trois Vallées	1300–3195m	Méribel, Courchevel, Val Thorens	A favourite with Brits, this massive area is suitable for all abilities but is overcharging, and the scenery is disappointing.	580km	130km	200	€215	996
Paradiski	1250–3250m	Les Arcs, La Plagne	These areas were recently joined in order to compete with other super-size French resorts. Purpose-built village lacks charm or planning but there's good skiing for all abilities.	425km	115km	165	€229	998
Espace Killy	1550–3656m	Val d'Isère, Tignes	A high snow-shore Mecca for advanced skiers, this harsh environment is difficult to get to. Resorts are butt-ugly but the nightlife is excellent.	300km	44km	100	€198	1000
Les Deux-Alpes	1600–3568m	Les Deux-Alpes, La Grave	Intermediate slopes of Deux-Alpes are popular with snowboarders and at weekends are filled to bursting with students from nearby Grenoble. Best nightlife in France to match. While La Grave is for hardcore skiers and mountaineers, it's very dangerous – ski with guide only.	200km	20km	63	€169	1013
Alpe d'Huez	1500–3330m	Alpe d'Huez	Purpose-built, sunny resort, good skiing for all levels. Extensive and still very French.	220km	50km	85	€187	1012
Serre Chevalier	1400–2830m	Serre Chevalier	Pretty village, beautiful scenery and good skiing for all abilities, but low, unsatisfactory ski links between the different areas often break down because of lack of snow.	250km	35km	72	€160	1015 branches of the Giffre: the Giffre-Haut, which comes down from Salvagny; and the Giffre-Bas, which rises in the Cirque du Fer-à-Cheval.

The cirque begins about 6km from Sixt – there's a footpath along the left bank of the Giffre-Bas. It's a vast semicircle of rock walls, up to 700m in height and 4–5km long, blue with haze on a summer's day and striated with the long chains of white water from the waterfalls. The left-hand end of the cirque is dominated by a huge spike of rock known as La Corne du Chamois (The Goat's Horn). At its foot the valley of the Giffre bends sharply north to its source in the glaciers above the Fond de la Combe. The bowl of the cirque is thickly wooded except for a circular meadow in the middle where the road ends.

There's a tourist office and a park office in the centre of Sixt (both Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–7pm; ☎04.50.34.49.36, 🌐www.sixtferacheval.com). The park office produces a useful and well-illustrated folder of walks in the region. Sixt also has three gîtes d'étape and a hotel, Le Petit Tétrás (☎04.50.34.42.51, 🌐www.le-petit-tetras.fr; 📍; closed mid-Sept to Dec), a modern chalet with an outdoor pool.

La Clusaz and the Aravis Mountains

The other side of the Cluses valley and the Autoroute Blanche, in the Aravis range of mountains, the old farming community of LA CLUSAZ was one of the first to turn its hand to skiing, and the ski museum at 23 route de l'Étala (☎06.62.89.21.76; mid-June to mid-Sept & late Dec to April daily except Sat 4–7.30pm; €2.50) tells the story of a hundred years of winter sports in the area. The tourist office, 161 place de l'Église (☎04.50.32.65.00, 🌐www.laclusaz.com; daily except Sun 9am–noon & 2–6pm), sells lift tickets, has information on ski schools and rental shops and also provides excellent walking and cycling maps. For chalet accommodation try Chalet Maxim, 1/37 rte de la Piscine (☎06.15.04.25.18, 🌐www.chaletmaxim.com; winter €650–970 per person per week chalet board) while the beautiful 🏡 Ferme de Vanille (☎04.50.09.08.32, 🌐www.lafermedevanille.com; compulsory half-board 🍷), 11km north in Le Grand Bornand provides wonderful chambres d'hôtes in a chalet that dates back to 1708.

Megève

Stunning views of Mont Blanc and an old-world charm make MEGÈVE, 30km south of La Clusaz, one of the most beautiful French resorts, and exclusive hotels, designer boutiques and smart ski-rental shops lend it a jet-set feel. The traffic-free place de l'Église, surrounded by carefully restored old buildings, lies at the heart of the village. In winter, outside the fine medieval church, a queue of brightly painted sleigh-taxis driven by local farmers takes visitors on village tours.

The tourist office is on place de l'Église (Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; ☎04.50.21.27.28 🌐www.megeve.com). Upmarket hotels include the luxurious Les Fermes de Maries (☎04.50.93.03.10, 🌐www.fermesdemarie.com; 🍷), whose individual chalets are linked by underground passages so as not to disturb the beauty of the snow outside, and Le Mont Blanc (☎04.50.21.20.02, 🌐www.hotelmontblanc.com; 🍷); both hotels offer spa treatments and fireplaces in some of the suites. Budget accommodation in the centre is hard to find and many options insist on week-long stays, but it's worth trying the plain but comfortable Hotel le Prairie, rue Charles-Feige (☎04.50.21.48.55, 🌐www.hotellaprairie.com; closed June and Sept–Nov; 🍷), which often lets you book rooms per night at the last minute. For eating, 🏡 Les Enfants Terribles at the Mont Blanc Hotel offers excellent Savoyard cuisine (☎04.50.58.76.69; à la carte from €24).

Mont Blanc

Sixty kilometres south of Évian on the Swiss and Italian borders looms Mont Blanc (4807m), Western Europe's highest peak, right on the Italian border. First climbed in 1786, this mountain is the biggest tourist draw in the Alps, but its grandeur is undiminished by the hordes of visitors, and if you're walking in the area, you can soon get away from the crowds. The closest airport is in Geneva, but if you're coming from France then Annecy (see p.988) is the easiest city from which to approach the mountain, and, of the two road routes, the one east via the Megève is the more interesting. The two main approach roads to Mont Blanc come together at Le Fayet, a village just outside St-Gervais-les-Bains, where the tramway du Mont Blanc begins its 75-minute haul to the Nid d'Aigle, a vantage point on the northwest slope (€23.50 return). From here it's an easy one-hour round-trip walk to the Glacier de Bionnassay. The remainder of Mont Blanc activities are based from around Chamonix-Mont Blanc, the French base camp for all Mont Blanc activities, just 20km from St-Gervais.

Chamonix-Mont Blanc

Bustling, cosmopolitan CHAMONIX, with its rash of restaurants and flashy boutiques, may have long since had its village identity submerged in a sprawl of tourist development, but the stunning backdrop of glaring snowfields, eerie blue glaciers and ridges of shark-toothed aiguilles surrounding Mont Blanc are more than ample compensation.

Arrival and information

The gare SNCF, gare routière and main car park are a short walk east of place du Triangle-de-l'Amitié, where the tourist office, at no. 85 (daily: July & Aug 8.30am–7.30pm; Sept–June 8.30am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; ☎04.50.53.00.24, @www.chamonix.com), offers up-to-the-minute walking and climbing information, and publishes a map of summer walks in the area (€4). The Chamonix multipass (see p.986) and other mountain lift passes can also be purchased here, as well as at the foot of each cable-car ascent. The websites @www.chamonix.net and @www.chamonixexperience.com are also good sources of information on the town. Near the tourist office, the Maison de la Montagne houses the Compagnie des Guides (daily: 8.30am–noon and 3.30–7.30pm; ☎04.50.53.00.88, @www.chamonix-guides.com) for those who don't want to ski off-piste or hike unaccompanied; the guides also run rock- and ice-climbing schools. Also enclosed in the Maison are the Office de Haute Montagne (daily: July to mid-Aug 9am–noon & 3–6pm; ☎04.50.53.22.08, @www.ohm-chamonix.com), which gives advice on refuges as well as a meteorological service (☎04.50.53.22.08). There's an Internet café at CyBar, 80 rue des Moulins (daily 11am–midnight), though if you can stand it the terminals at the McDonald's on avenue Michel-Croz are less expensive.

Accommodation

One of the biggest headaches in and around Chamonix is finding a bed, especially if, as a walker or climber, you're having to sit out bad weather while waiting to get into the hills. All hotels need booking in advance and tend to be expensive;

however, there's also a good supply of hostel and gîte accommodation. Campsites are numerous, though in high season there may only be room for a small mountain tent. Two convenient sites are Camping de la Mer de Glace, less than 2km north of town, close to Les Praz (☎04.50.53.44.03, 🌐www.chamonix-camping.com; closed mid-Sept to May), and Les Rosières off the route des Praz (☎04.50.53.10.42, 🌐www.campinglesrosieres.com; year-round; €14 tent and two people).

High season in Chamonix is February to March and July and August, with the summer season being less expensive than the winter; many establishments close in May and October. Over New Year, though, prices nearly double – expect to pay €100 for a room that costs only €65 for the rest of high season.

Auberge du Bois Prin 69 chemin de l’Hermine ☎ 04.50.53.33.51, 🌐 www.boisprin.com. Ultra-swish, this deluxe hotel has a romantic wooded location in the suburb of Les Moussoux, 1km south of the town centre. ⑤

La Bagna 337 rte des Gaudenays ☎ 04.50.53.62.90, 🌐 www.la-bagna.com. A simply converted eighteenth-century farmhouse with cosy wooden rooms in the village of Les Praz, 2km north of Chamonix near the golf course and at the foot of 3754-metre Mont Dru. ④

Le Belvédère 501 rte du Plagnolet, Argentière ☎ 04.50.54.02.59, 🌐 www.gitebelvedere.com. Simple rooms in a town house at the foot of the Grands Montes ski area, 6km north of Chamonix. ③

Crémerie Balmat 749 promenade des Crémeries ☎ 04.50.53.24.44, 📞 04.50.53.29.42. Basic but cheap hotel 1.5km north of the town centre just off route du Bouchet in a quiet spot surrounded by pine forests and with views to Mont Blanc. ③

Les Crêtes Blanches 16 impasse du Gényép ☎ 04.50.53.05.62, 🌐 www.cretes-blanches.com. A 1960s wood-clad block; the interior has been decorated as an old town house with lots of wood, stone and a cosy roaring fire. ③

Hostel 127 montée Jacques-Balmat, Les-Pèlerins-en-Haut ☎ 04.50.53.14.52, 📧 chamonix@fuaj.org. Modern, comfortable hostel in the western part of town. Bus towards Les Houches and get off at “Pèlerins École” – the hostel is signposted from there. Closed for one week in mid-May & Nov to mid-Dec. €16.70 for a bed in a small dorm.

Red Mountain Lodge 435 rue Joseph-Vallot ☎ 04.50.53.94.79, 📧 redmountainlodge@yahoo.com. A good-value chalet whose living room has an open fire and comfy sofas. run by extraordinarily friendly, English-speaking staff. Meals provided gîte-style. Open May–Oct. ④

La Tapia 152 rte de la Frasse, Les Mouilles ☎ 04.50.53.18.19, 🌐 www.latapia.com. Located in a small quiet village 1.5km northeast of Chamonix, this gîte has basic bunk-bed rooms for 2–6 people and wonderful views. ①

Le Touring 95 rue Joseph-Vallot ☎ 04.50.53.59.18, 🌐 www.hoteltouring-chamonix.com. A pretty, traditional hotel with antique furniture in a very central spot; street-facing rooms may be noisy. ⑤

The Town

The mountains provide the main sights and activities, but on days when the bad weather sets in, there are a few things to do in town. The Musée Alpin, off avenue Michel-Croz in the town centre (daily: 2–7pm; €5), will interest mountaineers, but its collection of equipment and documents is a bit disappointing. Its star exhibit is Jacques Balmat’s account of his first ascent of Mont Blanc in 1786. The Richard Bozon Sports Centre on avenue de la Plage has ice-skating, a pool, sauna and hamam, climbing wall and tennis courts (hours vary; ☎ 04.50.53.09.07). Across the street, the library contains a good selection of English-language books.

Eating, drinking and nightlife

The choice restaurants and bars reflect not only Chamonix’s geographical location, with influences from Switzerland and Italy, but also the tastes of the cosmopolitan mix of visitors. Vietnamese, fusion and hamburger places share the food scene with more traditional Savoyard restaurants, pizzerias and haute French cuisine. Rue Joseph-Vallot has plenty of gourmet food shops with local cheeses and other Alpine delicacies, and there are several well-stocked supermarkets in town for making a picnic. If you’re after a drink, rue des Moulins is packed from end to end with English-speaking bars and clubs.

Restaurants

Atmosphère 123 place Balmat ☎04.50.55.97.97. High-quality dining in a cosy setting; in summer an outside balcony terrace overhangs the river. Elaborate dishes from €21.

 Munchies 87 rue des Moulins ☎04.50.53.45.41. Ultra-hip hangout offering French-Japanese-Thai fusion including authentic sushi; mains start at €16.

Osteria La Dolce Vita 78 rue de Lyret ☎04.50.53.91.29. Italian wine bar specializing in bruschetta, focaccia, as well as all manner of generously filled panini (around €6). Cosy, fun atmosphere with delicious smells emanating from the wood-burning oven.

La Poêle 79 av de l'Aiguille-du-Midi ☎04.50.55.96.13. Good-value restaurant with simple home-cooked cuisine; try one of the excellent omelettes. À la carte €7.80–20.

La Terrasse 43 place Balmat ☎04.50.53.09.95. Soak up the sun and admire the views from the 1920s Art Deco-style balcony, sit out on the square next to the river or dine beneath the grand ceilings inside. Simple bistro food served from 4.30pm, and late-night there's music – rock most nights, house on Thurs.

Valentino 30 place Balmat ☎04.50.53.67.72. An excellent, cheap and centrally located pizzeria, which also serves a good cappuccino. Around €11 for a pizza and beer.

Cafés and bars

Arbate 80 chemin du Sapi ☎04.50.53.44.43. A favourite après-ski bar with British and Scandinavian seasonaires. The atmosphere is festive on rock, house and pop nights despite the barn-like wooden decor and feeble lighting.

Cantina 37 impasse des Rhododendrons ☎04.50.53.83.80. A small authentic Mexican cantina with a popular downstairs nightclub playing host to DJs, live bands and dancing most nights from 6pm–2am.

MBC (Micro Brasserie de Chamonix) 350 rte du Bouchet ☎04.50.53.61.59. Five beers are brewed on the premises at this laid-back bar, and fermented in large vessels on view behind the bar. Open daily 4pm–2am, with American-style food served 7–11pm.

13

Around Chamonix

There are a number of exhilarating excursions around Chamonix that are worth experiencing – it may be worth getting a multi-pass that covers all the lifts in the area (starting at €52 for 36 hours or €66 for two non-consecutive days).

The most famous excursion is the very expensive, and often very crammed, téléférique (May–Sept 7.30am–5pm, mid-Dec to April 8.30am–4pm; €36 return, advance reservations €2, call ☎08.92.68.00.67) to the Aiguille du Midi (3842m), one of the longest cable-car ascents in the world, rising no fewer than 3000m above the valley floor in two impossibly steep stages. Penny-pinching by buying a ticket only as far as the Plan du Midi, which is used principally by climbers heading up to the routes on the Aiguilles du Chamonix, is a waste of money: go all the way or not at all. If you do go up, make the effort to be on your way before 9am, as the summits tend to cloud over towards midday, and huge crowds may force you to wait for hours if you try later. Take warm clothes – even on a summer's day it'll be below zero at the top – and suntan lotion is also advisable to protect against the glare off the snow. You need a steady head, too: the drop beneath the little bubble of steel and glass is terrifying.

The Aiguille is an exposed granite pinnacle on which a restaurant and the téléférique dock are precariously balanced. The view is incredible. At your feet is the snowy plateau of the Col du Midi, with the glaciers of the Vallée Blanche and Géant crawling off left at their millennial pace. To the right a steep snowfield leads to the easy ridge route to the summit of Mont Blanc with its cap of ice. Away to the front, rank upon rank of snow- and ice-capped monsters recede into the distance. Most impressive of all, spanning the horizon to your left, from the east to south, is a mind-blowing cirque of needle-sharp peaks and precipitous cliffs: the Aiguille Verte, Triollet and the Jorasses, with the Matterhorn and Monte Rosa visible in the far distance across a glorious landscape of rock, snow and cloud-filled valleys – the lethal testing ground of all climbers.

From the Aiguille you can continue to Pont Helbronner on a ski lift above the Glacier du Géant, and from there descend to Italy, from where a bus will take you back through the Mont Blanc tunnel to Chamonix (€54 including the Aiguille du Midi ascent, not included on the multipass).

An alternative to descending all the way from the Aiguille by cable car is to get off at the midway station at Plan de l'Aiguille and hike to Lac Bleu (1hr round trip), or take a two-and-a-half hour hike along the Plan de l'Aiguille-Montvers traverse to the top of the Montenvers rack railway (May–Sept 8.30am–5.30pm; Oct to mid-Nov & mid-Dec to April 10am–4pm; €16 return). At the top you have the option of taking a short cable-car ride down into an ice cave carved out of the Mer de Glace every summer (an additional €6.60). A cheaper way, however, to view a glacier is to take the chair lift from the village of Les Bosson, 2km south of Chamonix, up to the Glacier des Bossons (daily: July & Aug 8am–6pm; €9.50), where you can see the biggest precipice in Europe (a drop of 3500m), as well as the Alps' lowest ice face. A nature trail at the top, along with the spectacular views, makes for a good half-day outing.

Hiking and climbing in the Chamonix valley

Opposite Mont Blanc, the north side of Chamonix valley is enclosed by the lower but nonetheless impressive Aiguilles Rouges, with another téléférique to Le Brévent (15min; €20 return), the 2526-metre peak directly above the town. Classic walks this side of the valley include the Lac Blanc, starting from Les Praz and the Flégère téléférique (20min; €18 return), or walking to the top of the Flégère lift via the lovely lunch stop La Floria on the trail of the same name. The Grand and Petit Balcon Sud trails traverse the Aiguilles Rouges (from the top of Flégère to the top of Planpraz is a relatively easy two hours), and at points the trails open up to spectacular views of Mont Blanc. A highly recommended two-day hike is the GR5 stage north from Le Brévent to the village of Sixt via Lac d'Anterne, with a night at the Refuge d'Anterne. The classic long-distance route is the two-week Tour du Mont Blanc (TMB), described in a Topo-guide, Andrew Harvey's Tour of Mont Blanc and Chamonix-Mont Blanc: A Walker's Guide. The famous Haute Route from Chamonix to Zermatt can be done on foot in summer in eight days, or on touring skis in winter in six days. The trail rarely falls below 2500m and despite the crowded huts and paths it is a fantastic adventure for the scenery alone. Climbing Mont Blanc should not be undertaken lightly. It is a semi-technical climb and quickly changing conditions mean that a guide is essential. There are several different routes, the most popular being the Gouter ridge route (three days). The Cosmiques route offers a safer, shorter but more technical alternative (two days).

Skiing in the Chamonix valley

Despite its fame, Chamonix is not the most user-friendly of ski resorts and access to the slopes depends on shuttle buses or car. For advanced skiers, however, it's probably one of the best places in the Alps since it offers an impressive range of challenging runs and off-piste itineraries. It's not so much a single resort as a chain of unconnected ski areas set along both sides of the Chamonix valley and dominated by Mont Blanc. The sunny Brévent and Flégère areas on the southern slopes have jaw-dropping scenery in fine weather and good spots for lunch, while Argentière-Les Grands Montets and L'Aiguille du Midi, departure point for the famous Vallée Blanche, are cold, north-facing areas suited to advanced skiers. The intermediate areas of Le Tour and Les Houches can be found at the northern and southern ends of the valley, with their tree level slopes facing east and west. These areas are both good options in nasty weather conditions as the trees give definition to an otherwise white landscape.

Annecy and around

Sixty kilometres south of Geneva, at the northern tip of the turquoise Lac d'Annecy, and bounded to the east by the turreted peaks of La Tournette and to the west by the long wooded ridge of Le Semnoz, ANNECY is one of the most beautiful and popular resort towns of the French Alps, though the tourist traffic can get a bit wearing in high season. Historically, it enjoyed a brief flurry of importance in the early sixteenth century, when Geneva opted for the Reformation and the fugitive Catholic bishop decamped here with a train of ecclesiastics and a prosperous, cultivated elite. The main attractions, however, are not historic, but scenic; surrounded by picturesque mountains Annecy resembles a fairy-tale city, and is replete with a castle on a hill and an island prison.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The gare SNCF and gare routière complex is northwest of the centre, five minutes' walk north of the rue Royale. The road's continuation is the arcaded rue Pâquier, which contains the modern shopping precinct of Centre Bonlieu, housing the tourist office (Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 1.45–6pm; July & Aug also open Sun same times; ☎04.50.45.00.33, 🌐www.annecytourisme.com). For Internet in the old town try L'Emailerie, 6 place aux Bois. There's bike rental from Roul' ma poule at 4 rue des Marquissats (☎04.50.27.86.83).

Annecy has a number of good hotels. Reserve well in advance in high season, or you can chance it on one of the quirky no-star hotels on the far side of the gare SNCF. The municipal campsite, Le Belvédère (☎04.50.45.48.30), is situated off boulevard de la Corniche – turn right up the lane opposite chemin du Tillier; it's on the left past the Hôtel Belvédère. There are other sites all around the shore of the lake.

13

THE ALPS AND JURA

Annecy and around

△ Annecy

Central 6 rue Royale ☎04.50.45.05.37, 🌐www.hotelcentralannecy.com. One of the cheapest hotels in the centre of town. Small and serviceable, with basic but clean and modern rooms in an old building whose balconies are swathed in plants. ③

Du Château 16 rampe du Château ☎04.50.45.27.66, 🌐www.annecy-hotel.com. A homely hotel just uphill from the madding crowds with a terrace overlooking the town. ④

Hostel 4 rte du Semnoz ☎04.50.45.33.19, 📧annecy@fuaj.org. A short distance east from the centre, just uphill past the Centre Hospitalier; in the summer take summer bus marked "ligne d'été", or follow the signs to Semnoz. Closed Dec to mid-Jan. €15.70 for a bed in a small dorm.

L'Impérial Palace 32 av d'Albigny ☎04.50.09.30.00, 🌐www.imperial-annecy.com.

A luxurious four-star, in a beautiful mansion on the northeast bank of the lake beside the casino. ③

Du Nord 24 rue Sommeiller ☎04.50.45.08.78, 🌐www.annecy-hotel-du-nord.com. Modern and functional a/c rooms, close to the lake and the train station. ④

Du Palais de l'Isle 13 rue Perrière ☎04.50.45.86.87, 🌐www.hoteldupalaisdelisle.com. One of the more upmarket options in the heart of the medieval town, with light and airy rooms, some with views of the canal and lake. ⑤

 De Savoie 1 place St-François ☎04.50.45.15.45, 🌐www.hoteldesavoie.fr. Very pretty old building facing a cobbled square on one side and the canal on the other. Inside the furniture and floral decor are a bit passé but it still has plenty of character. ⑤

The Town

The most picturesque part of Annecy, the old town lies at the foot of the castle hill, a warren of lanes, passages and arcaded houses, below and between which flow branches of the Canal du Thiou, draining the lake into the River Fier. The houses, ringed by canalside railings overflowing with geraniums and petunias, are incredibly beautiful, though most of the shops now sell souvenirs.

From rue de l'Île on the canal's south bank, the narrow rampe du Château leads up to the château, former home of the counts of Genevois and the dukes of Nemours, a junior branch of the house of Savoy. There has been a castle on this site from the eleventh century but the Nemours, finding the old fortress too rough and unpolished for their taste, added living quarters in the sixteenth century, which now house the collections of the Musée-Château and Observatoire Régional des Lacs Alps (June–Sept daily 10.30am–6pm; Oct–May daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €4.70). The main attraction is the castle itself, and the views it provides of the lake below, but some of the exhibits are also of interest. Displayed in surprisingly modern and high-tech fashion, objects range from archeological finds from around the lake to Savoyard popular art and woodwork; there's also an aquarium with lake fish and an informative exhibition on the geography of the Alps.

At the base of the château is rue Ste-Claire, the main street of the old town, with arcaded shops and houses. At no. 18 is the Hôtel Favre, where in 1606 Antoine Favre, an eminent lawyer, and Bishop de Sales founded the literary-intellectual Académie Florimontane “because the Muses thrive in the mountains of Savoie”. At the west end of the street is its original medieval gateway. Parallel to rue Ste-Claire, on the other side of the canal, rue J.-J.-Rousseau passes the seventeenth-century former bishop's palace and the unremarkable cathedral, where Rousseau once sang as a chorister.

Nearby, to the east, you'll find the picture-perfect Palais de l'Île, a tiny twelfth-century fort which served in turn as palace, mint, court and prison (the latter as late as World War II). It now houses a Centre for Urban Interpretation (June–Sept daily 10.30am–6pm; Oct–May daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €3.10). One room on the ground floor relates the building's history, while others are full of French-language audiovisual presentations on urban environments in the region.

A few steps to the north, the fifteenth-century church of St-Maurice conceals some excellent fifteenth- and sixteenth-century religious art. Across the square to the east of the church, the Hôtel de Ville backs onto shady public gardens, from where a bridge crosses a canal to the lakeside lawns of the extensive Champ de Mars.

From the Hôtel de Ville a stroll south on rue des Marquissats and past the marina leads along the lake to the free grassy plage de Marquissats, while a slightly longer walk in the other direction around the lake past the casino reaches the plage d'Albigny. In recent years in hot weather there have been cases of “swimmers itch” (puces de canard) from swimming in the lake; if cases have been noted, make sure to shower straight after swimming.

Eating and drinking

Annecy's restaurants churn out rather unimaginative fare to feed the tourist crowds. You'll find a string of inexpensive places to eat overlooking the canal along quai Perrière and rue Ste-Claire.

Auberge de Savoie place St-François
 ☎04.50.45.03.05. One of the better options on the north side of the canal, serving Savoyard specialities and fish from the lake. Menus €24–50; closed Wed.

La Bastille 3 quai des Vieilles Prison
 ☎04.50.45.09.37. Savoyard fare in a pretty setting by the canal overlooking the old prison. Menus €11–20.

Le Petit Zinc 11 rue Pont-Morens
 ☎04.50.51.12.93. This place manages to rise above the surrounding mediocrity, serving hearty local dishes in a warm interior. Lunch from €14, dinner €16–26.

Le Pichet 13 rue Perrière ☎04.50.45.32.41.
 Served on a large terrace, fare here is dependable and includes local dishes. Menus from €18.

Tutti Spaghetti 84 rue Carnot ☎04.50.67.42.32
 Wide choice of pasta dishes and salads (from €8) at this popular place – seating can get a bit tight when the terrace is not in use.

Around Annecy

While Annecy's high-season crowds may be bearable for only a day or two, the town's environs offer a number of agreeable excursions. As well as boat tours, cycling is an enjoyable means of appreciating Lac d'Annecy. The 40km road circuit of the lake is a very popular Sunday morning activity among sporty Annéciens and a traffic-free cycle route follows the west shore of the lake. The surrounding hills offer walking and mountain-biking excursions (as well as more specialized pursuits) to suit all. Experienced walkers should enjoy the relatively undemanding ascent of La Tournette on the eastern side of the lake, while gentler walks and cycle routes are to be found in the forested Semnoz mountains on the lake's west side.

Ten kilometres west of Annecy, the Gorges du Fier and nearby Château de Montrottier combine both natural and historical spectacle within a short distance of each other; and, if you're leaving Annecy to the north, the Pont de la Caille also deserve a look.

Around the lake

Although a very busy road rings Lake Annecy, a far more tranquil way of appreciating the lakeside is aboard one of the frequent boats that depart from Annecy's canalside port; you also have the option of stopping over or returning later in the day. Trips stopping off at various points on the lake are offered by Compagnie de Navigation (📧 www.annecy-croisieres.com) on place aux Bois, beside quai Bayreuth – a full circuit costs €13.30.

On the east shore of the lake, signposted out of the village of MENTHON-ST-BERNARD, is the grand, turreted Château de Menthon (May, June & Sept Fri–Sun & hols 2–6pm; July & Aug daily noon–6pm; €6, €7 for weekend medieval costume shows). Inhabited since the twelfth century and birthplace of St Bernard, the patron saint of mountaineers, the fortress was extensively renovated in the nineteenth century in the romantic Gothic revival style and possesses a fine collection of period furniture, as well as views across the lake back to Annecy. You can eat here at the lakeside Buvette du Port, which offers plats du jour for around €10, while for a place to stay, try Le Saint-Bernard in the centre of the village (☎ 04.50.60.01.55, 📧 www.hotelstbernard.com; 📍), which also has a good restaurant. A few kilometres down the road is the lovely lakeside village of TALLOIRES, whose eleventh-century Benedictine abbey has been converted into the luxurious Hôtel de l'Abbaye de Talloires on chemin des Moines (☎ 04.50.60.77.33, 📧 www.abbaye-talloires.com; 📍; closed Nov to mid-April).

On the west side of the lake, the village of DUINGT occupies a peninsula where there are two more thousand-year-old châteaux, one in ruins and the other partly rebuilt. Like Menthon-St-Bernard and Talloires, it has a small beach, with the opportunity to rent pleasure craft. The village has a few good-value hotels, among them the Auberge du Roselet (☎ 04.50.68.67.19, 📧 www.hotel-restaurant-leroselet.com; 📍). For a more tranquil overnight stay, head 7km south to the village of DOUSSARD, where the Hôtel Arcalod at Grand Parc (☎ 04.50.44.30.22, 📧 www.hotelarcalod.com; closed Oct–Feb; 📍) offers lakeside accommodation and a swimming pool.

La Tournette and the Semnoz mountains

Experienced hill-walkers wanting a stiff but straightforward mountain ascent could tackle La Tournette (2351m), which dominates the east side of the lake with its patchy snowfields and crenellated summits. A road just north of Talloires crosses the Col de la Forclaz, doubles back to the left before the hamlet of Montmin, and ends in a steep but drivable track up to the Col de l'Aulp, less than 1000m from the summit. From the col, the climb is immediate, steep and clear, leading to a refuge, where snow and increasing exposure demand extra care. Some scrambling (with fixed chains and handrails) is required to take you up to a broad, exposed shoulder on the way to the summit. To the east, the Chaîne des Aravis stretches before the snowbound massif of Mont Blanc on the horizon, just 50km away, while in the other direction the turquoise lake and Annecy itself lie at your feet.

Facing La Tournette on the lake's opposite shore, the wooded ridges of the Semnoz mountains offer less radical hiking. From the village of Duingt, a four-hour walk leads southwards up the Taillefer ridge, involving just over 300m of ascent to the 765-metre summit of Taillefer itself. From the town church follow the signs for Grotte de Notre Dame du Lac, a steep walk up the ridge, and follow the red and yellow markers thereafter. Towards the summit of Taillefer, there's some scrambling, but nothing too difficult, and 1500m after the peak the path turns round and returns north via the hamlet of Les Maisons.

The highest peak in the Semnoz is the Crêt de Châtillon, 16km directly south of Annecy along the D41. At 1699m it offers panoramic views, most impressively east past La Tournette towards Mont Blanc. A twenty-minute walk across meadows from the road's highest point leads to the cross on the summit and an orientation table pointing out the surrounding features.

The Gorges du Fier and Pont de la Caille

West of Annecy, the River Fier, which trickles out of the lake through Annecy's picturesque canals, has cut a narrow crevice through the limestone rock at the Gorges du Fier (daily: mid-March to mid-June & mid-Sept to mid-Oct 9am–noon & 2–6pm; mid-June to mid-Sept 9am–7pm; €4.50). Signposted off the D14 at Lovagny, a footpath leads down into the 300-metre-long gorge, which is traversed along an impressive high-level walkway pinned to the gorge side. On the way to the gorges you'll catch glimpses of the Château de Montrottier (mid-March to May & Sept daily except Tues 9am–1pm and 2–6pm; June–Aug daily 9am–1pm & 2–7pm; Oct daily 2–5pm; €7), which can be reached by continuing along the road for another three kilometres. The castle, which dates from the thirteenth century, possesses an eclectic collection of furniture, earthenware and lace as well as exotic objects from former French colonies in West Africa and the Far East, amassed during the nineteenth century by one Léon Mares.

Chambéry and around

Chambéry, 44km south of Annecy, lies in a valley separating the Chartreuse Massif (see p.1011) from the Bauges mountains, historically an important strategic position since it commands the entrance to the big Alpine valleys leading toward the passes into Italy. Around 13km north of town is the spa resort of Aix-les-Bains, with its famous thermal baths, just a few kilometres from the magnificent Lac du Bourget, the largest natural lake in France.

Chambéry

CHAMBÉRY grew up around the château built by Count Thomas of Savoie in 1232, and became the Savoyard capital, enjoying a golden age in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Although superseded as capital by Turin in 1562, it remained an important commercial and cultural centre. The philosopher Rousseau spent some of his happiest years in the town during the 1730s. Only incorporated into France in 1860, modern Chambéry is a bustling provincial town with a wealth of grand Italianate architecture and a strong sense of its regional identity – look out for the “Savoie Libre” bumper stickers throughout the town and the Haute Savoie départements.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The gare SNCF is on rue Sommeiller, 500m north of the old town, with the gare routière just outside in place de la Gare. Five minutes’ walk away at no. 24 boulevard de la Colonne, where all the city buses stop, is the tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 1.30–7pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 1.30–6pm, Sun 9.30am–noon; ☎04.79.33.42.47, 🌐www.chambery-tourisme.com). If you’re planning on exploring the Vanoise (see p.995), the Maison du Parc, 135 rue Docteur-Juillard (☎04.79.62.30.54), to the west of town can help with maps and information.

There’s plenty of inexpensive accommodation scattered about the centre of Chambéry. One budget option is Le Savoyard, 35 place Monge (☎04.79.33.36.55, 📧savoyard@noos.fr; 📍), conveniently located southeast of the cathedral, while Hôtel des Princes at 4 rue de Boigne (☎04.79.33.45.36, 🌐www.interhotel-desprinces.com; 📍), has larger and creatively decorated rooms. For a bit of rural tranquillity and a lovely view, head for Hôtel aux Pervenches, 600 chemin des Charmettes (☎04.79.33.34.26, 📧emauvray@wanadoo.fr; 📍), in the village of Les Charmettes, Rousseau’s summertime home, 2km south of the centre; it also has a good restaurant serving menus from €14.50.

The Town

Halfway down the broad, leafy boulevard de la Colonne is Chambéry’s most famous monument, the splendidly extravagant and somewhat off-scale Fontaine des Éléphants, erected in homage to the Comte de Boigne, a native son who amassed a fortune working as a mercenary in India in the eighteenth century, and who used much of his vast wealth to fund major urban developments in his home town. Musée Savoisien on nearby square de Lannoy-de-Bissy (Mon & Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3), chronicles the history of Savoie from the Bronze Age onwards. The first floor houses paintings, including a finely executed fifteenth-century work showing the Annunciation, and painted wooden statues from various churches in the region; on the second floor, there’s a collection of tools, carts, hay-sledges, and some fine furniture from a house in Bessans in the Vanoise, with a fascinating kitchen range made of wood and lined with lauzes (slabs of schist). Extremely rare thirteenth-century wall paintings from Cruet, housed in their own temperature-regulated room, depict secular scenes of frenzied battles and images of elegant court life.

Next to the museum, in the enclosed place Métropole, is the cathedral, its interior painted in elaborate nineteenth-century trompe l’oeil, imitating the twisting shapes and whorls of the high Gothic style (Sat only 3–6pm; free). From here a passage leads to rue de la Croix-d’Or, and numerous restaurants, from which after 100m a right turn brings you to the long, rectangular place St-Léger, home in 1735 to Rousseau and Mme de Waren. The square has a fountain and more cafés, where street musicians perform on summer evenings.

In the northeast corner of the square the smart rue de Boigne, leads back to the Fontaine des Éléphants, but if you turn left the road leads to the Château des Ducs de Savoie. A massive and imposing structure, it was once the main home of the dukes of Savoie, and is now occupied by the prefecture; the interior is only accessible by guided tours, which begin from the office across the street (May, June & Sept daily 2.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 10.30am, 2.30, 3.30 and 4.30pm, Sun afternoons only; €4). A short walk north from the castle exit along promenade Veyrat is the Musée des Beaux-Arts (Mon & Wed–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3), which is largely devoted to works by lesser-known sixteenth- to eighteenth-century Italian artists, though the pride of the collection is Uccello's Portrait of a Young Man, and there are also a few minor Titian cartoons.

Two kilometres south of town on the rustic chemin des Charmettes is Rousseau's other Chambéry address, the country cottage Les Charmettes, now home to the Musée Jean-Jacques Rousseau (April–Sept daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Oct–March daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–4.30pm; €3). Furnished in the style of the day, it includes the philosopher's writing desk and chaise longue, and outside a lovely formal garden and apple orchard alongside.

Eating and drinking

Good food at decent prices is not hard to come by in Chambéry, and mid-priced Savoyard restaurants abound – many specializing in lake and river fish. The best value of these are La Chaumière, 14–16 rue Denfert-Rochereau, with menus starting at €13 (☎04.79.33.16.26; by reservation only on Sun) and Le Savoyard in the hotel of the same name. For a lighter, vegetarian meal, try Le Bar @ Thym, 22 place Monge, which serves ethically sourced produce in a modern style – try the Bolivian organic hot chocolate (☎04.79.70.96.40, closed Sun & Mon). If you fancy a splurge, truly exceptional cuisine can be found at Le St-Real, in a converted seventeenth-century church at 86 rue St-Real (☎04.79.70.09.33; closed Sun), one of the best restaurants in the département, but pricey at €30–73.20 for gastronomic set menus.

Aix-les-Bains and the Lac du Bourget

AIX-LES-BAINS, 13km north of Chambéry, has been one of France's premier spa resorts since the eighteenth century. It boasts a wealth of elegant architecture, recalling the town's belle-époque heyday, when high society from across Europe dropped by to relax and take the waters: Queen Victoria, calling herself the "Countess of Balmoral", made several incognito visits, commemorated by a statue to her on the left side of avenue Charles-de-Gaulle as you walk up the hill. These days, Aix-les-Bains is a sedate and genteel place, populated mostly by French pensioners, who descend on the town en masse throughout the year for state-funded thermal treatments. Unless you're after a mud-bath or a glass of sulphurous water, the main draw today is the beautiful Lac du Bourget. Rising above Aix is Mont Revard (1550m), a vast plateau, made up of gentle meadows and forests, offering a range of trails for ramblers and cyclists – it is also one of France's finest cross-country skiing areas.

The Town

The town centres around place Maurice-Mollard, where you'll find the original monstrous Art Deco Thermes Nationaux at Thermes Pellegrini, accessible only with a French doctor's note. Just across from the baths is the mairie, which is built right into a Roman temple. And in front of the thermes is another grand Roman remnant, the Arc de Campanus, a rare funerary monument from the first century BC. A short walk north from here is the uber-modern spa centre Les Thermes d'Aix-les-Bains (Mon, Fri & Sat 2–8pm, Tues–Thurs 2–6pm, Sun 10am–8pm, @www.thermaix.com; €15 per day), one of the best places to experience the healing qualities of the local sulphurous water. Also north of the place, at 10 bd Côtes, is the charming Musée Faure (daily except Tues 10am–noon & 1.30–6pm; €4), an elegant house with a small but impressive collection of nineteenth-century art on display, including a room of Rodins, paintings from the best-known Impressionists, and some lovely Degas pastels. South of place Maurice-Mollard lies the compact warren of pedestrianized streets that make up the old town.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is on the western edge of town, just off boulevard Président-Wilson, from where it's a brief stroll up avenue Charles-de-Gaulle to the town centre. The tourist office is to the right of the Thermes Nationaux (daily: June–Aug 9am–6.30pm; Sept–May 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.79.88.68.00, 🌐www.aixlesbains.com). Several Internet cafés line rue de Chambéry, the road that descends diagonally from the Parc Thermal.

Aix-les-Bains has almost a hundred hotels, though they bustle year-round with pensioners so advance bookings are advisable. For a taste of real fin-de-siècle elegance, try the Astoria, 7 place des Thermes (☎04.79.35.12.28, 🌐www.hotelastoria.fr; closed Dec; 6), or for a cheaper but equally comfortable option head to the more modern Agora, rue de Chambéry (☎04.79.34.20.20, 🌐www.hotel-agora.com; 4). The basic Beaulieu, 29 av Charles-de-Gaulle (☎04.79.35.01.02, 🌐www.hotel-beaulieu.fr; 3), is handy for the gare SNCF, or, if you want to be nearer the lake, the friendly Davat, 21 chemin des Bateliers (☎04.79.63.40.40, 🌐www.davat.fr; 4), is a good choice. There are four camp-sites near the Lac du Bourget, the best of which is International du Sierroz on boulevard Barrier (🌐www.aixlesbains.com/campingsierroz)

There's an equally broad range of restaurants. One of the best is Le Manoir, 37 rue Georges-1er (☎04.79.61.44.00), with excellent gourmet menus at €25–49. The restaurants that line rue des Bains are more central and less expensive; try the pizzeria Le Passe at 6 rue du Dauphin, just off rue des Bains, with menus starting at €12. One of the most relaxing places to enjoy a coffee or an aperitif is La Rotonde, a very pleasant outdoor café in the Parc Thermal.

Lac de Bourget

Around 3km west of the centre of Aix, along avenue du Grand Port, lies the Lac du Bourget. Connected to the River Rhône by the Canal de Savières, it's a place of great beauty, a protected wildlife reserve and home to the now scarce European beaver. "Nowhere could one find such perfect concord between water, mountains, earth and sky", enthused the French writer Balzac, and it's clear what attracted him, and so many other poets and artists to this place. The lake's "Côte Sauvage" rises precipitously above the sparkling blue water on its west bank, dominated at its southern end by the looming presence of the Dent du Chat (1390m). There are daily sightseeing crises on the lake between March and November, as well as more expensive lunch, dinner and evening cruises (contact the Bateaux du Lac du Bourget office at the port in Aix-les-Bains; ☎04.79.88.92.09, 🌐www.gwel.com; from €12).

On the western side of the lake, close to the village of St-Pierre de Curtille is the picturesque Abbaye d'Hautecombe (daily audioguide tours 10–11.15am & 2–5pm), the final resting place of many members of the royal house of Savoie, including the last king and queen of Italy, Umberto II de Savoie and his wife Marie-José. The town, just off the D18, is accessible by road or boat.

The Isère valley and the Vanoise

The Vanoise, the rugged massif rising up to the southeast of Albertville, and over to the Italian border is a superb area for skiing and hiking. The dramatic range, whose highest peaks rise to altitudes in excess of 3500 metres, is roughly diamond-shaped, hemmed in by the valley of the Isère to the northeast, where Bourg-St-Maurice is the best base for exploration, and the Arc valley in the southwest. The glacier-capped southeast quadrant of the Vanoise, where both of these great rivers have their source, has been incorporated in the Parc National de la Vanoise, across which lonely and spectacular GR trails offer unparalleled opportunities for seasoned hikers. Easiest road access to the region is from Chambéry or Grenoble, although driving the winding and precipitous old highways from Annecy or Chamonix is an adventure in itself.

The Isère valley

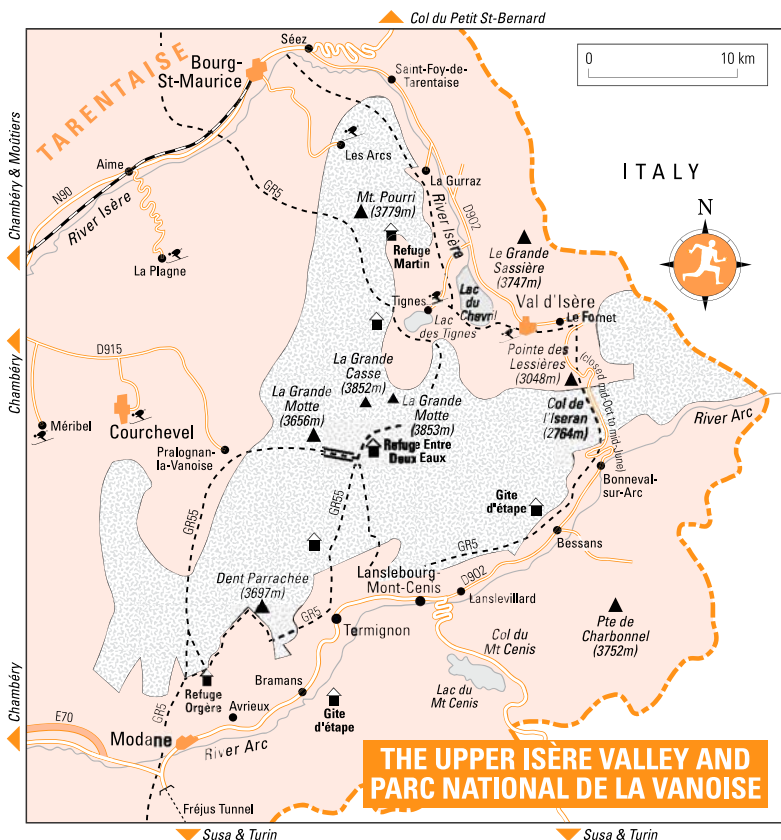

The A43 from Chambéry cuts between the Massif des Bauges to the north and the Vanoise to the south, following the path of the lower Isère River as it flows down from the industrial town Albertville. Following the river by road from here involves a 180-kilometre journey south, north and south again back to its source high in the mountains near the Col de l'Iseran, close to the Italian frontier. From Albertville, whose edge-of-town hypermarkets make it a useful place for stocking up, the N90 climbs southeast along the bends of the Isère River for 50km to Moûtiers, the turn-off for the massive Les Trois Vallées ski region. Here the river course swings northeast, passing Aime, whose main Grande-Rue presents a pretty and little-spoilt succession of buildings. Six kilometres further up the valley is Bourg-St-Maurice, the midpoint of the upper Isère valley, known as the Tarentaise. At Séez, a short distance east the road heads south again along the D902 through dramatic scenery to the famous resort of Val d'Isère.

Méribel and Les Trois Vallées

Just off the N90, south of the industrial town of Moûtiers, Les Trois Vallées (www.les3vallees.com) is one of the world's largest linked skiing areas, with an ingenious lift network that makes skiing from village to village easy, and near endless off-piste possibilities awaiting the intrepid. There are several component resorts: expensive and luxurious Courchevel (www.courchevel.com); ugly and family-oriented Les Menuires (www.lesmenuires.com), which has a number of cheap hotels; and lively Val Thorens (www.valthorens.com), popular with younger crowds and the snowboard set. The main focus of interest, right at the hear of Les Trois Vallées however is traditionally British-dominated MÉRIBEL (www.meribel.net), established in 1938 by Scotsman Colonel Peter Lindsay, and offering a good range of cheap accommodation and après-ski activities. Despite its pubs, Pizza Express and other British imports, it retains a traditional Savoyard feel with small wooden chalets topped with slate roofs climbing the east side of the valley. At the valley bottom is the large Olympic Ice Rink (Dec–April, July & Aug daily 3–7pm, until 9.30pm Tues & Thurs; €4.60) and the departure point for the main ski lifts.

Practicalities

Méribel's tourist office (daily 9am–noon & 3–7pm; ☎04.79.08.60.01), at the top of the route de la Monte in the village centre, provides information on mountain biking and walking in summer, as well as Internet access. Espace Gliss Skiset, in Bâtiment l'Eterlou opposite the ice rink, is one of dozens of ski shops that sell and rent skis and snowboards and mountain bikes in summer, while the ESF ski school office is in the Maison du Tourisme (☎04.79.08.60.31). Next door, the Bureau des Guides organizes rock climbing, walking and VTT expeditions.

Though most local accommodation centres around British tour companies with Saturday to Saturday fixed packages, there are a few independent guest-houses and hotels offering more flexibility, the most central of which is Hôtel Doron (☎04.79.08.60.02; 📍), a lively hotel with a young clientele and fairly basic rooms but close to the bars, nightlife and pistes. For traditional chalet-style holidays try Chalet Raphael in Le Raffort, 2km away on the western slope of the valley (☎04.79.00.45.69, 🌐www.skimeribelchalet.com; winter €385–959 per person per week chalet board, rest of the year 📍).

Restaurants include the smart Le Grain de Sel (☎04.79.06.12.17; €25 for two courses) in the Méribel Mottaret district, or for cheap eats and good après-ski try the snack bar Rond Point, towards the Altiport at the top of town, which has a big terrace hosting DJs and lively barbecues during the main seasons. For nightlife head to Jack's Bar on route de Mussillon near the tourist office and serving strong Mutzig beer, followed by Dick's T-Bar, further down the same road, which is open till 4am.

Bourg-St-Maurice and around

An unremarkable town situated in the shadow of the Tarentaise mountains on the roaring confluence of the Isère and Chapieux rivers, sleepy, grey BOURG-ST-MAURICE is mainly of interest for its weekly direct train link with London Waterloo – it's the destination for many British skiers during the winter season. It does have some good out-of-town shops though, including a Champion supermarket and Decathlon sports shops, which are useful for stocking up before heading up to the resorts. The tourist office (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–7pm, Sat 8.30am–7pm, Sun 9am–12.30pm & 3.30–7pm; ☎04.79.07.04.92), across the main road opposite the gare SNCF lies in a triangle with the gare routière, from which bus services depart to all the major local resorts. There are a few reasonable places to stay in the town, the best being L'Autantic, a modern chalet in a wonderful forested setting at 69 rte Hauteville (☎04.79.07.01.70, 🌐www.hotel-autantic.fr; 📍). There's also a HI hostel, La Verdache, just beyond Séez (☎04.79.41.01.93, 📧seez-les-arcs@fuaj.org; closed Oct to mid-Dec & two weeks in May), 4km away on the dreary main road, avenue Leclerc. Camping le Versoyen lies on route des Arcs (☎04.79.07.03.45, 🌐www.leversoyen.com), on the right past the sports ground on the Val d'Isère road.

On the northern slopes of the mountains above Bourg-St-Maurice is Paradiski (🌐www.paradiski.com), a ski area formed in 2003 when the resorts of La Plagne and Les Arcs were joined by a giant double-decker téléphérique that swings over the Ponthurin valley in a single bound. LES ARCS (🌐www.lesarcs.com), on the eastern side, has excellent snow and terrain for all levels. Comprising four villages of varying altitude, it's high on the list for snowboarders, and is easily accessible from Bourg-St-Maurice by funicular railway, but has a decidedly mellow après-ski and the villages lack atmosphere. Each of the villages has an information point open during the summer and winter seasons.

LA PLAGNE is a huge, mass-market ski station made up of ten resorts high above the Isère valley. The area provides a wide range of pistes, for beginners up to advanced skiers, with a varying topography ranging from high mountain glaciers to treeline runs. Belle Plagne is probably the most attractive of its Attention Avalanche!

There are few places on earth where global warming is more noticeable than in the Alps, and as a consequence of climate change tree levels are rising, glaciers are retreating and devastating rock falls and avalanches are much more frequent. Although greater understanding of avalanches has led to the introduction of safety measures, including tunnels, fencing and the use of dynamite to dislodge unstable snow, dozens of people are still killed every year, usually because they haven't heeded warnings. In resorts the avalanche risk is announced through signs and coloured flags, often found at ticket kiosks:

Yellow=low risk
 Black/yellow checked = risk
 Black = severe risk

You should also check up-to-date weather information (🌐www.meteofrance.com) and ensure that you have sufficient insurance (see p.74) – bear in mind that even if policies cover skiing, this may not include unguided off-piste. If in doubt purchase a Carte Neige (🌐www.fts.fr/carteneige), available at most resorts with your lift ticket. Mountain rescue is carried out by resort ski patrol teams known as pisteurs, but for more serious incidents the PGHM (🌐www.pghm-chamonix.com), a branch of the Gendarmerie Nationale specialized in mountain rescue are used. For more information, see "Basics", p.70.

purpose-built resorts, with an attempt made to construct the apartments in a more sympathetic style using wood and slate as opposed to concrete. Accommodation though is still dominated by apartments, and nightlife is minimal. Of the four linked lower villages, Montchavin is the most traditional and a rural smell still hangs in the air around its paved streets, working farms and slate roofs. The best place to stay is Le Chalet du Friolin in neighbouring Les Coches (☎04.79.07.45.84, 🌐www.lechaletdufriolin.com; Dec–April; 🍷 half-board), a small and beautiful chalet with bar and restaurant right on the pistes. For apartments contact the Centre de Reservation (☎04.79.09.79.79) or the tourist office in La Plagne Centre (☎04.79.09.79.79; 🌐www.la-plagne.com), which can also provide information on rental shops, ski schools, restaurants and activities available in summer, including mountain bike trail maps.

Bourg-St-Maurice to Val d'Isère

Beyond Bourg-St-Maurice the N90 continues to wind upwards for a further 5km to the village of Séez, where it forks. The right turn takes you onto the D902, following the path of the Isère as it climbs towards Val d'Isère (see p.1000) and the perilous Routes des Pierres Fortes de Savoie, while the N90 continues to climb steeply towards the Col du Petit St-Bernard, following the path of the ancient Roman Way, now a classic touring route into the Italian Val d'Aosta. The pass, at a height of 2188m, has couple of barrack-like buildings and a row of statues of St Bernard, who built a hostel for mountain travellers here in the twelfth century. With its Swiss twin, the Grand St-Bernard, it was the only route around the Mont Blanc massif until the Mont Blanc tunnel was opened in 1965.

The Routes des Pierres Fortes de Savoie clings to the eastern side of the valley, leading to the relatively new resort of SAINTE-FOY-DE-TARENTEISE. Though it only has three chair lifts and a handful of chalets, it still manages some excellent off-piste skiing. Seven kilometres beyond Sainte-Foy, a right-hand turn off the D902, marked La Planche, winds a further 3km up the west-facing slope (an hour's walk from the road) to the tiny summer alpage villages of La Savinaz and La Gurrasz, whose creamy church tower is a landmark for miles around. High above, though looking ominously close, are the blue ice cliffs that terminate the Glacier de la Gurrasz descending from the northern face of Mont Pourri (3779m). The area is untouched by tourism. La Gurrasz's dozen old houses have wide eaves and weathered balconies spread with sweet drying hay, and firewood stacked outside. The houses are all sited in the lee of a knoll for protection against the avalanches that come thundering off the glacier above. There are no provisions available, so bring your own. From La Gurrasz, a signposted path climbs to Refuge de la Martin in an hour and a half. It zigzags up the slope behind La Savinaz, onto a spur by a ruined chalet, where a right-hand path goes up the rocks overhead to the edge of the glacier. The refuge path continues left along the side of a deep gully, crosses a ferocious torrent by a plank bridge and follows a mule track up to the mountain pastures by the refuge. The Mont Pourri glaciers are directly above. Opposite is the big Glacier de la Sassièr and up to your right Val d'Isère, with the Col de l'Iseran behind.

Back on the D902, continuing south brings you to the artificial Lac de Chevril. The hydroelectric dam dominates the pretty hamlet of Tignes Les Brévières cowering beneath it. The right turn over the barrage takes you under a series of avalanche tunnels to the purpose-built ski resort of Tignes, while continuing past the dam, along the lake will bring you to into Val d'Isère. Tignes is not attractive, and in summer has little to offer aside from foot access to the Parc National de la Vanoise (see box p.1002) and a handful of lifts open for glacier skiing. But in winter, the bowl around the resort, in the shadow of the 3656-metre Grand Motte, becomes a desolate white ski wilderness; 130km of pistes link over the mountain to the village of Val d'Isère (see below) to form the Espace Killy, named after French downhill legend Jean-Claude Killy, creating one of the best ski areas in the world. The resort's inaccessibility means that it is usually filled with package-holidayers, but independent travellers can try the hostel Les Clarines (☎04.79.41.01.93, ✉tignes@fuj.org; €15.50 for a bed in a small dorm). Alternatively, apartments can be booked through the tourist office (☎04.79.40.04.40, 🌐www.tignes.net).

Val d'Isère

Once a tiny mountain village, VAL D'ISÈRE is now a hideous agglomeration of cafés, supermarkets, apartments and chalets. Because it is so hard to get to, the resort really does close down in the off season, with only one hotel of the many in town open in May. In the summer it makes a convenient centre for walking, and you can ski year-round on the glacier – details are available from the tourist office (daily 8.30am–7.30pm; ☎04.79.06.06.60, 🌐www.valdisere.com). Ski shops litter the village: try the cool Misty Fly shop opposite the tourist office, a local institution with snowboarders, freestyle-skiers and mountain bikers. Misty Fly also operate one of the best of Val d'Isère's twelve ski schools.

The skiing around Val d'Isère is varied and demanding; many international experts never ski anywhere else. Of the three areas, Le Fornet is the most traditional and undeveloped, with old lifts and narrow, unkept pistes, while the Solaise provides easily accessible sheltered skiing between larch trees during bad weather, and has two free beginner's lifts near its swimming pool and ice skating complex. Le Rocher de Bellevard is home to the Olympic downhill and has notoriously dangerous off-piste on its northern face; behind it are a snow park for snowboarders and gentle, wide intermediate runs down to La Daille.

Staying here will certainly lighten your wallet. One of the cheapest options is Séracs (☎04.79.06.03.61, 🌐www.seracs.net; 2), or try Sakura apartments (☎04.79.06.04.08, 🌐www.sakura7.com; €410–840 per week for two people), while there's a campsite nearby on the edge of the resort at Le Laisinant. The resort's eateries are geared towards the mainly British clientele, as a result of which prices are high and quality low. Bananas near the bottom of the pistes has a choice of Tex-Mex style dishes in a cosy, atmospheric bar, while the Billabong Café, on the main drag, avenue Olympic, is a American-style diner popular with seasonaires. Folie Douce, at the top of La Daille télécabine, is the most lively of the mountain restaurants with barbecues and booming music on the terrace when the weather is good. Après-ski centres around the cheesy nightclub, Dicks T-Bar, while Café Face, Le Danois and L'Aventure provide a welcome alternative to the school-disco music.

▲ Val d'Isère

The Col de l'Iseran

From Val d'Isère, both the D902 and the GR5 veer south from the river, climbing towards the Col de l'Iseran. Despite the dangers of weather and the arduous climb, the pass has been used for centuries, being by far the quickest route between the remote upper valleys of the Isère and Arc. The volume of traffic was too small to disturb the nature of the tiny communities that eked out an existence on the approaches, but twentieth-century roads and the development of winter sports have changed all that. From October to June, the pass is blocked by snow, but in summer, being the highest pass in the Alps (2770m), it's a must-see sight for tourists with cars.

The GR5 reaches its zenith at the Pointe des Lessières, where on a clear day you have views of the Italian side of Mont Blanc and the whole of the frontier chain of peaks. Whether you head back or continue on to Bonneval (see below), the walk is a solid two and a half hours. If you continue south, a clear day will afford splendid views of the glaciers at the head of the Arc. As you descend along the Lenta stream through masses of anemones blooming in the stony ground, the riverbed winds through a desolate cirque, before dropping through a narrow defile towards the town.

The Arc valley

The Arc valley is wide and light below the Col de l'Iseran, though the treeless landscape can be more forbidding than joyous, especially under a stormy sky. Bare crags hang above the steep meadows on the north flanks; glaciers threaten to the south and east. Descending through meadows and patches of cultivation into the valley bottom with the lighter foliage of larches gracing the mountainsides you pass through humble hamlets of squat, rough, grey-stone houses – the homes of people who have had to struggle to wring a living from harsh weather and unyielding soil. It's surprising at first to find such a wealth of exuberant Baroque art in the outwardly simple churches in small villages like Avrieux, Bramans, Termignon, Lanslevillard and Bessans. But probably it's precisely because of the harshness and poverty of their lives that the mountain people sought to express their piety with such colourful vitality. Schools of local artists flourished, particularly in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, inspired and influenced by itinerant Italian artists who came and went across the adjacent frontier.

Bonneval-sur-Arc and Bessans

The first settlement of any size as you descend into the valley is BONNEVAL-SUR-ARC, 1835m above sea level, at the foot of the Col de l'Iseran, which looks out on the huge glaciers of the Sources de l'Arc to the east. Better preserved and more obviously picturesque than other towns of the valley, Bonneval stops a lot of tourists on their way to and from the col. It's in danger of becoming twee, with its houses clustered tightly around the church, and only the narrowest of lanes between them. You sense how very isolated these places were until only a few years ago, cut off for months by heavy snow, forced in upon their own resources. Several graves in the churchyard record deaths by avalanche.

From here the valley descends to BESSANS, which retains its village character better than most. Its squat dwellings are built of rough stone with tiny windows,

The Parc National de la Vanoise

The Parc National de la Vanoise (🌐 www.vanoise.com) occupies the eastern end of the Vanoise Massif. It's extremely popular, with over 500km of marked paths, including the GR5, GR55 and GTA (Grande Traversée des Alpes), and numerous refuges along the trails. For information on the spot, the tourist offices in Modane, Val d'Isère and Bourg-St-Maurice are helpful. The Maison du Parc in Chambéry (see p.993) also gives advice and sells maps.

To cross the park, take the GR5 from the northern edge of the transpentine section of Modane. When the trail splits, continue north on the GR55. From here the path leads to Pralognan, over the Col de la Vanoise and right across the park to the Lac de Tignes – a tremendous walk. An alternative is to stick with the GR5 (past the Refuge de l'Orgère from where a path north similarly joins up with the GR55 and the previous route), which keeps east of La Dent Parrachée mountain, and follows a great loop up towards the Refuge d'Entre-Deux-Eaux before turning south and continuing up the north flank of the Arc valley and over the Col de l'Iseran to Val d'Isère.

and roofed with heavy slabs to withstand the long hard winters. Most have south-facing balconies to make the most of the sun and galleries under deep eaves for drying grebans, the bricks of cow dung and straw used locally for fuel. The church has a collection of seventeenth-century painted wooden statues and a retable, signed by Jean Clappier, a member of a local family who produced several generations of artists. On the other side of the small cemetery, the chapel of St-Antoine has exterior murals of the Virtues and Deadly Sins and inside, some fine sixteenth-century frescoes. Two kilometres beyond Bessans you pass the chapel of Notre-Dame-des-Grâces on the left, with another ex voto by Clappier. There's a small tourist office in the centre of Bessans (☎04.79.05.96.52, 🌐 www.bessans.com), and some accommodation, including the Hôtel Le Mont-Iseran (☎04.79.05.95.97, 🌐 www.montiseran.com; closed mid-April to mid-June & Oct–Jan; 🍽 half-board), with old-fashioned wood-clad rooms, and the more modern Hôtel La Vanoise (☎04.79.05.96.79, 🌐 www.hotel-vanoise.com; 🍽), in a pretty, white building with magnificent views to the Vanoise.

Lanslebourg

In LANSLEBOURG, some 25km downstream from Bonneval, Haute Maurienne Information, in the town's old church (daily except Sat 3–7pm; ☎04.79.05.91.57, 🌐 www.hautemaurienne.com), organizes trous of village churches along the Arc valley. Lanslebourg is also the start of the climb to the Mont Cenis pass over to Susa in Italy, another ancient transalpine route; last stop before the perils of the trek, it was once a prosperous and thriving town. Relief at finishing the climb from the French side was tempered by an alarming descent en ramasse, a sort of crude sledge, which shot downhill at breakneck speed, much to the alarm of travellers: "So fast you lose all sense and understanding", a terrified merchant from Douai recounted in 1518. Lanslebourg has a municipal campsite (☎04.79.05.82.83, 🌐 www.camping-les-balmasses.com) and a HI hostel with a fantastic view and good rooms (☎04.79.05.90.96, 📧 val-cenis@fuaj.org; closed April–May & mid-Sept to mid-Oct); alternatively, try the comfortable, rustic Hôtel de la Vieille Poste (☎04.79.05.93.47, 🌐 www.lavieilleposte.com; 🍽; closed Nov–June).

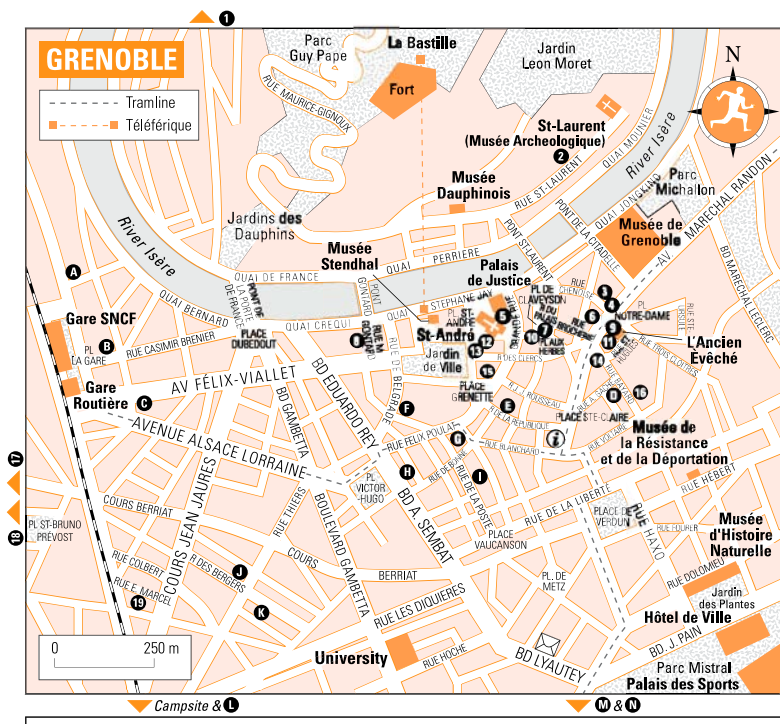

Modane

MODANE, 20km downstream from Lanslebourg, is where the Arc valley starts to cut down dramatically through the high plateau down towards Chambéry. It's a dreary little place, destroyed by Allied bombing in 1943 and now little more than a rail junction. Nonetheless, it's a good kicking-off point for walkers on the south side of the Vanoise Massif, the area contained between the upper valleys of the Isère and Arc rivers. It's easily accessible by train from Chambéry and has a tourist office, in place Sommeiller (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.79.05.28.58, 🌐www.canton-de-modane.com), which will give advice on walks in the surrounding area. If you want to stay, try the simple but clean Hôtel Le Commerce, 20 place Sommeiller (☎04.79.05.00.78; 📍), or the well-sited grassy municipal campsite, Les Combes (☎04.79.05.00.23), just up the road to the Fréjus tunnel (which leads to Bardonecchia in Italy).

Grenoble

Beautifully situated on the Drac and Isère rivers, and surrounded by mountains, GRENOBLE, the self-styled “capital of the Alps”, is a lively, modern city,

City passes

Many of the city museums no longer charge admission fees, but it still may be worth it to buy a city pass from the tourist office (one-day pass €12). This will allow you a guided tour of the old town, admission to one of the fee-charging museums (such as the Musée de Grenoble), a return trip on the téléférique and a ride on the little tourist train.

home to several universities and more than 50,000 students. In the Middle Ages, the princes of Dauphiné held court here, until the province was annexed by France in the fourteenth century, and the city is also famous for the Journée des Tuiles, a local uprising in 1788 which is held to be the first act of the French Revolution. Grenoble's prosperity was originally founded on glove-making, but in the nineteenth century its economy diversified to include mining, cement, paper milling, hydroelectric power and metallurgy. Its international profile was boosted in 1968, when it hosted the Winter Olympics, and today it's a centre of the chemical and electronics industries and nuclear research, with the big, new laboratories of the Atomic Energy Commission on the banks of the Drac.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The gare SNCF and the gare routière are next door to each other at the western end of avenue Félix-Viallet, just ten minutes' walk from the most interesting sections of the city, which are mainly on the left bank of the Isère. Not far from the central place Grenette, at 14 rue de la République, is the tourist office (May–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–6.30pm, Sun 10am–1pm & 2–5pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 9am–6.30pm, Sun 10am–1pm; ☎04.76.42.41.41, 🌐www.grenoble-isere.info), where you'll also find the local SNCF and public transport information offices. Walkers and climbers should check out the former CIMES office, now known as the Bureau Info Montagne (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎04.76.42.45.90, 🌐www.grenoble-montagne.com), in the Maison de la Montagne, 3 rue Raoul-Blanchard, across the street from the back of the tourist office, or the Club Alpin Français at 32 av Félix-Viallet (Tues & Wed 2–6pm, Thurs & Fri 2–8pm, Sat 9am–noon; ☎04.76.87.03.73) for hiking suggestions and detailed information on refuges. The transport network, combining bus and tram routes, has the bleak place de Verdun (a short walk southeast of the tourist office) as its hub. Single tickets for both bus and tram cost €1.30, ten-ticket strips cost €10.50, and daily passes are also available for €3.50.

There is no shortage of hotels in every category in Grenoble, but the city is busy from September to June with conferences and graduations, so call ahead.

Hotels

Acacia 13 rue de Belgrade ☎04.76.87.29.90, 🌐www.hotelacaciagrenoble.com. Cosy modern hotel halfway between place Victor-Hugo and the river. 3

Alizé 1 place de la Gare ☎04.76.43.12.91, ☎04.76.47.62.79. Extremely basic but clean hotel very near the gare SNCF. 1

Des Alpes 45 av Félix-Viallet ☎04.76.87.00.71, 🌐www.hotel-des-alpes.fr. Good-value, family-run hotel near the gare SNCF, with small plain rooms. 3

D'Angleterre 5 place Victor-Hugo ☎04.76.87.37.21, 🌐www.hotel-angleterre.fr. Comfortable and well-equipped "Tulip Inn" hotel, convenient for both the sights and the stations. Some rooms have balconies overlooking the square. 4

Citôtel de Patinoire 12 rue Marie-Chamoux ☎04.76.44.43.65, 🌐www.hotel-patinoire.com. Southeast of the city centre, close to the Palais des Sports, this is an excellent mid-range option with a generous breakfast at €6.50. 3

13

THE ALPS AND JURA

Grenoble

De l'Europe 22 place Grenette ☎04.76.46.16.94, www.hoteleurope.fr. Well-maintained and hospitable place smack on Grenoble's liveliest square. ③

Grand 5 rue de la République ☎04.76.44.49.36, www.grand-hotel-grenoble.com. Smart nineteenth-century hotel in the centre of town, not far from the tourist office. ⑤

Lakanal 26 rue des Bergers ☎04.76.46.03.42, ☎04.76.17.21.24. The cheapest beds in town, and it's not hard to see why, as they are dingy, dark and out of the way, but this budget option often has space when others are full. A little off the beaten path, a 10min walk southwest of place Victor-Hugo, near the tram stop "Gambetta". ②

Du Moucherotte 1 rue Auguste-Gaché, near place Ste-Claire ☎04.76.54.61.40, ☎04.76.44.62.52. Surprisingly opulent decor and high ceilings accompany the peeling paint and wallpaper in this small, conveniently located hotel in the popular student quarter. ②

Park 10 place Paul-Mistral ☎04.76.85.81.23, www.park-hotel-grenoble.fr. Luxury four-star hotel, with a magnificent facade looking out onto one of the old town's liveliest squares, west of Parc Mistral. ④

De la Poste 25 rue de la Poste ☎ & ☎04.76.46.67.25. Tiny, friendly and rather old-fashioned establishment beginning on the third floor of an apartment building and located on a pedestrian street, off place Vaucanson. ②

Splendid 22 rue Thiers ☎04.76.46.33.12, www.splendid-hotel.com. The walls are all painted with different pastel-style murals in this all-en-suite two-star. It's a quiet, mid-range hotel, a 10min walk from the commercial centre. ④

Suisse et Bordeaux 6 place de la Gare ☎04.76.47.55.87, www.hotel-sb-grenoble.com. Friendly and clean hotel across from the gare SNCF. ③

Hostel and campsite

Hostel 10 av de Gresivaudan ☎04.76.09.33.52, grenoble@fuaj.org. Modern and recently renovated hostel 5km south of the city in Echirolles. Take bus #1 to "Quinzaine," or tram A to "La Rampe." €15.70 including breakfast, non-members €2.90 extra.

Camping des Trois Pucelles 58 rue des Allobroges, in Seyssins on the left bank of the Drac, 4km west of town ☎04.76.96.45.73, www.camping-trois-pucelles.com. Take tram A to "Albert 1er", and change to bus #5 for "Mas des Iles," or take bus #23.

The City

The best way to start your tour is to take the téléférique (opening times are complex but approximately daily: April–Sept 10am–midnight; Nov–March 11am–6.30pm; ☎04.76.44.33.65, www.bastille-grenoble.com) from the riverside quai Stéphane-Jay to Fort de la Bastille on the steep slopes above the north bank of the Isère. The ride is hair-raising, as you're whisked steeply and swiftly into the air in a sort of transparent egg, which allows you to see very clearly how far you would fall in the event of an accident. If you don't like the sound of the cable car, you can climb the steep but pleasant footpath from the St-Laurent church or from the Musée Dauphinois (see p.1007).

Although the fort is of little interest, the view is fantastic. At your feet the Isère flows under the old bridges which join the St-Laurent quarter, colonized by Italian immigrants in the nineteenth century, to the nucleus of the medieval town, whose red roofs cluster tightly around the church of St-André. To the east, snowfields gleam in the gullies of the Belledonne massif (2978m). Southeast is Taillefer and south-southeast the dip where the Route Napoléon passes over the mountains to Sisteron and the Mediterranean – this is the road Napoleon took after his escape from Elba in March 1815 on his way to rally his forces for the campaign that led to his final defeat at Waterloo. To the west are the steep white cliffs of the Vercors massif; the highest peak, dominating the city, is Moucherotte (1901m). The jagged summits at your back are the outworks of the Chartreuse massif. Northeast on a clear day you can see the white peaks of Mont Blanc up the deep glacial valley of the Isère, known as La Grésivaudan. It was in this valley that the first French hydroelectric project went into action in 1869. For heading back into town, a path down through the public gardens offers an alternative to the cable car.

△ Grenoble

Upstream from the téléférique station is the sixteenth-century Palais de Justice (open to the public), with place St-André and the church of St-André behind. Built in the thirteenth century, the church once served as the palace chapel of the princes of Dauphiné, though it has been heavily restored since, and today is of little architectural interest. Meanwhile, the narrow streets leading towards places Grenette, Vaucanson and Verdun pass through the liveliest and most colourful quarter of the city. Life focuses on a chain of little squares – aux Herbes, Claveyson, de Gordes, Grenette and Notre-Dame – where people congregate at the numerous cafés and restaurants. The small produce market (Tues–Sun 6am–1pm) on place aux Herbes is a great place to stock up on inexpensive local produce.

Close to place St-André, in the former town hall at 1 rue Hector-Berlioz, in the corner of the Jardin de Ville gardens, is the Musée Stendhal (mid-July to mid-Sept Tues-Sat 9am-noon & 2-6pm; mid-Sept to mid-July Tues-Sat 2-6pm; closed all hols; free), with a couple of rooms containing family portraits and manuscripts associated with the much-revered author, who was born in Grenoble as Marie-Henri Beyle. You can also visit his grandfather's house, La Maison Stendhal, where he spent his childhood, at 20 Grande-Rue, just off place Grenette (same hours as the Musée (mid-July to mid-Sept 9am-noon & 2-6pm; mid-Sept to mid-July Tues-Sat 10am-noon; free).

Near the bustling place Notre-Dame, on the riverbank at 5 place de Lavallette, is the Musée de Grenoble (daily except Tues 10am-6.30pm; €5), an enormous modern complex housing a gallery of mainly contemporary art. The building itself is impressive, and many major schools of painting are represented, including a few works by Rubens and Canaletto, though the collection is uneven. The best rooms are those of nineteenth- and twentieth-century artists including Gauguin, Chagall and Matisse. Directly on the east side of place Notre-Dame is L'Ancien Évêché (daily except Sun 9am-6pm, Sun 10am-7pm; free). Housed in the old bishop's palace, the museum offers a brisk tour through Grenoble's history from the Stone Age to the twentieth century. The remains of the Roman town walls and a fifth-century baptistry are on show in the basement, while among the prized exhibits upstairs are Neolithic jade jewellery, Bronze Age weapons and a wealth of Roman artefacts, including a colourful mosaic floor panel, decorated with a pair of parrots.

On the opposite bank of the Isère, the Musée Archéologique Église St-Laurent, on place St-Laurent (closed until mid-2007 for renovation – check @ www.musee-archeologique-grenoble.com for new opening times) gives a fascinating insight into the history of the city, as you descend through various stages of excavations in this former church, passing through an early Christian necropolis, an eighth-century crypt and a high medieval cloister. A few minutes to the west, lying up a steep cobbled path opposite the St-Laurent footbridge, the Musée Dauphinois, 30 rue Maurice-Gignoux (May-Oct daily except Tues 10am-7pm; Nov-April 10am-6pm; free), housed in the former convent of Ste-Marie-d'en-Haut, is largely devoted to the history, arts and crafts of the province of Dauphiné. There are exhibits on the lives of the rugged and self-sufficient mountain people, including mock-ups of the modest rustic homes that they shared with their animals during the seven-month long winters. There's also an exhibition illustrating the history of skiing, and, in the basement, a splendid Baroque chapel, with grey and gold wall paintings depicting episodes from the New Testament and scenes from the life of St-François-de-Sales, who founded the convent in the seventeenth century.

Wegged between the park and the old town at 14 rue Hébert is the Musée de la Résistance et de la Déportation de l'Isère (daily except Tues: July & Aug 10am-7pm; Sept-June 9am-6pm; free), with a touching and high-tech exhibition of photographs, video footage and memorabilia from the brutal Nazi occupation of the Dauphiné, with all captions translated into English. Two blocks south, standing among the fine trees of the Jardin des Plantes at 1 rue Dolomieu is the Muséum d'Histoire Naturelle (Mon-Fri 9.30am-noon & 1.30-5.30pm, Sat, Sun and hols 2-6pm; €3.80). It has a marvellous collection, ranking second after the Paris museum for sheer depth and breadth – it includes, amongst many other things, all the Alpine birds of prey and an aquarium.

Eating, drinking and nightlife

Eating in Grenoble is a pleasure; it's less expensive than nearby Lyon but just as creative. There are a wide variety of restaurants catering to all budgets and tastes – a call ahead is recommended for most of the places listed below, especially in the evenings. For those with a knowledge of French, it's useful to pick up a copy of the Guide Dahu in local tabacs – a restaurant and nightlife guide compiled by local students (€2.50).

Interesting, atmospheric places to drink are also easy to find, with places Grenette, St-André and Notre-Dame full of café-bars, though the more interesting ones are usually on the streets between those squares. On place Notre-Dame, try Bar 1900 or Le Shaman Café, which also has good food, while on place St-André, Le Bagatel and Le Perroquet are particularly popular. If you're looking for a local bohemian hangout, try the Café des Arts over the bridge at 36 rue St-Laurent or Le Cybernet Café at 3 rue Bayard, which despite its name has no Internet access, while on place Claveyson you could also drop into Styx, an atmospheric little cocktail bar in a nineteenth-century wine cellar. The popular gay establishment, Rutli, is west of the old town at 9 rue Étienne-Marcel (daily 6pm–1am). Grenoble's student population keeps the nightlife hopping, with clubs like Le Vertigo, 18 Grande-Rue (Wed–Sat 10.30pm–5.30am), one of the liveliest venues. Dotty Night, 56 rte de Lyon (daily except Mon 11pm–5.30am), 500m north of the Pont de la Porte de France, caters for a slightly older crowd and Le Couche Tard (☎04.76.44.18.79; 8pm–2am) in between place aux Herbes and place du Tribunal is the most anglicized bar, buzzing with exchange students.

Restaurants

Le Bistrot Lyonnais 168 cours Berriat ☎04.76.21.95.33. It's worth the walk behind the gare SNCF to try the food from this charming restaurant's truffle-infused menu. Menus from €30 for lunch, €39 dinner. Closed Sat, Sun and three weeks in Aug.

Le Mal Assis 9 rue Bayard ☎04.76.54.75.93. A small and elegant traditional family-run restaurant, serving dishes with a Provençal flavour and an excellent wine carte; à la carte from around €16. Closed Sun, Mon and mid-July to Aug.

La Mandragore 11 rue Marx-Dormoy ☎04.76.96.18.95. Terrific vegetarian restaurant, serving extraordinarily creative and tasty green cuisine. The menu changes daily, and even meat-eaters will leave satisfied. Vegan meals can be supplied upon request. Lunch plat du jour €12. Near the St Bruno stop (one stop west of the train station on tram lines A or B). Closed Sat night plus all day Sun & Mon.

Pointe à Pitre 2 rue Marius-Gontard ☎04.76.47.26.10. Extremely friendly restaurant serving up specialities from the French Caribbean at reasonable prices, though it's à la carte only, with plats from €10. Daily 7pm–1am.

Café de la Table Ronde 7 place St-André ☎04.76.44.51.41. While not famous for its food – local fare which never quite rises above average quality – this is an atmospheric place, notable for being the second oldest restaurant in France (1739), numbering among its clients Rousseau and Léon Blum. Menus from €22 to €34.

La Tête à l'Envers 10 rue Chenoise ☎04.76.51.13.42. It's a one-man show in this tiny restaurant. What it lacks in size it makes up in sheer creativity – a new menu every other day includes a plate of four appetizers (€9.50), entrées served with eight different vegetables (from €11.50), and a plate of six desserts (€9.50) – guess the flavourings of five of the six and win a free coffee or digestif. Closed Sun, Mon and Aug.

Le Tonneau de Diogène place Notre-Dame ☎04.76.42.38.40. A cheap standby, with uninspiring steak-frites-type cuisine, but incredibly popular with tourists and a good place to meet fellow travellers. Meals from under €15. Closed Sun eve and Mon lunch.

Le Valgaudemar 2 rue St-Hugues ☎04.76.51.38.85. Referred to affectionately by students as Le Valgo, this cosy, rustic-styled haven in the heart of Grenoble serves traditional specialities of the Hautes-Alpes. Lunch from €11 and dinner from €17. Closed Sun and Mon, Tues and Wed eve, and Aug.

Listings

Bike rental Cycle des Arts, 14 rue des Arts ☎04.76.47.18.83; Veloparc Gare, 1 place de la

Gare ☎04.76.85.08.94; Metrovelo Gare, 1 place de la Gare ☎08.20.22.38.38.

13

THE ALPS AND JURA

Grenoble

Bookshop Arthand, 23 Grande-Rue, sells some English-language books.

Car rental ADA, 1 place de la Gare

☎ 04.76.43.00.36; Avis, gare SNCF ☎ 04.76.47.11.33 & 22 cours Jean-Jaurès ☎ 04.76.86.62.50; Budget, 30 rue Émile-Gueymard ☎ 04.76.46.66.90; Europcar, gare SNCF ☎ 04.76.86.27.81; Hertz, gare SNCF ☎ 04.76.86.55.80; Self Car, 24 rue Émile-Gueymard ☎ 04.76.50.96.96.

Internet Neptune, 2 rue de la Paix (Mon–Sat 9am–10pm, Sun 1–8pm); PI@net On-Line, 1 place

Vaucanson (Mon–Sat 10am–1am, Sun 1–10pm).

Medical emergencies Centre Hospitalier Universitaire ☎ 04.76.76.75.75; ambulance Alp'Azur ☎ 04.76.21.11.11.

Pharmacy Pharmacie Bethalet, 8 place Victor-Hugo; Pharmacie du Château d'Eau, 6 place Grenette; late-night and hols call ☎ 04.76.63.42.55 for the pharmacie de garde.

Police 36 bd Maréchal-Leclerc ☎ 04.76.60.40.40.

Taxi 14 rue République, 24hr radio taxi service ☎ 04.76.54.42.54.

The Vercors and Chartreuse massifs

The Vercors massif and Chartreuse massif are very close to Grenoble, particularly the Vercors, which stretches out to the southwest of the city, parallel to the River Drac on the west side of the N75. Chartreuse is north of the city, running up the west bank of the River Isère towards Chambéry.

Both ranges are relatively gentle, making them ideal practice for less experienced walkers. The Grenoble Bureau Info Montagne (BIM) office (see p.1004) publishes route descriptions. Neither massif is heavily populated, and the lack of industry makes them authentic and unspoilt Alpine destinations, popular with all types of energetic outdoor enthusiasts from cavers to mountain bikers.

The Vercors massif

The limestone plateau of ridges and valleys that comprise the Vercors massif is a beautiful oasis of undeveloped tranquility teeming with wildlife, including chamois, mouflon and marmots. The area's proximity to Grenoble is reflected in restaurants and hotel prices, however, and there is often congestion on the little mountain roads. The #5100 bus leaves from the gare routière in Grenoble for the park's larger towns several times a day. BIM leaflets detail a number of walks of varying difficulty around the area from the simplest and most accessible to St-Nizier, detailed below, to other good but more strenuous walks, such as Villard-de-Lans to Claix, near Grenoble (1700m descent; 7hr), and the circuit of Mont Aiguille, starting from Clelles (1hr by train south of Grenoble; 6hr 30min–9hr).

St-Nizier-du-Moucherotte

The easiest of the CIMES walks is a four-hour circular walk to ST-NIZIER-DU-MOUCHEROTTE, just over the rim of the Vercors massif, with a fantastic view of the whole area. Start by taking bus #5 from place Victor-Hugo in Grenoble and get off in Seyssinet village by the school. The path starts about 200m uphill from the school on the right. For most of the way you follow GR9 with its red-and-white waymarks. It's not difficult, but the path crosses the D106 a few times, and the continuation is not always obvious, so it's worth getting the leaflet. It's about two and a half hours to St-Nizier (return the same way) through beautiful thick woods with long views back over Grenoble to the mountains beyond. The lovely purplish martagon lily blooms in the woods in early July. It's a further three and a half hours (there and back) to the top of Moucherotte on GR91.

Villard-de-Lans to La Chapelle

The D531 winds up to the park from Sassenage, emerging onto a plateau of hay meadows before the village of VILLARD-DE-LANS a good base for exploring the Vercors. There's a tourist office (daily 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; ☎04.76.95.10.38, 🌐www.villarddelans.com) with information about walks and skiing. Accommodation in town includes: the welcoming and neat Villa Primerose, 147 av des Bains (☎04.76.95.13.17, 🌐www.hotel-villa-primerose.com; closed Nov; Ⓜ), with self-catering facilities available in a communal kitchen; and the smart Hôtel Le Christiania, 220 av Professeur-Nobécourt (☎04.76.95.12.51, 🌐www.hotel-le-christiania.fr; Ⓜ; closed May, Oct & Nov). There's camping at L'Oursière, just north of town (☎04.76.95.14.77, 🌐www.camping-oursiere.fr).

Beyond Villard-de-Lans are the Gorges de la Bourne where the road cuts in under the rocks almost shutting out the sky above. A left turn (signposted St-Martin) brings you to LA CHAPELLE, where you can stay at the friendly, reasonably priced Hôtel des Sports (☎04.75.48.20.39, 🌐www.hotel-des-sports.com; Ⓜ), which also offers advice on local cycling routes. From La Chapelle the road climbs again to the wide dry plateau of Vassieux, bordered to the east by a rocky ridge rising from thick pine forest and to the west by low hills covered with scrubby vegetation. Nearby are the Grottes de Choranche, beautiful caves which contain gigantic stalactites. Part of the complex, the Grotte de Couffin, can be visited by guided tour (April & Oct every 30min 10am–noon & 1.30–6pm; May, June & Sept every 30min 9.30am–noon & 1.30–6pm; July & Aug every 20min 9.30am–6.30pm; Nov–March hourly 10.30am–4.30pm; €7.70).

13

Vassieux-en-Vercors

It was around the village of VASSIEUX-EN-VERCORS, 10km south of La Chapelle, that the fighters of the Vercors maquis suffered a bloody and bitter defeat at the hands of the SS in July 1944. During 1942–43 they had been gradually turning the Vercors into a Resistance stronghold, to the annoyance of the Germans and the French militia. The Germans finally, in June 1944, decided to wipe them out. They encircled and attacked the maquisards with vastly superior forces and parachuted an SS division into Vassieux. The French appealed in vain for Allied support and were very bitter about the lack of response. The Germans took vicious reprisals and, despite their attempts to disperse into the woods, 700 maquisards and civilians were killed and several villages razed. The Germans' most ferocious act was to murder the wounded, along with their nurses and doctors, in the Grotte de la Luire (April–Oct), a cave off the La Chapelle–Col de Rousset road.

Vassieux itself, a dull little village now rebuilt, has a memorial cemetery and small museum, the Memorial de la Résistance du Vercors (April–Sept daily 10am–6pm; Oct–March 10am–5pm; €5), with documents, photos and other memorabilia to do with the maquis and the battle. In the field outside are the remains of two gliders used by the German paratroops. Also near the town, is the Musée de la Préhistoire (same times and price), built over the site of a 4000-year-old flint mine and axe works; it contains various tools and relics that have been found there. If you want to stay, try the comfortable Auberge du Tétrás Lyre in rue Abbé-Gagnol (☎04.75.48.28.04, 🌐www.tetraslyre.com; Ⓜ; restaurant with menus from €15).

Die to Châtillon

From Vassieux, the Col de Rousset road winds south through 8km of woods of pine and fir before taking the final steep twisting descent of 10km to Die, with terrific views of the white crags and pinnacles of the southeast end of the massif. Although it's an attractive little place, DIE is worth no more than a brief stop to sample the local crémant (sparkling white wine), Clairette de

Die, which can be tasted and bought in the caves surrounding the town. La Cave de Die Jaillance on avenue de la Clairette offers a free tour and tasting (☎04.75.22.30.15; daily: July–Aug 9am–7pm; Sept–June 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm). There's a tourist office on rue des Jardins (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; ☎04.75.22.03.03, 🌐www.diois-tourisme.com). If you plan to stay the night here, try the modest but comfortable Hôtel St-Domingue, 44 rue Camille-Buffardel (☎04.75.22.03.08, ☎04.75.22.24.48; 📍). There are also five camp-sites, the cheapest being the Camping de Justin in the quartier du Pont Rompu (☎04.75.22.14.77, 🌐www.camping-die.com; closed Oct–Dec) on the edge of town. La Dolce Vita restaurant on place de l'Horloge serves Italian-influenced menus from €11–29, including pizzas.

Six kilometres south along the River Drôme at the Pont de Quart the road forks left for CHÂTILLON, a lovely village lying in a narrowing valley bottom and surrounded by apple and peach orchards, vineyards, walnut trees and fields of lavender. You can stay at the Hôtel du Dauphiné on place Dévoluy (☎04.75.21.13.13, 📧hoteldudauphine@wanadoo.fr; 📍), which has eight clean and simple rooms; alternatively, there are three campsites nearby.

The Chartreuse massif and Grande Chartreuse monastery

The Chartreuse massif, designated in 1995 as the Parc Naturel Régional de Chartreuse (🌐www.parc-chartreuse.net), stretches north from Grenoble towards Chambéry and, like Vercors, is not easy to visit without your own vehicle. The landscape, however, is spectacular and very different to that of the Vercors: precipitous limestone peaks, mountain pastures and thick forest.

Grande Chartreuse Monastery

The massif's main local landmark is the Grande Chartreuse Monastery, situated up the narrow Gorges des Guiers Morts, southeast of St-Laurent-du-Pont, and some 35km from Grenoble, one of nineteen Carthusian monasteries still functioning worldwide. The Carthusian Order, dating from the eleventh century, was the last great monastic reform movement, and was founded in answer to the degeneration of the Cistercian Order. Practising a strictly hermit-like existence, its members live in cells and meet only for Mass and a weekly communal meal, eaten in silence. Since 1605, however, the Carthusians have been better known as the producers of Chartreuses – powerfully alcoholic herbal elixirs, ranging from the better-known green and yellow variants to a number of gentler fruit liqueurs. The monastery is not open to the public, but near the village of ST-PIERRE-DE-CHARTREUSE, 5km back on the Grenoble road, you can visit the Musée de la Grande Chartreuse, formerly La Correrie monastery, which illustrates the life of the Carthusian Order (daily: April & Oct 10am–noon & 2–6pm; May, June & Sept 9.30am–noon & 2–6.30pm; July & Aug 9.30am–6.30pm; €4; 🌐www.musee-grande-chartreuse.fr).

Voiron

For those less interested in religious austerity and more interested in that mysterious green liqueur, a visit to VOIRON, 30km west of the park and on the train line from Grenoble to Lyon, is in order. The Caves de la Chartreuse on boulevard Edgar-Koffler (April–June & Sept–Oct daily 9–11.30am & 2–6.30pm; July & Aug daily 9am–6.30pm; Nov–March Mon–Fri 9–11.30am & 2–5.30pm; free) are where the “elixir of life” is now bottled. The tour is good fun – it takes visitors through the world's largest liqueur cellars, and includes a rather corny 3-D film on the history of the monastery and a tasting of one of the monks' alcoholic beverages. The town's tourist office is at 30 cours Becquart-Castelbon (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.76.05.00.38; 🌐www.paysvoironnais.info). There's not much else to see in Voiron, which is best known as the home of the Rossignol ski factory, but if you're looking for a hotel, try the small but comfortable La Chaumière (☎04.76.05.16.24, ☎04.76.05.13.27; 📍).

Grenoble to Briançon

Connecting Grenoble to Briançon, the N91 twists through the precipitous valley of the Romanche and over the Col du Lautaret (2058m), which is kept open all year round and served regularly by the Grenoble–Briançon bus. As well as being an exciting foretaste of the high mountain scenery to come, this route offers the opportunity for some worthwhile detours, including the climb across the Col du Galibier to Valloire and some fine mountain hikes above the modern ski resort of L'Alpe d'Huez, which is perched on the northern slopes of the Romanche valley above the attractive town of Le Bourg-d'Oisans. On the southern slopes is the sprawling village of Les Deux-Alpes, which has been wholly subsumed by the skiing industry, while close to Briançon another modern resort, Serre Chevalier, has been created around five farming hamlets.

Le Bourg-d'Oisans

The first major settlement on the route, LE BOURG-D'OISANS, 20km southeast of Grenoble, is of no great interest in itself, but it's a good place to catch your breath. You can pick up information from the tourist office, on quai Girard, by the river in the middle of town (July & Aug 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.76.80.03.25, 🌐www.oisans.com), and the Maison du Parc National des Écrins on rue Gambetta (July & Aug 8am–noon & 3–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 8am–noon & 2–5.30pm; ☎04.76.80.00.51). There are some good-value hotels here, among them L'Oberland, on avenue de la Gare (☎04.76.80.24.24, 🌐www.hoteloberland.com; 📍), and the Hôtel Le Florentin at 8 rue Thiers (☎04.76.80.01.61, 🌐www.le-florentin.com; 📍). There's also a municipal campsite on rue Humbert near the town centre and a concentration of sites across the river on the Alpe d'Huez road. If you like the idea of cycling in vigorous mountain air, bikes can be rented from Cycles d'Oisans on rue Viennois – not such a crazy undertaking as you might think if you keep to the valley bottoms where the gradients aren't too fearsome.

L'Alpe d'Huez and around

One place you're unlikely to be cycling to is the ski resort of L'ALPE D'HUEZ, signposted just outside Le Bourg. It's situated more than a vertical kilometre above the valley floor, and the eleven-kilometre road, which crawls up the valley side, is often used as a stage in the Tour de France. As you ascend through the 21 hairpins, there's a fine view of the acutely crumpled strata of rock exposed by passing glaciers on the south side of the Romanche valley. Undoubtedly a skier's paradise in winter, the purpose-built resort itself has little character in July and August.

L'Alpe d'Huez became famous during the 1968 Olympics for its melting bobsleigh, and was also the birthplace of the ski lift when in 1936 Jean Pomagalski invented the first toe, a rope attached to a modified tractor engine which pulled skiers up the slope. Beginner toes, now known as Pomas the world over, radiate out from the village's sunny south-facing slopes. Beyond these, an extensive network of télécabines and téléphériques whisk skiers to the Pic Blanc (3330m), at the bottom of the Chaîne des Rousses ridge, from which two mammoth black runs, over two kilometres in length, descend; skiing is possible here in summer too. As well as skiing, the télécabines can also be used to undertake some superb high mountain walks. Two recommended ones (details from the tourist office – see below), are the eight-kilometre Lac Blanc and Refuge de la Fare walk, which winds through the bleak wilderness past the lakes encircling the Dôme des Petites Rousses to the east of the glacier-clad chaîne, and the less exposed ten-kilometre hike to the gorges of the Sarennes valley, to the east of the resort along the GR54.

Practicalities

L'Alpe d'Huez's tourist office in the Maison de l'Alpe, in place Paganon (May–Nov daily 9am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm, Dec–April daily 9am–7pm; ☎04.76.11.44.44, 🌐www.alpedhuez.com), provides detailed walking and mountain biking maps; the Maison also houses the ESF ski school office (☎04.76.80.31.69, 🌐www.esf-alpedhuez.com). Good places to stay, both in Huez en Oisans below the main village, include chambres d'hôtes at Florineige (☎04.76.80.94.89, 🌐www.hebergement-florineige.com; 📍), and Hôtel L'Ancolie (☎04.76.11.13.13, same website; 📍). Yves, who runs both establishments with his wife Sylvie, is a ski instructor in winter and a mountain guide in summer, so a very useful host.

Les Deux-Alpes

Five kilometres beyond Le Bourg-d'Oisans on the N91 begins the ascent up to the Gorges de l'Infernet. The slate-black valley walls close around you before broadening out again as you cross the Barrage du Lac du Chambon. Here the road divides; the N91 continues around the lake towards La Grave and the Col du Lautaret, while a right turn leads to the resort of Les Deux-Alpes, on a high hanging valley.

A consequence of a massive tourism drive, the two farming communities that once made up Les Deux-Alpes have been now buried beneath a blanket of unplanned urban sprawl. The resort is a favourite with young skiers, particularly students, from across Europe, as well from nearby Grenoble, who come as much for its lively weekend après-ski as for its high, gentle slopes, ideal for snowboarding. It's definitely not for everyone, with its burgeoning snow parks pumping out rap music around jumps adorned with graffiti, but it does offer some useful facilities – in summer thousands of mountain bikers and parapante gliders descend on the resort to make use of its ski lifts and thermal currents. The high glacier on Dôme de Puy Salé, accessed via the Jandri ski lift, has a grotte de glace (€20), with impressive sculptures carved out of its ice walls, as well as three summer skiing slopes.

The tourist office, situated between the Jandri ski lifts on place des Deux-Alpes (☎04.76.79.22.00, 🌐www.les2alpes.com), has lists of self-catering apartments for rent, and gives information on local activities. Cheap accommodation options include an HI hostel (☎04.76.79.22.80, 📍les-deux-alpes@fuaj.org), where beds in a small dorm cost €11, and Alpenzym, 8 rue Ste-Luce (☎04.76.79.08.38, 🌐www.alpenzym.fr; open year-round; €36 per person half-board in 4 to 10-person bunk-bedded rooms), a 32-bed hostel on the slopes behind the ESF ski school office on avenue de la Muzelle.

La Grave and the Col du Lautaret

Continuing on the N91 towards La Grave you'll pass two waterfalls issuing from the north side of the valley: early summer run-off enhances the slender, 300-metre plume of the Cascade de la Pisse, while, 6km further on, the near-vertical fall of churning white water called the Saut de la Pucelle ("the virgin's leap") is a breathtaking sight.

LA GRAVE, 18km on from the Barrage du Lac du Chambon, lies at the foot of the Col du Lautaret, facing the majestic glaciers of the north side of La Meije. The small collection of stone buildings that make up the village are a Mecca to climbers and extreme skiers. It's a good base for walking: the GR54 climbs up to Le Chazelet on the slopes northwest of the village and continues to the Plateau de Paris and the Lac Noir, with breathtaking views of La Meije (3984m). An easier way to appreciate the stunning vistas is to take the télécabine, which rises sharply from the centre of the village to the 3200-metre summit of Le Rateau, just west of La Meije (mid-June to early Sept & late Dec to early May; €18 return), a 35-minute ride that's very good value for money when you consider that the view of the barely accessible interior of the Écrins (see opposite) is normally seen only by the most intrepid mountain walkers. The lift also provides access to acres of off-piste skiing, and the freezing conditions of the mountain's northerly face make it ideal for ice climbing. The tourist office, near the télécabine (☎04.76.79.90.05, 🌐www.lagrave-lameije.com) has plenty of information about guides and routes, while for accommodation make for the chambres d'hôtes at 🐾 La Roche Meane, 3km east in Villar d'Arène (☎04.76.79.91.43, 🌐www.rochemeane.com; 📍). This wonderful old stone farmhouse has been converted by mountain guide Xavier and his wife into a friendly guesthouse with colourful rooms, exposed stone walls and plenty of character.

From La Grave it's only 11km to the top of the Col du Lautaret, a pass that's been in use for centuries. The Roman road from Milan to Vienne crossed it, and its name comes from the small temple (alaretum) the Romans built to placate the deity of the mountains. Around the col is a huge expanse of meadow long known to botanists for its glorious variety of Alpine flowers, seen at their best in mid-July. You'll also find Le Jardin Botanique Alpin du Lautaret, founded in 1899 and maintained by the University of Grenoble (June–Sept daily 10am–6pm; €4); it displays plants from mountain ranges throughout the world.

The Col du Galibier and Valloire

Turn north at Lautaret and you're on your way to the even higher Col du Galibier (no public transport), which is closed by snow from mid-October to mid-June – sometimes the snow lingers longer, making life for riders in the Tour de France yet more hellish. The road to the pass is a tremendous haul up to 2556m, utterly bare and wild, with the huge red-veined peak of the Grand Galibier rearing up on the right and a fearsome spiny ridge blocking the horizon beyond. A monument on the south side of the col commemorates Henri Desgranges, founder of the Tour de France. Crossing the col is one of the most gruelling stages in the race, with a long, brutal ascent and terrifying descent at breakneck speed. The road loops down in hairpin after hairpin, through VALLOIRE, a sizeable ski resort, whose church is one of the most richly decorated in Savoie, then over the Col du Télégraphe (1570m) and down into the deep wooded valley of the Arc, known as La Maurienne, with the Massif de la Vanoise rising abruptly behind. Valloire has pleasant, reasonably priced hotels in Le Tatami (☎04.79.59.06.08, 🌐www.letatami.com; €525–630 per person per week compulsory half-board) and the Christiania Hôtel (☎04.79.59.00.57, 🌐www.christiania-hotel.com; 📍; restaurant from €15).

Le Casset

LE CASSET, back on the Briançon road about 12km beyond the Col du Lautaret, is a hamlet of dilapidated old houses clustered around a church with a bulbous dome. There's nothing to see in the town but the site is superb, with the Glacier du Casset dazzling above the green of the larches. Parking here makes it easy to access the GR54; a good day's walk is to follow the path out of the village as far as the Col d'Ar sine (about 3hr), from which point you can either turn back or go on down to La Grave on the north side of the park, making an overnight stop at the CAF Refuge del'Alpe/Villar d'Arène (☎04.76.79.94.66), below the col.

Serre Chevalier

Strung out along the N91 as it follows the bottom of the Guisanne valley and just 9km west of Briançon, the skiing area of SERRE CHEVALIER is the collective name given to five traditional farming hamlets whose old wooden chalets have now been surrounded by small hotels and holiday homes. Saint-Chaffrey and Chantemerle form Serre Chevalier 1350 (at an altitude of 1350m), Villeneuve and La-Salle-les-Alpes make up Serre Chevalier 1400, and Le Monêtier-les-Bains is Serre Chevalier 1500. Each area is linked by a series of ski lifts and pistes which climb and descend the north-facing slopes of the valley, and there are ESF ski school offices in all three areas (🌐www.esf-serrechevalier.com), as well as plenty of shops from which to rent equipment. Of all the villages, Le Monêtier-les-Bains is the prettiest, its narrow streets weaving between old stone houses and rickety wooden balconies. The village has been a thermal spa since Roman times, with two hot-water springs, one at 34°C and one at 38°C, and baths which are currently under renovation and scheduled to open by the end of 2007.

The tourist office is in the centre of Villeneuve (☎04.92.24.98.98, 🌐www.serre-chevalier.com), while the smartest hotels are in Le Monêtier-les-Bains; these include Hôtel Alliey, a modern boutique hotel with spa and pool (☎04.92.24.44.20, 🌐www.alliey.com; closed May & mid-Sept to mid-Dec; winter half-board 🍷, summer 🍷) and the more traditional L'Auberge du Choucas (☎04.92.24.42.73, 🌐www.aubergeduchoucas.com; closed May & Nov; 🍷), which has an excellent gourmet restaurant serving menus between €29 and €60. Les Marmottes in Chantemerle (☎04.92.24.11.17, 🌐perso.orange.fr/chalet.marmottes; 🍷), a renovated farmhouse offering chambres d'hôtes is another good option. There's also a very nice hostel at Le Bez, 500m from the centre of Serre Chevalier 1400 (☎04.92.24.74.54, 📧serre-chevalier@fuaj.org), where a bed in a dorm costs €11.50.

The Hautes-Alpes: Briançon, the Écrins and the Queyras

The Hautes-Alpes are an area of high mountains between Savoie and the Vanoise to the north and the Alpes de Provence to the south. East is the Italian border and to the west, the River Drac and Grenoble. The region is sliced in two by the Durance valley with the Parc National des Écrins to the west and the Parc Naturel Régional du Queyras to the east. At the head of the Durance valley, where the Guisane and Durance rivers converge, the ancient fortified city of Briançon makes an excellent base for exploring the surrounding region.

Briançon

Located 100km east of Grenoble along the N91, Briançon is the capital of the Écrins and Europe's highest town. An imposing citadel, it looms on the cusp of a rocky outcrop, high above the Durance and Guisane valleys. Fortified originally by the Romans to guard the Mons Matrona from Milan to Vienne, the town is encircled by lofty ramparts and sheer walls constructed by Vauban in the seventeenth century. Today, despite its apparent remoteness, the town is a lively mix of students, military personnel and international tourists, with a surprisingly cosmopolitan feel.

The steep, narrow streets of the ville haute, high above the urban spread of the modern town, are the main focus of interest. There are four gates: portes Dauphine and Pignerol lie to the north, porte d'Embrun to the southwest and porte de la Durance to the east. If you come by car the best thing is to park at the Champ de Mars at the top of the hill and to enter the town through the porte Pignerol. From here the narrow main street – known as the grande gargouille because of the “gurgling” stream running down the middle – tips steeply downhill, bordered by mostly eighteenth-century houses. To the right is the sturdy plain collegiate church, designed under the supervision of Vauban, again with an eye to defence. Beyond it, there's a fantastic view from the walls, especially on a clear starry night, when the snows on the surrounding barrier of mountains give off a silvery glow.

Vauban's citadelle, above the porte Pignerol – the highest point of the fortifications – can be visited for free in July and August, and by guided tour from just inside the northern gate the rest of the year (usually 3pm; €4.50). The fortified keep, designed by Vauban, looks over the strategic intersection of five valleys and guards the start of the climb to the desolate and windswept Col de Montgenèvre, one of the oldest and most important passes into Italy.

Down in the ville basse, the télécabine du Prorel shoots up from avenue René-Froger and links Briançon with the Serre Chevalier skiing resort area. It also provides a head start to mountain walkers (€5.30).

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is along avenue de la République in the ville basse, 1.5km south of the old city. Local buses #1, #2 and #3 link the station and the Champ de Mars. Briançon's tourist office is in the place du Temple close to the porte Pignerol gateway (Mon–Sat 8.30am–noon & 1.30–6.30pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm; ☎ 04.92.21.08.50, 🌐 www.briancon.com). The mountain guides' office is in Parc Chancel (summer daily 9.30am–noon & 3–7pm; ☎ 04.92.20.15.73), and the Maison du Parc National des Écrins is in place Médecin-Général-Blanchard (☎ 04.92.21.42.15, 🌐 www.les-ecrins-parc-national.fr).

One of the least expensive hotels in Briançon is the Pension des Remparts, in the citadelle itself at 14 av de Vauban (☎ & 📞 04.92.21.08.73; 🍷; closed Nov), or try the slightly nicer Auberge de la Paix (☎ 04.92.21.37.43, 🌐 www.auberge-de-la-paix.com; 🍷) nearby at 3 rue Porte Méane. A more comfortable option is the chain-run Hôtel Mercure on avenue du Dauphiné (☎ 04.92.20.02.00, 🌐 www.mercure.com; 🍷), a large, modern place in the centre of the ville basse with a sauna and swimming pool. The nearest campsite is Camping des Cinq Vallées at St-Blaise (☎ 04.92.21.06.27, 🌐 www.camping5vallees.com; open June–Sept), 2km from town. There are a number of gîtes d'étape, including the cosy Le Petit Phoque, 2km along the Montgenèvre road at Le Fontenil (☎ 04.92.20.07.27, 🌐 www.lepetitphoque.com; closed first two weeks in Nov; €12).

The ville haute is full of wonderful Italian cafés serving delicious cakes and pizzas, and there are plenty of reasonably priced restaurants, such as Les Tempeliers, which has a patio on the place du Temple (beside the tourist office), and cheap, solid menus for around €15. If you'd rather escape the tartiflette, there's reasonable Indian food from €13 at Palais de Jaipur, 8 place Général-Eberle (☎04.92.21.09.18).

The Parc National des Écrins

Some 50km southeast of Grenoble and 20km west of Briançon, the Parc National des Écrins (🌐 www.les-ecrins-parc-national.fr) covers 230,000 acres of Alpine terrain, its highest peaks rising to 4102m in the Massif de Pelvoux in the north of the park. The Écrins is the second most popular place for climbing in the country (Mont Blanc being the first), and with its sunny weather, mazy rivers, and impressive wild flowers it's hard not to regard the park as a big playground. Not only are many of the massifs bolted for sport climbing, but plenty have actually been turned into ropes courses, or Via Ferrata – the wires and ladders are already built in so that inexperienced climbers can strap on a harness and spend a day climbing (pick up the Via Ferrata en Grand Briançonnais brochure at any of the tourist offices). The small towns in the park are of little interest in themselves, especially in comparison with the architecture and culture of the Queyras and the nightlife in Chamonix, but the Écrins is worth a trip for the sheer variety of sports that it offers in a much less crowded setting than Mont Blanc.

The easiest route into the park is from Argentières, an unattractive former mining town 16km south of Briançon (for tours of the town's silver mines call ☎04.92.23.02.94 in advance). From here a small road cuts west into the valley towards Vallouise, with the ice-capped monster of Mont Pelvoux itself (3946m) rearing in front of you all the way.

La Bâtie and Les Vigneaux

The first place you come to on the road into the park from Argentières is LA BÂTIE, where there are remains of the so-called Mur des Valdois. The origins of the wall are uncertain: it was probably built either to keep out companies of marauding soldiers-turned-bandits, or to control the spread of plague in the fourteenth century. Despite its name, the wall actually has nothing to do with the Valdois, a sect prominent in this part of the country (see box, p.1018).

A couple of kilometres beyond La Bâtie on the right is the lovely village of LES VIGNEAUX, surrounded by apple orchards and backed by the fierce crags of Montbrison. The village church has a fine old door and lock under a vaulted porch. Beside it on the exterior wall of the church are two bands of paintings depicting the Seven Deadly Sins. A man carrying a leg of mutton and drinking wine from a flask represents Gluttony, while a woman with rouged cheeks, green stockings and an enticing expanse of thigh on display represents Lust. In the lower band they are all getting their comeuppance, writhing in the agonies of hellfire.

Vallouise

VALLOUISE lies under a steep wooded spur at the junction of two rivers, the Gyronde (which combines the Gyr and the Onde, smaller rivers north of town) and the Gérendoine, about 10km from Argentière. The great glaciated peaks visible up the latter valley are called Les Bans; up in front is Mont Pelvoux. The nucleus of the old village – narrow lanes between sombre stone chalets – is again its church, fifteenth-century with a sixteenth-century porch on pink marble pillars. A fresco of the Adoration of the Magi adorns the tympanum above the door, itself a magnificent object, with carved Gothic panels along the top and an ancient lock-and-bolt with a chimera's head. Inside are some more frescoes, and a collection of naive wooden statues.

The GR54, which does the circuit of the Écrins park, passes through Vallouise: the stage on from here to Le Monetier via Lac de l'Eychauda is one of the best. Another good walk is to the hamlet of PUY AILLAUD, high on the west flank of the Gyr valley. The path starts just to the right of the church and zigzags up the steep slope behind it with almost aerial views of the valley beneath.

There's a tourist office in place de l'Église (May–Sept daily 9am–noon & 3–7pm; Oct–April daily 9am–noon & 2.30–6.30pm ☎08.10.00.11.12, 🌐www.paysdesecrins.com), and a Bureau des Guides hut in the main car park (☎04.92.23.32.29, 🌐www.guides-ecrins.com). The Maison du Parc des Écrins provides hiking information (☎04.92.23.32.31). There's a minibus service as far as Ailefroide in summer, starting from the bar next to the Edelweiss hotel (see below); to walk takes two hours or so. Vallouise has a campsite, some gîtes and a handful of hotels: the Edelweiss is the least expensive (☎04.92.23.38.58, ☎04.92.23.33.46; 📍); closed mid-April to mid-June & mid-Sept to mid-Dec), or for apartment accommodation try Alpbase, a series of self-catered chalets rented out by a British couple for short periods (☎04.92.23.45.69, 🌐www.alpbase.com). All rooms in the village are likely to be full in July and August unless you book. For food try the microbrewery Brasserie AlpHand on place du Village (☎04.92.23.20.00; closed May to mid-June).

Ailefroide

The six-kilometre drive beyond Vallouise to AILEFROIDE is absolutely spectacular; the village cowers beneath the daunting ridges, peaks and glaciers of Pelvoux. Ailefroide is really no more than a huge campsite (☎04.92.23.46.43, 🌐www.ailefroide.com) with a couple of shops and a climbing centre: not quite wilderness (it can get quite crowded in August) but a long drive from the nearest city. Beyond Ailefroide, however, towards the end of the road at the Pré du Madame Carle and the old Refuge Cézanne, you'll be rewarded with some magnificent scenery.

This is the start of the steep climb to the CAF Refuge du Glacier Blanc (☎04.92.23.50.24), right beside the beetling glacier. Quieter, but a good deal

The Valdois

The Valdois ("Waldensians" in English) were a heretical sect founded in the late twelfth century by Pierre Valdo, a merchant from Lyon, who preached against worldly wealth and the corruption of the clergy and, practising as he preached, gave his wealth to the poor. Excommunicated in 1186, the Valdois came more and more to deny the authority of the Church, and sought refuge from persecution in the remote mountain valleys of Pelvoux, especially in the area around Vallouise and Argentière.

There was a crop of executions for sorcery in the early fifteenth century, and many of the victims were probably Valdois, burnt to death in wooden cabins built for this purpose. In 1488, Charles VIII launched a full-scale crusade against them. There's a spot west of Ailefroide known as Baume Chapelue where they were smoked out by the military and butchered. In 1562 they joined the growing Huguenot cause, but after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, they were finally exterminated in the eighteenth century, when 8000 troops went on the rampage, creating total desolation and "leaving neither people nor animals".

longer, is the approach to the CAF Refuge du Sélé (☎04.92.23.39.49) and the Pointe du Sélé, due west of Ailefroide; bear in mind that this is a difficult trek for experienced hikers, not an afternoon stroll.

Briançon to Queyras

The direct route from Briançon to Queyras, crossing the 2360m Col d'Izoard, is a beautiful trip, but, with no buses covering the distance, you need a car to do it. Leaving Briançon, the D902 begins to climb the steep Cerveyrette valley, the seemingly endless series of switchbacks entering an ever denser forest until it arrives at Le Laus, a cluster of old stone houses with long, sloping, wooden roofs set in meadows beside the stream. Soon you reach the tree line and cross the Col d'Izoard to the Casse Déserte, a wild, desolate region with huge scree running down off the peaks and weirdly eroded orange rocks. From the top the view extends over many kilometres of mountain landscape, and it's from here that the vertiginous descent commences, entering another river valley, which is lined by a succession of tiny hamlets, Brunissard, La Chalp and, finally, larger ARVIEUX, lying in a high valley surrounded by fields and meadows, just 6km from Château-Queyras. A splendidly ornate Baroque church, dedicated to St Thomas Becket, stands guard at the entrance to the village. The GR5 passes through, running a parallel route from Briançon; if you started out late and can't reach Arvioux by nightfall, there is also a gîte, Les Bons Enfants (☎04.92.46.73.85, ✉lesbonsenfants@free.fr) in Brunissard higher up in the valley. Or, once in Arvioux, you can try the apartments rented out by La Casse Déserte (☎04.92.46.72.91; ②).

Mont-Dauphin and Embrun

If the Col d'Izoard is closed, or if you don't like slow, winding, high roads, then the Queyras can be reached from the north or the south on the N94. From Briançon, the River Durance meanders leisurely through a wide valley, following the N94, until some 27km later it passes MONT-DAUPHIN, a formidably bastioned village, and one of the many Alpine fortifications designed by Vauban in the seventeenth century, commanding the entrance to the valley of the Guil. There's a tourist office (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 3–6pm; ☎04.92.45.17.80), a gîte, Le Glacier Bleu (☎04.92.45.18.47, 🌐www.leglacierbleu.fr; ③), and several restaurants inside the walled perimeter.

Twenty kilometres further along its course the river reaches EMBRUN, a beautiful little town of narrow streets on a rocky bluff above the Durance and an important base for both the Parc du Queyras and the Parc des Écrins. It has been a fortress town for centuries. Hadrian made it the capital of the Maritime Alps, and from the third century to the Revolution it was the seat of an important archbishopric. The chief sight is its twelfth-century cathedral that inspired numerous imitators throughout the region. The tourist office, in a former chapel of the Cordeliers on place Général-Dosse (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7.30pm, Sun 9.30am–noon & 4–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6.30pm; ☎04.92.43.72.72, 🌐www.ot-embrun.fr), is next door to the bureau for mountain guides, which organizes a daily programme of walks in the surrounding mountains. There's an Internet café, Omnis Cyberspace, 30 rue de la Liberté, just down the street. The park zones and the area south of Embrun have extensive facilities for outdoor activities ranging from rafting to sailing and climbing (enquire at the tourist office).

There are two very agreeable hotels by the central place de la Mairie: the simple, but delightful Hôtel du Commerce, just off the square in rue St-Pierre (☎04.92.43.54.54, 📞04.92.43.81.89; 📍), with an excellent restaurant serving menus from €14; and the flower-decked Hôtel de la Mairie on the square itself (☎04.92.43.20.65, 🌐www.hoteldelamairie.com; 🕒; closed Oct–Nov), also with a good restaurant (closed Mon & Sun eve in winter; from €15) serving tasty local specialities. There are several campsites as well: two reasonably priced ones are Le Moulin (☎04.92.43.00.41; closed mid-Sept to Jan), on the left after the bridge on the Gap road (N94), and La Tour, on route de la Madeleine close to the Durance off the D994 (☎04.92.43.17.66; closed Sept to late June).

Just a few kilometres past Embrun is Lac de Serre-Ponçon, the largest man-made lake in Europe, created in the 1950s by damming and taming the wild Durance. A hostel overlooks the lake 10km from Embrun at SAVINES-LE-LAC (☎04.92.44.20.16, 📧savines@fuaj.org; closed mid-Sept to April), a town that was moved from what is now the bottom of the lake to its current location.

Parc Régional du Queyras

The Parc Régional du Queyras (🌐www.queyras.com), spreading southeast of Briançon to the Italian border, is much more Mediterranean in appearance than the mountains to the north, with low scrub covering the mountainsides, poor shallow soil, white friable rock and a huge variety of flora. The open land along the park's rolling roads makes it particularly enjoyable to spend a few hours driving along them up to St-Véran, an Alpine village near the Italian border. The park has some good walking opportunities, with the GR58 path making a circuit of the park, running through St-Véran and L'Échalp, and the GR5 crossing through Ceillac and Arvieux on its way from Briançon towards Embrun.

Guillestre

The road into the Queyras park follows the River Guil from Mont-Dauphin. First stop is GUILLESTRE, a pretty mountain village that only really comes to life in summer. Its houses, in typical Queyras style, have open granaries on the upper floors and its church has a lion-porch in emulation of the cathedral at Embrun. The village lies at the foot of the long climb southwards to the Col de Vars (2111m), which gives access to the remote and beautiful walking country of the upper Ubaye valley; it's six hours, via Lac Miroir, Lac Ste-Anne and the Col Girardin, to the CAF Refuge de Maljasset (☎04.92.84.34.04; closed Jan & mid-May to mid-June).

Château-Ville-Vieille and around

The road route into the park from Guillestre strikes northeast through the narrow gorge of the Combe du Queyras, scarcely more than a claustrophobic crack between walls up to 400m high. Far below the road, the clear stream bubbles down over red and green rocks. It was only in the twentieth century that road-building techniques became sufficiently sophisticated to cope with these narrows – previously they had to be circumvented by a detour over the adjacent heights.

At the upper end of the Combe, the valley broadens briefly, and ahead you see the fortifications of Château-Queyras barring the way so completely that there's scarcely room for the road to squeeze around its base – Vauban at work again, though the original fortress was medieval. There is an exhibit on the geological conditions that created the Alps in the crypt of the castle's chapel (daily: May & Sept 10am–6pm; June–Aug 9am–7pm; €3.50). Just beyond is CHÂTEAU-VILLE-VIEILLE, where the road for St-Véran branches right over the Guil and up the ravine of the Aigue Blanche torrent. A smaller place than Guillestre, it has only a few old houses still intact and a church with its square tower and octagonal steeple flanked by four short triangular pinnacles – a style characteristic of this corner of the Alps. The road continues along the Guil through the villages of Aiguilles, Abriès and L'Échalp (all with gîtes d'étape), to the Belvédère du Viso, close to the Italian border and the Monte Viso, at 3841m the highest peak in the area.

St-Véran

Seven kilometres south of Château-Ville-Vieille lies ST-VÉRAN, which at 2042m claims to be the highest permanently inhabited village in Europe. As with most high Alpine villages, traditional terrace farming has now practically died out and today the principal economic activity is entertaining tourists.

St-Véran's houses are part stone and part timber, and there are several refurbished old drinking fountains, made entirely of wood. The stone church stands prettily on the higher of the two “streets”, its white tower silhouetted against the bare crags across the valley. Just south of the village, the GR58, waymarked and easy to follow, turns right down to the river, beside which there are some good spots for camping sauvage. The path continues up the left bank through woods of pine and larch as far as the chapel of Notre-Dame-de-Clausis. There, above the treeline, it crosses to the right bank of the stream and winds up damp grassy slopes to the Col de Chamoussière, about three and a half hours from St-Véran. The ridge to the right of the col marks the frontier with Italy. In the valley below, you can see the Refuge Agnel, about an hour away, with the Pain de Sucre (3208m) behind it. In early July, there are glorious flowers – violets, Black Vanilla orchids, pinks and gentians – in the meadows leading up to the col.

St-Véran's very accommodating tourist office is halfway down the main high street (☎04.92.45.82.21, 🌐www.saintveran.com; Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; also open Sun in high season). The nicest accommodation option is Chalet Auberge L'Estoilies, a beautifully converted rustic wooden farmhouse in Le Raux, a kilometre below the main village (☎04.92.45.82.65, 🌐www.estoilies.com; 📍).

Travel details

Trains

Anney to: Aix-les-Bains (frequent; 30–40min); Chambéry (frequent; 45min); Grenoble (several daily; 2hr); Lyon (several daily; 2hr); Paris (frequent; 4hr 30min); St-Gervais (9–10 daily; 1hr 35min–2hr).

Annemasse, near Geneva to: Anney, changing at La-Roche-sur-Foron (4–5 daily; 1hr 30min); Évian (frequent; 35min); Paris (1 daily; 8hr).

Belfort to: Besançon (10 daily; 1hr–1hr 15min); Dole (5 daily; 1hr 30min); Montbéliard (hourly; 20min); Paris-Est (2 daily; 5hr); Ronchamp (12 daily; 5min).

Besançon to: Bourg-en-Bresse (4–5 daily; 2hr 30min); Dijon (10 daily; 1hr); Dole (10 daily; 30min); Morez (4 daily; 2hr 10min–2hr 30min); Paris-Lyon (up to 6 daily; 2hr 30min); St-Claude (4 daily; 2hr 30min–3hr); St-Laurent (4 daily; 1hr 40min–2hr).

Briançon to: Marseille (3 daily; 4hr 30min); Grenoble (4 daily; 4hr).

Chambéry to: Aix-les-Bains (frequent; 10min); Anney (frequent; 45min); Bourg-St-Maurice (5 daily; 2hr); Geneva (several daily; 1hr 30min); Grenoble (several daily; 1hr); Lyon (frequent; 1hr 30min–2hr 30min); Modane (frequent; 1hr 20min); Paris (frequent; 5hr 30min).

Évian to: Geneva (7 daily; 1hr); Thonon-les-Bains (frequent; 15min).

Grenoble to: Anney (several daily; 2hr); Briançon, changing at Veynes-Dévoluy (1–2 daily; 4hr); Chambéry (several daily; 1hr); Lyon (frequent; 1hr 30min–1hr 45min); Paris-Lyon (several daily; 3hr 10min–7hr 15min).

St-Gervais to: Chamonix (5–7 daily; 45min).

Buses

Anney to: Albertville (4 daily; 50min); Évian (4 daily; 1hr 30min); Lyon (2 daily; 2hr 30min); Talloires (6 daily; 50min).

Belfort to: Ronchamp (1 daily; 45min).

Besançon to: Ornans (4 daily; 30min); Pontarlier (4 daily; 1hr).

Bourg-St-Maurice to: Aosta (1 daily July & Aug; 2hr 30min); Val d'Isère (1–2 daily; 50min–1hr 20min).

Briançon to: Mont-Dauphin (3–5 daily; 1hr 15min).

Chambéry to: Aix-les-Bains (several daily; 20min); Anney (several daily; 1hr); Grenoble (several daily; 1hr).

Chamonix to: Anney, via La-Roche-sur-Foron (3 daily; 3hr); Anney, via Megève (1 daily; 3hr); Geneva (1 daily; 2hr 30min); Grenoble (1 daily; 3hr 30min).

Grenoble to: L'Alpe d'Huez (2 daily; 45min); Le Bourg-d'Oisans (4–6 daily; 1hr 20min); Briançon (several daily; 2hr); Chambéry (several daily; 1hr); Col du Lautaret (1 daily; 2hr); La Grave (1 daily; 1hr 40min); Le Monétier-les-Bains (1 daily; 2hr 25min); St-Pierre-de-Chartreuse (at least 1 daily; 1hr); Villard-de-Lans and other towns in the Vercors (at least 1 daily; 45min).

Mont-Dauphin to (summer only): Ceillac (2 daily; 35min); Guillestre (2–3 daily; 5min); St-Véran (2–3 daily; 1hr 30min); Vars (2 daily; 50min); Ville-Vieille (2–3 daily; 1hr 5min).

Thonon-les-Bains to: Évian (frequent; 25min); Yvoire (3–4 daily; 20min).

Valloire to (summer only): St-Michel-de-Maurienne (2 daily; 45min).

The Rhône valley and Provence

- * Lyon Traboulez through the Renaissance quarter and savour the culinary genius of some of France's top chefs. See p.1037
- * Roman remains Impressive arenas in Vienne, Orange and Arles host summer festivals and concerts. See pp.1044, 1052 & 1079
- * Avignon The former city of popes has spectacular monuments and museums to go along with the annual Festival d'Avignon. See p.1060
- * Medieval hilltop villages Les Baux and Gordes are the most famous, but there are many others equally picturesque, and much less frequented. See pp.1076 & 1090
- * La Camargue The marshland of the Rhône delta is home to white horses, flamingos and unearthly landscapes. See p.1083
- * Aix The most beautiful of Provence's major cities is a wonderful place for café idling and has the region's most vibrant markets. See p.1094
- * Les Gorges du Verdon The largest canyon in Europe, with stunning views and a full range of hikes. See p.1104
- * Haute-Provence The Parc National du Mercantour and the Vallée des Merveilles are Alpine gems off the beaten path. See p.1113

△ Camargue

The Rhône valley and Provence

Of all the areas of France, Provence is the most irresistible. Geographically it ranges from the snow-capped mountains of the southern Alps to the delta plains of the Camargue, and it boasts the greatest European canyon, the Gorges du Verdon. Fortified towns guard its old borders; countless villages perch defensively on hilltops; and its great cities – Aix-en-Provence and Avignon – are full of cultural glories. The sensual inducements of Provence include warmth, food and wine, and the perfumes of Mediterranean vegetation. Along with its coast – which is covered in the following chapter – it has attracted the rich and famous, the artistic and reclusive, and countless arrivals who have found themselves unable to conceive of life elsewhere.

In appearance, despite the throngs of foreigners and French from other regions, inland Provence remains remarkably unscathed. The history of its earliest known natives, of the Greeks, then Romans, raiding Saracens, schismatic popes, and shifting allegiances to different counts and princes, is still in evidence. Provence's complete integration into France dates only from the nineteenth century and, though the Provençal language is only spoken by a small minority, the accent is distinctive even to a foreign ear. In the east the rhythms of speech become clearly Italian.

Unless you're intending to stay for months, the main problem with Provence is choosing where to go. In the west, along the Rhône valley, are the Roman cities of Orange, Vaison-la-Romaine, Carpentras and Arles, and the papal city of Avignon, with its fantastic summer festival. Aix-en-Provence is the mini-Paris of the region and was home to Cézanne, for whom the Mont Ste-Victoire was an enduring subject; Van Gogh's links are with St-Rémy and Arles. The Gorges du Verdon, the Parc National du Mercantour along the Italian border, Mont Ventoux northeast of Carpentras, and the flamingo-filled lagoons of the Camargue are just a selection of the diverse and stunning landscapes of this region.

Before you reach Provence from the north there are the vineyards of the Rhône valley and, before them, the French centre of gastronomy and second largest city of the country, Lyon. With its choice of restaurants, clubs, culture and all the accoutrements of an affluent and vital Western city, it stands in opulent contrast to the medieval hilltop villages of Provence.

THE RHÔNE VALLEY AND PROVENCE

Geneva

Dijon

Le Puy & Clermont-Ferrand

St-Etienne

Lyon

Annecey

Aix-les-Bains

Chambéry

Pérouges

Lyon St. Exupéry Airport & Gara TGV

Cremieu

Viennas

Givors

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

Condrieu

Chazelles

L'Arbresle

St-Pierre-la-Palud

Courcieux

Mons de St-Martin-en-Heut

Lyonnais

Trézon

Pailionnay

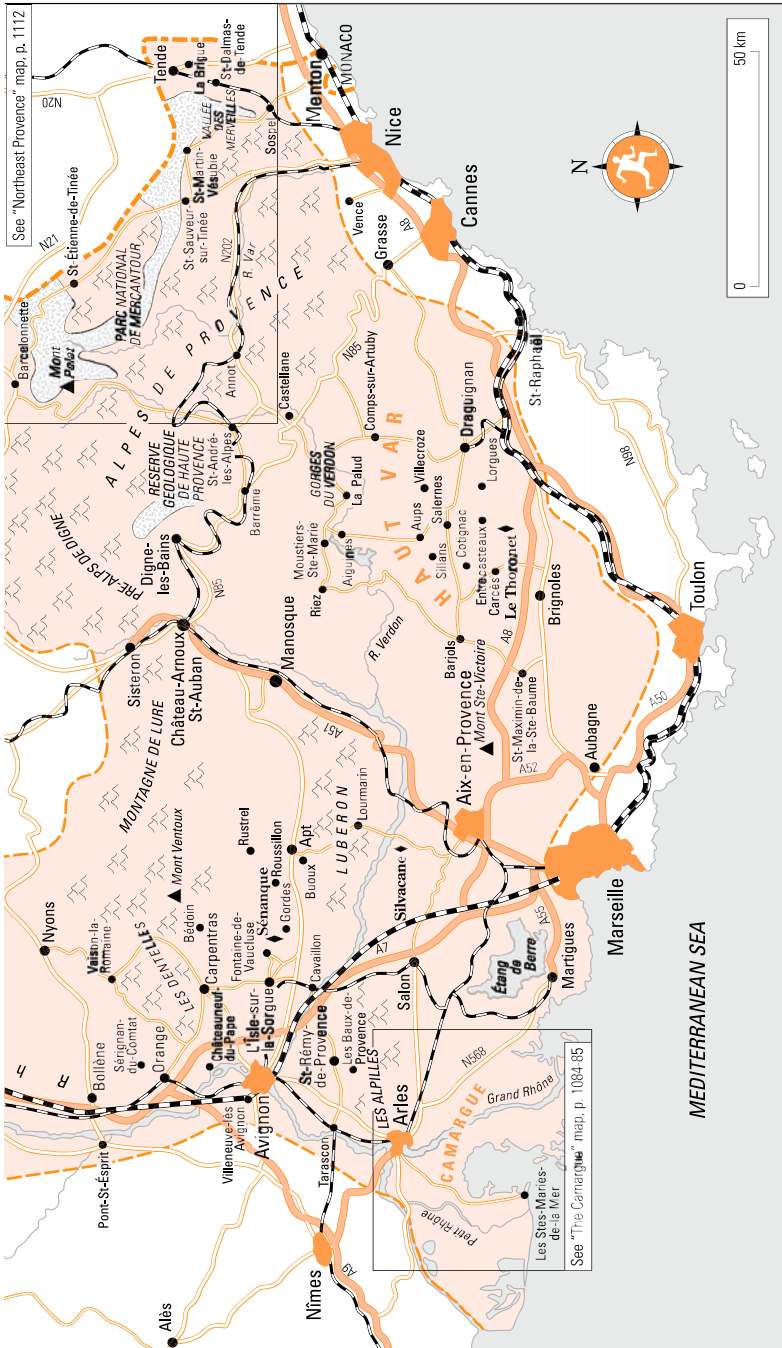

St-Martin-en-Heut

Chazelles

St-Etienne

St-Romain-en-Gal

Ampuis

See "North-east Provence" map, p. 1112

Lyon is renowned as a gastronomic centre, combining southern and northern ingredients. Its rich and hearty food is very meat- and offal-oriented, with sausages of every variety and a fine selection of cheeses. A Lyonnais salad includes bacon and a soft-cooked egg; potatoes also tend to be cooked with egg, cheeses and cream; and meat, fish and cheese are turned into fat, filling quenelles, or dumplings. Patisseries specialize in extremely rich chocolate gâteaux.

Olives were introduced to Provence by the ancient Greeks two and a half thousand years ago and today accompany the traditional Provençal aperitif of pastis; they appear in sauces and salads, on tarts and pizzas, and mixed with capers in a paste called tapenade to spread on bread or biscuits. They are also used in traditional meat stews, like daube Provençale. Olive oil is the starting point for most Provençal dishes; spiced with chillis or Provençal herbs (wild thyme, basil, rosemary and tarragon), it's also poured over pizzas, sandwiches and, of course, used in vinaigrette and mayonnaise with all the varieties of salad.

The ingredient most often mixed with olive oil is the other classic of Provençal cuisine: garlic. Whole markets are dedicated to strings of pale purple garlic. Two of the most famous concoctions of Provence are pistou, a paste of olive oil, garlic and basil, and aioli, the name for both a garlic mayonnaise and the dish in which it's served with salt cod and vegetables.

Vegetables have double or triple seasons in Provence, often beginning while northern France is still in the depths of winter. Ratatouille ingredients – tomatoes, capsicum, aubergines, courgettes and onions – are the favourites, along with asparagus. Courgette flowers, or fleurs de courgettes farcies, stuffed with pistou or tomato sauce, are one of the most exquisite Provençal delicacies.

Sheep, taken up to the mountains in the summer months, provide the staple meat, of which the best is agneau de Sisteron, often roasted with Provençal herbs as a gigot d'agneau aux herbes. But it's fish that features most on traditional menus, with freshwater trout, salt cod, anchovies, sea bream, monkfish, sea bass and whiting all common, along with wonderful seafood: clams, periwinkles, sea urchins, oysters, spider crabs and langoustines piled into spiky sculptural plateaux de fruits de mer.

Cheeses are invariably made from goat's or ewe's milk. Two famous ones are Banon, wrapped in chestnut leaves and marinated in brandy, and the aromatic Pica-don, from the foothills of the Alps.

Sweets of the region include chocolates, notably from Valrhona in Tain l'Hermitage and from Puyricard near Aix, almond sweets called calissons from Aix, candied fruit from Apt and nougat from Montélimar. As for fruit, the melons, white peaches, apricots, figs, cherries and Muscat grapes are unbeatable. Almond trees grow on the plateaux of central Provence, along with lavender, which gives Provençal honey its distinctive flavour.

Some of France's best wine is produced in the Côtes du Rhône vineyards, of which the most celebrated is the Crozes-Hermitage appellation. Once past the nougat town of Montélimar and into Provence, the best wines are to be found in the villages around the Dentelles, notably Gigondas, and at Châteauneuf-du-Pape. To the west are the light, drinkable, but not particularly special wines of the Côtes du Ventoux and the Côtes du Lubéron appellations. Huge quantities of wine are produced in Provence, many of the vineyards planted during World War I in order to supply every French soldier with his ration of a litre a day. With the exception of the Côteaux des Baux around Les Baux, and the Côtes de Provence in the Var département, the best wines of southern Provence come from along the coast.

The Rhône valley

The Rhône valley, the north–south route of ancient armies, medieval traders and modern rail and road, is now as industrialized as the least attractive parts of the north. Though the river is still a means of transport, its waters now also cool the reactors of the Marcoule and Tricastin nuclear power station between Montélimar and Avignon and act as a dumping ground for the heavy industries along its banks. Following the River Rhône holds few attractions, with the exceptions of the scenic stretch of vineyards and fruit orchards between the Roman city of Vienne and the distinctly southern city of Valence. But the big magnet is, of course, the gastronomic paradise of Lyon, with hundreds of sophisticated bars and restaurants.

Lyon and around

LYON is physically the second biggest city in France, a result of its uncontrolled urban sprawl. Viewed at high speed from the Autoroute du Soleil, the impression it gives is of a major confluence of rivers and roads, around which only petrochemical industries thrive. In fact, from the sixteenth century right up until the postwar dominance of metalworks and chemicals, silk was the city's main industry, generating the wealth which left behind a multitude of Renaissance buildings. But what has stamped its character most on Lyon is the commerce and banking that grew up with its industrial expansion. It is this that gives the city its affluent, self-confident air.

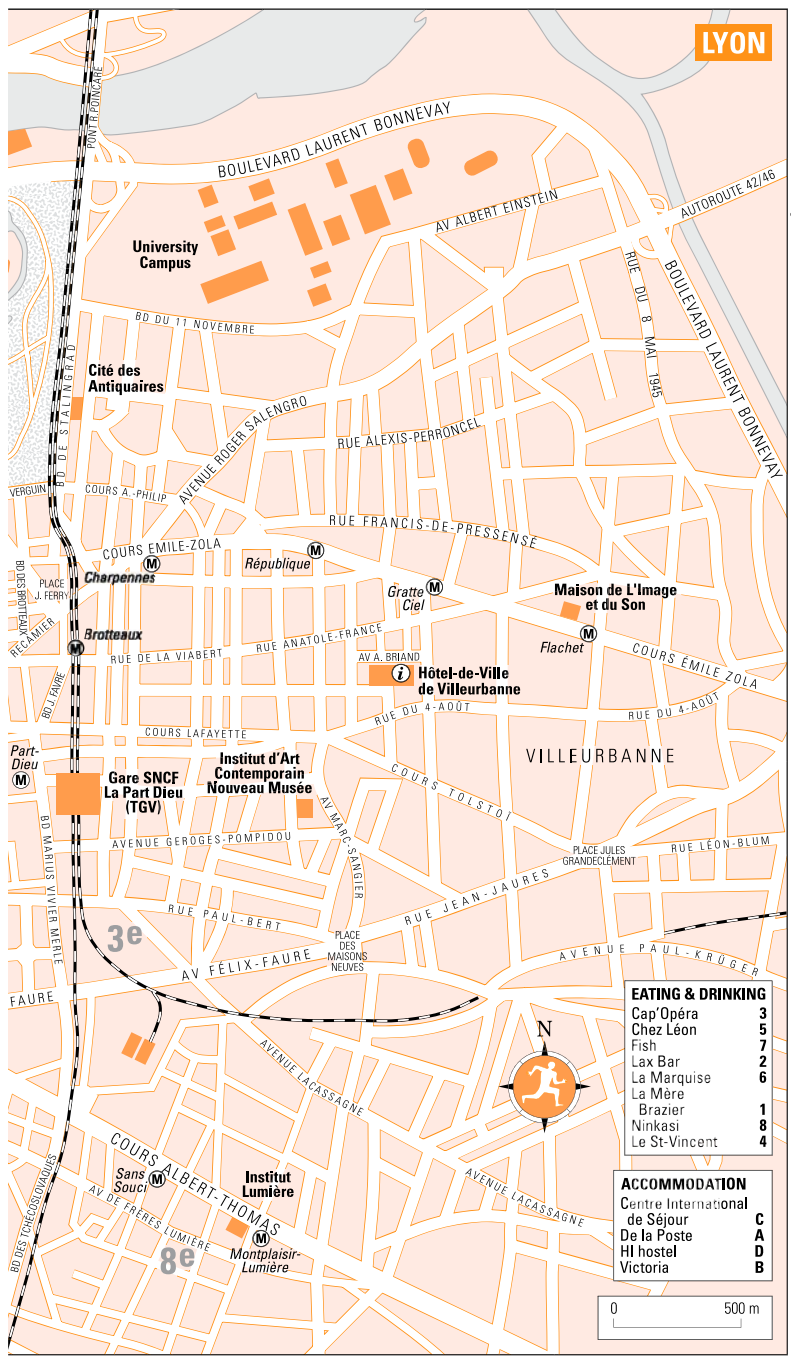

The city is now busy forging a role for itself within a new Europe, with international schools and colleges, the new HQ for Interpol, a recently inaugurated eco-friendly tram system, a second TGV station with links to the north that bypass Paris, and high-tech industrial parks for international companies, making it a modern city par excellence. More so than any other French city, it has embraced the monetarist vision of the European Union and is acting, with some success, as a post-modern city-state within it.

Most French people would find themselves in Lyon for business rather than for recreation: it's a get-up-and-go place, not a lie-back-and-rest one, with an almost Swiss sense of cleanliness, order and efficiency. But as a wonderfully manageable slice of urban France, Lyon certainly has its charms. Foremost among these is gastronomy; there are more restaurants per Gothic and Renaissance square metre of the old town than anywhere else on earth, and the city could form a football team with its superstars of the international chef circuit. While the textile museum is the second famous reason for stopping here, Lyon's nightlife, cinema and theatre (including the famous Lyonnais puppets), its antique markets, music and other cultural festivities might tempt you to stay at least a few days. As if that weren't enough, Lyon's distinctive older quarters and its winding, secret traboules are an urban explorer's paradise.

Lyon is organized into arrondissements, of which there are nine. A visit to the city will necessarily take you into the Presqu'île (1^{er} and 2^e arrondissements), the area between the rivers Saône and Rhône, and you're likely to spend some time

A6 to Macon & Paris
A7 to Clermont-Ferrand & Valence

EATING & DRINKING

Cap'Opéra	3
Chez Léon	5
Fish	7
Lax Bar	2
La Marquise	6
La Mère Brazier	1
Ninkasi	8
Le St-Vincent	4

ACCOMMODATION

Centre International de Séjour	C
De la Poste	A
HI hostel	D
Victoria	B

in Vieux Lyon (5^e) on the west bank of the Saône, as well as the east bank of the Rhône (3^e), including the modern development known as La Part-Dieu.

Arrival, information and city transport

The Lyon-St Exupéry international airport (☎08.26.80.08.26, 🌐www.lyon.aeroport.fr) and the new TGV station are off the Grenoble autoroute, 25km to the southeast of the city, with a 50-minute Satobus bus link to the town centre (every 20min 6am–11.40pm; €8.40). The Paris to Lyon trip is actually quicker by TGV, but it's only from the air that you can appreciate architect Santiago Calatrava's design of a huge bird alighting or taking flight from the station roof.

Central Lyon has two train stations: the Gare de Perrache on the Presqu'île is used mainly for ordinary trains rather than TGVs, and has the gare routière alongside; and La Part-Dieu TGV station is in the 3^e arrondissement to the east of the Presqu'île. Some TGV trains from Paris give the option of getting off at either station, so ask when buying your ticket. Central Lyon is linked to the suburbs by a modern, efficient and driverless métro, as well as trolleybuses and a futuristic new tram system.

There's a Bureau d'Information in the Centre Perrache at the station (Mon–Fri 7.30am–6.30pm, Sat 9am–noon & 1.30–5pm; 🌐www.tcl.fr), where you can pick up a métro, tram, bus and funicular map; or it's just two stops on the métro to place Bellecour, where the central tourist office stands on the southeast corner (mid-April to mid-Oct Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 9.30am–6.30pm; mid-Oct to mid-April Mon–Sat 10am–5.30pm; ☎04.72.77.69.69, 🌐www.lyon-france.com). The bureau des guides, on avenue Adolph-Max in Vieux Lyon, organizes and sells tickets for guided tours, including those in English (☎04.72.77.72.33). Half-day (€8) or day-long (€12) audio tours in English can be picked up at the main office, which also offers occasional English-language guided tours; alternatively, pick up the Lyon Balades leaflets (€0.50) which detail various English-language self-guided tours of the city on foot and by bike, including a rewarding tour of some of the more interesting travaux.

At métro stations or the city transport TCL offices, the cheapest way to buy tickets is in a carnet of ten (€11.90, discounts for students), or there's the Ticket Liberté, valid for 24 hours (€4.30). The ordinary tickets (€1.50) are flat-rate within an hour's duration and limited to a single one-way journey, with changes allowed. The métro runs from 5am to around midnight, though some bus lines close as early as 8pm.

Accommodation

As a result of Lyon's commercial pre-eminence, hotel rooms can be a problem to find, particularly on weekdays. If you don't book ahead, you could end up paying well over the odds for inferior accommodation. Hotels in Perrache (2^e) and Bellecour (2^e) fill up quickly, but you may be luckier around Terreaux (1^{er}). If you're stuck, the tourist office offers a reservation service, though if you use it you'll have to find your room deposit there and then.

If you're on a real budget, stop by the CROUS offices, 59 rue de la Madeleine, 7^e (☎04.72.80.13.00, 🌐www.crous-lyon.fr; M° Jean-Macé), or CRIJ offices, 9 quai des Celestins, 2^e (☎04.72.77.00.66; M° Bellecour), both of whom may be able to fix you up in student lodgings or residences closer to the centre during vacation time.

Hotels

D'Ainay 14 rue des Remparts d'Ainay, 2°
☎ 04.78.42.43.42, ✉ hotel.ainay@wanadoo.fr; M° Ampère Victor-Hugo. Situated in a pleasant, lively quarter, this place is preferable to its many cheap neighbours because of its decent-sized rooms, but it does fill fast. ③

Alexandra 49 rue Victor-Hugo, 2° ☎ 04.78.37.75.79, ☎ 04.72.40.94.34; M° Ampère Victor-Hugo. Well-run old hotel overlooking place Ampère, a lively pedestrian zone. Parking available. ③

 College 5 place St-Paul, 5°
☎ 04.72.10.05.05, ✉ www.college-hotel.com; M° Vieux-Lyon. Stylish three-star boutique hotel in a great Vieux Lyon location. ③

Cour des Loges 2–8 rue du Boeuf, 5°
☎ 04.72.77.44.44, ✉ www.courdesloges.com; M° Vieux-Lyon. Lyon's finest hotel, set in a seventeenth-century former Jesuit college, with a stunning dining area in the glazed atrium. ③

Globe et Cécil 21 rue Gasparin, 2°
☎ 04.78.42.58.95, ✉ www.globeetcecilhotel.com; M° Bellecour. Attractive, central and upmarket place with good service and a touch of originality in the decor. ③

De la Marne 78 rue de la Charité, 2°
☎ 04.78.37.07.46, ✉ hoteldelamarnelyon@wanadoo.fr; M° Perrache. Convenient and pleasant, with cheerful, newly refurbished rooms and smart marble bathrooms. ③

De la Poste 1 rue Victor-Fort, 4° ☎ &
☎ 04.78.28.62.67; M° Croix-Rousse. A clean, acceptable old-fashioned cheapie near place Croix-Rousse. ①

St-Pierre-des-Terreaux 8 rue Paul-Chenavard, 1°
☎ 04.78.28.24.61, ☎ 04.72.00.21.07; M° Hôtel-de-Ville. A convenient if rather charmless establishment in a good location. ③

St-Vincent 9 rue Pareille, 1° ☎ 04.78.27.22.56, ✉ www.hotel-saintvincent.com; M° Hôtel-de-Ville. Atmospheric old hotel near the Saône and the St-Vincent footbridge. Some rooms have exposed beams, stone walls and marble fireplaces. ③

Du Théâtre 10 rue de Savoie, 2°
☎ 04.78.42.33.32, ✉ www.hotel-du-theatre.fr; M° Bellecour. A comfortable hotel with some character, well run by a pleasant young couple. ③

The City

The centre of Lyon is the Presqu'île, or “peninsula”, the tongue of land between the rivers Saône and Rhône, just north of their confluence. Most of it lies within the 2° arrondissement, but it's known by its quartiers, which include Bellecour, around the central square, and Perrache, around the station. At the top end of the Presqu'île, as the Saône veers west, is the 1° arrondissement,

La Tour Rose 22 rue du Boeuf, 5°
☎ 04.78.92.69.10, ✉ www.tour-rose.com; M° Vieux-Lyon. Swirling Lyon silks decorate twelve suites in a fifteenth-century house with garden courtyards. ③

Vaubecour 28 rue Vaubecour, 2°
☎ 04.78.37.44.91, ✉ hotelvaubecour@wanadoo.fr; M° Ampère Victor-Hugo. One block from the Saône, on the second floor of a grand nineteenth-century building. A bit shabby, but friendly and comfortable for the price. ③

Victoria 3 rue Delandine, 2° ☎ 04.78.37.57.61, ✉ www.hotelvictorialyon.com; M° Perrache. A reasonable two-star near the Perrache station. ③

Hostels and campsites

Centre International de Séjour de Lyon 103 bd États-Unis, 8° ☎ 04.37.90.42.42, ✉ www.cis-lyon.com. Not far from the Vénissieux hostel, but a bit more expensive; the advantage is that it's out of earshot of the main ring road. It costs €15.70 for a dorm bed, and doubles are also available. Take bus #32 from Perrache or #36 from Part-Dieu, stop “États-Unis-Beauvillage”. Check-in from 2.30pm. Open 24hr. ①

HI hostel 51 rue Roger-Salengro, Vénissieux
☎ 04.78.76.39.23, ✉ lyon-sud@fuaj.org; M° Gare de Vénissieux. Excellent hostel 4km southeast of the centre, with a full range of facilities. Beds in both doubles and dorms are €12. Take bus #36 from the métro, stop “J Curie – Auberge de Jeunesse”.

HI hostel (Vieux Lyon) 41–45 montée du Chemin Neuf, 5° ☎ 04.78.15.05.50, ✉ lyon@fuaj.org; M° Vieux-Lyon/Minimes. Modern hostel, with great views over Lyon and access to the Internet. Set in a steep part of the old town, the nearest métro station is Vieux-Lyon, but if you want to avoid the climb, get the funicular to Minimes and walk down the montée du Chemin Neuf. Beds are €18.60.

Camping Porte de Lyon Dardilly
☎ 04.78.35.64.55, ✉ www.camping-lyon.com. North along the A6 from Lyon or by bus #89 (stop “Camping International”) from the gare de Vaise. Alternatively #3 from Hôtel de Ville. Pleasant though expensive, with a tourist information bureau. €17.64 for a tent and two people.

Lyon City Card and Discovery Weekend

The Lyon City Card (€18, €28 or €38 for one, two or three days) grants unlimited access to the métro, bus and tramway, nineteen museums (including the Roman ruins in St-Romain-en-Gal), guided city tours and several short boat trips. The card is available from the tourist office and the major TCL (public transit) offices.

The Discovery Weekend (from €120 per person) includes two nights in a two-, three- or four-star hotel, the City Card, and lunch at a local bouchon. The package is available online through the tourist office website.

known as Terreaux, centred on place des Terreaux and the Hôtel de Ville. On the west bank of the Saône is the old town, or Vieux Lyon, at the foot of Fourvière, on which the Romans built their capital of Gaul, Lugdunum. Vieux Lyon is made up of three villages: St-Paul, St-Jean and St-Georges, and forms the eastern end of the 5^e arrondissement. The 9^e lies to its north.

To the north of the Presqu'île is the old silk-weavers' district of La Croix-Rousse, the 4^e arrondissement. Modern Lyon lies east of the Rhône, with the 7^e and 8^e arrondissements to the south, the 3^e arrondissement in the middle, with La Part-Dieu TGV station amidst an assertive cultural and commercial centre, and the 6^e arrondissement, known as Brotteaux, to the north. North of Brotteaux is Lyon's main open space, the Parc de la Tête d'Or. The district of Villeurbanne, home to the university and the Théâtre National Populaire, lies east of the 6^e and the park.

The Presqu'île

The pink gravelly acres of place Bellecour were first laid out in 1617, and today form a focus on the peninsula, with views up to the looming bulk of Notre-Dame-de-Fourvière. The square is vast, dwarfing even the central statue of Louis XIV in the guise of a Roman emperor. Running south, rue Auguste-Comte is full of antique shops selling heavily framed eighteenth-century art works, and rue Victor-Hugo is a pedestrian precinct that continues north of place Bellecour on rue de la République all the way up to the back of the Hôtel de Ville below the area of La Croix-Rousse.

South of place Bellecour on rue de la Charité is Lyon's best museum, the Musée Historique des Tissus (Tues–Sun 10am–5.30pm; €5), housed in the eighteenth-century former town palace of the Duke of Villeroi. It doesn't quite live up to its claim to cover the history of decorative cloth through the ages, but it does have brilliant collections from certain periods, notably third-century Greek-influenced and sixth-century Coptic tapestries, woven silk and painted linen from Egypt. The fragment of woven wool aux poissons ("with fish"; second to third century AD) has an artistry unmatched in European work until at least the eighteenth century. There are silks from Baghdad and carpets from Iran, Turkey, India and China. The stuff produced in Lyon itself reflects the luxurious nature of the silk trade: seventeenth- to nineteenth-century hangings and chair covers, including hangings from Marie-Antoinette's bedroom at Versailles, from Empress Josephine's room at Fontainebleau and from the palaces of Catherine the Great of Russia. Sadly, there's almost nothing from the period of the Revolution, but there are some lovely twentieth-century pieces – including Sonia Delaunay's Tissus Simultanés – and couture creations from Worth to Mariano Fortuny, Paco Rabanne and Christian Lacroix. The Musée des Arts Décoratifs next door (Tues–Sun 10am–noon & 2–5.30pm; same ticket as Musée des Tissus) displays faïence, porcelain, furniture and a couple of eighteenth-century rooms removed from old houses in the Presqu'Île, plus a room-sized nineteenth-century panorama of Lyon and a collection of superb modern silverware by noted architects, including Richard Meier and Zaha Hadid.

To the south, the station area around Perrache is of little interest, but over the Rhône, across the adjacent pont Gallieni, at 14 av Berthelot, is the Centre d'Histoire de la Résistance et de la Déportation (Wed–Sun 9am–5.30pm; €3.80; M° Perrache/Jean-Macé). In addition to a library of books, videos, memoirs and other documents recording experiences of resistance, occupation and deportation to the camps, there's an exhibition space housed over the very cellars and cells in which Klaus Barbie, the Gestapo boss of Lyon, tortured and murdered his victims. Barbie was brought back from Bolivia and tried in Lyon in 1987 for crimes against humanity; the principal "exhibit" is a moving and unsettling 45-minute video (five shows daily; French only) of the trial in which some of his victims recount their terrible ordeal.

To the north of place Bellecour at the top of quai St-Antoine is the quartier Mercière, the old commercial centre of the town, with sixteenth- and seventeenth-century houses lining rue Mercière, and the church of St-Nizier, whose bells used to announce the nightly closing of the city's gates. In the silk-weavers' uprising of 1831 (see box opposite), workers fleeing the soldiers took refuge in the church, only to be massacred. Today, traces of this working-class life are almost gone, edged out by bars, restaurants and designer shops, the latter along rue du Président Edouard-Herriot and the long pedestrian rue de la République in particular. Close to St-Nizier, at 13 rue de la Poulallerie, is the Musée de l'Imprimerie et de la Banque (Wed–Sun 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; €3.80); unfortunately, its collection is unattractively displayed, which is a pity, for Lyon was both a leading publishing and banking centre in Renaissance times.

Further north, the monumental nineteenth-century fountain in front of the even more monumental Hôtel de Ville on place des Terreaux symbolizes rivers straining to reach the ocean. It was designed by Bartholdi, of Statue of Liberty fame, although the rows of watery leaks that sprout up unexpectedly across the rest of the square are a modern addition. Opposite is the large bulk of the Musée des Beaux-Arts (Mon–Thurs, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm; Fri 10.30am–6pm; €6), housed in a former Benedictine abbey and whose collections are second in France only to those in the Louvre. The museum is organized roughly by genre, with nineteenth- and twentieth-century sculpture, represented by Canova, Barye and Rodin's Temptation of St Anthony in the ex-chapel on the ground floor. There's a fine collection of medieval French, Dutch, German and Italian woodcarving on the first floor along with antiquities, coins and objets d'art. The representation of twentieth-century painting was strengthened in 1998 by the donation of Lyon-born actress Jaqueline Delubac's collection, including works by Picasso and Matisse. There are also Braques, a brace of typically domestic Bonnards and a gory Francis Bacon. The nineteenth century is represented by the Impressionists and their forerunners, Corot and Courbet; there are works by the Lyonnais artists Antoine Berjon and Fleury Richard, and from there you can work your way back through Rubens, Zurbarán, El Greco, Tintoretto and a hundred others.

Behind the Hôtel de Ville, on the edge of several linked squares, stands Lyon's opera house (tours Sat at 1pm; €9, book through the tourist office on place Bellecour). Radically redesigned in 1993 by the architect Jean Nouvel, its original Neoclassical elevations are now topped by a huge glass Swiss roll of a roof, and the interior is now entirely black with silver stairways climbing into the darkness.

La Croix-Rousse

La Croix-Rousse is the old silk-weavers' district and spreads up the steep slopes of the hill above the northern end of the Presqu'île. It's still a working-class area, but barely a couple of dozen people operate the modern high-speed computerized looms that are kept in business by the restoration and maintenance of France's palaces and châteaux. You can see an authentic silk worker's atelier at the Soierie Vivante, 21 rue Richan (Tues 2–6.30pm, Wed–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6.30pm, M° Croix-Rousse; €3), while at Passage Thiaffait on rue René-Leynaud one of the original traboules – alleyways and tunnelled passages originally built to provide shelter from the weather for the silk-weavers as they moved their delicate pieces of work from one part of the manufacturing process to another – has been refurbished to provide premises for young couturiers.

The streets running down from boulevard de la Croix-Rousse, as well as many across the river in Vieux Lyon, are intersected by these traboules. Normally hidden by plain doors, they are impossible to distinguish from normal entryways; hence they proved an indispensable escape network for prewar gangsters, wartime Resistance fighters and, more recently, for anarchists, who used them in thwarting police efforts to capture them during the 2005 riots, forcing the authorities to resort to temporary curfews. Try going up past the right of St-Polycarpe on rue René-Leynaud above place Terreaux, then take rue Pouteau. Turn right into rue des Tables Claudiennes, and enter no. 55 emerging opposite 29 rue Imbert-Colomes. Climb the stairs into 14bis, cross three more courtyards, including the spectacular cour des Voraces, and you finally emerge at place Colbert.

Officially the traboules of La Croix-Rousse and Vieux-Lyon are public thoroughfares during daylight hours – one of the tourist office's Lyon Balades guides explores them – but you may find some closed today for security reasons, especially as the area is gradually being gentrified. The long climb up the pedestrianized Montée de la Grande Côte, however, still gives an idea of

The silk strike of 1831

Though the introduction of the Jacquard loom of 1804 made it possible for one person to produce 25cm of silk in a day instead of taking four people four days, silk workers, or canuts – whether masters and apprentices, or especially women and child workers – were badly paid whatever their output. Over the three decades following the introduction of the Jacquard, the price paid for a length of silk fell by over fifty percent. Attempts to regulate the price were ignored by the dealers, even though hundreds of skilled workers were languishing in debtors' jails. On November 21, 1831, the canuts called an all-out strike. As they processed down the Montée de la Grande Côte with their black flags and the slogan "Live working or die fighting", they were shot at and three people died. After a rapid retreat uphill they built barricades, assisted by half the National Guard, who refused to fire cannon at their "comrades of Croix-Rousse". For three days the battle raged on all four banks, the silk workers using sticks, stones and knives to defend themselves, and the bourgeoisie running scared, with only the area between the rivers, place des Terreaux and just north of St-Nizier still under their control. Unfortunately for the canuts, their employers were able to call on outside aid, and 30,000 extra troops arrived to quash the rebellion. Some 600 people were killed or wounded, and in the end the silk industrialists were free to pay whatever pitiful fee they chose, but the uprising was one of the first instances of organized labour taking to the streets during the most revolutionary fifty years of French history.

what the quartier was like in the sixteenth century, when the traboules were first built. Take a look at the pretty place Sathonay at the bottom, where a public garden and a lively local café are overlooked by Croix-Rousse Mairie, and, if you have enough energy left, come down by the rue Joséphin-Soulayr, which looks more like a lane in a country village and will bring you down a long flight of steps to the pont Winston-Churchill.

Vieux Lyon

Reached by one of the three passerelles (footbridges) crossing the Saône from Terreaux and the Presqu'île, Vieux Lyon is made up of the three villages of St-Jean, St-Georges and St-Paul at the base of the hill overlooking the Presqu'île.

South of place St-Paul, the streets of Vieux Lyon, pressed close together beneath the hill of Fourvière, form a backdrop of Renaissance and medieval facades, bright night-time illumination and a swelling chorus of well-dressed Lyonnais in search of supper or a midday splurge. One of the most impressive buildings at the northern end is the sixteenth-century Hôtel Paterin at 4–6 rue Juiverie, a galleried mansion best viewed from the bottom of montée St-Barthélémy, just up from place St-Paul.

A short way south of the Hôtel Paterin, the Musée Historique de Lyon, on the ground floor of a fifteenth-century mansion on place du Petit-Collège, has a good collection of Nevers ceramics, but was closed for major refurbishment at the time of writing (check with tourist office for information). In any case, the Musée de la Marionnette, on the first floor, is a lot more entertaining, and features the eighteenth-century Lyonnais creations, Guignol and Madelon – the French equivalents of Punch and Judy. If you want to see them in action, check out the times of performances at Le Guignol, 2 rue Garrand, by quai de Bondy (Oct–May Wed, Sat & Sun 3pm; €8–13; for tickets and other puppet shows ☎04.78.28.92.57).

If you're traboule-hunting in Vieux Lyon, two of the best can be found on two streets leading south from place du Petit-Collège: the winding passage behind the door at 27 rue de Boeuf, and that at 28 rue St-Jean, which leads to the courtyard of a fifteenth-century palace. The central pedestrianized rue St-Jean ends at the twelfth- to fifteenth-century Cathédrale St-Jean (Mon–Fri 8am–noon & 2–7.30pm; Sat, Sun & holidays 8am–noon & 2–5pm). Though the west facade lacks most of its statuary as a result of various wars and revolutions, it's still impressive, and the thirteenth-century stained glass above the altar and in the rose windows of the transepts is in perfect condition. In the northern transept is a fourteenth-century astronomical clock, its mechanism cloaked by a beautiful Renaissance casing: it's capable of computing moveable feast days (such as Easter) till the year 2019, and most days on the strike of noon, 2pm, 3pm and 4pm, the figures of the Annunciation go through an automated set piece, heralded by the lone bugler at the top of the clock. The cathedral treasury is also worth a look for its religious artefacts, ranging from Byzantine to nineteenth-century (Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; free).

Just beyond the cathedral, opposite avenue Adolphe-Max and pont Bonaparte, is the gare funiculaire and the Vieux Lyon métro, from where you can ascend to the town's Roman remains (direction "St-Just", stop "Minimes"). The antiquities consist of two ruined theatres dug into the hillside (entrance at 6 rue de l'Antiquaille; mid-April to mid-Sept 9am–9pm; mid-Sept to mid-April 9am–7pm; free) – the larger of which was built by Augustus and extended in the second century by Hadrian to seat 10,000 spectators – and an underground museum of Lyonnais life from prehistoric times to 7 AD, the Musée de la Civilisation Gallo-Romaine, 17 rue Cléberg (Tues–Sun: March–Oct 10am–6pm;

Nov–Feb 10am–5pm; €3.80). Here, a unique pre-Roman bronze processional chariot heralds an imaginatively displayed collection. The fragments of a fine bronze engraving of a speech by the Lyon-born Emperor Claudius, as well as the sheer number and splendour of the mosaics here, serve to underline Roman Lyon's importance. Nowadays, the ancient theatres are the focal point for the Nuits de Fourvière music and film festival that takes place annually in June and July (☎ 04.72.32.00.00, 🌐 www.nuitsdefourviere.fr).

From the museum, it's just a moment's walk to the Basilique Notre-Dame de Fourvière, a fussily ornamented wedding cake of a church built, like the Sacré-Coeur in Paris, in the aftermath of the 1871 Commune to emphasize the defeat of the goddess socialists. And like the Sacré-Coeur, its hilltop position has become an almost defining element in the city's skyline. What makes a visit worthwhile is the magnificent view of the city, best appreciated from the top of the Tour de l'Observatoire (Wed–Sun 10.30am–noon & 2–6.30pm; €2), from which you can distinguish the different quarters and see how they have grown and been shaped by the Saône and Rhône over the centuries. The Basilique is also accessible direct from the Vieux Lyon funicular station: if you arrive by this route, it's worth walking down along the montée St-Barthélémy footpath, which winds back to Vieux Lyon through the hanging gardens below the church.

Modern Lyon

On the skyline from Fourvière, you can't miss the gleaming pencil-like skyscraper that belongs to Lyon's homegrown Crédit Lyonnais bank. This is the centrepiece of La Part-Dieu, a business-culture-commerce conglomerate which includes one of the biggest public libraries outside Paris, a mammoth concert hall and a busy shopping centre (M° Part-Dieu). The elegant tower aside, it's all rather lumpen and unfriendly to look at. Penetrate the forbidding exterior of the main market at 102 cours Lafayette, however, and you'll discover a gastronomic wonderland within, with superb seafood, poultry, cheese and charcuterie stalls (Mon–Thurs 7.30am–noon & 3–7pm; Fri & Sat 7.30am–7pm; Sun 7.30am–noon).

For a break from city buildings head north to the Parc de la Tête d'Or (M° to Masséna, then walk up rue Masséna), where there are ponds and rose gardens, botanical gardens, a small zoo and lots of amusements for kids. It's overlooked by the bristling antennae of the international headquarters of Interpol, part of a new Cité Internationale, which also includes luxury apartments and a new Musée d'Art Contemporain, at 81 quai Charles-de-Gaulle (Wed–Sun noon–7pm; 🌐 www.moca-lyon.org; €3.80; Line B to M° Saxe-Gambetta or M° Place Guichard then bus #4, stop “Musée d'Art Contemporain”). The museum owns the largest public collection of installation art in the world, hosts excellent temporary exhibitions and is also one of the homes of the Lyon art biennial. Designed by Renzo Piano, it's a curious-looking structure with a 1930s Neoclassical facade on the park side and a pink concrete cinema tacked onto the riverside. The colour echoes the adjacent Palais des Congrès conference centre, whose front is masked by a glass screen curving up over the roof, reminiscent of Jean Nouvel's Institut du Monde Arabe in Paris. There are some screens, catwalks and companionways: the features that have become part of the currency of architectural language since the Pompidou Centre first shocked the world. But it looks good, if a little artificial and immaculate behind its security barriers. To the east, dividing the park and the university, is boulevard de Stalingrad, where antique-fanciers can browse in the Cité des Antiquaires arcades at no. 117 (Thurs, Sat & Sun 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm; closed Sun afternoon in summer).

In Villeurbanne, not far to the east of Part-Dieu, is the Institut d'Art Contemporain, 11 rue Dr-Dolard (June–Sept Wed 1–8pm, Thurs–Sun 1–7pm; Oct–May Wed–Sun 1–6pm; 🌐 www.i-art-c.org; €4; bus #1, stop “Cité/Nouveau Musée”), where thought-provoking and engaging exhibitions by contemporary artists question the function of art and architecture and their relation to society. It’s also worth looking out for exhibitions at Villeurbanne’s Maison du Livre de l’Image et du Son, to the east on avenue Émile-Zola (Mon 2–7pm, Tues–Fri 11am–7pm, Sat 10am–6pm; M° Flachat), which might feature anything from medieval illuminations to CD-ROMs.

Further south, on the edge of the 8^e arrondissement, is the Institut Lumière, 25 rue du Premier-Film (Tues–Sun 11am–6.30pm; 🌐 www.institut-lumiere.org; €6.50; M° Monplaisir-Lumière). The building was the home of Antoine Lumière, father of Auguste and Louis, who made the first films, and the exhibits feature early magic lanterns and the cameras used by the brothers, along with various art photographs. The Institut also shows several different films nightly; check their website for the schedule.

Right down in the south of the city, in the Gerland quartier (7^e), is a newly developed area with a marina and a park on the Rhône’s east bank, which provides an illusion of nature around the mirrored Institut Pasteur and the thrusting wings and arches of the École Normale Supérieure. Across the bridge from the southern tip of the Presqu’île, just off place Antonin-Perrin, squats the massive Tony Garnier Hall (M° Debourg), a former abbatoir, whose 17,000 cubic metres is completely free of roof-supporting columns. Its walls graced with contemporary murals, it is now the main host to Lyon’s art biennial – a major European show of new art convened here every other year (Sept–Jan in odd-numbered years). On even-numbered years Lyon instead hosts the dance biennial which rocks the city through September with over 160 performances taking place at 23 different venues.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

You’ll find restaurants offering dishes from every region of France and overseas in Lyon. Vieux Lyon is the area with the greatest concentration of eateries, though you’ll find cheaper and less busy ones between place des Jacobins and place Sathonay at the top of the Presqu’île, with a particularly dense and atmospheric concentration in rue Mercière. The possibilities are endless, but on weekends booking ahead is always a good idea.

The bouchon, the traditional Lyonnais eating establishment, is the best place to eat quenelles, sausages, tripe and the like. Its name derives either from bouchon (cork), or bouchonner (to rub down). One popular theory has it that wine bottles were lined up as the evening progressed, and at the end of the night the bill was determined by measuring from the first cork to the last. Another explanation, however, is that inns serving wine would attach small bundles of straw to their signs, indicating that horses could be cared for (bouchonnés) while the coachmen went inside to have a drink.

Lyon is almost as good a place for nightlife and entertainment as it is for eating, with a good range of clubs, cinema, opera, jazz, classical music concerts and theatre. The best places to wander if you are looking for a bar are rue Mercière, the area around place des Terreaux and the Opéra (where most of Lyon’s lesbian and gay scene is also found) and, most particularly, the streets of Vieux Lyon. Make a point of crossing the river by the passerelles; the whole district looks magnificent at night.

For listings, pick up a free copy of the weekly newspaper, Le Petit Bulletin, or the free monthly ...491 from tourist offices and outlets citywide. Alternatively buy a copy of the weekly Lyon Poche, available from newsagents (every Wed; €1), or look online at www.lyonpoche.com.

▲ Lyon bouchon

Restaurants

L'Amphitryon 33 rue St-Jean, 5^e

☎ 04.78.37.23.68; M^o Vieux-Lyon. Usually packed restaurant serving Lyonnais specialities; menus from €15. Service till midnight.

Brasserie Georges 30 cours de Verdun, 2^e

☎ 04.72.56.54.54; M^o Perrache. Vast Art Deco brasserie originally founded in 1836; choucroutes are the speciality. Menus at €19.50, €21.50 & €24.50.

Chabert et Fils 11 rue des Marronniers, 2^e

☎ 04.78.37.01.94; M^o Bellecour. Bouchon offering the ubiquitous quenelle and andouillette (offal sausage) specialities, along with other first-rate dishes. Menus €16.50–33.

Chez Léon Halles de la Part-Dieu, 102 cours Lafayette, 3^e ☎ 04.78.62.30.28; M^o Part-Dieu. Tiny, bustling oyster bar in the market halls. Around €19 for lunch. Closed outside the oyster season, which usually means May–Aug.

Café des Fédérations 8 rue du Major-Martin, 1^{er} ☎ 04.78.28.26.00; M^o Hôtel-de-Ville. Typical bouchon serving the earthiest of Lyonnais specialities (marinated tripe, black pudding and fish quenelles) in an atmosphere to match: there's even sawdust on the floor. Menu at €23.50 for dinner. Closed Sat, Sun & Aug.

Léon de Lyon 1 rue Pléney, 1^{er} ☎ 04.72.10.11.12; M^o Hôtel-de-Ville. Sophisticated and delicious food, with original culinary creations as well as traditional Lyonnais recipes in this upmarket brasserie. Menus from €105, but there's a lunch menu for €57. Closed first three weeks in Aug.

La Mère Brazier 12 rue Royale, 1^{er}

☎ 04.78.28.15.49; M^o Croix-Paquet. A beautiful setting complements the excellent food at this restaurant, still run by Mme Brazier, the granddaughter of the couple who founded it in 1921. Menus at €46 and €55, but you can easily spend more. Closed Sat lunch, Sun, Tues & Aug.

La Meunière 11 rue Neuve, 1^{er} ☎ 04.78.28.62.91; M^o Hôtel-de-Ville. Booking is essential in this excellent bouchon, but it's worth it, with menus of Lyonnais specialities from €15 to €27. Closed Sun, Mon & mid-July to mid-Aug.

Paul Bocuse 40 rue de la Plage, Collonges-au-Mont-d'Or ☎ 04.72.42.90.90. Lyon's most famous restaurant, named after its celebrity chef-owner, is 9km north of the city, on the west bank of the Saône. Traditional French gastronomy is the bill of fare, with bass en croûte or soup with black truffle. From €60 upwards.

Le Petit Gouton 56 rue St-Jean, 5^e

☎ 04.78.37.30.10; M^o Vieux-Lyon. A small but airy and unpretentious bistro in the heart of Vieux Lyon. You can dine inside or on the small street-side terrace from €12.

Le St-Vincent 6 place Fernand-Rey 1^{er}

☎ 04.72.07.70.43; M^o Hôtel-de-Ville. A dozen tables in a quiet arty square shaded by mimosas. Delicious foie gras or veal kidneys in Martini under an awning strung with coloured lights. Lunch €12.50, evening menu €21. Closed Sun.

La Tour Rose 22 rue du Boeuf, 5^e
 ☎04.78.92.69.10; M° Vieux-Lyon. Gastronomic place with concoctions like asparagus with an oyster mousse or salad of lobster and spinach with a creamed truffle sauce. From €55. Closed Sun. Worth peeking at is the actual Tour Rose (the tower of a small Renaissance house) in the courtyard next door at nearby no.16.

Bars and clubs

Café 203 9 rue du Gare, 1^{er}; M° Hôtel-de-Ville. Lively bar taking its name from the classic Peugeot parked out front. Cheap plats du jour all day. Daily 7am–1am, closed Sun lunch.

Albion Public House 12 rue Ste-Catherine, 1^{er}; M° Hôtel-de-Ville. Oldest English-style pub in Lyon with draught beer and a good selection of whiskies. You can play darts, watch Premiership football or surf the Net. Regular live music and theme nights. Daily 5pm–3am; closed end July to early Aug.

Café Comptoir Chez Mimi 68 rue St-Jean, 5^e; M° Vieux-Lyon. Tiny, convivial bistro which looks like it was decorated from a flea market, offering drinks, salads, and omelettes. Simple but good if you can get a seat. Wed–Sat noon–1am & 6.30–11.30pm, Sun noon–9pm.

Eden Rock Café 68 rue Mercière, 2^e; M° Cordeliers. Massive bar, decorated with memorabilia and modern art from the States, with cheap beer and food served until 1am. Live music Wed–Sat with an accent on rock. Tues & Wed noon–1am, Thurs noon–2am, Fri & Sat noon–3am; closed part of Aug.

L'Éspace Gerson 1 place Gerson, 5^e; M° Vieux-Lyon. Cool modern bar with frequent jazz and performance art, plus billiards. €7–15 entry normally. Mon–Sat 8pm–midnight.

Fish opposite 21 quai Augagneur, 3^e; M° Guillotière. One of Lyon's hippest nightclubs, specializing in house. Admission €7–15, prices higher after midnight. Tues–Fri 10pm–5am, in summer from 7pm; Tues student night, Fri theme night.

Theatre, music and film

Look out for stage productions by the Théâtre National Populaire (TNP), 8 place Lazare-Goujon (☎04.78.03.30.00; M° Gratte-Ciel), based across the street from Villeurbanne's town hall. Less radical stuff is shown at the city's gilded Théâtre des Célestins, in place des Célestins, 2^e (☎04.72.77.40.00, www.celestins-lyon.org; M° Bellecour). The opera house, one of the best in France, is on place de la Comédie, 1^{er} (☎04.72.00.45.45, www.opera-lyon.org; M° Hôtel-de-Ville), with cheap tickets sold just before performances begin. For avant-garde, classic and obscure films, usually in their original language, check the listings for the cinemas CNP Terreaux, Bellecour, Fourmi Lafayette, Opéra and Ambiance, as well as the Institut Lumière. Also, look out for the Lyon dance biennial, which brings in hundreds of artists and troupes

Hot Club 26 rue du Lanterne, 1^{er} www.hotclubjazz.com; M° Hôtel-de-Ville. Jazz jam sessions and concerts of all varieties in a vaulted cellar. Tues–Sat 9pm–1am; closed Aug.

La Marquise opposite 20 quai Augagneur, 3^e; M° Guillotière. Old barge with dance club below deck. DJs spin jungle, salsa and house. There is usually no cover unless it's a special guest DJ, in which case you'll pay €6–8. Wed–Sat from anytime between 8 & 11pm onwards.

La Mi Graine 11 place St-Paul, 5^e; M° Vieux-Lyon. Welcoming small café with live music and/or DJs Thurs–Sat. Also serves meals. Open daily 11.30am–3am.

Ninkasi 267 rue Marcel Mérieux, 7^e; M° Gerland. Lyon's own microbrewery, with salads and burgers upstairs, bar, DJs and live music downstairs. Outdoor film screenings Wed in summer. Mon–Thurs 10–1am; Fri & Sat 10–3am; Sun 4pm–midnight.

Paradiso Club 24 rue Pizay, 1^{er}; M° Hôtel-de-Ville. Over-25s disco with regular Chippendales and singles' nights. €13 cover. Daily 10.30pm–dawn.

Lesbian and gay bars and clubs

Cap'Opéra 2 place Louis-Pradel, 1^{er}; M° Hôtel-de-Ville. Trendy, officially "mixed" (but really mostly gay) DJ bar close to the opera house. Mon–Sat 2pm–3am.

Forum Bar 15 rue des Quatre-Chapeaux, 2^e; M° Cordeliers. Convivial men's bar with bearish decor and clientele, tucked in an alley just north of the places des Jacobins and de la République. Mon–Thurs & Sun 5pm–2am, Fri & Sat 5pm–3am.

Lax Bar 2 rue Coysevox, 1^{er}; M° Hôtel-de-Ville. As much a youth club as a bar, with Internet access, pool table and giant video screen. Mixed, but it tends to be gayer later. Open 4pm–3am.

Oblik 26 rue Hippolyte-Flandrin, 1^{er}; M° Hôtel-de-Ville. Relaxed café/bar popular with gay men and lesbians. Regular exhibitions of work by young artists. Tues–Sat 5pm–1am.

from around the world (last three weeks of Sept in even-numbered years; www.biennale-de-lyon.org).

Listings

Bike rental Holiday Bikes, 199 rue Vendome, 3^e ☎ 04.78.60.11.10, www.holiday-bikes.com.

Boat trips Société Naviginter, 13bis quai Rambaud, 2^e ☎ 04.78.42.96.81. Leaving from quai des Célestins, boats run up the Saône or down to the confluence with the Rhône at the Île Barbe (April–June & Sept–Oct Tues–Sun, July & Aug daily; €7). The same company offers lunch and dinner cruises from €37.

Car rental Europcar, 40 rue de la Villette, 3^e
☎ 08.25.00.25.22; Hertz, 40 rue Villette, 3^e
☎ 04.72.33.89.89; Avis, Gare Part-Dieu, 3^e
☎ 04.72.33.37.19. All the above also have offices at the airport and at the Perrache centre.

Consulates Canada, 21 rue Bourgelat, 2^e
☎ 04.72.77.64.07; UK, 24 rue Childebert, 2^e
☎ 04.72.77.81.70; USA, 16 rue République, 2^e
☎ 04.78.38.36.88.

Disabled travellers For information on facilities for the disabled contact Délégation Départementale APF, 73^{ter}, rue Francis de Pressensé, Villeurbanne ☎ 04.72.43.01.01, ☎ 04.78.93.61.99.

Emergencies Samu – emergency medical attention ☎ 15; Police ☎ 17; SOS Médecins ☎ 04.78.83.51.51. Hospitals: Croix-Rousse, (☎ 04.72.07.10.46); Hôpital Edouard-Herriot, place d'Arsonval, 3^e (☎ 04.72.11.69.53). For house calls contact the medical referral centres (☎ 04.72.33.00.33).

Internet Planète Net Phone, 21 rue Romarin, 1^{er} (www.cybercafe-planete-net-phone.com); Mon-Sat 10am–9pm, has plenty of terminals; Raconte Moi de la Terre, 38 rue Thomassin, 2^e (www.raconte-moi.com; Mon–Sat 10am–7.30pm), is cheaper and also serves snacks.

Lesbian and gay info ARIS (Accueil Rencontres Informations Services), 16 rue Polycarpe ☎ 04.78.27.10.10. Gay and lesbian centre organizing various activities and producing a useful scene guide. État d'Esprit, 19 rue Royale ☎ 04.78.27.76.53, is a gay and lesbian bookstore that also holds cultural events. Forum Gai et Lesbien, 17 rue Romarin ☎ 04.78.39.97.72, www.fgllyon.org. Lyon celebrates lesbian and gay pride in mid-June.

Money exchange AOC, 20 rue Gasparin (Mon–Sat 9.30am–6.30pm); AOC Opéra, 3 rue de la République (Mon–Fri 9am–6pm).

Pharmacy Blanchet, 5 place des Cordeliers, 2^e ☎ 04.78.42.12.42. Daily till midnight.

Police The main commissariat is on rue de la Charité, 2^e ☎ 04.78.42.26.56.

Post office PTT, place Antonin-Poncet, Lyon 69002.
Taxis ☎ 04.78.28.23.23 or 04.78.27.31.31.

Around Lyon

Within easy reach of the city, the Monts du Lyonnais to the south and west of Lyon may not reach spectacular heights, but they offer quiet and solitude among steep, forested hills and unassuming villages surrounded by cherry orchards, the region's main source of income. Tourism is low-key, but food and accommodation in the hostels of the mountain villages are rarely a problem for visitors to the area's parks and museums. Bus services from the main gare routière and the western gare de Gorge du Loup (M^o Gorge-du-Loup; 9^e) to the larger villages are reasonably frequent, and to the east of Lyon, the medieval town of Pérouges can easily be reached by train from both stations. The mountains can be visited every Sunday from June until the middle of September by steam train, leaving from L'Arbresle, just west of Lyon (frequent trains from Lyon–Perrache; €9 return); it's a scenic service but not very useful for getting anywhere.

St-Pierre-la-Palud and St-Martin-en-Haut

Fifteen kilometres west of Lyon, the Musée de la Mine at ST-PIERRE-LA-PALUD (March–Nov Sat, Sun & hols 2–6pm; €4.60) is guaranteed to instill admiration for the endurance of the miners who put up with working conditions like those simulated in the reconstructed mine shaft which forms the main exhibit. Going down into the copper sulphate mine shaft while an ex-miner explains its workings in meticulous detail (2hr; in French) is not recommended if you're claustrophobic. Back on the surface, you move on to an exhibition about the former mining village and pit.

Although most of the villages in the Lyonnais mountains have a restaurant or two, finding a place to stay is somewhat more challenging. In ST-MARTIN-EN-HAUT, an hour's bus ride from the gare de Gorge du Loup in Lyon, is the hotel Le Relais des Bergers (☎04.78.48.51.22; 📍), probably the best bet for the area. There's also a tourist office on place de l'Église (Tues–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–noon & 3–6pm; ☎04.78.48.64.32), and a municipal camp-site just outside the village on the D122 (☎04.78.48.62.16; all year).

Pérouges and Crémieu

Twenty-nine kilometres northeast of Lyon on the N84, PÉROUGES is a beautiful village of cobbled alleyways and ancient houses, some of them pleasing ruins. Its charm has not gone unnoticed by the French film industry – historical dramas like The Three Musketeers and Monsieur Vincent were filmed within its fortifications – nor by some of the residents, who have fought long and hard for preservation orders on its most interesting buildings. The result is an immaculate, if perhaps rather stifling, work of conservation.

Local traditional life is also thriving in the hands of a hundred or so workers who still weave locally grown hemp. No particular monument stands out, but the central square, the place du Halle, and its main street, the rue du Prince, have some of the best-preserved French medieval remains. The lime tree on place du Halle is a symbol of liberty, planted in 1792. The place both to stay and eat in Pérouges, if you can afford it, is the Ostellerie du Vieux Pérouges (☎04.74.61.00.88, 🌐www.ostellerie.com; 📍), in a medieval town house fronting the square; its restaurant serves traditional mountain dishes of rabbit and carp, with menus at €44 and €60.

CRÉMIEU, to the south on the D517, is less immediately compelling, despite its local sausages (sabodet), monumental architecture and eight hundred years of history. The town was once an important commercial centre, as signified by the fifteenth-century market buildings on rue du Lt-Col-Bel, the ruined château of the kingdom of Dauphiné and the site of the former mint. With whole streets of handsome fifteenth-, sixteenth- and seventeenth-century houses, it deserves further exploration. Several of the imposing medieval city gates also survive. The artisan boulangerie in a fifteenth-century house opposite the Hôtel de Ville makes a useful stop for picnic provisions.

Vienne and around

Heading south from Lyon on the A7, a twenty-kilometre stretch of oil refineries, steel, chemical and paper works, cement, fertilizer and textile factories, all spewing plumes of grey and orange pollution into the air, may well tempt you to make a bee-line for the lavender fields of Provence. However, a short detour off the autoroute brings you to VIENNE, which, along with St-Romain-en-Gal, across the river, makes for the most interesting stop on the Rhône before Orange.

With their riverside positions, Vienne and St-Romain prospered as Rome's major wine port and entrepôt on the Rhône, and many Roman monuments survive to attest to this past glory. Several important churches recall Vienne's medieval heyday as well: it was a bishop's seat from the fifth century and the

Vienne museum pass

The Théâtre Antique, Église and Cloître de St-André-le-Bas, Musée des Beaux-Arts et d'Archéologie and Église-Musée St-Pierre can be visited on a single ticket (€6), which can be picked up at any of the sites and is valid for 48 hours.

home town of twelfth-century Pope Calixtus II. Today, the compact old quarter is crisscrossed with pedestrian precincts which make for enjoyable menu-browsing around rue des Clercs and place Charles-de-Gaulle. And there's a feeling that despite the distant rumble of the autoroute calling you to sunnier climes, the town has maintained its character and sense of purpose.

The Town

Roman monuments are scattered liberally around the streets of Vienne, and it requires little effort to take in the magnificently restored Temple d'Auguste et de Livie on place du Palais, a perfect, scaled-down version of Nîmes' Maison Carrée, or the bulky remains of the Théâtre de Cybèle, off place de Miremont. The Théâtre Antique, off rue du Cirque at the base of Mont Pipet to the north (April–Aug daily 9.30am–1pm & 2–6pm; Sept & Oct Tues–Sun 9.30am–1pm & 2–6pm; Nov–March Tues–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5pm, Sun 1.30–5.30pm; €2.20, or €6 combined ticket), is more of a haul but it's worth making the trip for the view of the town and river from the very top seats. The theatre is the venue of an international jazz festival for the first two weeks of July, when it pulls in some of the biggest names on the jazz and rock circuit. An audioguide (available in English, from the tourist office; half day €5, day €8) will give you more information on the city's glorious past at each of the main temples and ruins.

The Église-Musée St-Pierre (April–Oct Tues–Sun 9.30am–1pm & 2–6pm; Nov–March Tues–Fri 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5pm, Sat & Sun 2–6pm; €2.20 or €6 combined ticket with other museums) stands on the site of one of France's first cathedrals. Since its origins in the fifth century, the building has suffered much reconstruction and abuse, including a stint as a factory in the nineteenth century, though the monumental portico of the former church is still striking. Today it has something of the atmosphere of an architectural salvage yard, housing substantial but broken chunks of Roman columns, capitals and cornice. Close by is the most prominent – and vaunted – of Vienne's monuments, the Cathédrale St-Maurice (daily 8am–6pm; free), whose unwieldy facade, a combination of Romanesque and Gothic, appears as if its upper half has been dumped on top of a completely alien building. The interior, with its ninety-metre-long vaulted nave, is impressive though, spare and elegant, with some modern stained-glass windows and traces of fifteenth-century frescoes.

The Église (visits by arrangement; enquire at the cloister) and Cloître de St-André-le-Bas (same hours and ticket as St-Pierre) on place du Jeu de Paume, a few streets north of the cathedral, date from the ninth and twelfth centuries. The back tower of the church, on rue de la Table Ronde, is a remarkable monument, studded with tiny carved stone faces, while the cloister, entered through a space where temporary exhibits are held, is a beautiful little Romanesque affair, whose walls are decorated with local tombstones, some dating from the fifth century.

The major museum in Vienne is the Musée des Beaux-Arts et d'Archéologie on place de Miremont (same hours and ticket as St-Pierre), with a preponderance of eighteenth-century French pottery, but also some attractive pieces of third-century Roman silverware. More enlightening is the small textile museum, the Musée de la Draperie (mid-April to mid-Sept Wed–Sun 2–6pm; €2.20), in the Espace St-Germain to the south of the centre off rue Vimaine, which, with the aid of videos, working looms and weavers, illustrates the complete process of cloth-making as it was practised in the city for over two hundred years.

Practicalities

The cours Brillier runs at right angles to the river, with the tourist office at no. 3, near quai Jean-Jaurès (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎04.74.53.80.30, 🌐www.vienne-tourisme.com), and the gare SNCF at the other end. Halfway up the cours, rue Boson leads up to the west front of the cathedral.

If you plan to stay, try the Poste, 47 cours Romestang (☎04.74.85.02.04, 🌐www.hotel-vienne.fr; 📍), between the station and place de Miremont, which has good rooms overlooking the cours. One of the few budget options is the Ibis, by the gare routière in place Camille-Jouffray (☎04.74.78.41.11, 🌐www.ibishotel.com; 📍), just down from the tourist office. The Hotel Central is well located, as the name implies, decent enough but rather gloomy (☎04.74.85.18.38, 🌐www.hotel-central-vienne.com; 📍). If you have your own transport, however, you should stay at the Château des Sept Fontaines, 5km northwest on the N7 at Seyssuel (☎04.74.85.25.70, 🌐www.hotel7fontaines.com; 📍; closed Dec–April), with a large garden and comfortable rooms. There's also an HI hostel on the other side of the park from the tourist office at 11 quai Riondet (☎04.74.53.21.97, ☎04.74.31.98.93; reserve Fri–Sun mid-Sept to mid-May; €9.10 per person).

The old town has a number of promising places to eat, including a good selection of cheapies in rue de la Table Ronde (near St-André-le-Bas), among them L'Estancot at no. 4 (☎04.74.85.12.09; closed Mon & Sun; €17.50) and Au Petit Chez Soi at no. 6 (☎04.74.85.19.77; closed Sun evening & Mon), serving moules-frites for €16. Alternatively, classy and welcoming Le Bec Fin, 7 place St-Maurice (☎04.74.85.76.72; closed Sun & Wed evening & Mon), offers filling menus of Lyonnais dishes at €20.50 and €56. However, if you fancy a splurge, head for the superlative restaurant in the hôtel La Pyramide, 14 bd Fernand-Point (☎04.74.53.01.96; closed Sun & Mon), with menus from €95 to €140; going à la carte will cost you at least €80. For drinking, there are a number of bars in town, including Les 12 Mesures in rue des Clercs, The Celtic House in rue Allmer, and the gay-friendly West Saloon, with live blues at weekends, on rue de la Table Ronde. For Internet access, go to World of Gamers Cybercafé, 16 rue des Clercs (Mon–Fri 11am–8pm, Sat 2pm–midnight).

St-Romain-en-Gal

Facing Vienne across the Rhône, several hectares of Roman ruins constitute the site of ST-ROMAIN-EN-GAL, also the name of the modern town surrounding it. The excavations (still ongoing), just across the road bridge from Vienne, attest to a significant community dating from the first century BC to the third AD, and give a vivid picture of the daily life and domestic architecture of Roman France. You enter through the excellent modern Musée Archéologique de St-Romain-en-Gal (site & museum Tues–Sun: March–Oct 10am–6pm; Nov–Feb 10am–5pm; €3.80), which displays frescoes, superb mosaics and other objects recovered from the site, along with explanatory models. The ruins themselves are clearly laid out, with illuminating reconstructions and informative but not overly technical explanatory plaques in English – ideal for adults and children alike. Be sure to check out the Romans' lavishly decorated marble public toilets, by the entry ramp to the dig.

Between Vienne and Valence

Between Vienne and Valence are some of the oldest, most celebrated vineyards in France: the renowned Côte Rotie, Hermitage and Crozes-Hermitage appellations. If you've got any spare luggage space, it's well worth stopping to pick up a bottle from the local co-op; even their vin ordinaire is superlative and unbelievably cheap, considering its quality. Just south of Ampuis on the west bank, 8km south of Vienne, is the tiny area producing one of the most exquisite French white wines, Condrieu, and close by one of the most exclusive – Château-Grillet – an appellation covering just this single château (by appointment; ☎04.74.59.51.56).

Between St-Vallier and Tain l'Hermitage, the Rhône becomes quite scenic, and after Tain you can see the Alps. In spring you're more likely to be conscious of orchards everywhere rather than vines. Cherries, pears, apples, peaches and apricots, as well as bilberries and strawberries, are cultivated in abundance.

Tain-l'Hermitage and around

TAIN-L'HERMITAGE, accessible from both the N7 and the A7, is unpretentious and uneventful. The only reason to stay here is to drink wine and eat chocolate. You can sample a good selection of the renowned Hermitage and Crozes-Hermitage wines within walking distance of the gare SNCF at the vast Cave de Tain-l'Hermitage, 22 rte de Larnage (daily: 9am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–7pm; ☎04.75.08.91.86), and if your visit happens to fall on the last weekend in February you can try out wines from 78 vineyards in the Foire aux Vins des Côtes du Rhône Septentrionales. The celebrated chocolates in question are made by Valrhona and available at their shop (Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat 9am–6pm) on avenue du Président-Roosevelt (the RN7), past the junction with the RN95 as you're heading south.

The tourist office at place du 8-mai-1945 (Sept–May Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; June–Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 9.30am–noon; ☎04.75.08.06.81, @www.tain-tourisme.com), on the RN7 further north, can provide you with lists of vineyard addresses. If you need to stay, try the inexpensive but rather tired Hôtel de la Gare at 19 av du Dr-Paul-Durand, (☎06.13.48.37.47, ☎04.75.07.11.71; ②), or the smarter Les 2 Côteaux, 18 rue Joseph-Péala, directly across avenue Jean-Jaurès from place Taurobole next to the rather splendid pedestrian suspension bridge (☎04.75.08.33.01, @www.hotel-les-2-coteaux.com; ④). For a cheap meal in Tain try the crêperie La Récré, 8 place Taurobole (€8 upwards), as an alternative to the stuffier establishments on avenue Jean-Jaurès. The town's best restaurant, Jean-Marc Reynaud, 82 av du Président-Roosevelt (☎04.75.07.22.10; Sun evening & Mon à la carte only, closed one week Aug & two weeks Jan), has an excellent value €30 menu, with à la carte upwards of €50.

On the third weekend of September, the different wine-producing villages celebrate their cellars in the Fête des Vendanges. But at any time of the year you can go bottle-hunting along the N86 for some 30km north of Tain along the right bank, following the dégustation signs and then crossing back over between Serrières and Chanas.

Hauterives

HAUTERIVES, 25km northeast of Tain, is a small village with a remarkable creation – a manic, surreal Palais Idéal (daily: Jan & Dec 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–4.30pm; Feb, March, Oct & Nov 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–5.30pm; April–June & Sept 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.30pm; July & Aug 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–7.30pm; www.facteurcheval.com; €5.10) built by a local postman by the name of Ferdinand Cheval (1836–1912). The house is truly bizarre, a bubbling frenzy reminiscent of the modernista architecture of Spain, with features that recall Thai or Indian temples. The eccentric building took thirty years to carve, and Cheval designed an equally bizarre tombstone which can also be seen. Various Surrealists have paid homage to the building and psychoanalysts have given it much thought, but it defies all classification. The palais is a tourist magnet, reached along a lane cluttered with shops hawking assorted gewgaws. The rest of the village, however, is relatively unspoilt. If you want to stay here, you have the choice of the Camping du Château on the edge of town on the N538 (☎04.75.68.80.19, ☎04.75.68.90.94; closed Oct–March) and a hotel, Le Relais (☎04.75.68.81.12, ☎04.75.68.92.42; 📍; closed mid-Jan to Feb), opposite the village church.

Romans-sur-Isère

South of Hauterives and 15km east of the Rhône at Tain is ROMANS-SUR-ISÈRE. It's not the most exciting of towns but it does have a fascinating museum of shoemaking – the industry that has kept Romans going for the last five centuries. The extensive Musée International de la Chaussure is in the former Convent of the Visitation at 2 rue Ste-Marthe (May, June & Sept Tues–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 2.30–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun 2.30–6pm; Oct–April Tues–Sat 10am–5pm, Sun 2.30–6pm; €4.30, or joint ticket with Palais Idéal at Hauterives, see above, €6.80) and also includes a permanent exhibition on the Resistance. Your toes will curl in horror at the extent to which women have been immobilized by their footwear from ancient times to the present on every continent, while at the same time you can't help but admire the craziness of some of the creations. Romans is also a good place to buy shoes, with several factory shops in the town including Charles Jourdan, and a smart outlet centre to the east along avenue Gambetta.

The rather neglected old town has plenty of beautiful old corners to explore, and the region has two gastronomic specialties: a ringed spongy bread flavoured with orange water, known as a pogne, and ravioles, cornflour-based ravioli with an egg, cheesy, buttery filling. You can sample these at La Cassolette, at 16 rue Rebatte in a beautiful old stone house off place Jacquemart (☎04.75.02.55.71; closed Sun, Mon & three weeks from last week in July; menus €13.50 & €36).

There's a tourist office on place Jean-Jaurès (April–Oct Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; Nov–March Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; ☎04.75.02.28.72 www.ville-romans.com), and several hotels, including Des Balmes, northwest of the town centre in the quartier of the same name (☎04.75.02.29.52, www.hotel-desbalmes.com; 📍), with an excellent and inexpensive restaurant (closed Sun eve out of season). Cheaper options include the Magdeleine, 31 av Pierre-Sémard (☎04.75.02.33.53, www.magdeleine-hotel.com 📍; closed Sun eve out of season), and the Cendrillon, 9 place Carnot, across from the train station (☎04.75.02.83.77; 📍). The municipal campsite, Les Chasses (☎04.75.72.35.27; closed Oct–April), is 1km off the N92 northeast of the city, next to the aerodrome.

Festive France

The French celebrate everything, from saints' days to cinema to wine. While summer is the prime festive season, even in winter you'll be able to track down some festival or other. Indeed, the calendar is packed so full of events, it's hard to know which to plump for. Below is a round-up of some of the best, the most famous and the relatively undiscovered. For websites – and further ideas – see Basics, pp.56–58.

▲ Fête de la Musique

Nationwide celebrations

France's independence day, Bastille Day (July 14), is celebrated with firework displays and dances countrywide. On the more formal side, there's a military parade in Paris and the president addresses the nation.

Music-lovers are in for a treat with the Fête de la Musique (June 21), which marks the summer solstice. All manner of musical events take place, including many free concerts, which may be amateur or professional, spontaneous or programmed. And it keeps getting bigger and better each year.

▲ Festival Inter-Celtic, Lorient

Religious and folk festivals

Catholicism is deeply ingrained in rural culture and religious feast days still bring people out in all their finery. Amongst the most famous are the Breton pardons (June–Sept), when processions to commemorate the dead wind through the countryside; the biggest takes place at Sainte-Anne d'Auray in the Morbihan (July 26).

Another annual event with deep historical roots is the great gypsy gathering at Les Stes-Maries-de-la-Mer in the Camargue (May 24 & 25) to honour their patron saint, the mysterious, black-faced Sara-la-Kâli. A jubilant crowd carries her statue from the church to the sea and back, to the sound of pealing bells. It's a unique and exhilarating spectacle.

One folk festival definitely worth attending is the Festival Inter-Celtic

▼ Gypsy gathering, Les Stes-Maries-de-la-Mer

(early Aug), held at Lorient in Brittany. Thousands of musicians, dancers, writers and scholars from around the world – and some 650,000 spectators – gather to celebrate contemporary Celtic music and culture.

Music

Classical music-lovers will be hard pressed to choose from the tremendous variety of festivals on offer, from sacred music to comic opera, almost nonstop throughout the year. In the depths of winter, Nantes hosts La Folle Journée (late Jan), in which dozens of concerts take place over five packed days, with a different theme each year. If you've got the energy, there are also theatre performances, films and conferences. Prices are very affordable.

▼ Jazz in Marciac

▲ Festival des Vieilles Charrues, Carhaix

In July and August jazz fills the air of many French towns and villages. Fans flock to the big-name concerts at Jazz à Vienne (first two weeks of July), but there are plenty of more intimate events, too. Jazz in Marciac (early Aug), for example, set in a little market town in the heart of Gascony, still retains the atmosphere of a local fête.

Intimate is not how you'd describe the Festival des Vieilles Charrues, a pop fest held at Carhaix in Brittany (mid-July). This is one of France's largest annual bashes, attracting over 200,000 revellers to hear the likes of Johnny Hallyday and Madness, Iggy Pop and Charles Trenet play the massive open-air stages. Side events feature local Breton bands and electronic music. Truly eclectic.

Fest-Noz and Fest-Diez

Brittany boasts a particular rich and vibrant cultural calendar, with the most lively events being the hugely popular summer dance festivals, Fest-Noz (held at night) and Fest-Diez (in the daytime). These ancient folk festivals originally celebrated a marriage or the end of the harvest, but today they're just an excuse for partying; thousands of people gather to dance, eat, drink and make merry to the accompaniment of traditional Breton music. It's infectious stuff, played on bagpipes, bombarde (a high-pitched flute), and increasingly nowadays violins and other musical instruments. Dancers follow simple steps, usually linking hands to form a chain or circle – everyone is welcome to join in. Dates of upcoming events are listed on @www.fest-noz.net.

Performance arts

Contemporary performance arts are alive and kicking in France. The highlight is probably Avignon's packed programme of avant-garde theatre, dance and music (July). Directed by a different guest artist each year, and featuring many new productions, it's a veritable showcase for up-and-coming talent, with performances taking place in the Pope's Palace as well as churches, school halls and even a stone quarry.

▲ Dancers outside the Palais des Papes, Avignon

It's also worth catching one of the growing number of street theatre festivals. At Aurillac's four-day festival (mid-Aug), for example, some five hundred companies from around the world come together in a frenzy of creativity. You'll also find contemporary circus – acrobatic theatre rather than performing lions – well represented at the aptly named Festival Furies (early June) at Châlons-en-Campagne. Anarchic, provocative and endlessly entertaining, the Furies kicks off with a performance by the graduation class at Châlons' national school for circus arts.

France's oldest festival

The Chorégies d'Orange opera festival (July–Aug) dates from 1860, and is regarded as the oldest festival in France. The programme originally included Greek and Roman tragedies and contemporary French dramas along with opera, but after 1971 it dropped the extras and has become one of the world's most important lyric festivals, attracting in the past big-name stars such as Luciano Pavarotti and Barbara Hendricks and, more recently, Angela Gheorghiu and Roberto Alagna. The setting makes it even more spectacular: a perfectly preserved Roman theatre complete with its original stage wall – which means almost perfect acoustics. The theatre holds up to 9000 spectators but, with only one or two performances a week during the month-long festival, tickets often sell out months in advance.

Cinema

Everyone's heard of Cannes international film festival (May), of course, but the French passion for cinema is reflected in dozens of smaller events throughout the year.

▼ Cannes Film Festival

There's a festival of animated films at Annecy (June; @www.annecy.org), another devoted to women's film at Créteil (March; @www.filmsdefemmes.com), near Paris, even a festival of detective movies at Cognac (April; @www.festival.cognac.fr). And that's only scratching the surface.

Valence

At an indefinable point along the Rhône, there's an invisible sensual border, and by the time you reach VALENCE, you know you've crossed it. The quality of light is different and the temperature higher, bringing with it the scent of eucalyptus and pine, and the colours and contours suddenly seem worlds apart from the cold lands of Lyon and the north. Valence is the obvious place to celebrate your arrival in the Midi (as the French call the south), with plenty of good bars and restaurants in the old town, though little else.

Arrival, information and accommodation

If you come in on the autoroute, running along the Rhône's left bank, you exit onto avenue Gambetta, with the old town, its ramparts replaced by boulevards, on your left. To the southeast of the old town are the gare routière, the gare SNCF and the tourist office on parvis de la Gare (June–Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–6.30pm, Sun 10am–1pm; Sept–May Mon–Fri 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm, Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–5pm; ☎ 08.92.70.70.99, 🌐 www.tourisme-valence.com). The new TGV station is 10km northeast, along the autoroute to Romans. There are regular shuttles and trains (daily 6.30am–10.50pm; €2.20) which connect the gare TGV with the gare SNCF.

Hotels

Europe 15 av Félix-Faure ☎ 04.75.82.62.65, 📧 hoteleurope.valence@wanadoo.fr.

Has satellite TV and en-suite showers. ④

De Lyon 23 av Pierre-Semard ☎ 04.75.41.44.66,

🌐 www.hotelde lyon.com. A decent two-star with Internet access, which has just been completely redone. White walls and bright colours give it a bit of a chain feel but it's good value and located just opposite the station. ④

Les Négociants 27 av Pierre-Semard

☎ 04.75.44.01.86, 🌐 www.hotel-lesnegociantsvalence.

com. Clean lines, minimalist furniture and probably an orchid on your bedside table. ④

Pic 285 av Victor-Hugo ☎ 04.75.44.15.32,

🌐 www.pic-valence.com. Fifteen beautiful large and luxurious rooms in an old coach house, along with a gastronomic restaurant full of character (see p.1050). ③

Yan's quartier Marinet, rote de Monteleger

☎ 04.75.55.52.52, 🌐 www.yanshotel.com.

Spacious rooms in a stylish modern building with park and pool, southeast of the city on the route de Montéleger. ③

The Town

Valence seems to have found a new lease of life: with the TGV has come new boulevards and parks, facades are being cleaned and restored and hotels and public buildings modernized. The focus of Vieux Valence, the Cathédrale St-Apollinaire (Mon 8am–6.30pm, Tues–Sat 8am–7pm, Sun 11.30am–6.30pm), was consecrated in 1095 by Pope Urban II (who proclaimed the First Crusade), and largely reconstructed in the seventeenth century after a local baron went on the rampage, avenging the execution of three Protestants during the Wars of Religion. More work was carried out later, including the horribly mismatched nineteenth-century tower, but the interior still preserves its original Romanesque grace – especially the columns around the ambulatory.

Between the cathedral and Église de St-Jean at the northern end of Grande-Rue, which has preserved its Romanesque tower and porch capitals, are some of the oldest and narrowest streets of Vieux Valence. They are known as côtes: côte St-Estève just northwest of the cathedral; côte St-Martin off rue du Petit-Paradis; and côte Sylvante off rue du Petit-Paradis' continuation, rue A.-Paré. Diverse characters who would have walked these steep and crooked streets include Rabelais, a student at the university founded here in 1452 and suppressed during the Revolution, and the teenage Napoleon Bonaparte, who began his military training as a cadet at the artillery school.

Though Valence lacks the cohesion of the medieval towns and villages further south, it does have several vestiges of the sixteenth-century city, most notably the Renaissance Maison des Têtes at 57 Grande-Rue. Be sure if you can to look at the ceiling in the passageway here (office hours only), where sculpted roses transform into the cherub-like heads after which the palace is named. Also worth a look is the Maison Dupré-Latour, on rue Pérollerie, which has a superbly sculptured porch and spiral staircase. By contrast the Musée de Valence, near the cathedral on place des Ormeaux (mid-June to Sept Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6.45pm, Sun 2–6.45pm; Oct to mid-June 2–5.45pm; €3), contains a mishmash of unremarkable local art and archeological finds, and frankly is not worth the price of admission. On Sunday a bric-a-brac market fills the streets with stalls selling everything from underwear to oranges.

At sunset, or even better at dawn, Parc Jouvet is definitely the best place to be in the city – a tranquil oasis away from the town's bustle – with a bottle of Cornas or sparkling St-Peray from the vineyards across the water.

Eating and drinking

Le Bistrot des Clercs 48 Grande-Rue
☎04.75.55.55.15. An old-fashioned brasserie with a wide range of dishes and prices. À la carte from €19.

L'Épicerie 18 place Belat ☎04.75.42.74.46. One of the most congenial places to eat, with art hung on the fifteenth-century walls, jazz some nights and imaginative food on menus from €22 to €39. Closed Sat lunch, Sun & Aug.

Maurin Fils 17 av Pierre-Semard. A good bakery for sampling pogne from nearby Romans.

One Two Tea 37 Grande-Rue. Excellent salon de thé.

Père Joseph 9 place des Clercs
☎04.75.42.57.80. Serves excellent traditional food, with a menu at €23.

Pic 285 av Victor-Hugo ☎04.75.44.15.32. The city's top-notch restaurant: Quercy lamb with vegetable confit and tempura of dates, or roast veal with parsley gnocchi, lemon and anchovies are among the delights. Menu €115 (or €59 for a lunch weekday menu). Closed Sun eve & Mon, plus Tues Nov–March & three weeks in Jan.

Café Victor-Hugo 30 av Victor-Hugo
☎04.75.40.18.11. Grand 1920s Parisian-style café with high ceilings and smart waiters. À la carte from €10.

Montélimar

In MONTÉLIMAR, 40km south of Valence, every street proclaims the glory of the nougat that has been made here for centuries and is the town's chief raison d'être. It's a lively enough place with a pleasant vieille ville and a fascinating museum dedicated to miniaturization.

The main street of the old town, rue Pierre-Julien, runs from the one remaining medieval gateway on the nineteenth-century ring of boulevards at place St-Martin, south past the church of Sainte-Croix with its well-populated square, and onto place Marx-Dormoy. At no. 19, opposite the post office, is the Musée de la Miniature (July & Aug daily 10am–6pm; Sept–June Wed–Sun 2–6pm; €4.90), whose tiny exhibits, some so small you have to use a microscope, have been created by leading contemporary artists. There's a grain of rice bearing a portrait of Pushkin and one of his poems, and a table laid with a chess game is no bigger than a five-cent coin.

Leading off rue Pierre-Julien are many medieval lanes with sixteenth- and seventeenth-century town houses, though the facades and old arcades of place du Marché serve chiefly nowadays as a backdrop to parked cars. Above the old town to the east is the impressive Château des Adhémar on rue du Château (April–June & Sept–Oct daily 9.30–11.30am & 2–5.30pm; July & Aug daily 9.30–11.30am & 2–6pm; Nov–March daily except Tues 9.30–11.30am & 2–5.30pm; €3.50). Originally belonging to the family after whom the town (“Mount of the Adhémar”) was named, the castle is mostly fourteenth-century, but also boasts a fine eleventh-century chapel and twelfth-century living-quarters. If you wish to find out more about the town’s famous nougat (the word is a contraction of a phrase meaning “you spoil us”), you can visit the Nougats Gerbe d’Or factory in the Parc d’Activité Fortuneau, south of the centre (daily 8.30am–noon & 2–6pm), where you will be shown around the plant and have a chance to sample (and buy) the end product.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is a short way west of the old town across the Jardin Public, with the tourist office close by on the corner of allée Champs-de-Mars and boulevard Marre-Desmarais (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10.30am–noon & 3–5.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–12.15pm and 2–6.30pm; ☎04.75.01.00.20, 🌐www.montelimar-tourisme.com).

There are plenty of hotels around the boulevards, including the very pleasant Sphinx, in a seventeenth-century town house at 19 bd Marre-Desmarais (☎04.75.01.86.64, 🌐www.sphinx-hotel.fr; 📍; closed mid-Dec to mid-Jan), and Du Printemps, north of the old town at 8 chemin de la Manche (☎04.75.46.03.14, 🌐www.hotel-du-printemps.com; 📍), with a pool and garden. In the old town the Pierre, 7 place des Clercs (☎04.75.01.33.16; 📍), is, despite the unpromising exterior, comfortable and very peaceful, apart from the nearby bell of Sainte-Croix tolling the hours. The campsite, L’Île Blanc (☎04.75.51.20.05, 🌐www.camping-montelimar.com; closed Oct–March), is at Montélimar-Ancône, 5km northwest of the town.

For good traditional food, head for the Relais de l’Empereur, 1 place Max-Dormoy (☎04.75.01.29.00; closed Sun & mid-Nov to mid-Dec; menus from €20). Opposite is the standard café La Bourse dishing out large salads to its packed terrace for around €14; alternatively they offer an extraordinary but good-value €9.20 menu. Montélimar’s prime (and very pleasant) spot for café lounging is outside the old town on the stretch of boulevard between the tourist office and the Théâtre Municipal.

Western Provence

The richest area of Provence, the Côte d’Azur apart, is the west. Most of the large-scale production of fruit, vegetables and wine is based here in the low-lying plains beside the Rhône and the Durance rivers. The only heights are the rocky outbreaks of the Dentelles and the Alpilles, and the narrow east–west ridges of Mont Ventoux, the Luberon and the Mont Ste-Victoire. The two dominant cities of inland Provence, Avignon and Aix, both have rich histories and contemporary fame in their festivals of art; Arles, Orange and Vaison-la-Romaine have impressive Roman remains. Around the Rhône delta, the Camargue is a unique self-contained region, as different from the rest of Provence as it is from anywhere else in France.

Orange and around

ORANGE was the former seat of the counts of Orange, a title created by Charlemagne in the eighth century and passed to the Dutch crown in the sixteenth century. The family's most famous member was Prince William, who ascended the English throne with his consort Mary in the 1688 "Glorious Revolution". Today the town is best known for its spectacular Roman theatre, which hosts the important summer Chorégies music festival. While the rest of Orange is certainly attractive, there's not a lot to detain you once you've visited the theatre and adjacent museum and taken a quick look at the Roman triumphal arch at the northern approach to the town centre. Unfortunately, the victory of Le Pen's Front National in the municipal elections of 1995, and again in 2001, has forced the May strip-cartoon festival, which brought in all kinds of weird and wonderful entertainment, to be abandoned.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The gare SNCF is about 1.5km east of the centre, at the end of avenue Frédéric-Mistral. The nearest bus stop is at the bottom of rue Jean-Reboul, the first left as you walk away from the station. Bus #1, direction "Aygues", takes you to the Théâtre Antique, opposite which there's a seasonal tourist office (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 10am–1pm & 2.15–6pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–1pm & 2.15–8pm), from which it's a short distance on foot to the main tourist office on cours Aristide-Briand (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 9.30am–7pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–7pm, Sun 10am–6pm; Oct–March Mon–Sat 10am–1pm & 2–5pm; ☎04.90.34.70.88, 🌐www.provence-orange.com). The gare routière is close to the centre on boulevard Edouard-Daladier.

14

Of the hotels, good options include small, appealing and good-value Herbier, 8 place aux Herbes (☎04.90.34.09.23, 🌐www.lherbierorange.com; ②); L'Arène, on pretty place de Langes (☎04.90.11.40.40, 🌐www.hotel-arene.fr; ⑥), with spacious rooms and all mod cons; and the very comfortable Le Glacier, 46 cours Aristide-Briand (☎04.90.34.02.01, 🌐www.le-glacier.com; ③). Orange's camp-site, Le Jonquier, rue Alexis-Carrel (☎04.90.34.49.48, 🌐www.campinglejonquier.com; closed Oct–March), to the northwest, is equipped with tennis courts and a pool. The price for two people and a tent is €22.80.

The Town

Days off in Orange circa 55 AD were most entertainingly spent from dawn to dusk watching farce, clownish improvisations, song and dance, and occasionally, for the sake of a visiting dignitary, a bit of Greek tragedy in Latin at the huge Roman theatre (daily: March & Oct 9am–6pm; April, May & Sept 9am–7pm; June–Aug 9am–8pm; Nov–Feb 9am–5pm; €7.70, including audioguide and combined ticket with museum), built into the hill which squats on the south side of the old town. The theatre was as much a way of disseminating Roman culture in the conquered provinces as a place of entertainment, and despite its impressive dimensions was by no means exceptional for a city of Orange's size. Its acoustics allowed a full audience of 9000 to hear every word. The hill of St-Eutrope, into which the seats were built, plus a vast awning strung from the top of the stage wall, protected the spectators from the weather. It is one of the best-preserved examples in existence, with its stage wall still standing 103m across and 36m high, and completely plain like some monstrous prison wall when you see it from outside. The interior, although missing much of its original decoration, has its central, larger-than-life-size statue of Augustus, and niches for lesser statues. Despite Augustus' overbearing swagger, the statue's creators prudently allowed for the head to be changed should the emperor's rule prove less enduring than his marble likeness.

△ Roman theatre, Orange

The best view of the theatre in its entirety is from St-Eutrope hill. You can follow a path up the hill either from the top of cours Aristide-Briand (montée P. de Chalons) or from cours Pourtoules (montée Albert-Lambert) until you are looking directly down onto the stage. The ruins around your feet are those of the short-lived seventeenth-century castle of the princes of Orange. Louis XIV had it destroyed in 1673 and the principality of Orange was officially annexed to France forty years later.

The municipal museum, across the road from the theatre entrance (same hours and ticket as theatre), has documents concerning the Orange dynasty, including a suitably austere portrait of the founder of the Netherlands, William "the Silent". It also has Roman bits and pieces from the theatre and a collection rotated on a yearly basis containing diverse items such as the contents of a seventeenth-century pharmacy and an unlikely selection of works by Frank Brangwyn (1867–1956), the largely forgotten Bruges-born British Arts and Crafts painter whose figurative works adorn the House of Lords in London and the Rockefeller Center in New York.

If you've arrived by road from the north you'll have passed the town's second major Roman monument, the Arc de Triomphe, whose intricate frieze and relief celebrate imperial victories against the Gauls. It was built around 20 BC outside the town walls to recall the victories of the Roman Second Legion. Orange's old town is very small, hemmed in between the theatre and the River Meyne, featuring some pretty fountain-adorned squares and houses with ancient porticoes and courtyards.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

For food, cheap pizzas, pasta and more expensive seafood platters can be had at Chez Daniel, rue Segond-Weber (daily; evenings only Fri–Sun; pizzas from €8), while Le Yaca, 24 place Silvain (☎04.90.34.70.03; closed Tues eve, Wed off season & Nov), gives a generous choice of dishes for €22 in an old vaulted chamber. Kitchens close rather early in Orange, especially on Sundays, but one place that stays open late is the very acceptable Vietnamese-Chinese Saigon, next to the theatre at 20 place Sylvain (☎04.90.34.18.19, menus from around €12). However, the best food you're likely to get in the city is at Le Parvis, 3 cours des Pourtoules (☎04.90.34.82.00; closed Sun evening & Mon), with a weekday lunch menu from €16.50. For drinking, head for place Clemenceau in the centre, where there's the Café de l'Univers, painted in Provençal yellow. On the other side of cours Aristide-Briand, the Café des Thermes, 29 rue des Vieux-Fossés, has pool, a good selection of beers and a youngish clientele. 🍷 Régal Tendance, rue Madeleine-Roch (🌐www.regal-tendance.com) boasts 55 flavours of possibly the most delicious home-made ice cream in all Provence.

Orange's main festival is the Chorégies, a programme of opera, oratorios and orchestral concerts in July – details and tickets from the Bureau des Chorégies, 18 place Silvain (☎04.90.34.24.24, 🌐www.choregies.asso.fr). The theatre is also used throughout the year for jazz, film, folk and rock concerts. Prices range from €4 to €180; details from the Service Culturel de la Ville, 14 place Silvain (☎04.90.51.57.57). Tickets for all events can be bought from FNAC shops in all big French cities, and at the theatre box office in Orange.

Sérignan-du-Comtat

The village of SÉRIGNAN-DU-COMTAT, 8km northeast of Orange (three buses daily from Orange and Avignon), was the final home of Jean-Henri Fabre, a remarkable self-taught scientist, famous for his insect studies, who also composed poetry, wrote songs and painted his specimens with artistic brilliance as well as scientific accuracy. In the 1860s he had to resign from his teaching post at Avignon because parents and priests thought his lectures on the fertilization of flowering plants were licentious, if not downright pornographic. His house – on the N976 towards Orange – which he named the Harmas – contains a jungle-like garden, his study – with his complete classification of the herbs of France – and, on the ground floor, a selection from his extraordinary watercolour series of the fungi of the Vaucluse. The house and garden were re-opened to the public in 2006 after over five years of meticulous renovation (mid-May to Oct Wed–Mon 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm; €5). At the crossroads in the centre of the town there's a statue of Fabre in front of the red-shuttered buildings of the church and mairie.

Châteauneuf-du-Pape

If you're heading down to Avignon, the slower route through CHÂTEAUNEUF-DU-PAPE (1–2 buses daily from Orange) exerts a strong pull. The village takes its name from the summer palace of the Avignon popes, but neither the views down the Rhône valley towards Avignon from the ruins of the fourteenth-century château (freely accessible) nor the medieval streets around place du Portail – the hub of the village – give Châteauneuf its special appeal. Rather it's the wines produced by the local vineyards, warmed at night by the large pebbles that cover the ground and soak up the sun's heat during the day, that are its real attraction. The rich ruby red is one of France's most renowned, but the white, too, is exquisite.

The appellation Châteauneuf-du-Pape does not, alas, come cheap. For the uninitiated, the best place to taste a good selection from the scores of domaines before making an investment is at the boutique La Maison des Vins, at 8 rue du Maréchal-Foch (July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; Sept–June daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm). For a more casual introduction, the Cave Père-Anselme on avenue Bienheureux-Pierre-de-Luxembourg has a Musée du Vin (daily July & Aug 9am–1pm & 2–7pm; Sept–June 9am–noon & 2–6pm; free), plus free tastings of its wines. Otherwise, the tourist office on place du Portail (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9.30am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎ 04.90.83.71.08), or the Fédération des Syndicats de Producteurs, 12 av Louis-Pasteur (☎ 04.90.83.72.21), can provide a complete list of producers, or you can visit an Association de Vignerons, such as Prestige et Tradition at 3 rue de la République (Aug & Sept Mon–Fri 7.30am–noon & 1.30–4pm), who bottle the wine of ten producers.

If your visit coincides with the first weekend of August you'll find free dégustation stalls throughout the village as well as parades, dances, equestrian contests, medieval entertainment and so forth, all to celebrate the reddening of the grapes in the Fête de la Véraison. As well as wine, a good deal of grape liqueur – marc – gets consumed.

Accommodation is confined to four very pleasant but small hotels: La Garbure, 3 rue Joseph-Ducos (☎ 04.90.83.75.08, 🌐 www.la-garbure.com; ⚡); the four-star Hostellerie du Château des Fines Roches, on route d'Avignon (☎ 04.90.83.70.23, 🌐 www.chateaufinesroches.com; ⚡); La Mère Germaine, on avenue Cdt-Lemaître (☎ 04.90.83.54.37, 🌐 www.lameregermaine.com; ⚡); and La Sommellerie, 3km north of the village on route de Roquemaure (☎04.90.83.50.00, 🌐www.hotel-la-sommellerie.com; 🕒, closed Jan to mid-Feb).

You can eat well for around €15 at the brasserie La Mule du Pape, 2 rue de la République (restaurant closed Sun & evenings out of season), or pay a bit more at La Mère Germaine (see p.1055), with its well-crafted Provençal dishes, and much more at La Sommellerie (see above; closed Sun evening & Mon out of season; menus €29–78), where the cook is one of France's master chefs. Everything here is made on the premises, from the bread to the fine desserts, and meat is cooked on an outdoor wood fire.

Vaison-la-Romaine and around

VAISON-LA-ROMAINE lies 27km northeast of Orange and hit the headlines in 1992 when the River Ouvèze, which divides the medieval and eighteenth-century towns, burst its banks, destroying riverside houses, the modern road bridge and an entire industrial quarter. Though the town has recovered remarkably, its character has changed – it seems much more commercialized and less friendly.

It still, however, has the strong attractions of its immaculate medieval haute ville, with a ruined cliff-top castle, a Roman bridge that held out against the floods, a cloistered former cathedral and the exceptional excavated remains of two Roman districts. Just south of Vaison there are sculptures in natural settings to be discovered at the Crestet Centre d'Art.

Arrival, information and accommodation

Buses to and from Carpentras, Orange and Avignon stop at the gare routière on avenue des Choralies near the junction with avenue Victor-Hugo, east of the town centre on the north side of the river. The tourist office is on place du Chanoine-Sautel (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.45pm, Sun 9am–noon; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–5.45pm, Sun 9am–noon; ☎04.90.36.02.11, 🌐www.vaison-la-romaine.com), between the two archaeological sites in the north of the modern town.

There may be few hotels in Vaison but there are a couple of gems, the best being Le Beffroi, a sixteenth-century residence on rue de l'Évêché in the haute ville (☎04.90.36.04.71, 🌐www.le-beffroi.com; 🕒; closed mid-Jan to March); and a little further up the same street there's an exquisite B&B, 🏠 L'Évêché (☎04.90.36.13.46, 🌐www.eveche-vaion.com; 🕒), where you breakfast on a terrace with wonderful views over the river and beyond. Back in the new town, the cool Hotel Burrhus (☎04.90.36.00.11, 🌐www.burrhus.com; 🕒), on noisy place de Montfort, is decorated with an eclectic mix of retro furniture. Fête en Provence, a restaurant in the haute ville also rents out rooms (☎04.90.36.36.43, 🌐www.hotellafete-provence.com; 🕒). For campers, there's the central Camping du Théâtre Romain on chemin du Brusquet, off avenue des Choralies, quartier des Arts (☎04.90.28.78.66, 🌐www.camping-theatre.com; closed mid-Nov to mid-March, €19 for two people and a tent).

The Town

The haute ville lies on the south side of the river, with rue du Pont climbing up towards place des Poids and the fourteenth-century gateway to the town. More steep zigzags take you past the Gothic gate and overhanging portcullis of the belfry and into the heart of this sedately quiet, uncommercialized and rich quartier.

On the north bank from the Pont Romain, a Roman bridge that has been patched up over the years, Grande-Rue leads up to the central streets of rue de la République and cours Henri-Fabre, after which it becomes avenue Général-de-Gaulle. The two excavated Roman residential districts lie to either side of this avenue: Puymin to the east (April & May 9.30am–6pm; June & Sept 9.30am–6pm; July & Aug 9.30am–6.45pm; Oct–March 10am–noon & 2–5pm) and La Villasse to the west (April & May Mon & Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2.30–6pm; Tues 2.30–6pm; June & Sept 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; July & Aug 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6.45pm; Oct–March 10am–noon & 2–5pm). The ticket for both plus Puymin museum and cathedral cloisters costs €7.50.

The Puymin excavations contain the theatre, several mansions and houses, a colonnade known as the portique de Pompée and the museum for all the items discovered. The excavations of La Villasse reveal a street with pavements and gutters with the layout of a row of arcaded shops running parallel, more patrician houses (some with mosaics still intact), a basilica and the baths. The houses require a certain amount of imagination, but the street plan of La Villasse, the colonnade with its statues in every niche, and the theatre, which still seats 7000 people during the July festival, make it easy to visualize a comfortable, well-serviced Roman town.

Most of the detail and decoration of the buildings are displayed in the museum in the Puymin district (same hours as Puymin archeological site). Tiny fragments of painted plaster have been jigsawed together with convincing reconstructions of how whole painted walls would have looked. There are mirrors of silvered bronze, lead water pipes, taps shaped as griffins' feet, dolphin door knobs, weights and measures, plus impressive busts and statues.

Tickets can be bought at the Puymin entrance just by the tourist office or in the cloisters of the former Cathédrale Notre-Dame, west down chemin Couradou, which runs along the south side of La Villasse. The apse of the cathedral is a confusing overlay of sixth-, tenth- and thirteenth-century construction, using pieces quarried from the Roman ruins. The cloisters are fairly typical of early medieval workmanship – pretty enough but not wildly exciting. The only surprising feature is the large inscription visible on the north wall of the cathedral, a convoluted precept for the monks.

Eating and drinking

The restaurant to head for is Le Bateleur, 1 place Théodore-Aubanel, downstream from the Pont Romain on the north bank (☎04.90.36.28.04; closed Mon, Thurs eve, Sat lunch out of season; closed Mon & Sat lunch July–Oct; menus €25 & €35, plats around €20); the lamb stuffed with almonds and the rascasse (scorpion fish) soufflé are highly recommended. Alternatively, La Fontaine at Le Beffroi on rue de l'Évêché in the medieval village (☎04.90.36.04.71; closed Nov–March) offers Provençal dishes in menus at €28–45. You can get crêpes and pizzas in the old town and brasserie fare on place de Montfort, the obvious drinking place to gravitate towards. For a more local atmosphere, try Vasio Bar on cours Taulignan.

Le Crestet and Mont Ventoux

South of Vaison, 3.5km down the Malaucène road, a turning to the right leads to the tiny hilltop village of LE CRESTET from where signs direct you the short distance to the Crestet Centre d'Art (free access), where modern sculptures have been placed, almost hidden, in an expanse of oak and pine woods. Though the Centre itself is now closed, there's a map in the lay-by above it, indicating the position of various artworks it is still possible to view dotted among the woods. Some of the sculptures are formed from the trees themselves, others are startling metal structures such as a mobile and a Meccano cage. MONT VENTOUX, whose outline repeatedly appears upon the horizon from the Rhône and Durance valleys, rises some 20km east of Vaison. White with snow, black with storm-cloud shadow or reflecting myriad shades of blue, the barren pebbles of the uppermost 300m are like a weathervane for all of western Provence. Winds can accelerate to 250km per hour around the meteorological, TV and military masts and dishes on the summit, but if you can stand still for a moment the view in all directions is unbelievable. A road, the D974, climbs all the way to the top, though no buses go there. The road up the northern face from Malucène is wider, straighter, and better surfaced than the southern ascent.

If you want to make the ascent on foot, the best path is from Les Colombets or Les Fébriers, two hamlets off the D974, east of BEDOIN, whose tourist office on the espace M.-L.-Gravier (mid-June to Sept Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; Oct to mid-June Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎ 04.90.65.63.95) can give details of routes (including a once a week night-time ascent in July & Aug), plus addresses of campsites and gîtes ruraux. It also sells a guide to eleven walks on Mont Ventoux for €5.

Mont Ventoux is one of the challenges of the Tour de France, hence its appeal in summer for committed cyclists. Within sight of the stony summit is a memorial to the British cyclist Tommy Simpson, who died here from heart failure on one of the hottest days ever recorded in the race; according to race folklore his last words were “Put me back on the bloody bike.”

The Dentelles and around

The Dentelles, a row of jagged limestone pinnacles, run across an arid, wind-swept and near-deserted upland area, the Massif Montmirail-St-Amand, just south of Vaison-la-Romaine. Their name refers to lace – the limestone protrusions were thought to resemble the contorted pins on a lace-making board – though the word's alternative connection with teeth (dents means “teeth”) is equally appropriate.

The area is best known for its wines. On the western and southern slopes lie the wine-producing villages of Gigondas, Beaumes-de-Venise, Sablet, Séguret, Vacqueyras and, across the River Ouvèze, Rasteau. Each one carries the distinction of having its own individual appellation contrôlée within the Côtes du Rhône or Côtes du Rhône Villages areas: in other words, their wines are exceptional. In addition, some of the villages are alluringly picturesque, with Séguret super-conscious of its Provençal beauty.

The most reputed red wine in the Dentelles is made at Gigondas – it's strong with an aftertaste of spice and nuts. You can taste the produce from forty different domaines at the Caveau du Gigondas on place de la Mairie in the village (daily 10am–noon & 2–6.30pm). The most distinctive wine, and elixir for those who like it sweet, is the pale amber-coloured Beaumes-de-Venise muscat which you can buy from the Cave des Vignerons (Mon–Sat 8.30am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm) on the D7 just outside Beaumes.

Besides dégustation and bottle-buying, you can go for long walks in the Dentelles, stumbling upon mysterious ruins or photogenic panoramas of Mont

Ventoux and the Rhône valley. The pinnacles are favourite scaling faces for apprentice rock-climbers – though their wind-eroded patterns can be appreciated just as well without risking your neck on an ascent. Information on walking and climbing is available from Gigondas' tourist office on place du Portail (June–Sept Mon–Fri 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm; Oct–May Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 2–5pm; ☎04.90.65.85.46), which also sells a local footpath map for €2.50.

Although it's possible to get to the villages by public transport from Vaison or Carpentras, your own vehicle is definitely an advantage. Hotel possibilities include, in Beaumes, the old-fashioned and quiet Auberge St-Roch, on avenue Jules-Ferry (☎04.90.65.08.21, demi-pension; 🍷; restaurant closed Wed out of season), and Le Relais des Dentelles, past the old village and over the river (☎04.90.62.95.27; 🍷; restaurant closed Sun evening, Mon & Jan). Gigondas has Les Florets, 2km from the village along the route des Dentelles (☎04.90.65.85.01, 🌐www.hotel-lesflorets.com; 🍷, half-board obligatory in season), and the more upmarket Hôtel Montmirail, which you reach via Vacqueyras (☎04.90.65.84.01, 🌐www.hotelmontmirail.com; 🍷; closed mid-Oct to mid-March). There are also campsites in Sablet (☎04.90.46.82.55), Beaumes (☎04.90.62.95.07) and Vacqueyras (☎04.90.65.84.24, 📞04.90.65.83.28).

Besides the restaurants of the hotels mentioned above, places to stop to eat or drink are few and far between once you leave the villages. In Séguret Le Bastide Bleue, route de Sablet (☎04.90.46.83.43; closed Tues & Wed out of season, plus Jan & Feb; menus €21–26), is renowned for its use of fresh local ingredients. In Gigondas, L'Oustalet, place Gabriel-Andéol (☎04.90.65.85.30; closed Jan to mid-Feb plus Mon out of season; menus €27 and €42), has a pleasant shaded terrace and serves hearty home-style food; cheaper eats can be had at the Café de la Poste on rue Principale.

Carpentras

With a population of around 30,000, CARPENTRAS is a substantial city for this part of the world. It's also a very old one, its known history commencing in 5 BC as the capital of a Celtic tribe. The Greeks who founded Marseille came to Carpentras to buy honey, wheat, goats and skins, and the Romans had a base here. For a brief period in the fourteenth century, it became the papal headquarters and gave protection to Jews expelled from France.

Carpentras is currently in the throes of gradual refurbishment, so that immaculately restored squares and fountains alternate with gently decayed streets of seventeenth- and eighteenth-century houses, some forming arcades over the pavement. The local history museum – the Musée Comtadin on boulevard Albin-Durand (Wed–Sun: April–Oct 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Nov–March 10am–noon & 2–4pm; €2) – is dark and dour. The erotic fantasies of a seventeenth-century cardinal frescoed by Nicolas Mignard in the Palais de Justice, formerly the episcopal palace, were effaced by a later incumbent. The palais is attached to the dull Cathédrale St-Siffrein, behind which, almost hidden in the corner, stands a Roman arch inscribed with scenes of prisoners in chains. Fifteen hundred years after its erection, Jews – coerced, bribed or otherwise persuaded – entered the cathedral in chains to be unshackled as converted Christians. The door they passed through, the Porte Juif, is on the southern side and bears strange symbolism of rats encircling and devouring a globe. The synagogue (Mon–Thurs 10am–noon & 3–5pm, Fri 10am–noon & 3–4pm; closed Jewish feast days; free), near the Hôtel de Ville, is a seventeenth-century construction on fourteenth-century foundations, making it the oldest surviving place of Jewish worship in France.

Carpentras cheers up every Friday for the market, which from the end of November to early March specializes in truffles, and during festival time in the second half of July. It also makes a useful base for excursions into the Dentelles, Mont Ventoux and the towns and villages south towards Apt.

Buses (trains are freight only) arrive either on avenue Victor-Hugo or place Terradou, a short walk away from place Aristide-Briand, where the tourist office is located (June–Sept Mon–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–7pm, Sun 9.30am–1pm; ☎04.90.63.00.78, 🌐www.carpentras-ventoux.com). Central accommodation options include the basic but adequate Univers, 110 place A.–Briand (☎04.90.63.00.05, 🌐www.hotel-univers.com; 📍). For something grander with greater character, try Le Fiacre, 153 rue Vigne (☎04.90.63.03.15, 🌐www.hotel-du-fiacre.com; 📍), an eighteenth-century town house with lovely architectural features in many of the rooms, and a garden. A little way out of town, the Safari Hotel, 1 av J.-H.-Fabre (☎04.90.63.35.35, 🌐www.safarihotel.fr; 📍), is a bit characterless but has a pool and Internet connection. At the local campsite, Lou Comtadou, rhododendrons surround hard pitches, closed from November to March (☎04.90.67.03.16).

The Friday market and seasonality influence the restaurant menus. In winter, sample the local truffles at Franck Restaurant, 30 place de l’Horloge (☎04.90.60.75.00; closed Tues & Wed), which has modern gastronomic cuisine on a pretty terrace with menus from €26.50 and a €20 lunch. More traditional bistro fare is to be had at Chez Serge, 90 rue Cottier (☎04.90.63.21.24; closed Sun; menu € 26.50 and a plat du jour from €10). Aux Petites Ya-ya, 41 rue Galonne (☎04.90.63.24.11; closed Sun & Mon) offers home cooking on a small square with menus at €15–25. Once the sun goes down in Carpentras, the best place for café or bar crawling is place Aristide-Briand, where Le Club at no. 106 and the nearby Pub Peter Polo maintain a semblance of nightlife.

Avignon

AVIGNON, great city of the popes, and for centuries one of the major artistic centres of France, can be dauntingly crowded in summer and stiflingly hot. Away from the main tourist drag the old town is often remarkably unkempt and somewhat intimidating, with a laissez-faire approach to rubbish collection at odds with its UNESCO World Heritage status and an intrusive graffiti problem that leaves even the prettiest facades disfigured. But it’s worth braving for its spectacular monuments and museums, countless impressively decorated buildings, ancient churches, chapels and convents. During the Festival d’Avignon in July and the beginning of August, it is the place to be.

Central Avignon is still enclosed by its medieval walls, built in 1403 by the antipope Benedict XIII, the last of nine popes who based themselves here throughout most of the fourteenth century. The first pope to come to Avignon was Clement V in 1309, who was invited over by the astute King Philippe le Bel (“the Good”), ostensibly to protect Clement from impending anarchy in Rome. In reality, Philip saw a chance to extend his power over the Church by keeping the pope in the safety of Provence, during what came to be known as the Church’s “Babylonian captivity”. Clement’s successors were a varied group, from the villainous John XXII (of Umberto Eco’s Name of the Rose fame), to the dedicated Urban V, and later Gregory XI, who managed to re-establish the

The Festival of Avignon

Unlike most provincial festivals of international renown, the Festival d'Avignon is dominated by theatre rather than classical music, though there's also plenty of that, as well as lectures, exhibitions and dance. It uses the city's great buildings as backdrops to performances, and takes place every year for three weeks from the second week in July. During festival time everything stays open late and everything gets booked up; there can be up to 200,000 visitors, and getting around or doing anything normal becomes virtually impossible.

Originally created in 1947 by actor-director Jean Vilar, over the years programmes have included theatrical interpretations as diverse as Molière, Euripides and Chekhov, performed by companies from across Europe. While big-name directors (Jacques Lasalle, Alain Françon) draw the largest crowds to the main venue, the Cour d'Honneur in the Palais des Papes, there's more than enough variety in all the smaller productions, dance performances and lectures to keep everyone sufficiently entertained. In addition to the introduction of new works staged by lesser-known directors and theatre troupes, each year the festival also spotlights a different culture, which in the past have ranged from showings of the Hindi epic Ramayana to the debut of THEOREM (Theatres from the East and from the West), a European cultural venture designed to bring together the two halves of Europe on the stage.

The main festival programme, with details of how to book, is available from the second week in May from the Bureau du Festival d'Avignon, 20 rue du portail Boquier, 84000 Avignon (@www.festival-avignon.com), or from the tourist office. Ticket prices are reasonable (€5–36) and go on sale from the second week in June. As well as phone sales (9am–5pm; ☎04.90.14.14.14), they can be bought from FNAC shops in all major French cities and via the FNAC website. During the festival, tickets are available until three hours before the performance. The Festival Off programme is available from mid-May from Avignon Public Off, 45 cours Jean-Jaurès (☎04.90.25.24.30, @www.avignon-off.org). Ticket prices range from €10 to €19 and a Carte Public Adhérent for €10 gives you thirty percent off all shows.

papacy in Rome in 1378. However, this was not the end of the papacy here – after Gregory's death in Rome, dissident local cardinals elected their own pope in Avignon, provoking the Western Schism: a ruthless struggle for the control of the Church's wealth, which lasted until the pious Benedict fled Avignon for self-exile near Valencia in 1409.

As home to one of the richest courts in Europe, fourteenth-century Avignon attracted hordes of princes, dignitaries, poets and raiders, who arrived to beg from, rob, extort money from and entertain the popes. According to Petrarch, the overcrowded, plague-ridden papal entourage was “a sewer where all the filth of the universe has gathered”. Burgeoning from within its low battlements, the town must have been a colourful, frenetic sight.

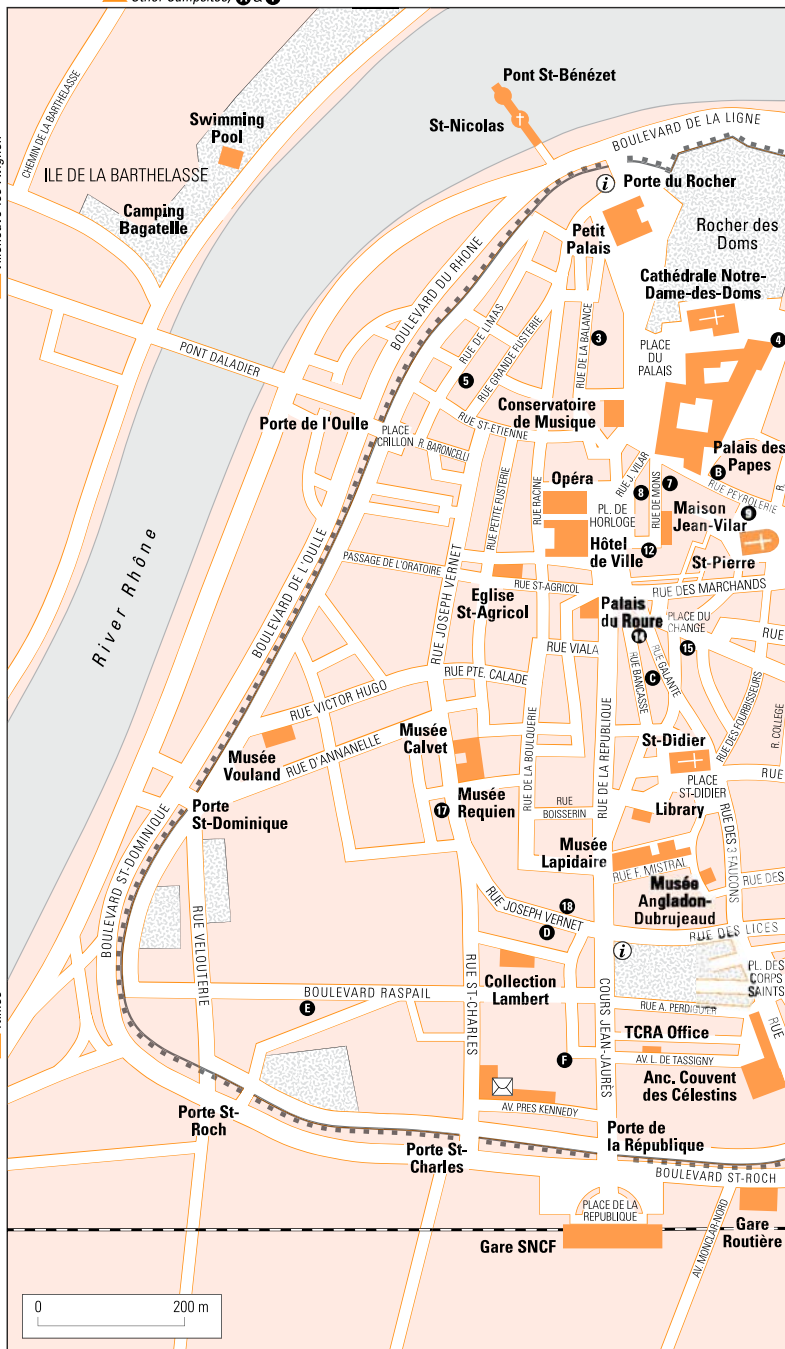

Arrival, information and accommodation

Both the gare SNCF on boulevard St-Roch and the adjacent gare routière (☎04.90.82.07.35) are close to Porte de la République, on the south side of the old city. In addition to the main gare, there's a new TGV station, which has cut travel to Paris down to two and a half hours, near the hospital 2km south of the city centre. Regular shuttles connect the TGV station with Avignon Centre (daily 6.14am–11.11pm; €1.10); passengers are picked up or dropped off next to the post office, a short walk from the main tourist office. The city's main local bus information centre can be found at 1 av de Lattre de Tassigny

Other Campsites, A & T

Willemeuve-lès-Avignon

Nîmes

14

THE RHÔNE VALLEY AND PROVENCE

1062

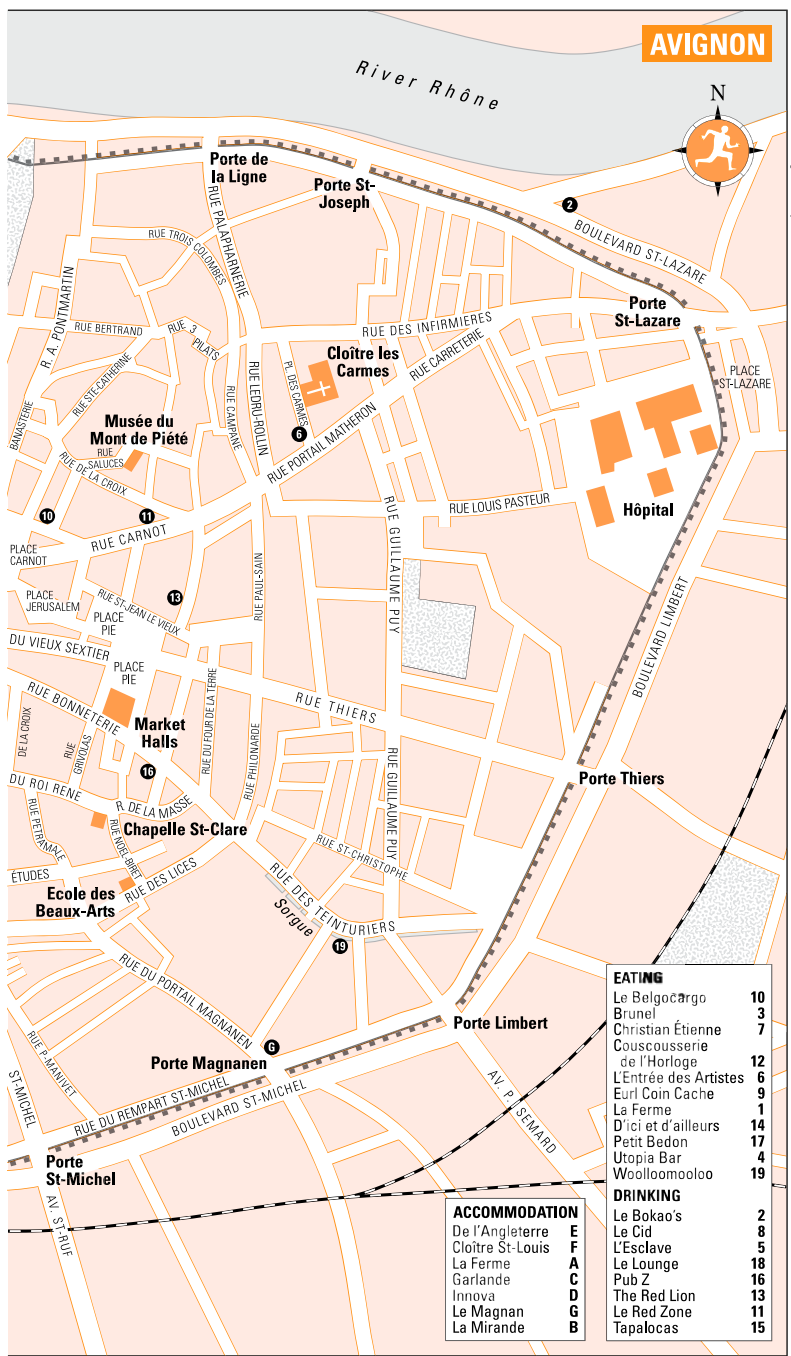

TGV Station

River Rhône

Orange & Carpentras

APT

EATING
Le Belgargo	10
Brunel	3
Christian Étienne	7
Couscousserie de l'Horloge	12
L'Entrée des Artistes	6
Eurl Coin Cache	9
La Ferme	1
D'ici et d'ailleurs	14
Petit Bedon	17
Utopia Bar	4
Woolloomooloo	19
DRINKING
Le Bokao's	2
Le Cid	8
L'Esclave	5
Le Lounge	18
Pub Z	16
The Red Lion	13
Le Red Zone	11
Tapalocas	15
ACCOMMODATION
De l'Angleterre	E
Cloître St-Louis	F
La Ferme	A
Garlande	C
Innova	D
Le Magnan	G
La Mirande	B

(stops “Poste”, “Cité Administrative”, “Gare Routière” and “Gare” are all within a five-minute walk). From Cité Administrative all buses go to place de l’Horloge. Tickets may be bought from drivers and at TCRA (Transports en Commun de la Région d’Avignon; www.tcra.fr) kiosks throughout town (€1.10 each; €9.40 for a book of 10). Driving into Avignon involves negotiating a nightmare of junctions and one-way roads. The best parking option is the free, guarded car park on the Île de Piot, between Avignon and Villeneuve; a free shuttle runs every 10min (July–Aug 7 daily 7am–2am, Aug 8–15 daily 7am–8pm; Aug 15–June 30 Mon–Fri 7am–8pm & Sat 1–8pm) between the car park and Porte de l’Oulle; otherwise parking just inside the city wall is €0.20 for 45min.

Cours Jean-Jaurès runs into the old city from the Porte de la République, with the main tourist office a little way up on the right at no. 41 (April–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, till 7pm in July, Sun 10am–5pm; Nov–March Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 9am–5pm, Sun 10am–noon; T 04.32.74.32.74, www.avignon-tourisme.com).

Even outside festival time, finding a room in Avignon can be a problem: cheap hotels fill fast and it’s never a bad idea to book in advance. It’s worth remembering too that Villeneuve-lès-Avignon is only just across the river and may have rooms when its larger neighbour is full. Between the two, the Île de la Barthelasse is an idyllic spot for camping, and you may find the odd farmhouse advertising rooms.

Hotels

De l’Angleterre 29 bd Raspail T 04.90.86.34.31, www.hoteldangleterre.fr. Located in the south-west corner of the old city, this is an old and traditional hotel with some very reasonably priced rooms, well away from night-time noise. 4

Cloître St-Louis 20 rue de Portail-Boquier T 04.90.27.55.55, www.cloitre-saint-louis.com. A large but personable and good-value hotel, with elegant modern decor in the seventeenth-century setting of a former Jesuit school. Air-conditioned. 8

La Ferme chemin du Bois, Île de la Barthelasse T 04.90.82.57.53, www.hotel-laferme.com. A sixteenth-century farm on the island in the Rhône (signposted right off Pont Daladier as you cross over from Avignon), with well-equipped and pleasant rooms and greenery all around. Closed Nov–March. 5

 Garlande 20 rue Galante T 04.90.85.08.85 www.hoteldegarlande.com. Delightful place right in the centre of the city on a narrow street. Well known, so book in advance. 7

Innova 100 rue Joseph-Vernet T 04.90.82.54.10, hotel.innova@numericable.fr. A small, friendly hotel in the centre of town that’s well worth booking in advance. 3

Le Magnan 63 rue Portail-Magnanen T 04.90.86.36.51, www.hotel-magnan.com. Quiet hotel just inside the walls by Porte Magnanen a short way east from the station, and with a very pleasant shaded garden. 5

La Mirande 4 place de La Mirande T 04.90.14.20.20, www.la-mirande.fr. The most luxurious hotel in Avignon is located in a grand historic town house facing a cobbled square in the shadow of the Palais des Papes. Sumptuous individual rooms surround a central courtyard garden. 9

Campsites

Camping Bagatelle Île de la Barthelasse T 04.90.86.30.39, www.campingbagatelle.fr. Three-star campsite, with laundry facilities, a shop and café; the closest to the city centre. Bus #20 “Bagatelle” stop. Open all year. €17.12 for two people and a tent. Also has dormitory accommodation (€11–12).

Camping municipal du Pont d’Avignon Île de la Barthelasse T 04.90.80.63.50, www.camping-avignon.com. Four-star site, about 3km from the centre, overlooking Pont St-Bénézet. Bus #20 to stop “Bénézet”. Closed Nov to late March. €21 for two people and a tent.

The City

Avignon’s low walls still form a complete loop around the city. Despite their menacing crenellations, they were never a formidable defence, even when sections were girded by a now-vanished moat. Nevertheless with the gates and

Avignon Passion passports

The tourist offices in Avignon and Villeneuve-lès-Avignon distribute free Avignon Passion passports. After paying the full admission price for the first museum you visit, you and your family receive discounts of 20–50 percent on the entrance fees of all subsequent museums in Avignon. The pass also gives you discounts on tourist transport (such as riverboats and bus tours), and is valid for 15 days after its first use.

towers all restored, the old ramparts still give a sense of cohesion and unity to the old town, dramatically marking it off from the formless sprawl of the modern city beyond.

Rue de la République, the extension of cours Jean-Jaurès and the main axis of the old town, ends at place de l'Horloge, the city's main square. Beyond that is place du Palais, with the city's most imposing monument, the Palais des Papes, the Rocher des Doms park and the Porte du Rocher, overlooking the Rhône by the pont d'Avignon, or pont St-Bénézet as it's officially known.

The Palais des Papes and around

Rising high above the east side of place du Palais is the Palais des Papes (daily: mid-March to Oct 9am–7pm; Nov to mid-March 9.30am–5.45pm; last ticket 1hr before closing; €9.50, or €11.50 for palace and the Pont (€7.50 with the Avignon Passion passport, see box above); ticket includes an audioguide; guided tours on request). With its massive stone vaults, battlements and sluices for pouring hot oil on attackers, the palace was built primarily as a fortress, though the two pointed towers which hover above its gate are incongruously graceful. Close up it is simply too monstrous to take in all at once; cross to the northwestern side of the place du Palais as far as you can go to take in the wide-angle view, or follow rue Peyrollerie, rue Banasterie and the Escaliers Ste-Anne around the less familiar south and east sides for tantalizing, dramatic close-ups of the massive walls, the humble dimensions of the surrounding houses only adding to the impression of vastness. Inside the palace, so little remains of the original decoration and furnishings that you can be deceived into thinking that all the popes and their retinues were as pious and austere as the last official occupant, Benedict XIII. The denuded interior leaves hardly a whiff of the corruption and decadence of fat, feuding cardinals and their mistresses, the thronging purveyors of jewels, velvet and furs, musicians, chefs and painters competing for patronage, the riotous banquets and corridor schemings.

△ The Palais des Papes, Avignon

The visit begins in the Pope's Tower, otherwise known as the Tower of Angels. You enter the Treasury where the serious business of the church's deeds and finances went on. Four large holes found in the floor (covered over) of the smaller downstairs room served as safes. The same cunning storage device was used for the chamberlain who lived upstairs in the Chambre du Camérier (just off the Jesus Hall), where the safes have been revealed. As he was the Pope's right-hand man, the quarters would have been lavishly decorated, but successive occupants have left their mark, most recently military whitewash, and what is now visible is a confusion of layers. The other door in this room leads into the Papal Vestibule, where the Pope would dress before sessions in the consistory. He also had a small library here and could look out onto the gardens below.

A door on the north side of the Jesus Hall leads to the Consistoire of the Vieux Palais, where sovereigns and ambassadors were received and the canonizations examined and proclaimed. The room was damaged by fire in 1413, and the only decoration that remains are fragments of frescoes moved from the cathedral, and a nineteenth-century line-up of the popes, in which all nine look remarkably similar thanks to the artist using the same model for each portrait. The kitchen on this floor gives a hint of the scale of papal gluttony with its square walls becoming an octagonal chimneypiece for a vast central cooking fire. As you cross from the Vieux Palais to the Palais Neuf, Clement VI's bedroom and the Chambre du Cerf – his study – are further evidence of this pope's secular concerns, the walls in the former adorned with wonderful entwined oak and vine leaf motifs, the latter with superb hunting and fishing scenes. But austerity resumes in the cathedral-like proportions of the Grande Chapelle, or Chapelle Clementine, and in the Grande Audience, its twin in terms of volume on the floor below.

When you've completed the circuit, which includes a heady walk along the roof terraces, you can watch a glossy but informative film on the history of the palace (French only, but English version available from the palace shop, €15). There are also concerts: programmes are available from the ticket office.

Next to the Palais des Papes, the Cathédrale Notre-Dame-des-Doms might once have been a luminous Romanesque structure, but the interior has had a bad attack of Baroque, and the result is an incoherent mess. In addition, nineteenth-century maniacs mounted an enormous gilded Virgin on the belfry, which would look silly enough anywhere, but when dwarfed by the fifty-metre towers of the popes' palace is absurd. There's greater reward behind, in the Rocher des Doms park. As well as ducks and swans and views over the river to Villeneuve and beyond, it has a sundial in which your own shadow tells the time.

The Petit Palais (daily except Tues: June–Sept 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; Oct–May 9.30am–1pm & 2–5.30pm; €6), not far from the park's main entrance, contains a daunting collection of first-rate thirteenth- to fifteenth-century painting and sculpture, most of it by masters from northern Italian cities. As you progress through the collection, you can watch as the masters wrestle with and finally conquer the representation of perspective – a revolution from medieval art, where the size of figures depended on their importance rather than position. Highlight of the collection, in room XVI, Botticelli's sublime Virgin and Child depicts a tender Mary, playfully coddling a smiling infant.

Behind the Petit Palais, and well signposted, is the half-span of Pont St-Bénézet, or the Pont d'Avignon (same hours as Palais des Papes; €4, €11.50 combined ticket with Palais des Papes, audioguide in English included). The gatehouse now has a chamber dedicated to the famous song where for €5 you can record a video clip of your own version. One theory has it that the lyrics say "Sous le pont" (under the bridge) rather than "Sur le pont" (on the bridge), and refer to the thief and trickster clientele of a tavern on the Île de la Barthelasse (which the bridge once crossed on its way to Villeneuve) dancing with glee at the arrival of more potential victims. Keeping the bridge in repair from the ravages of the Rhône was finally abandoned in 1660, three and a half centuries after it was built, and only four of the original 22 arches remain. Despite its limited transportational use, the bridge remained a focus of river boatmen, who constructed a chapel to their patroness on the first of the bridge's bulwarks. And the bridge's failure over the centuries to withstand the rigours of its function didn't stop its builder, Bénézet, from becoming the patron saint of architects.

Around place de l'Horloge

The café-lined place de l'Horloge, frenetically busy most of the time, is the site of the city's imposing Hôtel de Ville and clock tower, and the Opéra. Around the square, on rues de Mons, Molière and Corneille, famous faces appear in windows painted on the buildings. Many of these figures from the past were visitors to Avignon, and of those who recorded their impressions of the city it was the sound of over a hundred bells ringing that stirred them most. On a Sunday morning, traffic lulls permitting, you can still hear myriad different peals from churches, convents and chapels in close proximity. The fourteenth-century church of St-Agricol, just behind the Hôtel de Ville (closed for restoration at the time of writing), is one of Avignon's best Gothic edifices.

To the south, just behind rue St-Agricol on rue Collège du Roure, is the beautiful fifteenth-century Palais du Roure, a centre of Provençal culture. The gateway and the courtyard are definitely worth a look; there may well be temporary art exhibitions, and if you want a rambling tour through the attics to see Provençal costumes, publications and presses, photographs of the Camargue in the 1900s and an old stagecoach, you need to turn up at 3pm on Tuesday (€4.60).

To the west of place de l'Horloge are the most desirable Avignon addresses – both now and three hundred years ago – and it's below the mellow stone facades along rue Joseph-Vernet and rue Petite-Fusterie that you'll find Avignon's most luxurious shops.

The Banasterie and Carmes quartiers

The quartier de la Banasterie, lying immediately east of the Palais des Papes, is almost solid seventeenth- and eighteenth-century, and the heavy wooden doors, with their highly sculptured lintels, today bear the nameplates of lawyers, psychiatrists and doctors. Here, tourist-oriented commercialism is kept in check, and at night in particular this is an atmospheric and beautiful part of the city.

Between Banasterie and place des Carmes are a tangle of tiny streets guaranteed to get you lost. Pedestrians have priority over cars on many of them, and there are plenty of tempting café or restaurant stops. At 6 rue Saluces, you'll find the peculiar Musée du Mont de Piété, an ex-pawnbroker's shop and now home to the town's archives (Mon 10am–noon & 1.30–5pm, Tues–Fri

8.30am–noon & 1.30–5pm; free). It has a small display of papal bulls and painted silk desiccators for determining the dry weight of what was the city's chief commodity.

Rue de la République to place Pie

Between the chainstore blandness of rue de la République and the hideous modern market hall on place Pie (mornings Tues–Sun) is the main pedestrian precinct, centring on place de la Principale. Rue des Marchands and rue du Vieux-Sextier have their complement of chapels and late medieval mansions, in particular the Hôtel des Rascas on the corner of rue des Marchands and rue Fourbisseurs, and the Hôtel de Belli on the corner of rue Fourbisseurs and rue du Vieux-Sextier. The Renaissance church of St-Pierre on place St-Pierre has superb doors sculpted in 1551, and a retable dating from the same period. More Renaissance art is on show in the fourteenth-century church of St-Didier (daily 8am–6.30pm), chiefly The Carrying of the Cross by Francesco Laurana, commissioned by King René of Provence in 1478. There are also fourteenth-century frescoes in the left-hand chapel.

Musée Calvet and around

The excellent Musée Calvet, 65 rue Joseph-Vernet (daily except Tues 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; €6), and the impressive eighteenth-century palace housing it, have been undergoing gradual restoration and transformation for the past few years. The collection begins with the Galerie des Sculptures. A better introduction to a museum couldn't be wished for, with a handful of languorous nineteenth-century marble sculptures, including Bosio's Young Indian, perfectly suited to this elegant space. The end of the gallery houses the Puech collection with a large selection of silverware, Italian and Dutch paintings and, more unusually, a Flemish curiosities cabinet, painted with scenes from the story of Daniel. Upstairs is a fine set of seasons by Nicolas Mignard, whilst Joseph Vernet sticks to representing the different times of the day. Further down, Horace Vernet donated the subtle Death of Young Barra by Jacques-Louis David as well as Géricault's Battle of Nazareth. On the way out don't miss the Victor Martin collection, including Vlaminck's At the Bar, Bonnard's Winter Day and the haunting Downfall by Chaïm Soutine.

Avignon's remaining museums are considerably less compelling. Next door to the Musée Calvet is the Musée Requien (Tues–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; free); its subject is natural history and its sole advantage is in being free and having clean toilets. With little more to recommend it is the Musée Lapidaire, a museum of Roman and Gallo-Roman stones housed in the Baroque chapel at 27 rue de la République (daily except Tues 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; €2). Finally, at the Musée Voulard, at the end of rue Victor-Hugo near Porte St-Dominique (Tues–Sat: May–Oct 10am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 2–6pm; Nov–April 2–6pm; €4), you can feast your eyes on the fittings, fixtures and furnishings that French aristocrats enjoyed both before and after the Revolution. There's also some brilliant Moustiers faïence, exquisite marquetry and Louis XV ink-pots with silver rats holding the lids. Just west of the tourist office, down rue Violette, is the Collection Lambert (Tues–Sun: July & Aug 11am–7pm; Sept–June 11am–6pm; €5.50), Avignon's first attempt at a contemporary art gallery, which leans heavily towards conceptual, installation and video art. Though it's not especially high powered, the permanent collection includes a few Nan Goldin photographs and works by Anselm Kiefer and Cy Twombly, and there are occasionally interesting temporary exhibitions.

Southeast: to rue des Teinturiers

Between rue de la République and place St-Didier, on rue Labourer, is the Musée Angladon (Wed–Sun 1–6pm, plus Tues in high season; €6), displaying the remains of the private collection of Jacques Doucet. Although the collection, which once contained works like Picasso's Demoiselles d'Avignon and Douanier Rousseau's The Snakecharmer (now in the Musée d'Orsay), has seen better days, it is still very much worth a look. The visit begins with a series of rooms furnished and decorated as coherent units, the first Renaissance and the remainder eighteenth-century (including an orientalist room). The paintings which remain are alone worth the admission price, and include Foujita's Portrait of Mme Foujita and a Self-Portrait, Modigliani's The Pink Blouse, various Picassos and Van Gogh's The Railroad Cars, the only painting from Van Gogh's stay in Provence to be on permanent display in the region.

Through the park by the tourist office (where there's an old British red phone box) you come to place des Corps-Saints, a lively area of cafés and restaurants whose tables fill the square. Just to the north, rue des Lices runs eastwards, past the École des Beaux-Arts, to rue des Teinturiers, the city's most atmospheric street. Its name refers to the eighteenth- and nineteenth-century business of calico printing. The cloth was washed in the Sorgue canal which still runs alongside the street, turning the wheels of long-gone mills, and, although the water is fairly murky and sometimes smelly, this is still a great street for evening strolls, with a large number of cheap restaurants.

Eating and drinking

Reasonably priced midday meals are easy to come by in Avignon and eating well in the evening needn't break the bank. The large terraced café-brasseries on place de l'Horloge and rue de la République all serve quick, if not necessarily memorable, meals. Rue des Teinturiers is good if you're on a budget, and the streets between place Crillon and place du Palais are full of temptation if you're not.

Restaurants and cafés

Le Belgocargo 10 place des Châtaignes

☎ 04.90.85.72.99. A Belgian restaurant where the staunch royalist owner serves moules-frites and beer; lunch menu with drink for €11.80. Closed Sun out of season.

Brunel 46 rue Balance ☎ 04.90.85.24.83. Superb regional dishes, with evening menus from €30. Closed Sun & Mon, and first half of Aug.

Christian Étienne 10 rue de Mons

☎ 04.90.86.16.50. One of Avignon's best restaurants, housed in a fourteenth-century mansion and offering exotic combinations such as fennel sorbet with a saffron sauce plus some great seafood dishes. Menus €55–105. Closed Sun & Mon.

Couscousserie de l'Horloge 2 rue de Mons ☎ 04.90.85.84.86. Popular Algerian-run restaurant with a jovial atmosphere and excellent North African food. Try the delicious €14.50 tagine aux prunes and wash it down with an Algerian coteaux de Mascara red.

L'Entrée des Artistes 1 place des Carmes

☎ 04.90.82.46.90. Small, friendly bistro serving traditional French dishes; €25 weekday menu.

Closed Sat, Sun & early Aug to early Sept.

Eurl Coin Cache 3 place du Cloître St-Pierre

☎ 04.90.82.07.31. Small funky café on a beautiful shaded square. A choice of home-made tarts which change daily.

La Ferme chemin du Bois, Île de la Barthelasse

☎ 04.90.82.57.53. A traditional farmhouse, serving well-prepared simple dishes, from €23. Closed Mon & Wed, plus Nov to mid-March.

 D'ici et d'ailleurs 4 rue Galante

☎ 04.90.14.63.65. Tasteful modern surroundings, Provençal dishes from "here", international flavours from "there"; good and not expensive. Menus €15.50 and €19. Service until 11pm; closed Sun & Mon.

Petit Bedon 70 rue Joseph-Vernet

☎ 04.90.82.33.98. The "Potbelly" is a well-regarded and smart Provençal restaurant, though not quite the bargain it was. Lunch menu €23; otherwise regional dishes are from €19 à la carte. Closed Sun & Mon.

Utopia Bar 4 rue Escaliers Ste-Anne. In the shadow of the Palais des Papes, this elegant but slightly snooty café has changing exhibitions adorning the walls, live jazz some nights, and is just next door to a good cinema.

 Woolloomooloo 16bis rue des Teinturiers ☎04.90.85.28.44. An old printshop with all the presses still in place. The cuisine is from just about everywhere, as are the teas. Menus at €13 & €18 (lunch) or €21. Occasional theme nights. Closed Mon.

Bars and clubs

Le Bokao's 9bis St-Lazare ☎04.90.82.47.95. Eclectic mix of music styles including house and techno at the weekends in a converted barn. Wed–Sat 10pm–5am.

Le Cid 11 place de l'Horloge ☎04.90.82.30.38 Trendy mixed gay/straight bar and terrace which stays open long after the rest of place de l'Horloge has closed for the night.

L'Esclave 12 rue du Limas ☎04.90.85.14.91. Avignon's gay and lesbian bar, with regular DJs, drag shows and karaoke nights. Tues–Sun from 11pm.

Le Lounge 83 rue Joseph-Vernet. Swanky modern cocktail bar with DJ Thurs–Sat. Open 6pm–1.30am.

Pub Z cnr rues Bonneterie & Artaud, close to Les Halles. Rock bar with black and white decor and DJs Fri and Sat. Open till 1.30am; closed Sun & last two weeks of Aug.

The Red Lion 21–23 rue St-Jean-le-Vieux ☎04.91.72.71.80. English-style pub with live music twice a week and regular theme evenings.

Le Red Zone 25 rue Carnot ☎04.90.27.02.44. Bar with DJs and weekly concerts. Daily 9pm–3am.

Tapalocas 15 rue Galante ☎04.90.82.56.84. Tapas at €2.20 a dish, happy hour on aperitifs between 6–7.30pm and Spanish music, sometimes live. Daily noon–1am.

Theatre, music and film

There's a fair amount of nightlife and cultural events in Avignon: the Opéra, on place de l'Horloge (☎04.90.82.81.40), mounts a good range of productions; Le Chêne Noir, 8bis rue Ste-Catherine (☎04.90.86.58.11), is a theatre company worth seeing, with mime, musicals or Molière on offer; and plenty of classical concerts are performed in churches, usually for free. Cinéma Utopia, at La Manutention, rue Escaliers Ste-Anne (☎04.90.82.65.36), shows films in version originale (ie undubbed); the same complex houses the AJMI Jazz Club (☎04.90.86.08.61), which hosts live jazz every Thursday night and features major acts and some adventurous new groups. The café La Tache d'Encre, rue Tarasque (☎04.90.85.97.13; closed Sun), presents local theatre performances. To find out what's on, get hold of the tourist office's free monthly calendar Rendez-Vous. They may also have the arts, events and music magazine César (also free), which is otherwise found in arts centres.

Listings

Bike rental Holiday Bikes, 20 bd St-Roch ☎04.32.76.25.88; Provence Bike, 52 bd St-Roch ☎04.90.27.92.61 (also scooters and motorbikes).

Boat trips Grands Bateaux de Provence, allée de l'Ouille ☎04.90.85.62.25, @avignon-et-provence.com/mireio. Offering year-round trips upstream towards Châteauneuf-du-Pape and downstream to Arles; two-week advance booking recommended.

Books Shakespeare, 155 rue Carreterie. English bookshop and salon de thé. Closed Sun, Mon & evenings.

Car rental National/Citer, gare TGV ☎04.90.27.30.07, gare SNCF bd St-Roch ☎04.90.85.96.47; Rent a Car, 130 av Pierre-Sémard ☎04.90.88.08.02; Sixt, 3 bd St-Ruf ☎04.90.86.06.61.

Emergencies Doctor/ambulance ☎15; hospital, Centre Hospitalier H.-Duffaut, 305 rue

Raoul-Follereau ☎04.32.75.33.33; night chemist, call police ☎04.90.80.50.00 for addresses.

Internet CyberHighway, 30 rue des Infirmières; Webzone 3 rue St-Jean-le-Vieux/place Pie.

Laundry 9 rue du Chapeau-Rouge; 27 rue Portail-Magnanen; 113 av St-Ruf.

Money exchange Cie Avignonnaise de la Change, 19 rue de la République ☎04.90.16.04.04; Mondial Change, 34 rue de la Balance; post office, cours Kennedy.

Police 13ter quai St-Lazare (due to move in 2007) ☎08.00.00.84.00 or simply ☎17

Post office Poste, cours Président-Kennedy, Avignon 84000.

Swimming pool Piscine Olympique on the Île de la Barthelasse (mid-May to Aug 10am–7pm).

Taxis place Pie ☎04.90.82.20.20.

Villeneuve-lès-Avignon

VILLENEUVE-LÈS-AVIGNON rises up a rocky escarpment above the west bank of the Rhône, looking down upon its older neighbour from behind far more convincing fortifications. Historically, Villeneuve operated largely as a suburb of Avignon, with palatial residences constructed by the cardinals and a great monastery founded by Pope Innocent VI.

To this day, Villeneuve is technically a part of Languedoc and not Provence, and would score better in the hierarchy of towns to visit were it further from Avignon, whose monuments it can almost match for colossal scale and impressiveness. Despite the closeness of its relationship with Avignon it is, however, a very different – and really rather sleepy – kind of place, and as such retains a repose and a sense of timelessness that bustling Avignon inevitably lacks. In summer it provides venues for the Avignon Festival as well as alternatives for accommodation overspill, and it's certainly worth a day, whatever time of year you visit.

Arrival, information and accommodation

From Avignon's post office on cours Président-Kennedy, across the way from the gare SNCF, the half-hourly #11 bus (take care not to go in the direction "Les Angles-Villeneuve") runs direct to place Charles-David ("Office du Tourisme" stop) taking less than ten minutes, or five if you catch it from Porte d'Oulle. After 7.30pm you'll have to take a taxi or walk – it's only 3km. Place Charles-David is where you'll find both the tourist office (July daily 10am–7pm; Aug–June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎ 04.90.25.61.33, 🌐 www.villeneuvelezavignon.fr/tourisme), and a food market on Thursday morning and bric-a-brac on Saturday morning. A little south of the square rue Farigoule runs west to rue de la République, the main street, which runs due north past place Jean-Jaurès. It's here you'll find what limited restaurant and bar life there is.

Hotels

L'Atelier 5 rue de la Foire
☎ 04.90.25.01.84, 🌐 www.hoteldelatelier.com

A sixteenth-century house around a central stone staircase bathed in light, with huge open fireplaces and a shady walled garden. Ⓜ

Les Cèdres 39 av Pasteur ☎ 04.90.25.43.92,
🌐 www.lescèdres-hotel.fr. An austere Louis XVIII country house with old-fashioned decor, a pool and restaurant. Ⓜ

Les Écuries des Chartreux 66 rue de la République ☎ 04.90.25.79.93, 🌐 www.ecuries-des-chartreux.com. B&B in a light and airy rustic house with exposed stone walls and antique furniture. Ⓜ

Jardin de la Livrée 4bis rue Camp de Bataille ☎ 04.90.26.05.05, 🌐 www.la-livree.oxatis.com. B&B in an old house in the centre of the village with comfortable rooms around a swimming pool, also has a good-value restaurant. Ⓜ

Le Prieuré 7 place du Chapitre ☎ 04.90.15.90.15, 🌐 www.leprieure.fr. The first choice if money is no object. An old priory surrounded by a peaceful garden full of flowers. The restaurant serves Provençal cuisine with a gourmet twist. Ⓜ

Hostel and campsites

YMCA hostel 7bis chemin de la Justice
☎ 04.90.25.46.20, 🌐 www.ymca-avignon.com. Beautifully situated overlooking the river by Pont du Royaume, with balconied rooms for one to four people (€23 for dorm bed) and an open-air swimming pool (stop "Pont d'Avignon" on Avignon–Villeneuve bus or "Gabriel Péri" on the Villeneuve–Avignon bus).

Camping Municipal de la Laune chemin St-Honoré ☎ 04.90.27.49.40, ☎ 04.90.25.88.03. A three-star site off the D980, near the sports stadium and swimming pools. Closed mid-Oct to March.

The Town

For a good overview of Villeneuve – and Avignon – make your way to the Tour Philippe-le-Bel at the bottom of montée de la Tour (bus stop "Philippe-le-Bel").

This tower was built to guard the French end of Avignon's Pont St-Bénézet (or Pont d'Avignon), and a climb to the top (March–Nov Tues–Sun 10am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; €1.80) will be rewarded with stunning views.

Even more indicative of French distrust of its neighbours is the enormous Fort St-André (daily: April–Sept 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; Oct–March 10am–1pm & 2–5pm; €5), whose bulbous double-towered gateway and vast white walls loom over the town. Inside, refreshingly, there's not a hint of a postcard stall or souvenir shop – just tumbledown houses and the former abbey, with its gardens of olive trees, ruined chapels, lily ponds and dovescotes (Tues–Sun: July & Aug 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; Sept–June 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €4). Its cliff-face terrace is the classic spot for artists to aim their brushes, or photographers their cameras, over Avignon. You can reach the approach to the fortress, montée du Fort, from place Jean-Jaurès on rue de la République, or by the “rapid slope” of rue Pente-Rapide, a cobbled street of tiny houses leading off rue des Récollets on the north side of place Charles-David.

Almost at the top of rue de la République, on the right, allée des Muriers leads from place des Chartreux to the entrance of La Chartreuse du Val de Bénédiction (daily: April–Sept 9am–6.30pm; Oct–March 9.30am–5.30pm; €6.50). This Carthusian monastery, one of the largest in France, was founded by the sixth of the Avignon popes, Innocent VI (pope 1352–62), whose sharp profile is outlined on his tomb in the church. The buildings, which were sold off after the Revolution and gradually restored last century, are totally unembellished. With the exception of the Giovanetti frescoes in the chapel beside the refectory, all the paintings and treasures of the monastery have been dispersed, leaving you with a strong impression of the austerity of the Carthusian order. You're free to wander around unguided, through the three cloisters, the church, chapels, cells and communal spaces, which have little to see but plenty of atmosphere to absorb. It's one of the best venues in the Festival of Avignon.

Another festival venue is the fourteenth-century Église Collégiale Notre-Dame and its cloister on place St-Marc close to the mairie (April–Sept 10am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; Oct–March daily 10am–noon & 2–5pm; free). Notre-Dame's most important treasure is a rare fourteenth-century smiling Madonna and Child made from a single tusk of ivory, now housed, along with many of the paintings from the Chartreuse, in the Musée Pierre-de-Luxembourg, just to the north along rue de la République (same hours as Église Collégiale Notre-Dame; €3). The spacious layout includes a single room, with comfortable sofas and ample documentation, given over to the most stunning painting in the collection – The Coronation of the Virgin, painted in 1453 by Enguerrand Quarton as the altarpiece for the church in the Chartreuse.

Eating and drinking

Aubertin 1 rue de l'Hôpital ☎04.90.25.94.84. In the shade of the old arcades by the Collégiale Notre-Dame. Simple local dishes followed by delicious deserts: try the soufflé aux marrons et au rhum avec glace à la vanille. €36 menu. Closed Sun & Mon.

La Banaste 28 rue de la République ☎04.90.25.64.20. Serves plentiful terroir meals. Menus from €26. Closed Thurs.

Kream 9 rue de la République ☎06.13.55.02.42. Good ice cream, crêpes and milkshakes on the leafy main village square, place Jean-Jaurès, where you can also find Internet access at Cyber Espace.

La Magnanerie 37 rue Camp de Bataille ☎04.90.25.11.11. For blowout posh nosh off rue de la République, with a menu for €49 (à la carte over €30).

Mon Mari Etait Pâtissier 3 av Pasteur ☎04.90.25.52.79. Popular restaurant where the chef has moved on from pastries to swordfish. Menus from €35. Closed Sun eve & Mon.

Le Prieuré 7 place du Chapitre ☎04.90.15.90.15. Luxurious restaurant that's part of Relais & Châteaux; subtly blended Mediterranean flavours dominate. Lunch menus from €36; dinner menu €60.

St-Rémy-de-Provence and the Alpilles

The watery and intensely cultivated scenery of the Petite Crau plain south of Avignon changes abruptly with the eruption of the Chaîne des Alpilles, whose peaks look like the surf of a wave about to engulf the plain. At their northern foot nestles ST-RÉMY-DE-PROVENCE, a dreamy place approached along long avenues of plane trees and whose busy boulevards contain an old town no more than half a kilometre in diameter. Outside this ring, the modern town is sparingly laid out, so for once you don't have to plough your way through dense developments to reach the centre. It's a beautiful place, as unspoilt as the villages around it.

The best time to visit St-Rémy is during the Fête de Transhumance on Whit Monday, when a 2000-strong flock of sheep, accompanied by goats and donkeys, does a tour of the town before being packed off to the Alps for the summer. Another good time to come is for the Carreto Ramado, on August 15, a harvest thanksgiving procession in which the religious or secular symbolism of the floats reveals the political colour of the various village councils, while a pagan rather than workers' May Day is celebrated with donkey-drawn floral floats on which people play fifes and tambourines.

Arrival, information and accommodation

There's no train station in St-Rémy; buses from Avignon, Aix and Arles drop you in place de la République, the main square abutting the old town on the east. The tourist office, at place Jean-Jaurès (Easter–Oct Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sun 10am–noon & 3–6pm; Nov–Easter Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎ 04.90.92.05.22, 🌐 www.saintremy-de-provence.com); they have excellent free guides to cycling and walking routes in and around the Alpilles and can provide addresses for renting horses. If you want to rent a bike, try Telecycles (☎ 04.90.92.83.15). Without a car, it's difficult to get to Glanum or Les Baux except by foot or taxi (taxis ☎ 06.07.02.25.64 or 06.09.31.50.38).

St-Rémy has a fairly wide choice of accommodation, though bargains are hard to come by. In the old town, Ville Verte, on the corner of place de la

Nostradamus

Michel de Nostredame was born in St-Rémy in 1503, and, educated as a physician, he first received recognition for his innovative treatment of plague victims. It wasn't until the latter part of his life that his interest in astrology and the occult would lead to the publication of The Prophecies of Michel Nostradamus, a collection of 942 prophetic quatrains. Already well known in his own day, Nostradamus used a deliberately obscure and cryptic writing style for fear that he would be persecuted by the authorities were they to understand completely his predictions. The end result was some extremely ambiguous French verse, which has since been the subject of numerous forgeries, urban legends and some very liberal interpretations. Today he is most often given credit for predicting the rise of Napoleon and Hitler, and major catastrophes such as the Great Fire of London in 1666. While Nostradamus may or may not have been able to accurately foresee the future, his success as a writer remains undisputed: his collection of prophecies, now known as Centuries, has been kept in print continuously since its first publication in 1551. The tourist office in St-Rémy publishes an excellent leaflet, Provence in the days of Nostradamus, with itineraries leading from St-Rémy to Salon and back again, though the Nostradamus link is often tenuous.

République and avenue Fauconnet (☎04.90.92.06.14, 🌐www.hotel-villeverte.com; closed Jan; 🕒), has a garden and a pool, and some rooms on the ground floor with kitchenettes. Outside the old town, try Hostellerie du Chalet Fleuri, 15 av Frédéric-Mistral (☎04.90.92.03.62, ☎04.90.92.60.28; 🕒), to the north, with parking, a restaurant and garden, or Le Castellet des Alpilles, 6 place Mireille (☎04.90.92.07.21, 🌐www.castelet-alpilles.com; 🕒; closed Nov–March), to the south past the tourist office, which is small and friendly, and has some rooms with great views.

There are three functional and busy campsites near St-Rémy: the municipal Le Mas de Nicolas, 800m from the centre on a turning off the route de Mollèges (☎04.90.92.27.05; €15; closed mid-Oct to mid-March); Monplaisir, 1km from the centre on chemin de Monplaisir (☎04.90.92.22.70, 🌐www.camping-monplaisir.fr; €17.50; closed mid-Nov to Feb); and Pegomas, on avenue Jean-Moulin to the east of the boulevards (☎04.90.92.01.21, 🌐www.campingpegomas.com; €15.40; closed Nov–Feb).

The Town

To reach the old town from place de la République, take avenue de la Résistance, which runs alongside the town's imposing main church, the Collégiale St-Martin (organ recitals July–Sept Sat 5.30pm), and start wandering up the alleyways into immaculate, leafy squares. For an introduction to the region, a good first visit would be to the Musée des Alpilles on place Favier, housed in the Hôtel Mistral de Mondragon (daily: Feb–Nov 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Dec–Jan 2–5pm; €3). The museum features interesting displays on folklore, festivities and traditional crafts, plus some intriguing local landscapes, creepy portraits by Marshal Pétain's first wife and souvenirs of local boy Nostradamus.

The neighbouring Musée Archéologique in the Hôtel de Sade (daily: April–Aug 11am–6pm; Sept–March 11am–5pm; €6.50 includes entry to Glanum), displays finds from the archeological digs at the Greco-Roman town of Glanum. The hour or so which it takes to wander through the museum may be a bit much for the non-committed, but there are some stunning pieces, in particular the temple decorations.

In addition to the two fifteenth- to sixteenth-century hôtels that house the museums, you'll find more ancient stately residences as you wander through the old town, particularly along rue Parage. On rue Hoche is the birthplace of Nostradamus, though only the facade is contemporary with the savant, and the house is not open for visits. The Hôtel d'Estrine, 8 rue Estrine, houses the Centre d'Art Présence Van Gogh (April to mid-Oct Tues–Sun 10.30am–1pm & 3–7pm; mid-Oct to Dec Tues–Sun 10.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €3.20), which hosts contemporary art exhibitions and has a permanent exhibition of Van Gogh reproductions and extracts from letters, as well as audiovisual presentations on the painter.

Eating and drinking

You'll find plenty of brasseries and restaurants in and around old St-Rémy. There are a few good options on rue Carnot (leading from boulevard Victor-Hugo east through the old town to boulevard Marceau). The Provençal La Gousée d'Ail', 6 bd Marceau (☎04.90.92.16.87; closed Thurs & Sat lunch, plus Feb), has a menu at €32 and occasional live jazz. La Maison Jaune, 15 rue Carnot (☎04.90.92.56.14; closed Mon & Tues lunch in summer, Mon & Sun evening in winter, plus Jan & Feb), has a menu at €34 and a fabulous menu dégustation Provençal for €52. Alternatively, Le Jardin de Frédéric, 8 bd Gambetta (☎04.90.92.27.76; closed Sun & Mon lunch), with a €16 lunch menu, usually serves up some interesting dishes. For a scenic spot to dine on crêpes, try Lou Planet, 7 place Favier, by the Musée des Alpilles, and for brasserie fare go to Le Bistrot des Alpilles, 15 bd Mirabeau (open till midnight). Chic café-lounging is the theme at the rather elegant Café des Arts, 30 bd Victor-Hugo.

South of St-Rémy: Les Antiques, St-Paul-de-Mausole and Glanum

About 1.5km south of the old town, following avenue Pasteur, which becomes avenue Vincent-Van-Gogh, you'll come to Les Antiques (free access), a triumphal arch supposedly celebrating the Roman conquest of Marseille, and a mausoleum thought to commemorate two grandsons of Augustus. Save for a certain amount of weather erosion, the mausoleum is perfectly intact, while on the arch you can still make out the sculptures of fruits and leaves representing the fertility of "the Roman Province" (hence "Provence"), and the figures of chained captives, symbolizing Roman might.

The arch would have been a familiar sight to Vincent Van Gogh, who in 1889 requested that he be put under medical care for several months. He was living in Arles at the time, and the hospital chosen by his friends was in the old monastery St-Paul-de-Mausole, a hundred metres or so east of Les Antiques; it remains a psychiatric clinic today. Although the regime was more prison than hospital, Van Gogh was allowed to wander out around the Alpilles and painted prolifically during his twelve-month stay. The Oliviers' Fields, The Reaper, The Enclosed Field and The Evening Stroll are among the 150 canvases of this period. The church and cloisters can be visited (April–Oct Sun–Fri 9.45am–6.15pm & Sat 10.45am–5.15pm; Nov–March daily 10.30am–5pm; €3.80): take avenue Edgar-Leroy or allée St-Paul from avenue Vincent-Van-Gogh, go past the main entrance of the clinic and into the gateway on the left at the end of the wall.

Not very far beyond the hospital is a signposted farm called Mas de la Pyramide (daily: July & Aug 9am–noon & 2–7pm; Sept–June 9am–noon & 2–5pm; €4). It's an old troglodyte farm in the Roman quarries for Glanum with a lavender and cherry orchard surrounded by cavernous openings into the rock filled with ancient farm equipment and rusting bicycles. The farmhouse is part medieval and part Gallo-Roman, with pictures of the owner's family who have lived there for generations.

One of the most impressive ancient settlements in France, Glanum, 500m south of Les Antiques (daily: April–Aug 10am–6.30pm; Sept–March Tues–Sun 10.30am–5pm; €6.50), was dug out from alluvial deposits at the very foot of the Alpilles. The site was originally a Neolithic homestead; then, between the second and first centuries BC, the Gallo-Greeks, probably from Massalia (Marseille), built a city here, on which the Gallo-Romans, from the end of the first century BC to the third century AD, constructed yet another town.

Though Glanum is one of the most important archeological sites in France, it can be very difficult to get to grips with. Not only were the later buildings moulded onto the earlier, but the fashion at the time of Christ was for a Hellenistic style. You can distinguish the Greek levels from the Roman most easily by the stones: the earlier civilization used massive hewn rocks while the Romans preferred smaller and more accurately shaped stones. The leaflet at the admission desk is helpful, as are the attendants if your French is good enough.

The site is bisected by a road running from north to south, with several Hellenic houses to the northwest. East of here are the Thermes, a complex of furnaces, bathing chambers and pools, and beyond this the Maison du Capricorne with some fine mosaics. A forum dating from Roman times is south of here, near a restored theatre and the superb sculptures on the Roman Temples Geminées (Twin Temples). The temples also have fragments of mosaics, fountains of both Greek and Roman periods and first-storey walls and columns. As the site narrows in the ravine at the southern end, you'll find a Grecian edifice around a sacred spring – the feature that made this location so desirable. Steps lead down to a pool, with a slab above for the libations of those too disabled to descend. An inscription records that Agrippa was responsible for restoring it in 27 BC and dedicating it to Valetudo, the Roman goddess of health.

Les Baux and the Val d'Enfer

At the top of the Alpilles ridge, 7km southwest of St-Rémy, lies the distinctly unreal fortified village of LES BAUX-DE-PROVENCE, where the ruined eleventh-century citadel is hard to distinguish from the edge of the plateau, whose rock is both foundation and part of the structure.

Once Les Baux lived off the power and widespread possessions in Provence of its medieval lords, who owed allegiance to no one. When the dynasty died out at the end of the fourteenth century, however, the town, which had once numbered 6000 inhabitants, passed to the counts of Provence and then to the kings of France. In 1632, Richelieu razed the feudal citadel to the ground and fined the population into penury for their disobedience. From that date until the nineteenth century, both citadel and village were inhabited almost exclusively by bats and crows. The discovery in the neighbouring hills of the mineral bauxite (whose name derives from “Les Baux”) brought back some life to the village, and tourism has more recently transformed the place. Today the population stays steady at around 400, while the number of visitors exceeds 1.5 million each year. Day-tripping crowds thin rapidly in Les Baux after around 5pm so, depending on the season, it can be worthwhile turning up rather late and enjoying the splendid castle in relative peace.

The lived-in village has many very beautiful buildings. There are half a dozen museums, one of the best being the Musée Yves Brayer in the Hôtel des Porcelet (mid-Feb to March & Oct–Dec daily except Tues 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; April–Sept daily 10am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; €4), showing the paintings of the twentieth-century figurative artist whose work also adorns the seventeenth-century Chapelle des Pénitents Blancs. Changing exhibitions of contemporary Provençal artists' works are displayed in the Hôtel de Manville (10am–6pm; free). The museum of the Fondation Louis Jou in the fifteenth-century Hôtel Jean de Brion contains the presses, wood lettering blocks and hand-printed books of a master typographer (visits by reservation only; €3; ☎04.90.54.34.17), while the Musée des Santons in the old Hôtel de Ville (daily 8am–7pm; free) displays traditional Provençal Nativity figures.

Following the signs to the Château will bring you to the entrance to the now-abandoned Citadelle de la Ville Morte, the main reason for coming to Les Baux (daily: 9am–6pm; €7.50 audioguide in English available), and where you can find ruins and several more museums. The Maison de la Famille de la Tour de Brau in the vaulted space of Tour de Brau, at the entrance to the chateau, has a collection of archeological remains and models to illustrate the history from medieval splendour to bauxite works. The most impressive ruins are those of the feudal castle demolished on Richelieu's orders; there's also the partially restored Chapelle Castrale and the Tour Sarrasine, the cemetery, ruined houses half carved out of the rocky escarpment and some spectacular views, the best of which is out across the Grande Crau from beside the statue of Provençal poet Charoun Riev at the southern edge of the plateau where you will also find replicas of medieval catapults and battering rams.

The tourist office is at the beginning of Grande-Rue (daily: July & Aug 9am–7pm; Sept–June 9am–6pm; ☎ 04.90.54.34.39, 🌐 www.lesbauxdeprovence.com). You have to park – and pay – before entering the village. Nothing in Les Baux comes cheap, least of all accommodation. Try Hostellerie de la Reine Jeanne, by the entrance to the village (☎ 04.90.54.32.06, 🌐 www.la-reinejeanne.com; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-Feb), with a good restaurant (menus from €22); alternatively B&B Le Prince Noir, in an artist's house on rue de l'Orme, has bags of character and is tastefully decorated (☎ 04.90.54.39.57, 🌐 www.leprincenoir.com; 📍). If you're feeling rich and want to treat yourself, head for the luxurious hotel-restaurant Oustau de Baumannière, just below Les Baux to the west on the road leading down to the Val d'Enfer (☎ 04.90.54.33.07, 🌐 www.oustaudebaumaniere.com; 📍).

The Val d'Enfer

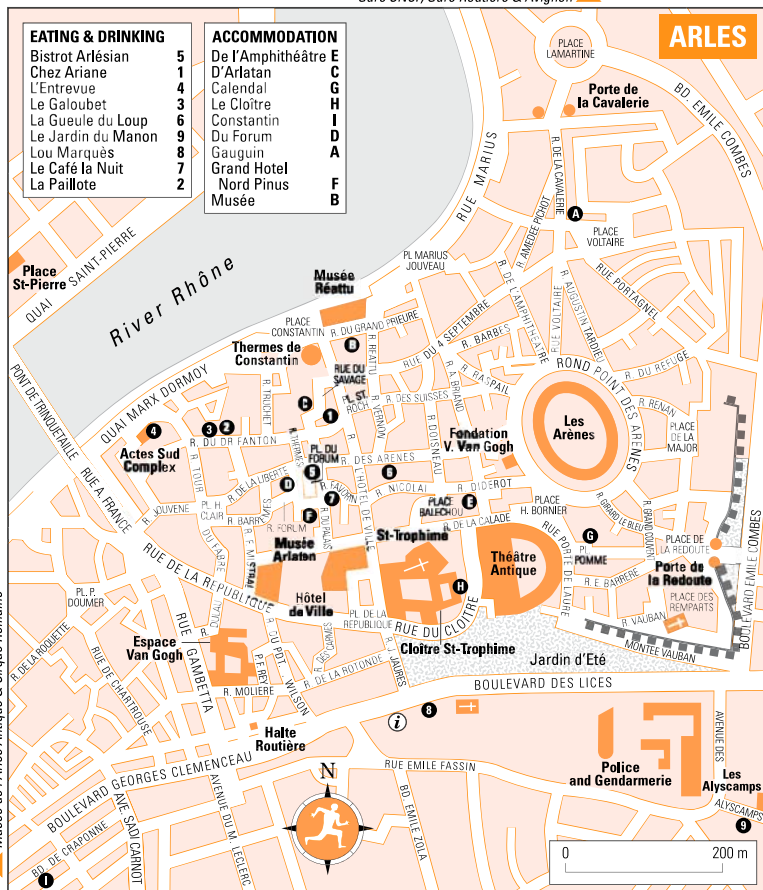

Within walking distance of Les Baux, along the D27 leading northwards, is the valley of quarried and eroded rocks named the Val d'Enfer – the Valley of Hell. One quarry has been turned into an audiovisual experience under the title of the Cathédrale des Images (daily 10am–6pm; €7), signposted to the right downhill from Les Baux's car park. The projection is continuous, so you don't have to wait to go in. You're surrounded by images projected all over the floor, ceilings and walls of these vast rectangular caverns, and by music that resonates strangely in the captured space. The content of the show, which changes yearly, doesn't really matter (recent ones include the Egyptian city of Alexandria); it's an extraordinary sensation, wandering on and through the shapes and colours. As an erstwhile work site put to good use, it couldn't be bettered.

Arles

ARLES is a major town on the tourist circuit, its fame sealed by the extraordinarily well-preserved Roman arena, Les Arènes, at the city's heart, and backed by an impressive variety of other stones and monuments, both Roman and medieval. It was the key city of the region in Roman times, then, with Aix, main base of the counts of Provence before unification with France. For centuries it was Marseille's only rival, profiting from the inland trade route up the Rhône whenever the enemies of France were blocking Marseille's port. Arles declined when the railway put an end to this advantage, and it was an inward-looking depressed town that Van Gogh came to in the late nineteenth century. Today it's a staid and conservative place with an unmistakable small-town feel, but comes to life for the Saturday market, which brings in throngs

Museum passes

The Pass Monuments (€13.50) grants free admission to all of Arles' museums and monuments except the Fondation Vincent Van Gogh, and is available either from the tourist office or at the sites themselves.

of farmers from the surrounding countryside, and during the various festivals of tauromachie between Easter and All Saints, when the town's frenzy for bulls rivals that of neighbouring Nîmes.

Arrival, information and accommodation

Arriving by train eases you gently into the city, with the gare SNCF conveniently located a few blocks to the north of the Arènes. Most buses also arrive here at the unstaffed adjacent gare routière, though some, including all local buses, stop on the north side of boulevard Georges-Clemenceau just east of rue Gambetta. Rue Jean-Jaurès, with its continuation rue Hôtel-de-Ville, is the main axis of old Arles. At the southern end it meets boulevard Georges-Clemenceau and boulevard des Lices, with the tourist office directly opposite (March–Sept daily 9am–6.45pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 9am–4.45pm, Sun 10am–12.45pm; ☎04.90.18.41.20, 🌐www.tourisme.ville-arles.fr); there's also an annexe in the gare SNCF (Mon–Sat 9am–1pm). You can rent bikes from Peugeot, 15 rue du Pont, or Europbike, 1 rue Philippe-Lebon, and cars from Europcar (☎04.90.93.23.24), Eurorent (☎04.90.93.50.14) or Hertz (☎04.90.96.75.23), all on avenue Victor-Hugo. To connect to the Internet, head for Hexaworld, on rue 4-Septembre, near place Voltaire.

There's little shortage of hotel rooms at either end of the scale. The best place to look for cheap rooms is in the area around Porte de la Cavalerie near the station. If you get stuck, the tourist office will find you accommodation for a €1 fee.

Hotels

De l'Amphithéâtre 5–7 rue Diderot

☎04.90.96.10.30, 🌐 www.hotelamphitheatre.fr. Situated close to Les Arènes, this place has plenty of warm colours, tiles and wrought ironwork. 4

D'Arlatan 26 rue du Sauvage ☎04.90.93.56.66, 🌐 www.hotel-arlatan.fr. This may not be Arles' most expensive hotel, but it is probably the most luxurious, set in a beautiful old fifteenth-century mansion and decorated with antiques. Closed Jan. 6

Calendal 5 rue Porte de Laure ☎04.90.96.11.89, 🌐 www.lecalendal.com. Pleasant, welcoming hotel with generous, air-conditioned rooms overlooking a garden. Closed Jan. 5

 Le Cloître 16 rue du Cloître ☎04.90.96.29.50, 🌐 www.hotelcloitre.com.

A cosy hotel with some rooms giving views of St-Trophime. Closed Nov to mid-March. 5

Constantin 59 bd de Craponne, off bd Clemenceau ☎04.90.96.04.05, 🌐 hotelconstantin@wanadoo.fr. Pleasant, well-kept and comfortable hotel, with prices kept down by the proximity of the Nîmes highway (some traffic noise) and its location a little way from the centre. 3

Du Forum 10 place Forum ☎04.90.93.48.95, 🌐 www.hotelduforum.com. Spacious rooms in an old house in the ancient heart of the city, with a swimming pool in the garden. A bit noisy but very welcoming. Closed Nov–Feb. 5

Gauguin 5 place Voltaire ☎04.90.96.14.35,

☎04.90.18.98.87. Comfortable, cheap and well run. Advisable to book. 2

Grand Hotel Nord Pinus place du Forum ☎04.90.93.44.44, 🌐 www.nord-pinus.com.

Twenty-six chic rooms in a grand old house, located at the head of a pretty square in the heart of the old town. 9

Musée 11 rue du Grand-Prieuré ☎04.90.93.88.88, 🌐 www.hoteldumusee.com.fr. Small, good-value family-run place in a quiet location opposite Musée Réattu, with a pretty, flower-filled terrace and air-conditioned rooms. 4

Hostel and campsites

Auberge de Jeunesse 20 av Foch ☎04.90.96.18.25, ✉ arles@fuaaj.org. Old-style hostel with dormitory accommodation only. Bus no. 4 from town, direction "Fourchon"; alight at stop "Fournier". €14.55 per bed Closed Jan.

La Bienheureuse 7km out on the N453 at Raphèles-les-Arles ☎04.90.98.48.06, 🌐 www.labienheureuse.com. Best of Arles' half-dozen campsites; the restaurant here is furnished with pieces similar to those displayed in the Musée Arlaten and full of pictures of popular Arlesian traditions. Regular buses from Arles. €14.50 for two people and a tent. Open all year.

Camping City 67 rte de Crau ☎04.90.93.08.86, 🌐 www.camping-city.com. The closest campsite to town on the Crau bus route. €16 for two people and a tent. Closed Oct–March.

The City

The centre of Arles fits into a neat triangle between boulevard E.–Combes to the east, boulevards Clemenceau and des Lices to the south, and the Rhône to the west. The Musée de l'Arles Antique is southwest of the expressway by the river, not far from the end of boulevard Clemenceau; Les Alyscamps is down across the train lines to the southeast. But these apart, all the Roman and medieval monuments are within easy walking distance in this very compact city centre.

Roman Arles

Roman Arles provided grain for most of the western empire and was one of the major ports for trade and shipbuilding. Under Constantine it became the capital

The bullfight

Bullfighting, or more properly tauromachie (roughly, “the art of the bull”), comes in two styles in Arles and the Camargue. In the local courses camarguaises, which are held at fêtes from late spring to early autumn (the most prestigious of which is Arles’ Cocarde d’Or in early July), razeteurs run at the bulls in an effort to pluck ribbons and cockades tied to the bulls’ horns, cutting them free with special barbed gloves. The drama and grace of the spectacle is in the stylish way the men leap over the barrier away from the bull, and in the competition for prize money between the razeteurs. In this gentler bullfight, people are rarely injured and the bulls are not killed.

More popular, however, are the brutal Spanish-style corridas (late April, early July & Sept, at Arles), consisting of a strict ritual leading up to the all-but-inevitable death of the bull. After its entry into the ring, the bull is subjected to the bandilleros who stick decorated barbs in its back, the picadors, who lance it from horseback, and finally, the torero, who endeavours to lead the bull through as graceful a series of movements as possible before killing it with a single sword stroke to the heart. In one corrida six bulls are killed by three toreros, for whom injuries (sometimes fatal) are not uncommon. Whether you approve or not, tauromachie, which has a history of some centuries here, is your best way of taking part in local life and of experiencing the Roman arena in Arles (€6 per seat). The tourist office, local papers and publicity around the arena will give you the details, or call the Bureau des Arènes ☎ 04.90.96.03.70.

△ Bullfighting at Les Arènes, Arles

14

THE RHÔNE VALLEY AND PROVENCE

Arles

of Gaul and reached its height as a world trading centre in the fifth century. Once the empire crumbled, however, Arles found itself isolated between the Rhône, the Alpilles and the marshlands of the Camargue – an isolation that allowed its Roman heritage to be preserved.

A good place to start any tour of Roman Arles is the Musée de l'Arles Antique (daily: March–Oct 9am–7pm, Nov–Feb 10am–5pm; €5.50), southwest of the town centre on the spit of land between the Rhône and the Canal de Rhône. It's housed in a resolutely contemporary building positioned on the axis of the second-century Cirque Romaine, an enormous chariot racetrack (the excavation of which has been temporarily halted due to lack of funding) that stretches 450m from the museum to the town side of the expressway. The museum is a treat – open-plan, flooded with natural light and immensely spacious. It covers the prehistory of the area, then takes you through the five centuries of Roman rule, from Julius Caesar's legionary base through Christianization to the period when spices and gems from Africa and Arabia were being traded here. Fabulous mosaics are laid out with walkways above; and there are numerous sarcophagi with intricate sculpting depicting everything from music and lovers to gladiators and Christian miracles.

Back in the centre of Arles, the most impressive Roman monument is the amphitheatre, known as Les Arènes (daily: March, April & Oct 9am–5.30pm, May–Sept 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb 10am–4.30pm; €5.50, or covered by Pass Monuments – see box, p.1077), dating from the end of the first century. To give an idea of its size, it used to shelter over two hundred dwellings and three churches built into the two tiers of arches that form its oval surround. This medieval quarter was cleared in 1830 and the Arènes was once more used for entertainment. Today, though missing its third storey and most of the internal stairways and galleries, it's still a very dramatic structure and a stunning venue for performances, seating 20,000 spectators. Although restoration work is scheduled until 2006, it continues to be open to the public.

The Théâtre Antique (daily: March, April & Oct 9–11.30am & 2–5.30pm; May–Sept 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb 10–11.30am & 2–4.30pm; €3), just south of the Arènes, comes to life during July, with the Fête du Costume in which local folk groups parade in traditional dress, and the Mosaïque Gitane Romany festival. The theatre is nowhere near as well preserved as the arena, with only one pair of columns standing, all the statuary removed and the sides of the stage littered with broken bits of stone.

At the river end of rue Hôtel-de-Ville, the Thermes de Constantin (daily: March, April & Oct 9–11.20am & 2–5.30pm; May–Sept 9am–noon & 2–6pm; Nov–Feb 10–11.30am & 2–4.30pm; €5.50), which may well have been the biggest Roman baths in Provence, are all that remain of the emperor's palace that extended along the waterfront. The Roman forum was up the hill on the site of place du Forum, still the centre of life in Arles. You can see the pillars of an ancient temple embedded in the corner of the Nord-Pinus hotel.

The Romans had their burial ground southeast of the centre, and it was used by well-to-do Arlesians well into the Middle Ages. Now only one alleyway, foreshortened by a train line, is preserved. To reach Les Alyscamps (daily: March, April & Oct 9–11.30am & 2–5.30pm; May–Sept 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb 10–11.30am & 2–4.30pm; €3.50), follow avenue des Alyscamps from the east end of boulevard des Lices. Sarcophagi still line the shaded walk, whose tree trunks are azure blue in Van Gogh's rendering. There are numerous tragedy masks, too, though any with special decoration have long since been moved to serve as municipal gifts, as happened often in the seventeenth century, or to reside in the museums. But there is still magic to this walk, which ends at the twelfth-century Romanesque St-Honorat's church, wonderfully simple and cool on a hot day.

The cathedral, museums and medieval Arles

The doorway of the Cathédrale St-Trophime on Arles' central place de la République is one of the most famous examples of twelfth-century Provençal stonecarving in existence. It depicts the Last Judgement, trumpeted by angels playing with the enthusiasm of jazz musicians while the damned are led naked in chains down to hell and the blessed, all draped in long robes, process upwards. The cathedral itself was started in the ninth century on the spot where, in 597 AD, St Augustine was consecrated as the first bishop of the English, and it was largely completed by the twelfth century. A font in the north aisle and an altar illustrating the crossing of the Red Sea in the north transept were both originally Gallo-Roman sarcophagi. The nave is decorated with d'Aubusson tapestries, while there is superlative Romanesque and Gothic stonemasonry in the extraordinarily beautiful cloisters, accessible from place de la République to the right of the cathedral (daily: March–April & Oct 9am–5.30pm; May–Sept 9am–6pm; Nov–Feb 10am–4.30pm; €3.50).

Across place de la République from the cathedral stands the palatial seventeenth-century Hôtel de Ville, inspired by Versailles. You can walk through its vast entrance hall, with its flattened vaulted roof designed to avoid putting extra stress on the Cryptoporticus du Forum below. This is a huge, dark, dank and wonderfully spooky three-sided underground gallery, built by the Romans, possibly as a food store, possibly as a barracks for public slaves, but certainly to provide sturdy foundations for the forum above. Access is from rue Balze (daily: March–April & Oct 9–11.30am & 2–5.30pm; May–Sept 9am–noon & 2–6pm; Nov–Feb 10–11.30am & 2–4.30pm; €3.50).

In case you feel that life stopped in Arles, if not after the Romans, then at least after the Middle Ages, head for the Musée Arlaten on rue de la République (daily: April, May & Sept 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; June–Aug 9.30am–1pm & 2–6.30pm; Oct–March 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; €4). The museum was set up in 1896 by Frédéric Mistral, the Nobel Prize-winning novelist who was responsible for the turn-of-the-twentieth-century revival of interest in all things Provençal, and whose statue stands in place du Forum. The collections of costumes, documents, tools, pictures and paraphernalia of Provençal life are alternately tedious and intriguing. The evolution of Arlesian dress is charted in great detail for all social classes from the eighteenth century to World War I and there's a mouthwatering life-size scene of a bourgeois Christmas dinner.

Another must-see in Arles is the main collection of the Musée Réattu (daily: March, April & Oct 10am–noon & 2–5pm; May–Sept 10am–noon & 2–6.30pm; Nov–Feb 1–5pm; €5.50), housed in a beautiful fifteenth-century priory opposite the Roman baths. Much of it comprises tedious and rigid eighteenth-century works by the museum's founder and his contemporaries, but dotted round this are some good modern works: Zadkine's study in bronze for the two Van Gogh brothers, Mario Prassinos' monochrome studies of the Alpilles, César's Compression 1973 and, best of all, Picasso's Woman with Violin sculpture and 57 ink-and-crayon sketches made in Arles between December 1970 and February 1971. Amongst the split faces and clowns is a beautifully simple portrait of his mother.

Van Gogh in Arles

At the back of the Réattu museum, lanterns line the river wall where Van Gogh used to wander, wearing candles on his hat, watching the night-time light: The Starry Night is the Rhône at Arles. Much of the riverfront and its bars and bistros were destroyed during World War II. Another casualty of the bombing was the "Yellow House" on place Lamartine, where the artist lived before entering the hospital at St-Rémy. However, the café painted in Café de Nuit still stands in place du Forum, and the distinctive Pont Langlois drawbridge painted by the artist in March 1888 can be seen on the southern edge of the town (poorly signposted off the D35). Van Gogh had arrived by train in February 1888 to be greeted by snow and a bitter mistral wind. But he started painting straight away, and in this period produced such celebrated canvases as The Sunflowers, Van Gogh's Chair, The Red Vines and The Sower. Van Gogh found few kindred souls in Arles and finally managed to persuade Gauguin to join him in mid-autumn. Although the two were to influence each other substantially in the following weeks, their relationship quickly soured as the increasingly bad November weather forced them to spend more time together indoors. According to Gauguin, Van Gogh, feeling threatened by his friend's possible departure, finally succumbed to a fit of psychosis and attacked first Gauguin and then himself. He was packed off to the Hôtel-Dieu hospital on rue du Président-Wilson down from the Musée Arlaten, now the Espace Van Gogh, an academic and cultural centre with arty shops in its arcades and courtyard flower beds re-created according to Van Gogh's painting and descriptions of the hospital garden.

Arles has none of the artist's works but the Fondation Vincent Van Gogh (April–June daily 10am–6pm; July–Sept daily 10am–7pm; Oct–March Tues–Sun 11am–5pm; €7), facing the Arènes at 26 rond-point des Arènes, exhibits works by contemporary artists inspired by Van Gogh, including Francis Bacon, Jasper Johns, Hockney and Lichtenstein, and sunflower-drenched photographs by the likes of Cartier-Bresson and Doisneau.

Eating and drinking

Arles has a good number of excellent-quality and cheap restaurants, and if you're looking for quick meals, or just want to watch the world go by, there's a wide choice of brasseries on the main boulevards. Place du Forum is the centre of café life; here you'll find Le Café la Nuit, immaculately re-created à la Van Gogh and open late, and the young and noisy Bistrot Arlésien. Nevertheless, don't be surprised to discover that most of Arles packs up for the night around 10.30pm.

Chez Ariane 2 rue Dr-Fanton ☎04.90.52.00.65. Specializes in organic wine and hearty home cooking. A blackboard displays à la carte dishes from €9 which change daily according to what's on offer at the market. Closed Mon.

L'Entrevue place Nina-Berberova ☎04.90.93.37.28. Hip Moroccan-Provençal café with an attached hamam and a terrace next to the river. Menu €27. Closed Sun lunch.

Le Galoubet 18 rue du Dr-Fanton ☎04.90.93.18.11. Pleasant, vine-covered terrace and elegant dining room in which to taste the modern Provençal cuisine on a good-value €25 menu. Closed Sun and Mon lunch.

La Gueule du Loup 39 rue des Arènes ☎04.90.96.96.69. Cosy restaurant serving traditional dishes, with menus from €26. Closed Mon lunch.

Le Jardin du Manon 14 av des Alyscamps ☎04.90.93.38.68. Hospitable Provençal restaurant serving elaborate regional dishes and delicious desserts, which you can enjoy in a small patio garden. €16–36. Closed Tues night & Wed.

Lou Marquès Hôtel Jules-César, bd des Lices ☎04.90.52.52.52. The top gourmet palace in the top grand hotel. The specialities, which include baudroie (monkfish), langoustine salad and Camargue rice cake, are all served with the utmost pomposity. Menus from €27. The other restaurant in the hotel, Le Cloître, has a lunch menu at around €20. Lou Marquès closed Sat & Mon lunch, Le Cloître Wed & Sun evening, both closed Nov & Dec.

La Pailote 28 rue Dr-Fanton ☎04.90.96.33.15. Very friendly place with a good €15 menu. Closed Wed.

The Camargue

The boundaries of the CAMARGUE are not apparent until you come upon them. Its shimmering horizons are infinite because land, lagoon and sea share the same horizontal plain. Both wild and human life have traits peculiar to this drained, ditched and now protected delta land. Today, the whole of the Camargue is a Parc Naturel Régional, with great efforts made to keep an equi-

THE CAMARGUE

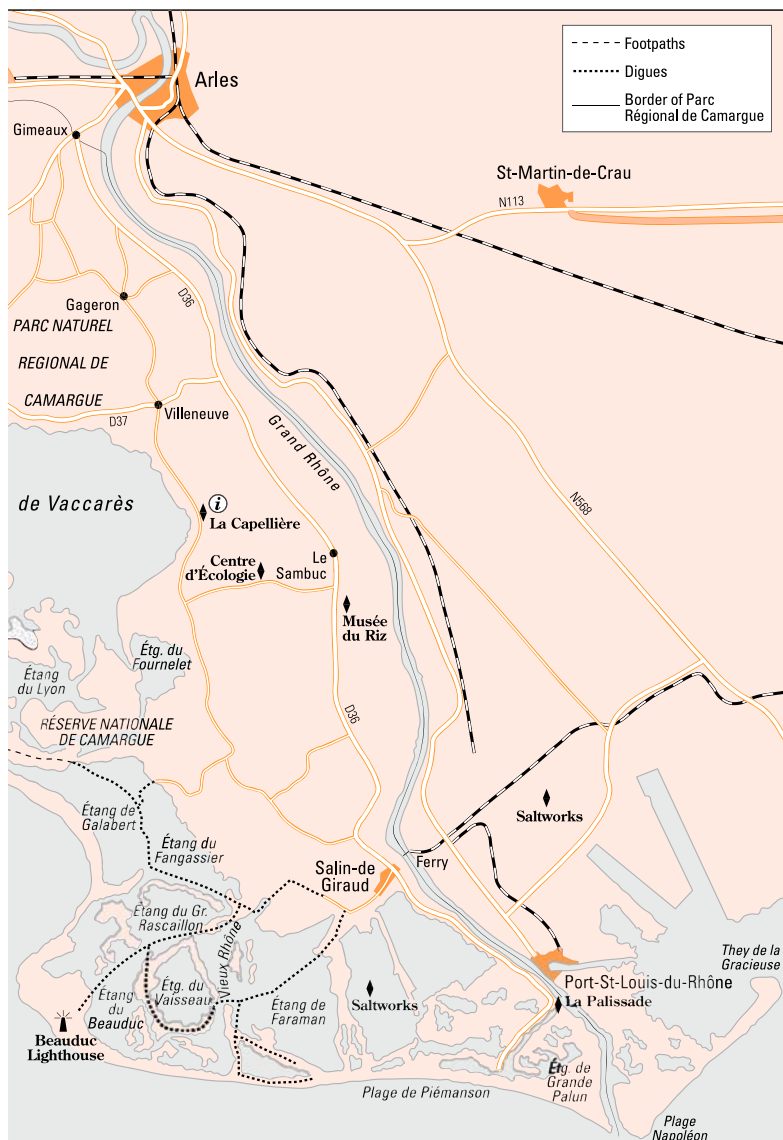

14

THE RHÔNE VALLEY AND PROVENCE

The Camargue

librium between tourism, agriculture, industry and hunting on the one hand, and the indigenous ecosystems on the other.

The Camargue is home to the bulls and to the white horses that the region's gardians, or herdsmen, ride. Neither beast is truly wild, though both run in semi-liberty. The Camargue horse, whose origin is unknown, remains a distinct breed, born dark brown or black and turning white around its fourth year. It is never stabled, surviving the humid heat of summer and the wind-racked winter cold outdoors. The gardians likewise are a hardy community. Their traditional homes, or cabanes, are thatched and windowless one-storey structures, with bulls' horns over the door to ward off evil spirits. They still conform, to some extent, to the popular cowboy myth, and play a major role in guarding Camarguais traditions. Throughout the summer they're kept busy in every village arena with spectacles involving bulls and horses, and the work carries local glamour. Winter is a good deal harder, and fewer and fewer Camarguais property owners can afford the extravagant use of land that bull-rearing requires.

The Camargue bulls and horses are just one element in the area's exceptionally rich wildlife, which includes flamingos, marsh and sea birds, waterfowl and birds of prey; wild boars, beavers and badgers; tree frogs, water snakes and pond turtles; and a rich flora of reeds, wild irises, tamarisk, wild rosemary and juniper trees. These last, which grow to a height of 6m, form the Bois des Rièges on the islands between the Étang du Vaccarès and the sea, part of the central national reserve to which access is restricted to those with professional credentials.

After World War II, the northern marshes were drained and re-irrigated with fresh water. The main crop planted was rice, and so successful was it that by the 1960s the Camargue was providing three-quarters of all French consumption of the grain. Vines were also reintroduced – in the nineteenth century they had survived the disease that devastated every other wine-producing region because their stems were under water. There are other crops – wheat, rapeseed and fruit orchards – as well as trees in isolated clumps. To the east, along the last stretch of the Grand Rhône, the chief business is the production of salt, which was first organized in the Camargue by the Romans in the first century AD. It's one of the biggest saltworks in the world, with saltpans and pyramids adding a somehow extraterrestrial aspect to the Camargue landscape.

Though the Étang du Vaccarès and the central islands are out of bounds, there are paths and sea dykes from which their inhabitants can be watched, and special nature trails (see below). The ideal months for birdwatching are the mating period of April to June, with the greatest number of flamingos present between April and September.

The only town, or rather overgrown village, and the main resort, is Stes-Maries-de-la-Mer on the sea close to the mouth of the Petit Rhône.

Getting around the Camargue

Fairly frequent buses run between Arles and Stes-Maries (6 daily), where you can rent bikes at Le Vélociste on place Mireille in the centre of town (☎04.90.97.83.26), and at Le Vélo Saintois on avenue de la République (☎04.90.97.74.56). Canoes are also available from Kayak Vert in Sylvéréal, on RD 38 direction Aigues-Mortes (☎04.66.73.57.17). The other means of transport to consider is riding, as there are around thirty farms that rent out horses by the hour, half-day or day. The tourist office in Stes-Maries (see opposite) has a complete list.

For transport as an end in itself, there's the paddle steamer Le Tiki III, which leaves for river trips from the mouth of the Petit Rhône, off the route d'Aigues-Mortes, 2.5km west of Stes-Maries (mid-March to mid-Nov; ☎04.90.97.81.68), and the Camargue, which leaves from the port in Stes-Maries (March–Nov; ☎04.90.97.84.72). Finally, Camargue Safaris Gallon in avenue Van-Gogh in Stes-Maries (☎04.90.97.86.93) offers jeep safaris, sometimes in combination with horse-riding or cycle riding.

Be wary of taking your car or bike along the dykes: although maps and road signs show which routes are closed to vehicles and which are accessible only at low tide, they don't warn you about the road surface. The other problem is theft from cars. There are well-organized gangs of thieves with a particular penchant for foreign licence plates.

There are three main walking trails around the protected central area of the Camargue. You can skirt the Réserve des Impériaux along a drovers' path, the draille de Cacharel, between Cacharel, 4km north of Ste-Maries, and Méjanès, just south of the D37. Another trail, with one of the best observation points for flamingos, follows the dyke between the Étangs du Fangassier and Galabert, starting near Faraman, a few kilometres west of Salin-de-Giraud. Between these two is the Digue à la Mer running just back from the beach of Stes-Maries' bay.

If you're walking in the area, be warned that mosquitoes are rife from March through to November; keeping right beside the sea will be OK, but otherwise you'll need serious chemical weaponry. Biting flies are also prevalent and can take away much of the pleasure of this hill-less land for bicycling. The other problem is the winds, which in autumn and winter can be strong enough to knock you off your bike. Conversely, in summer the weather can be so hot and humid that the slightest movement is an effort. There's really no ideal time for visiting the area.

Les Stes-Maries-de-la-Mer

LES STES-MARIES-DE-LA-MER is best known for its annual festival on May 24–25, when the town is swamped with Romanies asking favours from their patron Ste-Sarah. The rest of the time it's unmistakably and unashamedly a holiday resort: unobtrusive white houses with tiled roofs line a tidy grey sandy beach with countless bucket-and-spade shops, fish restaurants with neon signs and ice-cream parlours. It's a good base from which to explore the Camargue, with plenty of reasonably priced accommodation and restaurants.

On the way there you could drop in on the Musée de la Camargue (April–June & Sept daily 9.15am–5.45pm; July & Aug 9.15am–6.45pm; Oct–March daily except Tues 10.15am–4.45pm; €5), halfway between Gimeaux and Albaron, which documents the traditions and livelihoods of the Camarguais

The legend of Sarah

Sarah was the servant of Mary Jacobé, Jesus' aunt, and Mary Salomé, mother of two of the apostles, who, along with Mary Magdalene and various other New Testament characters, are said to have been driven out of Palestine by the Jews and put on a boat without sails or oars.

The boat apparently drifted to an island in the mouth of the Rhône, where the Egyptian god Ra was worshipped. Here Mary Jacobé, Mary Salomé and Sarah, who was herself Egyptian, settled to carry out conversion work, while the others headed off for other parts of Provence. In 1448 their relics were "discovered" in the fortress church of Stes-Maries on the erstwhile island, around the time that the Romanies were migrating to western Europe from the Balkans and from Spain.

Romanies have been making their pilgrimage to Stes-Maries since at least the sixteenth century. It's a time for weddings and baptisms, as well as music, dancing and fervent religious observance. After Mass on May 24, the shrines of the saints are lowered from the high chapel to an altar where the faithful stretch out their arms to touch them. Then the statue of Black Sarah is carried by the Romanies to the sea. On the following day the statues of Mary Jacobé and Mary Salomé, sitting in a wooden boat, follow the same route, accompanied by the mounted gardiens in full Camargue cowboy dress, Arlesians in traditional costume, and spectators. The sea, the Camargue, the pilgrims and the Romanies are blessed by the bishop from a fishing boat, before the procession returns to the church with much bell-ringing, guitar-playing, tambourines and singing. Another ceremony in the afternoon sees the shrines lifted back up to their chapel.

people through the centuries, in the old sheep barn of a working farm. At Pont de Gau, just 4km short of Stes-Maries, the Maison du Parc (April–Sept daily 10am–6pm; Oct–March daily except Fri 9.30am–5pm; ☎04.90.97.86.32; free) has exhibitions on the local environment and is the place to go for detailed maps of paths and dykes. Just down the road is the engrossing Parc Ornithologique (daily: April–Sept 9am–sunset; Oct–March 10am–sunset; €6.50), with some of the less easily spotted birds kept in aviaries, plus trails across a twelve-hectare marsh and a longer walk with vantage points, all with ample signs and information. The village livens up on Monday and Friday mornings for the market on place des Gitans.

Arrival, information and accommodation

There's good, secure parking on the seafront in Stes-Maries at the Police Municipale, close to the tourist office on avenue Van-Gogh, which will happily weigh you down with information detailing all the town's festivals and events (daily: Jan, Feb, Nov & Dec 9am–5pm; March & Oct 9am–6pm; April–June & Sept 9am–7pm; July & Aug 9am–8pm; ☎04.90.97.82.55, 🌐www.saintesmaries.com).

From April to October rooms in Stes-Maries should be booked in advance, and for the Romany festival, several months before. Prices go up considerably during the summer and at any time of the year are more expensive than at Arles. Outlying mas (farmhouses) renting out rooms tend to be quite expensive. Camping on the beach is not officially tolerated, but even at Stes-Maries people seeping beneath the stars rarely get told to move on. The fifteen-kilometre seaside plage de Piemanson, also known as the plage d'Arles, south of Salin-de-Giraud, 10km east of Stes-Maries, is a favoured venue for camping sauvage in summer.

Hotels

Camille 13 av Maurice-Challe (ex av de la Plage) ☎04.90.97.80.26, 🌐www.hotel-camille.camargue.fr. Fairly plain but decent modern cheapie with a sea view; some rooms have balconies. Closed mid-Nov to mid-March. Ⓜ

Le Fangassier rte de Cacharel ☎04.90.97.85.02, 🌐www.fangassier.camargue.fr. Pleasant though basic hotel fairly close to the centre of town, with friendly staff. Ⓜ

Hostellerie du Pont de Gau rte d'Arles, Pont de Gau, 4km north of Stes-Maries, between the Maison du Parc and the Parc Ornithologique ☎04.90.97.81.53, 🌐www.pontdegau.camargue.fr. Old-fashioned Camarguais decor, pleasant rooms and a good restaurant. Closed Jan to mid-Feb. Ⓜ

 Mangio Fango rte d'Arles ☎04.90.97.80.56, 🌐www.hotelmangiofango.com Situated 600m from Stes-Maries, overlooking the Étang des Launes. Vibrantly coloured carpets and hangings, simple modern art and tropical plants surround the pool and patios. Closed Nov & Dec. Ⓜ

Des Rièges rte de Cacharel ☎04.90.97.85.07, 🌐www.hoteldesrièges.com. An upmarket hotel in a cluttered old farmhouse, with swimming pool and garden. Down a track signed off the D85a at the edge of Stes-Maries. Closed mid-Nov to mid-Feb. Ⓜ

Les Vagues 12 av Théodore-Aubane ☎ & 📞04.90.97.84.40. A low-priced modern option above a smart restaurant, overlooking the marina on the rte d'Aigues-Mortes. Ⓜ

Hostel and campsites

Hostel on the Arles–Stes-Maries bus route, 10km north of Stes-Maries in the hamlet of Pioch-Badet ☎04.90.97.51.72, 📞04.90.97.54.88. Bike rental, horse rides and other excursions. Open all year, but you must make reservations. €27.30 (half-board only).

Camping La Brise rue Marcel-Carrière ☎04.90.97.84.67, 📞04.90.97.72.01. A three-star site, with a pool and laundry facilities, and tents, mobile homes or bungalows for rent. On the Arles–Stes-Maries bus route, on the east side of the village (stop “La Brise”). Closed Nov. €21 for two people and a tent.

Camping Le Clos du Rhône at the mouth of the Petit Rhône, 2km west of the village on the rte d'Aigues-Mortes ☎04.90.97.85.99, 📞04.90.97.78.85. A busy four-star site with a pool, laundry and shop. Only two of the Arles–Stes-Maries buses continue to here (stop “Clos du Rhône”). Closed Oct–March. €23.60 for two people and tent.

The Town

Stes-Maries is a neat and pleasant, if excessively commercialized town, in size scarcely more than a large village. Its open streets of plain, low houses are quite unlike the Provençal norm, and the grey-gold Romanesque church, with its strange outline of battlements and watchtower, is really the only distinctive monument. It exploits its monopoly as the only Camargue resort and every leisure activity is catered for, to excess. There are kilometres of beach; a pleasure port with boat trips to the lagoons; horses or bikes to ride; watersports; the arènes for bullfights, cavalcades and other entertainment (events are posted on a board outside); and flamenco guitarists playing on the restaurant and café terraces – it can all be very good fun.

As for sights, the fortified church of Stes-Maries allows a look at Sarah's tinselled and sequined statue, which is carried into the sea each year (see box, p.1087). It's at the back of the crypt on the right, and always surrounded by candles and abandoned crutches and callipers from the miraculously cured. The church itself has beautifully pure lines and fabulous acoustics. During the time of the Saracen raids it provided shelter for all the villagers and even has its own freshwater well. The church tower (March–June & Sept–Oct 10am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sun 10am–7pm; July–Aug daily 10am–8pm; Nov–Feb Wed, Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €2) has one of the best possible views over the Camargue; it's the tallest thing for miles.

A few steps south of the church on rue Victor-Hugo, the Musée Baroncelli (currently closed for renovation, check with tourist office; €1.50) is named after the man who, in 1935, was responsible for initiating the Romanies' procession down to the sea with Sarah. This was motivated by a desire to give a special place in the pilgrimage to the Romanies. The museum covers this event, other Camarguais traditions and the region's fauna and flora.

Eating and drinking

Few of the restaurants in Stes-Maries are bargains, though there are plenty to choose from, and out of season the quality improves and prices come down. Right by the marina, the restaurant at Les Vagues on rue T.-Aubanel (☎04.90.97.84.40) serves pleasant fish dishes on a range of menus at €16–31.50. Or try the tapas and bargain wine at Kahlua Bodéga Pub, 1 rue Jean-Roche (☎04.90.97.98.41; closed Jan, Tues out of season; tapas €3.50 each). The best places to try local fish specialities, however, are at the beach hut restaurants Chez Juju and Chez Marc et Mireille in Beauduc, over the dykes on the spit of sand on the opposite side of the bay from Stes-Maries. They're not easy to get to, but if you're hiking or cycling in the area, it's worth the extra mile. By car it's a good thirty minutes from Salin-de-Giraud.

From Avignon to Gordes

If you're heading east from Avignon towards Apt and the Luberon, two worthwhile stops are romantic Fontaine-de-Vaucluse and the picturesque Gordes, close to the Abbaye de Sénanque. Between Gordes and Apt are the old ochre-quarrying villages of Roussillon and Rustrel. Visiting all these places without your own transport is not that easy; Fontaine is accessible by bus from Avignon or from L'Isle-sur-la-Sorgue's gare SNCF 6km away, Gordes from Cavaillon, 24km southwest of Avignon, and Roussillon only infrequently from Apt.

Fontaine-de-Vaucluse

The source of the Sorgue, the stream that runs alongside rue des Teinturiers in Avignon, is at FONTAINE-DE-VAUCLUSE, 29km southeast of Avignon, and is one of the most powerful natural springs in the world. At the top of the gorge above the village is a mysterious tapering fissure deeper than the sheer 230-metre cliffs that barricade its opening. This is where the waters of the Sorgue appear, sometimes in spectacular fashion, bursting down the gorge (in March and April normally), at other times – when you might wonder what the fuss is about – seeping stealthily through subterranean channels to meet the riverbed further down. The best time to admire it is in the early morning before the crowds arrive.

Fontaine-de-Vaucluse was once a rustic backwater where the fourteenth-century poet Petrarch pined for his Laura. It remains a somewhat romantic place despite its hordes of visitors and the attendant tourist clutter. If you're intrigued by the source of the river, visit the L'Écomusée du Gouffre (hourly 45-minute tours in French: Feb–May & Oct–Nov 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; June–Sept 9.30am–7.30pm; closed Dec & Jan; €5) at the rond point at the start of the chemin de la Fontaine, the path to the source. Nearby you'll find the rather dull Musée du Santon (April–June & Sept 10am–7pm; July & Aug 10am–8pm; Oct–March 10am–6pm; €4), displaying an unremarkable collection of Provençal Nativity figures. A short way up the path on the riverside you'll find the Vallis Clausa paper mill, whose products are geared to the fine art market.

Further up the path there's also the impressive Musée d'Histoire 1939–1945 (March–May daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; June–Sept daily except Tues 10am–6pm; Oct daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–5pm; Nov–Feb Sat & Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €3.50), portraying life under the Vichy regime and commemorating the Resistance. Across the river, through an alleyway just past the bridge, is the much more interesting Musée de Pétrarque (daily except Tues: March–May 10am–noon & 2–6pm; June–Sept 9.30am–noon & 2–6.30pm; first two weeks Oct 10am–noon & 2–6.30pm; mid-Oct to Dec 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €3.50), with beautiful books dating back to the fifteenth century and pictures of Petrarch, his beloved Laura and of Fontaine, where he passed sixteen years of his unrequited passion.

The tourist office is on chemin de la Fontaine (Tues–Sat 9.30am–1pm & 1.30–6pm; ☎04.90.20.32.22). The most characterful hotel in the village itself is the Hôtel les Sources (☎04.90.20.31.84, 🌐www.hoteldessources.com; 🍷), with a whole variety of vieille France rooms. On the road out towards Saumane de Vaucluse, 3km from the village, is a budget hotel worth trying, Font de Lauro (☎ & 📞04.90.20.31.49; 🍷). There's also a hostel on chemin de la Vignasse, 1km south on the road to Lagnes (☎04.90.20.31.65, 📧fontaine@fuaj.org; closed mid-Nov to Jan; €15.40 per bed), and a campsite, Les Prés (☎04.90.20.32.38; all year), 500m downstream from the village, with tennis courts and swimming pool. For food, you have a choice of several reasonably priced restaurants in town, including Château (☎04.90.20.31.54; menus €29 and up) and Lou Fanau (☎04.90.20.31.90; closed Wed; menus €15.90–24.60), both of which serve solid regional food.

Gordes and around

GORDES, just 5km east of Fontaine as the crow flies, but 18km by road, is a picturesque Provençal village much favoured by Parisian media personalities, film directors, artists and the like. This might prompt you to give it a miss – and it is an expensive place – but there are good reasons for its popularity with the rich and famous, for it's a spectacular sight. You climb winding roads past buildings of ancient stone before arriving at the summit, where a church and houses surround a mighty twelfth- to sixteenth-century château, housing the contemporary paintings of the Flemish artist Pol Mara (daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €4).

The tourist office is in the château (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.90.72.02.75, 🌐www.gordes-village.com). If you're looking for somewhere to stay, the most reasonably priced hotel within the village is Le Provençal (☎04.90.72.10.01, ☎04.90.72.04.20; 📍), while Les Romarins (☎04.90.72.12.13, 🌐www.hoteldesromarins.com; 📍), overlooking the village on the route de Sénanque, is an old country house with comfortable, traditionally styled rooms. For luxury head to La Bastide de Gordes in the old village (☎04.90.72.12.12, 🌐www.bastide-de-gordes.com; 📍), built into the old ramparts; some of the rooms have vaulted ceilings and the terrace boasts impressive views. The best eating place in town is Les Cuisines du Château on place du Château (☎04.90.72.01.31; closed Mon & Jan–Feb), always full of Parisians in summer, and serving à la carte dishes from €21. L'Arleгал (☎04.90.72.02.54; closed Sun evening, Mon & Feb) on place Genty–Pantaly is a bit less expensive, and offers good Provençal standards, with lunchtime plats around €14.

Around Gordes

Four kilometres north of Gordes, set amidst lavender fields in a deep cleft in the hills, stands the twelfth-century Cistercian Abbaye de Sénanque (visits by 1hr guided tour only; ☎04.90.72.05.72 or enquire at abbey shop; €6). It's still in use as a monastery and you can visit the church, cloisters and all the main rooms of this substantial and austere building; a shop sells the monks' produce, including a liqueur, as well as honey and lavender essence.

The other historical site of note near Gordes is the Village des Bories (daily 9am–sunset; €5.50), 3.5km east off the D2 to Cavaillon, a strange collection of dry-stone dwellings with peculiar geometric shapes that suggest prehistoric pedigree. In fact most were built in the eighteenth century and inhabited up until a hundred years ago.

The best and most surreal detour in the vicinity is to the old ochre mines between Gordes and Apt. The houses in the village of ROUSSILLON, 5km east of Gordes, radiate all the different shades of the seventeen ochre tints once quarried here; a well-signed footpath leads from the car park and tourist office (☎04.90.05.60.25) on place de la

▲ Abbaye de Sénanque

Poste to the old workings. More dramatic quarries, known as the Colorado Provençal, are signed off the D22 towards Gignac, just before you reach RUSTREL, about 10km northeast of Apt. Various paths lead you to an amphitheatre of coffee, vanilla and strawberry ice cream whipped into pinnacles and curving walls.

The Luberon

After its descent from the Alps, the River Durance makes a wide curve to the west before joining the Rhône, skirting the massive rock-fold known as the Luberon that runs for 50km between Cavaillon and Manosque. The Luberon has long been escape country for well-heeled Parisians, Dutch and British, but has also attracted a good number of artists; the main attraction is the countryside itself and the tiny, immaculately preserved villages.

The Luberon's northern face is damper, more alpine in character than the southern face, extremely cold in winter, and dotted with tiny villages clinging stubbornly to the foothills. The southern slopes, by contrast, are Mediterranean in scent and feel. It's almost all wooded, except for the summer sheep pastures at the top, and there's just one main route across it, through the Combe de Lourmarin.

Apt

The sole town base for exploring the Luberon is APT, though in itself it's not much of a town for sightseeing, nor is it renowned for the charm and friendliness of its people. Its large confectionery factory spews mucky froth into the concrete-channelled River Coulon and, as late as early spring, when mimosa is blossoming down on the coast, the temperature around Apt can drop to well below freezing. It cheers up, however, every Saturday for the weekly market when cars are barred from the town centre to allow artisans and cultivators from all the surrounding countryside to set up stalls. As well as featuring every imaginable Provençal edible, the market is accompanied by barrel organs, jazz musicians, stand-up comics, aged hippies and assorted freaks.

Arriving by bus – Apt's gare SNCF is freight-only – you'll be dropped at place de la Bouquerie, the main square lined with cafés and restaurants, or at the gare routière on avenue de la Libération at the eastern end of the town on avenue Saignon (☎04.90.74.20.21). The tourist office is at 20 av Philippe-de-Girard (May, June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; July & Aug 9am–7pm, 9.30am–12.30pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.90.74.03.18, 🌐www.luberon-apt.fr), just up to the left from place de la Bouquerie as you face the river.

Accommodation

There's a good choice of places to stay in Apt; in the more scenic hilltop villages, rooms tend to be reserved months before the summer season.

In Apt

L'Aptoi 289 cours Lauze de Perret
☎04.90.74.02.02, 🌐www.aptois.fr.st. A friendly family hotel on the southeastern edge of the town centre. 4

Auberge du Luberon 8 place du Faubourg du Ballet ☎04.90.74.12.50,

🌐www.auberge-luberon-peuzin.com. A traditional French hotel just across the river, with pleasant rooms and a good restaurant. 6

Le Palais 24 place Gabriel-Péri ☎04.90.04.89.32,
📧hotel-le-palais@wanadoo.fr. Basic but very central with the market right outside; closed mid-Nov to March. 6

Camping Les Cèdres Ave de Viton ☎ & ☎ 04.90.74.14.61. Across the bridge from place St-Pierre within easy walking distance of the town. €10.20 for two people and a tent. Closed Dec to mid-Feb.

Outside Apt

Auberge du Presbytère Place de la Fontaine in the village of Saïgnon, on a hillside 4km southeast of Apt ☎ 04.90.74.11.50, 🌐 www.auberge-presbytere.com. Simple tasteful Provençal rooms. Closed mid-Nov to mid-Feb. Ⓜ

 Auberge des Seguins Near Buoux, a village 10km south of Apt

☎ 04.90.74.16.37, 🌐 www.lesseguins.com. A labyrinth of rooms occupies a welcoming old stone house, tucked away in a spectacular canyon. Half-board only Ⓜ

Bastide St-Joseph rte de Banon in Rustrel, 10km north east of Apt ☎ 04.90.04.97.80 🌐 www.bastide-saint-joseph.com. A tastefully renovated eighteenth-century bastide with a pool. Ⓜ

Relais de Roquefure Le Chêne, 6km from Apt on the N100 towards Avignon ☎ 04.90.04.88.88, 🌐 www.relaisderoquefure.com. Individual rooms decorated in shades of ochre. The grand stone country house overlooks an inviting swimming pool. Ⓜ

Eating

If you haven't stuffed yourself with chocolates and candied fruit (Apt's speciality), you can get cheap and decent meals at the Grand Café Grégoire on place de la Bouquerie (open till 10pm; plats from €15). Further out on the Avignon road, at Le Chêne, there's real gourmandise to be had at Bernard Mathys (☎ 04.90.04.84.64; eve only, closed Tues & Wed; menus from €48).

The Parc Naturel Régional du Luberon

A large area of the Luberon has been designated the Parc Naturel Régional du Luberon (🌐 www.parcduluberon.com), with the aim of conserving the natural fauna and flora and limiting development. The park is administered by the Maison du Parc, 60 place Jean-Jaurès in Apt (April–Sept Mon–Sat 8.30am–noon & 1.30–7pm; Oct–March Mon–Fri 8.30am–noon & 1.30–6pm; ☎ 04.90.04.42.00), which is the place to go for information about every aspect of the Luberon. The centre also houses a small Musée de la Paléontologie (€1.50), which is specifically designed to amuse children and is fun. A submarine-type “time capsule” door leads down to push-button displays that include magnified views of insect fossils and their modern descendants.

Given the region's general dearth of public transport, the only practical and pleasurable way to explore the park without a car is by hiking or cycling. The organization Vélo Loisir en Luberon (☎ 04.92.79.05.82, 🌐 www.veloloisirluberon.com) is a consortium of hotels, campsites and cycle hire and repair shops which promotes cycle tourism throughout the region and can provide transfers to airports or rail stations, guided cycle tours, forward transport of luggage, suggested itineraries and technical assistance and repairs. In Apt, bikes can be hired from Sport 2000, 699 av Victor-Hugo (☎ 04.90.04.30.00).

The Abbaye de Silvacane

If you're heading for Aix-en-Provence from Apt, you'll pass close to another ancient Cistercian abbey contemporary with Sénanque, 29km south of Apt, just across the Durance. After a long history of abandonment and evictions, the Abbaye de Silvacane (June–Sept daily 10am–6pm; Oct–May daily except Tues 10am–1pm & 2–5pm; €6.10) is once again a monastic institution. Isolated from the surrounding villages on the bank of the Durance, its architecture has hardly changed over the last 700 years; you can visit the stark, pale-stoned splendour of the church, its cloisters and surrounding buildings.

Aix-en-Provence and around

AIX-EN-PROVENCE would be the dominant city of central Provence were it not for the great metropolis of Marseille, just 25km away. Historically, culturally and socially, the two cities are moons apart and the tendency is to love one and hate the other. Aix is complacently conservative and a stunningly beautiful place, its riches based on landowning and the liberal professions. The youth of Aix are immaculately dressed; hundreds of foreign students, particularly Americans, come to study here; and there's a certain snobbishness, almost of Parisian proportions.

From the twelfth century until the Revolution, Aix was the capital of Provence. In its days as an independent county, its most mythically beloved ruler, "Good" King René of Anjou (1409–80), held a brilliant court renowned for its popular festivities and patronage of the arts. René was an archetypal Renaissance man, a speaker of many languages (including Greek and Hebrew), a scientist, poet and economist; he also introduced the muscat grape to the region – today he stands in stone in picture-book medieval fashion, a bunch of grapes in his left hand, looking down the majestic seventeenth-century cours Mirabeau.

Arrival, information and accommodation

Cours Mirabeau, which replaced the town's old southern fortifications, is the main thoroughfare of Aix, with the multi-fountained place Général-de-Gaulle, or La Rotonde, at its west end, the main point of arrival. The gare SNCF is on rue Gustavo-Desplace at the end of avenue Victor-Hugo, the avenue leading south from the square; the gare routière is on avenue de l'Europe, at the end of avenue des Belges (☎08.91.02.40.25). The TGV station is 10km to the southwest of Aix; regular shuttles connect the station with the gare routière (every 30 min: daily 4.45am–10.30pm; €3.70). Driving into Aix can be confusing: the entire ring of boulevards encircling the old town is essentially one giant roundabout, circulating anticlockwise; hotels are signposted off this ring in yellow. Parking in Aix isn't easy; the ring is probably the best bet for on-street parking as the old town is pretty nightmarish; there are also some good, modern underground car parks, notably at the Centre de Congrès (€1 for 40min). The busy tourist office is located on the rond point at the western end of cours Mirabeau at 2 place Général-de-Gaulle (June & Sept daily 8.30am–8pm; July & Aug 8.30am–9pm; Sept–May Mon–Sat 8.30am–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; ☎04.42.16.11.61, 🌐www.aixenprovencetourism.com), between avenue des Belges and avenue Victor-Hugo.

From mid-June to the end of July (festival time) your chances of getting a hotel room are pretty slim unless you've reserved a couple of months in advance at least. Outside this time, there is a decent range of accommodation to choose from.

Visa pass

The Visa Pour Aix et le Pays D'Aix grants a 20–50 percent discount on selected museums in and around Aix, in addition to a reduced rate at concerts and on local buses and half-price guided tours. It can be purchased at the tourist office or museums for €2.

Hotels

Des Arts 69 bd Carnot ☎04.42.38.11.77, ☎04.42.26.77.31. Very welcoming, though slightly noisy hotel, with the cheapest rooms to be found in the centre of Aix. You can't book, so turn up early. Quieter, more expensive rooms are at the back. ③

La Caravelle 29 bd Roi-René ☎04.42.21.53.05, ☎www.lacaravelle-hotel.com. By the boulevards to the southeast of the city. The more expensive (renovated) rooms overlook courtyard gardens. ④

Cardinal 22–24 rue Cardinale ☎04.42.38.32.30, ☎hotel-cardinal@wanadoo.fr. Clean, peaceful and welcoming establishment; great value. ④

De France 63 rue Espariat ☎04.42.27.90.15, ☎www.hoteldefrance-aix.com. Right in the centre and with very comfortable rooms. ④

Le Manoir 8 rue d'Entrecasteaux ☎04.42.26.27.20, ☎www.hotelmanoir.com. Comfortable and characterful old hotel in a central but discreet location with parking. Breakfast is taken in the sixteenth-century cloister. ④

Number One 10 cours des Minimes ☎04.42.64.45.01, ☎04.42.64.45.01. Fairly basic and it's on a busy road, but this is one of the cheapest options in Aix. ②

Paul 10 av Pasteur ☎04.42.23.23.89, ☎www.aix-en-provence.com/hotelpaul. Good value for Aix, with a garden. Rooms have private shower and phone and there are also some for three and four people. ②

 Des Quatre-Dauphins 54 rue Roux-Alphéran ☎04.42.38.16.39, ☎04.42.38.60.19. Old-world charm in the quartier Mazarin. ⑤

St-Christophe 2 av Victor-Hugo ☎04.42.26.01.24, ☎www.hotel-saintchristophe.com. Comfortable, air-con 1920s-style place above a popular brasserie, close to both the station and cours Mirabeau. ⑤

Hostels and campsites

Airotel Camping Chantecler rte de Nice, Val St-André ☎04.42.26.12.98, ☎04.42.27.33.53. 3km from the centre on bus #3 or #10, Expensive site in a big park surrounding a Provençal country house. €18.30 for two people and a tent. Open all year.

Camping Arc-en-Ciel rte de Nice, Pont des Trois Sautets ☎04.42.26.14.28, ☎campingarcenciel.free.fr. Located 3km southeast of town on bus #3, this is not a particularly cheap site but has very good facilities. €17.20 for two people and a tent. Closed Oct–March.

HI hostel 3 av Marcel-Pagnol ☎04.42.20.15.99, ☎04.42.59.36.12. Located 2km west of the centre, this hostel has small dorm rooms (€17), a restaurant, baggage deposit, tennis and volleyball courts, as well as sought-after parking. However they operate a midnight curfew and there are no cooking facilities. Take bus #4, direction “La Mayanelle”, stop “Vasarély”. Closed Christmas–Feb.

CROUS Cité Universitaire des Gazelles, 38 av Jules-Ferry ☎04.42.93.47.70. This student organization can sometimes find cheap rooms on one of Aix's two main campuses during July & Aug. Take bus #5, direction “Moulin de Testas”, stop “Moulin de Testas”. ①

△ Market produce, Aix-en-Provence

The City

The whole of the old city of Aix, clearly defined by its ring of boulevards and the majestic cours Mirabeau, is the great monument here, far more compelling than any one single building or museum within it. With so many streets alive with people, so many tempting restaurants, cafés and shops, plus the best markets in Provence, it's easy to pass several days wandering around without the need for any itinerary or destination. As a preliminary introduction to Aixois life, a café-stopping stroll beneath the gigantic plane trees that shade the cours Mirabeau is mandatory.

Veil Aix

To explore the network of jumbled little lanes and narrow roads that make up the heart of Aix, wander north from leafy cours Mirabeau to anywhere within the ring of cours and boulevards. The layout of Veil Aix is not designed to assist your sense of direction, but it hardly matters when there's a fountained square to rest at every 50m and a continuous architectural backdrop of treats from the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. On Saturdays, and to a lesser extent on Tuesdays and Thursdays, the centre is taken up with markets: fruit and veg on place Richelme and place de la Madeleine; produce of all kinds on place des Prêcheurs, from fresh fruit and vegetables to cheeses, dried wild mushrooms and olive oil; flowers on place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville; clothes on rues Peyresc, Rifle-Rafle, Bouteilles, Chaudronniers and Monclar; and a flea market on place de Verdun.

The church of the Madeleine (Sept–June Mon–Sat 8–11.30am & 3–5.30pm, Sun 8am–noon; July & Aug mornings only), on the central place des Prêcheurs, is decorated with paintings by Rubens and Van Loo (who was born in Aix in 1684), and a three-panel medieval Annunciation. On place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville, a delicate though fairly massive foot hangs over the architrave of the old corn exchange, now the post office. It belongs to the goddess Cybele, dallying with the masculine River Rhône. Just to the north, the Hôtel de Ville itself displays perfect classical proportions and embroidery in wrought iron above the door.

Rue Gaston-de-Saporta takes you up from place de Hôtel-de-Ville to the Cathédrale St-Sauveur (daily: 8am–noon & 2–6pm), a conglomerate of fifteenth- to sixteenth-century building, full of medieval art treasures. The best of these is a triptych commissioned by King René in 1475, Le Buisson Ardent. It is currently undergoing a lengthy restoration and may not return to its new home, the Chapel of St Lazare, until 2007; meanwhile regular DVD projections of it are shown on Tuesdays from 3pm.

A short way down from the cathedral, through place des Martyrs-de-la-Résistance, is the former bishop's palace, the Ancien Archevêché, housing the Musée des Tapisseries (daily except Tues 10am–12.30pm & 1.30–6.45pm; €2.50), a superb collection that includes a contemporary section, for which the definition of tapestry is broadened to include textiles made of rope, raffia or feathers. The Musée du Vieil Aix at 17 rue Gaston-de-Saporta (Tues–Sun: 10am–noon & 2.30–6pm; €4) is worth a glance while you're in this part of town. It has a set of religious marionettes and a huge collection of santons (Provençal crib figures).

Quartier Mazarin

Aix's other central museums are in the quartier Mazarin, south of cours Mirabeau, a beautiful mid-seventeenth-century residential district built on the orders of an archbishop, with the four-dolphin fountain of place des Quatre-Dauphins at its heart. On place St-Jean-de-Malte the most substantial of all Aix's museums, the Musée Granet (Wed–Mon 11am–6pm; €10), covers art and archeology. It exhibits the finds from the Oppidum d'Entremont (see below), a Celtic-Ligurian township 3km north of Aix, which flourished for about a hundred years, along with the remains of the Romans who routed them in 124 BC and established their city of Aquae Sextiae, the future Aix. The museum's paintings are a mixed bag – Italian, Dutch, French, mostly seventeenth to nineteenth century. The museum was re-opened in 2006 after two years of renovation to accommodate an exhibition marking 100 years since the death of the most famous Aixois painter, Paul Cézanne. Though the exhibition hosted over 100 works loaned from galleries around the world, those left on permanent display are a less impressive handful of minor canvases such as Bathsheba, The Bathers and Portrait of Madame. There are also two of his student drawings from when he studied on the ground floor of the building, at that time the art school Granet.

Beyond the centre

Cézanne used many studios in and around Aix but he finally had a house built for the purpose in 1902 at what is now 9 av Paul-Cézanne, overlooking Aix from the north. It was here that he painted the Grandes Baigneuses, the Jardinier Vallier and some of his greatest still lifes. The Atelier Cézanne (April–June & Sept 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–6pm; Oct–March 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €5.50; bus #20, stop “P. Cézanne”) is exactly as it was at the time of his death in 1906: coat, hat, wineglass and easel, the objects he liked to paint, his pipe, a few letters and drawings ... everything save the pictures he was working on.

Collective cultural life is the basis of the Cité du Livre in the old matchmaking factory at 8–10 rue des Allumettes, a short way southwest from the tourist office (Tues, Thurs & Fri noon–6pm, Wed & Sat 10am–6pm; free). Entered by doorways in the form of giant books leaning together as if on a shelf, it includes libraries, a cinema, theatre space, a videothèque d'art lyrique (where you can watch just about any French opera performance) and all manner of exhibitions. Since 1996 the complex has been the home base for the internationally renowned modernist dance company, Ballet Preljocaj.

For a totally different experience, both visually and conceptually, you can escape the sometimes cloying grandeur of seventeenth-century Aix by visiting the Fondation Vasarely on avenue Marcel-Pagnol in Jas-de-Bouffan, 4km west of the city centre (Mon–Sat: July & Aug 11am–1pm & 2–7pm; Sept–June 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; €7; bus #4, stop “V. Vasarely”). There are innumerable sliding showcases, showing images related to all the themes of architect/artist Vasarely's work, including his “plastic alphabet” and designs for apartment buildings. But the seven hexagonal spaces on the ground floor, each hung with six huge designs, is where you'll get the immediate impact of this extraordinary man's work.

And finally, 3km north of the city, the Oppidum d'Entremont (daily except Tues 9am–noon & 2–6pm; free; take bus #20 from cours Sextius) is the excavated site of the Gallic settlement which preceded the foundation of the town, predating the Roman conquest by more than 200 years. You'll find the remains of a fortified enclosure, spectacularly sited, as well as excavations of the residential and commercial quarters of the town.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

Aix is stuffed full of restaurants of every price and ethnic origin. Place des Cardeurs, just northwest of the Hôtel de Ville, is nothing but restaurant, brasserie and café tables, while rue de la Verrerie running south from the Hôtel de Ville and place Ramus have an immense variety of Indian, Chinese and North African restaurants. Rue des Tanneurs is a good street for low budgets. The café-brasseries on cours Mirabeau are also tempting, and in between them you'll find cheaper snackeries. More expensive are Aix's soft biscuits, the elliptical candied-fruit and almond-flavoured calissons. They're very good with a strong dark espresso. Local gourmet chocolatier Puyricard has a shop at 7 rue Rifle-Rafle.

Aix is too pretty to have gritty, urban nightlife. Instead students congregate around the fountains and cafés near cours Mirabeau until midnight when the bars on rue Verrerie get going. For jazz, rock & funk there's Le Scat at no.11 (📧www.lescatclub.aix.free.fr). If you'd rather a more mainstream disco, head for P.L.I.T. at no. 24 (☎06.12.58.86.79). For pubs with live music or DJs, try Le Manoir and O'Shannon at nos. 25 and 30 respectively. Heavy rock booms out next door at no. 32, at l'Elfike, Aix's Goth venue. Aix's gay bar is Méditerranéan Boys, 6 rue de la Paix, while another great jazz venue is Hot Brass, chemin d'Eguilles-Celony (☎04.42.23.13.12, 📧www.hotbrassaix.com).

Cafés and restaurants

L'Amphitryon 2-4 rue Paul-Doumer

☎04.42.26.54.10. Eclectic cuisine with market-fresh ingredients, served on a flower-drenched terrace in historical old Aix. An excellent restaurant which won't break the bank. Menu from €26. Closed Sun, Mon & second half Aug.

De l'Archevêché place des Martyrs-de-la-Résistance ☎04.42.21.43.57. Smart lunch spot with good midday pasta, tapas, tagines and salads from around €10.

Le Basilic Gourmand 6 rue du Griffon ☎04.42.96.08.58. Classic Provençal food, à la carte only from €14. Amiable staff, bric-a-brac decor and occasional live music. Closed Sun & Mon.

Le Bistrot Latin 18 rue Couronne ☎04.42.38.22.88. Superbly presented scallop and tapenade profiteroles and honey and garlic rabbit are two of the top dishes here. Lunch menu €16, evening from €21. Closed Sat, Sun & Mon lunch out of season.

Cay Tam 29 rue Verrerie ☎04.42.27.28.11. The best East Asian cooking in Aix. Vietnamese dishes are the main feature, but dim sum is also available. Menus from €15.50. Closed Mon & Tues, lunch Wed & Fri.

La Chimère 15 rue Brueys ☎04.42.38.30.00. New spin on French standards, with dishes like salad of octopus with Provençal herbs or roast sea bream with lemon, tian of vegetables and sauce vierge. Menu €26.50. Closed Sun.

Le Clos de la Violette 10 av de la Violette ☎04.42.23.30.71. Aix's most renowned restaurant serves dishes that might not sound very seductive, like stuffed lamb's feet, but are in fact gastronomic delights. More obviously alluring are the puddings: a clafoutis of greengages and pistachios with peach sauce and a tart of melting dark chocolate. Lunch menu €54, otherwise menus start at €130 and if you're going à la carte the plats alone start around €40. Closed Sun & Mon & Wed lunch & middle 2 weeks Aug.

Les Deux Garçons 53 cours Mirabeau. The erst-while haunt of Camus is done up in faded 1900s style and still attracts a motley assortment of literati. Good brasserie food, but not cheap (from €27.80). Service daily till midnight.

Le Jasmin 6 rue de la Fonderie ☎04.42.38.05.89. Tasty and distinctive Persian food for around €16.50. For dessert try the traditional Iranian choleh zard, a rice dish with saffron, spices and nuts. Closed Sun.

Kéops 28 rue de la Verrerie ☎04.42.96.59.05. Egyptian cuisine featuring falafel, stuffed pigeon and gorgeous milk-based desserts. Menu €10. Closed Wed lunch.

Lou Misträu 38 place des Cardeurs ☎04.42.96.98.69. Provençal restaurant with a €25 veggie menu, though watch out for the anchovies. Closed Sun & Mon in winter, plus Jan.

Pizza Chez Jo/Bar des Augustins place des Augustins ☎04.42.26.12.47. This place is usually packed for its cheap pizzas and traditional plats du jour. From €12. Closed Sun.

Le Platanos 13 rue Rifle-Rafle ☎04.42.21.33.19. Very cheap and popular Greek place with €10 lunch menu. Closed Sun & Mon.

Festivals

During the annual music festivals, Aix en Musique (world music, jazz, experimental and classical; June; ☎04.42.21.69.69) and the Festival International d'Art

Lyrique (opera and classical concerts; last two weeks of July; ☎04.42.17.34.34), the alternative scene – of street theatre, rock concerts and impromptu gatherings – turns the whole of Vieil Aix into one long party. Tickets for events range from €12 to €185 and can be obtained, along with programmes, from La Boutique du Festival at Espace Forbin, 11, rue Gaston de Saporta (☎04.42.17.34.34, 🌐www.festival-aix.com). Details of the Danse à Aix international dance festival (two weeks in mid-July) are available from 1 place Rewald off cours Gambetta (☎04.42.96.05.01).

Listings

Bike rental Cycles Zammit, 27 rue Mignet
☎04.42.23.19.53

Books Paradox Bookstore, 15 rue du 4-Septembre, or Book in Bar, 1bis rue Cabassol, for English books; Vents du Sud, 7 rue Maréchal-Foch, is the best French bookshop.

Car rental ADA Location, 1 av Henri-Mouret
☎04.42.52.36.36; Avis, 11 bd Gambetta
☎04.42.21.64.16; Europcar, 55 bd de la République
☎04.42.27.83.00; Rent a Car, 35 rue de la Molle
☎04.42.38.58.29.

Cinema The Cézanne, rue Marcel-Guillaume, sometimes screens English or American films in version originale, ie with the original soundtrack.

Emergencies Centre Hospitalier, av des Tamaris
☎04.42.33.90.28; SOS Médecins ☎04.42.26.24.00; for a late-night pharmacy, ring the gendarmarie on ☎04.42.26.31.96.

Internet Le Hublot, 17 rue Paul-Bert; Progamers, 14 Forum des Cardeurs; Virtualis, 40 rue des Cordeliers; Cyber@Vanloo, 20 rue Van Loo.

Laundry 15 rue Jacques de la Roque; 5 rue de la Fontaine; 60 rue Boulegon; 36 cours Sextius.

Money exchange L'Agence, 15 cours Mirabeau; Change Nazareth, 7 rue Nazareth; La Poste, 2 rue Lapierre.

Police place Niollon ☎04.42.91.91.11.

Post office 2 rue Lapierre.

Taxis ☎04.42.21.61.61; ☎04.42.27.71.11 (24hr).

Mont Ste-Victoire

Mont Ste-Victoire, a rough pyramid whose apex has been pulled off-centre, lies 10km east of Aix. Ringed at its base by the dark green and orange-brown of pine woods and cultivated soil, the limestone rock reflects light, turning blue, grey, pink or orange. In the last years of his life Cézanne painted and drew Ste-Victoire more than fifty times, and, as part of his childhood landscape, it came to embody the incarnation of life within nature.

You may, however, be more interested in climbing Mont Ste-Victoire and in the view from it, though hiking on the Mont, and many other summits in the area, is forbidden from July to mid-September. The southern face has a sheer 500-metre drop, but from the north the two-hour walk requires nothing more than determination. The GR9, also called the Chemin des Venturiers, leaves from a small car park on the D10 just before VAUVENARGUES, 14km east of Aix. Having reached the 945-metre ridge, marked by a monumental nineteenth-century cross that doesn't figure in any of Cézanne's pictures, you can follow the path east along the ridge to the summit of the massif and then descend south to PUYLOUBIER (about 15km from the cross; reckon on four and a half hours). Bring plenty of water and protection against the fierce sun if walking in hot weather. Much of the walk was badly affected by forest fires in 1989 and consequently, to guard against erosion, you're urged to stick to the path.

At Vauvenargues (several buses daily from the Aix gare routière), a perfect weather-beaten, red-shuttered fourteenth-century château (definitely not open to the public) stands just outside the village, with nothing between it and the slopes of Ste-Victoire. Picasso bought the château in 1958, lived there until his death and now lies buried in the gardens, his grave adorned with his sculpture Woman with a Vase. There is a friendly, good-value hotel in the village, Au Moulin de Provence, 33 rue de Maquisards (☎04.42.66.02.22; 📍), whose owners speak English.

Eastern Provence

In eastern Provence, it's the landscapes not the towns that dominate. The gentle hills and villages of the Haut-Var, the northern half of the Var département, make for happy exploration by car or bike, before the foothills of the Alps gradually close in, eventually reaching heights of over 3000m in the far north-eastern corner, around Barcelonnette. Winter visitors are almost exclusively skiers, while the summer brings a variety of dedicated hikers, birdwatchers, botanists and climbers. The Parc National du Mercantour is a conservation area in this mountainous terrain, but the most exceptional geographical feature is the Gorges du Verdon – Europe's answer to the Grand Canyon – in the heart of Provence.

Between Valence and Montélimar, the River Drôme joins the Rhône at Livron-sur-Drôme. Following the Drôme upstream by train towards Sisteron, or by road towards Sisteron or Barcelonnette, is one of the most dramatic ways of entering eastern Provence.

Haut-Var villages and Aups

Between ST-MAXIMIN-DE-LA-STE-BAUME, 35km east of Aix and famous for its supposed possession of the relics of Mary Magdalene, and DRAGUIGNAN, an unremarkable military town except for the wonderful Les Mille Colonne restaurant in place aux Herbes, a network of small roads wind through farmland, vineyards and woods and alongside streams and lakes, linking a dozen villages, all of which are ideal for Provençal-style loafing. The only problem is the general scarcity of accommodation.

East of the Lac de Carcès, between Cabasse and Carcès, off the D19, lies the last of the three great Cistercian monasteries of Provence. Even more so than Silvacane and Sénanque, the Abbaye du Thoronet (April–Sept Mon–Sat 10am–6.30pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–6.30pm; Oct–March Mon–Sat 10am–1pm & 2–5pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €6.50) has been unscathed by the vicissitudes of time, and during the Revolution was kept intact as a remarkable monument of history and art; today it is occasionally used for concerts. It was first restored in the 1850s, while a more recent campaign has brought it to clear-cut perfection. As with the other two abbeys, its interior spaces, delineated by walls of pale rose-coloured stone, are inspiring.

LORGUES, further east, has a serious gourmet stop in the restaurant Chez Bruno on route de Vidauban (☎04.94.85.93.93; closed Mon & Sun evening out of season; seasonal truffle menu at €120, à la carte around €59), where the truffle reigns supreme, appearing in myriad forms, even in desserts. There's a Terre des Truffes shop in an annexe to the main building, and space to land your helicopter. Heading 13km northwest, ENTRECASTEAUX has an ancient stone laundry by the river that's still used, and a very beautiful château (guided tours daily except Sat at 4pm; ☎04.94.04.43.95; €7).

COTIGNAC, 9km west of Entrecasteaux, is the Haut-Var village par excellence, with a shaded main square for pétanque and passages and stairways bursting with begonias, jasmine and geraniums leading through a cluster of medieval houses. More gardens sprawl at the foot of the bubbly rock cliff that forms the back wall of the village, threaded with troglodyte walkways.

North of Cotignac, SILLANS-LA-CASCADE has a beautiful walk, signposted off the main road, to an immense waterfall and aquamarine pool (about 20min). SALERNES, 6km east of Sillans, makes tiles and pottery and has the old-fashioned Relais de la Belle Époque hotel and restaurant on route de Sillans (☎04.94.70.60.30, 🌐www.lerelaisdelabellepoque.com; menus €25; 🍷). VILLE-CROZE and TOURTOUR to the northeast are both suitably picturesque. The Norwegian-owned Auberge des Lavandes, on place du Général-de-Gaulle in Villecroze (☎04.94.70.76.00, ☎04.94.70.56.45; 🍷), is one of the best-value hotels in the region, while in Tourtour, on route de Flayosc, you can shelter in total luxury at La Bastide de Tourtour (☎04.98.10.54.20, 🌐www.verdon.net/tourtour; 🍷). A second option in Tourtour, which won't break the bank, is La Petite Auberge (☎04.98.10.26.16, 🌐www.petiteauberge.net; 🍷). Between the two villages is a highly reputed restaurant, Les Chênes Verts (☎04.94.70.55.06; closed Tues eve & Wed), with a menu dégustation at €55.

Aups

As a base for visiting the villages of Haut-Var or the Gorges du Verdon, the small town of AUPS is ideal, as long as you have your own transport. It has a lot of charm and still depends to a large extent on agriculture rather than tourism. Scarcely more than a village itself, its speciality is truffles and, if you're here on a Thursday between November and mid-March, you can witness the truffle market.

On place Martin-Bidauré, which, along with place Frédéric-Mistral (Wed & Sat market), makes up the leafy open space before the start of the old town, a rare monument commemorates the town's citizens who died in 1851 defending the republic and its laws. The year was that of Louis Napoléon's coup d'état and establishment of the Second Empire. Peasant and artisan resistance was strongest in Provence, and the defeat of the insurgents was followed by a bloody massacre of men and women. This might explain the enormous République Française, Liberté, Égalité, Fraternité sign on the church of St-Pancrace, proclaiming it as state property. The church was designed by an English architect 400 years ago, and has recently had its doors restored by two local British carpenters.

Surprisingly for such a small place, Aups has a museum of modern art, the Musée Simon Segal in the former chapel of a convent on avenue Albert-1er (July & Aug daily 10am–noon & 4–7pm; €2.30). The best works are those by the Russian-born painter Simon Segal, but there are interesting local scenes in the other paintings, such as the Roman bridge at Aiguines, now drowned beneath the artificial lake of Sainte-Croix. Just outside Aups, 3.5km along the Tourtour road, is a sculpture park by local artist Maria de Faykod (daily except Tues: June 2–7pm; July & Aug 10am–noon & 3–7pm; Sept, Oct & Dec–May 2–6pm; closed Nov; €6), with dramatic human forms in marble.

Practicalities

The tourist office is part of the mairie on place Frédéric-Mistral (June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2.30–5.30pm; July & Aug daily 9am–12.30pm &

3–6.30pm; Sept–May Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; ☎04.94.84.00.69, 🌐membres.lycos.fr/otsiaups). All the hotels are good value: Le Provençal on place Martin-Bidauré (☎04.94.70.00.24, 📞04.94.84.06.25; 🍷) and the Grand Hôtel on place Duchâtel (☎04.94.70.10.82, 🌐www.grand-hotel-aups.com; closed March; 🍷) are both good inexpensive options. There are two campsites close to town: the two-star Camping Les Prés, to the right off allée Charles-Boyer towards Tourtour (☎04.94.70.00.93, 📞04.94.70.14.41; open all year; €12), with bikes to rent nearby, and the three-star Saint Lazare, 2km along the Moissac road (☎04.94.70.12.86, 📞04.94.70.01.55; closed Oct–March; €11.60), which has a pool.

For meals, your first choice should be the hotel-restaurant St-Marc (☎04.94.70.06.08, 🌐www.lesaintmarc.com 🍷; closed three weeks in November). Serving local dishes, truffles and boar in season, it offers menus at €16–30 (Sept–June closed Tues & Wed). For snacks, try the boulangerie-pâtisserie À la Claire Fontaine on place Général-Giraud or the Boulangier Arpsoise at 12 rue M.- Foch.

The Gorges du Verdon and around

From Aups, the road north leads to the western end of the Gorges du Verdon. A more dramatic approach crosses the vast military terrain of the Camp de Canjuers from Comps-sur-Artuby. The road runs west through 16km of deserted heath and hills, with each successive horizon higher than the last. When you reach the canyon, it's as if a silent earthquake had taken place during your journey.

This vantage point, known as the Balcons de la Mescla, is a memorable coup de théâtre, with the view withheld until you are almost upon it. You look down 250m to the base of the V-shaped, 21km-long gorge incised by the River Verdon through piled strata of limestone. Ever changing in its volume and energy, the river falls from Rougon at the top of the gorge, disappearing into tunnels, decelerating for shallow, languid moments and finally exiting in full, steady flow at the Pont de Galetas. The huge artificial Lac de Sainte-Croix, filled by the Verdon as it leaves the gorge, is great for swimming when the water levels are high; otherwise the beach becomes a bit sludgy. West from the Balcons runs the Corniche sublime, the D71, built expressly to give the most breathtaking and hair-raising views crossing the 182-metre Pont de l'Artuby. On the north side, the Route des Crêtes, the D952 is even more dramatic – not least because on some of the highest stretches there's nothing to stop you driving straight off into the abyss – but it's not so consistently scenic, even though at some points you look down a sheer 800m drop to the sliver of water below. The mid-section of the Route des Crêtes is one way (westbound only), so if you want to do it all you'll have to start from the more scenic eastern end. It closes each winter from November 15 to March 15.

The entire circuit around the gorge is 130km long and it's cycling country solely for the preternaturally fit. Even for drivers it's hard work, as the hidden bends and hairpins in the road are perilous and, in July and August, so is the traffic.

Public transport around the canyon is less than comprehensive. There's just one bus in each direction between Aix, Moustiers, La Palud, Rougon and Castellane on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday from July to mid-September and just once a week on a Saturday during the rest of the year.

The north side of the gorge: La Palud-sur-Verdon and Rougon

The loop of the Route des Crêtes joins at LA PALUD-SUR-VERDON, a tiny village on the northern face of the gorge and the best base from which to explore it. Life in the village revolves around the Lou Cafetie bar-restaurant. There are one or two other places to eat and a local produce market on Sunday.

The tourist office and the Maison de l'Environnement, showing an exhibition on the gorge, are off the main road in the château of La Palud (daily except Tues: mid-March to mid-June & mid-Sept to mid-Nov 10am–noon & 4–6pm; mid-June to mid-Sept 10am–1pm & 4–7pm; ☎ & 📞 04.92.77.32.02, 🌐 www.lapaludsurverdon.com; exhibition €4). Across the corridor, in the same smart building, is the mairie which provides an Internet access point (closed Mon). The Bureau des Guides (July & Aug Mon–Sat 10am–12.30pm & 4–7pm; other months hours erratic – call for information on ☎ 04.92.77.30.50), where you can find out about guided walks, climbing, canyoning, rafting and other activities, is on the main road nearby. UCPA (Union Nationale de Centres Sportifs de Plein Air) in Le Vignal (☎ 04.92.77.31.66, 🌐 www.uipa.com) has information on all Verdon activities, and is another contact point for guides, as is the climbing shop and restaurant Le Perroquet Vert (☎ 04.92.77.33.39, 🌐 www.leperroquetvert.com; menu €18).

If you want to stay, there's Le Provence on the route de la Maline (☎ 04.92.77.38.88, 🌐 www.hotel-le-provence-lapaludsurverdon.com; closed Nov–Easter; Ⓜ) and the slightly more expensive Auberge des Crêtes, 1km east towards Castellane (☎ 04.92.77.38.47, 📞 04.92.77.30.40; closed Nov–Easter; Ⓜ). The Auberge du Point Sublime, 8km to the east in ROUGON (☎ 04.92.83.60.35, 📞 04.92.83.74.31; Ⓜ), is stunningly situated and not wildly expensive. There's a municipal campsite, Le Grand Canyon, 800m from the village on the route de Castellane (☎ 04.92.77.38.13, 📞 04.92.77.30.87; tent and two people €9.20). If these are full, there are no fewer than five other campsites around the town. Two gîtes to try are L'Étable, on route des Crêtes in Palud (☎ 04.92.77.30.63), and L'Éscales, just outside the village on the Moustiers road (☎ 04.92.77.30.02; closed Nov–Easter), both offering accommodation for around €30. The Chalet de la Maline, on route des Crêtes 8km to the south of La Palud (☎ 04.92.77.38.05; closed mid-Nov to Easter; €35.15pp half-board), is a mountain refuge run by the Club Alpin Français, and is also a good trailhead from which to start descents into the gorge.

The south side of the gorge: Aiguines and the Falaise des Cavaliers

AIGUINES, perched high above the Lac de Sainte-Croix on its eastern side, has a turreted château (not open to the public) and a history of wood-turning – the boules for pétanque made from ancient boxwood roots used to be its speciality. There's some very expensive and beautiful woodwork, as well as pottery and faïence, to be viewed at the small commercial art gallery opposite the tourist office (Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5.30pm; ☎ 04.94.70.21.64, 🌐 www.aiguines.com).

For rooms, there's the hotel-restaurant Le Vieux Château (☎ 04.94.70.22.95, 🌐 www.hotelvieuxchateau.fr; Ⓜ, half-board compulsory; closed Nov–March), or the rather characterless Altitude 823 (☎ 04.98.10.22.17, 📞 04.98.10.22.16; €54pp half-board compulsory; closed Nov–March). Of the seven campsites in the vicinity, Le Galetas (☎04.94.70.20.48; closed mid-Oct to March; €12) is almost within diving distance of the lake, a long way down from the village. However, the best place to stay on the south side – as long as you don't suffer from vertigo – is the Hôtel du Grand Canyon du Verdon by the dramatic precipice of the Falaise des Cavaliers (☎04.94.76.91.31, ☎04.94.76.92.29; 📍; closed Nov–Easter) on the Corniche Sublime, a good 20km from Aiguines, with stunning views. The restaurant serves reasonable food.

West of the gorge: Moustiers-Ste-Marie, Riez and Quinson

The complex traffic management and long lines of parked cars on the approach to MOUSTIERS-STE-MARIE tell you all you need to know about the summer popularity of the place: once you reach the village, it's little more than a picturesque setting for a shopping expedition, since almost every house seems to be selling the pastel, pretty Moustiers faïence. But it is very picturesque, almost absurdly so: the backdrop of sheer cliffs and the single star suspended high above the village being the sort of view that launched a thousand calendars. You can best escape the shoppers by making the steep ascent to the appropriately named church of Notre Dame de Beauvoir, and it's all rather more appealing out of season. Just below the village is celebrity chef Alain Ducasse's luxurious hotel-restaurant 🍷 La Bastide de Moustiers (☎04.92.70.47.47, 🌐www.bastide-moustiers.com; 📍), set in a seventeenth-century country house, with menus from €75. It's idyllic, except perhaps when the helicopter pad is in use. A more down-to-earth but just as lovely option is the chambre d'hôte Clerissy (☎04.92.74.62.67, 🌐www.clerissy.fr; 📍), place du Chevalier de Blacas, in the centre of the village, which also has a colourful restaurant with a €15 menu.

A more unspoilt village is low-key RIEZ, 15km west of Moustiers, where the main business is derived from the lavender fields that cover this corner of Provence. Just over the river on the road south is a lavender distillery making essence for the perfume industry. At the other end of the town, 1km along the road to Digne, is the Maison de l'Abeille (House of the Bee), a research and visitors' centre (June–Sept daily 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–7.30pm; Oct–May Tues–Sat 2–6pm; free). Visitors can buy various honeys (including the local speciality, lavender honey) and hydromel – the honey alcohol of antiquity made from nectar – and, if you show interest, you'll get an enthusiastic tour.

In size, Riez is more village than town, but it soon becomes clear that it was once more influential than it is now. Some of the houses on Grande-Rue and rue du Marché – the two streets above the main allées Louis-Gardiol – have rich Renaissance facades, and the Hôtel de Ville on place Quinquonces is a former episcopal palace. The scant remains of the sixth-century cathedral (freely visited), which was abandoned 400 years ago, have been excavated just across the river from allées Louis-Gardiol. Much more impressive is the baptistry across the road (mid-June to mid-Sept Mon, Tues, Fri & Sat 3–7pm; €2), restored in the nineteenth century but originally constructed, like the cathedral, around 600 AD. If you recross the river and follow it downstream, you'll find the even older and much more startling relics of four Roman columns standing in a field.

A rather more strenuous walk, heading first for the clock tower above Grande-Rue and then taking the path past the cemetery and on uphill (leaving the cemetery to your left), brings you to a cedar-shaded platform on the hilltop where the pre-Roman Riezians lived. The only building now occupying the site is the eighteenth-century Chapelle Ste-Maxime, with a gaudily patterned interior.

The tourist office is on place de la Marie (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 3–7pm, Sun 9am–1pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 8.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–6pm; ☎04.92.77.99.09, 🌐www.ville-riez.fr). For accommodation, there's an executive-style hotel on the other side of the river, the Hôtel Carina (☎04.92.77.85.43, 📞04.92.77.85.44; 🍷; closed Nov–Easter), with views and comfort to make up for its lack of character. Alternatively head out of town on the route de Valensole, where 1km off the main road you'll find the excellent-value Château de Pontfrac (☎04.92.77.78.77, 🌐www.chateaudepontfrac.com; 🍷), with a swimming pool and access to facilities such as riding stables (bring your own horse). If you want to eat in the village and aren't in a rush, try Le Rempart on 17 rue du Marché, next to the bell tower (☎04.92.77.89.54); the Provençal and Italian dishes are superb, and a two- to three-hour meal for most diners seems to be the norm. Lunch menus start at €13, dinners from €21.

Some 21km south of Riez along the D11, the village of QUINSON marks the start of the Basses Gorges du Verdon, which if you haven't seen the upper gorge will probably strike you as dramatically scenic. The chief attraction here, however, is the Musée du Préhistoire des Gorges du Verdon, route de Montmeyan (Feb, March & Oct–Dec daily except Tues 10am–6pm; April–June & Sept daily except Tues 10am–7pm; July & Aug daily 10am–8pm; €7), designed by the British architect Sir Norman Foster in a clean and sympathetic modern style, so that despite its immense size it does not dominate the village. It's the largest museum of human prehistory in Europe, using the latest audio-visual techniques to chart one million years of human habitation in Provence. In addition to the museum itself, there's a themed path leading past reconstructed prehistoric homes to the cave of Baume Bonne (guided visits by arrangement), the most important of the sixty or so archeological sites around Quinson. Excavations here have traced human habitation back 400,000 years.

Castellane

Few towns can have as dramatic a setting as CASTELLANE, east of the gorge, 12km upstream from La Palud on the Route Napoléon (see opposite), and sitting at the foot of an immense rock face topped by a chapel, Notre Dame du Roc. Billed as the “gateway” to the Gorges du Verdon, Castellane's chief business is the servicing of activity-based tourism. Houses in the old part of town huddle together as if seeking protection from the sheer violence of the landscape, with some lanes barely shoulder-wide. There's not a lot to see, so you might as well climb up to the chapel – thirty minutes from behind the modern church. The gorge itself is out of sight, but the view is still worth the trouble.

The tourist office, at the top of rue Nationale (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.92.83.61.14, 🌐www.castellane.org), can provide a full list of the many hotels and campsites in the village and its environs. The Auberge Bon Accueil on place Marcel-Sauvaire (☎04.92.83.62.01, 🌐www.auberge-du-bon-accueil.com; 🍷; closed mid-Oct to mid-March) is one of the cheapest, while the three-star Hôtel du Commerce on place de l'Église (☎04.92.83.61.00, 🌐www.hotel-fradet.com; 🍷; closed Nov–Feb) is the swanky option, and has a beautiful garden restaurant serving amazing Provençal menus from €20 up. The eleven switch-back bends to 🏠 Chambres d'Hôtes Chasteuil (☎04.92.83.72.45, 🌐www.gitedechasteuil.com; 🍷), in a small village by the same name 9km west of Castellane, are well worth it: the six rooms in the old stone school house all have views down the gorge. The closest campsite to town, a mere hundred metres off place Marcel-Sauvaire on boulevard Frédéric-Mistral, is Le Frédéric Mistral (☎04.92.83.62.27, closed mid-Nov to Feb). Castellane is full of adventure activity specialists offering everything from canyoning to canoeing on the Lac de Castellane and the Gorges du Verdon. For information, go to Aqua Verdon at 8 rue Nationale (☎04.92.83.72.75), or try Aboard Rafting (☎04.92.83.76.11) on place de l'Église, or Aqua Viva Est (☎04.92.83.75.74) on boulevard de la République, both of which also rent out mountain bikes.

The Route Napoléon to Sisteron

North of Castellane, the Route Napoléon passes through the barren scrubby rocklands of some of the most obscure and empty parts of Provence. The road was built in the 1930s to commemorate the great leader's journey north through Haute-Provence on return from exile on Elba in 1815, in the most audacious and vain recapture of power in French history. Using mule paths still deep with winter snow, Napoleon and his 700 soldiers forged ahead towards Digne-les-Bains and Sisteron on their way to Grenoble – a total of 350km – in just six days. One hundred days later, he lost the battle of Waterloo and was permanently incarcerated on the island of St Helena.

At Barrême, the road is joined by the narrow-gauge Chemin de Fer de la Provence (see box, p.1179), also known as the Train des Pignes, which runs between Nice and Digne-les-Bains. Other stations on the line are Annot and St-André-les-Alpes; though neither has bus connections with Castellane, the town is connected to both Nice and Marseille by bus. Local tourist offices will have timetables.

Digne-les-Bains

The spa town of DIGNE-LES-BAINS is the chief town of the Alpes-de-Haute-Provence département, and lies in a superb position between the Durance valley and the start of the real mountains. A retirement town, it bustles by day but is rather lifeless in the evening. The surrounding area has particular attractions for geologists and admirers of Tibet. Covering over 150,000 hectares to the north and east of Dignes, the Réserve Naturelle Géologique de Haute-Provence is the largest geological reserve in Europe, with fossils dating back 300 million years. The starting point is the Musée-Promenade (April–Oct daily 9am–noon & 2–5.30pm, closes Fri 4.30pm; Nov–March Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5.30pm; €4.60; ☎04.92.36.70.70) just north of the city, down to the left after the bridge across the Bléone on the Barles road, with extremely good videos, workshops and exhibitions on the reserve, and a new gallery of fossilized insects. Themed walks fan out from the museum. A couple of kilometres further along the Barles road you can see, on a bank to your left, a wall of ammonites.

The town's connection with Tibet is through the explorer Alexandra David-Neel, who managed to spend two months in the forbidden city of Lhasa disguised as a beggar in 1924. She spent the last years of her long life in Digne, dying there at the age of 101, and her house, Samten Dzong, at 27 av du Maréchal-Juin, is now home to the Musée Alexandra David-Neel (guided visits only; July–Sept at 10am, 2pm, 3.30pm & 4.30pm; Oct–June at 10am, 2pm & 4pm; free), devoted to her memory. The Dalai Lama himself has visited the place twice. Also a cut above the normal is the town's recently renovated municipal museum, the Musée Gassendi at 64 bd Gassendi (daily except Tues: April–Sept 11am–7pm; Oct–March 1.30–5.30pm; €4), with some great sixteenth- to nineteenth-century paintings and homages to local seventeenth-century mathematician and savant Pierre Gassendi.

The tourist office is on the rond-point du 11–Novembre–1918 (June–Sept Mon–Sat 8.45am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sun 10am–noon; Oct–May Mon–Sat 8.45am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎ 04.92.36.62.62, 🌐 www.ot-dignelesbains.fr), with the gare routière adjacent. The gare Chemins de Fer de la Provence is to the west over the river on avenue Pierre-Sémard; there are no longer any passenger trains from the adjacent gare SNCF. A very cheap hotel option is Origan, 6 rue Pied-de-Ville (☎ 04.92.31.62.13, 🌐 www.origan.fr; 📍), with an excellent restaurant which has menus starting at €18 (closed Mon). Le Grand Paris, 19 bd Thiers (☎ 04.92.31.11.15, 🌐 www.hotel-grand-paris.com; 📍; closed Dec–Feb), is considerably more luxurious and also has a good, though expensive, restaurant (closed midday Mon & Tues out of season; €25 lunchtime menu Mon–Sat, otherwise from €41).

Sisteron

The Route Napoléon leads eventually to SISTERON, 25km northwest of Digne as the crow flies, and the most important mountain gateway to Provence. The site has been fortified since time immemorial and even now, half destroyed by the Anglo-American bombardment of 1944, its citadel stands as a fearsome sentinel over the city and the solitary bridge across the River Durance.

A visit to the citadelle (April–Nov daily 9am–dusk; €5) is highly rewarding, with 360-degree views from the upper rampart, while far below a superbly atmospheric subterranean passage leads down 280 steps to another vantage point, though the door at the bottom is frequently locked. There is a leaflet in English but no guides, just recordings in French attempting to re-create historic moments, such as Napoleon's march, of course, and the imprisonment in 1639 of Jan Kazimierz, the future king of Poland. Most of the extant defences were constructed after the Wars of Religion, and added to a century later by Vauban when Sisteron was a front-line fort against neighbouring Savoy. The eleventh-century castle was destroyed in the mid-thirteenth century during a pogrom against the local Jewish population.

In July and August, the festival known as Nuits de la Citadelle has open-air performances of music, drama and dance in the citadel grounds. There is also a small historical museum with a room dedicated to Napoleon, and temporary art exhibitions in the vertiginous late-medieval chapel, Notre-Dame-du-

△ Sisteron

Château, restored to its Gothic glory and given very beautiful subdued stained-glass windows in the 1970s.

Back in Sisteron's old town, you'll see three huge towers, which belonged to the ramparts built in 1370. Beside them is the Cathédrale Notre-Dame-des-Pommiers (daily 3–6pm), a well-proportioned twelfth-century church whose entryway is flanked by marble columns, but whose interior contains nothing of interest. From the cathedral, rue Deleuze leads to place de l'Horloge, where the Wednesday and Saturday market is held and which, on the second Saturday of every month, hosts a fair. If you fancy a swim, there's a large artificial lake between the allée de Verdon and the river.

Practicalities

Arriving by train at Sisteron, turn right out of the gare SNCF along avenue de la Libération until you reach place de la République, where you'll find the tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–noon & 2–5pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.92.61.12.03, 🌐www.sisteron.com) and the gare routière. The genteel and old-fashioned Grand Hôtel du Cours on allée de Verdon (☎04.92.61.04.51, ✉hotelducours@wanadoo.fr; 📍; closed mid-Nov to mid-March), is the best hotel in town. For cheaper rooms, head for La Citadelle (see below). Sisteron's four-star campsite is across the river and 3km along the D951 (☎04.92.61.19.69; closed Nov–Feb; €13 for two people and a tent).

The food in Sisteron's restaurants is nothing special, though the view down the valley from the terrace of the Hôtel-Restaurant de la Citadelle, 126 rue Saunerie, certainly is (☎06.82.67.80.76, ☎04.92.61.06.39; 📍; menus from €14). Le Cours, on the allée de Verdon (☎04.92.61.00.50), serves copious meals, with the renowned gigot d'agneau de Sisteron included on a €20 menu, and you'll find plenty of eating places along rue Saunerie and on the squares around the clock tower. Le Mondial bar, on the left at the top of rue Droite, stays open late, as does L'Horloge on place de l'Horloge.

Northeast Provence

Depending on the season, the northeastern corner of Provence is two different worlds. In winter, the sheep and shepherds find warmer pastures, leaving the snowy heights to horned moufflons, chamois and the perfectly camouflaged ermine. The villages where shepherds came to summer markets are battened down for the long, cold haul, while modern conglomerations of Swiss-style chalet houses, sports shops and discotheques come to life around the ski lifts. From November to May many of the mountain road passes are closed, cutting off the dreamy northern town of Barcelonnette from its lower neighbours.

In spring, the fruit trees in the narrow valley orchards blossom, and melting waters swell the Vésubie, the Tinée and the Roya, sometimes flooding villages and carrying whole streets away. In summer and early autumn you move from the valleys to the snow-capped peaks through groves of chestnut and olive trees,

NORTHEAST PROVENCE

Gap

Castellane

The Parc National du Mercantour

The Parc National du Mercantour is a long, narrow band of mountainland running for 75km close to the Italian border, from south of the town of Barcelonnette almost as far as Sospel, 16km north of the Mediterranean. The area is a haven for wildlife, with colonies of chamois, mouflon, ibex and marmots, breeding pairs of golden eagles and other rare birds of prey, great spotted woodpeckers and hoopoes, blackcocks and ptarmigan. In recent years grey wolves have begun returning to the area from neighbouring Italy, since disappearing in the 1930s. The flora too is very special, with many unique species of lilies, orchids and Alpine plants, including the rare multi-flowering saxifrage.

The park is crossed by numerous paths, including the GR5 and GR52, with refuge huts providing basic food and bedding for hikers. For more detailed information, contact the Maisons du Parc in Barcelonnette, St-Étienne-de-Tinée or St-Martin-Vésubie, which can provide maps and accommodation details as well as advice on footpaths and weather conditions. Camping, lighting fires, picking flowers, playing radios or doing anything that might disturb the delicate environment is strictly outlawed.

then pine forests edged with wild raspberries and bilberries, up to moors and grassy slopes covered with Alpine flowers.

An uninhabited area of 68,500 hectares along the Italian border has been designated the Parc National du Mercantour (see box above). It can be explored from the small towns of St-Étienne-de-Tinée, St-Martin-Vésubie, St-Sauveur-sur-Tinée and from the upper Roya valley, but all the countryside in this mountainous region is breathtaking. To the south, the Italianate town of Sospel is a real delight.

Transport other than by foot or vehicle is a problem. Apart from the Turin–Nice train line down the Roya valley, there are regular bus connections going out from Barcelonnette or from Sospel but they don't meet, and there are only infrequent buses between villages on market days.

Barcelonnette

BARCELONNETTE, at the centre of the Vallée de L'Ubaye, is a place of immaculate charm, with snow-capped mountains visible at every turn. It's not very big, and a more ideal spot for doing nothing would be hard to find. The central square, place Manuel, has café tables from which to gaze at the blue sky or at the white clock tower commemorating the centenary of the 1848 Revolution. It's close to several ski resorts and to the northern edge of the Parc du Mercantour.

The Maison du Parc for the Mercantour (summer only: June 15–30 & Sept 1–15 daily 3–6pm; July & Aug 10am–noon & 3–7pm; ☎04.92.81.21.31, 🌐www.parc-mercantour.com) shares premises at 10 av de la Libération with the Musée de la Vallée (June & Sept Tues–Sat 3–6pm; July & Aug 10am–noon & 2.30–7pm; Oct–May groups by arrangement; €3.20), which details the popular emigration to Mexico during the nineteenth century. Barcelonnette is full of Mexican connections (many came back with fortunes); during the August Mexican festival, the Maison du Mexique, opposite the Musée de la Vallée, puts on films and exhibitions.

Barcelonnette's tourist office is on place Frédéric-Mistral (July & Aug daily 9am–8pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.92.81.04.71, 🌐www.barcelonnette.com). The best place to stay is the Mexican-style Azteca on rue François-Arnaud (☎04.92.81.46.36, 🌐www.hotel-azteca.fr.st; 📍), closely followed by the Grande Épervière, 18 rue des Trois-Frères-Arnaud (☎04.92.81.00.70, 🌐www.hotel-grande-eperviere.com; 📍). Le Cheval Blanc, 12 rue Grenette (☎04.92.81.00.19; 📍), is one of the cheaper options and its restaurant has a menu with local trout for €48. There are three campsites, the closest being the three-star Du Plan at 52 av E.-Aubert (☎04.92.81.08.11, 🌐www.campingduplan.com; closed late Sept to mid-May; €11.16 for two people and a tent).

The best restaurant in the area is 9km east in Jausiers: Villa Morella (☎04.92.84.67.78, 🌐www.villa-morelia.com) is a Mexican place serving nouvelle cuisine (menu €60). Back in Barcelonnette, and continuing the South American theme, try the small and atmospheric 🍷 L'Argentine at 4 place St-Pierre (☎06.22.81.44.35; à la carte from €15) for grilled meats. Be sure also to sample the local juniper liquor, Genepy, produced by the distiller La Maison Rousseau at La Fresquière, 10km from Barcelonnette, but generally available in the town on market days. Nightlife is limited to the bars St-Tropez and Chocas on place Manuel. For Internet access head to Le Cyber Truc, rue Saint-Dominique (☎04.92.81.57.50).

Barcelonnette to Sospel

The road across the Cime de la Bonette pass (the D64 from Barcelonnette), claimed to be the highest in Europe, reaches over 2800m and gives a feast of high-altitude views, winding past a string of desolate and abandoned bunkers and military outposts. It's only open for three months of the year, from the end of June until September. The air is cold even in summer and the green and silent spaces of the approach to the summit, circled by barren peaks, are magical. There's no transport over the pass, but from Barcelonnette you can take a bus (July & Aug Wed & Fri) to Jausiers at the route's north end, and hike or hitch from there to St-Étienne, from where you can then connect to Nice and points between.

Once over the pass, you descend into the Tinée valley and its highest town, ST-ÉTIENNE-DE-TINÉE, which comes to life only during its sheep fairs, held twice every summer, and the Fête de la Transhumance at the end of June. On the west side of the town off boulevard d'Auron, a cable car then chair lift climb to the summit of La Pinatelle (€6.90), linking the village to the ski resort of AURON. In summer a handful of the lifts are open to hikers and mountain bikers (July & Aug; €8.30 day) while in winter the 21 lifts and 135km of trails are used by skiers (Dec–April; €26.30 day). Georges Sports 2000 in St-Étienne-de-Tinée (☎04.93.02.45.95) rents bikes in summer and ski equipment in winter.

There are two welcoming hotel-restaurants on offer: the Regalivou, boulevard d'Auron (☎ & ☎04.93.02.49.00; 📍), and Des Amis, 1 rue Val-Gélé (☎ & ☎04.93.02.40.30; 📍). On the edge of the village, you'll find a small campsite (summer only, from June 5; ☎04.93.02.41.57) adjacent to the Maison du Parc (July & Aug daily 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm; Sept–June Mon, Tues, Thurs & Fri 8.30am–noon, Wed, Sat & Sun 2–6pm; ☎04.93.01.42.27).

The next stretch downstream from St-Étienne has nothing but white quartz and heather, with only the silvery sound of crickets competing with the water's roar before reaching Isola, an uneventful village at the bottom of the climb to the purpose-built ski resort of ISOLA 2000 (🌐www.isola2000.com), a jumble of concrete apartment blocks high in the mountain, built to accommodate skiers using the 22 lifts and 120km of piste (Dec–April; €26.30 day).

After Isola, the road – now the D2205 – and river turn south through the Gorges de Valabre to ST-SAUVEUR-SUR-TINÉE, a pleasantly sleepy place, with a useful, if pricey, boulangerie on place de la Mairie selling general provisions (daily except Tues 1–4pm). Shifting east to the Vésubie valley, you come to the lovely little town of ST-MARTIN-VÉSUBIE where a cobbled, narrow street with a channelled stream runs through the old quarter beneath the overhanging roofs and balconies of Gothic houses. Of the four hotels, try La Bonne Auberge (☎ 04.93.03.20.49, 🌐 www.labonneauberge06.fr; ②) or Edward's et la Châtaigneraie (☎ 04.93.03.21.22, ☎ 04.93.03.33.99; ③; closed Oct–May), both on the allées de Verdon. The closest campsite is the Ferme St-Joseph (☎ 04.93.03.20.14; all year), on the route de Nice by the lower bridge over La Madone. The most pleasant restaurant in St-Martin is La Triappa on place du Marché (closed Dec & Jan; menus €17–22), which serves local dishes. The tourist office on place Félix-Faure (July–Aug daily 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2.30–6pm, Sun 10am–noon; ☎ 04.93.03.21.28, 🌐 www.saintmartinvesubie.fr) provides details on walks and gîtes/refuges in the vicinity as well as information on Alpha (🌐 www.alpha-loup.com; daily 10am–5pm; €9) a wolf reserve, which despite its lack of information and signage in English makes an interesting visit, particularly in spring when you can see newborn puppies from three observation points.

Sospel and the Roya valley

The D2566 from the Vésubie valley crosses the dramatic col de Turini, forming part of the Routes des Grandes Alpes, to join the Roya valley at SOSPEL, a dreamy Italianate town spanning the gentle River Bévéra. You may find it over-tranquil after the excitements of the high mountains or the flashy speed of the Côte d'Azur, but it can make a pleasant break.

The main street, avenue Jean-Médecin, follows the river on its southern bank. The central bridge, the Vieux Pont, was built in the eleventh century to link the town centre on the south bank with its suburb across the river. The best approach to the old town is from the eastern place St-Pierre, along the gloomy, deeply shadowed rue St-Pierre. Suddenly it opens up into place St-Michel, one of the most beautiful series of peaches-and-cream Baroque facades in all Provence, made up of the Église St-Michel, two chapels and several arcaded houses. The road behind the church, rue de l'Abbaye, reached by steps between the chapels, leads up to an ivy-covered castle ruin, from which you get a good view of the town. An even better view can be had from the Fort St-Roch, part of the ignominious interwar Maginot Line, along chemin de St-Roch, which houses the Musée de la Résistance, illustrating the courageous local Resistance movement during World War II (April–June & Oct Sat & Sun 2–6pm; July–Sept Tues–Sun 2–6pm; €5).

The gare SNCF is southeast of the town on avenue A.-Borriglione, which becomes avenue des Martyrs-de-la-Résistance, before leading down to the park on place des Platanes opposite place St-Pierre. The tourist office, 19 av Jean-Médecin (Mon 2.30–5.30pm, Tues–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–5.30pm, Sun 9.30am–12.30pm; ☎ 04.93.04.15.80, 🌐 www.sospel-tourisme.com). If you want to stay, the Hôtel de France, 9 bd de Verdun (☎ 04.93.04.00.01, ☎ 04.93.04.20.46; ④), and the Auberge Provençale, on route du Col de Castillon, 1500m uphill from the town (☎ 04.93.04.00.31, 🌐 www.aubergeprovençale.fr; ⑦), offer comparable quality, the latter with a pleasant garden and terrace from which to admire the town. There are three campsites around Sospel, the closest of which is Le Mas Fleuri in quartier La Vasta (☎ 04.93.04.03.48, 🌐 www.camping-mas-fleuri.com; all year; €14.50 for two people and a tent), with its own pool, 2km along the D2566 to Moulinet, following the river upstream.

There are various eating places along avenue Jean-Médecin. Alternatively, try Relais du Sel, 3 bd de Verdun (☎04.93.04.00.43; closed Thurs & Nov), just across the eastern bridge, where you can eat for €20–30 on a terrace above the river.

The upper Roya valley

One of the strangest sights in the Provençal Alps is best approached from ST-DALMAS-DE-TENDE in the upper Roya valley, three stops on the train from Sospel. The first person to stumble upon the lakes and tumbled rocks of the Vallée des Merveilles, on the western flank of Mont Bego, was a fifteenth-century traveller who had lost his way. He described it as “an infernal place with figures of the devil and thousands of demons scratched on the rocks”: a pretty accurate description, except that some of the carvings are of animals, tools, people working and mysterious symbols, dated to some time in the second millennium BC.

The easiest route into the valley is the ten-kilometre hike (5–7hr there and back) that starts at Les Mesches Refuge, about 8km west of St-Dalmas-de-Tende, on the D91. The engravings are beyond the Refuge des Merveilles. Note that certain areas are out of bounds unless accompanied by an official guide – and remember that blue skies and sun can quickly turn into violent hailstorms and lightning, so go prepared, properly shod and clothed, and take your own food and water. Guided walks depart from the refuge and last between 2hr 30min and 3hr 30min (June, Sept & Oct weekends only, 8am & 1pm; July–Aug daily 8am, 11am, 1pm, 3pm; €8; contact Maison du Parc in Tende ☎04.93.04.67.00 or local tourist offices; one guide speaks English).

St-Dalmas is the nearest town to the Vallée des Merveilles and has a reasonably priced hotel on rue des Martyrs-de-la-Résistance, the Terminus (☎04.93.04.96.96, 🌐www.hoteterminus.fr; 📍), named after the large abandoned station opposite, built by Mussolini to transport salt from the mountains.

LA BRIGUE, one stop up the line from St-Dalmas-de-Tende, is a good base for the Vallée des Merveilles, with some good-value hotels. While you're here, make the trip 4km east of town to the sanctuary of Notre-Dame-des-Fontaines, whose frescoes were executed by one Jean Canavésio at around the same time as the anonymous fifteenth-century traveller was freaking out about the demons of the Vallée des Merveilles. The frescoes, which cover the entire building, are akin to an arcade of video nasties. The goriest detail is a devil extracting Judas's soul from his disembowelled innards. The chapel is open in the summer (June–Sept daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–5.30pm; closed Thurs afternoon; €1.50), and in the winter you can visit it with a guide from the tourist office on place St-Martin (summer daily 9am–12.30pm & 1.30–5pm; winter Tues–Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–4.30pm; ☎04.93.04.60.04, 🌐www.labrigue-tourisme.org; closed mid-Jan to mid-Feb). The three hotels in La Brigue are: Le Mirval, rue Vincent-Ferrier (☎04.93.04.63.71, 🌐www.lemirval.com; 📍); Auberge St-Martin (☎04.93.04.62.17, 🌐www.auberge-st-martin.fr; closed mid-Nov to Feb; 📍) and the Flours des Alpes (☎04.93.04.61.05, ☎04.93.04.59.68; 📍), both on place St-Martin.

One more stop north on the train line brings you to TENDE, where the French spoken has a distinctly Italian accent. If you've missed the Vallée des Merveilles engravings you can see them reproduced outside the beautifully designed Musée des Merveilles on avenue du 16-Septembre-1947 (May to mid-Oct daily 10am–6.30pm; mid-Oct to April daily except Tues 10am–5pm;

€4.57), a very contemporary museum covering the wildlife, prehistory and geology of the region. That apart, the old town is fun to wander through, looking at the symbols of old trades on the door lintels, the overhanging roofs and multiple balconies. The tourist office is at 103 16-Septembre-1947 (May–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; Oct–April Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–5.30pm; ☎04.93.04.73.71, 🌐www.tendemerveilles.com). For accommodation, there's the basic Du Centre on place de la République (☎04.93.04.62.19; 🚻; closed Nov–March). Tende has plenty of shops and restaurants, though nothing very special on the gourmet front.

Travel details

Trains

Aix-en-Provence to: Briançon (2–3 daily; 3hr 40min); Marseille (every 30min; 30–45min); Sisteron (3–4 daily; 1hr 20min).

Aix-en-Provence TGV to: Avignon TGV (15 daily; 25min); Lille-Europe (3 daily; 5hr); Lyon (10 daily; 1hr 25min); Marseille (12 daily; 15min); Paris (10 daily; 3hr); Paris CDG Airport (3 daily; 3hr 20min); Valence TGV (6 daily; 1hr).

Arles to: Avignon (11–16 daily; 20min); Avignon TGV (4 daily; 40min); Lyon (9 daily; 2hr 45min); Marseille (frequent; 45min–1hr).

Avignon to: Arles (hourly; 20–45min); Cavailon (9–14 daily; 30min); Lyon (8–11 daily; 2hr 20min); Marseille (4–13 daily; 1hr 20min); Orange (every 15min–1hr; 15–25min); Valence (half-hourly at peak times; 1hr 25min).

Avignon TGV to: Aix-en-Provence TGV (9 daily; 25min); Lille-Europe (5 daily; 4hr 30min); Lyon (13 daily; 1hr 30min); Marseille (12 daily; 30min); Paris (8 daily; 2hr 40min); Paris CDG Airport (6 daily; 3hr 30min); Valence TGV (9 daily; 30–40min).

Digne to: Nice (4 daily; 3hr 20min).

Lyon (La Part-Dieu or Perrache) to: Annecy (8 daily; 2hr 15min); Arles (9 daily; 2hr 45min); Avignon (11 daily; 2hr 20min); Avignon TGV (13 daily; 1hr 30min); Bourg-en-Bresse (8–14 daily; 50min–1hr 15min); Clermont-Ferrand (5–8 daily; 3hr); Dijon (13–18 daily; 2hr); Grenoble (16–21 daily; 1hr 15min–2hr); Lille-Europe (9 daily; 3hr 10min); Marseille (every 2hr; 2hr 10min–3hr 45min); Montélimar (9 daily; 1hr 35min); Orange (8 daily; 2hr 5min); Paris (hourly; 2hr); Paris CDG Airport (8 daily; 2hr 10min); Roanne (hourly; 1hr 30min); St-Étienne (hourly, more frequent at peak times; 45min–1hr); Tain l'Hermitage (hourly; 1hr); Valence (hourly; 1hr 5min); Valence TGV (11–18 daily; 35min); Vienne (frequent; 20min).

Lyon St-Exupéry TGV to: Paris (5 daily; 1hr 50min).

Sospel to: La Brigue (1–3 daily; 40min); Nice (5–6 daily; 50min); St-Dalmas-de-Tende (3 daily; 40min); Tende (3 daily; 50min).

Valence to: Briançon (3–4 daily; 4hr); Die (3–5 daily; 1hr 10min); Gap (3–5 daily; 2hr 30min); Grenoble (18–20 daily; 1hr 15min–1hr 40min); Lyon (hourly; 1hr 5min); Montélimar (frequent; approx hourly at peak times; 30min); Tain l'Hermitage (frequent; 12min).

Valence TGV to: Aix-en-Provence TGV (6 daily; 1hr); Avignon TGV (9 daily; 35min); Lyon (11–18 daily; 35min); Marseille (13 daily; 1hr 10min); Paris (9 daily; 2hr 10min).

Vienne to: Lyon (frequent; 20–30min); Valence (frequent; 50min).

Buses

Aix-en-Provence to: Apt (2 daily; 1hr 55min); Arles (6 daily; 1hr 30min); Avignon (10 daily; 1hr 15min); Barcelonnette (1 daily; 3hr 5min); Carpentras (2 daily; 1hr 40min); Cavailon (2 daily; 1hr); Draguignan (2 daily; 2hr 55min); Les Baux (1 daily; 1hr 10min); Marseille (frequent; 30–50min); Sisteron (2–4 daily; 2hr); Vauvenargues (2–7 daily; 30min).

Arles to: Aix (5 daily; 1hr 15min); Avignon (5 daily; 50min); Avignon TGV (5 daily; 35–40min); Cavailon (3 daily; 1hr 15min); Stes-Maries-de-la-Mer (6 daily; 50min); St-Rémy (3 daily; 25–30min).

Aups to: Aiguines (2 daily; 35min); Cotignac (1 daily; 20–25min); Draguignan (1 daily; 40min–1hr).

Avignon to: Aix (10 daily; 1hr 15min); Apt (6 daily; 1hr 10min–1hr 30min); Arles (5 daily; 50min); Carpentras (frequent; 35–45min); Cavailon (frequent; 35min); Châteauneuf-du-Pape (3 daily; 30–45min); Digne (3–4 daily; 3hr 10min);

Fontaine-de-Vaucluse (10 daily; 55min); L'Isle-sur-la-Sorgue (19 daily; 40min); Les Baux (8 daily; 45min); Orange (Mon–Fri every 30–45min, Sun 5 trains; 45min); St-Rémy (10 daily; 40min); Vaison (10 daily; 1hr 25min).

Barcelonnette to: Digne (1 daily; 1hr 45min); Gap (3 daily; 1hr 20min); Marseille (4 daily; 3hr 50min).

Carpentras to: Aix (2–3 daily; 1hr 25min–1hr 50min); Avignon (frequent; 35–45min); Beaumes (1 daily; 20min); Cavailon (2–4 daily; 45min); Gigondas (1 daily; 30min); L'Isle-sur-la-Sorgue (2–3 daily; 20min); Marseille (3 daily; 1hr 15min–2hr 5min); Orange (4–5 daily; 40–45min); Sablet (1 daily; 35min); Vacqueyras (1 daily; 30min); Vaison (2–3 daily; 45min).

Cavaillon to: Gordes (3–4 daily; 25–30min).

Digne to: Aix (4 daily; 2hr); Aups (2 daily; 30–40min); Avignon (3 daily; 3hr 15min); Barcelonnette (1 daily; 1hr 30min); Castellane (1 daily; 1hr 10min); Grenoble (1 daily; 4hr 50min); Marseille (4 daily; 2hr–2hr 30min); Moustiers-Ste-Marie (1 daily; 1hr 20min); Nice (4 daily; 3hr–3hr 15min); Sisteron (1 daily; 45–50min).

Draguignan to: Aups (2–3 daily; 1hr 10min); Nice airport (4 daily; 1hr).

Gordes to: Cavailon (3 daily; 30–35min).

Lyons to: St-Martin-en-Haut (2–9 daily; 55min); Vienne (2 daily; 40min–1hr 20min).

Orange to: Avignon (Mon–Sat hourly; Sun 5 trains; 50min); Carpentras (4–5 daily; 40–45min); Châteauneuf-du-Pape (1–5 daily; 25min); Sablet (1–3 daily; 35min); Seguret (2 daily; 40min); Sérignan (3 daily; 20min); Vaison (2 daily; 40–50min).

St-Rémy to: Les Baux (2 daily; 15–20min).

Sospel to: Menton (9 daily; 40–45min).

The Côte d'Azur

- * Vieux Port, Marseille The gritty port, with its bars, cafés and restaurants, attracts the most colourful characters in southern France. See p.1127
- * Les Calanques The limestone cliffs between Marseille and Cassis make for excellent hikes leading to isolated coves in which to go swimming. See p.1136
- * Îles de Port-Cros and St-Honorat These well-preserved islands offer a glimpse of what much of the coast must have looked like a hundred years ago. See pp.1145 & 1168
- * Massif des Maures This undeveloped range of hazy coastal hills is a world apart from the glitz and glamour of the Côte. See p.1148
- * Fondation Maeght Modern art, architecture and landscape fuse to create a stunning visual experience. See p.1177
- * Nice The Riviera's capital of street life is laid back, surprisingly cultured and easy to enjoy, whatever your budget. See p.1178

△ Port-Cros

The Côte d'Azur

The Côte d'Azur polarizes opinions like few other places in France. For some, it is the quintessential Mediterranean playground – the glamour queen of the coast – while for others, it has become almost a parody of its image, an overdeveloped and expensive victim of its own hype. But in the gaps between the uncontrolled and often eclectic developments, and on the offshore islands, in the remarkable beauty of the hills, the scent of the plant life, the mimosa blossom in February and the impossibly blue water after which the coast is named, the Côte d'Azur remains undeniably captivating. The chance to

Food and wine of the Côte d'Azur

The Côte d'Azur, as part of Provence, shares its culinary fundamentals of olive oil, garlic and the herbs that flourish in dry soil, its gorgeous vegetables and fruits, plus Menton's lemons, the goat's cheeses and, of course, the predominance of fish.

The fish soups of bouillabaisse, famous in Marseille, and bourride, served with a garlic and chilli-flavoured mayonnaise known as rouille, are served all along the coast, as are fish covered with Provençal herbs and grilled over an open flame. Seafood – from spider crabs to clams, sea urchins to crayfish, crabs, lobster, mussels and oysters – are piled onto huge plateaux de mer, which don't necessarily represent Mediterranean harvest, more the luxury associated with this coast.

The Italian influence is even stronger on the coast than it is inland, particularly in Nice, with delicate ravioli stuffed with asparagus, prawns, wild mushrooms or pistou, pizzas with wafer-thin bases and every sort of pasta as a vehicle for anchovies, olives, garlic and tomatoes. Nice has its own specialities, such as socca, a chickpea flour pancake, pissaladière, a tart of fried onions with anchovies and black olives, salade niçoise and pan bagnat, which combines egg, olives, salad, tuna and olive oil, and mesclum, a salad of bitter leaves including dandelion: consequently, Nice is about as good a spot to enjoy cheap street food as you'll find. Petits farcies – stuffed aubergines, peppers or tomatoes – are a standard feature on Côte d'Azur menus, as well as in inland Provence.

The Italian dessert tiramisu, made of mascarpone cheese, chocolate and cream, appears in Nice, while St-Tropez has its own sweet speciality in the sickly tarte Tropeziennne. The sweet chestnuts that grow in the Massif des Maures are candied or turned into purée. Outlets for ice cream and sorbets are ubiquitous.

As for wine, the rosés of Provence might not have great status in the viniculture hierarchy, but for baking summer days they are hard to beat. The best of the Côte wines come from Bandol: Cassis too has its own appellation, and around Nice the Bellet wines are worth discovering. Fancy cocktails are a Côte speciality, and pastis is the preferred thirst quencher at any time of the day.

see the works of innumerable artists seduced by the land and light also justifies the trip: Cocteau in Menton and Villefranche, Matisse and Chagall in Nice and Vence, Léger in Biot, Picasso in Antibes and Vallauris, and collections of Fauvists and Impressionists at St-Tropez and Hauts-de-Cagnes. And it must be said that Monaco and Cannes, places you either love or hate, certainly have an entertainment value, while the two great cities of Marseille and Nice possess their own special magnetism.

The months to try to avoid are July and August, when hotels are booked up, overflowing campsites become health hazards, the locals get short-tempered, and the vegetation is at its most barren, and November, when many museums, hotels and restaurants close and the weather is wet.

From Marseille to Toulon

From the vast and wonderful scruffiness of Marseille to the utilitarian naval base of Toulon, this stretch of the Mediterranean is not what most people think of as the Côte d'Azur. There is no continuous corniche, few villas are in the grand style, and work is geared to an annual rather than summer cycle. Cassis is the exception, but the overriding attraction here is Marseille – a city that couldn't be confused with any other.

Marseille

The most renowned and populated city in France after Paris, MARSEILLE has prospered and been ransacked over the centuries. It has lost its privileges to sundry French kings and foreign armies, recovered its fortunes, suffered plagues, religious bigotry, republican and royalist Terror and had its own Commune and Bastille-storming. It was the presence of so many Marseillaise revolutionaries marching from the Rhine to Paris in 1792 that gave the Hymn of the Army of the Rhine its name of La Marseillaise, later to become the national anthem.

In recent years Marseille has undergone something of a renaissance, shaking off much of its old reputation for sleaze and danger – the crime rate is actually lower than in Nice – to attract a wider range of visitors. The TGV link has made it more accessible to weekending northerners, who can be seen picking up their hire cars at the gare St-Charles on Friday nights. Slowly, the splendid facades along La Canebière are getting scrubbed, and the shops in the streets to the south are increasingly trendy or elegant. But the march of progress is not relentless: too often last year's prestige civic project becomes this year's broken, bottle-strewn fountain. A detachment of the city's prostitutes and vagrants has colonized the intersection of rue St-Saëns and rue Glandevès, a few paces from the elegant opera house and the touristy restaurants of the Vieux Port. But that's Marseille. If you don't like your cities gritty, it may not be for you. See past its occasional squalor though, and chances are you will warm to this down-to-earth, cosmopolitan, vital metropolis.

The Grand Mosque

Immediately following his re-election in 2001 as the mayor of Marseille, Jean-Claude Gaudin promised the construction of a Grande Mosquée and Islamic Cultural Centre for the Muslim community, who account for approximately one quarter of the city's inhabitants. The proposal was long overdue; requests for an official mosque dated back to Gaudin's initial election in 1995, and the places of worship that currently existed for Muslims were often nothing more than simple prayer rooms in suburban housing projects. Although Gaudin was not always supportive of the idea – he once replied that he was definitely in favour of the construction of the mosque, “but in Marrakech” – an almost equally intractable obstacle proved to be the lack of unity in the Muslim population, who come from backgrounds as culturally and geographically diverse as Algeria and Comoros, and who are divided between various moderate and radical factions. For want of any consensus, the grand mosque plan was shelved. Gaudin's stance changed during his second term of office, and finally, in July 2006 the Conseil Municipal voted with near unanimity to grant a 99-year lease on a site in the 15^e arrondissement for the Grand Mosque, which will be capable of accommodating 5000 worshippers.

Arrival, information and city transport

The city's airport, the Aéroport de Marseille-Provence (☎04.42.14.14.14, 🌐www.marseille.aeroport.fr), is 20km northwest of the city centre, linked to the gare SNCF by a shuttle bus service (every 20min 6am–10.50pm; later buses meet flights; €8.50). The gare SNCF St-Charles is on the northern edge of the 1^{er} arrondissement on esplanade St-Charles (☎08.91.02.40.25) with the new gare routière alongside it at 3 rue Honnorat (☎08.91.02.40.25). From the gare SNCF, a monumental Art Deco staircase leads down to boulevard d'Athènes and thence to La Canebière, Marseille's main street. The tourist office is at 4 La Canebière (Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun & public hols 10am–5pm; ☎04.91.13.89.00, 🌐www.marseille-tourisme.com), down by the Vieux Port.

Marseille has an efficient bus and métro network, supplemented by two new tram lines scheduled to open during 2007. The métro runs from 5am until 9pm on weekdays and until after midnight at weekends; night buses run from 9.30pm to around 12.45am. You can get a plan of the transport system from RTM at 6 rue des Fabres (Mon–Fri 8.30am–6pm, Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; 🌐www.rtm.fr), one street north of La Canebière near the Bourse, the city's stock exchange. Tickets are flat rate for buses, trams and the métro and can be used for journeys combining all three as long as they take less than one hour. You can buy individual tickets (€1.70) from bus and tram drivers, and from métro ticket offices, or multi-journey Cartes Libertés (in increments of €6 and €12), which are valid for five and ten journeys respectively; these can be bought from métro stations, RTM kiosks and shops displaying the RTM sign. You should also consider the good-value one-day Carte Journée (€4.50) or three-day Carte 3 Jours (€6). Tickets must be punched in the machines on the bus, on tramway platforms or at métro gates.

Accommodation

Since Marseille is not a great tourist city, finding a room in July or August is no more difficult than at any other time. Hotels are plentiful, though if you get stuck the tourist office offers a same-day accommodation hotline, Allotel (☎08.26.88.68.26; premium rates apply). The cheapest options are the city's hostels, both quite a way from the centre.

Hotels

Alizé 35 quai des Belges, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.33.66.97, www.alize-hotel.com. Comfortable, bright, soundproofed rooms; the more expensive ones look out onto the Vieux Port. Public areas are a little gloomy, however. 5

Athènes 37 bd d'Athènes, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.90.03.83. Right next to the train and bus stations; thin on charm but with rock-bottom prices, and a few rooms have balconies. 1

Le Béarn 63 rue Sylvabelle, 6^e ☎ 04.91.37.75.83, www.hotel-bearn.com. Comfortable, friendly, inexpensive and close to the centre, if a bit shabby. 2

Bellevue 34 quai du Port, 2^e ☎ 04.96.17.05.40, ☎ 04.96.17.05.41. Boutique-style hotel on the port, with chic modern decor and good prices but no lift. 3

Le Corbusier Unité d'Habitation, 280 bd Michelet, 8^e ☎ 04.91.16.78.00, www.hotel-lecorbusier.com. Stylish hotel on the third floor of the renowned architect's iconic high-rise; book in advance. 4

Edmond-Rostand 31 rue Dragon, 6^e ☎ 04.91.37.74.95, www.hoteledmondrostand.com. Helpful management, great charm and atmosphere, and well known, so you should book in advance. 4

 Etap Hotel Vieux Port 46 rue Sainte, 1^{er} ☎ 08.92.68.05.82, www.etaphotel.com.

Big branch of the comfortable budget chain in a superb location close to the Vieux Port. 3

Lutétia 38 allée Léon-Gambetta, 1^{er}

☎ 04.91.50.81.78, www.hotelmarseille.com. Right in the thick of things with pleasant, soundproofed and a/c rooms. 4

Du Palais 26 rue Breteuil 6^e ☎ 04.91.37.78.86, www.hotelmarseille.com. Very smart three-star in a great location a short walk from the Vieux Port. 5

St Ferréol 19 rue Pisançon, cnr rue St-Ferréol, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.33.12.21, www.hotel-stferreol.com. Pretty decor and marble baths with Jacuzzis, in a central pedestrianized area. Popular with gay visitors. 6

Tonic 43 quai des Belges, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.55.67.46, www.tonichotel.com. Smart and modern with a great port-side location close to the restaurants. 7

Hostels

HI Youth Hostel 76 allée des Primevères, 12^e ☎ 04.91.49.06.18, www.fuaj.org. Bus #8 from Centre Bourse (direction "St-Julien", stop "Bois Luzy"). Cheap, clean youth hostel in a former château a long way out from the centre. Curfew 11pm. Reception 7.30–noon & 5–10.30pm. Dormitory bed €9.50.

HI Youth Hostel Bonneveine impasse Bonfils, av J.-Vidal, 8^e ☎ 04.91.17.63.30, www.fuaj.org. M^o Rd-Pt-du-Prado, then bus #44 (direction "Roy d'Espagne", stop "Place Bonnefon") or night bus #583 from Vieux Port. Recently renovated hostel just 200m from the beach, with Internet access. Reception 7am–1am, curfew at 1am. Closed mid-Dec to mid-Jan.

The City

Marseille is divided into fifteen arrondissements which spiral out from the focal point of the city, the Vieux Port. Due north lies the old town, Le Panier, site of the original Greek settlement of Massalia, and beyond that the rapidly regenerating area of Les Docks. The wide boulevard leading from the head of the Vieux Port, La Canebière is the central east–west axis of the town. The Centre Bourse and the little streets of quartier Belsunce border it to the north, while the main shopping streets lie to the south. The main north–south axis is rue d'Aix, becoming cours Belsunce then rue de Rome, avenue du Prado and finally boulevard Michelet. The lively, youngish quarter around place Jean-Jaurès and the trendy cours Julien lies to the east of rue de Rome. From

Marseille City Pass

If you're going to be visiting several of Marseille's museums it may be worth considering the  Marseille City Pass, which for €18 or €25 for one or two days respectively includes free admission to museums, city guided tours, entry to the Château d'If and free use of the métro and bus system.

the headland west of the Vieux Port, the corniche heads south past the city's most favoured residential districts towards the beaches and promenade night-life of the Plage du Prado.

The Vieux Port

The cafés around the east end of the Vieux Port indulge the sedentary pleasures of observing street life, despite the fumes of exhausts and of fish sold straight off the boats on quai des Belges. Prime afternoon café lounging spot is the north (Le Panier) side, where the terraces are sunnier and the streets cleaner. The seafood restaurants on the pedestrianized streets between the southern quay and cours d'Estienne-d'Orves ensure that the Vieux Port remains the centre of city life in the evening too.

Two fortresses guard the harbour entrance. St-Jean, on the north side, dates from the Middle Ages when Marseille was an independent republic, and is now only open when hosting exhibitions; its imposing Tour Carré du Roy René is currently undergoing conversion to create a new national Musée des Civilisations d'Europe et de la Méditerranée. The Fort St-Jean's enlargement in 1660 and the construction of St-Nicolas on the south side of the port, represent the city's final defeat as a separate entity. Louis XIV ordered the new fort to keep an eye on the city after he had sent in an army, suppressed the city's council, fined it, arrested all opposition and – in an early example of rate-capping – set ludicrously low limits on Marseille's subsequent expenditure and borrowing. The best view of the Vieux Port is from the Palais du Pharo, on the headland beyond Fort St-Nicolas, or, for a wider angle, from Notre-Dame-de-la-Garde (daily: summer 7am–7pm; winter 7.30am–5.30pm; bus #60 or tourist train from Vieux Port), the city's Second Empire landmark atop the hill south of the harbour. Crowned by a monumental gold Virgin that gleams to ships far out at sea, it's the most distinctive of all Marseille landmarks. Inside, model ships hang from the rafters while the paintings and drawings displayed are by turns kitsch, unintentionally comic or deeply moving, as they depict the shipwrecks, house fires and car crashes from which the Virgin has supposedly rescued grateful believers.

A short way inland from the Fort St-Nicolas, above the Bassin de Carénage, is Marseille's oldest church, the Basilique St-Victor (daily 9am–7pm; €2 entry to crypt). Originally part of a monastery founded in the fifth century on the burial site of various martyrs, the church was built, enlarged and fortified – a vital requirement given its position outside the city walls – over a period of 200 years from the middle of the tenth century. It looks and feels like a fortress, with some of the walls almost 3m thick, and it's no conventional beauty, though the interior has an austere power and the crypt is a fascinating, crumbling warren containing several sarcophagi, including one with the remains of St Maurice.

Le Panier and les Docks

To the north of the Vieux Port is the oldest part of Marseille, Le Panier, where, up until the last war, tiny streets, steep steps and houses of every era formed a vieille ville typical of the Côte. In 1943, however, with Marseille under German occupation, the quarter became an unofficial ghetto for Untermenschen of every sort, including Resistance fighters, Communists and Jews. The Nazis gave the 20,000 inhabitants one day's notice to quit; many were deported to the camps. Dynamite was laid, and everything from the waterside to rue Caisserie was blown sky-high, except for three old buildings that appealed to the fascist aesthetic: the seventeenth-century Hôtel de Ville, on the quay; the Hôtel de Cabre, on the corner of rue Bonneterie and Grande-Rue; and the Maison Diamantée, on rue de la Prison, which houses the Musée de Vieux Marseille (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; €3), whose collections cover the lifestyles and maritime history of Marseille from the seventeenth century to the present day.

After the war, archeologists reaped some benefits from this destruction when they discovered the remains of a Roman dockside warehouse, equipped with vast food-storage jars, which can be seen in situ at the Musée des Docks Romains, on place de Vivaux (Tues–Sun: June–Sept 11am–6pm; Oct–May 10am–5pm; €2).

At the junction of rue de la Prison and rue Caïsserie, the steps of montée des Accoules lead up to place de Lenche, site of the Greek agora and a good café stop. At 29 montée des Accoules, the Préau des Accoules, a former Jesuit college, puts on wonderful exhibitions for children (Wed & Sat 1.30–5.30pm; free). What's left of old Le Panier is above here, though many of the tenements have been demolished. At the top of rue du Refuge stands the restored Hospice de la Vieille Charité, a seventeenth-century workhouse with a gorgeous Baroque chapel surrounded by columned arcades in pink stone; only the tiny grilled exterior windows recall its original use. It's now a cultural centre, and alarmingly empty except during its major temporary exhibitions – usually brilliant – and evening concerts. It houses two museums (both Tues–Sun: June–Sept 11am–6pm; Oct–May 10am–5pm; €2; combined ticket for entire complex €4.50): the Musée d'Archéologie Méditerranéenne with some very beautiful pottery and glass and an Egyptian collection with a mummified crocodile; and the dark and spooky Musée des Arts Africains, Océaniens et Amérindiens. There's also an art house cinema, the Miroir (☎04.91.14.58.88) that often shows films in the original language.

The expansion of Marseille's Joliette docks started in the first half of the nineteenth century. Like the new cathedral, wide boulevards and Marseille's own Arc de Triomphe – the Porte d'Aix at the top of cours Belsunce/rue d'Aix – the docks were paid for with the profits of military enterprise, most significantly the conquest of Algeria in 1830. Anyone fascinated by industrial architecture should visit the mammoth old warehouse building, Les Docks (follow rue République to the end), now restored as a shopping and office complex and the centrepiece of the ambitious Euroméditerranée regeneration scheme. Alongside the docks looms the town's massive late nineteenth-century Cathédrale de la Nouvelle Major, architecturally a blend of neo-Romanesque and neo-Byzantine, with a distinctive pattern of alternating bands of stone.

La Canebière

La Canebière, the grandiose if dilapidated boulevard that runs for about a kilometre down to the port, is the undisputed hub of the town. It takes its name from the hemp (canabé) that once grew here and provided the raw materials for the town's rope-making trade. Fashioned originally with the Champs-Élysées in mind, La Canebière lacks the café-lounging potential of its Parisian prototype but neatly divides the moneyed southern quartiers and the ramshackle quartier Belsunce to the north – an extraordinary, dynamic, mainly Arab area and a great trading ground. Stereos, suits and jeans from France and Germany are traded alongside spices, cloth and metalware from across the Mediterranean on flattened cardboard boxes in the streets. The shiny new central library on cours Belsunce is another of the regeneration projects gradually supplanting the dilapidated tenements, its slick modernity softened by a beaux-arts portal that recalls the old Alcazar music hall that it replaced – where the likes of Tino Rossi and Yves Montand once performed.

Immediately west of cours Belsunce, the fiendishly ugly Centre Bourse provides a stark contrast – useful, nevertheless, for mainstream shopping. Behind it is the Jardin des Vestiges, where the ancient port extended, curving northwards from the present quai des Belges. Excavations have revealed a stretch of the Greek port and bits of the city wall with the bases of three square towers and a gateway, dated to the second or third century BC. Within the Centre Bourse, the Musée d'Histoire de Marseille (Mon–Sat noon–7pm; €2) presents the rest of the finds, including a third-century wreck of a Roman trading vessel. Back at the Vieux Port end of La Canebière is the Musée de la Marine (daily 10am–6pm; €2), housed on the ground floor of the grandiose, Neoclassical stock exchange and with a superb collection of shipbuilders' models, including the legendary 1930s liner Normandie and Marseille's own prewar queen of the seas, the Providence. A bit further up at no. 11, the Musée de la Mode (Tues–Sun: June–Sept 11am–6pm, Oct–May 10am–5pm; €3) displays fashion and swimwear from 1945 to the present day.

The Palais Longchamp and the Hôtel du Département

The Palais Longchamp, 2km east of the port at the end of boulevard Longchamp (bus #8, or M° Longchamp–Cinq-Avenues), forms the grandiose conclusion of an aqueduct that brought water from the Durance to the city. Although the aqueduct is no longer in use, water is still pumped into the centre of the colonnade connecting the two palatial wings.

The palace's north wing is the city's Musée des Beaux-Arts (currently closed for renovation), a hot and slightly stuffy place, but with a fair share of delights, including works by Rubens, Jordaens, Corot and Signac. The nineteenth-century satirist from Marseille, Honoré Daumier, has a whole room for his cartoons. Plans for the city, sculptures and the famous profile of Louis XIV by Marseille-born Pierre Puget are on display along with graphic contemporary canvases of the plague that decimated the city in 1720. The other wing is taken up with the Musée d'Histoire Naturelle (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; €4), and its collection of stuffed animals and fossils. Opposite the palace, at 140 bd Longchamp, is the Musée Grobet-Labadi (Tues–Sun: June–Sept 11am–6pm; Oct–May 10am–5pm; €2) an elegant late-nineteenth-century bourgeois town house filled with exquisite objets d'art.

Northeast of the Palais Longchamp, at the end of boulevard Mal-Juin, stands the vast, ultramodern and very blue Hôtel du Département (M° St-Just; visits by appointment, Mon–Fri 9.30am & 2.30pm; ☎04.91.21.29.77). Deliberately set away from the centre of town in the run-down St-Just–Chartreux quartier, the seat of local government for the Bouches-du-Rhône département was the biggest public building to be erected in the French provinces in the twentieth century. It was designed by the English architect Will Alsop.

South of La Canebière

The prime shopping district of Marseille is encompassed by three streets running south from La Canebière: rue Paradis, rue St-Ferréol and rue de Rome. Some of the smaller, intervening streets close to La Canebière are pretty seedy, with prostitutes on every corner day and night, but the atmosphere is usually friendly. Between rues St-Ferréol and Rome, on rue Grignan, is the city's most important art museum, the Musée Cantini (Tues–Sun: June–Sept 11am–6pm; Oct–May 10am–5pm; €3), with Fauvists and Surrealists well represented, plus works by Matisse, Léger, Picasso, Ernst, Le Corbusier, Miró and Giacometti.

A few blocks east of rue de Rome is one of the most pleasant places to idle in the city, cours Julien (M° Notre-Dame-du-Mont-Cours-Julien), with pools, fountains, pavement restaurant tables and enticing boutiques, populated by Marseille's arty and bohemian crowd and its diverse immigrant community, all of it buried under copious quantities of graffiti. Streets full of bars and music shops lead east to place Jean-Jaurès, locally known as "la Pleine", where the market is a treat, particularly on Saturdays.

The corniche, beaches and Parc Borély

The most popular stretch of sand close to the city centre is the plage des Catalans, a few blocks south of the Palais du Pharo. This marks the beginning of Marseille's corniche, avenue J.-F.-Kennedy, which follows the cliffs past the dramatic statue and arch that frames the setting sun of the Monument aux Morts des Orientés. South of the monument, steps lead down to an inlet, Anse des Auffes, which is the nearest Marseille gets to being picturesque. Small fishing boats are beached on the rocks, the dominant sound is the sea, and narrow stairways and lanes lead nowhere. The corniche then turns inland, bypassing the Malmousque peninsula, whose coastal path gives access to tiny bays and beaches – perfect for swimming when the mistral wind is not inciting the waves. You can see along the coast as far as Cap Croisette and, out to sea, the abandoned monastery on the Îles d'Endoume and the Château d'If (see below).

The corniche ends at the Plage du Prado, the city's main sand beach, where the water is remarkably clean. A short way up avenue du Prado, avenue du Park-Borély leads into the city's best green space, the Parc Borély, with a boating lake, rose gardens, palm trees and a botanical garden (daily 6am–9pm; free; regular guided tours €4) The quickest way to the park and the beaches is by bus #44 from métro Rd-Pt-du-Prado; for the corniche, take bus #83 from the Vieux Port.

The Château d'If

The Château d'If (Jan–March Tues–Sun 9am–5pm; April & May daily 9am–5pm; June–Sept 9.30am–6.30pm; Sept–Dec Tues–Sun 9.30am–5pm; €5) on the tiny island of If is best known as the penal setting for Alexandre Dumas' The Count of Monte Cristo. Having made his watery escape after fourteen years of incarceration as the innocent victim of treachery, the hero of the piece, Edmond Dantès, describes the island thus: "Blacker than the sea, blacker than the sky, rose like a phantom the giant of granite, whose projecting crags seemed like arms extended to seize their prey". The reality, for most prisoners, was worse: they went insane or died (and sometimes both) before reaching the end of their sentences. Only the nobles living in the less fetid upper-storey cells had much chance of survival. The sixteenth-century castle and its cells are horribly well preserved, and the views back towards Marseille are fantastic. Boats for If leave regularly from the quai des Belges in the Vieux Port (hourly in summer; five daily in winter; €10), with the last boat back timed to coincide with the château's closing time; the journey takes twenty minutes.

The Musée de la Faïence, MAC and the Cité Radieuse

From the plage du Prado the promenade continues all the way to the suburb of Montredon, where the nineteenth-century Château Pastré, set in a huge park, contains the Musée de la Faïence (Tues–Sun: June–Sept 11am–6pm; Oct–May 10am–5pm; €2). The eighteenth- and nineteenth-century ceramics, most produced in Marseille, are of an extremely high quality, and a small collection of novel modern and contemporary pieces is housed on the top floor. The entrance to the park (free) is at 157 ave de Montredon (bus #19 from M° Rd-Pt-du-Prado, stop “Montredon-Chancel”). Along the coast from here are easily accessible calanques (rocky inlets), ideal for evening swims and supper picnics as the sun sets.

Between Montredon and boulevard Michelet, the main road out of the city, is the contemporary art museum, MAC (Tues–Sun: June–Sept 11am–6pm; Oct–May 10am–5pm; €3), at 69 av d’Haïfa (bus #23 or #45 from M° Rd-Pt-du-Prado, stop “Haïfa” or “Marie-Louise”). The permanent collection includes works from the 1960s to the present day by Buren, Christo, Klein, Niki de Saint-Phalle, Tinguely and Warhol, as well as Marseillais artists César and Ben.

Set back just west of boulevard Michelet stands a building that broke the mould, Le Corbusier’s seventeen-storey block of flats, the Unité d’Habitation, designed in 1946 and completed in 1952. The Cité Radiense, as it’s also known, only fails to amaze now because so many architects the world over have tried to imitate Le Corbusier’s revolutionary model, but up close the difference in quality between this and what followed is apparent. At ground level the building is decorated with Le Corbusier’s famous human figure, the Modulor; on the third floor there is a hotel (see p.1126) and café. Not all of the iconic rooftop recreation area can be visited, though a circuit of the running track is essential. To reach the Unité, take bus #21 from M° Rd-Pt-du-Prado to “Le Corbusier”.

△ The Unité d’Habitation, Marseille

Eating and drinking

Fish and seafood are the mainstay of Marseille’s diet, and the superstar of dishes is the city’s own expensive invention, bouillabaisse, a saffron- and garlic-flavoured soup with bits of fish, croutons and rouille thrown in; theories conflict as to which fish should be included, but one essential is the rascasse or scorpion fish. The other speciality is pieds et paquets – mutton or lamb belly and trotters.

Good restaurant hunting grounds include cours Julien or place Jean-Jaurès (international options), the Vieux Port (touristy and fishy), the Corniche and plage du Prado (glitzy and pricey) or Le Panier (snacks and old-time bistros). Rue Sainte is good for smart, fashionable dining close to the opera and Vieux Port; stalls on cours Belunce sell chips and sandwiches for under €3. On Sunday pickings are slim, and many Marseille restaurants also take long summer breaks.

Cafés and bars

Aux 36 3 rue St-Pierre, 5^e. Marseille's most popular lesbian bar, regularly packed at weekends. Open Thurs & Sun 7pm–midnight, Fri & Sat until 2am.

Bar de la Marine 15 quai de Rive-Neuve, 1^{er}. A favourite bar for Vieux Port lounging, and inspiration for Pagnol's celebrated Marseille trilogy. Open daily.

O'Malley's Irish Pub 9 quai de Rive Neuve, 1^{er}. A wildly popular Vieux Port boozier with the usual "Irish" trimmings, including Beamish and Guinness, and live music on Thurs.

Café Parisien 1 place Sadi-Carnot, 2^e. Very stylish mix of old elegance and modern chic, with pasta dishes from around €11 and meat mains from €14 up. Closed Sun.

Bar Le Petit Nice 26 place Jean-Jaurès, 1^{er}. The place to head for on Saturday morning during the market, with an interesting selection of beers. Open Mon–Sat from 6.30am.

Le Red Lion 231 av Pierre-Mendès-France, 8^e. Large, raucous, British-style pub close to plage Borély, with eleven beers on draught. Open until 4am Fri & Sat.

Trash 28 rue du Berceau, 5^e. Slick, cruisy gay men's bar with DJ, live entertainment and plenty of dark corners. Open weekdays 9pm–2am, later at weekends.

Restaurants

L'Abri Côtier bd des Baigneurs, plage du Fortin 8^e ☎ 04.91.72.27.29. Smart beachside restaurant in Montredon, serving fish, meat and pizzas. It's a block or so down from the boulevard and a little tricky to find, despite the many signs. Menus from €28. Closed Oct–March.

Les Arcenaulx 25 cours d'Estienne-d'Orves, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.59.80.40. Lovely, atmospheric intellectual haunt that is also a bookshop and salon de thé; the €22.50 lunch menu is good value, otherwise €29.50 and €52. Last orders 11pm. Closed Sun.

Auberge'In 25 rue du Chevalier-Roze, 2^e ☎ 04.91.90.51.59. Health-food shop and restaurant on the edge of Le Panier, with a vegetarian menu fixe for €13.50. Open for lunch Mon–Sat, dinner Fri & Sat only.

Chez Angèle 50 rue Caisserie, 2^e ☎ 04.91.90.63.35. Packed Le Panier local, dishing up fresh pasta and pizza. Closed lunchtimes Sat & Sun.

Chez Michel 6 rue des Catalans, 7^e ☎ 04.91.52.30.63. There's no debate about the bouillabaisse ingredients here. A basket of five fishes, including the elusive and most expensive one, the rascasse, is presented to the customer before the soup is made – and this is quite simply the place to eat this dish. Expect to pay €58 per person for the bouillabaisse alone. Closed last two weeks of Feb.

Dar Djerba 15 cours Julien, 6^e ☎ 04.91.48.55.36. Excellent Tunisian restaurant with beautiful tiling, friendly service and a €22.90 menu. Closed Mon.

La Garbure 9 cours Julien, 6^e ☎ 04.91.47.18.01. Rich specialities from southwest France, including Bresse chicken. Menus around €24. Closed Sat midday & Sun.

La Kahena 2 rue de la République, 2^e ☎ 04.91.90.61.93. Popular Tunisian restaurant near the Vieux Port, with grills and couscous from €8.50. Open daily.

Aux Mets de Provence 18 quai de Rive-Neuve, 7^e ☎ 04.91.33.35.38. A Marseille institution with authentic Provençal cooking at the top of a steep staircase. Lunch menu at €40, otherwise €60 including wine. Closed lunchtime Sat–Mon.

Caffe Milano 43 rue Sainte, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.33.14.33. Sleek, sophisticated and hugely popular Italian. Meat-based plats around €14, pasta dishes around €10. Closed Sat lunch & Sun.

 La Part des Anges 33 rue Sainte, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.33.55.70. Wonderful cave de vins serving hearty food to mop up the classy alcohol; plats around €12. Open daily.

Pizzeria Étienne 43 rue Lorette, 2^e. An old-fashioned Le Panier pizzeria; hectic, cramped and crowded.

Nightlife and entertainment

Marseille's nightlife has something for everyone, with plenty of live rock and jazz, nightclubs and discos, as well as theatre, opera and classical concerts. Theatre is particularly innovative and lively in Marseille. The Virgin Megastore at 75 rue St-Ferréol, the book- and record shop FNAC in the Centre Bourse and the tourist office's ticket bureau are the best places to go for tickets and information. Virgin also stocks English books and has a café, open, like the rest of the store, Monday to Saturday until 9pm and on Sundays until 8pm. There is a free weekly listings mag, Ventilo, and a couple of monthlies, César and Marseille In Situ, which you can pick up from FNAC, Virgin, tourist offices, museums and cultural centres.

Live music and clubs

L'Affranchi 212 bd de St-Marcel, 11^e

☎ 04.91.35.09.19. Venue in the eastern suburbs with a varied programme of clubs and live gigs, including rap, hip-hop and reggae. Open 8.30pm when concerts on, mostly on Sat.

Le Bazar 90 bd Rabatau, 8^e ☎ 04.91.79.08.00.

Big, mainstream disco playing house and occasionally hosting big-name international DJs. Open Thurs–Sun.

La Caravelle 34 quai du Port, 2^e. Prewar cabaret on the first floor of the Hôtel Bellevue with portside views. Free plates of tapas 6–9.30pm; live jazz weekends. Daily till 2am.

Les Docks des Suds – le Hangar à Sucres 12 rue Urbain V, 3^e ☎ 04.91.99.00.00. Vast warehouse that serves as the venue for Marseille's annual Fiesta des Suds world-music festival.

Exodus 9 rue des Trois Mages, 1^e

☎ 04.91.42.02.39. Small performance space between cours Julien and place Jean-Jaurès, presenting world music and theatre with a strong focus on Africa and Asia. Live events usually start at 8.30pm.

L'Intermédiaire 63 place Jean-Jaurès, 6^e

☎ 04.91.47.01.25. Loud, hip, smoky bar with a variety of live bands, from rock to jazz and world music, plus old-skool DJ nights. Mon–Sat 6.30pm–2am.

Café Julien 39 cours Julien, 6^e ☎ 04.91.24.34.10.

Lively bar with mixed clientele, part of the Espace Julien. Regular live rock and reggae music; performances start 8.30–9pm.

Machine à Coudre 6 rue Jean-Roque, 1^e

☎ 04.91.55.62.65. Music café hosting alternative rock and reggae acts. €4–7 entry charge depending on act. Open Thurs–Sat.

New Cancan 3 rue Sénac, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.48.59.76.

Cheesy, dated and expensive, but the New Cancan is nevertheless Marseille's best-known and longest running gay disco. Open Thurs–Sun 11pm–dawn.

Pelle Mêle 8 place aux Huiles, 1^{er}

☎ 04.91.54.85.26. Intimate, smart and lively jazz bistro and piano bar. Open 6pm–2am daily.

Le Poste à Galène 103 rue Ferrari, 5^e

☎ 04.91.47.57.99. Live pop, rock and electro plus 80s nights and a bar. Open at 8 or 8.30pm, depending on event.

Trolleybus 24 quai de Rive-Neuve, 7^e

☎ 04.91.54.30.45. Disco in a series of vaulted rooms; house, pop, electro, hip-hop and techno. Closed Sun–Wed.

Film, theatre and concerts

Alhambra 2 rue du Cinéma, 16^e

☎ 04.91.03.84.66. Art house cinema occasionally showing undubbed English-language films (v.o.).

Ballet National de Marseille 20 bd Gabès, 8^e

☎ 04.91.32.72.72. The home venue of the famous dance company, founded in 1972 by Roland Petit.

La Friche la Belle de Mai 41 rue Jobin, 3^e

☎ 04.95.04.95.04. Interdisciplinary arts complex occupying a former industrial site in the north of the city, hosting theatre, dance, live music and arts exhibitions.

 Le Miroir 2 rue de la Charité, 2^e

☎ 04.91.14.58.88. Art house films in comfortable surroundings at the Vieille Charité, often undubbed in v.o.

Opéra 2 rue Molière, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.55.11.10.

Symphony concerts and operas in a magnificent setting, part Neoclassical, part Art Deco.

Théâtre National la Criée 30 quai de Rive-Neuve, 7^e ☎ 04.96.17.80.00. Home of the Théâtre National de Marseille and Marseille's best theatre.

Les Variétés 37 rue Vincent Scotto, 1^{er}

☎ 08.36.68.20.15. Downtown cinema offering v. o. films.

Listings

Airlines Air France, 14 La Canebière, 1^{er}

☎ 08.20.82.08.20; Cathay Pacific, 41 La Canebière, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.91.14.69.

Bike rental Cycles Ulysse, 3 av du Parc Borély;

☎ 04.91.77.14.51; Tandem, 16 av du Parc Borély ☎ 04.91.22.64.80.

Bookstore Virgin, 75 rue St-Ferréol, 1^{er}, has an English books section; Maupetit, 140 La Canebière, 1^{er}, is a good general French bookshop.

Car hire Avis, Gare St-Charles ☎ 08.20.61.16.36;

Budget, 40 bd de Plombières ☎ 04.91.64.40.03; National Citer, 20 bd Schloessing, 8^e

☎ 04.91.83.05.05; Europcar, 59 allées Léon

Gambetta, 1^{er} ☎ 08.25.82.56.80; Hertz, 21 bd Maurice-Bourdet, 1^{er} ☎ 04.91.14.04.24. All also have head offices at the airport.

Consulates UK, 24 av du Prado, 6^e

☎ 04.91.15.72.10; USA, place Varian Fry/12 bd Paul-Peytral, 6^e ☎ 04.91.54.92.00.

Emergencies Ambulance ☎ 15; SOS Médecins

☎ 04.91.52.91.52; 24hr casualty departments at La Conception, 144 rue St-Pierre, 5^e ☎ 04.91.38.36.52; and SOS Voyageurs, Gare St-Charles, 3^e ☎ 04.91.62.12.80.

Ferries SNCM (61 bd des Dames ☎ 32.60, www.sncm.fr), runs ferries to Corsica, Tunisia and Algeria.

Internet Info-Café, 1 quai du Rive Neuve, 1^{er}

☎ 04.91.33.74.98.

Lost property 18 rue de la Cathédrale, 2^e

☎ 04.91.90.99.37.

Pharmacy Syndicat des Pharmaciens

☎ 04.91.15.72.61

Police Commissariat Central, 2 rue Antoine-Becker, 2^e (24hr; ☎ 04.91.39.80.00).

Post office 1 place de l'Hôtel-des-Postes, 1^{er}.

Taxis Marseille Taxi ☎ 04.91.02.20.20; Taxi Blanc

Bleu ☎ 04.91.51.50.00; Eurotaxi (multilingual drivers) ☎ 04.91.05.31.98; disabled facilities

☎ 06.11.54.99.99.

Cassis, La Ciotat and Bandol

Hard as it is to picture now, chic little Cassis once had a busy industrial harbour, while at La Ciotat ships were built right up until 1989. La Ciotat is probably the friendliest of all the resorts between Marseille and Toulon, and has the distinction of being the birthplace of film-making. Tucked in a cove between La Ciotat and Toulon, Bandol is a rarity on the Côte d'Azur, a family resort which has managed to maintain something of an unhurried air.

Cassis

A lot of people rate CASSIS the best resort this side of St-Tropez – its inhabitants most of all. Hemmed in by high cliffs, its modern development has been modest. Portside posing and drinking aside, there's not much to do except sunbathe and look up at the ruins of the town's medieval castle, built in 1381 and refurbished by Monsieur Michelin, the authoritarian boss of the family tyres and guides firm.

The favoured pastime, though, is to take a boat trip to the calanques (from around €8) – long, narrow, deep fjord-like inlets that have cut into the limestone cliffs. Several companies operate from the port, but check if they let you off or just tour in and out, and be prepared for rough seas. If you're feeling energetic, you can take the well-marked footpath from the route des Calanques behind the western beach; it's about ninety minutes' walk to the furthest and best calanque, En Vau, where you can climb down rocks to the shore. The water is deep blue and swimming between the vertical cliffs is an experience not to be missed. From July until the second Saturday in September you have to stick to the coastal path or the sea from 11am until 4pm because of the risk of fire.

Les Sports Loisirs Nautiques (☎ 04.42.01.80.01) by the beach next to the port hires out windsurfing and watersports equipment. The spectacular cliff-top route des Crêtes links Cassis with La Ciotat; regular belvederes allow you to stop and take the perfect shot of distant headlands receding into the sunset – vertigo permitting. The route is closed during high winds.

The Cosquer Cave

In 1991, Henri Cosquer, a diver from Cassis, discovered paintings and engravings of animals, painted handprints and finger tracings in a cave between Marseille and Cassis, whose sole entrance is a long, sloping tunnel that starts 37m under the sea. The cave would have been accessible from dry land no later than the end of the last ice age, and carbon dating has shown that the oldest work of art here was created around 27,000 years ago. For safety reasons it's not possible to visit the cave, though diving schools in Cassis organize dives in the bay and the calanques.

Practicalities

Buses from Marseille arrive at rond-point du Gendarmerie from where it's a couple of minutes' walk to the port and the beach. The gare SNCF is 3km from town, connected to it by a bus (Mon–Fri & Sat am) which takes around 15 minutes. The tourist office is on the port at quai des Moulins (March–June, Sept & Oct Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sat 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Fri 9am–7pm, Sat & Sun 9.30am–12.30pm & 3–6pm; Nov–Feb Mon–Fri 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm, Sat 10am–12.30pm & 2–5pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; ☎08.92.25.98.92, 🌐www.cassis.fr).

Cassis is a small place, so demand for cheaper rooms in high season is intense. The least expensive are at Le Commerce, 1 rue St-Clair (☎04.42.01.09.10, 📍04.42.01.14.17; 🕒, closed mid–Nov to mid–Jan), and Le Provençal, 7 avVictor-Hugo (☎04.42.01.72.13, 📍04.42.01.39.58; 🕒), close to the port. For a little more money, and a view over the port, try Le Golfe, place du Grand-Carnot (☎04.42.01.00.21, 🌐www.hotel-le-golfe-cassis.com; 🕒; closed Nov–March). Further out, there's also Le Joli Bois, route de la Gineste (☎04.42.01.02.68; 🕒), just off the Marseille road, 3km from Cassis and with few amenities. Far more isolated is the gorgeously scenic hostel, La Fontasse, in the hills above the calanques west of Cassis (☎04.42.01.02.72, 🌐www.fuaj.org; mid–March to Dec; €9.50 per night. reception 8–10.30am & 5–9pm); by car from Cassis, take the D559 for 4km then turn left. The Cassis–Marseille bus stops on the D559 (bus stop “Les Calanques”). It's 2.5km walk from the centre of Cassis, towards the Col de la Gardiole; take avenue des Calanques from the port. Facilities are basic – there are no showers, and power and water are rationed. If you're camping, Les Cigales (☎04.42.01.07.34; closed mid–Nov to mid–March; €18.60 for car, tent and two people), is just off the D559 from Marseille before avenue de la Marne turns down into Cassis.

Restaurants are abundant along the port. The ratatouille and fresh fish at Chez Gilbert, 19 quai Baux (☎04.42.01.71.36; menu €27; closed Tues eve & Wed), are hard to beat. El Sol, at no. 23 (☎04.42.01.76.10; closed Mon all day & Tues lunch), with terroir fare, costs a bit less. In the backstreets, Le Clos des Arômes at 10 rue Abbé Paul-Mouton (☎04.42.01.71.84, closed Mon, Tues & Wed lunch; menu €25) is well regarded and has a pretty garden.

La Ciotat

Cranes still loom over the little port of LA CIOTAT, where vast oil tankers were once built. Today, the town's economy relies on property development, tourism and yachting, yet it remains a pleasantly unpretentious place. La Ciotat is not a town for museum-visiting or monument-spotting. It's a relaxing place with excellent beaches and a lively waterfront with plenty of places to eat and drink.

In 1895, August and Louis Lumière filmed the first moving pictures here, including the arrival of a train at the gare SNCF, which had Parisians jumping out of their seats in fright when it was premiered there. The world's oldest movie house, the Eden Cinema, still stands on the corner of boulevard A.–France and boulevard Jean-Jaurès, though it awaits restoration; the main venue for the annual film festival in June is the modern Cinéma Lumière on place Evariste-Gras. The brothers are commemorated by a solid 1950s monument on place Lumière.

The streets of the old town, apart from rue Poilus, are uneventful, though the increasing numbers of boutiques and immobiliers reflect the change from working shipyard to pleasure port. Both Vedette Voltigeur (☎04.42.83.11.44) and Vedette Monte Cristo (☎04.42.71.53.32) make the crossing to the islet of Île Verte daily, while Catamaran Le Citharista (☎06.09.35.25.68) runs trips to the calanques of Cassis and Marseille (€17–23) from quai Ganteaume.

Alternatively, take a walk through the Parc du Mugel (daily: April–Sept 8am–8pm; Oct–March 9am–6pm; bus #30, stop “Mugel”), with its strange cluster of rock formations on the promontory beyond the shipyards. A path leads up through overgrown vegetation to a narrow terrace overlooking the sea. If you continue on bus #30 to Figuerolles you can reach the Anse de Figuerolles calanque down the avenue of the same name, and its neighbour, the Gameau.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is 5km from the town but bus #21 is frequent at peak times and gets you to the Vieux Port in around twenty minutes. The old town and port look out across the Baie de la Ciotat, whose inner curve provides the beaches and resort lifestyle of La Ciotat’s modern extension, La Ciotat-Plage. The gare routière is at the end of boulevard Anatole-France by the Vieux Port right beside the tourist office (June–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 10am–1pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.42.08.61.32, 🌐www.tourisme-laciotat.com). Bikes can be hired from Cycle Lleba at 3b av E-Mistral (☎04.42.83.60.30).

For hotels, the best cheapies are La Marine, 1 av Fernand Gassion (☎ & 📍04.42.08.35.11; 📍), and La Rotonde, 44 bd de la République (☎04.42.08.67.50, 🌐larotonde.littoralmedia.com; 📍), both on the fringes of the old town. In La Ciotat-Plage, Miramar, 3 bd Beurivage (☎04.42.83.33.79; 🌐www.miramarlaciotat.com; 📍), is right on the palm-fringed seafront, while across the bay, on Corniche du Liouquet, you can stay in little villas in a park at Ciotel Le Cap (April–Nov; ☎04.42.83.90.30, 🌐www.leciotel.com; 📍). La Ciotat has five campsites, three of them by the sea, of which St-Jean, 30 av St-Jean (☎04.42.83.13.01, 🌐www.aster.com/stjean; €23 for two people and a tent; closed Oct–May), is the closest to the centre (bus #40, stop “St-Jean Village”).

La Ciotat’s best restaurant is La Fresque, 18 rue des Combattants (☎04.42.08.00.60; closed Sun eve & Mon), with the likes of duck stuffed with foie gras and menus from €18. Otherwise, Coquillages Franquin, 13 bd Anatole-France (☎04.42.83.59.50), serves fish on a €16.50 menu, and there are plenty of cafés and brasseries around the Vieux Port and along boulevard Beurivage in La Ciotat Plage.

Bandol and around

Across La Ciotat bay are the fine sand and shingle beaches and unremarkable family resort of LES LECQUES, an offshoot of the old inland town of St-Cyr-Sur-Mer, to which it is fused by a belt of modern suburbia. The train station is in St-Cyr, but the tourist office (July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–1pm & 4–7pm; June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–6pm; Oct–May Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.94.26.73.73, 🌐www.saintcyrsummer.com) is on the place de l’Appel du 18 Juin, on the seafront in Les Lecques. St-Cyr has the cheapest accommodation, such as the basic but serviceable Auberge Le Clos Fleuri (☎04.94.26.27.46; 📍), near the station on avenue Général-de-Gaulle, but there’s more choice in Les Lecques. A ten-kilometre coastal path (signposted) runs from the east end of Les Lecques’ beach through a stretch of secluded beaches and calanques to the unpretentious resort of BANDOL, while inland dégustation signs announce the the appellation Bandol, whose vineyards produce some of the best wines on the Côte. The reds are the most reputed.

In Bandol there are several reasonable hotels near the centre, including Hôtel Florida, 26 impasse de Nice (☎04.94.29.41.72; Ⓢ; half board Ⓟ) obligatory May–Sept), and La Cigale Bleue on avenue de la Gare (☎04.94.29.41.40; Ⓢ). The very pleasant Golf Hotel (☎04.94.29.45.83, 🌐www.golfhotel.fr; open mid-March to mid-Nov; Ⓢ) is right on Rénechos beach, west of the town centre. The tourist office, on allée Vivien by the quayside (late June & early Sept 9am–noon & 2–6pm; July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 9am–noon; ☎04.94.29.41.35, 🌐www.bandol.fr), will help if you're stuck during the high season.

The other stretch of coastal path this side of Toulon is along the southern edge of the Sicié peninsula from Le Brusç. The path climbs up to the sturdy cliff-top chapel of Notre-Dame-du-Mai, once a primitive lighthouse, which affords fantastic views of the coast and hinterland. The chapel is only open in May, on the first Saturday morning of the month from October to April, and on certain special dates (Easter Monday, Aug 15, and for the pilgrimage on Sept 14).

Toulon

Never the loveliest of cities, TOULON was half destroyed in the last war and brutally rebuilt. It's still dominated by the military: the arsenal that Louis XIV created remains one of the major employers of southeast France, and the port is home to the French Navy's Mediterranean fleet. Up until the eighteenth century, slaves and convicts still powered the king's galleys; after the Revolution convicts were sent to Toulon with iron collars round their necks for sentences of hard labour.

Today, heavy traffic crawls through the centre, the old town is fringed by forbidding 1960s architecture, and the damage done to Toulon's reputation by a period of overtly racist National Front control – which ended in 2001 – will take decades to repair. And yet the city is fighting back. The splendid Opéra has been refurbished, the impressive Hôtel des Arts in the former Conseil Général building on boulevard Maréchal-Leclerc (Tues–Sun 11am–6pm; free) pulls in touring exhibitions of modern art from Paris, and everywhere there's an orgy of repaving, replanting and general beautification. A certain seediness lingers, but given the high standards and low prices of some of Toulon's accommodation it makes a logical stopover if you're passing this way. While you're here, it's worth taking the téléphérique to the top of Mont Faron (bd Amiral Vence; daily 9.30am–7.30pm weather permitting; €6.10; bus #40 from bd de Strasbourg in central Toulon) for the views over Toulon's magnificent natural harbour. Back in town, naval buffs will find the Musée de la Marine on place Monsenergue (daily except Tues 10am–5pm; €5) engrossing – particularly the dramatic photographs of the French fleet scuttled in Toulon harbour in 1942, in order to keep it from falling into German hands.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF, on place de l'Europe, and the adjacent gare routière, lie northeast of the town centre. There's a tourist office (June & Sept Mon & Wed–Sat 9am–6pm, Tues 10am–6pm, Sun 10am–noon; July & Aug Mon & Wed–Sat 9am–8pm, Tues 10am–8pm, Sun 10am–noon; Oct–May Mon &

Wed–Sat 9.30am–5.30pm, Tues 10.30am–5.30pm; ☎ 04.94.18.53.00, 🌐 www.toulontourisme.com) at 334 av de la République on the port: head down rue Vauban, cross place d’Armes and follow the busy avenue that runs parallel to the coast, which becomes avenue de la République.

There’s plenty of budget accommodation: the basic but cheap Hôtel des Allées, 18 allées Amiral-Courbet (☎ 04.94.91.10.02; 📍); the modern and comfortable Trois Dauphins, 9 place des 3 Dauphins (☎ 04.94.92.65.79, ☎ 04.94.09.09.17; 📍); or its sister hotel, the bright and more upmarket 🏠 Little Palace, directly opposite the Trois Dauphins at 6–8 rue Berthelot (☎ 04.94.92.65.79, 🌐 www.hotel-littlepalace.com; 📍) – all very central. There are innumerable brasseries and cafés lining the port and a cluster of restaurants around the Opéra.

The central resorts and islands

15

THE CÔTE D’AZUR

Hyères

Out of season, the coast between Hyères and Fréjus/ St-Raphaël and its backdrop of wooded hills hold their own against the cynicism engendered by tourist brochure overkill. The magic lies in the scented Mediterranean vegetation, silver beaches glimpsed between purple cliffs, secluded islands and medieval hilltop villages.

Hyères, which preserves a certain air of gentility, flashy St-Raphaël and historic Fréjus are the only significant towns, though the urban sprawl around the erstwhile fishing villages of Le Lavandou, Cavaire-sur-Mer and St-Maxime keeps any sense of wilderness at bay. But there are moments when it’s almost possible to imagine the coastline of old: near the Cap de Bregançon south of Bormes, between Le Rayol and Cavaire, in the Domaine de Rayol gardens, and around the southern tip of the St-Tropez peninsula. Out to sea, on the Îles d’Hyères (often called the Îles d’Or), you can experience unspoilt landscapes with some of the best fauna and flora in Provence. La Croix-Valmer is probably the most pleasant of the resorts, and St-Tropez is a must – for a day-trip anyway. Inland, amidst the dense wooded hills of the Massif des Maures, are the gorgeous villages of Collobrières and La Garde Freinet.

Sheer expense aside, transport is the one big problem. There is a regular bus service along the coast, but there are no trains, traffic is extremely slow in high season, and cycling doesn’t get you very far unless you’re Tour de France material.

Hyères

HYÈRES is the oldest resort on the Côte, listing Queen Victoria and Tolstoy among its early admirers, but the lack of a central seafront meant the town lost out when the foreign rich switched from winter convalescents to quayside strollers, and today it has the rare distinction of not being totally dependent on the summer influx; in addition it exports cut flowers and exotic plants, the most important being the date palm, which graces every street. Hyères is also a garrison town, the home of the French army's 54th artillery regiment.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The gare SNCF is on place de l'Europe, 1.5km south of the town centre, with frequent buses (#29, #39 or #67) to the gare routière on place Mal-Joffret, two blocks south of the entrance to the old town (☎08.25.00.06.50, 🌐www.reseau-mistral.com). The modern Hyères-Toulon airport is between Hyères and Hyères-Plage, 3km from the centre (☎08.25.01.83.87, 🌐www.toulon-hyeres.aeroport.fr), to which it's connected by an infrequent bus service. The tourist office is at the Forum du Casino, 3 av Ambroise Thomas (July & Aug daily 8.30am–7.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–6pm, Sat 10am–4pm; ☎04.94.01.84.50, 🌐www.ot-hyeres.fr); there is another office close to rond-point Henri-Petit at the western entrance to the town. Bikes and mopeds can be hired from Holiday Bikes, 10 rue Jean d'Agrevè, near port Saint-Pierre (☎04.94.38.79.45, 🌐www.holiday-bikes.com).

Hotels in the old town include the Hôtel du Soleil, on rue du Rempart (☎04.94.65.16.26, 🌐www.hoteldusoleil.com; 📍), in a renovated house at the foot of the parc St-Bernard, and the smaller Le Portalet, 4 rue de Limans (☎04.94.65.39.40, 🌐www.hotel-portalet.com; 📍). Overlooking the port at Ayguade is La Reine Jane (☎04.94.66.32.64, 🌐www.reinejane.com; 📍).

There are plenty of campsites on the coast. Two smaller ones are Camping-Bernard, a two-star in Le Ceinturon (☎04.94.66.30.54, ☎04.94.66.48.30; closed Oct–Easter), and Clair de Lune, avenue du Clair de Lune (☎04.94.58.20.19, 🌐www.campingclairdelune.com; closed mid-Nov to Jan; €18), a three-star one on the Presqu'Île de Giens.

The Town

Walled and medieval old Hyères perches on the slopes of Casteou hill, 5km from the sea; below it lies the modern town, with avenue Gambetta the main north–south axis. At the coast, the Presqu'Île de Giens is leashed to the mainland by an isthmus, known as La Capte, and a parallel sand bar enclosing the salt marshes and a lake. Le Ceinturon, Ayguade and Les Salins d'Hyères are the villages–cum–resorts along the coast northeast from Hyères-Plages; L'Almanarre is to the west where the sand bar starts.

From place Clemenceau, a medieval gatehouse, the Porte Massillon, opens into the old town on rue Massillon, lined with tempting shops selling fruit and vegetables, chocolate, soaps, olive oil and wine. It ends at place Massillon, a perfect Provençal square with terraced cafés overlooking the twelfth-century Tour des Templiers, the remnant of a Knights Templar fort elegantly converted into exhibition space for contemporary art (April–Oct daily except Tues 10am–noon & 4–7pm; Nov–March Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2–5.30pm; free). Behind the tower, rue Ste-Catherine leads uphill to place St-Paul, from which you have a panoramic view over the Golfé de Giens.

Wide steps fan out from the Renaissance door of the former collegiate church of St-Paul (closed for renovation at the time of writing; normally May–Sept daily except Tues 10am–noon & 4–7pm; Oct–April Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2–5.30pm), whose distinctive belfry is pure Romanesque, as is the choir, though the simplicity of the design is masked by the collection of votive offerings hung inside. Today, the church is only used for special services – the main place of worship is the mid-thirteenth-century former monastery church of St-Louis, on place de la République.

To the right of St-Paul, a Renaissance house bridges rue St-Paul, its turret supported by a pillar rising beside the steps. Through this arch you can head up rue Ste-Claire to the entrance of Parc Ste-Claire (daily 8am–dusk; free), the exotic gardens around Castel Ste-Claire, once home to the American writer and interior designer Edith Wharton and now the offices of the Parc National de Port-Cros. Cobbled paths lead up the hill towards the Parc St-Bernard (daily 8am–dusk; free), full of almost every Mediterranean flower known. At the top, above montée des Noailles (which by car you reach from cours Strasbourg and avenue Long), is the Villa Noailles, a Cubist mansion enclosed within part of the old citadel walls, designed by Mallet-Stevens in the 1920s and a home to all the luminaries of Dada and Surrealism. It now hosts contemporary art exhibitions (July–Sept daily except Tues 10am–12.30pm & 4–7.30pm, Fri until 10pm; Oct–June Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 2–6pm; free). To the west of the park and further up the hill are the immaculate remains of the eleventh-century castle, whose keep and ivy-clad towers give stunning views out to the Îles d'Hyères and east to the Massif des Maures.

The switch from medieval to eighteenth- and nineteenth-century Hyères at avenue des Îles-d'Or and its continuation, avenue Général-de-Gaulle, is abrupt, with wide boulevards, opulent villas and palms creating a spa town atmosphere. If you're keen on the ancient history of this coast, the Site Archéologique d'Olbia in Almanarre (April–Sept Tues & Sat 3–6pm, Thurs & Fri 9.30am–12.30pm & 3–6pm; €4.60) is worth a visit: the remains of the fortified Greek trading post are supplemented by later Roman and medieval remains, including those of the abbey of Saint-Pierre de l'Almanarre. An alternative pastime is to wander around the spectacular array of cacti and palms in the Jardins Olbius-Riquier, just to the southeast of avenue Gambetta (daily 7.30am–dusk; free). It has a small zoo and miniature train to keep kids happy.

Eating and drinking

For eating and drinking, place Massillon is the obvious place: filled with restaurant tables and with an unmistakably Mediterranean atmosphere in the evening. Of its restaurants 🍷 Le Bistrot de Marius, 1 place Massillon (☎04.94.35.88.38; closed Mon in July & Aug), is perhaps the most tempting, with plenty of fish on its €26–32 menus. In the new town, Les Jardins de Bacchus, 32 av Gambetta (☎04.94.65.77.63; menus from €32; closed Sat lunch, Sun dinner & Mon), serves novel concoctions with panache, while Les Jardins de Saradam, 35 av de Belgique (☎04.94.65.97.53, closed Sun eve & Mon out of season), is a reliable North African restaurant with a pretty garden and filling couscous and tagines from around €11. Hyères' cafés, though numerous – especially around place Clemenceau – are rather unprepossessing.

Around Hyères

Hyères' coastal suburbs have plenty of beaches, but can be subject to mosquito plagues in spring and summer. L'Almanarre, about 5km south of town, hosts windsurfing championships in June and has a narrow crescent of sand from which you can swim. La Capte is rather built-up, but offers warmer, shallow water and a long sandy beach. Alternatively, take the route du Sel (closed mid-Nov to mid-April) to the Presqu'île de Giens for a glimpse of the saltworks and the flamingos on the adjoining lake. Besides the peculiarity of its attachment to the mainland (last broken by storms in 1811), Giens is fairly nondescript. There are, however, some fine cliffs facing the sea, and in rough weather you can understand why so many wrecks have been discovered here. La Tour Fondue, a Richelieu construction on the eastern side of Giens, overlooks the small port that serves the Îles d'Hyères.

Traffic fumes and the proximity to the airport make the beaches between Hyères-Plage and Le Ceinturon/Ayguade rather undesirable. Best to head further up the coast to the fishing port of Les Salins d'Hyères. East of Les Salins, where the coastal road finally turns inland, you can follow a path between abandoned salt flats and the sea to a secluded beach.

The Îles d'Hyères

A haven from tempests in ancient times, then the peaceful home of monks and farmers, the Îles d'Hyères became, from the Middle Ages onwards, the target of piracy and coastal attacks. The three main islands, Porquerolles, Port-Cros and Levant, are covered in half-destroyed, rebuilt or abandoned forts, dating from the sixteenth century, when François I started a trend of under-funded fort building, up to the twentieth century, when the German gun positions on Port-Cros and Levant were put out of action by the Americans. Porquerolles and Levant are not yet free of garrisons, thanks to the knack of the French armed forces for securing prime beauty sites for their bases. Their presence has helped prevent development and, in the non-military areas, the islands' very fragile environment is protected by the Parc National de Port-Cros and the Conservatoire Botanique de Porquerolles. Sheer pressure of visitor numbers has nevertheless created problems, so in 2004 the authorities announced plans to limit visitor numbers to 5000 daily on Porquerolles and 1500 daily on Port-Cros. Ferry operators must turn away further bookings once the daily total has been reached.

Ferries to the Îles d'Hyères

Departures from:

Bandol quai d'Honneur (☎04.94.32.51.41, 🌐www.atlantide1.com). To Porquerolles July & Aug only.

La Tour Fondue Presqu'Île de Giens (☎04.94.58.21.81, 🌐www.tlv-tvm.com). The closest port to Porquerolles; all year round to Porquerolles, plus summer two-island trip to Porquerolles and Port Cros.

Le Lavandou gare maritime (☎04.94.71.01.02, 🌐www.vedettesilesdor.fr). The closest port to Port-Cros and Levant; year-round daily services to Levant and Port-Cros; thrice-weekly service April–Sept to Porquerolles (daily July & Aug). The same line runs less frequent seasonal services from Cavalaire to Levant, Port Cros and Porquerolles and also from La Croix Valmer.

La Londe Port Miramar (☎04.94.05.21.14, 🌐www.batelierscotedazur.com) Porquerolles and Port Cros, April–Sept only.

Port d'Hyères Hyères-Plage (☎04.94.57.44.07, 🌐www.tlv-tvm.com). Services to Port-Cros and Levant all year.

St-Raphaël quai Nomy, Vieux Port (☎04.94.95.17.46, 🌐www.tmr-saintraphael.com). Services to Port-Cros Fri only July & Aug.

Toulon Batelier de la Rade (☎04.94.46.24.65). Excursions to Porquerolles, Port Cros and Le Levant.

The islands' wild, scented greenery and fine sand beaches are a reminder of what much of the mainland was like forty years ago. To stay on them, the only reasonable option is Levant, though you must book months in advance. Accommodation on Porquerolles is limited, expensive and needs reserving in advance; on Port-Cros it's almost non-existent. All visitors should observe signs forbidding smoking (away from the ports), flower-picking and littering.

Île de Porquerolles

The most easily accessible of the islands is Porquerolles, whose permanent village, also called PORQUEROLLES, has a few hotels and restaurants, plenty of cafés, a market and interminable games of boules. It dates from a nineteenth-century military settlement, and the village still focuses around the central place d'Armes, the erstwhile military exercise ground. In summer its population explodes to over 10,000, but there is some activity all year round. This is the only cultivated island of the three, with a few olive groves and three Côtes de Provence domaines that can be visited.

Porquerolles is big enough to find yourself alone amid its stunning landscapes. The lighthouse (June–Sept 11am–noon & 2.30–4.30pm weather permitting), due south of the village, and the calanques to its east make good destinations for an hour's walk, though don't even think of swimming on this side of the island, unless you fancy cliff diving. The southern shoreline is all cliffs, with scary paths meandering close to the edge through heather and exuberant maquis scrub. Just off the path to the lighthouse at the southern end of the village is the Maison du Parc (Mon–Fri & Sun: July & Aug 9.30am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.15pm; April–June, Sept & Oct 9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–5.15pm) with a garden of palms from around the world, information on the national park's activities and tours of the nearby Mediterranean botanic garden of Le Hameau. The longest beach is the plage Notre-Dame, 3km northeast of the village just before the terrain militaire on the northern tip. The nearest beach to the village is the plage d'Argent, 1km away (continue west from the port past the Arche de Noë and take the first, well-signed right). This 500-metre strip of white sand fringes a curving bay backed by pine forests, and has a pleasant restaurant, La Plage d'Argent (☎04.94.58.32.48; closed Sept–March; lunchtime plat du jour €13–24).

15

THE CÔTE D'AZUR

The îles d'Hyères

Practicalities

There's a small information centre by the harbour (daily: April–Sept 9am–5.30pm; Oct–March 9am–12.30pm; ☎ 04.94.58.33.76, 🌐 www.porquerolles.com) where you can get basic maps. You can hire bikes from several outlets: La Bécane (☎ 04.94.58.37.94) and L'Indien (☎ 04.94.58.30.39) are both on place d'Armes. Expect to pay upwards of €100 a night for hotel accommodation in Porquerolles in season; marginally cheaper is the Relais de la Poste, place d'Armes (☎ 04.98.04.62.62, 🌐 www.lerelaisdelaposte.com; 📍; closed Oct–March). Otherwise, you might try Les Mèdes, rue de la Douane (☎ 04.94.12.41.24, 🌐 www.hotel-les-medes.fr; 📍; closed Jan to mid-March & early Nov to late Dec), or Villa Sainte-Anne, on place d'Armes (☎ 04.98.04.63.00, 🌐 www.sainteanne.com; 📍; closed early Nov to mid-Feb), which has the most character. There's no campsite and camping sauvage is strictly forbidden, so don't miss the last ferry to the mainland. Most of the cafés and restaurants in the village are pure tourist fodder, though L'Oustaou on place d'Armes (☎ 04.94.58.30.13, closed mid-Nov to Jan) does more ambitious fare – tuna, pave de rumsteak or andouillettes – from around €12.50. You can buy sandwiches and pan bagnat on the place d'Armes for around €4, and there's a supermarket and an excellent fruit and vegetable stall.

Île de Port-Cros

The dense vegetation and mini-mountains of Port-Cros (🌐 www.portcrosparcnational.fr) make its exploration much tougher than Porquerolles, though it's less than half the size. Aside from ruined forts and the handful of buildings around the port, the only intervention is the classification labels on some of the plants and the extensive network of paths; you're not supposed to stray from these and it would be difficult to do so given the thickness of the undergrowth. The entire island is a protected zone, and has the richest fauna and flora of all the islands. Kestrels, eagles and sparrowhawks nest here; there are shrubs that flower and bear fruit at the same time, and more common species like broom, lavender, rosemary and heather flourish. One kilometre from the port (and a 45min walk) is the nearest beach, plage de la Palud; it takes rather longer to reach Mont Vinaigre, the island's highest point, via the Vallon de la Solitude – a three-hour round trip. From here there are views over the island's south coast and the islet of Gabinière. There are some 30 kilometres of paths on Port Cros, though all except those to the beaches are liable to closure during times of high fire risk.

The only hotel, Le Manoir d'Hélène (☎ 04.94.05.90.52, 🌐 monsite.orange.fr/hotelmanoirportcros; 📍 half-board; closed Oct to mid-April; menus from €43), has few vacancies; there are five half-board rooms at the restaurant, Hostellerie Provençale (☎ 04.94.05.90.43; closed Nov–Easter; 📍). Almost as expensive is dining in the few restaurants around the port, though you can get a sandwich or a slice of pizza. Once you leave the village, however, there's nothing; at the very least, walkers should be sure they carry enough water. Again, camping is forbidden.

Île du Levant

The Île du Levant – ninety percent military reserve – is almost always humid and sunny. Cultivated plant life goes wild, with the result that giant geraniums and nasturtiums climb three-metre hedges, overhung by gigantic eucalyptus trees and yuccas. The tiny bit of the island spared by the military is the nudist colony of HELIOPOLIS, set up in the 1930s. About sixty people live here all year round, joined by thousands who come for the summer, and by tens of thousands of day-trippers, who are treated as voyeurs; if you stay, even for one night, you'll receive a friendlier reception. The most reasonable hotels are Chez Valéry (☎04.94.05.90.83, ☎04.94.05.92.95; Ⓢ; closed Oct–March) and Gaëtan (☎04.94.05.91.78, 🌐www.hotelgaetan.com; Ⓢ; closed Oct–March). There are two campsites: Le Colombero (☎04.94.05.90.29; closed Oct–March) and La Pinède (☎04.94.05.92.81, 🌐www.campingdulevant.free.fr).

Levant has a better choice of restaurants than the other islands, though price and quality still don't match. The restaurant of the Hôtel Gaëtan is reasonable, with a €24 menu.

The Corniche des Maures

The Côte really gets going with the resorts of the Corniche des Maures, as multi-million-dollar residences lurk increasingly in the hills, luxurious yachts moor in the bays, and seafront prices become alarming. Douglas Fairbanks Jr, the late Grand Duke of Luxembourg and sundry other titled names have pushed this coastline into legend.

The Corniche des Maures has beaches that shine silver (from the mica crystals in the sand), tall dark pines, oaks and eucalyptus to shade them, glittering rocks of purple, green and reddish hue and chestnut-forested hills keeping winds away.

Bormes-les-Mimosas and around

Seventeen kilometres east of Hyères, chic BORMES-LES-MIMOSAS is medieval in flavour, with a ruined but restored castle at the summit of its hill, protected by spiralling lines of pantiled houses backing onto immaculately restored flights of steps. The mimosas here, and all along the Côte d'Azur, are no more indigenous than the people passing in their Porsches: the tree was introduced from Mexico in the 1860s, but the town still has some of the most luscious climbing flowers of any Côte town, and in summer, the displays of bougainvillea and oleander are impressive.

To the southwest of Bormes is one of those rare unbuilt-up stretches of coast around BREGANÇON and CABASSON, good wine-growing terrain, harbouring a presidential residence in the castle at Cap de Bregançon. Unfortunately, access to the sea is heavily controlled, with three beaches charging hefty parking fees (€7) and a small fee to cyclists and walkers. The beach by the castle past Cabasson is the best.

Practicalities

Two hotels worth trying in old Bormes are the rather plain and old-fashioned Bellevue, on place Gambetta (☎04.94.71.15.15, 🌐bellevuebormes.fr.st; Ⓢ; closed mid–Nov to Jan) or the fancier Hostellerie du Cigalou opposite (☎04.94.41.51.27, 🌐www.hostellerieducigalou.com; Ⓢ) In Cabasson, the attractive and peaceful Les Palmiers, 240 chemin du Petit-Fort (☎04.94.64.81.94, 🌐www.hotellespalmiers.com; Ⓢ; closed Dec–Jan; half-board compulsory in summer), has its own path to the beach. All campsites are just below the main road or in La Favière, closer to Le Lavandou than to Bormes. One of the best is Clau-Mar-Jo at 895 rte de Bénat (☎04.94.71.53.39; €26 for two people; closed mid–Oct to mid–March). The tourist office in Bormes is on place Gambetta (April–Sept daily 9am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.30pm; Oct–March Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎04.94.01.38.38, 🌐www.bormeslesmimosas.com).

Good restaurants include La Tonnelle on place Gambetta (☎04.94.71.34.84; closed Nov; lunch menus from €27), specializing in local recipes including daube de boeuf; La Cassole at 1 ruelle du Moulin (☎04.94.71.14.86; menus from €26) which serves Provençal specialties in unpretentious surroundings and Pâtes...et Pâtes, on place du Bazar (☎04.94.64.85.75; closed Tues & Thurs lunchtimes), which serves the best pasta in town from around €12.50.

Le Lavandou to La Croix-Valmer

LE LAVANDOU, a few kilometres east of Bormes, is a pleasantly unpretentious seaside town known for its good, sandy beaches. Its name derives from lavoir or “wash-house” rather than “lavender”. From the central promenade of quai Gabriel-Péri the sea is all but invisible thanks to the pleasure boats moored at the three harbours, and it’s only demand from restaurateurs that keeps the dozen or so fishing vessels, from a fleet that once numbered fifty, still in business. If you want to indulge in watersports or nightlife, the tourist office on quai Gabriel-Péri (May–Sept daily 9am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm; Nov–March Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2.30–6pm; ☎04.94.00.40.50, 🌐www.lavandou.com) will happily advise. For accommodation, try the Hôtel L’Oustaou, 20 av Général-de-Gaulle (☎04.94.71.12.18, 🌐www.lavandou-hotel-oustaou.com; 📍), a clean, family-run place in the town centre.

The town beach at Le Lavandou is quite broad and sandy, but if you’re after the fabled silver beaches you need to head out of town and east along the corniche to Cavalière, Pramousquier, Le Canadel and Le Rayol. It’s hardly countryside, but you can explore the Pointe du Layet headland just east of Cavalière, follow the sinuous D27 up to the Col du Canadel for breathtaking views and beautiful cork-oak woodland, and, in Le Rayol, visit a superb garden, the Domaine de Rayol (daily: summer 9.30am–7.30pm; winter 9.30am–5.30pm; €7) with plants from differing parts of the world that share the Mediterranean climate.

Beyond Le Rayol the corniche climbs away from the coast through 3km of open countryside, scarred almost every year by fires. As abruptly as this wilderness commences, it ends with the sprawling, bland family resort of Cavalaire-sur-Mer. From here another exceptional stretch of coastline, dressed only in its natural covering of rock and woodlands, is visible across the Baie de Cavalaire. This is the Domaine de Cap Lardier, a wonderful coastal conservation area around the southern tip of the St-Tropez peninsula, easily accessible from LA CROIX-VALMER. The resort’s centre is 2.5km from the sea, but this only adds to its charm, since some of the land in between is taken up by vineyards producing a very decent Côte de Provence.

La Croix-Valmer’s tourist office is at les Jardins de la Gare (mid-June to mid-Sept Mon–Sat 9.15am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm, Sun 9am–1pm; mid-Sept to mid-June Mon–Fri 9.15am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 9.15am–noon; ☎04.94.55.12.12, 🌐www.lacroixvalmer.fr), just up from the junction of the D559 and D93. A good-value hotel is La Bienvenue on rue L.-Martin (☎04.94.17.08.08, 🌐www.hotel-la-bienvenue.com; 📍; closed Nov–Feb) in the village centre. One of the cheapest options near the beach is the family-run Hostellerie La Ricarde, plage du Débarquement (☎04.94.79.64.07, 🌐www.golfe-infos.com/la-ricarde; 📍; closed Oct–March), whilst at the other end of the scale is Le Château de Valmer, on route de Gigaro (☎04.94.55.15.15, 🌐www.chateauvalmer.com; 📍; closed mid-Oct to mid-April), a luxurious old mansion within walking distance of the sea. You can camp at the four-star Sélection, on boulevard de la Mer (☎04.94.55.10.30, 🌐www.selectioncamping.com; €31.50 per tent; closed mid-Oct to mid-March; booking advisable), 400m from the sea and with excellent facilities. Good pizzas are guaranteed (€10 up) at L'Italian (☎04.94.79.67.16) on plage de Gigaro, just before the conservation area. Two other good but expensive restaurants on this beach are La Brigantine and Souleias.

The Massif des Maures

The secret of the Côte d'Azur is that however grossly vulgar the coast, Provence is still just behind – sparsely populated, village-oriented and dependent on the land for produce, not real estate. The most bewitching hinterland is the Massif des Maures, stretching from Hyères to Fréjus. The highest point of these hills stops short of 800m, but the quick succession of ridges, the sudden drops and views, and the curling, looping roads, are pervasively mountainous. Where the lie of the land allows, vines are grown. Elsewhere the hills are thickly forested, with Aleppo and umbrella pines, holly, cork oaks and sweet chestnut trees. In spring, the sombre forest is enlivened by millions of wild flowers, and the narrow, tortuous upland roads are busy with cyclists; in winter, this is the haunt of hunters. Amidst the brush lope the last of the Hermann's tortoises which once could be found along the whole of the northern Mediterranean coast.

Much of the Massif is inaccessible even to walkers. However, the GR9 footpath follows the highest and most northerly ridge from Pignans on the N97 past Notre-Dame-des-Angeles, La Sauvette, La Garde-Freinet and down to the head of the Golfe de St-Tropez. If you're cycling, the D14 that runs for 42km through the middle, parallel to the coast, from Pierrefeu-du-Var, north of Hyères, to Cogolin near St-Tropez, is manageable and stunning, climbing from 150m to 411m above sea level.

Collobrières and La Chartreuse de la Verne

At the heart of the Massif is the ancient village of COLLOBRIÈRES, reputed to have been the first place in France to learn from the Spanish that a certain tree plugged into bottles allows a wine industry to grow. From the

The forest fires of 2003

The summer of 2003 was not a happy one for Provence. A terrorist bomb in Nice was quickly forgotten in the face of the worst forest fires for a generation. A dry spring was followed by a long heatwave coupled with high mistral winds, which conspired to create tinderbox conditions, leading to fires in much of the region, from Salon de Provence to the Riviera. Worst affected was the Massif des Maures, where fires came closer to the coastal resorts than many could remember and 20,000 residents and holidaymakers were evacuated. People too frightened to return to their homes took to the beach at Les Issambres, near Ste-Maxime, while two holidaymakers died trying to flee flames near La Garde Freinet. The authorities introduced stop and search procedures as it became clear some of the fires had been started deliberately. But most of the fires probably started naturally or through carelessness, which sparked a wider debate about the wisdom of planting so many non-native pine trees. On the D14 between Collobrières and Grimaud a lovely belvedere acts as a memorial to the three sapeurs-pompiers from La-Seyne-sur-Mer who died here while fighting the fires.

Middle Ages until very recent times, cork production has been the major business of the village. However, the sweet chestnut tree is the mainstay of the local economy nowadays. The church, the mairie and the houses don't seem to have been modernized for a century, but the 🐘 Confiserie Azurienne on boulevard Koenig (9.30am–12.30pm & 1.30–7.15pm) exudes efficiency and modern business skill in the manufacture of all things chestnut: ice cream, jam, nougat, purée and marrons glacés. There's a small outdoor café there where you can enjoy the delicious ice cream.

Collobrières' tourist office on boulevard Charles-Caminat (July & Aug Mon–Fri 10am–12.30pm & 3–7pm, Sat & Sun 10am–12.30pm & 3.30–7pm; Sept–June Tues–Sat 8.30am–noon & 2–5.30pm, Sat 8.30am–noon; ☎04.94.48.08.00, 🌐www.collobrieres.fr; not always open during its published opening hours) can supply details of walks in the surrounding hills. There are two hotels: Notre-Dame, 15 av de la Libération (☎04.94.48.07.13, 📠04.94.48.05.95; 🍽; closed mid-Dec to mid-Feb), and the equally excellent-value Hôtel des Maures, 19 bd Lazare Carnot (☎04.94.48.07.10, 📠04.94.48.02.73; 🍽, ①, and ② per person full board). There are also two great chambres d'hôtes: L'Atelier, Colette Brésis' ceramic studio at Le Vallon des Fées, 2km west of the village along the D14 and with just one double room (☎04.94.48.05.92; 🍽; closed Nov–March); and Loïc and Andrée de Saleneuve's La Bastide de La Cabrière, 6km in the direction of Gonfaron on the D39 (☎04.94.48.04.31, 🌐www.saleneuve.com; 🍽). A municipal campsite, the St-Roch, south of the village near place Charles-de-Gaulle, is open in July and August (☎04.94.28.15.72; bookings through the tourist office). Camping sauvage is forbidden; one stray spark and you could be responsible for a thousand acres of burnt forest.

For food other than chestnuts, the restaurant La Petite Fontaine, 6 place de la République (☎04.94.48.00.12; closed Sun eve & Mon), is congenial and affordable, with menus from €24, but books up fast. If you want to buy some local wines, visit Les Vignerons de Collobrières close to the Hôtel Notre-Dame at the western entrance to the village. Local market days are Thursday and Sunday.

Hidden in the forest, 12km from Collobrières on a minor road off the D14 towards Grimaud, is a huge and now largely restored twelfth-century monastery, La Chartreuse de la Verne (daily except Tues: Feb–May & Oct–Dec 11am–5pm; June–Sept 11am–6pm; €5), abandoned at the time of the Revolution. If anything, the ongoing restoration work has left it looking a little too pristine, though there's no denying the wonder of its setting. The access road deteriorates into a rutted track for the last 500m.

△ Collobrières

Grimaud

GRIMAUD, 25km east of Collobrières along the twisting D14 and more easily reached from St-Tropez or La Croix Valmer, is a film set of a village perché. The cone of houses enclosing the eleventh-century church and culminating in the ruins of a medieval castle appears as a single, perfectly unified entity, though the effect of timelessness is undermined by the glass lift that whisks visitors up into the village from the main road. The most vaunted street is the arcaded rue des Templiers, which leads up to the pure Romanesque Église de St-Michel and a house of the Knights Templar, while the view from the castle ruins is superb. There's a tourist office at 1 bd des Aliziers just off the main road passing the village (Mon–Sat: April–June & Sept 9am–12.30pm & 2.30–6.15pm; July & Aug 9am–12.30pm & 3–7pm; Oct–March Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2.15–5.30pm; ☎04.94.55.43.83, 🌐www.grimaud-provence.com) and a little folk museum, the Musée des Arts et Traditions (Tues–Sat 2.30–5.50pm; free) close by. Great-value menus from €45 are offered at Le Coteau Fleuri, place des Pénitents (☎04.94.43.20.17, 🌐www.coteaufleuri.fr; closed Tues all day, Mon & Fri lunch, plus Nov & early Dec), which also has a few rooms (5).

Cogolin

COGOLIN, just south of Grimaud, is remarkable for its traditional craft manufacturing – reeds for wind instruments, pipes for smoking, wrought-iron furniture, silk yarn and knotted wool carpets. The town is animated all year round – a fact reflected in its fiendish traffic problem and even more fiendish traffic control measures.

Visits to some of the craft factories can be arranged and are free. The tourist office on place de la République (March–June & Sept–Oct Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm, Sat 9am–12.30pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–6.30pm; Nov–Feb Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm, Sat 9.30am–12.30pm; ☎04.94.55.01.10, 🌐www.cogolin-provence.com) will provide you with a complete list of addresses and times, and help with making appointments. Or you can just wander down avenue Georges-Clemenceau and pop into the retail outlets. Pipes made from briar wood are on show in Courrieu at no. 58 (daily 9am–noon & 2–6pm), and the Manufacture de Tapis, just off the avenue on boulevard Louis-Blanc, re-creates designs by famous artists such as Léger and Mondrian (exhibition room open Mon–Thurs 8.30am–noon & 2–5.30pm, Fri until 5pm). World-famous musicians get their reeds from Rigotti, on rue Barbusse; visits are restricted however to musicians and groups only.

From place Bellevue, at the top of the town away from the bustling centre, you can see across the St-Tropez peninsula to Gassin, Ramatuelle and St-Tropez itself. Having taken in that view and seen enough of Cogolin's manufacturing businesses, try the local wines: the Cave des Vignerons is on rue Marceau, just before the junction with the N98 heading westwards (daily: mid-June to mid-Sept 2.30–7.30pm; mid-Sept to mid-June 8.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm). There are a couple of hotels in Cogolin that make viable bases for trips into St-Tropez: amiable, comfortable Coq Hôtel, place de la République (☎04.94.54.13.71, ☎04.94.54.03.06; 6); and trendy boutique hotel Bliss, next door (☎04.94.54.15.17, ☎04.94.54.42.78; 7). Both, however, are in somewhat noisy, central locations.

La Garde-Freinet

The attractive village of LA GARDE-FREINET, 10km northwest of Grimaud, was founded in the late twelfth century by people from the nearby villages of Saint Clément and Miremer. The original fortified settlement sat further up the hillside, and the foundations of the fortress are still visible above the village beside the ruins of a fifteenth-century castle (take the path from La Planette car park at the western end of the village). These days a note of St-Tropez trendiness is creeping in, but it still feels that it belongs to the locals, thanks in part to the regeneration of forestry business around cork and chestnut. It also has medieval charm; easy walks to stunning panoramas; markets twice a week (Wed & Sun); a chestnut cooperative on the northern approach to the village; tempting food shops like La Voute, selling organic produce and good local wines; and very reasonable accommodation. The tourist office operates from the Chapelle St Jean, on place de la Mairie (Easter–Oct Mon–Sat 9.30am–1pm & 4–6.30pm, Sun 10am–12.30pm; Nov–Easter Mon–Sat 10am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; ☎04.94.43.67.41, 🌐www.lagardefreinet-tourisme.com), and will provide details for the entire Maures region, including suggesting walks and hikes such as the spectacular 21-kilometre GR9 route des Crêtes. The danger of forest fires is particularly high here; the current risk level is posted up outside the tourist office. Next door is the Conservatoire du Patrimoine (Tues–Sat 10am–12.30pm & 3–6pm; €2) which organizes guided walks on various local topics and has exhibits on local sericulture, a model of the old fortress.

For rooms, La Claire Fontaine on place Vieille (☎ & 📞04.94.43.63.76; Ⓜ) and Le Fraxinois on place Neuve (☎04.94.43.62.84, 📞04.94.43.69.65; Ⓜ) are incredibly good value. There's also a campsite, La Ferme de Bérard, 5km along the D558 towards Grimaud (☎04.94.43.21.23, 📞04.94.43.32.33; €11.20 for two adults, car and tent; closed Nov–Feb).

The place to be of an evening is Le Carnotzet bar, art gallery and restaurant, on the exquisite place du Marché (☎04.94.43.62.73; menu from €20; occasional live jazz). La Colombe Joyeuse, on place Vieille (☎04.94.43.65.24; closed Tues in winter; €15 menu), has pigeon as its à la carte speciality, whilst La Fauçado, on the main road to the coast (☎04.94.43.60.41; closed Tues in winter; à la carte around €60), is overpriced, but serves some beautiful dishes from local produce in a pretty garden setting.

St-Tropez and its peninsula

The origins of ST-TROPEZ are unremarkable: a fishing village that grew up around a port founded by the Greeks of Marseille, which was destroyed by the Saracens in 739 and finally fortified in the late Middle Ages. Its sole distinction was its inaccessibility: stuck on a small peninsula that never warranted proper roads, St-Tropez could only easily be reached by boat. This held true as late as the 1880s, when the novelist Guy de Maupassant sailed into the port during his final high-living binge before the onset of syphilitic insanity.

Soon after, the painter Paul Signac was sailing down the coast when bad weather forced him to moor in St-Tropez. He promptly decided to build a house there, to which he invited his friends. Matisse was one of the first to accept, with Bonnard, Marquet, Dufy, Dérain, Vlaminck, Seurat and Van Dongen following suit, and by the eve of World War I St-Tropez was an established hangout for bohemians. The 1930s saw a new influx, of writers as much as painters: Cocteau, Colette and Anaïs Nin, whose journal records “girls riding bare-breasted in the back of open cars”. In 1956, Roger Vadim arrived to film Brigitte Bardot in Et Dieu Créa la Femme, the international cult of Tropezian

ST-TROPEZ

ACCOMMODATION
B. Lodge	B
Benkirai	F
Byblos	D
Lou Cagnard	E
La Ponche	A
Le Sube	C

EATING & DRINKING
Café des Arts	12	Le Papagayo	8
Le Bistrot	13	Le Petit Charron	11
Les Caves du Roy	D	Le Pigeonnier	2
L'Esquinade	1	La Rhumerie	4
Gandhi	7	Café Sénéquier	5
Le Gorille	6	La Tarte Tropicienne	10
Joseph l'Éscale	3	VIP Room	9

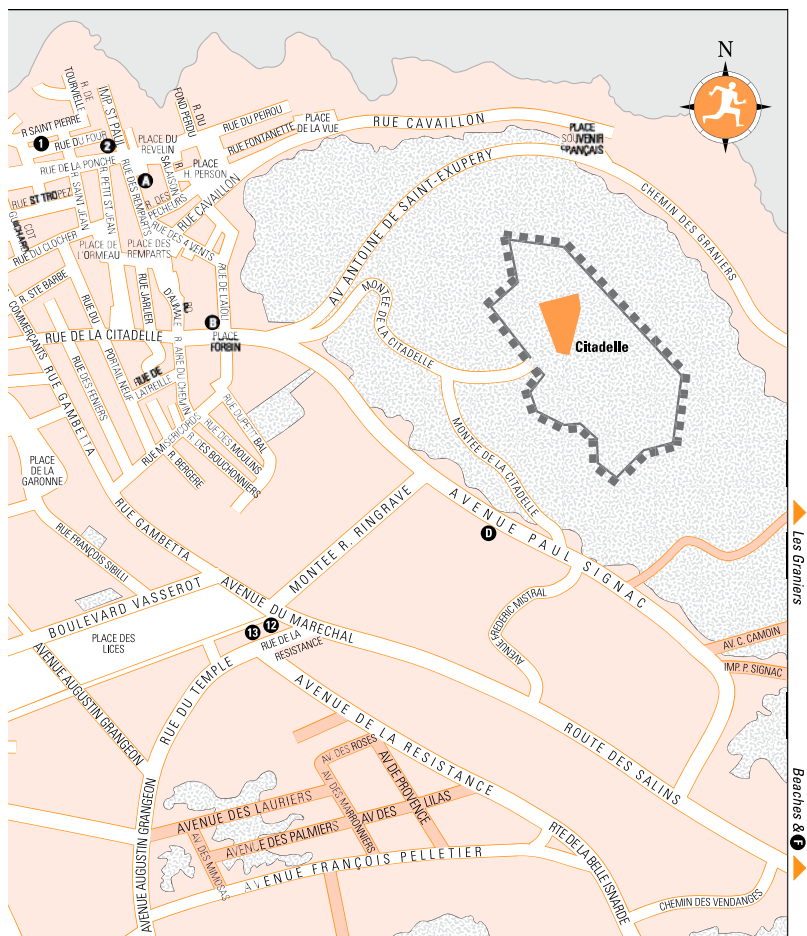

sun, sex and celebrities promptly took off and the place has been groaning under the weight of impossible numbers of visitors ever since.

As the summer playground of Europe's youthful rich and famous, St-Tropez remains undeniably glamorous, its oversize yachts and infamous champagne "spray" parties creating an air of hedonistic excess. Unless you have the holiday budget of a supermodel or Formula One racing driver, however, it can feel like a party you're not invited to.

Arrival, information and accommodation

Buses run between the main coast road at La Foux and St-Tropez, 5.5km away, every thirty minutes to an hour or so in season (rather less frequently at other times), dropping you at the gare routière on avenue Général-de-Gaulle. From here it's a short walk along avenue du 8-Mai-1945 to the Vieux Port, where you'll find the tourist office on quai Jean-Jaurès (daily: April–June 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–7pm; July & Aug 9.30am–8pm; Oct–March 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎ 04.94.97.45.21, 🌐 www.ot-saint-tropez.com). Bikes and motorbikes can be rented at Holiday Bikes at 12 av G.-Leclerc (☎ 04.94.97.09.39, 🌐 www.holiday-bikes.com).

Accommodation is a problem; between April and September you'll be lucky to find a room unless you've booked in advance or are prepared to pay exorbitant prices. The tourist office can help with reservations, but, transport permitting, you might be better off staying in La Croix-Valmer or La Garde-Freinet. Many hotels close out of season. Camping near St-Tropez can be expensive, with many sites more geared towards chalet lets than providing emplacements for tents. The nearest sites are the two on the plage du Pampelonne, which charge extortionate rates and are massively crowded in high summer. Otherwise, within a three-kilometre radius of Ramatuelle are Les Tournels on route de Camarat (☎04.94.55.90.90, 🌐www.tournels.com; closed Jan & Feb, €38 per tent) and La Croix du Sud on route des Plages (☎04.94.55.51.23, 🌐www.camping-saint-tropez.com; closed mid-Oct to March). Overnighting in vehicles is not permitted.

B.Lodge 23 rue de l'Aïoli ☎04.94.97.06.57, 🌐www.hotel-le-baron.com. Overlooking the citadelle, quieter than hotels in the centre and with stylish modern decor; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec. 4

Benkirai 11 chemin du Pinet ☎04.94.97.04.37, 🌐www.hotel-benkirai.com. Trendy newcomer with decor by a young associate of Philippe Starck and doubles around €450 in summer. 3

Byblos av Paul-Signac ☎04.94.56.68.00, 🌐www.byblos.com. The perennial favourite if money really is no object and you need to be with the in-crowd, with doubles over €500 a night in July and Aug. 3

Lou Cagnard 18 av Paul-Roussel

☎04.94.97.04.24, 🌐www.hotel-lou-cagnard.com. One of the better value options, a bit dreary looking from the outside but with a decent garden. 4

La Ponche 3 rue des Remperts ☎04.94.97.02.53, 🌐www.laponche.com. An old block of fishermen's houses with a host of famous arty names in its guest book. Closed Nov to mid-Feb. 3

Le Sube 15 quai Suffren ☎04.94.97.30.04, 🌐www.hotel-sube.com. Right in the thick of it, offering unique views over the port. 3

The Town

Beware of coming to St-Tropez in high summer, unless by helicopter or yacht (or by hydrofoil from Ste-Maxime). Traffic jams on the road from La Foue are nightmarish, the pedestrian jams around the port are not much better, and the beaches aren't the cleanest. Save your visit for a spring or autumn day instead and you'll understand better why this place has had such hype.

The Vieux Port, rebuilt after its destruction in World War II from which the old town rises above the eastern quay, is where you'll get the classic St-Tropez experience: the quayside café clientele face-à-face with the yacht-deck martini sippers and the latest fashions parading in between, defining the French word frimer, which means to stroll ostentatiously in places like St-Tropez. It's all highly theatrical, if more than a little vulgar – a sort of human zoo where celebrities, millionaires and their hangers-on are the willing exhibits. You'll either love it or hate it.

Up from the port, at the end of quai Jean-Jaurès, you enter place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville, with the Château Suffren, originally built in 1980 by Count Guillaume 1er of Provence, and the very pretty mairie. A street to the left leads down to the rocky baie de la Glaye, while straight ahead rue de la Ponche passes through an ancient gateway to place du Revelin above the exceptionally pretty fishing port and its tiny beach. Turning inland and upwards, struggling past continuous shopfronts, stalls and café tables, you finally reach the open space around the sixteenth-century citadelle. It houses a local history museum (closed for renovation but scheduled to reopen during 2007; usually daily: April–Oct 10am–8pm; Nov–March 10am–6.30pm; summer nocturnes in high season until 10pm Wed–Sat; €5.50) which occasionally hosts art exhibitions. The walk round the ramparts (closed for restoration) has the best views of the gulf and the back of the town – views that haven't changed all that much since their translations in oil onto canvas before the war.

Some of these paintings you can see at the marvellous Musée de l'Annonciade, in the deconsecrated sixteenth-century chapel on place Georges-Grammont, right on the port (daily except Tues: Jan–June & Dec 10am–noon & 2–6pm; July–Oct 10am–1pm & 3–7pm; summer nocturnes until 10pm Wed & Fri; €5.50). It was originally Signac's idea to have a permanent exhibition space for the neo-Impressionists and Fauvists who painted here, though it was not until 1955 that the collections of various individuals were put together. The Annonciade features works by Signac, Matisse and most of the other artists who worked here: grey, grim, northern views of Paris, Boulogne and Westminster, and then local, brilliantly sunlit scenes by the same brush – a real delight and unrivalled outside Paris for the 1890–1940 period of French art. Just inland from the port at 9 rue Etienne Berny is the Maison des Papiillons (April–Oct Mon–Sat 2.30–6pm; €3), a butterfly museum housing 4500 specimens including many rare and endangered species.

The other pole of St-Tropez's life, south of the Vieux Port, is place des Lices. The café-brasseries have – like those on the port – become a bit too Champs-Élysées in style, but you can still sit on benches in the shade of decayed but surviving plane trees and watch the boules games.

The beaches

The beach within easiest walking distance is Les Graniers, below the citadelle just beyond the port des Pêcheurs along rue Cavaillon. From there, a path follows the coast around the baie des Canebiers, with its small beach, to Cap St-Pierre, Cap St-Tropez, the very crowded Les Salins beach and right round to Tahiti-Plage, about 11km away.

Tahiti-Plage is the start of the almost straight, five-kilometre north–south Pampelonne beach, famous bronzing belt of St-Tropez and world initiator of the toplevel bathing cult. The water is shallow for 50m or so, and the beach is exposed to the wind, and sometimes scourged by dried sea vegetation, not to mention more distasteful garbage. But spotless glitter comes from the unending line of beach bars and restaurants, all with patios and sofas, serving cocktails and gluttonous ice creams (as well as full-blown meals). Le 55 on boulevard Patch (☎04.94.97.55.55) is the original and most famous; La Voile Rouge, boulevard Patelli, chemin des Moulins (☎04.94.79.84.34) is where toplevel bathing first became the norm; and Maison Ocoa, boulevard Patch (☎04.94.79.89.80) is über-trendy – almost a nightclub on the beach. Though you'll stumble across people in the nude on all stretches of the beach, only some of the bars welcome people carrying wallets and nothing else.

Transport from St-Tropez to the beaches is provided by a frequent minibus service (June–Sept only) from place des Lices to Salins, or the infrequent bus service #105 to Ramatuelle which runs along the route de Pampelonne. If you're driving, you'll be forced to pay high parking charges at all the beaches, or to leave your car or motorbike some distance from the sea and easy prey to thieves.

Eating and drinking

Restaurants in St-Tropez obsess as much over how stylish they (and their customers) look as over the quality of the food they offer, and budget offerings – while not unknown – are distinctly in the minority. Whatever the category of restaurant, you should reckon on paying quite a bit more than in comparable places in other resorts in the Var.

Café des Arts place des Lices ☎04.94.97.02.25. The number-one brasserie on the square, where Mick and Bianca Jagger held their wedding reception in 1971; lunchtime plats du jour €16, evenings €16 and upwards.

Le Bistrot 3 place des Lices ☎04.94.97.11.33. Leather seating and chic decor for traditional preening and excellent but expensive eats; midday formule €14, otherwise from €32. Closed Wed in winter.

Gandhi 3 quai de l'Épi ☎04.94.97.71.71. Curries and tandoori, with a good selection of fish and shellfish on the menu. Lunch menu from €18.50 and dinner from €30. Closed all day Wed out of season, Wed lunch in April & Oct.

Le Gorille 1 quai Suffren. Straightforward steak and burger fare on the port, for around €15. July & Aug open 24hr.

Joseph l'Escale 9 quai Jean-Jaurès
☎ 04.94.97.00.63. Slick quayside restaurant that is rather more affordable than its sister restaurant around the corner, with main course fish dishes from around €17 and a menu at €37.

Le Papagayo Résidence du Port
☎ 04.94.79.29.50. Enormous bar/restaurant/club in a strategic location right on the port, with a big terrace and sushi on the menu.

Le Petit Charron 6 rue des Charrons
☎ 04.94.97.73.78. Tiny terrace and dining room serving beautifully cooked Provençal specialities. Plats du jour from around €18. Closed Sun out of season.

La Rhumerie quai Jean-Jaurès ☎ 04.94.97.31.58. Just about the cheapest proper meals on the port, with pasta dishes from €8.60 and plats du jour around €14.

Café Sénéquier 90 quai Jean-Jaurès. The top quayside café, open from breakfast; vast and expensive – horribly so for drinks – but it sells sensational nougat (also on sale from the shop in place aux Herbes at the back).

La Tarte Tropezienne 36 rue G.-Clemenceau. Patisserie claiming to have invented the rather sickly sponge and cream custard cake, though you no longer have to come to St-Tropez to sample it – the company has evolved into quite a large chain with branches the length of the Côte d'Azur.

Nightlife

In season St-Tropez stays up late. You can spend the evening trying on fancy clothes in the couturier shops; the boules games on place des Lices continue until well after dusk; and the portside spectacle doesn't falter till the early hours. If you're rich or mad enough to want to pay to see – and be seen with – the nightlife creatures of St-Tropez, clubs include: Les Caves du Roy, in the flashy Hôtel Byblos on rue Paul-Signac (the most expensive and exclusive); L'Esquinade, on rue du Four, which has been going strong since Bardot was young; and the VIP Room on the Nouveau Port. There's also a gay club, Le Pigeonnier, in rue de la Ponche.

Gassin and Ramatuelle

Though the coast of the St-Tropez peninsula sprouts second residences like a cabbage patch gone to seed, the interior is almost uninhabited, thanks to government intervention, complex ownerships and the value of some local wines. The best view of this richly green and flowering countryside is from the hilltop village of Gassin, its lower neighbour Ramatuelle, or the tiny road between them, the dramatic route des Moulins de Paillas, where three ruined windmills could once catch every wind.

△ St-Tropez

GASSIN is the shape and size of a small ship perched on a summit; once an eighth-century Muslim stronghold, it is now, of course, highly chic, and best known as the birthplace of soccer idol David Ginola. It's an excellent place for a blowout dinner, sitting outside by the village wall with a spectacular panorama east over the peninsula. Of the handful of restaurants, Bello Visto, 9 place des Barrys (☎04.94.56.17.30, ☎04.94.43.45.36; closed Tues lunch), has very acceptable Provençal specialities on a €27 menu, plus nine rooms at excellent prices for this brilliant setting (4).

RAMATUELLE is bigger than its neighbour, though just as old, and is surrounded by some of the best Côte de Provence vineyards. The twisting, arcaded streets are full of arts and crafts of dubious talent, but it's all very pleasant. The most beautiful French actor ever to have appeared on screen, Gérard Philippe (1922–59), is buried in Ramatuelle's cemetery. His ivy-covered tomb, shaded by a rose bush, is set against the wall on the right as you look down. Hotels worth trying are the fairly basic Chez Tony, 31 rue Clemenceau (☎04.94.79.20.46; 3), and the more attractive Lou Castellas, route des Moulins (☎04.94.79.20.67, 🌐www.lecurieducastellas.com; 6). For food, great pasta dishes are to be had at Au Fil à la Pâte, 7 rue Victor-Léon (☎04.94.79.16.40; closed Nov–Feb), with good plats du jour at €12.

Port Grimaud

At the head of the Golfe de St-Tropez, just north of La Foux on the main coast road, the ultimate Côte d'Azur property development half stands and half floats. PORT GRIMAUD was created in the 1960s as a private community, with waterways for roads and yachts parked at the bottom of every garden. It's very well done, with all the houses in exquisitely tasteful old Provençal style, though the village is surrounded by vast car parks rather than vineyards or fields of lavender and there's a certain theme-park artificiality about the place. The well-heeled inhabitants include a certain Joan Collins.

The main visitors' entrance is 800m up the well-signed road off the N98. You don't have to pay to get in, but you can't explore all the islands without hiring a boat (€20 for 30min) or joining a crowded boat tour (€4). Even access to the church tower for views is controlled by an automatic barrier (€1). However, if you want to eat and drink, there are rows upon rows of brasseries, restaurants and cafés, clearly designed for the visiting public rather than the residents, and not particularly good value (though affordable enough).

Ste-Maxime and around

Facing St-Tropez across its gulf, STE-MAXIME is the perfect Côte stereotype: palmed corniche and enormous pleasure-boat harbour, beaches crowded with confident bronzed windsurfers and water-skiers, and estate agents outnumbering any other businesses by something like ten to one. It sprawls a little too much – merging with its northern neighbours to create a continuous suburban strip all the way to Fréjus. But the appeal of the water's edge is hard to deny, and though it's hardly as colourful as St-Tropez, it's a good deal less pretentious and the beaches are cleaner.

If your budget denies you the pleasures of water-skiing, wet-biking and wind-surfing, you might find Ste-Maxime a little lacking in diversions. You can, at least, eat at reasonable cost, since there are plenty of crêperies, glaciers and snack places along the central avenue Charles-de-Gaulle.

For the spenders, the east-facing plage de la Nartelle, 2km east from the centre towards Les Issambres, is the strip of sand to head for. Here, at Barco Beach and its seven neighbours, you'll pay for shaded cushioned comfort, you can enter the water on a variety of different vehicles, eat grilled fish, have drinks brought to your mattress and listen to a piano player as dusk falls. A kilometre or so further on, plage des Éléphants recalls the town's link to Jean de Brunhoff, creator of Babar the elephant, who had a holiday home in Ste-Maxime. Sainte Maxime also has a gay beach, Havana Plage, in front of the casino in the town centre.

Ste-Maxime's vieille ville has several good markets: a covered flower and food market on rue Fernand-Bessy (June–Sept daily 7am–noon & 4–8pm; Oct–May every morning except Mon); a Thursday morning food market on and around place du Marché; bric-a-brac every Friday morning on place Jean-Mermoz; and arts and crafts in the pedestrian streets (mid-June to mid-Sept daily 5–11pm).

High up in the Massif des Maures on the road to Le Muy, some 10km north of Ste-Maxime, the marvellous Musée du Phonographe et de la Musique Mécanique, in the parc St-Donat (Easter–June & Sept Wed–Sun 10am–noon; July & Aug Wed–Sun 10am–noon & 4–6.30pm; €3), is the result of one amazing woman's forty-year obsession with collecting audio equipment, amassing a wide selection of automata, musical boxes and pianolas, plus one of Thomas Edison's "talking machines" dating from 1878.

Practicalities

Buses into town stop outside the tourist office on the promenade Simon-Lorière (June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–7pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 10am–noon & 4–7pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.94.55.75.55, 🌐www.ste-maxime.com), which can give you information on trips and advice on hotel vacancies – once again, rare in summer. If you're heading for St-Tropez from Ste-Maxime, an alternative to the bus, at not much greater cost, is to go by boat; the twenty-minute service from Ste-Maxime's gare maritime on the port (€11.50 return) runs from April to early January, with more frequent crossings in July and August. Bikes can be rented at Holiday Bikes, 10 rte du Plan de la Tour (☎04.94.43.90.19, 🌐www.holiday-bikes.com).

Finding accommodation in Ste-Maxime can be a nightmare in high season: if you're coming in July or August, call well in advance to make a reservation. The best of the cheaper hotels is the good-value and welcoming Auberge Provençale, 19 rue Aristide-Briand (☎04.94.55.76.90, ☎04.94.55.76.91; ③), with its own restaurant; or there's the small Castellamar, 8 av G.-Pompidou (☎04.94.96.19.97; ③; closed Oct–March), on the west side of the river but still close to the centre and the sea. For more comfortable surroundings, try the central Hôtellerie de la Poste, 11 bd Frédéric-Mistral (☎04.94.96.18.33, 🌐www.hotelleriesudsoleil.com; ②), a modern but attractive hotel with very nice rooms; or the small and unobtrusive Marie-Louise, 2km west in the Hameau de Guerre-Vieille (☎04.94.96.06.05, 🌐www.hotel-marielouise.com; ④), tucked away in greenery but in sight of the sea. For camping, Les Cigalons, in quartier de la Nartelle, is the two-star seaside option (☎04.94.96.05.51, 🌐www.campingcigalon.com; closed mid-Oct to March; €19). It also rents holiday bungalows.

For non-beach eating, the Hostellerie de la Belle Aurore, 5 bd Jean-Moulin (☎04.94.96.02.45; closed Wed outside high season & mid-Oct to March; weekday menu €38), offers gourmet food on a sea-view terrace; or, less expensively, there's classic French cuisine at La Table des Gêmeaux, 33 rue des Maures (☎04.94.49.16.54; menus starting at €26).

Fréjus and St-Raphaël

The major conurbation of St-Raphaël on the coast and Fréjus, 3km inland, has a history dating back to the Romans. Fréjus was established as a naval base under Julius Caesar and Augustus, St-Raphaël as a resort for its veterans. The ancient port at Fréjus, or Forum Julii, had 2km of quays and was connected by a walled canal to the sea, which was considerably closer then. After the battle of Actium in 31 BC, the ships of Antony and Cleopatra's defeated fleet were brought here.

The area between Fréjus and the sea is now the suburb of Fréjus-Plage with a vast 1980s marina, Port-Fréjus. Both Fréjus and Fréjus-Plage merge with St-Raphaël, which in turn merges with Boulouris to the east.

Despite the obsession with facilities for the seaborne rich – there were already two pleasure ports at St-Raphaël before Port-Fréjus was built – this is no bad place for a stopover. There's a wide range of hotels and restaurants in St-Raphaël, reasonable sandy beaches, good transport links and some interesting sightseeing to be done in Fréjus.

Fréjus

The population of FRÉJUS's vieille ville, which lies within the Roman perimeter, was greater in the first century BC than it is today. Little remains of the Roman walls that once circled the city, and the harbour that made Fréjus an important Mediterranean port silted up early on and was finally filled in after the Revolution. It's the medieval centre, as much as the classical remnants, that evokes the antiquity of this ancient town.

Arrival, information and accommodation

Up to sixteen eastbound and nine westbound trains a day stop at Fréjus' gare SNCF, just five to eight minutes away from St-Raphaël. Trains to St-Raphaël itself are much more common, and it's usually easiest to alight there and then take the #1, #3, #4, #5, #6 or #7 Agglobus, which run frequently between the two towns. The gare routière is on the east side of the town centre on place Paul-Vernet (☎04.94.53.78.46), opposite which is the tourist office, at 325 rue Jean-Jaurès (Mon–Sat 9.30am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun & public hols 10am–noon & 3–6pm; ☎04.94.51.83.83, 🌐www.frejus.fr). If you're planning to visit most of Fréjus's sights it may be worth getting a Frejus'Pass (€4.60), which is valid for seven days and includes access to the amphitheatre, Roman theatre and Musée Archéologique. You can pick up the pass at the sights themselves. Cycles Patrick Béraud at 337 rue de Triberg (☎04.94.51.20.20), and Holiday Bikes, 238 av de Verdun (☎04.94.40.16.62, 🌐www.holiday-bikes.com), have bikes for rent. To connect to the Internet, head for Espace Bureaucratique, 58 rue de Grisolle (☎04.94.17.15.70).

If you're looking to stay the night in Fréjus, three central hotels worth trying are the plush Aréna, 145 rue de Général-de-Gaulle (☎04.94.17.09.40, 🌐www .arena-hotel.com; ⑦), with pretty, if rather small rooms and a pool; Le Bellevue, place Paul-Vernet (☎04.94.17.12.20; ②), fairly basic but in a convenient though not particularly quiet location; and La Riviera, 90 rue Grisolle (☎04.94.51.31.46, ☎04.94.17.18.34; ②), very small and not very modern, but clean and perfectly acceptable. There's an HI hostel 2km northeast from the centre of Fréjus at 675 chemin du Couillier (☎04.94.53.18.75, 🌐www.fuaj.org; reception 8–11am & 5.30–8.30pm); bus #10 from St Raphaël gare routière. Beds are €13. There are many campsites in the Fréjus area, mostly west of the town, some of them extremely large. One of the more moderate-sized sites is Les Acacias, 370 rue Henri-Giraud (☎04.94.53.21.22, 🌐www.acacias.net; April–Oct, €21 for tent, car & two people), 2.5km from the centre.

The Roman town

A tour of the Roman remains will give you a good idea of the extent of Forum Julii, but they are scattered throughout and beyond the town centre and take a full day to get around. Turning right out of the gare SNCF and then right down boulevard Severin-Decuers brings you to the Butte St-Antoine, against whose east wall the waters of the port would have lapped, and which once was capped by a fort. It was one of the port's defences, and one of the ruined towers may have been a lighthouse. A path around the southern wall follows the quayside (some stretches are visible) to the medieval Lanterne d'Auguste, built on the Roman foundations of a structure marking the entrance of the canal into the ancient harbour.

In the other direction from the station, past the Roman Porte des Gaules and along rue Henri-Vadon, you come to the amphitheatre (Tues–Sun: May–Oct 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; Nov–April 9.30am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; €2, or covered by the Fréjus'Pass, see p.1159), smaller than those at Arles and Nîmes, but still able to seat around 10,000. Today it's used for bullfights and concerts. Its upper tiers have been reconstructed in the same greenish local stone used by the Romans, but the vaulted galleries on the ground floor are largely original. The Roman theatre (same hours and prices) is north of the town, along avenue du Théâtre-Romain, its original seats long gone, though again it's still used for shows in summer. Northeast of it, in the parc Aurelienne at the far end of avenue du XVème-Corps-d'Armée, six arches are visible of the forty-kilometre aqueduct, once as high as the ramparts. Closer to the centre, on rue des Moulins, are the arcades of the Porte d'Orée, positioned on the former harbour's edge alongside what was probably a bath complex.

The medieval town

The Cité Episcopale, or cathedral close, takes up two sides of place Formigé, the marketplace and heart of both contemporary and medieval Fréjus. It comprises the cathedral, flanked by the fourteenth century bishop's palace (now the Hôtel de Ville), the baptistry, chapterhouse, cloisters and archeological museum. Visits to the cloisters and baptistry are guided (June–Sept daily 9am–6.30pm; Oct–May Tues–Sun 9am–noon & 2–5pm; €5); access to the main body of the cathedral is free (8am–noon & 2.30–7pm).

The oldest part of the complex is the baptistry, built in the fourth or fifth century and so contemporary with the decline of the city's Roman founders. Its two doorways are of different heights, signifying the enlarged spiritual stature of the baptized. Bits of the early Gothic cathedral may belong to a tenth-century church, but its best features, apart from the bright diamond-shaped tiles on the spire, are Renaissance: the choir stalls, a wooden crucifix on the left of the entrance and the intricately carved doors with scenes of a Saracen massacre, protected by a wooden cover and only opened for the guided tours. Far the most beautiful and engaging component of the whole ensemble, however, are the cloisters. In a small garden of scented bushes around a well, slender marble columns, carved in the twelfth century, support a fourteenth-century ceiling of wooden panels painted with apocalyptic creatures. The treasures of the Musée Archéologique on the upper storey of the cloisters (same hours and prices as amphitheatre) include a complete Roman mosaic of a leopard and a copy of a double-headed bust of Hermes.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

One of the best restaurants in the old town is the tiny Les Potiers, 135 rue des Potiers (☎04.94.51.33.74, eves only July & Aug except Sun), with menus of fresh seasonal ingredients from €23. The rather more expensive restaurant at L'Aréna hotel is excellent for fish and seafood, with a €25 lunch menu and evening menus at €40 and up. Cheaper eats can be found on place Agricola, place de la Liberté and the main shopping streets. Cadet Rousselle, at the top of place Agricola (☎04.94.53.36.92), is a crêperie with a €12.50 menu that includes three crêpes. Equally good value are the massive salads at the Brasserie Hermès (☎04.94.17.26.02) opposite the cathedral at 15 place Formigé. At Fréjus-Plage there's a string of eating options, though menus are monotonously alike, with more upmarket plateau des fruits de mer outlets at Port-Fréjus. The Bar du Marché, on the place de la Liberté, is a good establishment for a bit of café lounging. The main market days are Wednesday and Saturday. If you happen to be in town during the August Féria, you can take in a Spanish-style bullfight, plus the associated entertainment – flamenco and the like.

Around Fréjus

Unlikely remnants of the more recent past come in the shape of a Vietnamese pagoda, and an abandoned mosque, both built by French colonial troops. The Mosquée Missiri de Djenné is on the left off the D4 to Bagnols, in the middle of an army camp 2km from the RN7 junction. A strange, guava-coloured, fort-like building, it's a replica of a Sudanese mosque in Mali, decorated inside with fading murals of desert journeys gracefully sketched in white on the dark pink walls. Sadly it's fenced off, though much of the interior is visible from outside. The pagoda Hong Hien (daily: summer 9am–7pm; winter 9am–5pm; €2), still maintained as a Buddhist temple, is on the crossroads of the RN7 to Cannes and the D100, about 2km out of Fréjus. Alongside the pagoda is the massive, and rather moving, memorial to the dead of the Indo–Chinese wars of the 1940s and 1950s (daily except Tues 10am–5.30pm). Much in the manner of the US Vietnam memorial, it is inscribed with the name of every fallen Frenchman; the sheer length of the lists suggesting the years 1950–54 were the most bloody. Just off the RN7 at La Tour de Mare is the last of Jean Cocteau's artistic landmarks, the chapel of Notre-Dame-de-Jerusalem (same hours and prices as amphitheatre). Conceived as the church for a failed artistic community, the octagonal building was not completed until after Cocteau's death in 1963, and the interior was completed to Cocteau's plans by Edouard Dermit. The Last Supper scene inside includes a self portrait of Cocteau; the building's exterior is covered in elegantly simple mosaics and its floors with vibrant blue tiles.

If mountain biking tempts you, there are a number of trails which start in the Base Nature, just west of Port-Fréjus along the coast, and head up into the forested hills of the Massif de l'Esterel to the northeast of the town. The trails range from a flat, five-kilometre ride around a marsh to more serious 35-kilometre rides in the massif. The tourist office in St Raphaël sells a map and guide to the Esterel for €8.50, or call the Point Accueil VTT for more information (☎04.94.51.91.10).

For children, there's a zoo in Le Capitou, close to exit 38 on the D4 heading north (daily: March–May & Sept–Oct 10am–5pm; June–Aug 10am–6pm; Nov–Feb 10.30am–4.30pm; €12, children aged 3–9 €8; bus #2), and a water amusement park, Aqualand (daily: June & Sept 10am–6pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; €23, children under 12 €18; bus #9), off the RN98 to St-Aygulf.

St-Raphaël

A large resort and now one of the richest towns on the Côte, ST-RAPHAËL became fashionable at the turn of the twentieth century. Its seafront belle-époque mansions and hotels, flattened by bombardments in World War II, have mostly been rebuilt, while the old town beyond place Carnot on the other side of the railway line is pleasantly low-key, no longer the commercial focus of the town but a good place to stroll and browse. On rue des Templiers a crumbling fortified Romanesque church has fragments of the Roman aqueduct that brought water from Fréjus in its courtyard along with a local history and underwater archeology museum (July & Aug Tues, Wed, Fri & Sat 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–7pm, Thurs 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm; Sept–June Tues–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; entry to church and museum free).

The beaches stretch between the newly laid out Jardin Bonaparte at the entrance to the old port and the modern Marina Santa Lucia, with opportunities for every kind of watersport. You can also take boat trips to St-Tropez, the Îles d'Hyères and the much closer calanques of the Esterel coast from the quai Nomy on the south side of the Vieux Port. When you're tired of sea and sand you can lose whatever money you have left on slot machines or blackjack at the casino on Square de Gand overlooking the Vieux Port (daily 10am–dawn), or there are plenty of snooty discotheques.

Practicalities

St-Raphaël's gare SNCF, in the centre of town, is the main station for the Marseille–Ventimiglia line; the gare routière is on square du Dr-Régis, across the rail line behind the gare SNCF. Information on the surrounding region is available from the tourist office, facing the Vieux Port at quai Albert-1er (July & Aug daily 9.30am–7.30pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎04.94.19.52.52, 🌐www.saint-raphael.com). Car hire outlets cluster around the gare SNCF. Bikes can be rented from Patrick Moto, 280 av Général-Leclerc (☎04.94.53.65.99).

Seafront accommodation in St-Raphaël is available on promenade René-Coty at the Beau Séjour (☎04.94.95.03.75, 🌐www.hotelbeausejour.fr; Ⓜ; closed Nov–March), one of the cheaper hotels along here, with a pleasant terrace; or at the elegant old Excelsior (☎04.94.95.02.42, 🌐www.excelsior-hotel.com; Ⓜ), whose rooms are luxurious and well equipped. Bellevue, 22 bd Félix-Martin (☎04.94.19.90.10, 📧hotel.bellevue@wanadoo.fr; Ⓜ), is good value for its central location; and the Provençal, 195 rue de la Garonne (☎04.98.11.80.00, 🌐www.hotel-provençal.com; Ⓜ), is a smart two-star hotel close to the old port. East of the centre, the Hôtel du Soleil, 47 bd du Domaine du Soleil, off boulevard Christian-Lafon (☎04.94.83.10.00, 🌐perso.wanadoo.fr/hotel.du.soleil; Ⓜ), is a small, pretty villa with its own garden. There's a two-star campsite close to the beach, Camping de L'Île d'Or, on the N98 in Boulouris (☎ & 📞04.94.95.52.13), is open from late March until the end of October.

Food markets are held every day on place Victor-Hugo and place de la République. You'll find reasonably priced cafés and brasseries around these, and plenty of pizzerias, crêperies and restaurants of varying quality around the Vieux Port, Port Santa Lucia and along the promenades. Of the more expensive establishments, one of the best is Le Sirocco, 35 quai Albert-1er (☎04.94.95.39.99), a smart restaurant specializing in fish (menus €18.50–39.50) with a view of the port; alternatively, try Charius at 45 rue de la République in the old town (☎04.94.82.29.16; closed Mon all year & Sun out of season), with Provençal menus from €14 featuring the likes of daube de boeuf, pieds et paquets and grilled fish.

For drinking, try the selection of beers at the Blue Bar on promenade René-Coty, plage du Veillat (open till 4am in summer); Aux Ambassadeurs, a brasserie in the Casino complex that attracts a young crowd (till midnight); the Coco-Club at Port Santa Lucia (till 5am) for more expensive cocktails; or one of the beachfront discos like La Réserve on promenade René Coty or L'Odysée or La Playa in Fréjus-Plage. If you're staying outside the centre though, note that late-night taxis are almost impossible to come by in this part of the world.

The Riviera

The Riviera, the seventy-odd kilometres of coast between Cannes and Menton by the Italian border, was once an inhospitable shore with few natural harbours, its tiny communities preferring to cluster round feudal castles high above the sea. It wasn't until the nineteenth century that the first foreign aristocrats began to winter in the region's mild climate. In the interwar years the aristocrats were gradually supplanted by new elites – film stars, artists and writers – and the democratization of the Riviera began when French workers were granted paid holidays by Léon Blum's socialist government in 1936. But the real transformation came in the 1950s and after, as films like Alfred Hitchcock's To Catch a Thief and Roger Vadim's ...et Dieu Créa la Femme generated an image of elegance and excitement. Nowadays, it's an almost uninterrupted promenade, lined by palms and megabuck hotels, with speeding sports cars on the corniche roads and yachts like ocean liners moored at each resort.

Attractions, however, still remain, most notably in the legacies of the artists who stayed here: Picasso, Léger, Matisse, Renoir and Chagall. Nice, too, has real substance as a major city.

Museums passport

The Carte Musées Côte d'Azur allows unlimited access to 65 of the most important art and history museums, monuments and gardens in the Riviera region. A one-day pass costs €10, a three-day pass costs €17 and a seven-day pass €27. Passes are available at participating museums and principal tourist offices.

especially during the film festival in May, when the orgy of self-promotion reaches its annual peak. The vast seafront Palais des Festivals is the heart of the film festival but also hosts conferences, tournaments and trade shows throughout the year. Despite its glittery reputation Cannes works surprisingly well as a big seaside resort, since there are good, sandy public beaches away from the famed plage de la Croisette, and if it all gets too much the Îles de Lérins, a short boat ride offshore, offer a sublime contrast. As an alternative, visitors can escape the glitz of present-day Cannes by exploring the nineteenth-century glitz of La Croix des Gardes and La Californie, the aristocratic suburbs once populated by Russian and British royals.

Arrival, information and transport

The gare SNCF is on rue Jean-Jaurès, five blocks north of the concrete Palais des Festivals on the waterfront. There are tourist offices at the train station (Mon–Sat 9am–7pm; ☎04.93.99.19.77); at the Palais des Festivals (daily 9am–7pm; ☎04.92.99.84.22, 🌐www.cannes.com) and at 1 av Pierre-Sémard in Cannes-La Bocca (Tues–Sat 9am–noon & 2.30–6.30pm; ☎04.93.47.04.12). There are two gares routières: one on place B.-Cornut-Gentile between the mairie and Le Suquet, serving coastal destinations; and the other next to the gare SNCF for buses inland to places such as Grasse. Bus Azur runs 21 lines, serving all of Cannes and the surrounding area (☎08.25.82.55.99; €1.40 single ticket). Bikes can be hired from Alliance Location, 19 rue des Frères Pradignac (☎04.93.38.62.62), or Holiday Bikes, 32 av du Maréchal-Juin (☎04.93.94.30.34).

Accommodation

The best concentration of hotels is in the centre, between the gare SNCF and La Croisette, around the central axis of rues Antibes and Félix-Faure. There's a hostel, the Auberge Le Chalit, 27 av Galliéni (☎04.93.99.22.11, 📧le-chalit@wanadoo.fr), five minutes' walk north of the gare SNCF, which has beds from €16.

Aleaa 20 rue Jean de Riouffe ☎04.93.68.77.77, 🌐www.hotel-aleaa.com. Central and with high standards of service. Ⓜ

Canberra 120 rue d'Antibes ☎04.97.06.95.00, 🌐www.hotels-ocre-azur.com. Classy boutique-style hotel in the thick of Cannes' designer shopping district. Ⓜ

Carlton Intercontinental 58 La Croisette ☎04.93.06.40.06, 🌐www.intercontinental.com. Legendary belle-époque palace hotel that starred in Hitchcock's To Catch a Thief, along with Cary Grant and Grace Kelly. Ⓜ

Chanteclair 12 rue Forville ☎ & ☎04.93.39.68.88. Reasonable cheapie, right next to the old town, approached across a private courtyard. Ⓜ

Cybelle 14 rue du 24 Août ☎04.93.38.31.33, ☎04.93.38.43.47. Good value, much renovated hotel in a central location. Ⓜ

Martinez 73 La Croisette ☎04.92.98.73.00, 🌐www.hotel-martinez.com. Art Deco palace with a trendy private beach, the best restaurant in Cannes and a reputation as the place to stay during the Festival. Ⓜ

Provence 9 rue Molière ☎04.93.38.44.35, 🌐www.hotel-de-provence.com. Comfortable three star with good facilities and a pretty garden. Ⓜ

The Town

The old town, known as Le Suquet after the hill on which it stands, provides a great panorama of the twelve-kilometre beach, and has, on its summit, the remains of the fortified priory lived in by Cannes' eleventh-century monks and the beautiful twelfth-century Chapelle Ste-Anne. These house the Musée de la Castre (Tues–Sun; April, May & Sept 10am–1pm & 2–6pm; June–Aug 10am–1pm & 3–7pm; Oct–March 10am–1pm & 2–5pm; €3), which has an extraordinary collection of musical instruments from all over the world, along with pictures and prints of old Cannes and an ethnology and archeology section. Just a few hundred metres to the west of Le Suquet on avenue du Dr-Raymond-Picaud in La Croix des Gardes is the Château Eléonore, the villa built by the retired

▲ Carlton Hotel, Cannes

British Chancellor Lord Brougham after his enforced stay in the then-unknown village of Cannes in 1834; he couldn't reach Nice because of a cholera epidemic but, liking what he found in Cannes, he built his villa here and laid the foundations for Cannes' development as an aristocratic resort.

You'll find the non-paying beaches to the west of Le Suquet towards the suburb of La Bocca along the plages du Midi, though there's also a tiny public section of beach on La Croisette, just east of the Palais des Festivals. La Croisette is certainly the sight to see, with its palace hotels on one side and private beaches on the other. It's possible to find your way down to the beach without paying, but not easy (you can of course walk along it below the rows of sun beds). The beaches, owned by the deluxe palais-hôtels – the Martinez, Carlton and Noga Hilton – are where you're most likely to spot a face familiar in celluloid or a topless hopeful, especially during the film festival, though you'll be lucky to see further than the sweating backs of the paparazzi. Alternative entertainment can be had buying your own food in the Forville covered market two blocks behind the mairie, or by wandering through the day's flower shipments on the allées de la Liberté, just back from the Vieux Port.

Eating, drinking and nightlife

Cannes has hundreds of eateries catering for every budget. Rue Meynadier, Le Suquet and quai St-Pierre are good places to look. For menus under €18, try Le Bouchon d'Objectif, 10 rue de Constantine (☎04.93.99.21.76). La Brouette de Grand-Mère, 9bis rue d'Oran (☎04.93.39.12.10; closed Sun) has a single, very filling €35 menu including wine. If you'd just won a film festival prize the place to celebrate would be La Palme d'Or in the Hôtel Martinez, 73 La Croisette (☎04.92.98.74.14; menus at €75, €98 and €145). 🌟 Barbarella, 16 rue Saint Dizier in Le Suquet (☎04.92.99.17.33; Tues–Sun, eves only except during festival; menus from €29), is rather more affordable but still stylish and fun, with a Japanese-influenced fusion menu.

Cannes abounds with trendy, exclusive bars and clubs, especially in the grid of streets bounded by rue Macé, rue V. Cousin, rue Dr G.-Monod and rue des Frères Pradignacs. Smart, trendy bars to try include Le Loft and Le Living Room, both on rue Dr-Gérard-Monod and open until 2.30am; if you want to rub shoulders with celebrities the place to head is Le Baôli at Port Pierre Canto (Nov–April Fri & Sat 8pm–5am), an exotic outdoor disco/restaurant with palms, tented pavilions and Asian food. For something more straightforward, The Quays, 17 quai St-Pierre, is the inevitable Irish pub, open until well after midnight. Cannes has one of the oldest gay bars in France, Le Zanzibar, 85 rue Félix-Faure (6pm–4am).

Îles de Lérins

The Îles de Lérins would be lovely anywhere, but at fifteen minutes' ferry ride from Cannes, they're not far short of paradise facing purgatory. Boats for both islands leave from the quai des Îles at the seaward end of the quai Max-Laubeuf. St-Honorat is served by Compagnie Planaria (☎04.92.98.71.38, 🌐www.abbayedelerins.com; summer 10 daily; winter 7 daily; €11): the last boat back to Cannes leaves at 5pm in winter & 6pm in summer). There are regular services to Ste-Marguerite run by two companies, S.A.R.L. Horizon (hourly; winter 9am–4.15pm, spring months 9am–5.15pm, summer until 6.15pm; ☎04.92.98.71.36, €11), and Trans Côte d'Azur (☎04.92.98.71.30, 🌐www.trans-cote-azur.com; up to 16 departures 9am–5pm; €11): the last boats back to Cannes leave Ste-Marguerite at 5.15pm, 6pm or 7pm, depending on the operator and season. Taking a picnic is a good idea, particularly out of season, as the handful of restaurants on the islands are overpriced – though there are reasonably-priced snack stalls on Ste-Marguerite during the summer months.

Ste-Marguerite

Ste-Marguerite is more touristy than its peaceful neighbour, St-Honorat. It's still beautiful, though, and large enough for visitors to find seclusion by following the trails that lead away from the congested port, through the Aleppo pines and woods of evergreen oak that are so thick they cast a sepulchral gloom. The western end is the most accessible, but the lagoon here is brackish, so the best points to swim are the rocky southern shore, reached most easily along the allée des Eucalyptus. The channel between Ste-Marguerite and St-Honorat is however a popular anchorage for motor yachts, so you're unlikely to find real solitude.

The dominating structure of the island is the Fort Ste-Marguerite (April to mid-June & mid- to late Sept Tues–Sun 10.30am–1.15pm & 2.15–5.45pm; mid-June to mid-Sept daily 10.30am–5.45pm; Oct–March Tues–Sun 10.30am–1.15pm & 2.15–4.45pm; €3), a Richelieu commission that failed to prevent the Spanish occupying both of the Lérin islands between 1635 and 1637. Later, Vauban rounded it off, presumably for Louis XIV's gloire – since the strategic value of greatly enlarging a fort facing your own mainland without upgrading the one facing the sea is pretty minimal. There are cells to see, including the one in which Dumas' Man in the Iron Mask is supposed to have been held, and the Musée de la Mer (same hours and ticket as fort), containing mostly Roman local finds but also remnants of a tenth-century Arab ship.

Ste-Honorat

Owned by monks almost continuously since its namesake and patron founded a monastery here in 410 AD, St-Honorat, the smaller southern island, was home to a famous bishops' seminary, where St Patrick trained before setting out for Ireland. The present abbey buildings date mostly from the nineteenth century, though some vestiges of the medieval and earlier constructions remain in the austere church and the cloisters. You can visit the church, but there is no access to the residential part of the monastery unless you're staying there on a spiritual retreat. A shop sells the sought-after white wine and liqueurs produced by the 28 Cistercian brothers of the monastic community. Behind the cloisters on the sea's edge stands the eleventh-century fortified monastery.

There's one small restaurant near the landing stage (open April–Oct only), and there are no bars, hotels or cars: just vines, lavender, herbs and olive trees mingled with wild poppies and daisies, and pine and eucalyptus trees shading the paths beside the white rock shore mixing with the scents of rosemary, thyme and wild honeysuckle.

Vallauris

Pottery and Picasso are the twin attractions of VALLAURIS, an otherwise unremarkable town in the hills above Golfe-Juan, 6km east of Cannes. It was here that Picasso first began to use clay, thereby reviving one of the traditional crafts of this little town. Today the main street, avenue Georges-Clemenceau, sells nothing but pottery, much of it garish bowls or figurines that could feature in souvenir shops anywhere. Picasso used to work in the Madoura workshop on avenue des Ancien-Combattants-d'AFN, to the left as you ascend avenue Georges-Clemenceau; it still has sole rights on reproducing his designs, which it sells, at a price, in the shop (Mon–Fri 10am–12.30pm & 3–6pm; closed Sat, Sun & Nov).

The bronze statue of Man with a Sheep, Picasso's gift to the town, stands in the main square, place Paul Isnard, beside the church and castle. The local authorities also suggested he should decorate the deconsecrated early medieval chapel in the castle courtyard (daily except Tues: mid-June to mid-Sept 10am–12.15pm & 2–6pm; mid-Sept to mid-June 10am–12.15pm & 2–5pm; €3.20), which he finally did in 1952: his subject was war and peace. The space is tiny, with the architectural simplicity of an air-raid shelter, and at first it's easy to be unimpressed by the painted panels covering the vault – as many critics still are – since the work looks mucky and slapdash, with paint-runs on the plywood panel surface. But stay a while and the passion of this violently drawn display of pacifism slowly emerges. The ticket for the chapel also gives admission to the Musée de la Céramique/Musée Magnelli in the castle (same hours and ticket), which exhibits Picasso's and other ceramics.

Regular buses from Cannes and from Golfe-Juan SNCF arrive at the rear of the château. The tourist office is at the bottom of avenue Georges-Clemenceau on square du 8-Mai-1945 (July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Sat 9am–12.15pm & 1.45–6pm; ☎ 04.93.63.82.58, @ www.vallauris-golfe-juan.fr), which is where you'll also find the main tourist car park.

Grasse

GRASSE, 16km inland from Cannes and with some stunning views over the Côte, is the world capital of parfumeurs and has been for almost 300 years. These days it promotes a perfumed image of a medieval hill town surrounded by scented flowers, though in truth its outskirts sprout boxy suburban villas with rather more luxuriance. Making perfumes is presented as a mysterious process, an alchemy, turning the soul of the flower into a liquid of luxury and desire, and the industry is at pains to keep quiet about modern innovations and techniques. Grasse is the official starting point of the Route Napoléon but is equally easy to visit as a day-trip from the coast.

The Town

Even when Grasse was part of the aristocratic tourist boom of the late nineteenth century, the desirable addresses, Queen Victoria's among them, were all east of Vieux Grasse, and in recent years the pretty vieille ville degenerated into little more than a picturesque slum. But after years of peeling into oblivion, Vieux Grasse is now changing rapidly as an energetic programme of restoration – and, inevitably, of gentrification – kicks in.

Place aux Aires, at the top of the town, is the main meeting point and the venue for the daily flower and vegetable market. It's ringed by arcades of different heights and the elegant wrought-iron balcony of the Hôtel Isnard at no. 33, and at one time was the exclusive preserve of the tanning industry. At the opposite end of Vieux Grasse lie the cathedral – containing various paintings, including one by local boy Jean-Honoré Fragonard, three by Rubens and a wondrous triptych by the sixteenth-century Niçois painter Louis Bréa – and the bishop's palace, now the Hôtel de Ville, both built in the twelfth century.

Grasse has several engrossing small museums. The Musée d'Art et d'Histoire de Provence, 2 rue Mirabeau (June–Sept daily 10am–6.30pm; Oct & Dec–May Wed–Mon 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; €3), is housed in a luxurious town house commissioned by Mirabeau's sister as a place to entertain. As well as all the gorgeous fittings and an eighteenth-century kitchen, the collections are highly eclectic and include eighteenth- to nineteenth-century faïence from Apt and Le Castellet, Mirabeau's death mask, a tin bidet and six prehistoric bronze leg bracelets. The fascinating Musée International de la Parfumerie, 8 place du Cours (closed for reconstruction until 2008, usually same hours and prices as Musée d'Histoire), displays perfume bottles from the ancient Greeks via Marie-Antoinette to the present, and has a reconstruction of a perfume factory.

You can see more works by Jean-Honoré Fragonard in the Villa-Musée Fragonard at 23 bd Fragonard (same hours and price as Musée d'Histoire). The celebrated Rococo painter returned to live in this villa after the Revolution. The staircase has impressive wall paintings by his son Alexandre-Evariste, while the salon is graced by copies of Love's Progress in the Heart of a Young Girl, which Jean-Honoré painted for Madame du Barry.

The perfume factories

There are thirty-odd parfumeries in and around Grasse, most of them making not perfume but essences-plus-formulas which are then sold to Dior, Lancôme, Estée Lauder and the like, who make up their own brand-name perfumes. One litre of pure rose essence can cost as much as €19,000; perfume contains twenty percent essence (eau de toilette and eau de Cologne considerably less). The major cost in this multi-billion-dollar business is marketing. The grand Parisian couturiers, whose clothes, on strictly cost-accounting grounds, serve simply to promote the perfume, go to inordinate lengths to sell their latest fragrance, spending millions of euros a year on advertising alone.

The ingredients that the “nose” – as the creator of the perfume's formula is known – has to play with include resins, roots, moss, beans, bark, civet (extract of cat genitals), ambergris (intestinal goo from whales), bits of beaver and musk from Tibetan goats. If that hasn't put you off, you can visit the various showrooms, with overpoweringly fragrant shops and free guided tours, in English, of the traditional perfume factory set-up (the actual working industrial complexes are strictly out of bounds). These visits are free and usually open daily without interruption in summer; a few to choose from are: Fragonard, 20 bd Fragonard (Feb–Oct daily 9am–6pm; Nov–Jan Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; 📞 www.fragonard.com); Galimard, 73 rte de Cannes (guided visits daily: summer 9am–6.30pm; winter 9am–noon & 2–6pm; 📞 www.galimard.com); and Molinard at 60 bd Victor-Hugo (March–Sept daily Mon–Fri 9am–6pm; Oct–Feb Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; 📞 www.molinard.com).

Practicalities

Grasse's gare routière is to the north of the old town at the Parking Notre-Dame-des-Flours. Head downhill on avenue Thiers, which becomes boulevard du Jeu de Ballon (where there's an annexe of the tourist office) and you'll find the major museums fronting place du Cours, with the main tourist office on cours Honoré-Cresp (July–Sept Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 9am–1pm & 2–6pm; Oct–June Mon–Sat 9am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎ 04.93.36.66.66, 📞 www.grasse-riviera.com).

One possible hotel at the cheaper end of the market is Les Palmiers, 17 av Y.-Baudoin (☎ & 📞 04.93.36.07.24; 🍷), a chambres d'hôte with good views of the surrounding countryside and down to the coast. More expensive, the Panorama, on place du Cours (☎ 04.93.36.80.80, 📞 www.hotelpanorama-grasse.com; closed Jan; 🍷), offers rooms with views and all mod cons. Even more comfortable, if less well located, is the Charme Hôtel du Patti, place du Patti (☎ 04.93.36.01.00, 📞 www.hotelpatti.com; 🍷), with pretty, Provençal-style rooms including three adapted for wheelchair users.

Compared with the coastal towns Grasse isn't terribly well endowed with restaurants. The best in town is La Bastide Saint Antoine, 48 rue Henri-Dunant (☎ 04.93.70.94.94), which serves cuisine gourmande with a Provençal twist (lunch menus €55; otherwise menus from €140). Alternatively, Lou Fassum, 5 rue de Fabrieres (☎ 04.93.42.99.69, closed Sun & Mon, menu €32), is a traditional Provençal restaurant serving specialities from the pays de Grasse. For drinks, the bars on place aux Aires are friendly. At Maison Venturini, 1 rue Marcel-Journet (☎ 04.93.36.20.47; closed Sun & Mon), you can buy fabulous sweet fougassettes – a local pastry, flavoured with the Grasse speciality of orange blossom – to take away.

Antibes and around

Graham Greene, who lived in Antibes for more than twenty years, considered it the only place on this stretch of coast to have preserved its soul. And whilst Antibes and its twin, Juan-les-Pins, have not completely escaped the overdevelopment that blights much of this region, they have avoided its worst excesses. Antibes itself is a pleasing old town, extremely animated, with one of the finest markets on the coast and the best Picasso collection in its ancient seafront castle; and the southern end of the Cap d'Antibes still has its woods of pine, in which some of the most exclusive mansions on the Riviera hide.

Lording it over the Antibes ramparts and the sea, the sixteenth-century Château Grimaldi is a beautifully cool, light space, with hexagonal terracotta floor tiles, windows over the sea and a terrace garden with sculptures by Germaine Richier, Miró, César and others. In 1946, Picasso was

ANTIBESRESTAURANTS, CAFES & BARS

Da Crto	3
La Famiglia	1
Le Romantic	2
Les Vieux Murs	4

ACCOMMODATION

Mas Djoliba	B
Nouvel Hotel	A
Le Ponteil	C
Val des Roses	D
Youth hostel	E

C  D, E  Plage de la Salis, Cap d'Antibes & Juan-Les Pins

offered the dusty building – by then already a museum – as a studio. Several extremely prolific months followed before he moved to Vallauris, leaving all his Antibes output to what is now the Musée Picasso (closed until summer 2007 for renovation; check with tourist office for further information). Although Picasso donated other works later on, the bulk of the collection belongs to this one period. Picasso himself is the subject of works here by other painters and photographers, including Man Ray, Hans Hartung and Bill Brandt; there are also several anguished canvases by Nicolas de Staël, who stayed in Antibes for a few months from 1954 to 1955. Alongside the castle is the cathedral, built on the site of an ancient temple. The choir and apse survive from the Romanesque building that served the city in the Middle Ages while the nave and stunning ochre facade are Baroque. Inside, in the south transept, is a sumptuous medieval altarpiece surrounded by immaculate panels of tiny detailed scenes.

One block inland, the morning covered market on cours Masséna overflows with Provençal goodies and a profusion of cut flowers, the traditional and still-flourishing Antibes business (June–Aug daily 6am–1pm; Sept–May Tues–Sun 6am–1pm). In the afternoons, a craft market (Easter–Sept Thurs–Sun; Oct–Easter Thurs–Sat) takes over from about 3pm (4.30pm on Sat), and when the stalls pack up, café tables take their place.

Cap d'Antibes

Plage de la Salis, the longest Antibes beach, runs along the eastern neck of Cap d'Antibes, with no big hotels owning mattress exploitation rights – an amazing rarity on the Riviera. To the south, at the top of chemin du Calvaire, you have superb views from the Chapelle de la Garoupe (daily 10am–noon & 2.30–7pm), which contains Russian spoils from the Crimean War and hundreds of ex votos. To the west, on boulevard du Cap between chemins du Tamisier and G.–Raymond, you can wander around the Jardin Thuret (Mon–Fri: summer 8am–6pm, winter 8.30am–5.30pm; free; groups by appointment, €1.50 per person; ☎04.97.21.25.00), botanical gardens belonging to a national research institute. Back on the east shore, further south, lies a second public beach, plage de la Garoupe. From here a footpath follows the shore to join the chemin des Douaniers. At the southern end of the Cap d'Antibes, on avenue L.D. Beaumont, stands the grandiose Villa Eilenroc (gardens Tues & Wed 9am–5pm, free; villa out of season Wed 9am–noon & 1.30–5pm, closed in summer; free), designed by Charles Garnier, architect of the casino at Monte Carlo, and surrounded by lush gardens. There are more sandy coves and little harbours along the western shore, where you'll also find the Musée Napoléonien (Tues–Sat: mid-June to mid-Sept 10am–6pm; mid-Sept to mid-June 10am–4.30pm; €3), at the end of avenue J.–F. Kennedy. This documents the great return from Elba along with the usual Bonaparte paraphernalia of hats, cockades and signed commands. Much of the southern tip of the cap is a warren of private roads, including the area around the fabled Hotel du Cap Eden Roc and the so-called “bay of millionaires”.

Juan-les-Pins

JUAN-LES-PINS, less than 2km from the centre of Antibes, is another of those mystical Côte d'Azur names. It had its heyday in the interwar years, when the summer season on the Riviera first took off and the resort was the haunt of film stars like Charlie Chaplin, Maurice Chevalier and Lilian Harvey, the polyglot London-born 1930s musical star who lingered here until 1968, long after her fame had faded. Juan-les-Pins isn't as glamorous as it once was either, though it still has a casino and a certain cachet, the beaches are sand, and there are haunting reminders of its glory days, including the Art Deco bulk of the derelict Hotel Provençal, which looms over the town from the eastern side of boulevard Baudoin.

Juan's international jazz festival – known simply as Jazz à Juan – takes place in the middle two weeks of July. It's the best in the region and is held in the central pine grove, the Jardin de La Pinède (known simply as La Pinède), and square Gould above the beach by the casino. A Hollywood-style walk of fame immortalizes various jazz greats.

Practicalities

Antibes' gare SNCF lies to the north of the old town at the top of avenue Robert-Soleau. Turn right out of the station and three minutes' walk along avenue R.–Soleau will bring you to place de Gaulle. The tourist office is on this square, at no. 11 (July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am– 12.30pm & 1.30–6pm, Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.97.23.11.11, 🌐www.antibesjuanlespins.com). The gare routière is east of here on place Guynemer with frequent buses to and from the gare SNCF. Bus #2 goes to Cap d'Antibes, bus #3 to Juan-les-Pins and #10 to Biot. Bikes can be hired from Midi Location Service, Galerie du Port, rue Lacan (☎04.93.34.48.00), and Holiday Bikes, 122 bd Wilson in Juan les Pins (☎04.93.61.51.51). Rue de la République leads into the heart of Vieux Antibes around place Nationale, from where rue Sade leads to cours Masséna, beyond which lie the cathedral, the castle and the sea.

The most economical hotel in the centre of Antibes, Le Nouvel Hôtel, 1 av du 24-Août (☎04.93.34.44.07, ☎04.93.34.44.08; 📍), is a stone's throw from the gare routière; avenue de l'Estérel and around in Juan-les-Pins is another good place to try for cheap hotels. For greater comfort, try the Mas Djoliba, 29 av de Provence (☎04.93.34.02.48, 🌐www.hotel-djoliba.com; closed Nov–Jan; 📍), between the old town and the beach, or Le Ponteil, 11 impasse Jean-Mensier (☎04.93.34.67.92, 🌐www.leponteil.com; 📍; half-board obligatory in high season), in a quiet location at the end of a cul-de-sac close to the sea. For something secluded and elegant, it's worth trying Val des Roses, an upmarket chambres d'hôte on chemin des Lauriers just off the plage de la Salis (☎06.85.06.06.29, 🌐www.val-des-roses.com; 📍).

There's a hostel on Cap d'Antibes, the Relais International de la Jeunesse on boulevard de la Garoupe (☎04.93.61.34.40, 🌐www.clasjud.fr; closed Oct–April; €15; bus #2 stops right outside), which needs booking well in advance. All of Antibes' campsites are 3–5km north of the city in the quartier of La Brague (bus #10 or one train stop to “Gare de Biot”). The three-star Logis de La Brague (☎04.93.33.54.72; 🌐www.camping-logisbrague.com; closed Oct–April) is closest to the station, while the two-star Idéal-Camping (☎04.93.74.27.07; closed Oct–April) is south of the station; both are on the route de Nice and close to the sea.

Place Nationale and cours Masséna are lined with cafés; rue James-Close is nothing but restaurants and rue Thuret and its side streets also offer numerous menus to browse. For pizzas, there's Da Cito in the covered market, and La Famiglia, a cheap family-run outfit at 34 av Thiers (closed Wed, Sat & Sun lunch). Le Romantic, 5 rue Rostan (☎04.93.34.59.39; closed Mon & Tues lunch), lives up to its name and offers menus from €22, although in the evening the terroir-dominated carte will take the bill higher. Les Vieux Murs, near the castle at avenue Amiral-de-Grasse (☎04.93.34.06.73, closed Mon lunch in season, all day Mon rest of year; lunch menu €29, otherwise €42 or €60) serves very classy food, such as king crab with niçois ratatouille or scallops with orange butter in a perfect setting on the rampsarts.

La Passagère at the Hotel Belles Rives (☎04.93.61.02.79) serves up modern Mediterranean delights in lovely, restored Art Deco surroundings, with menus at €45 for lunch, and €95 at other times. The terrace has wonderful views over the bay. That apart, Juan-les-Pins is not blessed with particularly memorable restaurants, so take pot luck from the countless menus on offer on the boulevards around La Pinède. Le Café de la Plage, at 1 bd Edouard-Baudouin (☎04.93.61.37.61; lunchtime plats €12), is a good bet, serving seafood, cocktails and ice cream in a pleasant seafront spot, while Helios Plage, promenade du Soleil (☎04.93.61.85.77; open mid-April to end Sept) is about the smartest of the beach concessions, with plats from around €22.

Juan-les-Pins still cuts a dash in the nightlife stakes. The fads and reputations of the different discos may change, but in general opening hours are midnight to dawn, and you can count on searching appraisal of your attire and on paying around €16 for entrance plus your first drink. Some of the current hotspots include Whisky a Gogo, on rue Jacques-Leonetti, Le Milk on avenue G.-Gallice and Minimal on avenue

Guy-de-Maupassant. The perennially popular live music venue Le Pam-Pam, 137 bd Wilson, often has Brazilian bands, but you'll need to go early to get a seat.

Finally, if you've run out of reading material, head for Heidi's English Bookshop at place Audiberti in Antibes, the cheapest English bookshop on the coast.

Biot

Frequent buses connect Antibes with the village of BIOT, 8km to the north, where Fernand Léger lived for a few years at the end of his life. A stunning collection of his intensely life-affirming works, created between 1905 and 1955, can be seen at the Musée Fernand Léger, built especially to display them (daily except Tues: July–Sept 10.30am–6pm; Oct–June 10am–12.30pm & 2–5.30pm; €4.50). The museum is just east of the village on the chemin du Val de Pome, stop “Fernand Léger” on the Antibes bus, or a rather unpleasant and dangerous thirty-minute walk from Biot's gare SNCF.

The village itself is extremely beautiful (if rather self-consciously so) and oozes with art in every form – architectural, sculpted, ceramic, jewelled, painted and culinary. The tourist office, 46 rue Saint Sebastien, at the western entrance to the village (July & Aug Mon–Fri 10am–7pm, Sat & Sun 2.30–7pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 2–6pm; ☎04.93.65.78.00, 🌐www.biot.fr) can provide lists of art galleries and glassworks – the traditional industry that brought Léger here, and which produces the famous hand-blown bubble glass. If you book well in advance you could stay at the very reasonable Hôtel des Arcades, 16 place des Arcades (☎04.93.65.01.04, 📞04.93.65.01.05; 📍), full of old-fashioned charm and with huge rooms in the medieval centre of the village. Its café-restaurant, which also doubles as an art gallery, serves delicious traditional Provençal food (closed Sun eve & Mon; plats du jour around €16), or try the delightful salon de thé, Le Mas Des Orangers, at 3 rue des Roses.

Above the Baie des Anges

Between Antibes and Nice, the Baie des Anges laps at a long stretch of fairly undistinguished twentieth-century resorts. At Villeneuve-Loubet-Plage the vast concrete sails of the Marina Baie des Anges – an unmissable landmark along the entire length of this coast – give the landscape a controversial and defiantly modernist stamp. Harder to forgive is the strip-mall squalor of drive-in restaurants, furniture stores and car dealerships that represents what passes for a townscape here.

The old towns and softer visual stimulation lie inland. Cagnes is another artists' town – associated in particular with Renoir – as is St-Paul-de-Vence, which houses the wonderful modern art collection of the Fondation Maeght. Vence has a small chapel decorated by Matisse, and is a relaxing place to stay, if quiet in the evenings.

Cagnes

CAGNES is a confusing agglomeration, made up of a seaside district known as Cros-de-Cagnes, the immaculate medieval village of Haut-de-Cagnes overlooking the town from the northwest, and Cagnes-sur-Mer, the traffic-choked town centre wedged between the two. The three busy coastal roads slicing through the town don't add to its appeal.

At the top of place de-Gaulle, the main square in Cagnes-sur-Mer, avenue Auguste-Renoir runs right and crosses the road to La Gaude. A short way further on, chemin des Collettes leads off to the left up to Les Collettes, the house that Renoir had built in 1908 and where he spent the last twelve years of his life. It's now a memorial museum (daily except Tues: May–Sept 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Oct & last week in Nov to April 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €3), and you can wander around the house and through the olive and rare orange groves that surround it. One of the two studios in the house – north-facing to catch the late afternoon light – is arranged as if Renoir had just popped out. Albert André's painting, A Renoir Painting, shows the ageing artist hunched over his canvas, plus there's a bust of him by Aristide Maillol, and a crayon sketch by Richard Guido. Bonnard and Dufy were also visitors to Les Collettes; Dufy's Hommage à Renoir, transposing a detail of Le Moulin de la Galette, hangs here. Renoir's own work is represented by several sculptures, some beautiful watercolours and ten paintings from his Cagnes period.

Haut-de-Cagnes is a favourite haunt of successes in the contemporary art world, as well as those of decades past, and it lives up to everything dreamed of in a Riviera village perché. The ancient village backs up to a crenellated feudal château (May–Sept daily 10am–noon & 2–6pm; Oct–April daily 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €3; shuttle bus from bus station June–Sept, or by foot, the steep ascent along rue Général-Bérenger and montée de la Bourgade), with a stunning Renaissance interior, housing museums of local history, olive cultivation, the donation Solidor – a diverse collection of paintings of the famous cabaret artist Suzy Solidor – and exhibition space for contemporary art.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF Cagnes-sur-Mer (one stop from the gare SNCF Cros-de-Cagnes) is southwest of the centre alongside the autoroute; turn right on the northern side of the autoroute along avenue de la Gare to head into town. The sixth turning on your right, rue des Palmiers, leads to the tourist office at 6 bd Maréchal-Juin (June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–7pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 9am–noon & 3–7pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.93.20.61.64, 🌐www.cagnes-tourisme.com). Bus #42 runs from the gare SNCF to the gare routière on square Bourdet.

Cros de Cagnes has the largest choice of hotels but also plenty of traffic: you might try Beaurivage, 39 bd de la Plage on the seafront (☎04.93.20.16.09, 🌐www.beaurivage.biz; 📍), which has very pleasant rooms with views of the sea, or there's Le Tuff, 13 rue des Capucines (☎04.93.20.64.00, ☎04.93.73.92.64; 📍), set back slightly from the seafront. If you're feeling extremely flush, you could try rue Sous Barri (☎04.93.20.73.21, 🌐www.le-cagnard.com; 📍), the ancient guard room for the castle, with a top-notch restaurant. Campsites are plentiful, and mostly in wooded locations inland. Try the three-star Le Todos, 4km north of Cros-de-Cagnes at 159 chemin Vallon des Vaux (☎04.93.31.20.05, 🌐www.letodos.fr; €19.20 per tent; closed Oct–March), with a pool, bar and restaurant.

The best places to eat are in Haut-de-Cagnes, and for café lounging, place du Château or place Grimaldi, to either side of the castle, are the obvious spots. Fleur de Sel at no 85 montée de la Bourgade (☎04.92.20.33.33; closed Wed & Tues lunch), serves octopus salad and pieds et paquets on a €23 lunch menu. Le Cagnard hotel has a predictably smart restaurant (☎04.93.20.73.21; menus from €55; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec), or there's Josy-Jo, 2 rue du Planastel (☎04.93.20.68.76; around €25; closed Sat lunch, Sun & mid-Nov to late Dec), with Provençal delicacies dished up in the space that served as Soutine's workshop in the interwar years.

In summer there are free jazz concerts on place du Château and, at the end of August, a bizarre square boules competition takes place down montée de la Bourgade.

St-Paul-de-Vence: the Fondation Maeght

Further into the hills, the fortified village of ST-PAUL-DE-VENCE is home to yet another artistic treat, and one of the best in the whole region: the remarkable Fondation Maeght, created in the 1950s by Aimé and Marguerite Maeght, art collectors and dealers who knew all the great artists who worked in Provence (daily: July–Sept 10am–7pm; Oct–June 10am–12.30pm & 2.30–6pm; €11). The Nice–Vence bus has two stops in St-Paul: the Fondation is sign-posted from the second, and is approximately 1km from the old town, a few hundred metres up a steep hill from the main D7 road through the village. By car or bike, follow the signs just before you reach the village, off the D7 from La-Colle-sur-Loup or the D2 from Villeneuve.

Once through the gates, any idea of dutifully seeing the catalogue of price-less museum pieces crumbles; this, instead, is a sublime fusion of art, modern architecture and landscape. Alberto Giacometti's Cat is sometimes stalking along the edge of the grass; Miró's Egg smiles above a pond and his totemed Fork is outlined against the sky. It's hard not to be bewitched by the Calder mobile swinging over watery tiles, by Léger's Flowers, Birds and a Bench on a sunlit rough stone wall, or by the clanking tubular fountain by Pol Bury. The building itself is a superb piece of architecture: multi-levelled and flooded with daylight, and the collection it houses of works by Braque, Miró, Chagall, Léger and Matisse, along with more recent artists and the young up-and-comings, is fabulous. Not all the works are exhibited at any one time, and during the summer, when the main annual exhibition is mounted, none are on show, apart from those that make up the decoration of the building.

The other famous sights are in the extremely busy but beautiful vieux village. The hotel-restaurant La Colombe d'Or on place du Général-de-Gaulle (☎ 04.93.32.80.02, 🌐 www.la-colombe-dor.com; 📍; 🕒 plats du jour from around €20, closed Nov to late Dec) is celebrated not for its food but for the art on its walls, donated in lieu of payment for meals by the then-impooverished Braque, Picasso, Matisse and Bonnard in the lean years following World War I. Rather fewer visitors make the pilgrimage to the simple grave of Marc Chagall on the right-hand side of the little cemetery (summer 7.30am–8pm; winter 8am–5pm) at the southern end of the village, running the gauntlet of the many boutiques and art galleries on rue Grande to get there.

Vence

A few kilometres north, with abundant water and the sheltering pre-Alps behind, VENCE has always been a town of some significance. The old town is blessed with numerous ancient houses, gateways, fountains, chapels and a cathedral containing Roman funeral inscriptions and a Chagall mosaic. In the 1920s it became yet another haven for painters and writers: André Gide, Raoul Dufy, D.H. Lawrence (who died here in 1930 whilst being treated for tuberculosis contracted in England) and Marc Chagall were all long-term visitors, along with Matisse whose work is the reason most people come.

Towards the end of World War II, Matisse moved to Vence to escape the Allied bombing of the coast, and his legacy is the town's most famous and exciting building, the Chapelle du Rosaire, at 466 av Henri-Matisse, off the road to St-Jeannet which leaves the town from carrefour Jean-Moulin at the top of avenue des Poilus (Mon, Wed & Sat 2–5.30pm, Tues & Thurs 10–11.30am & 2–5.30pm; Sunday Mass 10am; additional openings during school hols, check with the tourist office; closed mid-Nov to mid-Dec; €2.60). The chapel was his last work – consciously so – and not, as some have tried to explain, a religious conversion.

“My only religion is the love of the work to be created, the love of creation, and great sincerity”, he said in 1952 when the five-year project was completed.

The drawings on the chapel walls – black outline figures on white tiles – were executed by Matisse with a paintbrush fixed to a two-metre long bamboo stick specifically to remove his own stylistic signature from the lines. He succeeded in this to the extent that many people are bitterly disappointed, not finding the “Matisse” they expect. Yet it is a total work – every part of the chapel is Matisse’s design – and one that the artist was content with.

Vieux Vence has all the chic boutiques and arty restaurants worthy of an haut-lieu of the Côte aristocracy, but it also has an everyday feel about it, with ordinary people and run-of-the-mill cafés. On place du Frêne, by the western gateway, the fifteenth-century Château de Villeneuve Fondation Emile Hugues (Tues–Sun: summer 10am–6pm; winter 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; €5) provides a beautiful temporary exhibition space for the works of artists such as Matisse, Dufy, Dubuffet and Chagall.

Practicalities

Arriving by bus, you’ll be dropped near place du Frêne at the gare routière on place du Grand-Jardin, where you’ll find the tourist office (mid-June to mid-Sept Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–6pm; mid-Sept to mid-June Mon–Sat 9am–6pm; ☎ 04.93.58.06.38, 🌐 www.ville-vence.fr). You can rent bikes at Vence Motos on avenue Henri Isnard, just behind the tourist office.

Vence is a real town, with affordable places to stay. If you’re on a tight budget, your best bet is the soundproofed, very central La Victoire, on place du Grand Jardin (☎ & 📞 04.93.24.21.15; 📍); otherwise try the welcoming and peaceful La Closerie des Genêts, 4 impasse Maurel, off avenue M.–Maurel to the south of the old town (☎ 04.93.58.33.25, 📞 04.93.58.97.01; 📍), and Le Provence, 9 av M.–Maurel (☎ 04.93.58.04.21, 🌐 www.hotelprovence.com; 📍), with a pleasant garden. A little more luxury, including a pool, is available at La Villa Roseraie, 51 av Henri-Giraud (☎ 04.93.58.02.20, 🌐 www.villaroseraie.com; 📍). There’s a campsite, La Bergerie (€20 for two people and a tent), 3km west off the road to Tourettes-sur-Loup (☎ 04.93.58.09.36, 🌐 www.camping-domainedelabergerie.com; closed mid-Oct to late March).

For a special, excellent-value meal, try La Farigoule, 15 av Henri-Isnard (☎ 04.93.58.01.27; menus from €29.50). The fabled chef Jacques Maximin has opened a gourmet palace in Vence: Jacques Maximin Restaurant Table des Amis, 689 chemin de la Gaude (☎ 04.93.58.90.75; closed Mon & Tues), prepares exquisite fare, with the cheapest menu starting at €50 and rising rapidly in price and indulgence. For more run-of-the-mill fare, try the astounding choice of pizzas from €7.50 at Le Pêcheur du Soleil, 1 place Godeau. You’ll find plenty of cafés in the squares of Vieux Vence. Le Clemenceau, on place Clemenceau, is the big café-brasserie-glacier, but you might find Henry’s Bar, on place de Peyra, more congenial. La Régence, on place du Grand-Jardin, serves excellent coffee to sip beneath its stylish parasols.

Nice

The capital of the Riviera and fifth largest city in France, NICE lives off a glittering reputation, its former glamour now gently faded. First popularized by English aristocrats in the eighteenth century, Nice reached its zenith in the belle-époque of the late nineteenth century, an era that left the city with several

Chemin de Fer de Provence

The Chemin de Fer de Provence runs one of France's most scenic and fun railway routes, from the Gare de Provence on rue Alfred-Binet (4 daily; 3hr 12min). The line runs up the Var valley into the hinterland of Nice to Digne-les-Bains, and climbs through some spectacular scenery as it goes. The return fare to Digne is €35.30 (for more information call ☎04.97.03.80.80 or check online at @www.trainprovence.

extraordinary architectural flights of fancy. Today, more than a quarter of Nice's permanent residents are over 60, their pensions and investments contributing to the high ratio of per capita income to economic activity.

Far too large to be considered simply a beach resort, Nice nevertheless manages to be a delightful, vibrant Mediterranean metropolis with all the advantages and disadvantages its city status brings: superb cultural facilities, wonderful street life and excellent shopping, eating and drinking, but also a high crime rate, graffiti and – in summer – horrendous traffic. Yet somehow things never seem as bad as they might be: the sun shines, the sea sparkles and a thousand sprinklers keep the lawns and flowerbeds lush.

Nice's easy-going charm, however, is at odds with its reactionary politics. For decades municipal power was the monopoly of a dynasty whose corruption was finally exposed in 1990, when Mayor Jacques Médecin fled to Uruguay, only to be extradited and jailed. From his prison cell, Médecin backed Jacques Peyrat, the former Front National member and close friend of Jean-Marie Le Pen, in the 1995 local elections. Peyrat won with ease and has been mayor ever since, while the Front National retains significant support in the city.

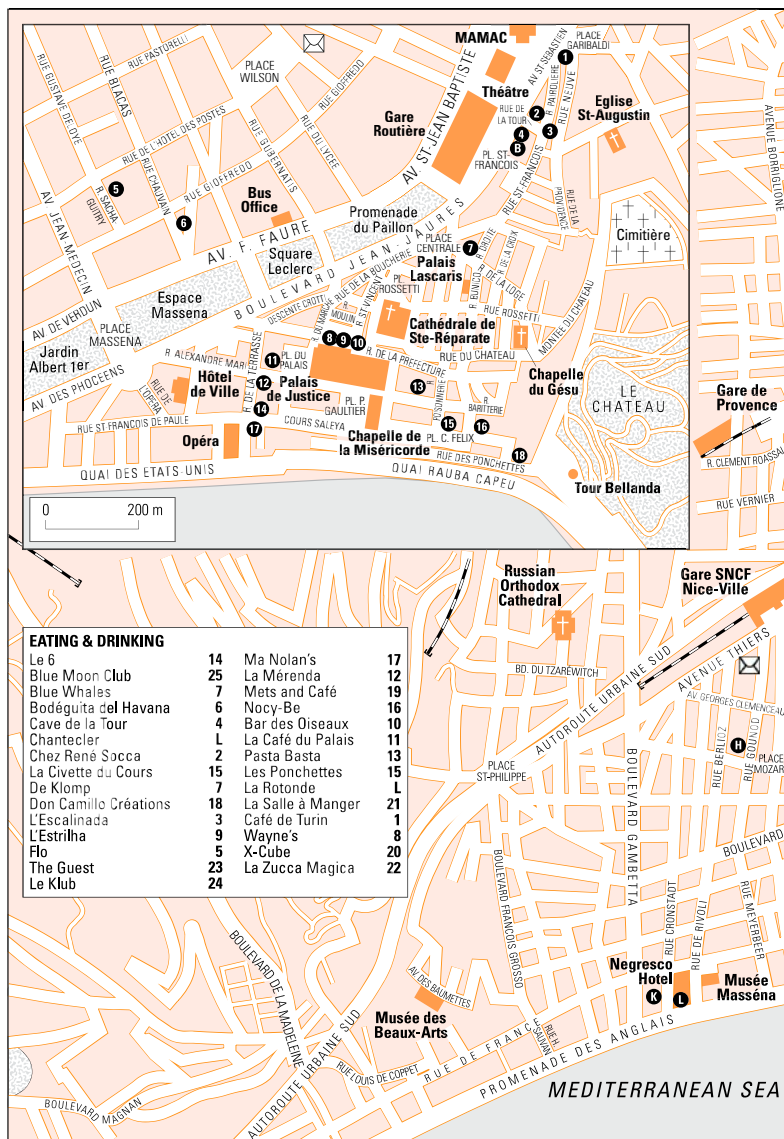

Nice has retained its historical styles almost intact: the medieval rabbit warren of Vieux Nice, the Italianate facades of modern Nice and the rich exuberance of fin-de-siècle residences dating from when the city was Europe's most fashionable winter retreat. It has also retained mementos from its ancient past, when the Romans ruled the region from here, and earlier still, when the Greeks founded the city. Nice's many museums are a treat for art lovers: within France the city is second only to Paris for art.

Of late the city has been smartening up its act with extensive refurbishment of its public spaces and the construction of a new tramway. Conservative it may be, but this is not a place that rests on its laurels.

Arrival and information

From the airport, two fast buses connect with the city: – #99 goes to the gare SNCF on avenue Thiers (14–28min; €4 day pass required) and #98 to the gare routière (14–34min; €4 day pass) on boulevard Jean-Jaurès. The regular bus #23 (40min; €1.30) also serves the gare SNCF from the airport. It continues up to place Général-de-Gaulle, a couple of blocks from the Gare de Provence on rue A.-Binet. Taxis are plentiful at the airport and will cost about €20–28 into town.

The main tourist office is beside the gare SNCF on avenue Thiers (June–Sept Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 9am–7pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 8am–7pm, Sun 10am–5pm; ☎08.92.70.74.07, @www.nicetourisme.com). It's one of the most helpful in the region – though it can be a nightmare trying to get through by phone – and has annexes at 5 promenade des Anglais (June–Sept Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 9am–6pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 9am–6pm), and at terminal 1 of the airport (June–Sept daily 8am–9pm; Oct–May Mon–Sat 8am–9pm).

Airport, Musée Anatole Jakovsky, Phoenix Parc Floral de Nice & Musée des Artes Asiatiques

Buses are frequent and run until early evening (roughly 7.30–9pm), after which four Noctambus night buses serve most areas from place Masséna until 11.10pm. Fares are flat rate and you can buy a single ticket (€1.30), a Multi+ carnet of seventeen tickets (€20), or a day pass (€4) on the bus; a ten-journey multipass (€10) and seven-day passes (€15) are available from tabacs, kiosks, newsagents and from Ligne d'Azur, the transport office, at 10 av Félix-Faure, where you can also pick up a free route map. A new tramway system was scheduled to begin operation during 2007.

Taxis around town are scarce, and cost €1.56 per kilometre by day; night rates (7pm–7am and all day at weekends) are €2.08 per kilometre. There are various surcharges. There are also scams: if you allow a restaurant or bar to call a cab for you, you may enjoy a luxurious ride home in a top of the range

Mercedes – with a hefty bill at journey's end. Bicycles, mopeds and motor-bikes can be rented from Holiday Bikes at 34 av Auber, just by the gare SNCF (☎04.93.16.01.62).

Accommodation

Before hunting for accommodation, it's worth taking advantage of the reservation service (📧www.niceres.com) offered by the tourist office at the train station. The area around the station teems with cheap hotels, some of them seedy, though there are a few gems. Sleeping on the beach is both illegal and impractical: the whole length of the promenade des Anglais is brightly illuminated.

Hotels

Cronstadt 3 rue Cronstadt ☎04.93.82.00.30, 📧www.hotelcronstadt.com. Hidden in the courtyard of a big residential block, a bit gloomy but tranquil and near the seafont, with clean and comfortable rooms. 5

Durante 16 av Durante ☎04.93.88.84.40, 📧www.hotel-durante.com. Great value mid-range hotel, with smart, pretty rooms and an attractive garden. 5

 Le Floride 52 bd de Cimiez ☎04.93.53.11.02, 📧www.hotel-floride.fr. Charming small hotel in Cimiez, close to the Chagall museum. Free private parking. 4

Le Grimaldi 15 rue Grimaldi ☎04.93.16.00.24, 📧www.le-grimaldi.com. Highly regarded, smart and central, with chic, individually designed rooms. 6

Lépante 6 rue Lépante ☎04.93.62.20.55, 📧www.hotellepante.com. Smart, comfortable and gay-friendly, with a convenient, central location. 5

Negresco 37 promenade des Anglais ☎04.93.16.64.00, 📧www.hotel-negresco-nice.com. This legendary, somewhat eccentric seafont palace hotel is a genuine one-off, with two top-class restaurants, its own private beach and all the luxury you'd expect. 3

L'Oasis 23 rue Gounod ☎04.93.88.12.29, 📧www.hotelooasis-nice.fr. In a quiet and leafy setting, with small, modern rooms. In summer breakfast is served in the garden. 4

La Pérouse 11 quai Rauba-Capeu ☎04.93.62.34.63, 📧www.hotel-la-perouse.com. Quite simply the best-situated hotel in central Nice, at the foot of Le Château. Wonderfully peaceful for such a central location. 4

Petit Trianon 11 rue Paradis ☎04.93.87.50.46, 📧hotel.nice.lepetittrianon@wanadoo.fr. Cheerful if basic hotel close to place Masséna and the vieille ville, with free Internet access and beach towels. 2

Villa la Tour 4 rue de la Tour ☎04.93.80.08.15, 📧www.villa-la-tour.com. A good, if potentially noisy, location in Vieux Nice, with a roof terrace and individually designed rooms. 5

Hostels

 Backpackers Chez Patrick First floor, 32 rue Pertinax ☎04.93.80.30.72, 📧www.backpackerschezpatrick.com. Cheerful hostel close to the station, with eating facilities and no curfew. €21.

La Belle Meunière 21 av Durante ☎04.93.88.66.15, 📧www.bellemeuniere.com. Efficiently run backpacker hotel in fabulously wasted old bourgeois house. The top-floor rooms are rather sweaty. €15.

Hi Youth Hostel rte Forestière du Mont-Alban ☎04.93.89.23.64, 📧www.fuaj.org. Four kilometres out of town and not a lot cheaper than sharing a hotel room. Take bus #14 from place Masséna (direction "place du Mont-Boron", stop "L'Auberge"); the last bus from the centre leaves at 7.50pm. €15.70 per dorm bed. Reception 7am–noon & 5–11pm. Open Feb–Oct.

 Villa Saint-Exupéry 22 av Gravier ☎04.93.84.42.83, 📧www.vsaaint.com. Impressive modern hostel, some way out of central Nice but well run and well equipped, with Wi-Fi Internet access, kitchens and laundry facilities. Bus 1 or 2 from avenue Jean-Médécine, stop "Gravier". €22.

Campsite

Camping Terry 768 rte de Grenoble, St-Isidore ☎04.93.08.11.58. The only campsite anywhere near Nice, 6.5km north of the airport on the N202; take the #59 bus from the gare routière to "La Manda" stop (or ask the driver to drop you at the site), or the Chemins de Fer de la Provence train to "Bellet-Tennis des Combes".

The City

It doesn't take long to get a feel for the layout of Nice. Shadowed by mountains that curve down to the Mediterranean east of its port, it still breaks up more

Museum charges

Formerly free, most of Nice's museums now charge for admission, with free entry now limited to the first and third Sunday of each month. To prevent entrance charges piling up, it makes sense to buy the Carte Passe-Musée (€7), which is valid for seven days and covers all municipal museums. It excludes the Musée Chagall and Musée Départemental des Arts Asiatiques, which are administered separately.

or less into old and new. Vieux Nice, the old town, groups about the hill of Le Château, its limits signalled by boulevard Jean-Jaurès, built along the course of the River Paillon. Along the seafront, the celebrated promenade des Anglais runs a cool 5km until forced to curve inland by the sea-projecting runways of the airport. The central square, place Masséna, is at the bottom of the modern city's main street, avenue Jean-Médécin, while off to the north is the exclusive hillside suburb of Cimiez.

The château and Vieux Nice

For initial orientation, with fantastic sea and city views, fresh air and the scent of Mediterranean vegetation, the best place to make for is the Château park (daily: April, May & Sept 8am–7pm; June–Aug 8am–8pm; Oct–March 8am–6pm). It's where Nice began as the ancient Greek city of Nikea, hence the mosaics and stone vases in mock Grecian style. There's no château as such, but the real pleasure lies in looking down on the scrambled rooftops and gleaming mosaic tiles of Vieux Nice and along the sweep of the promenade des Anglais. To reach the park, you can either take the lift by the Tour Bellanda (€0.80) at the eastern end of quai des États-Unis, or climb the steps from rue de la Providence or montée du Château in the old town.

Vieux Nice has been greatly gentrified in recent years, but the expensive shops, smart restaurants and art galleries still coexist with little hardware stores selling brooms and bottled gas, tiny cafés full of men in blue overalls, and washing strung between the tenements. Its dark and mysterious alleys are resistant to over-pretification and away from the showpiece squares a certain shabbiness lingers. Tourism now dominates Vieux Nice: throbbing with life day and night in August, much of it seems deserted in November. Its streets are too narrow for buses and are best explored on foot.

The central square is place Rossetti, where the soft-coloured Baroque Cathédrale de Ste-Réparate (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 3–6pm) just manages to be visible in the concatenation of eight narrow streets. There are two cafés to relax in, with the choice of sun or shade, and a magical ice-cream parlour, Fenocchio, with an extraordinary choice of flavours. The real magnet of the old town, though, is cours Saleya and the adjacent place Pierre-Gautier and place Charles-Félix. These are wide-open, sunlit spaces alongside grandiloquent municipal buildings and Italianate chapels and the site of the city's main market. Every day except Monday from 6am to 1.30pm there are gorgeous displays of fruit, vegetables, cheeses and sausages, plus cut flowers and potted roses, mimosa and other scented plants displayed till 5.30pm (except Sunday afternoons); on Monday the stalls sell bric-a-brac and secondhand clothes (7.30am–6pm). Café and restaurant tables fill the cours on summer nights.

To feast your eyes on Baroque splendour, pop into the chapels and churches of Vieux Nice: La Chapelle de la Miséricorde, on cours Saleya (Tues 2.30–5pm); L'Église du Gesu, on rue Droite (open Thurs pm, Sat am & Sun eve); or L'Église

St-Augustin, on place St-Augustin (Tues–Sun 9am–noon & 2–5pm), which also contains a fine pietà by Louis Bréa. For contemporary graphic and photographic art, check out the best art galleries in Vieux Nice, which include: Galerie Espace Ste-Réparate, 4 rue Ste-Réparate; Galerie Municipale Renoir, 8 rue de la Loge; and Galerie du Château, 14 rue Droite.

Also on rue Droite is the Palais Lascaris (daily except Tues 10am–6pm; free), a seventeenth-century palace built by the Duke of Savoy's Field-Marshal, Jean-Paul Lascaris, whose family arms, engraved on the ceiling of the entrance hall, bear the motto "Not even lightning strikes us". It's all very sumptuous, with frescoes, tapestries and chandeliers, along with a collection of porcelain vases from an eighteenth-century pharmacy.

Place Masséna and around

The stately place Masséna is the hub of the new town, built in 1835 across the path of the River Paillon, with good views north past fountains and palm trees to the mountains. A balustraded terrace and steps on the south of the square lead to Vieux Nice; the new town lies to the north. It's a spacious, handsome expanse, more for passing through than lingering. A short walk to the west lie the Jardins Albert 1er, where the Théâtre de Verdure occasionally hosts concerts.

The covered course of the Paillon north of place Masséna is the site of the city's more recent prestige projects. Most appealing of these is the marble Musée d'Art Moderne et d'Art Contemporain, or MAMAC (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; €4; www.mamac-nice.org), with rotating exhibitions of avant-garde French and American movements from the 1960s to the present. New Realism (smashing, burning, squashing and wrapping the detritus or mundane objects of everyday life) and Pop Art feature strongly with works by Warhol, Klein, Lichtenstein, César, Arman and Christo.

Running north from place Masséna, avenue Jean-Médecin is the city's nondescript main shopping street. You'll find all the mainstream clothes and household accessory chains at the revamped Nice-Étoile shopping complex, between rue Biscarra and boulevard Dubouchage; there are branches of FNAC and Virgin nearby for books, CDs and concert tickets. Couturier shops are to be found west of place Masséna on rue du Paradis and rue Alphonse Karr. Both these streets intersect with the pedestrianized rue Masséna and the end of rue de France – true holiday territory, all hotels, ice-cream parlours and big brasseries, and always crammed with strolling tourists.

The chief interest in western Nice is in the older architecture: eighteenth- and nineteenth-century Italian Baroque and Neoclassical, florid belle-époque and unclassifiable exotic aristofantasy. The trophy for the most gilded, exotic and elaborate edifice goes to the Russian Orthodox Cathedral, at the end of avenue Nicolas-II, which runs off boulevard Tzaréwitch (daily except Sun morning: mid-Feb to April & Oct 9.15am–noon & 2.30–5.30pm; May–Sept 9am–noon & 2.30–6pm; Nov to mid-Feb 9.30am–noon & 2.30–5pm; €3), reached by bus #14 or #17 (stop Tzaréwitch).

△ Russian Orthodox Cathedral, Nice

The promenade des Anglais and the beaches

The point where the Paillon flows into the sea marks the beginning of the world-famous promenade des Anglais, created by nineteenth-century English residents for their afternoon's sea-breeze stroll along the Mediterranean sea coast. Today it's more or less a permanent traffic jam, still bordered by some of the most fanciful turn-of-the-twentieth-century architecture on the Côte d'Azur. At nos. 13–15, the Palais de la Méditerranée is once again a luxurious casino, though the splendid Art Deco facade is all that remains of the legendary 1930s original.

Most celebrated of all is the opulent and vaguely eccentric Negresco Hotel at no. 37, built in 1906, and filling up the block between rues de Rivoli and Cronstadt. Though they will try to stop you if you are not deemed to be wearing tenue correcte (especially in the evenings), you can try wandering in to take a look at the Salon Louis XIV and the Salon Royale. The first, on the left of the foyer, has a seventeenth-century painted oak ceiling and mammoth fireplace, plus royal portraits, all from various French châteaux. The Salon Royale, in the centre of the hotel, is a vast domed oval room, decorated with 24-carat gold leaf and the biggest carpet ever to have come out of the Savonnerie workshops. The chandelier is one of a pair commissioned from Baccarat by Tsar Nicholas II – the other hangs in the Kremlin.

Just before the Negresco, with its entrance at 65 rue de France, stands the Musée Masséna, the city's art and history museum. Closed indefinitely for major renovations, only its unexceptional but shady gardens are open to the public (daily 9am–5pm).

A kilometre or so down the promenade and a couple of blocks inland at 33 av des Baumettes lies the Musée des Beaux-Arts (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm; €4, bus #38, stop “Chéret”), where the chief glory is the collection of 28 works by Raoul Dufy, who is intimately connected with the visual image of Nice. Continuing southwest along the promenade des Anglais towards the airport, you'll find the Musée International d'Art Naïf Anatole Jakovsky (daily except Tues 10am–6pm; €4), home to a refreshingly different and surprisingly good collection of over six hundred pieces of amateur art from around the world.

The beach below the promenade des Anglais is all pebbles and mostly public, with showers provided. It's not particularly clean and you need to watch out for broken glass. There are twenty private beaches, clustering at the more scenic, eastern end of the bay close to Vieux Nice. If you don't mind rocks, you might want to try the string of coves beyond the port that starts with the plage de la Réserve, opposite Parc Vigier (bus #20 or #30). Further up, past Coco Beach (bus #30 only, stop “Villa La Côte”), rather smelly steps lead down to a coastal path which continues around the headland. Towards dusk this becomes a gay pick-up place.

On the far side of the castle sits the old port, flanked by gorgeous red to ochre eighteenth-century buildings and headed by the Neoclassical Notre-Dame du Port; it's full of yachts but has little quayside life despite the restaurants along quai Lunel. On the hill to the east, prehistoric life in the region has been reconstructed on the site of an excavated fossil beach in the well-designed Musée de Terra Amata, 25 bd Carnot (Tues–Sun 10am–6pm, €4, bus 81 or 100, stop “Gustavin”).

Cimiez

The northern suburb of Cimiez has always been posh. The approach up boulevard de Cimiez is punctuated by vast belle-époque piles, many of them former hotels: at the foot of the hill stands the gargantuan Majestic, while the summit is dominated by the equally vast Hôtel Régina, built for a visit by Queen Victoria. The heights of Cimiez were the social centre of the local elite some 1700 years ago, when the town was capital of the Roman province of Alpes-Maritimae. Part of a small amphitheatre still stands, and excavations of the Roman baths have revealed enough detail to distinguish the sumptuous and elaborate facilities for the top tax official and his cronies, the plainer public baths and a separate complex for women. All the finds, plus an illustration of the town's history up to the Middle Ages, are displayed in the impressive, modern Musée d'Archéologie, 160 av des Arènes (daily except Tues 10am–6pm; €4; bus #15, #17 or #22, stop “Arènes”).

The seventeenth-century villa between the excavations and the arena is the Musée Matisse (daily except Tues 10am–6pm; €4; closed until June 2007 for renovation; www.musee-matisse-nice.org). Matisse spent his winters in Nice from 1916 onwards, staying in hotels on the promenade – from where A Storm at Nice was painted – and then from 1921 to 1938 renting an apartment overlooking place Charles-Félix. It was here that he painted his most sensual, colour-flooded canvases of odalisques posed against exotic draperies. As well as the Mediterranean light, Matisse loved the cosmopolitan aspect of Nice and the presence of fellow artists Renoir, Bonnard and Picasso in neighbouring towns. He died in Cimiez in November 1954, aged 85.

The Roman remains and the Musée Matisse back onto an old olive grove, one of the best open spaces in Nice and venue for the July jazz festival. At its eastern end are the sixteenth-century buildings and exquisite gardens of the Monastère Notre-Dame de Cimiez (Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 3–6pm; free); the oratory has brilliant murals illustrating alchemy, while the church houses three masterpieces of medieval painting by Louis and Antoine Bréa. Adjoining the monastery is the Musée Franciscain.

At the foot of Cimiez hill, just off boulevard Cimiez on avenue du Docteur-Menard, Chagall's Biblical Message is housed in a museum built specially for the work and opened by the artist in 1972 (daily except Tues: July–Sept 10am–6pm; Oct–June 10am–5pm; €6.50, €7.70 during temporary exhibitions, bus #15, stop “Musée Chagall”). The rooms are light, white and cool, with windows allowing you to see the greenery of the garden beyond the indescribable shades between pink and red of the Song of Songs canvases. The seventeen paintings are all based on the Old Testament and complemented with etchings and engravings.

The Phoenix Parc Floral de Nice

Right out by the airport is a vast tourist attraction, the Phoenix Parc Floral de Nice, 405 promenade des Anglais (daily: April–Sept 9.30am–7.30pm; Oct–March 9.30am–6pm; €2; exit St-Augustin from the highway or bus #9, #10 or #23 from Nice). It's a cross between botanical gardens, a bird and insect zoo and a tacky theme park: automated dinosaurs and mock Mayan temples along with alpine streams, ginkgo trees, butterflies and cockatoos.

The best reason to make the trip out to the park is Nice's newest museum, the Musée Départemental des Arts Asiatiques (daily except Tues: May to mid-Oct 10am–6pm; mid-Oct to April 10am–5pm; €4.50; www.arts-asiatiques.com), housed in a beautiful building designed by Japanese architect Kenzo Tange. It houses a collection of ethnographic artefacts, including silk goods and pottery, as well as traditional and contemporary art.

Eating, drinking and entertainment

Nice is a great place for eating, whether you're picnicking on market fare, snacking on Niçois specialities or dining in the palace hotels. The Italian influence is strong, with pasta on every menu; seafood is also a staple. For snacks, many of the cafés sell sandwiches with typically Provençal fillings such as fresh basil, olive oil, goat's cheese and mesclum, the unique green salad mix of the region. If you want to buy the best bread or croissants in town, seek out Espuno, 35 rue Droite, in the old town.

Despite the usual fast-food chains and tourist traps dotted around, most areas of Nice have plenty of reasonable restaurants. Vieux Nice has a dozen on every street catering for a wide variety of budgets; the port quaysides have very good, but pricey, fish restaurants. In summer it's wise to book tables or turn up before 8pm, especially in Vieux Nice.

Vieux Nice is also the centre of Nice's lively pub and club scene. A good place to set out is along rue Central in the old town, where many pubs have early evening happy hours. Many Vieux Nice bars boast huge selections of beers and spirits and offer regular live music. As for Niçois nightclubs, bouncers judging your wallet or exclusive membership lists are the rule.

Nice's lesbian and gay nightlife scene is surprisingly active given the city's reactionary politics, and for lesbian and gay visitors the city has a relaxed feel. The annual Pink Parade takes place in early June.

For festivals, the Mardi Gras Carnival opens the year's events in Nice in February (📧 www.nicecarnaval.com), with the last week of July taken up by the Nice Jazz Festival in the Parc de Cimiez (☎ 08.92.70.75.07, 📧 www.nicejazzfest.com for info, or contact the main tourist office in May/June).

Cafés

Cave de la Tour 3 rue de la Tour
☎ 04.93.80.03.31. Local bar à vins that serves wine from the bottle, or for the more daring, straight from huge vats.

Nocy-be 2 rue Jules-Gilley. This New-Agey tea house has a cushioned interior which evokes a Bedouin tent. Countless varieties of teas and infusions. Mon–Sat until 12.30am.

Le Café du Palais place du Palais. A prime al-fresco lounging spot on the handsome square by the Palais de Justice.

Les Ponchettes and La Civette du Cours cours Saleya. At Le Château end of the marketplace, neighbouring cafés with cane seats fanning out a good 50m from the doors. Open late in summer.

Restaurants

Chantecler and La Rotonde Hôtel Negresco, 37 promenade des Anglais ☎ 04.93.16.64.00. The Chantecler is the best restaurant in Nice, seriously expensive à la carte, but chef Bruno Turbot provides a lunchtime menu, including wine and coffee, for €55, which will give you a good idea of how sublime Niçois food is at its best. At La Rotonde you can taste less fancy but still mouth-watering dishes on the €25 menu. Closed Mon, Tues & Jan 7–Feb 7.

Chez René Socca 2 rue Miralhéti, off rue Pairolière ☎ 04.93.85.95.67. The cheapest meal in town: you can buy helpings of socca, pissaladière, stuffed peppers, pasta or calamares at the counter and eat with your fingers; the bar opposite serves the drinks. Closed Mon & Jan.

Don Camillo Créations 5 rue des Ponchettes
☎ 04.93.85.67.95. Elegant modern restaurant with contemporary Niçois/Italian cooking on a €36 menu. Closed Mon lunch & Sun.

 L'Escalinada 22 rue Pairolière
☎ 04.93.62.11.71. Good Niçois specialities on a €23 menu – pissaladière to start, then you help yourself to chickpea salad from a huge pot. The location is pretty, at the foot of a stepped sidestreet. Open daily.

L'Estriha 13 rue de l'Abbaye ☎ 04.93.62.62.00. Reservations essential in summer for this popular restaurant that serves bourride, civet de lapin and daube niçoise. Plats around €12.50.

Flo 4 rue Sacha-Guitry ☎ 04.93.13.38.38. Wonderful Parisian-style serving choucroute, confit de canard, seafood and great crème brûlée in the Art Deco surroundings of a theatre where Mistinguett and Piaf performed. Lunch menu €22.50, evening €29.50. Last orders midnight. Open daily.

La Mérenda 4 rue de la Terrasse. Courgette fritters, tripe à la niçoise and the like from Dominic le Stanc, former chef at Chantecler. À la carte only, around €25. No phone, no smoking, no credit cards. Closed Sat, Sun & two weeks in Aug.

Mets and Café 28 rue Assalit ☎04.93.80.30.85. Good value, busy budget brasserie close to many of the backpacker hostels, with a €9 menu and no shortage of custom. Closed Sun.

Pasta Basta 18 rue de la Préfecture ☎04.93.80.03.57. Excellent fresh pasta from €4.40 plus a bewildering variety of sauces from €2.40 – and they hand you the block of parmesan to grate yourself.

La Salle à Manger 7 rue Fodéré ☎04.93.56.00.94 Tiny, brightly modern gay-lesbian-friendly restaurant north of the port, with amuse bouches and a welcome glass of kir on the €23 menu. Eves only, closed Mon.

Café de Turin 5 place Garibaldi ☎04.93.62.29.52. Queues around the block for the spectacular seafood at this restaurant on the edge of Vieux Nice. Plateaux de fruits de mer from just under €20. There are seafood stalls in the street outside if you get tired of waiting. Closed Wed.

La Zucca Magica 4bis quai Papacino ☎04.93.56.25.27. Long-established, homely Italian vegetarian restaurant on the port, with a sound reputation but a tendency to overdo the cheese. Around €25, no credit cards. Closed Sun & Mon.

Bars, clubs and live entertainment

Blue Moon Club 26 quai Lunel. Bar and mainstream disco. Entrance free until midnight, then €10 and finally €16 with conso.

Blue Whales 1 rue Mascoïnât. Intimate venue with a friendly atmosphere and live music on Fridays. Open daily till 2.30am.

Bodéguita del Havana 14 rue Chauvain. Wildly popular Cuban salsa bar with DJs and live music.

Listings

Airlines Aer Lingus ☎01.70.20.00.72; Air France ☎36.54; Air Transat ☎08.25.12.02.48; BMI Baby ☎08.90.71.00.81; British Airways ☎08.25.82.54.00; British Midland ☎01.41.91.87.04; Delta ☎08.11.64.00.05; Easyjet ☎08.99.70.00.41; United ☎0810.72.72.72.

Airport information ☎08.20.42.33.33, @www.nice.aeroport.fr.

Books The Cat's Whiskers, 30 rue Lamartine, sells English-language books.

Car rental Major firms have offices at the airport and/or at the gare SNCF on av Thiers. Try also: Avis, 2 av Phocéens ☎04.93.80.63.52; Europcar, Open Tues–Sun until 2.30am. Smart dress required.

De Klomp 6 rue Mascoïnât. Dutch-style brown café with twelve beers on draught, sixty whiskies and regular live music. Mon–Sat 5.30pm–2.30am.

The Guest 5 quai des Deux-Emmanuel. Very stylish (and expensive) portside bar with a dance floor, attracting a slightly older crowd. Cocktails from €9.50.

Ma Nolan's 2 rue St-François de Paul. Vast, slick Irish pub with regular live music, televised Irish and British sport plus Murphy's and Guinness on draught. Popular with a younger crowd.

Bar des Oiseaux 5 rue St-Vincent. Eccentric cabaret bar named for the birds that fly down from their nests in the loft and the pet parrot and screeching myna bird that perch by the door. Live jazz, bossa nova, chanson and flamenco. Open Tues–Sun until 1am.

Wayne's 15 rue de la Préfecture. Big, popular rock bar on the edge of Vieux Nice, still the lynchpin of the area's nightlife despite its vaguely Neanderthal sexual politics. Regular live British bands plus theme nights including quizzes, ladies' and student nights. Open daily.

Lesbian and gay clubs and bars

Le 6 6 rue de la Terrasse. Smart lesbian and gay music bar, with regular live entertainment including drag, rai (Algerian funk/rap music) and karaoke. Tues–Sun from 10pm.

Le Klub 6 rue Halévy. Nice's largest and best gay club attracts a young, stylish crowd including women and some heteros. Wed–Sun from midnight.

X-Cube 13 av Maréchal Foch. Slick, stylish minimalist gay men's lounge bar attached to a sex shop and cruising club. Daily until 2.30am.

3 av Gustave-V ☎04.92.14.44.50; or Hertz, 9 av Gustav-V ☎04.93.87.11.87.

Cinema Cinéma Mercury, 16 place Garibaldi (☎08.36.68.81.06), Cinémathèque de Nice, 3 Esplanade Kennedy (☎04.92.04.06.66), UGC Rialto, 4 rue de Rivoli (☎08.92.68.00.41), all show subtitled films in the original language (v.o.).

Consulates Canada, 10 rue Lamartine ☎04.93.92.93.22; UK, 22 av Notre Dame ☎04.93.62.94.95; USA, 7 av Gustave-V, 3rd floor ☎04.93.88.89.55.

Disabled access Transport for people with reduced mobility ☎04.93.96.09.99.

Emergencies SAMU ☎ 15; SOS Médecins ☎ 08.10.85.01.01; Riviera Medical Services (English speaking doctors) ☎ 04.93.26.12.70; Hôpital St-Roch, 5 rue Pierre-Dévoluy ☎ 04.92.03.33.75; SOS Dentaire ☎ 04.93.80.77.77.

Ferries SNCM gare maritime, quai du Commerce ☎ 04.93.13.66.66, 🌐 www.sncm.fr; Corsica Ferries, quai Amiral-Infernet ☎ 08.25.09.50.95.

Internet Internet Café, 30 rue Pertinax; Taxi Phone Internet, 10 rue de Belgique and at 25 rue Paganini.

Laundry Best One, 16 rue Pertinax; Lavomatique, 11 rue du Pont-Vieux and at cnr of rue Lamartine and Pertinax; du Mono, 8 rue de Belgique.

Lost property 1 rue Raoul Bosio ☎ 04.97.13.44.10.

Money exchange American Express, 11 promenade des Anglais; Change Or, 7 av Thiers; Thomas Cook, 12 av Thiers.

Pharmacy 7 rue Masséna ☎ 04.93.87.78.94; 66 av Jean Médecin ☎ 04.93.62.54.44.

Police Commissariat Central de Police, 1 av Maréchal Foch ☎ 04.92.17.22.22.

Post office 21 av Thiers.

Taxis ☎ 04.93.13.78.78.

Trains General information and reservations ☎ 36.35; for information on the Chemin de Fer de Provence, go to 4bis rue Alfred-Binet ☎ 04.97.03.80.80.

Youth information Centre Information Jeunesse, 19 rue Gioffredo ☎ 04.93.80.93.93.

The Corniches

Three corniche roads run east from Nice to the independent principality of Monaco and to Menton, the last town of the French Riviera. Napoleon built the Grande Corniche on the route of the Romans' Via Julia Augusta, and the Moyenne Corniche dates from the first quarter of the twentieth century, when aristocratic tourism on the Riviera was already causing congestion on the lower, coastal road, the Corniche Inférieure. The upper two are the classic location for car commercials, and for movie car crashes. Real deaths occur too – most notoriously Princess Grace of Monaco, who died as she descended from La Turbie to the Moyenne Corniche – a bitter irony, since the corniches had been the backdrop to one of her greatest film successes, To Catch a Thief.

Buses take all three routes; the train follows the lower corniche, and all three are superb means of seeing the most mountainous stretch of the Côte d'Azur. Hotel rooms between Nice and Menton are relatively scarce and frequently expensive; it probably makes more sense to base yourself in Nice.

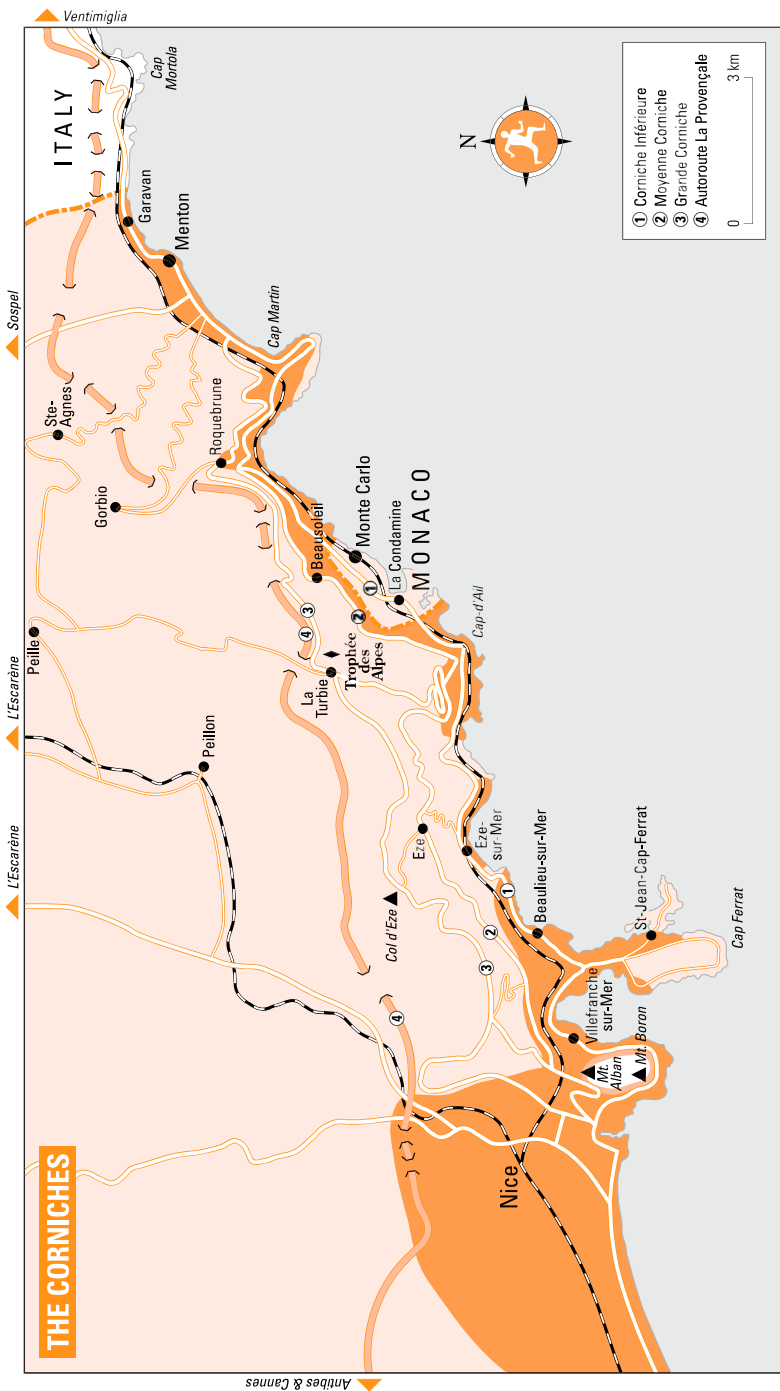

The Corniche Inférieure

The characteristic Côte d'Azur mansions that represent the stylistically incompatible fantasies of their original owners parade along the Corniche Inférieure.

VILLEFRANCHE-SUR-MER is just over the other side of Mont Alban from Nice, and marks the beginning of one of the most picturesque and unspoiled sections of the Riviera, though the cruise liners attracted by the deep-water anchorage in Villefranche's beautiful bay ensure a steady stream of tour buses climbing the hill from the port. But as long as your visit doesn't coincide with shore excursions, the old town, with its active fleet of fishing boats, sixteenth-century citadelle and its covered medieval rue Obscure running beneath the houses, is a tranquil and charming place to while away an afternoon.

The tiny fishing harbour is overlooked by the medieval Chapelle de St-Pierre (Tues–Sun: spring 10am–noon & 3–7pm; summer 10am–noon & 4–8pm; autumn & winter 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €2), decorated by Jean Cocteau in 1957 in shades he described as “ghosts of colours”. The drawings portray scenes from the life of St Peter and homages to the women of Villefranche and to the gypsies. The chapel is used just once a year, on June 29, when local fishermen celebrate the feast day of St Peter and St Paul with a Mass.

THE CORNICHE

On the main road along the neck of the Cap Ferrat peninsula, between Villefranche and Beaulieu, stands the Villa Éphrussi (Feb–June & Sept to early Oct daily 10am–6pm; July & Aug daily 10am–7pm; Nov–Jan Mon–Fri 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm; last entry 30min before closing; €9.50, €2 extra to visit first-floor collections). Built in 1912 for a Rothschild heiress, it overflows with decorative art, paintings, sculpture and artefacts ranging from the fourteenth to the nineteenth centuries, and from European to Far Eastern origins. The villa is surrounded by elaborate gardens.

Attractive, belle-époque BEAULIEU overlooks the pretty Baie des Fourmis and is sheltered by a ring of hills that ensure some of the highest temperatures on the Côte. Its main point of interest is the Villa Kérylos (Jan to mid-Feb & early Nov to Dec Mon–Fri 2–6pm, Sat & Sun 10am–6pm; mid-Feb to June & Sept to early Nov 10am–6pm; July & Aug 10am–7pm; €8), a near-perfect reproduction of an ancient Greek villa, just east of the casino on avenue Gustav-Eiffel. Théodore Reinach, the archeologist who had it built in 1900, lived here for twenty years, eating, dressing and acting like an Athenian citizen, taking baths with his male friends and assigning separate suites to women. However perverse the concept, it's a visual knockout, with faithfully reproduced mosaics and vases and lavish use of marble and alabaster. The villa is only five minutes' walk from the gare SNCF. For those tempted to stay overnight, two economical options are the family-run Hôtel Riviera at 6 rue Paul Doumer, right in the centre near the sea (☎04.93.01.04.92, 🌐www.hotel-riviera.fr; 📍), and the Select, 1 place Général-de-Gaulle (☎04.93.01.05.42, 📧select.beaulieu@wanadoo.fr; 📍), which is basic but clean, comfortable and excellent value for this part of the world.

The Moyenne Corniche

Of the three roads, the Moyenne Corniche is the most photogenic, a real cliff-hanging, car-chase highway. Eleven kilometres from Nice, the medieval village of EZE winds round its conical rock just below the corniche. No other village perché is more infested with antique dealers, pseudo-artisans and other caterers to rich tourists, and it requires a major mental feat to recall that the labyrinth of tiny vaulted passages and stairways was designed not for charm but from fear of attack. At the summit, a cactus garden, the Jardin Exotique (July & Aug daily 9am–10pm; Sept–June 9am–6/7pm; €5), covers the site of the former castle.

From place du Centenaire, just outside the old village, you can reach the shore through open countryside via the sentier Frédéric-Nietzsche. The philosopher is said to have conceived part of Thus Spoke Zarathustra, his shaggy dog story against believing answers to ultimate questions, on this path. You arrive at the Corniche Inférieure at the eastern limit of Eze-sur-Mer (coming upwards, it's signposted to La Village).

The Grande Corniche

At every other turn on the Grande Corniche, you're invited to park your car and enjoy a belvédère. At certain points, such as Col d'Eze, you can turn off upwards for even higher views. Eighteen stunning kilometres from Nice, you reach the village of LA TURBIE and its Trophée des Alpes, a huge monument raised in 6 BC to celebrate the subjugation of the tribes of Gaul. Originally a statue of Augustus Caesar stood on the 45-metre plinth, which was pillaged, ransacked for building materials and blown up over the centuries. Painstakingly restored in the 1930s, it now stands statueless, 35m high, and, viewed from a distance, still looks imperious. If you want a closer inspection, you'll have to buy a ticket (Tues–Sun: mid-May to mid-Sept 9.30am–1pm & 2.30–6.30pm; mid-Sept to mid-May 10am–1.30pm & 2.30–5pm; €5). Several buses a day run from here to Monaco and Nice, from Monday to Saturday.

As the corniche descends towards Cap Martin, it passes the eleventh-century castle of ROQUEBRUNE, its village nestling round the base of the rock. The castle (daily: Jan, Nov & Dec 10am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; Feb, March & Oct 10am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; April–June & Sept 10am–12.30pm & 2–6.30pm; July & Aug 10am–12.30pm & 3–7.30pm; €3.50) has been kitted out enthusiastically in medieval fashion, while the tiny vaulted passages and stairways of the village are almost too good to be true. One thing that hasn't been restored is the vast millennial olive tree that lies just to the east of the village on the chemin de Menton. To get to the vieux village from the gare SNCF, turn east and then right up avenue de la Côte d'Azur, then first left up escalier Corinthille, across the Grande Corniche and up escalier Chanoine-J.-B.–Grana. The best hotel in the old village is Les Deux Frères, place des Deux-Frères (☎04.93.28.99.00, @www.lesdeuxfreres.com; 📍), which is worth booking in advance to try to get one of the rooms with the awesome view.

Southeast of the old town and the station is the peninsula of Cap Martin, with a coastal path, giving you access to a wonderful shoreline of white rocks, secluded beaches and wind-bent pines. The path is named after Le Corbusier, who spent several summers in Roquebrune and died by drowning off Cap Martin in 1965. His grave – designed by himself – is in the cemetery (square J near the flagpole), high above the old village on promenade 1er-DFL.

A gourmet treat here is the panoramic restaurant Le Vistaero, on the Grande Corniche (☎04.92.10.40.00), with lunch menus at €40 and €55.

Monaco

Viewed from a distance, there's no mistaking the thick cluster of towers that is MONACO. Rampant development in the 1960s and 1970s rescued the tiny principality from postwar decline but elbowed aside much of its former Italianate prettiness, leaving it looking like nowhere else on the Riviera. Not for nothing was Prince Rainier, who died in 2005, known as the Prince Bâtitseur ("Prince Builder").

Though it may have lost its looks, this tiny state, no bigger than London's Hyde Park, retains its comic opera independence. It has been in the hands of the ruling Grimaldi family since the thirteenth century, and in theory Monaco would once again become part of France were the royal line to die out. The current ruler, Prince Albert II, is the one constitutionally autocratic ruler left in Europe, under whose nose every French law is passed for approval prior to being applied to Monaco.

Phoning Monaco

Monaco phone numbers have only eight digits and no -04 French area code. If you are phoning from France you must dial Monaco's international code, 00377–, then the number (leaving out the first 0).

Along with its great wealth, Monaco latterly acquired an unwelcome reputation for wheeler-dealer sleaze. On his accession in 2005, the US-educated Albert declared he no longer wished Monaco to be known – in the words of Somerset Maugham – as “a sunny place for shady people”. He set about trying to get the principality off an OECD list of uncooperative tax havens. Monaco now levies tax on the interest income of EU citizens resident there. Even so, it remains home to 6000 British expats – including Roger Moore and Shirley Bassey – out of a total population of 32,000.

One time to avoid Monaco – unless you’re a motor-racing enthusiast – is the end of May, when racing cars burn around the port and casino for the Formula 1 Monaco Grand Prix. Every space in sight of the circuit is inaccessible without a ticket, making casual sightseeing – or sneaky free views of the race – out of the question.

The Principality

The oldest part of the two-kilometre-long state is Monaco-Ville, around the palace on the high rocky promontory, with the new suburb and marina of Fontvieille in its western shadow. La Condamine is the old port quarter on the other side of the promontory; Larvotto, the rather ugly bathing resort with artificial beaches of imported sand, reaches to the eastern border; and Monte-Carlo is in the middle.

Monte-Carlo

Monte-Carlo is the area of Monaco where the real money is flung about, and its famous casino (@www.casinomontecarlo.com; bus #1, #2 #4 or #6) demands to be seen. Entrance is restricted to over-18s and you may have to show your passport; dress code is rigid, with shorts and T-shirts frowned upon, though most visitors are scarcely the last word in designer chic. Skirts, jackets and ties are obligatory for the more interesting sections. Bags and large coats are checked at the door.

The first gambling hall is the Salons Européens (open from 2pm; €10) where slot machines surround the American roulette, craps and blackjack tables, the managers are Vegas-trained, the lights low and the air oppressively smoky. Above this slice of Nevada, however, the decor is fin-de-siècle Rococo extravagance, while the ceilings in the adjoining Pink Salon Bar are adorned with female nudes smoking cigarettes. The heart of the place is the Salons Privés (Mon–Fri from 4pm, Sat & Sun from 3pm), through the Salles Touzet. To get in, you have to look like a gambler, not a tourist (no cameras), and dispense with €20 at the door. Rather larger and more richly decorated than the European Rooms, its early-afternoon or out-of-season atmosphere is that of a cathedral. No clinking coins, just sliding chips and softly-spoken croupiers.

△ Casino, Monte-Carlo

Adjoining the casino is the gaudy opera house, and around the palm-tree-lined place du Casino are more casinos plus the city's palace-hotels and grands cafés. The American Bar of the Hôtel de Paris is the place for the elite to meet, while the turn-of-the-twentieth-century Hermitage has a beautiful Gustave Eiffel iron-and-glass dome.

Monaco-Ville, Fontvieille and Larvotto

After the casino, the amusements of Monaco-Ville (bus #1 or #2), where it seems every other shop sells junky souvenirs, are less exciting, though the glacé-iced old town is the one part of the principality to have been spared the developer's worst. You can take a self-guided tour around the Lilliputian splendour of the Palais Princier (April 10.30am–6pm; May–Sept 9.30am–6.30pm; Oct 10am–5.30pm; €7); look at Napoleonic relics and items from the palace's historical archives at the Musée des Souvenirs Napoléoniens et Collection des Archives Historiques du Palais, place du Palais (Jan–March Tues–Sun 10.30am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; April daily 10.30am–6pm; May–Sept daily 9.30am–6.30pm; Oct 10am–5.30pm; Dec 10.30am–5pm; €4); see the tombs of Prince Rainier and Princess Grace in the rather dull nineteenth-century cathedral (summer daily 9.30am–7pm; winter daily 9.30am–6pm) on rue

Colonel; and even watch Monaco the movie, at the Monte-Carlo Story, parking des Pecheurs (Jan–June & Sept–Oct 2–5pm; July & Aug 2–6pm; €7).

If you've had your fill of Grimaldis, check out the Musée de la Chapelle de la Visitation on place de la Visitation (Tues–Sun 10am–4pm; €3), displaying part of Barbara Piasecka Johnson's collection of religious art. This small but exquisite collection includes works by Zurbarán, Rivera, Rubens, and Vermeer.

One of Monaco's best sights is the aquarium in the imposing Musée Océanographique (April–June & Sept 9.30am–7pm; July & Aug 9.30am–7.30pm; Oct–March 10am–6pm; €11), where the fishy beings outdo the weirdest Kandinsky or Hieronymus Bosch creations. Less exceptional but still peculiar, cactus equivalents can be viewed in the Jardin Exotique, on boulevard du Jardin Exotique high above Fontvieille (mid-May to mid-Sept 9am–7pm; mid-Sept to mid-May 9am–6pm or dusk; €6.90; bus #2).

There are yet more museums in Fontvieille, below the rock of Monaco-Ville. They include: the Collection de Voitures Anciennes de SAS le Prince de Monaco (daily 10am–6pm; €6), an enjoyable miscellany of old and not-so-old cars, both prestigious and humble – there's everything from a 1928 Hispano-Suiza worthy of Cruella de Ville to Princess Grace's elegant 1959 Renault Florida Coupé; the Musée Naval (daily 10am–6pm; €4), containing 250 model ships; the zoo (March–May 10am–noon & 2–6pm; June–Sept 9am–noon & 2–7pm; Oct–Feb 10am–noon & 2–5pm; €4), with exotic birds, a black panther and a white tiger; and the museum of stamps and coins, the Musée des Timbres et des Monnaies (July–Sept daily 10am–6pm; Oct–June 10am–5pm; €3), which has rare stamps, money and commemorative medals dating back as far as 1640.

At the other end of the principality near the Larvotto beach, the Musée National, 17 av Princesse Grace (Easter–Sept daily 10am–6.30pm; Oct–Easter daily 10am–12.15pm & 2.30–6.30pm; €6), is dedicated to the history of dolls and automata, and is better than you would think: some of the dolls' house scenes and the creepy automata are quite surreal and fun.

Practicalities

The gare SNCF is wedged between boulevard Rainier III and avenue Prince Pierre in La Condamine, with several exits: signs for Le Rocher-Fontvieille will deposit you at the end of avenue Prince Pierre above place d'Armes; directions for Monte-Carlo lead to place Sainte Dévote. Municipal buses ply the length of the principality from 7am to 9pm (€1.50 single; four-trip card €3.50). Buses following the lower corniche stop at place d'Armes; other routes have a variety of stations; most also stop in Monte-Carlo. Local bus #4 from the gare routière, and buses #1 & #2 run to the "Tourisme-Casino" stop, close to the tourist office at 2a bd des Moulins (Mon–Sat 9am–7pm, Sun 10am–noon; ☎92.16.61.16, 🌐www.monaco-tourisme.com). The tourist office has an annex in the gare SNCF (Tues–Sat 9am–5pm). One very useful public service is the clean and efficient lift linking the lower and higher streets (marked on the tourist office map). Bicycles can be hired from Monte-Carlo-Rent, quai des États-Unis (☎99.99.97.79) on the port.

The best area for budget hotels is Beausoleil, just across the border in France, where you'll find the pleasant Villa Boeri at 29 bd du Général-Leclerc (☎04.93.78.38.10, 🌐www.hotelboeri.com; 4), only a couple of minutes' walk from Monte-Carlo centre. In La Condamine you could try the Hôtel de France, at 6 rue de la Turbie (☎93.30.24.64, 🌐www.monte-carlo.mc/france; 5). Another reasonable option is Helvetia, 1bis rue Grimaldi (☎93.30.21.71, ☎92.16.70.51; 4), a small and comfortable old hotel with optional air conditioning and most rooms en suite. If you want luxury but don't want to pay the steep prices at the palace hotels, Columbus, 23 av des Papalins (☎92.05.90.00, 🌐www.columbushotels.com; 9), is a stylish modern boutique hotel in Fontvieille with sea views. Monaco has no campsite, and caravans are illegal – as are bathing costumes, bare feet and bare chests once you step off the beach. Camper vans have to be parked at the Parking des Écoles, in Fontvieille, and even then not overnight.

La Condamine and the old town are replete with restaurants, but good food and reasonable prices don't exactly match. Menu prices near casino can reach absurd levels, and not just in the palace hotels. The best-value cuisine is Italian, notably 🍷 Le Pinocchio, at 30 rue Comte-E-Gastaldi (☎93.30.96.20; closed mid-Dec to early Jan), with plats du jour from €11, and Pulcinella, 17 rue du Portier in Monte-Carlo (☎93.30.73.61); menu at €28, plats from €13. Alternatively, try Castelroc, in the old town on place du Palais (☎93.30.36.68; closed Mon & mid-Dec to late Jan), which has a generous €21 menu. It's really not worth going upmarket in Monaco unless you're prepared to pay €90 and more per head, in which case Monaco has some worthy places to splash out: Alain Ducasse's Louis XV (☎92.16.29.76; closed Tues, Wed, Dec & second half Feb) in the Hôtel de Paris, or the Restaurant Joël Robuchon at the Hotel Métropole, 4 av de la Madone (☎93.15.15.10), where the cooking is under the aegis of one of France's most respected chefs.

Your best bet for non-casino nightlife is the large Stars 'N' Bars on the quai Antoine 1er, packed out on Fridays and Saturdays, with a lively club upstairs, or the ubiquitous Irish pub, McCarthy's, 7 rue du Portier, for Guinness and occasional live music.

Menton

Of all the Côte d'Azur resorts, MENTON – the warmest and most Italianate, being right on the border – is the one that retains an atmosphere of aristocratic tourism. It got its first boost as a resort in 1861 when a British doctor, James Henry Bennet, published a treatise on the benefits of Menton's mild winter climate to tuberculosis sufferers, and soon thousands of well-heeled invalids were flocking to the town in the vain hope of a cure. Menton glories chiefly in its climate and year-round lemon crops. It's ringed by protective mountains, so hardly a whisper of wind disturbs this suntrap of a city; you'll notice the difference in winter, when you'll need a change of clothes between here and the exposed central resorts.

Arrival and information

Roquebrune and Cap Martin merge into Menton along the three-kilometre shore of the Baie du Soleil. The modern town is arranged around three main streets parallel to the promenade du Soleil. The gare SNCF is on the top one, boulevard Albert-1er, from which a short walk to the left as you come out brings you to the north-south avenue de Verdun and avenue Boyer divided by the Jardins Biovès – central location for citrus sculptures during February's Fête du Citron. The tourist office is at 8 av Boyer (mid-June to mid-Sept daily 9am–7pm; mid-Sept to mid-June Mon–Sat 8.30am–12.30pm & 2–6pm; ☎04.92.41.76.76, www.villedementon.com), in the Palais de l'Europe; the building was once a casino, but now hosts various cultural activities and art exhibitions.

The gare routière and the urban bus station are between the continuation of the two avenues north of the train line on the avenue de Sospel. All the local bus lines (€1) pass through the gare routière. The district of Garavan, further east again, is the most exclusive residential area and overlooks the marina.

Accommodation

Menton is no less popular than the other major resorts, so in summer you should reserve accommodation in advance. The tourist office won't make reservations for you, though they will tell you where there are rooms free.

Hotels

L'Aiglon 7 av de la Madonna ☎04.93.57.55.55, www.hotelaliglon.net. Spacious rooms in a nineteenth-century residence surrounded by a large garden. 7

Beauregard 10 rue Albert-1er ☎04.93.28.63.63, ☎04.93.28.63.79. Traditionally furnished rooms and a relaxed atmosphere. 3

Moderne 1 cours George-V ☎04.93.57.20.02, www.hotel-moderne-menton.com. Good-value modern, central hotel; many rooms have balconies. 4

M. Paul Gazzano 151 rte de Castellar ☎04.93.57.39.73. Chambres d'hôte 2km from Menton; a delightful house with a terrace looking down over the wooded slopes to the sea. 4
Napoléon 29 porte de France, Garavan ☎04.93.35.89.50, www.napoleon-menton.com. Elegantly modern seafront hotel with pool and garden. Mountain or sea views from the rooms. 7

Hostel and campsite

HI hostel plateau St-Michel ☎04.93.35.93.14, www.fuaj.org. Up a gruelling flight of steps (signposted Camping St-Michel) from the northern side of the railway to the east of the station, or take bus #6 from the gare routière (stop “Camping St-Michel”). 10pm curfew. Reception 7–10am & 5–10pm. Closed Nov–Jan. €15.60.

Camping St-Michel rte des Ciappes ☎ 04.93.35.81.23, ☎ 04.93.57.12.35. Reasonably priced campsite in the hills above the town, with plenty of shade and good views; follow directions for youth hostel. Closed Nov–March except for Fête du Citron. €17.75 per tent.

The Town

The promenade du Soleil runs along the pebbly beachfront of the Baie du Soleil, stretching from the quai Napoléon-III past the casino towards Roque-brune. The most diverting building on the front is a seventeenth-century fort by the quai Napoléon-III south of the old port, now the Musée Jean Cocteau (daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; €3), set up by the artist himself. It contains pictures of his Mentonaise lovers in the Inamorati series, a collection of delightful Fantastic Animals and the tapestry of Judith and Holofernes telling the sequence of seduction, assassination and escape. There are also photographs, poems, ceramics and a portrait by his friend Picasso.

As the quai bends around the western end of the Baie de Garavan from the Cocteau museum, a long flight of black-and-white pebbled steps leads up into the vieille ville to the Parvis St-Michel, an attractive Italianate square hosting concerts during the summer and giving a good view out over the bay. The frontage of the Église St-Michel (Mon–Fri 10am–noon & 3–5.15pm) proclaims its Baroque supremacy in perfect pink-and-yellow proportions, and a few more steps up to another square will reward you with the beautiful facade of the chapel of the Pénitents-Blancs (Mon & Wed 3–5pm) in apricot-and-white marble, with pastel campaniles and disappearing stairways between long-lived houses. The cemetery, at the top of the old town on the site once occupied by the town’s château, is hauntingly sad – many of the young foreign tuberculosis sufferers who ended their days in Menton are buried here – but also bewitchingly beautiful, with imposing, crumbly tombs and lovely views along the coast into Italy.

In the middle of the modern town, the Salles des Mariages (Mon–Fri 8.30am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; €1.50) or registry office, forms part of the Hôtel de Ville on place Ardoiono and was decorated in inimitable style by Jean Cocteau in 1957.

On avenue de la Madone, at the other end of the modern town, an impressive collection of paintings from the Middle Ages to the twentieth century can be seen in the Palais Carnolès (daily except Tues 10am–noon & 2–6pm; free; bus #3), the old summer residence of the princes of Monaco. Of the early works, the Madonna and Child with St Francis by Louis Bréa is exceptional. The most recent include canvases by Graham Sutherland, who spent some of his last years in Menton.

If it’s cool enough, the gardens of Garavan’s villas make a change from shingle beaches. The best is Les Colombières, just north of boulevard de Garavan, but it’s privately owned (check for information on occasional guided visits with the tourist office). Designed by the artist Ferdinand Bac between 1918 and 1927, there are staircases screened by cypresses, balustrades to lean against for the soaring views through pines and olive trees out to sea, fountains, statues and a frescoed swimming pool. Alternatively, try the Jardin Exotique Val Rameh (daily except Tues: April–Sept 10am–12.30pm & 3.30–6.30pm; Oct–March 10am–12.30pm & 2–5pm; €5) below boulevard de Garavan or Fontana Rosa (guided visits Friday at 10am, €5) on avenue Blasco-Ibañez, the former home of the Spanish author Vicente Blasco-Ibañez and bright with ceramic decoration. From here it's a short walk up rue Webb-Ellis and chemin Wallaya behind the Garavan gare SNCF to the villa Isola Bella, the former home of author Katherine Mansfield, though it is not open to the public.

Eating and drinking

Menton's restaurants tend towards the informal and touristy; the pedestrianized rue St-Michel is promising ground for cheap eats. Much fancier is the modern Mediterranean fare at the Hotel Ambassadeurs' elegant restaurant gastronomique, Le Louvre (2 rue du Louvre; ☎ 04.93.28.75.75), with a €35 lunch menu. Down on the port at 15 quai Bonaparte, La Lyre (☎ 04.93.35.38.16) serves excellent calamares and other Italian dishes from around €11.50. Menton also has an excellent Moroccan restaurant, Le Darkoum, 23 rue St-Michel (☎ 04.92.07.34.72), offering plats from around €12.

Travel details

Trains

Cannes to: Antibes (approx. every 20min peak time; 10–15min); Biot (every 40–50min; 18min); Cagnes-sur-Mer (every 25–50min; 20min); Cros-de-Cagnes (every 40–50min; 30min); Golfe Juan-Vallauris (every 40–50min; 7min); Juan-les-Pins (every 25–50min; 11min); Marseille (approx. every 30min–1hr; 2hr); Nice (approx. every 20min peak time; 40min); St-Raphaël (every 30min–1hr; 35min–1hr 5min); Villeneuve-Loubet-Plage (every 40–50min; 22min).

Marseille to: Aix (approx. every 30min–1hr; 40min); Arles (16–22 daily; 50min); Avignon (8–13 daily; 1hr 15min); Bandol (17–30 daily; 37–42 min); Cannes (15–21 daily; 2hr 5 min–2hr 20min); Cassis (16–29 daily; 22min); Cavaillon (2–4 daily; 55min–1hr 15min); Hyères (1–4 daily; 1hr 15min–1hr 30min); L'Estaque (10–20 daily; 10–20min); La Ciotat (18–31 daily; 30min); La Seyne-Six Fours (16–27 daily; 52min); Les Arcs-Draguignan (8–16 daily; 1hr 20min–2hr); Lyon (5–12 daily; 3hr 30min); Menton (1–2 daily; 3hr 20min); Nice (14–20 daily; 2hr 20min–2hr 45min); Ollioules-Sanary (16–27 daily; 50min); Paris (TGV: 10–22 daily; 3hr 15min); St-Cyr/Les Lecques (16–27 daily; 35min); St-Raphaël (14–21 daily; 1hr 30min–1hr 45min); Salon (2–3 daily; 45–55min); Tarascon (2 daily; 1hr); Toulon (every 20min at peak times; 40min–1hr 3min).

Nice to: Annot (4 daily; 1hr 55min); Beaulieu (every 15–30min; 12min); Breil-sur-Roya (6 daily; 1hr 5min); Cannes (every 10–35min; 25–40min) Cap d'Ail (every 35min–1hr; 20min); Cap Martin-Roquebrune (every 35 min–1hr; 30min); Digne (4 daily; 3hr 16min); Entrevaux (4 daily; 1hr 35min); Èze-sur-Mer (every 35min–1hr; 15min); L'Escarène (6 daily; 40min); Marseille (6 daily; 2hr 24min); Menton (every 15–35min; 25–40min); Monaco (every 15–35min; 20–25min); Peillon (6 daily; 25min); Puget-Théniers (4 daily; 1hr 26min); St-Raphaël (frequent; 1hr–1hr 20min); Sospel (6 daily; 50min); Tende (3 daily; 1hr 50min); Touët-sur-Var (4 daily; 1hr 14min); Villars-sur-Var (4 daily; 1hr 5min); Villefranche (every 15–55min; 9min).

St-Raphaël to: Boulouris (approx every 1–2hr; 4min); Cannes (every 10min–1hr 5min; 30–45min); Nice (every 10min–1hr 5min; 45min–1hr 22min).

Toulon to: Hyères (9 daily; 20–25min); Marseille (every 20min–1hr; 40min–1hr); Paris (3 daily; 3hr 50min).

Buses

Antibes to: Biot (hourly; 35–40min); Cannes (every 20min; 30–35min); Juan-les-Pins (every 20–30min; 8min); Nice (every 20min; 45min–1hr 10min); Nice Airport (every 20min; 20–45min).

Cannes to: Antibes (every 20min; 25–35min); Cagnes (every 20min; 50min–1hr); Grasse (every 20min; 40–50min); La Napoule (every 15–45min; 40min); Nice (every 20min; 1hr 20min–1hr 35min); Nice Airport (every 20min; 1hr 5min–1hr 15min); St Raphaël (summer only: 7 daily, 1hr 10min); Vallauris (every 30min; 15min).

Grasse to: Cagnes (every 30–50min; 50min); Cannes (every 15–45min; 40min–1hr); Nice (every 30–50min; 1hr 25min); Vence (3 daily; 50–55min).

Hyères to: Bormes (approx hourly; 25min); La Croix-Valmer (8 daily; 1hr 15min); Le Lavandou (approx. hourly; 35min); Le Rayol (8 daily; 55min); St-Tropez (8 daily; 1hr 35min–1hr 45min); Toulon (every 15–45min; 35min–1hr 10min).

Le Lavandou to: Bormes (13 daily; 8–10min); Hyères (15 daily; 30min); La Croix-Valmer (8 daily; 45min); Le Rayol (8 daily; 20min); St-Tropez (8 daily; 1hr 15min); Toulon (15 daily; 1hr 5min–1hr 15min).

Marseille to: Aix (every 5min at peak times; 30–50min); Apt (1–2 daily; 2hr 15min); Barcelonnette (1–3 daily; 3hr 50min–4hr 50min); Carpentras (2–3 daily; 1hr 35min–2hr 20min); Cassis (7–14 daily; 40–50min); Digne (3–5 daily; 2hr 20min–2hr 50min); Grenoble (1 daily; 3hr 55min); La Ciotat (15 daily; 30–45min); Manosque (8–13 daily; 1hr 5min–1hr 30min); Salon (6 daily; 1hr 10min); Sisteron (3–5 daily; 2hr 10min–2hr 25min).

Menton to: Monaco (every 15min; 35min); Nice (every 15min; 1hr 30min); Sospel (3–5 daily; 35–45min).

Monaco to: Èze (every 15min; 17min); La Turbie (3–6 daily; 30min); Menton (every 15min; 45min); Nice (every 15min; 55min).

Nice to: Aix (3–5 daily; 2hr 15min–4hr 10min); Beaulieu (every 15min; 10–15min); Cagnes-sur-Mer (every 20min; 35–40min); Cannes (every 20min; 1hr 25min–1hr 55min); Cap d'Ail (every 15min; 30min); Digne (2 daily; 2hr 50min–3hr 25min); Èze-Village (14 daily; 20min); Grasse (every 30–45min; 1hr 10min–1hr 35min); Grenoble (1 daily; 7hr 15min); La Turbie (5 daily; 40min); Marseille (5 daily; 2hr 45min–4hr 30min); Menton (every 15min; 1hr 25min); Monaco (every 15min; 30–40min); Roquebrune (every 15min; 1hr); St-Paul (every 35–40min; 55min); Sisteron (2 daily; 3hr 30min–4hr 10min); Toulon (2 daily; 2hr 30min); Vence (every 20–35min; 1hr–1hr 10min); Ville-franche (every 15min; 10min).

St-Raphaël to: Cannes (summer only 7 daily; 1hr 10min); Cogolin (6 daily; 1hr 25min); Draguignan (3 daily; 1hr–1hr 20min); Fréjus (frequent; 20–30min); Grimaud (6 daily; 1hr–1hr 15min); La Foux (14 daily; 1hr 20min–1hr 35min); Nice Airport (4 daily; 1hr 15min); Ste-Maxime (15 daily; 40–50min); St-Tropez (14 daily; 1hr 30min–1hr 50min).

St-Tropez to: Bormes (6 daily; 1hr 5min–1hr 40min); Cogolin (4–5 daily; 20min); Gassin (2 weekly; 25min); Grimaud (5 daily; 30–40min); Hyères (8 daily; 1hr 30min–2hr); Hyères airport (1–2 daily; 1hr); La Croix-Valmer (9 daily; 20–25min); La Garde-Freinet (2 daily; 45min); Le Lavandou (9 daily; 55min–1hr 25min); Ramatuelle (4 daily; 37min); Ste-Maxime (approx hourly; 40–55min); St-Raphaël (approx hourly; 55min–2hr 10min); Toulon (9 daily; 2hr 5min–2hr 30min).

Toulon to: Aix (5 daily; 1hr 15min); Hyères (every 15min–1hr; 50min–1hr 10min); La Croix-Valmer (8 daily; 1hr 50min–2hr 5min); Le Lavandou (15 daily; 1hr–1hr 25min); Nice (2 daily; 2hr 30min); St-Tropez (8 daily; 1hr 55min–2hr 15min).

Vence to: Cagnes (every 20–30min; 15–35min); Nice (every 15–30min; 50min); St-Paul-de-Vence (approx every 20min–1hr; 5–10min)

Ferries

For îles d'Hyères and îles de Lérins services, see box on p.1143 & p.1168.

Marseille to: Corsica (1–5 daily; 12–14hr).

Nice to: Corsica (summer 2–8 daily; winter 1 weekly; 3hr–5hr 30min).

Toulon to: Corsica (1–2 daily 5hr 45min–10hr).

16

Corsica

16

CORSICA

- * Plage de Saleccia Soft white shell sand, turquoise water and barely a building in sight. See p.1220
- * Calvi Corsica's hallmark resort, framed by snow peaks and a spectacular blue gulf. See p.1223
- * The GR20 Gruelling 170km footpath, which takes in spectacular mountain scenery – but is only for the fit. See p.1226
- * Girolata The only fishing village on the island still inaccessible by road, set against a backdrop of red cliffs and dense maquis. See p.1228
- * Les Calanches de Piana A mass of porphyry, eroded into dogs' heads, witches and devils. See p.1231
- * Apéritif at L'Hôtel Les Roches Rouges Sublime sea views and a fin-de-siècle ambience make this the perfect spot for a muscat corse. See p.1232
- * Filitosa menhirs Among the Western Mediterranean's greatest archeological treasures, unique for their carved faces. See p.1244
- * Boat trips from Bonifacio Catch a navette from the harbour visited by Odysseus for imposing views of the famous chalk cliffs and haute ville. See p.1253
- * Corte A nationalist stronghold, with loads of eighteenth-century charm and a rugged mountain setting. See p.1258

△ Calvi

Corsica

Over two million people visit Corsica each year, drawn by the mild climate and by some of the most diverse landscapes in all Europe. Nowhere in the Mediterranean has beaches finer than the island's perfect half-moon bays of white sand and transparent water, or seascapes more dramatic than the red porphyry Calanches of the west coast. Even though the annual visitor influx now exceeds the island's population seven or eight times over, tourism hasn't spoiled the place: there are a few resorts, but overdevelopment is rare and high-rise blocks are confined to the main towns.

Bastia, capital of the north, was the principal Genoese stronghold, and its fifteenth-century citadelle has survived almost intact. Of the island's two large towns, this is the more purely Corsican, and commerce rather than tourism is its main concern. Also relatively undisturbed, the northern Cap Corse harbours inviting sandy coves and fishing villages such as Macinaggio and Centuri-Port. Within a short distance of Bastia, the fertile region of the Nebbio contains a scattering of churches built by Pisan stoneworkers, the prime example being the cathedral of Santa Maria Assunta at the appealingly chic little port of St-Florent.

To the west of here, L'Île-Rousse and Calvi, the latter graced with an impressive citadelle and fabulous sandy beach, are major targets for holiday-makers. The spectacular Scandola nature reserve to the southwest of Calvi is most easily visited by boat from the tiny resort of Porto, from where walkers can also strike into the wild Gorges de Spelunca. Corte, at the heart of Corsica, is the best base for exploring the mountains and gorges of the interior which form part of the Parc Naturel Régional that runs almost the entire length of the island.

Sandy beaches and rocky coves punctuate the west coast all the way down to Ajaccio, Napoleon's birthplace and the island's capital, where pavement cafés and palm-lined boulevards are thronged with tourists in summer. Slightly fewer make it to nearby Filitosa, greatest of the many prehistoric sites scattered across the south. Propriano, the town perhaps most transformed by the tourist boom, lies close to stern Sartène, former seat of the wild feudal lords who once ruled this region and still the quintessential Corsican town.

More megalithic sites are to be found south of Sartène on the way to Bonifacio, a comb of ancient buildings perched atop furrowed white cliffs at the southern tip of the island. Equally popular Porto-Vecchio provides a springboard for excursions to the amazing beaches of the south. The eastern plain has less to boast of, but the Roman site at Aléria is worth a visit for its excellent museum.

The food of Corsica

It's the herbs – thyme, marjoram, basil, fennel and rosemary – of the maquis (the dense, scented scrub covering lowland Corsica) that lend the island's cuisine its distinctive aromas.

You'll find the best charcuterie in the hills of the interior, where pork is smoked and cured in the cold cellars of village houses – it's particularly tasty in Castagniccia, where wild pigs feed on the chestnuts which were once the staple diet of the locals. Here you can also taste chestnut fritters (fritelli a gaju frescu) and chestnut porridge (pulenta) sprinkled with sugar or eau de vie. Brocciu, a soft mozzarella-like cheese made with ewe's milk, is found everywhere on the island, forming the basis for many dishes, including omelettes and cannelloni. Fromage corse is also very good – a hard cheese made in the sheep- and goat-rearing central regions, where cabrettu à l'istrettu (kid stew) is a speciality.

Game – mainly stews of hare and wild boar but also roast woodcock, partridge and wood pigeon – features throughout the island's mountain and forested regions. Here blackbirds (merles) are made into a fragrant pâté, and eel and trout are fished from the unpolluted rivers. Sea fish like red mullet (rouget), bream (loup de mer) and a great variety of shellfish is eaten along the coast – the best crayfish (langouste) comes from around the Golfe de St-Florent, whereas oysters (huîtres) and mussels (moules) are a speciality of the eastern plain.

Corsica produces some excellent, and still little-known, wines, mostly from indigenously vinestocks that yield distinctive, herb-tinged aromas. Names to look out for include: Domaine Torracchia (Porto-Vecchio); Domaine Fiumicicoli (Sartène); Domaine Saparale (Sartène); Domaine Gentile (Patrimonio); Domaine Leccia (Patrimonio); and Venturi-Pieretti (Cap Corse). In addition to the usual whites, reds and rosés, the latter also makes the sweet muscat for which Cap Corse was renowned in previous centuries. Another popular aperitif is the drink known as Cap Corse, a fortified wine flavoured with quinine and herbs. Note that tap water is particularly good quality in Corsica, coming from the fresh mountain streams.

16

CORSICA

Some history

Set on the western Mediterranean trade routes, Corsica has always been of strategic and commercial appeal. Greeks, Carthaginians and Romans came in successive waves, driving native Corsicans into the interior. The Romans were ousted by Vandals, and for the following thirteen centuries the island was attacked, abandoned, settled and sold as a nation-state, with generations of islanders fighting against foreign government. In 1768 France bought Corsica from Genoa, but over two hundred years of French rule have had a limited effect and the island's Baroque churches, Genoese fortresses, fervent Catholic rituals and a Tuscan-influenced indigenous language and cuisine show a more profound affinity with Italy.

Corsica's uneasy relationship with the mainland has worsened in recent decades. Economic neglect and the French government's reluctance to encourage Corsican language and culture spawned a nationalist movement in the early 1970s, whose clandestine armed wing – the FLNC (Fronte di Liberazione Nazionale di a Corsica) – has been engaged ever since in a bloody conflict with the central government. The violence seldom affects tourists but signs of the “troubles” are everywhere, from the graffiti-sprayed road signs to the bullet holes plastering public buildings.

Relations between the island's hard-line nationalists and Paris may be perennially fraught, but there's little support among ordinary islanders for the armed struggle, and still less for total independence. Corsica is bankrolled by $480

CORSICA

Corsica practicalities

Getting to Corsica

One French company, SNCM – along with its freight subsidiary CMN – dominates ferry services to Corsica. In addition, an Italian operator, Corsica Ferries, has super-fast services from Nice to Calvi and Bastia. Crossings take between seven and twelve hours on a regular ferry, and from two and a half to three and a half hours on the giant hydrofoil (“NGV”, or navire à grande vitesse). The cost depends on the season, with the lowest between October and May; during July and August fares quadruple. A one-way crossing costs anything from €15 to €120 per person, plus €50 to €250 per vehicle, depending on the date of the journey.

Regular ferries run all year round to various ports around the island from Marseille, Toulon and Nice. You can book SNCM and CNM tickets via their central reservation desk (☎08.36.67.95.00, 🌐www.sncm.fr). For Corsica Ferries contact ☎04.92.00.42.93, 🌐www.corsicaferries.fr. Note that reservations are essential for journeys in July and August.

Direct flights to Corsica depart from most major French cities with charters cheaper than scheduled services. The largest operator is Air France (☎08.20.82.08.20, 🌐www.airfrance.fr), whose fourteen-day advance fares from Paris rise to €450 return in July and August, dropping to €160 out of season. Compagnie Corse Méditerranée (☎08.02.80.28.02, 🌐www.ccm-airlines.com) offers routes from a range of mainland airports. Their fares from the Côte d’Azur vary little: ranging from €125–260 return in low/high season.

Getting around

With public transport woefully inadequate, the most convenient way of getting around Corsica is by rental car. Hertz (☎04.95.23.57.04, 🌐www.hertz.fr), Avis (☎04.95.23.56.90, 🌐www.avis.fr), Europcar (☎04.95.30.09.50, 🌐www.europcar.com) and Rent-a-Car (☎04.95.51.34.45, 🌐www.rentacar.fr) all have offices at airports and towns across the island, allowing you to collect and return vehicles in different places. If your budget won’t stretch to a week (€200–350 for a budget depending on the agency), it’s worth renting for a couple of days to explore the back roads of the interior.

Bus services are fairly frequent between Bastia, Corte and Ajaccio, and along the east coast from Bastia to Porto-Vecchio and Bonifacio. Elsewhere in the island, services tend to peter out in the winter months or are relatively infrequent. Getting accurate timetable information for bus services can also be difficult – the best way to check information is at a tourist office or online at 🌐www.corsicabus.org.

Corsica’s diminutive train, the Micheline or Trinighellu (little train; 🌐www.ter-sncf.com), rattles through the mountains from Ajaccio to Bastia via Corte, with a branch line running northwest to Calvi. Despite having had a major upgrade recently, it’s no quicker than the bus; the route does, however, take you through some stupendous scenery. A good investment if you intend to use the train a lot is the Carte Zoom, which gives seven consecutive days of travel, plus free use of the station consignes (left luggage rooms), for €48.

Motorcycles and scooters can be rented at several towns and resorts, but cost as much as cars. A 125cc machine, for example, will set you back around €50–60 per day (€230–275 per week), plus a deposit of €750 or more. Remember to check your insurance policy to make sure you have adequate cover – Corsican roads are among the most lethal in Europe.

million of direct subsidies annually, with a further $1.3 billion to bolster its bloated bureaucracy. Another $800 million has poured in from the EU since 1994, making Corsica the most heavily subsidized region of France. Moreover,

Corsicans are exempt from social security contributions and the island as a whole enjoys preferential tax status, while one third of the permanent population is an employee of the state. Increasingly, nationalist violence is seen as biting the hand that feeds it. Opinion, however, remains divided on the best way forward for Corsica. In 2003, an end to the troubles seemed tantalizingly close as Chirac's administration, despite strong opposition from the Gaullist Right, proposed a new package of devolutionary measures and placed them before the island in a referendum. But the initiative was narrowly defeated, a setback many commentators have attributed less to lack of support for greater autonomy than to the PR bungle that followed the arrest of Corsica's most wanted terrorist on the eve of the vote. The triumphalist tone adopted by Paris following the capture of Yvan Colonna, wanted for the murder of the island's former governor, provoked a patriotic backlash that may well have been decisive.

Interior Minister Nicholas Sarkozy responded by condemning the result as a "wasted opportunity", and promptly ordered a crackdown on corruption and organized crime on the island. Among the highest profile casualties has been the nationalist paramilitary honcho, Charles Pieri who, along with 21 associates (including the president of Bastia's premiership football club, SCB), was alleged to have managed a huge extortion and money-laundering racket.

Pieri's arrest provoked a predictably angry response from the FLNC-U (currently the most potent paramilitary force on the island). The rate of bombings, machine gun and rocket attacks on State symbols and second homes soared through 2004 and 2005, as Corsica seemed to return to the bad old days of the mid-1990s.

More recently, a strike called by the French transport union to oppose government plans to privatize the ailing SNCM ferry company made national headlines after Corsican sailors commandeered a ferry, the Pascal Paoli, to publicize their objections. Special forces were called in to reclaim the vessel, amid riots and strikes on the dockside. Eventually, to avert further civil unrest, Sarkozy capitulated and released the sailors without charge, prompting widespread jubilation across the island.

The administration's policy regarding the long-term future of Corsica, meanwhile, remains more rudderless than ever.

Bastia and around

The dominant tone of Corsica's most successful commercial town, BASTIA, is one of charismatic dereliction, as the city's industrial zone is spread onto the lowlands to the south, leaving the centre of town with plenty of aged charm. The old quarter, known as the Terra Vecchia, comprises a tightly packed network of haphazard streets, flamboyant Baroque churches and lofty tenements, their crumbling golden-grey walls set against a backdrop of maquis-covered hills. Terra Nova, the historic district on the opposite side of the old port, is a tidier area that's now Bastia's trendy quarter.

The city dates from Roman times, when a base was set up at Biguglia to the south, beside a freshwater lagoon, or étang. Little remains of the former colony, but the site merits a day-trip for the well-preserved pair of Pisan churches at Marana, rising from the southern fringes of Poretta airport. Bastia began to thrive under the Genoese, when wine was exported to the Italian mainland from Porto Cardo, forerunner of Bastia's Vieux Port, or Terra Vecchia. Despite the fact that in 1811 Napoleon appointed Ajaccio capital of the island, initiating

BASTIA

San Martino di l'uta Via, Corniche & St-Florent
 Corsica Bastia and around
 Oratoire de Monserato

ACCOMMODATION

L'Alivi	A
Best Western	E
Central	G
Cyrnéa	B
Maison
Sainte-Hyacinth	C
Posta-Vecchia	H
Riviera	D
Les Voyageurs	F

EATING & DRINKING

Le Bouchon	6
A Casarelle	7
Chez Serge Raugi	1
La Citadelle	8
Le Palais des Glaces	2
Café des Palmiers	3
La Table du Marché	4
U Tianu	5

a rivalry between the two towns which exists to this day, Bastia soon established a stronger trading position with mainland France. The Nouveau Port, created in 1862 to cope with the increasing traffic with France and Italy, became the mainstay of the local economy, exporting chiefly agricultural products from Cap Corse, Balagne and the eastern plain.

Arrival, information and accommodation

Bastia's Poretta airport (☎04.95.54.54.54, 🌐www.bastia.aeroport.fr) is 16km south of town, just off the Route Nationale (N193). Shuttle buses into the centre coincide with flights, dropping passengers at the north side of the main square, place St-Nicolas, and terminating at the train station for €8 (one way). Taxis from the airport cost €40–45. Ferries arrive at the Nouveau Port, just a five-minute walk from the centre of town. Bastia doesn't have a proper bus station, which can cause confusion, with services arriving and departing from different locations around the north side of the main square. Buses from Bonifacio, Porto-Vecchio and the east coast stop outside the travel agents opposite the post office (PTT) on avenue Maréchal-Sébastieni, whereas those coming from Calvi pull in further up the same street outside the train station (☎04.95.32.80.61). Services from Ajaccio, Corte, St-Florent and Cap Corse work out of a small square, north of avenue Maréchal-Sébastieni – which, confusingly, is referred to as the gare routière, even though it's little more than a roadside stop. A summary of bus times and departure points is available at the tourist office, at the north end of place St-Nicolas (June to mid-Sept daily 8am–8pm; mid-Sept to May Mon–Sat 8am–6pm, Sun 9am–1pm; ☎04.95.54.20.40, 🌐www.bastia-tourisme.com).

Although you're usually guaranteed to find somewhere to stay in Bastia, the choice of hotels is not great, particularly at the budget end of the scale. Most of the classier places line the road to Cap Corse north of the port; the more basic ones are found in the centre of town, within striking distance of place St-Nicolas. Wherever you plan to stay, it's essential to reserve well in advance.

There's also a handful of campsites located outside the town. The most convenient if you're relying on public transport are at Miomo, 5km north (buses every 30min Mon–Sat, hourly Sun, until 7.30pm, from the top of place St-Nicolas opposite the tourist office).

Hotels

L'Alivi rte du Cap, Ville Pietrabugno

☎04.95.55.00.00, 🌐www.hotel-alivi.com. Large three-star, 3km north of the city, with a pool, car park and private access to the beach. The rooms are light, spacious and sea-facing with glorious views from their terraces. 5

Best Western av Zuccarelli ☎04.95.55.05.10, 🌐www.bestwestern-corsica-hotels.com. Hardly the most characterful option, but rates are highly competitive, the location (on the hill above town) attractive, and rooms spacious for the price.

Central a/c. 5

 Central 3 rue Miot ☎04.95.31.82.40,

🌐www.centralhotel.fr. Just off the south-west corner of place St-Nicolas. Attractively decorated rooms, a welcoming patronne and the smell of fresh bread wafting from the boulangerie next door make this by far the most pleasant and best-value place to stay in the centre. 4

Cyrmea Pietrana ☎04.95.31.41.71,

☎04.95.31.72.65. Congenial little two-star, 4km out of town. All rooms are en suite, but only some overlook the water. You also get the run of a little garden strewn with sun loungers, which leads to a secluded pebble beach. 5

Maison Sainte-Hyacinth 8km up the eastern Cape (3km inland from Miomo) ☎04.95.33.28.29. Bright, modern, comfortable en-suite rooms (€45–60, or bunk-bedded “box” dorms from €13) in a convent staffed by three friendly Polish nuns and their helpers. There's also a relaxing café-bar and refectory offering simple, inexpensive meals, all set in three acres of attractively landscaped gardens. Complimentary shuttle bus from Bastia available if you book in advance. Open June–Sept. 1–3

Posta-Vecchia quai-des-Martyrs-de-la-Libération

☎ 04.95.32.32.38, 🌐 www.hotel-postavecchia.com. The only hotel in the Vieux Port, and good value, with views across the sea from its (pricier) rooms at the front. Smaller, cheaper options are in the old block across the lane. 4

Riviera 1bis rue du Nouveau-Port ☎ 04.95.31.07.16, 🌐 www.corsehotelryiviera.com. Basic, and a bit noisy but convenient for the harbour. 4

Les Voyageurs 9 av Maréchal-Sébastien ☎ 04.95.34.90.80, 🌐 www.hotel-lesvoyageurs.com. Swish three-star opposite the post office, done out in pale yellow and with two categories of rooms: the larger, pricier ones have baths instead of showers. 5

Campsites

Casanova Miomo, 5km north along the rte du Cap ☎ 04.95.33.91.42. Larger and greener than its neighbour, but fractionally more expensive, and with a bar. Open April–Oct.

Les Orangers Miomo, 5km north along the rte du Cap ☎ 04.95.33.24.09. Tiny site crammed onto narrow terraces, just off the main road. The cheaper of the pair in this suburb. Open April–Oct.

San Damiano Pineto, 10km south of Bastia ☎ 04.95.33.68.02, 🌐 www.campingsandamiano.com. Huge, pricey site 5km south of the city and right behind the beach, with top facilities. Hourly buses run out here from the gare routière in season. Open April–Oct.

The Town

Bastia is not especially large, and all its sights can easily be seen in a day without the use of a car. The spacious place St-Nicolas is the obvious place to get your bearings: open to the sea and lined with shady trees and cafés, it's the main focus of town life. Running parallel to it on the landward side are boulevard Paoli and rue César-Campinchi, the two main shopping streets, but all Bastia's historic sights lie within Terra Vecchia, the old quarter immediately south of place St-Nicolas, and Terra Nova, the area surrounding the Citadelle. Tucked away below the imposing, honey-coloured bastion is the much-photographed Vieux Port, with its boat-choked marina and crumbling eighteenth-century tenement buildings. By contrast, the Nouveau Port, north of the place, is bland and modern, with little of note other than restaurants, bars and a self-service laundry.

Terra Vecchia

From place St-Nicolas the main route into Terra Vecchia is rue Napoléon, a narrow street with some ancient offbeat shops and a pair of sumptuously decorated chapels on its east side. The first of these, the Oratoire de St-Roch, is a Genoese Baroque extravagance, reflecting the wealth of the rising bourgeoisie. Built in 1604, it has walls of finely carved wooden panelling and a magnificent gilt organ.

A little further along stands the Oratoire de L'Immaculée Conception, built in 1611 as the showplace of the Genoese in Corsica, who used it for state occasions. Overlooking a pebble mosaic of a sun, the austere facade belies the flamboyant interior, where crimson velvet draperies, a gilt and marble ceiling, frescoes and crystal chandeliers create the ambience of an opera house.

Just behind the oratoire, the place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville is commonly known as place du Marché after the lively farmers' market that takes place here each morning, from around 7am until 2pm. Dominating the south end of the square is the church of St-Jean-Baptiste, an immense ochre edifice that dominates the Vieux Port. Its twin campaniles are Bastia's distinguishing feature, but the interior is less than impressive. Built in 1636, the church was restored in the eighteenth century in a hideous Rococo overkill of multicoloured marble. Decorating the walls are a few unremarkable Italian paintings from Napoleon's uncle, Cardinal Fesch, an avid collector of Renaissance art.

Around the church extends the oldest part of Bastia, a secretive zone of dark alleys, vaulted passageways and seven-storey houses. By turning right outside and following rue St-Jean you'll come to rue Général-Carbuccia, the heart of Terra Vecchia. Corsican independence leader Pascal Paoli once lived here, at no. 7, and Balzac stayed briefly at no. 23 when his ship got stuck in Corsica on the way to Sardinia. Set in a small square at the end of the road is the church of St-Charles, a Jesuit chapel whose wide steps provide an evening meeting place for the locals; opposite stands the Maison de Caraffa, an elegant house with a strikingly graceful balcony.

The Vieux Port is easily the most photogenic part of town: soaring houses seem to bend inwards towards the water and peeling plaster and boat hulls glint in the sun, while the south side remains in the shadow of the great rock that supports the citadelle. Site of the original Roman settlement of Porto Cardo, the Vieux Port later bustled with Genoese traders, but since the building of the ferry terminal and commercial docks to the north it has become a backwater. The most atmospheric time to come here is early evening, when huge flocks of swifts swirl in noisy clouds above the harbour. Things liven up after sunset, with the glow and noise from the waterside bars and restaurants, which continue round the north end of the port along the wide quai des-Martyrs-de-la-Libération, where live bands clank out pop covers for the tourists in summer.

Terra Nova

The military and administrative core of old Bastia, Terra Nova (or the citadelle) has a distinct air of affluence, its lofty apartments now colonized by Bastia's yuppies. The area is focused on place du Donjon, which gets its name from the squat round tower that formed the nucleus of Bastia's fortifications and was used by the Genoese to incarcerate Corsican patriots – Sampiero Corso (the nationalist hero who mounted an insurrection against the Genoese in 1657) was held in the dungeon for four years in the early sixteenth century.

Facing the place du Donjon is the impressive fourteenth-century Palais des Gouverneurs. With its great round tower, arcaded courtyard and pristine peach-coloured paintwork, this building has a distinctly Moorish feel and was built for the governor and local bishop during the town's Genoese heyday. When the French transferred the capital to Ajaccio it became a prison, then was destroyed during a British attack of 1794 (in which an ambitious young captain named Horatio Nelson played a decisive part). The subsequent rebuilding was not the last, as parts of it were blown up by American B-52s in 1943 – on the day after Corsica's liberation, when thousands of Bastiais were celebrating in the streets. Extensive restoration work – due for completion in 2007 – has regained something of the building's former grandeur. Part of the palace is given over to the Musée d'Ethnographie (daily: June 9am–6.30pm; July & Aug 9am–8pm; Sept–May 9am–noon & 2–6pm; last entry 45min before closing time; admission around €5), which presents the history of Corsica from prehistoric times to the present day. Its vaulted chambers contain some fascinating historical tidbits, including a diminutive Roman sarcophagus decorated with hunting scenes, busts of famous Corsicans and an original 1755 Flag of Independence, with its distinctive Moorish emblem.

Back in place du Donjon, if you cross the square and follow rue Notre-Dame you come out at the Église Ste-Marie. Built in 1458 and overhauled in the seventeenth century, it was the cathedral of Bastia until 1801, when the bishopric was transferred to Ajaccio. Inside, the church's principal treasure is a small silver statue of the Virgin (housed in a glass case on the right wall as you face the altar), which is carried through Terra Nova and Terra Vecchia on August 15, the Festival of the Assumption. Immediately behind Ste-Maire in rue de l'Évêché stands the Oratoire Sainte-Croix, a sixteenth-century chapel decorated in Louis XV style, with lashings of rich blue paint and gilt scrollwork. It houses another holy item, the Christ des Miracles, a blackened oak crucifix much venerated by Bastia's fishermen, which in 1428 was discovered floating in the sea surrounded by a luminous haze. A festival celebrating the miracle takes place in Bastia on May 3, when local fishing families carry it around Terra Nova. Beyond the church, the narrow streets open out to the secluded place Guasco, where a few benches offer the chance of a rest before descending back into the fray.

L'Oratoire de Monserato

One of Bastia's most extraordinary monuments, the Oratoire de Monserato, lies a pleasant two-kilometre walk from the town centre. From Terra Nova, leave the citadelle through its main (northern) gateway next to the Palais des Gouverneurs and follow the chemin des Philippines (a stepped lane starting on the opposite side of the main road) uphill for ten minutes. When you reach a road at the top turn left and keep going for another 300m until you see a lane leading left to the Oratoire. The building itself looks unremarkable from the outside, but its interior houses the much revered Scala Santa, a replica of the Holy Steps of the Basilica of Saint John of Lateran in Rome. Penitents who ascend it on their knees as far as its high altar may be cleansed, or so it is believed, of all sins, without the intercession of a priest. Only Rome, Lourdes and Fatima enjoy such a privilege, an anomaly dating from the First Empire when bishops and other prominent clerics who refused to accede to Napoleon's Concordat of 1801 were imprisoned in the citadelle. The townsfolk of Bastia complained bitterly about this rough treatment of such high-ranking clergy and were granted permission to host the priests in their own homes instead. Following Napoleon's demise, the liberated clergy then petitioned Rome to grant the town a special favour in recognition of its generosity, whence the Scala Santa.

16

CORSICA

Bastia and around

The beaches

Crowded with schoolchildren in the summer, the pebbly town beach in Bastia is only worth visiting if you're desperate for a swim. To reach it, go left at the flower shop on the main road south out of town, just beyond the citadelle. A more salubrious alternative is the long beach of L'Arinella at Montesoru, a further 1km along the same road, the beginning of a sandy shore that extends along the whole east coast. A bus to L'Arinella leaves from outside Café Riche on boulevard Paoli every twenty minutes; just get off at the last stop and cross the train line to the sea. There are a couple of sailing and windsurfing clubs here, and a bar.

Eating and drinking

Numerous pizza vans are scattered about town, evidence of a strong Italian influence that's also apparent in the predominance of pizzerias and pasta places in the Nouveau Port area. The town also boasts some excellent inexpensive restaurants serving Corsican specialities: the posh places on the quai des Martyrs do the best aziminu, a Corsican version of bouillabaisse. Most of the good restaurants are to be found around the Vieux Port and on the quai des Martyrs, with a sprinkling in the citadelle.

Drinking is a serious business in Bastia, with the Casanis pastis factory on the outskirts in Lupino making the town's favourite drink. There are many bars and cafés all over town, varying from the stark and brightly lit bars of Terra Vecchia, which are the haunt of old men, to the elegant, dimly lit cafés on place St-Nicolas, which entertain a younger, more lively clientele. For a more sedate atmosphere, boulevard Paoli and rue Campinchi are lined with chi-chi salons de thé offering elaborate creamy confections, local chestnut cake and doughnuts.

Bars and cafés

Le Bouchon 4bis rue St-Jean, Vieux Port.

Occupying a prime position on the quayside, this easy-going wine bar serves local and continental French wines by the glass (€4–6), as well as variously priced gastro-tapas on slate platters. Closed Wed & Sun.

Chez Serge Raugi 2bis rue Capanelle, off bd Général Graziani. Arguably Corsica's greatest ice-cream maker, with tables on a cramped pavement terrace or upstairs on an even smaller mezzanine floor. In winter, they also do a legendary chickpea tart to take away.

Café des Palmiers place St-Nicolas. One of the few cafés along this stretch, with delicious fresh pastries, attentive service and comfy wicker chairs that catch the sun at breakfast time.

Restaurants

A Casarelle 6 rue Sainte-Croix

☎ 04.95.32.02.32. Innovative Corsican-

French cuisine served on a terrace on the edge of the citadelle. The chef's specialities are traditional dishes of the Balagne, such as casgiate (nuggets of fresh cheese baked in fragrant chestnut leaves) or the rarely prepared storzapreti (balls of brocciu, spinach and herbs in tomato sauce). €25 per head for lunch, €33 for dinner. Closed Sat & Sun lunchtimes.

Listings

Bicycle and motorbike rental Locacycles, behind the Palais de Justice (☎ 04.95.32.30.64), rents bicycles by the day (€17) or for longer periods, as does Objectif Nature, rue Notre-Dame-de Lourdes (☎ 04.95.32.54.34, @obj-nature.ifrance.com).

The only place in Bastia offering motorbike rental is Toga Location, Port Toga, at the north side of the Nouveau Port (☎ 04.95.31.49.01), which has bikes from 125cc to 660cc. Rates range from €60 to €120 per day depending on the size of the machine.

Car rental ADA, 35 rue César-Campinchi

☎ 04.95.31.48.95, airport ☎ 04.95.54.55.44; Avis (Ollandini), 40 bd Paoli ☎ 04.95.31.95.64, airport ☎ 04.95.54.55.46; Europcar, 1 rue du Nouveau-Port ☎ 04.95.31.59.29, airport ☎ 04.95.30.09.50; Hertz, square St-Victor ☎ 04.95.31.14.24, airport

La Citadelle 6 rue du Dragon ☎ 04.95.31.44.70.

One of the finest places to eat on the island, in the heart of Terra Nova. Sumptuous French cuisine served in a cellar with mellow lighting and an old olive press in the corner. Prices are high (€35 for the three-course menu fixe, or around €45 per head à la carte without wine), but you get what you pay for.

Le Palais des Glaces place St-Nicolas

☎ 04.95.35.05.01. One of the few dependable lunch spots on the main square, frequented as much by Bastiais as visitors. Their good value €24 menu, served under swish awnings beneath the plane trees, often includes the house favourite: fish bruschettas.

La Table du Marché place du Marché

☎ 04.95.31.64.25. Elegant, old-fashioned lunch venue on the atmospheric market square, serving a popular €24 menu regional featuring local crayfish, east coast oysters and filets of St Pierre. Get there around midday for a seat on the terrace.

U Tianu 4 rue Rigo ☎ 04.95.31.36.67. Tiny, unpretentious, family-run restaurant with lots of atmosphere hidden in a narrow backstreet behind the Vieux Port. Their limited but excellent-value menus (€19–23) change daily but feature typical country dishes such as figatellu pâté, blackbird terrine, chickpeas with anchovies, sardines stuffed with brocciu, and fiadone soaked in home-made eau de vie.

☎ 04.95.30.05.00; Rent-a-Car, Poretta airport

☎ 04.95.54.55.11.

Ferries Corsica Ferries, 5bis, rue Chanoine-

Leschi ☎ 04.95.32.95.95, or at the gare maritime ☎ 04.95.32.95.94; MobyLines, Sarl Colonna D'Istria & Fils, 4 rue Luce de Casablanca, just behind the Nouveau Port ☎ 04.95.34.84.94; SNCM, Nouveau Port, BP 57 ☎ 04.95.54.66.99.

Internet Cyber@Cyber, near the post office on av Mar. Sébastiani; or CyberTaz South off the place St-Nicolas on cours Pierre-Angeli. Both charge around €3.50/hr.

Left Luggage At the time of writing, left luggage consignes at the ferry terminals and train stations were closed as a security precaution.

Post office av Maréchal-Sébastieni. Mon–Fri 8am–7pm, Sat 8am–noon.

La Marana, Mariana and the Étang de Biguglia

Traditionally the summer haunt of prosperous Bastia families, the sixteen-kilometre littoral known as LA MARANA lies a few kilometres south of Bastia.

The beach here offers shady pine woods, restaurants and bars, though the sea is quite polluted. The whole of this part of the coast is divided into holiday residences or sections of beach attached to bars, the latter freely open to the public.

Fed by the rivers Bevinco and Golo, the Étang de Biguglia is the largest lagoon in Corsica, and one of its best sites for rare migrant birds. In summer, reed and Cetti's warblers nest in the reeds, while in winter, Biguglia supports a resident community of grey herons, kingfishers, great-crested grebes, little grebes, water rails and various species of duck.

The Roman town of MARIANA, just south of Étang de Biguglia, can be approached by taking the turning for Poretta airport, 16km along the N193, or the more scenic coastal route through La Marana. It was founded in 93 BC as a military colony, but today's houses, baths and basilica are too ruined to be of great interest. It's only the square baptistry, with its remarkable mosaic floor decorated with dancing dolphins and fish looped around bearded figures representing the four rivers of paradise, that is worth seeking out.

Adjacent to Mariana stands the church of Santa Maria Assunta, known as La Canonica. Built in 1119 close to the old capital of Biguglia, it's the finest of around three hundred churches built by the Pisans in their effort to evangelize the island. Modelled on a Roman basilica, the perfectly proportioned edifice is decorated outside with Corinthian capitals plundered from the main Mariana site and with plates of Cap Corse marble, their delicate pink and yellow ochre hues fusing to stunning effect.

Marooned amid muddy fields about 300m to the south of La Canonica is another ancient church, San Parteo, built in the eleventh and twelfth centuries over the site of a pagan burial ground. A smaller edifice than La Canonica, it displays some elegant arcading and fine sculpture – on the south side, the door lintel is supported by two writhing beasts reaching to a central tree, a motif of oriental origins.

16

CORSICA

Cap Corse

Cap Corse

Until Napoléon III had a coach road built around Cap Corse in the nineteenth century, the promontory was effectively cut off from the rest of the island, relying on Italian maritime traffic for its income – hence its distinctive Tuscan dialect. Many Capicursini later left to seek their fortunes in the colonies of the Caribbean, which explains the distinctly ostentatious mansions, or palazzi, built by the successful émigrés (nicknamed “les Américains”) on their return. For all the changes brought by the modern world, Cap Corse still feels like a separate country, with wild flowers in profusion, vineyards and quiet, traditional fishing villages.

Forty kilometres long and only fifteen across, the peninsula is divided by a spine of mountains called the Serra, which peaks at Cima di e Folicce, 1324m above sea level. The coast on the east side of this divide is characterized by tiny ports, or marines, tucked into gently sloping rivermouths, alongside coves which become sandier as you go further north. The villages of the western coast are sited on rugged cliffs, high above the rough sea and tiny rocky inlets that can be glimpsed from the cornice road.

The main villages on Cap Corse are connected to Bastia's gare routière by bus. Services are fairly frequent during the summer, but drop off considerably between October and May. Running up the east coast to Rogliano and Macinaggio, the Bastia municipal bus company, SAB (☎04.95.31.06.65, 🌐www.bastiabus.com), lay on between two and three services Monday–Saturday from June–Sept, the first departing at 7pm from Bastia and arriving 1hr 15min later in Macinaggio. In winter, one bus per day runs on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. For Nonza and Canari, on the western cape, Transports Saoletti's Wednesday bus (☎04.95.37.84.05) departs Bastia's gare routière at 4pm.

Erbalunga

Built along a rocky promontory 10km north of Bastia, the small port of ERBALUNGA is the highlight of the east coast, with aged, pale buildings stacked like crooked boxes behind a small harbour and ruined Genoese watchtower. A little colony of French artists lived here in the 1920s, and the village has drawn a steady stream of admirers ever since. It attracts a fair number of tourists throughout the year, and come summer it's transformed into something of a cultural enclave, with concerts and art events adding a spark to local nightlife. The town is most famous, however, for its Good Friday procession, known as the Cerca (Search), which evolved from an ancient fertility rite. Hooded penitents, recruited from the ranks of a local religious brotherhood, form a spiral known as a Granitola, or snail, which unwinds as the candlelit procession moves into the village square.

A port since the time of the Phoenicians, Erbalunga was once a more important trading centre than Bastia or Ajaccio. In the eleventh century, with the increasing exportation of wine and olive oil, it became the capital of an independent village-state, ruled by the da Gentile family, who lived in the palazzu that dominates place de-Gaulle.

The one hotel, the gorgeous Castel Brando (☎04.95.30.10.30, 🌐www.castelbrando.com; April to mid-Oct; Ⓢ), stands at the entrance to the place, shaded by a curtain of mature date palms, like the backdrop to a classic Visconti movie. It's an elegant, old, stone-floored palazzu with a lovely pool and its own car park. Period furniture and antique Corsican engravings fill the rooms and apartments, which are all air-conditioned; those on the top floor have great views. Pick of the harbourside restaurants is the renowned Le Pirate (☎04.95.33.24.20; Easter–Oct) for whose cuisine gastronomique well-heeled Bastias flock here throughout the year. Seafood delicacies – such as local lobster with wild asparagus – dominate their menu, but vegetarians are well catered for with entrées from the carte. The house set menu costs around €35/55 for lunch/dinner; à la carte courses range from €22–65. A less expensive option is A Piazzetta (☎04.95.33.28.69), in the tiny square behind the harbour, which does excellent moules-frites, a range of tasty pasta dishes from €18–28, and superb sorbets.

Macinaggio (Macinaghju) and around

A port since Roman times, well-sheltered MACINAGGIO, 20km north of Erbalunga, was developed by the Genoese in 1620 for the export of olive oil and wine to the Italian peninsula. The Corsican independence leader, Pascal Paoli, landed here in 1790 after his exile in England, whereupon he kissed the ground and uttered the words “O ma patrie, je t'ai quitté esclave, je te retrouve libre” (“Oh my country, I left you as a slave, I rediscover you a free man”) – a plaque commemorating the event adorns the wall above the ship chandlers. There's not much of a historic patina to the place nowadays, but with its boat-jammed marina and its line of colourful seafront awnings, Macinaggio has a certain appeal, made all the stronger by its proximity to some of the best beaches on Corsica. Daily boat trips from the marina on board the San Paulu (☎04.95.35.07.09; €18) transport visitors to some of the best of them, as well as the remote islands off the north coast of the cape. Another reason to linger is to sample the superb Clos Nicrosi wines, grown in the terraces below Rogliano. Of all Corsica's top AOC labels, it's perhaps the hardest to find, but at their little shop on the north side of the Rogliano road, opposite the U Ricordu hotel, you can taste the domaine's famously crisp white wine and heavily scented muscat.

The least expensive place to stay is the recently renovated Hôtel des Îles, opposite the marina (☎04.95.35.43.02, ☎04.95.35.47.05; open April–Oct; Ⓡ), which also has a serviceable restaurant on its ground floor. All the tiny rooms have showers and toilets; those at the front of the building overlook the port but get noisy at night, being above the most popular bar in the resort, so if you're a light sleeper ask for a room at the back. Otherwise try the more modern U Libecciu, down the lane leading from the marina to the Plage de Tamarone (☎04.95.35.43.22, 🌐www.u-libecciu.com; April–Oct, obligatory half-board July & Aug; Ⓡ); it's a modern building with no view to speak of, but the rooms are spacious and particularly good value in shoulder season. The three-star U Ricordu, on the south side of the road to Rogliano (☎04.95.35.40.20, 🌐www.hotel-uricordu.com; March–Sept, with obligatory half board Aug; Ⓡ), is the most luxurious option hereabouts, with a swimming pool, sauna, tennis courts and over-the-top tariffs. Macinaggio's only campsite, U Stazzu, lies 1km north of the harbour and is signposted from the Rogliano road (☎04.95.35.43.76; May–Oct). The ground is like rock, but it's cheap and there's ample shade and easy access to the nearby beach; particularly good breakfasts are also served in the site's little café.

Besides the hotel restaurants above, commendable places to eat in Macinaggio include the Pizzeria San Columbu, at the end of the port facing out to sea. For a taste of local seafood, you won't do better than the Osteria di u Portu (☎04.95.35.40.49; open April–Sept), facing the marina. The other established favourite is Les Îles, also on the quayside, whose good-value €18.50 menu fixe features soupe de poisson, grilled daurade (gilt head) and pâtisserie maison.

North of the town lie some beautiful stretches of white sand and clear sea. A marked footpath, known as Le Sentier des Douaniers because it used to be patrolled by customs officials, threads its way across the hills and coves along the coast, giving access to an area that cannot be reached by road. The Baie de Tamarone, 2km along this path, has deep clear waters, making it a good place for diving and snorkelling. Just behind the beach, the road forks, and if you follow the left-hand track for twenty minutes you'll come to a stunning arc of turquoise sea known as the rade de Santa Maria, site of the isolated Romanesque Chapelle Santa-Maria. Raised on the foundations of a sixth-century church, the building comprises two chapels, one tenth- the other twelfth-century, merged into one, hence the two discrepant apses. The bay's other principal landmark is the huge Tour Chiapelle. Dramatically cleft in half and entirely surrounded by water, the ruined three-storeyed tower was one of three built on the northern tip of the cape by the Genoese in the sixteenth century (the others are at Tollare and Barcaggio) as lookout posts against the increasingly troublesome Moorish pirates. As Macinaggio grew in importance, the torri began to be used also by health and customs officers, who controlled the maritime traffic with Genoa. Pascal Paoli established his garrison here in 1761, having been unsuccessful in his attempt to take Macinaggio, and contemplated building a rival port. The tourist office in Macinaggio will furnish you with a free map and route description of the path. Otherwise get hold of a copy of IGN #4347 OT; which covers the entire route to Centuri-Port (7–8hrs).

Centuri-Port

When Dr Johnson's biographer, James Boswell, arrived here from England in 1765, the former Roman settlement of CENTURI-PORT was a tiny fishing village, recommended to him for its peaceful detachment from the dangerous turmoil of the rest of Corsica. Not much has changed since Boswell's time: Centuri-Port exudes tranquillity despite a serious influx of summer residents, many of them artists who come to paint the fishing boats in the slightly prettified harbour, where the grey-stone wall is highlighted by the green serpentine roofs of the encircling cottages, restaurants and bars. The only drawback is that you'll find the small beach disappointingly muddy and not ideal for sunbathing (although it is an excellent spot for snorkelling).

Centuri-Port has more hotels than anywhere else on Cap Corse. Hôtel-Restaurant du Pêcheur (☎04.95.35.60.14; Easter to mid-Nov; 🍷), the pink building in the harbour, is among the most pleasant and has a popular restaurant. If it's full, try Hôtel La Jetée, to the left on the road as you arrive in Centuri (☎04.95.35.64.46, ☎04.95.35.64.18; April–Sept; 🍷), whose rooms are ordinary and for the most part without sea views, but the cheapest in the village during high season. The Vieux Moulin (☎04.95.35.60.15, 🌐www.le-vieux-moulin.net; March–Oct; 🍷), opposite, is the most stylish option: a converted maison d'Américain with a wonderful terrace and attractively furnished en-suite rooms. For campers, choice is limited to the rather scruffy Camping l'Isolettu, 400m south along the D35 (☎04.95.35.62.81, ☎04.95.35.63.63; May–Oct).

Nonza

Set high on a black rocky pinnacle that plunges vertically into the sea, the village of NONZA, 18km south of Centuri, is one of the highlights of the Cap Corse shoreline. It was formerly the main stronghold of the da Gentile family, and the remains of their fortress are still standing on the furthest rocks on the overhanging cliff.

The village is also famous for St Julia, patron saint of Corsica, who was martyred here in the fifth century. The story goes that she had been sold into slavery at Carthage and was being taken by ship to Gaul when the slavers docked here. A pagan festival was in progress, and when Julia refused to participate she was crucified; the gruesome legend relates that her breasts were then cut off and thrown onto a stone, from which sprang two springs, now enshrined in a chapel by the beach. To get there, follow the sign on the right-hand side of the road before you enter the square, which points to La Fontaine de Ste-Julia, down by the rocks. Reached by a flight of six hundred steps, Nonza's long grey beach is discoloured as a result of pollution from the now disused asbestos mine up the coast. This may not inspire confidence, but the locals insist it's safe (they take their own kids there in summer), and from the bottom you do get the best view of the tower, which looks as if it's about to topple into the sea.

The village has two accommodation options: a stylish little B&B called Casa Maria (☎04.95.37.80.95; 🍷), in a restored schist house above the square; and the Auberge Patrizi (☎04.95.37.82.16; 🍷) an attractively converted stone house five minutes' walk down a steep flight of steps towards the beach. The best room in the latter has a gorgeous terrace with sweeping views across the gulf to the Désert des Agriates.

The Nebbio (U Nebbiu)

Taking its name from the thick mists that sweep over the region in winter, the Nebbio has for centuries been one of the most fertile parts of the island, producing honey, chestnuts and some of the island's finest wine. Tourism, however, has so far made little impact on this depopulated area, which comprises the amphitheatre of rippled hills, vineyards and cultivated valleys that converge on St-Florent, a handful of kilometres due west of Bastia. Aside from EU subsidies, the major money earner here is viticulture: some of the island's wines are produced around the commune of Patrimonio, and caves offering wine tastings are a feature of the whole region.

A bishopric until 1790, St-Florent is a chic coastal resort at the base of Cap Corse. It remains the Nebbio's chief town, and is the obvious base for day-trips to the beautifully preserved Pisan church of Santa Maria Assunta, just outside the town, and the Désert des Agriates, a wilderness of parched maquis-covered hills whose rugged coastline harbours one of Corsica's least accessible, but most beautiful, beaches.

The principal public transport serving the Nebbio is the twice-daily bus from Bastia to St-Florent, operated by Transports Santini (☎04.95.37.02.98) which leaves the gare routière at 10.30am and 5.30pm between June and September, and at 11am and 6pm during the rest of the year (except Oct–May Wed & Sat, when they leave at noon & 5.30pm).

St-Florent and around

Viewed from across the bay, ST-FLORENT (San Fiurenzu) appears as a bright line against the black tidal wave of the Tenda hills, the pale stone houses seeming to rise straight out of the sea, overlooked by a squat circular citadelle. It's a relaxing town, with a decent beach and a good number of restaurants, but the key to its success is the marina, which is jammed with expensive boats throughout the summer. Neither the tourists, however, nor indeed St-Florent's proximity to Bastia, entirely eclipse the air of isolation conferred on the town by its brooding backdrop of mountains and scrubby desert.

In Roman times, a town called Cersunam – referred to as Nebbiu by chroniclers from the ninth century onwards – existed a kilometre east of the present village. Few traces remain of the settlement, and in the fifteenth century it was eclipsed by the port that developed around the new Genoese citadelle. St-Florent, as it became known, prospered as one of Genoa's strongholds, and it was from here that Paoli set off for London in 1796, never to return.

Place des Portes, the centre of town life, has café tables facing the sea in the shade of plane trees, and in the evening fills with strollers and pétanque players. In rue du Centre, which runs west off the square, parallel to the seafront and marina, you'll find some restaurants, a few shops and a couple of wine-tasting places – be sure to sample the sweet, maquis-scented muscat made around here. The fifteenth-century circular citadelle can be reached on foot from place Doria at the seafront in the old quarter. Destroyed by Nelson's bombardment in 1794, it was renovated in the 1990s and affords superb views from its terrace.

Just a kilometre to the east of the town off a small road running off place des Portes, on the original site of Cersanum, the church of Santa Maria Assunta – the so-called “cathedral of the Nebbio” – is a fine example of Pisan Romanesque architecture. Built of warm yellow limestone, the building has a distinctly barn-like appearance – albeit a superlatively elegant one. Gracefully symmetrical blind arcades decorate the western facade, and at the entrance twisting serpents and wild animals adorn the pilasters on each side of the door. The interior, too, appears deceptively simple. Carved shells, foliage and animals adorn the capitals of the pillars dividing the nave where, immediately to the right, you'll see a glass case containing the mummified figure of St Flor, a Roman soldier martyred in the third century.

Practicalities

Bus times vary a little from year to year, but can be checked at the tourist office, at the top of the village in the same building as the post office, 100m north of place des Portes (July & Aug Mon–Fri 8.30am–12.30pm & 2–7pm, Sat & Sun 9am–noon & 3–6pm; Sept–June Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5pm, Sat 9am–noon; ☎ & 📍04.95.37.06.04). There's a small cyber café just off the square, on the left (north) side of the road leading to Santa Maria Assunta. It charges by the minute at a rate of €5 per hour.

St-Florent is a popular resort, and hotels fill up quickly, especially at the height of summer when prior booking is essential. The De l'Europe in place des Portes (☎04.95.37.00.33, 🌐www.hotel-europe2.com; 📍) is the most attractive option in town – and the only one open in winter. Otherwise, try Du Centre, just up the road from the Europe (☎04.95.37.00.68, 📍04.95.37.41.01; 📍; closed Nov–April), which has tiny rooms but is the cheapest place in town, or the more modern and swisher Maxime, just off place des Portes (☎04.95.37.05.30, 📍04.95.37.13.07; 📍; closed Nov–April). A couple of kilometres northeast on the Bastia road, Le Maloni (☎04.95.37.14.30, 🌐www.malonihotel.com; 📍) is a friendly, popular, budget choice close to the beach and offering simple en-suite rooms opening onto a leafy garden.

A fair number of campsites are dotted about the coast, but are packed in August and closed out of season. Camping Kallisté, route de la Plage (☎04.95.37.03.08, 🌐www.camping-kalliste.com; closed Oct–May) is the closest to town and most congenial.

St-Florent is renowned for the seafood from its gulf and there's no better location to enjoy it than down on the quayside, where a handful of swish gourmet places stand alongside standard pizzerias and tourist restaurants. With menus from €21–35, La Rascasse (☎04.95.37.06.99) has become renowned for its imaginative spins on local seafood: cream of ray's wing, mussel and chestnut fritters, and lobster sautéed in cured ham with tartlets of warm brocciu. In a similar price bracket is the nearby La Gaffe (☎04.95.37.00.12; closed Tues, except in July & Aug), where you can order sumptuous devilfish stew on a bed of tagliatelle, with menus at €28 and €40.

Patrimonio (Patrimoniù)

Leaving St-Florent by the Bastia road, the first village you come to, after 6km, is PATRIMONIO, centre of the first Corsican wine region to gain appellation contrôlée status. Apart from the renowned local muscat, which can be sampled in the village or at one of the caves along the route from St-Florent, Patrimonio's chief asset is the sixteenth-century church of St-Martin, occupying its own little hillock and visible for kilometres around. The colour of burnt sienna, it stands out vividly against the rich green vineyards. In a garden 200m south of the church stands a limestone statue-menhir known as U Nativu, a late megalithic piece dating from 900–800 BC. A carved T-shape on its front represents a breastbone, and two eyebrows and a chin can also be made out.

▲ Patrimonio

The Désert des Agriates

Extending westwards from the Golfe de St-Florent to the mouth of the Ostriconi River, the Désert des Agriates is a vast area of uninhabited land, dotted with clumps of cacti and scrub-covered hills. It may appear inhospitable now, but during the time of the Genoese this rocky moonscape was, as its name implies, a veritable breadbasket (agriates means “cultivated fields”). In fact, so much wheat was grown here that the Italian overlords levied a special tax on grain to prevent any build-up of funds that might have financed an insurrection. Fires and soil erosion eventually took their toll, however, and by the 1970s the area had become a total wilderness.

Numerous crackpot schemes to redevelop the Désert have been mooted over the years – from atomic weapon test zones to concrete Club-Med-style resorts – but during the past few decades the government has gradually bought up the land from its various owners (among them the Rothschild family) and designated it as a protected nature reserve. Nevertheless, species such as the Agriates’ rare wild boar remain under threat, mainly from trigger-happy hunters and bush fires.

A couple of rough pistes wind into the desert, but without some kind of 4WD vehicle the only feasible way to explore the area and its rugged coastline, which includes two of the island’s most beautiful beaches, is by foot. From St-Florent, a pathway winds northwest to plage de Perajola, just off the main Calvi highway (N1197), in three easy stages. The first takes around five hours, 30 minutes, and leads past the famous Martello tower and much-photographed plage de Loto to plage de Saleccia, a huge sweep of soft white sand and turquoise sea that was used as a location for the invasion sequences in the film The Longest Day. There’s a seasonal campsite here, U Paradisu (☎04.95.37.82.51; mid-June to Sept only). From plage de Saleccia, it takes around three hours to reach the second night halt, plage de Ghignu, where a simple gîte d’étape (☎04.95.37.09.86) provides basic facilities for €10 per night. The last stretch to Perajola can be covered in under six hours.

Note that the only water sources along the route are at Saleccia and Ghignu, so take plenty with you. It's also worth knowing that between May and October, excursion boats, leaving throughout the day from the jetty in St-Florent marina (€12 return, or €6 one way), ferry passengers across the gulf to and from plage de Loto. If you time your walk well, you can pick one up for the return leg back to town.

The Balagne (A Balagna)

The Balagne, the region stretching west from the Ostriconi valley as far as the red-cliffed wilderness of Scandola, has been renowned since Roman times as “Le Pays de l’Huile et Froment” (Land of Oil and Wheat). Backed by a wall of imposing, pale grey mountains, the characteristic outcrops of orange granite punctuating its spectacular coastline shelter a string of idyllic beaches, many of them sporting ritzy marinas and holiday complexes. These, along with the region’s two honeypot towns, L’Île Rousse and Calvi, get swamped in summer, but the scenery more than compensates. In any case, Calvi, with its cream-coloured citadelle, breathtaking white-sand bay and mountainous backdrop, should not be missed.

Year-round transport in the Balagne is limited to the Micheline train, which descends the Ostriconi valley and runs west along the coast as far as Calvi, and a bus connection with Bastia, via Ponte Leccia. In July and August, you can also travel to Calvi from Porto by bus, and between Calvi and L’Île Rousse on hourly tram-trains.

L’Île Rousse

Developed by Pascal Paoli in the 1760s as a “gallows to hang Calvi”, the port of L’ÎLE ROUSSE (Isula Rossa) simply doesn’t convince as a Corsican town, its palm trees, smart shops, neat flower gardens and colossal pink seafront hotel creating an atmosphere that has more in common with the French Riviera. Pascal Paoli had great plans for his new town on the Haute-Balagne coast, which was laid out from scratch in 1758 as a port to export the olive oil produced in the region. A large part of the new port was built on a grid system, featuring lines of straight parallel streets quite at odds with the higgledy-piggledy nature of most Corsican villages and towns. Thanks to the busy trading of wine and oil, it soon began to prosper and, two and a half centuries later, still thrives as a successful port. These days, however, the main traffic consists of holiday-makers, lured here by brochure shots of the nearby beaches. This is officially the hottest corner of the island, and the town is thus deluged by German and Italian sun-worshippers in July and August. Given the proximity of Calvi, and so much unspoilt countryside, it’s hard to see why you should want to stop here for more than a couple of hours.

Arrival, information and accommodation

The train station (☎04.95.60.00.50) is on route du Port, 500m south of where the ferries arrive. The Bastia–Calvi bus stops just south of place Paoli in the town’s main thoroughfare, avenue Piccioni. The SNCM office is on avenue J. Calizi (☎04.95.60.09.56), and the tourist office on the south side of place Paoli (April–June & Sept–Oct Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5pm; July & Aug daily 9am–1pm & 2.30–7.30pm; ☎04.95.60.04.35, @www.ot-ile-rousse.fr). For Internet access, go to Movie Stores (Mon–Sat 10am–2am; €5 per hour), diagonally opposite the supermarket on the crossroads where the Route Nationale cuts through the centre of town.

L'Île Rousse fills up early in the year and it can be difficult to find a hotel at any time from May to October. Most places are modern buildings, more functional than personable. The town has two main campsites: Les Oliviers, 1km east (☎04.95.60.19.92), and Le Bodri (☎04.95.16.19.70, 🌐www.campinglebodri.com), 3km west off the main Calvi road. The latter site, which is slap on the beach, can be reached direct by rail – ask for “l’arrêt Bodri”.

Hotels

Le Grillon 10 av Paul-Doumer ☎04.95.60.00.49, ☎04.95.60.43.69. The best cheap hotel in town, just 1km from the centre on the St-Florent/Bastia road. Nothing special, but quiet and immaculately clean. April–Oct. ③

De la Puntella rte du Port ☎04.95.60.04.34, ☎04.95.60.40.87. Smart little “studios” (rooms with four beds, kitchenette and bathroom), which are usually booked on a weekly basis during August; particularly good value for families. Ample parking too. ④

Santa Maria rte du Port ☎04.95.63.05.05, 🌐www.hotelsantamaria.com. Next to the ferry port, this is one of the larger and best-value three-star places. Their recently refurbished, air-conditioned rooms have small balconies or patios opening onto a garden and pool, and there's exclusive access to a tiny pebble beach. ⑦

Splendid 4 bd Valéry-François ☎04.95.60.00.24, 🌐www.le-splendid-hotel.com. Well-maintained, 1930s-style building with a small swimming pool and some sea views from upper floors; very reasonable tariffs, given the location. April to mid-Nov. ⑤

The town and beaches

All roads in L'Île Rousse lead to place Paoli, a shady square that's open to the sea and has as its focal point a fountain surmounted by a bust of “U Babbu di u Patria” (Father of the Nation), one of many local tributes to Pascal Paoli. There's a Frenchified covered market at the entrance to the square, which hosts a popular artisan-cum-antiques sale on Saturday mornings, while on the west side rises the grim facade of the church of the Immaculate Conception.

To reach the Île de la Pietra, the islet that gives the town its name, continue north, passing the station on your left. Once over the causeway connecting the islet to the mainland, you can walk through the crumbling mass of red granite as far as the lighthouse at the far end, from where the view of the town is spectacular, especially at sundown, when you get the full effect of the red glow of the rocks.

Immediately in front of the promenade, the town beach is a crowded Côte d'Azur-style strand, blocked by ranks of sun loungers and parasols belonging to the row of lookalike café-restaurants behind it. With your own transport, you're better off heading 3km west up the N197, where a signpost pointing right off the main road (next to the turning for Camping Bodri) leads 300m downhill to a fee-charging municipal car park (€5 for the day; no shade) from where you can walk to two of the most beautiful beaches on the north coast. To your right as you face the sea, plage de Botri is the more sheltered, backed by soft white dunes in which is nestled a smart but overpriced paillote (beach bar). The sand is clean and the water crystal clear, but from late June onwards this normally isolated cove is swamped by campers from the nearby campsite. A short walk further west around the rocky Punta di Ginebre, Baie de Giunchetu is a larger, though less picturesque beach. Note that you can reach both of these by train: just behind plage de Botri is a little request stop at which you can ask to be dropped by any of the services running between L'Île Rousse and Calvi.

Eating and drinking

Though there's an abundance of mediocre eating places in the narrow alleys of the old town, a few restaurants do stand out, some offering classic gourmet menus and others serving superb fresh seafood. The best cafés are found under the plane trees lining the southern side of place Paoli.

L'Escale rue Notre Dame

☎ 04.95.60.10.53. Giant fresh mussels, prawns and crayfish from the east coast étangs are the thing here, served in various formules and menus (€13–25) on a spacious terrace looking across the micHELIN line to the bay. Brisk, courteous service, copious portions and for once the house white (by the glass or pichet) is palatable. The menu pêcheur (a mixed platter) is especially good value.

L'Ostéria place Santelli ☎ 04.95.60.08.39. On a quiet backstreet in the old quarter, this established Corsican speciality restaurant offers an excellent set menu (€18), featuring delicious courgette fritters, soupe de nos villages, tarragon-scented gratin d'aubergines, stuffed sardines and fresh pan-fried prawns. You can sit in a vaulted room adorned with farm implements or on the shaded terrace.

A Pasturella On the square, Monticello

☎ 04.95.60.06.65. Stylish gastro-Corsican restaurant, up in one of the Balagne's prettiest villages perchés. Only ten minutes' drive from town, but the views, and cooking, are of the highest order. There's an unusually international flavour to the menu (tandoori fish, prawns in satay sauce), and some imaginative gourmet takes on local classics (such as devilfish and saffron ragout). Menus at €29–60.

A Quadrera 6 rue Napoléon ☎ 04.95.60.44.52. Sunny Mediterranean salads, quality charcuterie and imaginative seafood dishes, stylishly served inside an eighteenth-century town house with exposed stone walls. Their €17.50 menu offers great value for money, as does the legendary "salade de M.Jo-Jo", featuring local panzetta ham.

Calvi

Seen from the water, CALVI is a beautiful spectacle, with its three immense bastions topped by a crest of ochre buildings, sharply defined against a hazy backdrop of mountains. Twenty kilometres west along the coast from L'Île Rousse, the town began as a fishing port on the site of the present-day ville basse below the citadelle, and remained just a cluster of houses and fishing shacks until the Pisans conquered the island in the tenth century. Not until the arrival of the Genoese, however, did the town become a stronghold when, in 1268, Giovaninello de Loreto, a Corsican nobleman, built a huge citadelle on the windswept rock overlooking the port and named it Calvi. A fleet commanded by Nelson launched a brutal two-month attack on the town in 1794, when Nelson lost the sight in his eye; he left saying he hoped never to see the place again.

The French concentrated on developing Ajaccio and Bastia during the nineteenth century, and Calvi became primarily a military base, used as a point for smuggling arms to the mainland in World War II. A hangout for European glitterati in the 1950s, the town these days has the ambience of a slightly kitsch Côte d'Azur resort, whose glamorous marina, souvenir shops and fussy boutiques jar with the down-to-earth villages of its rural hinterland. It's also an important base for the French Foreign Legion's crack parachute regiment, the 2e REP, and immaculately uniformed legionnaires are a common sight around the bars lining avenue de la République.

Arrival, information and accommodation

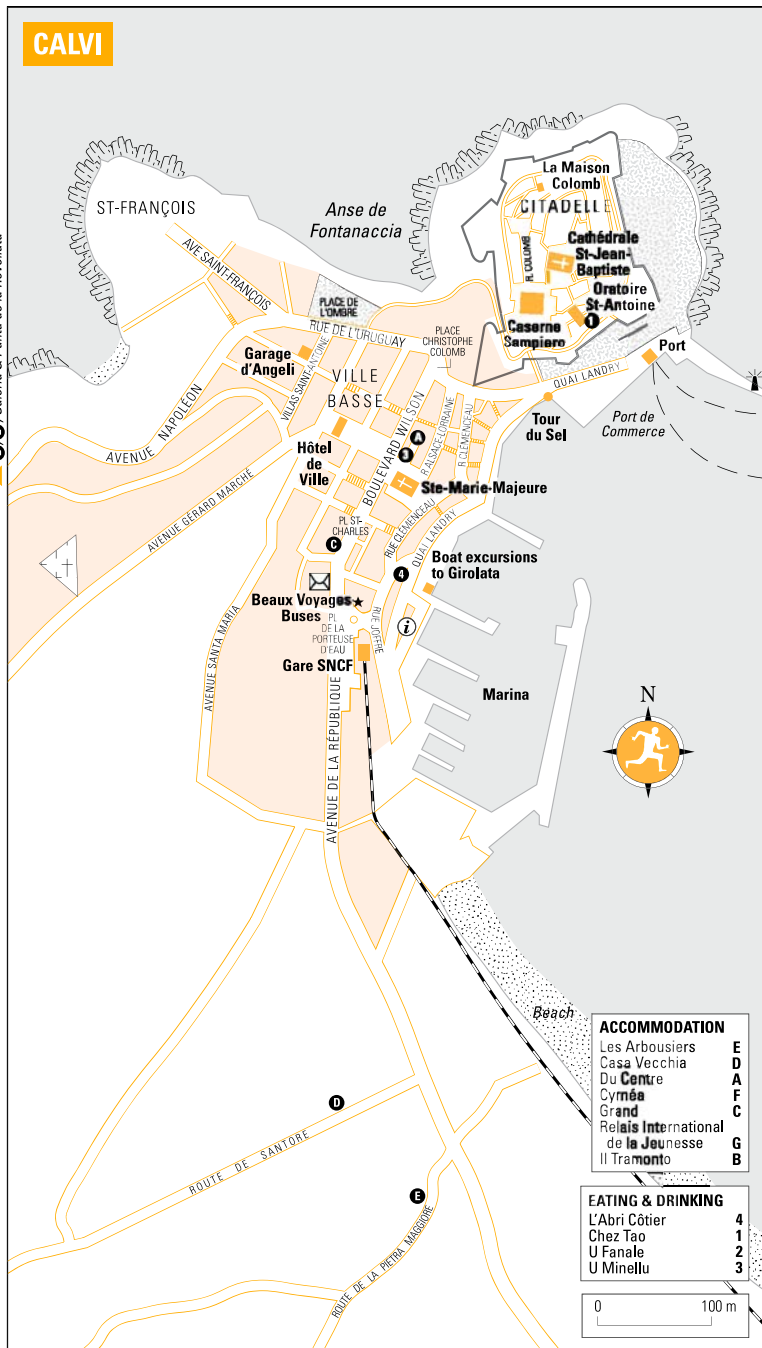

Ste-Catherine airport lies 7km south of Calvi (☎ 04.95.65.88.88, 🌐 www.calvi.aeroport.fr); the only public transport into town is by taxi, which shouldn't cost more than €16–18 weekdays (or €20–22 on weekends). The train station (☎ 04.95.65.00.61) is on avenue de la République, close to the marina, where you'll find the tourist office on quai Landry (mid-June to Sept daily 9am–7pm; Oct to mid-June Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–5.30pm, Sat 9am–noon; ☎ 04.95.65.16.67, 🌐 www.tourisme.fr/calvi).

Buses from Bastia and towns along the north coast stop outside the train station on place de la Porteuse d'Eau, whereas those from Porto pull in behind the marina.

CALVI

2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100

Marseille & Toulon
Nice & Genoa

ACCOMMODATION

Les Arbousiers	E
Casa Vecchia	D
Du Centre	A
Cymée	F
Grand	C
Relais International de la Jeunesse	G
Il Tramonto	B

EATING & DRINKING

L'Abri Côtier	4
Chez Tao	1
U Fanale	2
U Minellu	3

Ferries, including NGV hydrofoils, dock at the Port de Commerce at the foot of the citadelle. Tramar (aka “CCR”), agents for SNCM, are on the quai Landry (☎04.95.65.01.38); Corsica Ferries’ office is over in the Port de Commerce (☎04.95.65.43.21). You can rent bicycles from Garage d’Angeli, rue Villa-Antoine, on the left just west of place Christophe-Colomb (☎04.95.65.02.13, 🌐www.garagedangeli.com) for €15–17 per day. Take along your credit card or passport, which they’ll need to secure the €150 deposit.

Accommodation is easy to find in Calvi except during the jazz festival (third week of June). Hotels range from inexpensive pensions to luxury piles with pools and sweeping views of the bay. If you’re on a tight budget, take your pick from the town’s two excellent hostels, or the dozen campsites within walking distance of the centre.

Hotels

Les Arbousiers rte de Pietra-Maggiore

☎04.95.65.04.47, ☎04.95.65.26.14. Large, fading pink place set back from the main road, with rooms ranged around a quiet courtyard. Particularly good deal mid-and low season. ③

Casa Vecchia rte de Santore ☎04.95.65.09.33, 🌐www.hotel-casa-vecchia.com. A dependable budget option with small chalets set in a leafy garden, 500m south of town, and 200m from the beach. Advance booking essential. May–Sept. ④

 Du Centre 14 rue Alsace-Lorraine ☎04.95.65.02.01. Old-fashioned pension, with a welcoming owner, occupying a former police barracks in a narrow, pretty street near Église Ste-Marie-Majeure and harbourside. Its rooms are large for the price, but plain with shared WC. The cheapest option in town by a long chalk: from €32 per double June/Sept, rising to a mere €45 in July and August. Open June–Oct. ②

 Cyrnéa rte de Bastia ☎04.95.65.03.35, 🌐www.hotelcyrnea.com. Large budget hotel, 20min walk south of town or 300m from the beach. Good-sized rooms for the price, all with bathrooms and balconies (ask for one with a “vue montagne” to the rear). Outstanding value for money, even in high season. April–Nov. ④

Grand 3 bd Wilson ☎04.95.65.09.74, 🌐www.grand-hotel-calvi.com. Wonderful old luxury hotel in the centre of town, with original fin-de-siècle furniture and fittings. The rooms, though somewhat dowdy and in need of a lick of paint, are huge, and many have good views (as does the breakfast salon, which looks over the rooftops of the old quarter). Smaller-than-average tariff increases in high season. April–Oct. ⑤

Il Tramonto rte de Porto ☎04.95.65.04.17, 🌐www.hotel-iltramonto.com. Another excellent little budget hotel, with clean, comfortable and light rooms. Definitely try for one with “vue mer”, which have little terraces and superb views over Punta de la Revellata. ③

Hostels and campsites

Relais International de la Jeunesse “Carabellu” 4km from the centre of town on rte Pietra-Maggiore ☎04.95.65.14.16, ☎04.95.80.65.33. Follow the N197 for 2km, turn right at the sign for Pietra-Maggiore, and the hostel – two little houses with spacious, clean dormitories at €13 per bed (or €24 with breakfast), looking out over the gulf – is in the village another 2km further on (along a track that’s impassable for cars). Phone ahead to make sure it’s open. May–Oct.

Camping Bella Vista rte de Pietra-Maggiore, 1km southeast of the centre (700m inland from the beach) ☎04.95.65.11.76, 🌐www.camping-bellavista.com. The best option for backpackers as it’s much closer to the centre of town than the competition – though you pay a couple of euros per night extra for the privilege. Plenty of shade, nice soft ground and clean toilet blocks. Closed Nov–March.

The town and citadelle

Social life in Calvi focuses on the restaurants and cafés of the quai Landry, a spacious seafront walkway linking the marina and the port. This is the best place to get the feel of the town, but as far as sights go there’s not a lot to the ville basse. At the far end of the quay, under the shadow of the citadelle, stands the sturdy Tour du Sel, a medieval lookout post once used to store imported salt. If you head up through the narrow passageways off quai Landry, you’ll come to rue Clemenceau, where restaurants and souvenir shops are packed into every available space. In a small square giving onto the street stands the pink-painted Église Ste-Marie-Majeure, built in 1774, whose spindly bell tower rises elegantly above the cafés on the quay but whose interior contains nothing of interest. From the church's flank, a flight of steps connects with boulevard Wilson, a wide modern high street which rises to place Christophe-Colomb, point of entry for the haute ville, or citadelle.

Beyond the ancient gateway to the citadelle, with its inscription of the town's motto ("Civitas Calvis Semper Fidelis" – always faithful), you come immediately to the enormous Caserne Sampiero, formerly the governor's palace. Built in the thirteenth century, when the great round tower was used as a dungeon, the castle is currently used for military purposes, and therefore closed to the public. The best way of seeing the rest of the citadelle is to follow the ramparts, which connect the three immense bastions. From each bastion the views across the sea, the Balagne and the Cinto Massif are magnificent.

Within the walls the houses are tightly packed along tortuous stairways and narrow passages that converge on the diminutive place d'Armes. Dominating the square is the Cathédrale St-Jean-Baptiste, set at the highest point of the promontory and sitting uncomfortably amid the ramshackle buildings. This chunky ochre edifice was founded in the thirteenth century, but was partly destroyed during the Turkish siege of 1553 and then suffered extensive damage twelve years later, when the powder magazine in the governor's palace exploded. It was rebuilt in the form of a Greek cross. The church's great treasure is the Christ des Miracles, housed in the chapel on the right of the choir;

The GR20

Winding some 170km from Calenzana (12km from Calvi) to Conca (22km from Porto-Vecchio), the GR20 is Corsica's most demanding long-distance footpath. Only one third of the estimated 17,000 hikers who start it each season complete all sixteen stages (étapes), which can be covered in ten to twelve days if you're in good physical shape – if you're not, don't even think about attempting this route. Marked with red-and-white splashes of paint, it comprises a series of harsh ascents and descents, sections of which exceed 2000m and become more of a climb than a walk, with stanchions, cables and ladders driven into the rock as essential aids. The going is made tougher by the necessity of carrying a sleeping bag, all-weather kit and two or three days' food with you. That said, the rewards more than compensate. The GR20 takes in the most spectacular mountain terrain in Corsica and along the way you can spot the elusive mouflon (mountain sheep), glimpse lammergeier (a rare vulture) wheeling around the crags, and swim in ice-cold torrents and waterfalls.

The first thing you need to do before setting off is get hold of the Parc Régional's indispensable Topo-guide, published by the Fédération Française de la Randonnée Pédestre, which gives a detailed description of the route, along with relevant sections of IGN contour maps, lists of refuges and other essential information. Most good bookshops in Corsica stock them, or call at the park office in Ajaccio (see p.1237). More detailed coverage of the route (in English) is featured in David Abram's Corsica Trekking: the GR20 book (see p.1336).

The route can be undertaken in either direction, but most hikers start in the north at Calenzana, tackling the most demanding étapes early on. The hardship is alleviated by extraordinary mountainscapes as you round the Cinto massif, skirt the Asco, Niolo, Tavignano and Restonica valleys, and scale the sides of Monte d'Oro and Rotondo. At Vizzavona on the main Bastia–Corte–Ajaccio road, roughly the halfway mark, you can call it a day and catch a bus or train back to the coast, or press on south across two more ranges to the needle peaks of Bavella. With much of the forest east of here this crucifix was brandished at marauding Turks during the 1553 siege, an act which reputedly saved the day.

To the north of place d'Armes in rue de Fil stands La Maison Colomb, the shell of a building which Calvi believes – as the plaque on the wall states – was Christopher Columbus's birthplace, though the claim rests on pretty tenuous, circumstantial evidence. The house itself was destroyed by Nelson's troops during the siege of 1794, but as recompense a statue was erected in 1992, the 500th anniversary of Columbus's "discovery" of America; the date of this historic landfall, October 12, is now a public holiday in Calvi.

Calvi's outstanding beach sweeps right round the bay from the end of quai Landry, but most of the first kilometre or so is owned by bars which rent out sun loungers for a hefty price. To avoid these, follow the track behind the sand which will bring you to the start of a more secluded stretch. The sea might not be as sparkingly clear as at many other Corsican beaches, but it's warm, shallow and free of rocks. You can also sunbathe, and swim off the rocks, at the foot of the citadelle, which has the added attraction of fine views across the bay.

Eating and drinking

Eating is a major pastime in Calvi, and you'll find restaurants and snack bars on almost every street. Fish restaurants predominate in the marina, where – at a price – you can eat excellent seafood fresh from the bay. Cafés, fronted with fashionable parasols and teak furniture, line the marina, becoming more expensive the nearer they are to the Tour du Sel.

blackened by fire, hikers in recent years have been leaving the GR20 at Zonza, below the Col de Bavella (served by daily buses to Ajaccio and Porto-Vecchio), and walking to the coast along the less arduous Mare a Mare Sud trail.

Accommodation along the route is provided by refuges, where, for around €10, you can take a hot shower, use an equipped kitchen and bunk down on mattresses. Usually converted bergeries, these places are staffed by wardens during the peak period (June–Sept). Advance reservation is not possible; beds are allocated on a first-come-first-served basis, so be prepared to bivouac if you arrive late. Another reason to be on the trail soon after dawn is that it allows you to break the back of the étape before 2pm, when clouds tend to bubble over the mountains and obscure the views.

The weather in the high mountains is notoriously fickle. A sunny morning doesn't necessarily mean a sunny day, and during July and August violent storms can rip across the route without warning. It's therefore essential to take good wet-weather gear with you, as well as a hat, sunblock and shades. In addition, make sure you set off on each stage with adequate food and water. At the height of the season, many refuges sell basic supplies (alimentation), but you shouldn't rely on this service; ask hikers coming from the opposite direction where their last supply stop was and plan accordingly (basic provisions are always available at the main passes of Col de Vergio, Col de Vizzavona, Col de Bavella and Col de Verde). The refuge wardens (gardiens) will be able to advise you on how much water to carry at each stage.

Finally a word of warning: each year, injured hikers have to be air-lifted to safety off remote sections of the GR20, normally because they strayed from the marked route and got lost. Occasionally, fatal accidents also occur for the same reason, so always keep the paint splashes in sight, especially if the weather closes in – don't rely purely on the many cairns that punctuate the route, as these sometimes mark more hazardous paths to high peaks.

Cafés and bars

Chez Tao rue St-Antoine, in the citadelle
☎ 04.95.65.00.73. Legendary nightclub, opened in the wake of the Bolshevik Revolution by a Muslim White Russian, and long the haunt of the Riviera's glitterati. Now turned into a pricey piano bar serving fussy nouvelle cuisine and local fish dishes, costing around €30 à la carte. June–Sept 7pm–midnight.

Restaurants

L'Abri Côtier On quai Landry, but entrance on rue Joffre ☎ 04.95.65.12.76. Mostly seafood dishes (such as sea bass with fennel) and pizzas (from €10), served on a lovely terrace looking out to sea. Their set menus (€20, 28 & 35) and suggestions du jour are invariably the best deals.

U Fanale rte de Porto, just outside the centre of town on the way to Punta de la Revellata ☎ 04.95.65.18.82. Worth the walk out here for their delicious, beautifully presented Corsican specialities – mussels or lamb simmered in ewe's cheese and white wine, a fine soupe Corse, and melt-in-the-mouth fiadone (traditional flan). Menus €24 plus a full à la carte choice, and pizzas from €10. You can dine outside in the garden or inside their salle panoramique, with views across the bay to Punta de la Revellata.

U Minellu Off bd Wilson, nr Ste-Marie-Majeure. Wholesome Corsican specialities served in a narrow stepped alley, or on a shady terrace with pretty mosaic tables. Their menu features baked lamb, cannelloni al brocciu, spider crab dressed "à la Calvaise", and a cheese platter – good value at €20.

The Réserve Naturel de Scandola and Girolata

The Réserve Naturel de Scandola takes up the promontory dividing the Balagne from the Golfe de Porto, its name derived from the wooden tiles (scandules) that cover many of the island's mountain houses. But the area's roof-like rock formations are only part of its amazing geological repertoire: its stacked slabs, towering pinnacles and gnarled claw-like outcrops were formed by Monte Cinto's volcanic eruptions 250 million years ago, and subsequent erosion has fashioned shadowy caves, grottoes and gashes in the rock. Scandola's colours are as remarkable as the shapes, the hues varying from the charcoal grey of granite to the incandescent rusty purple of porphyry.

The headland and its surrounding water were declared a nature reserve in 1975 and now support significant colonies of sea birds, dolphins and seals, as well as 450 types of seaweed and some remarkable fish such as the grouper, a species more commonly found in the Caribbean. In addition, nests belonging to the rare Audouin's gull are visible on the cliffs, and you might see the odd osprey – there used to be only seven pairs here, but careful conservation has increased this number to 24.

Scandola is off-limits to hikers and can be viewed only by boat (Colombo Lines ☎ 04.95.62.32.10, 🌐 www.colombo-line.com), which means taking one of the daily excursions from Calvi or Porto. These leave from Calvi at 9.15am and 2pm, and from Porto at various intervals throughout the daytime and early evening (April–Oct), the first two stopping for two hours at Girolata (see below) and returning in the late afternoon. It's a fascinating journey and well worth the €40 fare, although it's a good idea to take a picnic, as the restaurants in Girolata are very pricey.

Girolata

Connected by a mere mule track to the rest of the island (1hr 30min on foot from the nearest road), the tiny fishing haven of GIROLATA, immediately east of Scandola, has a dreamlike quality that's highlighted by the vivid red of the surrounding rocks. A short stretch of stony beach and a few houses are dominated by a stately watchtower, built by the Genoese later in the seventeenth century in the form of a small castle on a bluff overlooking the cove. For most of the year, this is one of the most idyllic spots on the island, with only the odd yacht and party of hikers to threaten the settlement's tranquillity. From June through September, though, daily boat trips from Porto and Calvi ensure the village is packed during the middle of the day, so if you want to make the most of the scenery and peace and quiet, walk here and stay a night in one of the gîtes.

The head of the Girolata trail is at Bocca à Croce (Col de la Croix), on the Calvi–Porto road, from where a clear path plunges downhill through dense maquis and forest to a flotsam-covered cove known as Cala di Tuara (30min). The more rewarding of the two tracks that wind onwards to Girolata is the more gentle one running left around the headland, but if you feel like stretching your legs, follow the second, more direct route uphill to a pass.

In Girolata, La Cabane du Berger (☎04.95.20.16.98; May–Oct; €32 per person for dorm bed, half-board) offers a choice of accommodation in dorms or small wood cabins in the garden behind (these accommodate two people); you can also put your tent up here. Meals are served in their quirky wood-carved bar, but the food isn't up to much. The same is true of the other gîte, Le Cormorant, among the houses at the north end of the cove (☎04.95.20.15.55; July & Aug; €32; half-board obligatory), which has eighteen dorm spaces and a small restaurant overlooking the boat jetty. Unless you're staying at one of the gîtes, you'll be better off paying a little extra to eat at one of the two restaurants just up the steps. With a terrace overlooking the beach, Le Bel Ombra is the pricier of the pair, offering local seafood specialities, including fresh Scandola lobster. Le Bon Espoir, next door, is marginally cheaper, with menus from €20 to €31. Note that neither restaurant accepts credit cards.

Porto (Portu) and around

The overwhelming proximity of the mountains, combined with the pervasive eucalyptus and spicy scent of the maquis, give PORTO, 30km south of Calvi, a uniquely intense atmosphere that makes it one of the most interesting places to stay on the west coast. Except for a watchtower built here by the Genoese in the second half of the sixteenth century, the site was only built upon with the onset of tourism since the 1950s; today the village is still so small that it can become claustrophobic in July and August, when overcrowding is no joke. Off season, the place becomes eerily deserted, so you'd do well to choose your times carefully; the best months are May, June and September.

The crowds and traffic jams tend to be most oppressive passing the famous Calanches, a huge mass of weirdly eroded pink rock just southwest of Porto, but you can easily sidestep the tourist deluge in picturesque Piana, which overlooks the gulf from its southern shore, or by heading inland from Porto through the Gorges de Spelunca. Forming a ravine running from the sea to the watershed of the island, this spectacular gorge gives access to the equally grandiose Forêt d'Aitone, site of Corsica's most ancient Laricio pine trees and a deservedly popular hiking area. Throughout the forest, the river and its tributaries are punctuated by strings of piscines naturelles (natural swimming pools) – a refreshing, tranquil alternative to the beaches hereabouts, which tend to be crammed in peak season. If you're travelling between Porto and Ajaccio, a worthwhile place to break the journey is the clifftop village of Cargèse where the two main attractions are the Greek church and spectacular beach.

Arrival and information

Buses from Calvi, via Galéria, and from Ajaccio, via Cargèse, pull into the junction at the end of route de la Marine, opposite the Banco supermarket, en route to the marina. Timetables are posted at the stops themselves, and at the tourist office, down in the marina (May, June & Sept daily 9am–6pm; July & Aug daily 9am–7pm; Oct–April Mon–Fri 9am–5pm; ☎ 04.95.26.10.55, 🌐 www.porto-tourisme.com), where you can buy Topoguides and brochures for hikes in the area. Timetable information and tickets for the boat excursions to Scandola, the Calanches and Girolata are available in advance from the operators at their counters around the marina.

Accommodation

Competition between hotels is more cut-throat in Porto than in any other resort on the island. During slack periods towards the beginning and end of the season, most places engage in a full-on price war, pasting up cheaper tariffs than their neighbours – all of which is great for punters. In late July and August, however, the normal sky-high rates prevail. Photos of all the hotels listed below are posted on the local tourist office website (see “Arrival and information”, above).

Hotels

Le Belvédère Porto marina ☎ 04.95.26.12.01, 🌐 www.hotel-le-belvedere.com. This three-star is the smartest of the hotels overlooking the marina, with great views from its comfortable rooms and terraces of Capo d’Orto. Reasonable rates given the location. ③–⑤

Brise de Mer On the left of rte de la Marine as you approach tower from the village, opposite the telephone booths ☎ 04.95.26.10.28, 🌐 www.brise-de-mer.com. A large, old-fashioned place with very friendly service and a congenial terrace restaurant. Rooms at the back have the best views. April to mid-Oct. ③

Le Colombo At the top of the village opposite the turning for Ota ☎ 04.95.26.10, 🌐 www.hotelcolombo.com. An informal, sixteen-room hotel overlooking the valley, imaginatively decorated in sea-blue colours with driftwood and flotsam sculpture. ③–⑤

Le Golfe At the base of the rock in the marina ☎ 04.95.26.13.33. Small, cosy and unpretentious;

every room has a balcony with a sea view. Among the cheapest at this end of the village. May–Oct. ③

Le Maquis At the top of the village just beyond the Ota turning ☎ 04.95.26.12.19, 🌐 www.hotel-lemaquis.com. A perennially popular, well-maintained budget hotel; rooms are basic, but comfortable enough, and they give good off-season discounts. Advance booking recommended; half-board obligatory July and Aug. ②–③

Campsites

Camping Les Oliviers ☎ 04.95.26.14.49, 🌐 www.camping-oliviers-porto.com. Top-notch two-star site, boasting a huge multi-layered pool. April–Nov.

Camping Sol e Vista At the main road junction near the supermarkets ☎ 04.95.26.15.71, 🌐 www.camping-sol-e-vista.com. A superb location on shady terraces ascending a steep hillside with a small café at the top. Great views of Capo d’Orto cliffs opposite, and immaculate toilet blocks. April–Nov.

The Town

Eucalyptus-bordered route de la Marine links the two parts of the resort. The village proper, known as Vaïta, comprises a strip of supermarkets, shops and hotels 1km from the sea, but the main focus of activity is the small marina, located at the avenue’s end. Overlooking the entrance to the harbour is the much-photographed Genoese Tower (May–Sept daily 9am–8.45pm; €3, or €7 for combined entry with the aquarium, see opposite), a square chimney-shaped structure that was cracked by an explosion in the seventeenth century, when it was used as an arsenal. An awe-inspiring view of the crashing sea and maquis-shrouded mountains makes it worth the short climb. Occupying a converted powder house down in the square opposite the base of the tower is the newly established Aquarium de la Poudrière (June–Aug daily 10am–10pm, Sept–May Mon–Sat 10am–7pm; €5.50, or €7 for combined ticket with the tower), where you can view the various species of sealife that inhabit the gulf, including grouper, moray eels and sea horses.

The beach consists of a pebbly cove south beyond the shoulder of the massive rock supporting the tower. To reach it from the marina, follow the little road that skirts the rock, cross the wooden bridge which spans the River Porto on your left, then walk through the car park under the trees. Although it's rather rocky and exposed, and the sea very deep, the great crags overshadowing the shore give the place a vivid, wild atmosphere.

Eating and drinking

The overall standard of restaurants in Porto is pitifully poor, with overpriced food and indifferent service the norm, particularly during high season. There are, however, a handful of exceptions.

Le Maquis In the hotel of the same name. Honest, affordable home cooking served either in a warm bar or on a tiny terrace that hangs over the valley. Their good-value €24 menu includes delicious scorpion fish in mussel sauce.

La Mer Opposite the tower ☎04.95.26.11.27. One of the finest seafood restaurants in the area, with fish fresh from the gulf, imaginatively prepared and served in an ideal setting. Menus from €18.50. Reserve early for a seat with a view.

Le Sud Along the walkway leading from the square to the marina ☎04.95.26.14.11. Arguably the best restaurant in Porto, thanks to their strict policy of serving nothing except the freshest local food. Simple and delicious cooking from around the Mediterranean ("cuisine de tous les suds") served on a stylish terrace overlooking the marina. À la carte only (dishes €18–25) plus wine from a definitive list.

The Calanches

The UNESCO-protected site of the Calanches, 5km southwest of Porto, takes its name from calanca, the Corsican word for creek or inlet, but the outstanding characteristics here are the vivid orange and pink rock masses and pinnacles which crumble into the dark blue sea. Liable to unusual patterns of erosion, these tormented rock formations and porphyry needles, some of which soar 300m above the waves, have long been associated with different animals and figures, of which the most famous is the Tête de Chien (Dog's Head) at the north end of the stretch of cliffs. Other figures and creatures conjured up include a Moor's head, a monocled bishop, a bear and a tortoise.

One way to see the fantastic cliffs of the Calanches is by boat from Porto; excursions leave daily in summer, cost €22 and last about an hour. Alternatively, you could drive along the corniche road which weaves through the granite archways on its way to Piana. Eight kilometres along the road from Porto, the Roches Bleues café is a convenient landmark for walkers.

Piana

Picturesque PIANA occupies a prime location overlooking the Calanches, but for some reason does not suffer the deluge of tourists that Porto endures. Retaining a sleepy feel, the village comprises a cluster of pink houses ranged around an eighteenth-century church and square, from the edge of which the panoramic views over the Golfé de Porto are sublime.

Calanches walks

The rock formations visible from the road are not a patch on what you can see from the waymarked trails winding through the Calanches, which vary from easy ambles to strenuous stepped ascents. An excellent leaflet highlighting the pick of the routes is available free from tourist offices. Whichever one you choose, leave early in the morning or late in the afternoon to avoid the heat in summer, and take plenty of water.

The most popular walk is the one to the Château Fort (1hr), which begins at a sharp hairpin in the D81, 700m north of the Café Roches Rouges (look for the car park and signboard at the roadside). Passing the famous Tête de Chien, it snakes along a ridge lined by dramatic porphyry forms to a huge square chunk of granite resembling a ruined castle. Just before reaching it there's an open platform from where the views of the gulf and Paglia Orba, Corsica's third highest mountain, are superb – one of the best sunset spots on the island – but bring a torch to help find the path back.

For a more challenging extension to the above walk, begin instead at the Roches Rouges café. On the opposite side of the road, two paths strike up the hill: follow the one on your left nearest the stream (as you face away from the café), which zigzags steeply up the rocks, over a pass and down the other side to rejoin the D81 in around 1hr 15min. A hundred and fifty metres west of the spot where you meet the road is the trailhead for the Château Fort walk, with more superb views.

A small Oratory niche in the cliff by the roadside, 500m south of Café Roches Rouges, contains a Madonna statue, Santa Maria, from where the wonderful sentier muletier (1hr) climbs into the rocks above. Before the road was blasted through the Calanches in 1850, this old paved path, an extraordinary feat of workmanship supported in places by dry-stone banks and walls, formed the main artery between the villages of Piana and Ota. After a very steep start, the route contours through the rocks and pine woods above the restored mill at Pont de Gavallaghiu, emerging after one hour back on the D81, roughly 1.5km south of the starting point. Return by the same path.

If you want to stay, head straight for the Les Roches Rouges (☎04.95.27.81.81, 🌐www.lesrochesrouges.com; April–Oct; 📍), an elegant old grand hôtel rising from the eucalyptus canopy on the outskirts. Having lain empty for two decades, the turn-of-the-century building was restored with most of its original fittings and furniture intact, and possesses loads of fin-de-siècle style. The rooms are huge and light, with large shuttered windows, but make sure you get one facing the water. Non-residents are welcome to drop in for a sundowner on the magnificent terrace, or for a meal in the fresco-covered restaurant, whose menus gastronomiques (€28, €32 and €64), dominated by local seafood delicacies, are as sophisticated as the ambience. A cheaper alternative is the Continental, an old house with high wooden ceilings, stripped wood floors and a leafy garden, on the right as you leave Piana for Porto (☎04.95.27.89.00, 🌐www.continentalpiana.com; 📍–📍).

The Gorges de Spelunca

Spanning the 2km between the villages of Ota and Évisa, a few kilometres inland from Porto, the Gorges de Spelunca are a formidable sight, with bare orange granite walls, 1km deep in places, plunging into the foaming green torrent created by the confluence of the rivers Porto, Tavulella, Onca, Campi and Aitone. The sunlight, ricocheting across the rock walls, creates a sinister effect that's heightened by the dark jagged needles of the encircling peaks. The most dramatic part of the gorge can be seen from the road, which hugs the edge for much of its length.

ÉVISA's bright orange roofs emerge against a lush background of chestnut forests about 10km from Ota, on the eastern edge of the gorge, and the village makes the best base for hiking in the area. Situated 830m above sea level, it caters well for hikers and makes a pleasant stop for a taste of mountain life – the air is invariably crisp and clear, and the food particularly good.

The best place to stay is the rambling La Châtaigneraie, on the west edge of the village on the Porto road (☎04.95.26.24.47, 🌐www.hotel-la-chataigneraie.com; April–Oct; 2–3). Set amid chestnut trees, this traditional schist and granite building has a dozen smart, cosy rooms (with and without toilets) in an annexe around the back of the main building. On the front side, a pleasant little restaurant serves mountain cooking such as wild boar stew with pulenta made from local chestnuts. The young patronne is American, so English is spoken. At the other end of the village, L'Aitone (☎04.95.26.20.04, 🌐www.hotel-aitone.com; 2–6) is a large country hotel with a wide range of differently priced rooms, a swimming pool and relaxing bar-restaurant that enjoys a reputation both for gastronomic prowess and for its fine views. For campers, the Camping Acciola (☎04.95.26.23.01), a small site with a café-bar and great views of the mountains, lies roughly 3km out of Evisa: take the D84 for 2km, and turn right at the T-junction towards Cristinacce; the site lies another 400m on your left.

Forêt d'Aitone

Thousands of soaring Laricio pines, some of them as much as 50m tall, make up the Forêt d'Aitone, just a few kilometres east of Évisa. The most beautiful forest in Corsica, it extends over ten square kilometres between Évisa and the Col de Verghio (1477m), the highest point in Corsica traversable by road. Well-worn tourist paths cross the forest at various points, but local wildlife still thrives here.

Some of the oldest pines in the forest are approaching five hundred years old. Fine-grained, strong and very resistant to weathering, the Laricio was highly valued by the Genoese for ships' masts and furniture, and it was they who first built a road down the valley to the coast, later upgraded by the French using convict labour. Throughout the nineteenth century, forests all over Corsica were regularly decimated, as the island has the very best specimens of this species, which only grows in forests higher than 1000m. When the British artist and poet Edward Lear came here in the 1860s, he noted with regret "the ravages of [the] hatchets: here and there on the hillside are pale patches of cleared ground, with piles of cut and barked pines ... everywhere giant trees lie prostrate".

One of the most popular short walks goes to the Belvédère, a great natural balcony giving magnificent views across the copper-tinted rocks of the Spelunca gorge. To reach it, look for the wide lay-by on the left-hand side of the road, 5km northeast of Evisa. A signpost pointing left indicates the well-trodden route through the forest. Following the unsurfaced forest track that peels left a little further up the main road, you can also drop down to the piscine naturelle d'Aitone, one of the more accessible bathing spots in the forest, where the river crashes through a series of idyllic pools and falls.

Cargèse (Carghese)

Sitting high above a deep blue bay on a cliff scattered with olive trees, CARGÈSE, 20km southwest of Porto, exudes a lazy charm that attracts hundreds of well-heeled summer residents to its pretty white houses and hotels. The full-time locals, half of whom are descendants of Greek refugees who fled the Turkish occupation of the Peloponnese in the seventeenth century, seem to accept with nonchalance this inundation – and the proximity of a large Club Med complex – but the best times to visit are May and late September, when Cargèse is all but empty.

Two churches stand on separate hummocks at the heart of the village, a reminder of the old antagonism between the two cultures (resentful Corsican patriots ransacked the Greeks' original settlement in 1715 because of the newcomers' refusal to take up arms against their Genoese benefactors). The Roman Catholic church was built for the minority Corsican families in 1828 and is one of the latest examples of Baroque with a trompe l'oeil ceiling, though this can't really compete with the view from the terrace outside. The Greek church, however, is the more interesting of the two: a large granite neo-Gothic edifice built in 1852 to replace a building that had become too small for its congregation. Inside, the outstanding feature is an unusual iconostasis, a gift from a monastery in Rome, decorated with uncannily modern-looking portraits. Behind it hang icons brought over from Greece with the original settlers – the graceful Virgin and Child, to the right-hand side of the altar, is thought to date as far back as the twelfth century.

The best beach in the area, plage de Pero, is 2km north of the village – head up to the junction with the Piana road and take the left fork down to the sea. Overlooked by a Genoese tower, this white stretch of sand has a couple of bars and easily absorbs the crowds that descend on it in August. Plage du Chiuni, a further 2km along the same road, is much busier thanks to its windsurfing facilities and the presence of Club Med. A more secluded spot is plage du Monachi, 1km south of the village; this small, sandy cove is reached by climbing down the track at the side of the road past the little chapel on the cliffside.

Practicalities

There's a tourist office on rue Dr-Dragacci (daily: July–Sept 9am–noon & 4–7pm; Oct–June 3–5pm; ☎04.95.26.41.31, 🌐www.cargese.net), which can help find accommodation and sells tickets for summer boat trips to the Calanches, costing about €40. Buses for Ajaccio and Porto stop outside the tiny main square in the centre of the village.

The least expensive of the hotels in Cargèse is the De France, on rue Colonel-Fieschi (☎04.95.26.41.07, 🌐www.infocorse.com/defrance; 📍), whose rooms are a bit dark and noisy (the front rooms open on to the main road), but unbelievably cheap, even in August. Overlooking the crossroads at the top of the village, two comfortable midscale options are Le Continental (☎04.95.26.42.24; 📍) and St Jean (☎04.95.26.46.68, 🌐www.lesaintjean.com; 📍). Better still, head down the lane dropping from opposite these last two places to the wonderful plage de Pero beach, where you'll find the beautifully situated 🏡 Les Lentisques (☎04.95.26.42.34, 🌐www.leslentisques.com; 📍), a congenial, family-run three-star with a large, breezy breakfast hall and ten simple rooms (fully en suite and sea-facing). The nearest campsite, Camping Torraccia (☎04.95.26.42.39), is 4km north of Cargèse on the main road.

A fair number of restaurants are scattered about the village, as well as the standard crop of basic pizzerias, but the most tempting places to eat are down in the harbour. On a raised deck overlooking the jetty, Le Cabanon de Charlotte serves local seafood in a wooden cabin, with menus at €19–32, or you can go for their fresh fish of the day.

Ajaccio (Ajaccio)

Edward Lear claimed that on a wet day it would be hard to find so dull a place as AJACCIO, a harsh judgement with an element of justice. The town has none of Bastia's sense of purpose and can seem to lack a definitive identity of its own, but it is a relaxed and good-looking place, with an exceptionally mild climate, and a wealth of cafés, restaurants and shops.

Although it's an attractive idea that Ajax, hero of the Trojan War, once stopped here, the name of Ajaccio actually derives from the Roman Adjacium (place of rest), a winter stop-off point for shepherds descending from the mountains to stock up on goods and sell their produce. This first settlement, to the north of the present town in the area called Castelvecchio, was destroyed by the Saracens in the tenth century, and modern Ajaccio grew up around the citadelle that was founded in 1492. Napoleon gave the town international fame, but though the self-designated Cité Impériale is littered with statues and street names related to the Bonaparte family, you'll find the Napoleonic cult has a less dedicated following in his home town than you might imagine. The emperor is still considered by many Ajacciens as a self-serving Frenchman rather than as a Corsican, and his impact on the townscape of his birthplace isn't enormous.

Since the early 1980s, the town has gained an unwelcome reputation for nationalist violence. The most infamous terrorist atrocity of recent years was the murder, in February 1998, of the French government's most senior official on the island, Claude Erignac, who was gunned down as he left the opera. However, separatist violence rarely (if ever) affects tourists, and for visitors Ajaccio remains memorable for the things that have long made it attractive – its battered old town, relaxing cafés and the encompassing view of its glorious bay.

Arrival, information and accommodation

Ajaccio's Campo dell'Orò airport (☎04.95.23.56.56; 🌐www.ajaccio.aeroport.fr) is 6km south of town; shuttle buses (three per hour 6.30am–10.45pm; ☎04.95.23.29.41) provide an inexpensive link with the centre, stopping on cours Napoléon, the main street – tickets cost €5 one way, and the journey takes around twenty minutes. Heading in the other direction, the best place to pick up buses to the airport is the car park adjacent to the main bus station (terminal routière), a five-minute walk north of the centre (☎04.95.51.55.45). Ferries also dock nearby, and the SNCM office is directly

△ Fromage corse

EATING
Le 20123	11
Altru Versu	2
Ariadne	12
Le Bilboq	10
Le Floride	3
Da Mamma	1
U Cinnaronu	7

DRINKING
Au Grandval	9
Le Grand Café	5
Napoleon	8
Le Jockey	5
Le Menestrel	6
La Trou dans le Mur	4

ACCOMMODATION
Le Dauphin	A
Fesch	E
Du Golfe	D
Kallisté	B
Marengo	H
Napoleon	C
La Pinède	G
U San Carlu	F

opposite at quai l'Herminier (☎04.95.29.66.99). The gare SNCF lies almost a kilometre north along boulevard Sampiero (☎04.95.23.11.03; 🌐www.ter-sncf.com/corse), a continuation of the quai l'Herminier.

The tourist office on the place du Marché, behind the Hôtel de Ville (April–June & Sept Mon–Sat 8am–7pm, Sun 9am–1pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 8am–8.30pm, Sun 9am–1pm & 4–7pm; Oct–March Mon–Fri 8.30am–6pm, Sat 8.30am–noon; ☎04.95.51.53.03, 🌐www.ajaccio-tourisme.com) hands out large free glossy maps and posts transport timetables for checking departure times. Anyone planning a long-distance hike should head for the office of the national parks association, the Parc Naturel Régional de Corse, 2 rue Sergeant-Casalunga, around the corner from the préfecture on cours Napoléon (Mon–Fri 8am–noon & 2–6pm; 🌐www.parc-naturel-corse.com; ☎04.95.51.79.00), where you can buy Topo-guides, maps, guidebooks and leaflets. Cars can be rented from: Rent-a-Car, at the Hôtel Kallisté, 51 cours Napoléon (☎04.95.51.34.45), and the airport (☎04.95.23.56.36); Avis-Ollandini, 1 rue Colonna d'Istria (☎04.95.23.92.50) and the airport (☎04.95.21.28.01); and Hertz-Locasud, 8 cours Grandval (☎04.95.21.70.94) and the airport (☎04.95.23.57.04). Internet access is free in the lobby of the Hotel Kallisté on cours Napoléon.

Ajaccio suffers from a dearth of inexpensive accommodation, but there are a fair number of mid- and upscale places. Whatever your budget, it's essential to book ahead, especially for weekends between late May and September, when beds are virtually impossible to come by at short notice.

Hotels

Le Dauphin 11 bd Sampiero ☎04.95.21.12.94, 🌐www.ledauphinhotel.com. No-frills place above a bar, opposite the port de Commerce. Some rooms are on the grotty side for the price, but their budget options in an adjacent building (with shared showers and toilets) are among the cheapest beds in town. Includes breakfast. 4

Fesch 7 rue Cardinal-Fesch ☎04.95.51.62.62, 🌐www.hotel-fesch.com. One of the oldest-established hotels in Ajaccio, and famous as the site of a (bloodless) armed siege in 1980, when it was occupied by fugitive nationalist guerrillas and their French secret service hostages. Following a recent refit, all rooms are bright and modern with a/c and TVs; balconies cost extra. 4–5

Du Golfe 5 bd du Roi-Jérôme ☎04.95.21.47.64, 🌐www.hoteldugolfe.com. Large, well-appointed three-star whose slightly pricier (soundproofed) front rooms overlook the market square and bay. Reasonable value given the location, and handy for ferry port, bus and train stations. 6

 Kallisté 51 cours Napoléon ☎04.95.51.34.45, 🌐www.hotel-kalliste-ajaccio.com. Revamped three-storey hotel right in the centre, with plenty of parking space. Sound-proofed rooms for up to four people, all with cable TVs and bathrooms. Internet facilities in lobby, and the staff speak English. The best choice in this category. 4

Marengo 12 bd Mme-Mère ☎04.95.21.43.66, 🌐www.hotel-marengo.com. A ten-minute walk west of the centre, up a quiet side street off bd Mme-Mère. Slightly boxed in by tower blocks, but it's a secluded, quiet and pleasant small hotel (with only 16 rooms) away from the city bustle. Open mid-March to mid-Nov. 4

Napoleon 4 rue Lorenzo-Vero ☎04.95.51.54.00, 🌐www.hotelnapoleonajaccio.com. Dependable mid-scale hotel slap in the centre of town, up a side road off cours Napoléon, in a recently revamped Second Empire style. Comfortable, very welcoming and good value for the location. 5

La Pinède rte des Sanguinaires ☎04.95.52.00.44, 🌐www.la-pinede.com. Most secluded and peaceful of the swish hotels, 4km west of the town centre. It's 300m from the beach (up a narrow lane signposted right off the main road as you head out of town), but with great views of the gulf, a large pool and tennis court. 7–8

U San Carlu 8 bd Danielle-Casanova ☎04.95.21.13.84, 🌐www.hotel-sancarlu.com Sited opposite the citadelle and close to the beach, this three-star hotel is the poshest option in the old town. Well-appointed rooms, private parking facilities, and a special room for disabled guests in the basement. 6

Napoleon and Corsica

Napoleon Bonaparte was born in Ajaccio in 1769, a year after the French took over the island from the Genoese. They made a thorough job of it, crushing the Corsican leader Paoli's troops at Ponte Nuovo and driving him into exile. Napoleon's father Carlo, a close associate of Paoli, fled the scene of the battle with his pregnant wife in order to escape the victorious French army. But Carlo's subsequent behaviour was quite different from that of his former leader – he came to terms with the French, becoming a representative of the newly styled Corsican nobility in the National Assembly, and using his contacts with the French governor to get a free education for his children.

At the age of nine, Napoleon was awarded a scholarship to the Brienne military academy, an institution specially founded to teach the sons of the French nobility the responsibilities of their status, and the young son of a Corsican Italian-speaking household used his time well, leaving Brienne to enter the exclusive École Militaire in Paris. At the age of sixteen he was commissioned into the artillery. When he was twenty the Revolution broke out in Paris and the scene was set for a remarkable career.

Always an ambitious opportunist, he obtained leave from his regiment, returned to Ajaccio, joined the local Jacobin club and – with his eye on a colonelship in the Corsican militia – promoted enthusiastically the interests of the Revolution. However, things did not quite work out as he had planned, for Pascal Paoli had also returned to Corsica.

Carlo Bonaparte had died some years before, and Napoleon was head of a family that had formerly given Paoli strong support. Having spent the last twenty years in London, Paoli was pro-English and had developed a profound distaste for revolutionary excesses. Napoleon's French allegiance and his Jacobin views antagonized the older man, and his military conduct didn't enhance his standing at all. Elected second-in-command of the volunteer militia, Napoleon was involved in an unsuccessful attempt to wrest control of the citadelle from royalist sympathizers. He thus took much of the blame when, in reprisal for the killing of one of the militiamen, several people were gunned down in Ajaccio, an incident which engendered eight days of civil war. In June 1793, Napoleon and his family were chased back to the mainland by the Paolists.

Napoleon promptly renounced any special allegiance he had ever felt for Corsica. He Gallicized the spelling of his name, preferring Napoléon to his baptismal Napoleone. And, although he was later to speak with nostalgia about the scents of the Corsican countryside, he put the city of his birth fourth on the list of places he would like to be buried.

Campsites

Le Barbicaja 4.5km west along the rte des Sanguinaires ☎04.95.52.01.17. Crowded site, but close to the beach and easier to reach by bus (#5 from place de Gaulle) than Les Mimosas. Open April–Oct.

Les Mimosas 3km northwest of town

☎04.95.20.99.85, ☎04.95.10.01.77. A shady and well-organized site with clean toilet blocks, friendly management and fair rates. It's a long trudge if you're loaded with luggage so take a taxi (around €15). Open May–Oct.

The Town

The core of the old town holds the most interest in Ajaccio: a cluster of ancient streets spreading north and south of place Foch, which opens out to the seafront by the port and the marina. Nearby, to the west, place de Gaulle forms the town centre and is the source of the main thoroughfare, cours Napoléon, which extends parallel to the sea almost 2km to the northeast. West of place de Gaulle stretches the modern part of town fronted by the beach, overlooked at its eastern end by the citadelle.

If you're intending to work your way around all of the town's museums and galleries, it's worth investing in a Passemusée. Costing €10, the pass covers all the museums (except A Bandera) and is valid for seven days from the time of your first visit; you can buy them at the tourist office and at the admission desks of the museums themselves.

Around place de Gaulle and the new town

Place de Gaulle (otherwise known as place du Diamant, after the Diamanti family who once owned much of the property in Ajaccio) is the most useful point of orientation, even if it's not much to look at – just a windy concrete platform surrounded by a shopping complex. The only noteworthy thing on the square is the huge, bronze equestrian statue, a pompous lump commissioned by Napoléon III in 1865 showing the first Napoleon in Roman attire, surrounded by his four brothers.

Devotees of Napoleon should take a stroll 1km up cours Grandval, the wide street rising west of place de Gaulle and ending in a square, the Jardins du Casone, where gaudily spectacular son et lumière shows and costumed re-enactments take place throughout the tourist season. An impressive monument to Napoleon dominates the square, standing atop an appropriately huge, proto-Fascist pedestal inscribed with the names of his battles. Behind the monument lies a graffiti-bedaubed cave where Napoleon is supposed to have frolicked as a child.

Place Foch

Once the site of the town's medieval gate, place Foch lies at the heart of old Ajaccio. A delightfully shady square sloping down to the sea and lined with cafés and restaurants, it gets its local name – place des Palmiers – from the row of palms bordering the central strip. Dominating the top end, a fountain of four marble lions provides a mount for the inevitable statue of Napoleon, this one by Ajaccien sculptor Maglioli. A humbler effigy occupies a niche high on the nearest wall – a figurine of Ajaccio's patron saint, La Madonnuccia, dating from 1656, a year in which Ajaccio's local council, fearful of infection from plague-struck Genoa, placed the town under the guardianship of the Madonna in a ceremony conducted on this spot.

At the northern end of place Foch is the Hôtel de Ville of 1826, with its prison-like wooden doors. The first-floor Salon Napoléonien (mid-June to mid-Sept Mon–Sat 9–11.45am & 2–5.45pm; mid-Sept to mid-June Mon–Fri 9–11.45am & 2–4.45pm; €2.80) contains a replica of the ex-emperor's death mask in pride of place, along with a solemn array of Bonaparte family portraits and busts. A smaller medal room has a fragment from Napoleon's coffin and part of his dressing case, plus a model of the ship that brought his body back from St Helena, and a picture of the house where he died.

South of place Foch

The south side of place Foch, standing on the former dividing line between the poor district around the port and the bourgeoisie's territory, gives access to rue Bonaparte, the main route through the latter quarter. Built on the promontory rising to the citadelle, the secluded streets in this part of town – with their dusty buildings and hole-in-the-wall restaurants lit by flashes of sea or sky at the end of the alleys – retain more of a sense of the old Ajaccio than anywhere else.

Napoleon was born in what's now the colossal Maison Bonaparte, on place Letizia (May–Sept Mon 2–6pm, Tues–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 9–11.45am & 2–6pm, Sun 9am–noon; Oct–April Mon 2–6pm, Tues–Sat 10am–noon & 2–5pm, Sun 10am–noon; €4), off the west side of rue Napoléon. The house passed to Napoleon's father in the 1760s and here he lived, with his wife and family, until his death. But in May 1793, the Bonapartes were driven from the house by Paoli's partisans, who stripped the place down to the floorboards. Requisitioned by the English in 1794, Maison Bonaparte became an arsenal and a lodging house for English officers until Napoleon's mother Letizia herself funded its restoration. Owned by the state since 1923, the house now bears few traces of the Bonaparte family's existence.

One of the few original pieces of furniture left in the house is the wooden sedan chair in the hallway – the pregnant Letizia was carried back from church in it when her contractions started. Upstairs, there's an endless display of portraits, miniatures, weapons, letters and documents. Amongst the highlights of the first room are a few maps of Corsica dating from the eighteenth century, some deadly “vendetta” daggers and two handsome pairs of pistols belonging to Napoleon's father. The next-door Alcove Room was, according to tradition, occupied by Napoleon in 1799 when he stayed here for the last time, while in the third room you can see the sofa upon which the future emperor first saw the light of day on August 15, 1769. Adjoining the heavily restored long gallery is a tiny room known as the Trapdoor Room, whence Letizia and her children made their getaway from the marauding Paolists.

Napoleon was baptized in 1771 in the cathedral (Mon–Sat 8am–1.30pm & 2.30–6pm; no tourist visits on Sun), around the corner in rue Forcioli-Conti. Modelled on St Peter's in Rome, it was built in 1587–93 on a much smaller scale than intended, owing to lack of funds – an apology for its diminutive size is inscribed in a plaque inside, on the wall to the left as you enter. Inside, to the right of the door, stands the font where he was dipped at the age of 23 months; his sister, Elisa Baciocchi, donated the great marble altar in 1811. Before you go, take a look in the chapel to the left of the altar, which houses a gloomy Delacroix painting of the Virgin.

A left turn at the eastern end of rue Forcioli-Conti brings you onto boulevard Danielle-Casanova. Here, opposite the citadelle, an elaborately carved capital marks the entrance to the Musée du Capitellu (May–Oct Mon–Sat 10am–noon & 2–6pm, Sun 10am to noon; €4), a tiny museum mainly given over to offering a picture of domestic life in nineteenth-century Ajaccio. The house belonged to a wealthy Ajaccien family, the Baciocchi, who were related to Napoleon through his sister's marriage. Amid the watercolour landscapes and marble busts, the glass display cases hold the most fascinating exhibits, including a rare edition of the first history of Corsica, written by Agostino Giustiniani, a bishop of the Nebbio who drowned in 1536, and the 1769 Code Corse, a list of laws set out by Louis XV for the newly acquired Corsica.

Opposite the museum, the restored citadelle, a hexagonal fortress and tower stuck out on a wide promontory into the sea, is occupied by the military and usually closed to the public. Founded in the 1490s, the fort wasn't completed until the occupation of Ajaccio by Sampiero Corso and the powerful Marshal Thermes in 1553–58. The building overlooks the town beach, place St-François, a short curve of yellow sand which faces the expansive mountain-ringed bay. Several flights of steps lead down to the beach from boulevard Danielle-Casanova.

A little further along the promenade, the car park in front of the municipal sports centre hosts a weekly flea market each Sunday morning, starting at around 9am. For the nicest beach within easy walking distance of the town, press on past the exercise area and gendarmerie to plage Trottel, which is larger and much cleaner than plage St-François.

North of place Foch

The dark narrow streets backing onto the port to the north of place Foch are Ajaccio's traditional trading ground. Each weekday and Saturday morning (and on Sundays during the summer), the square directly behind the Hôtel de Ville hosts a small fresh produce market – a rarity in Corsica – where you can browse and buy top-quality fresh produce from around the island, including myrtle liqueur, wild-boar sauces, ewe's cheese from the Niolo valley and a spread of fresh vegetables, fruit and flowers.

Behind here, the principal road leading north is rue Cardinal-Fesch, a delightful meandering street lined with boutiques, cafés and restaurants. Half-way along the street, set back from the road behind iron gates, stands Ajaccio's best gallery, the Musée Fesch (July & Aug Mon 1.30–6pm, Tues–Thurs 9am–6.30pm, Fri & Sat 10.30am–12.15pm, Sun 10.30am–6pm; Sept–June Mon 1–5.15pm, Tues–Sun 9.15am–12.15pm & 2.15–5.15pm; €5.30). Cardinal Joseph Fesch was Napoleon's step-uncle and bishop of Lyon, and he used his lucrative position to invest in large numbers of paintings, many of them looted by the French armies in Holland, Italy and Germany. His bequest to the town includes seventeenth-century French and Spanish masters, but it's the Italian paintings that are the chief attraction: Raphael, Titian, Bellini, Veronese and Botticelli all have a place here.

You'll need a separate ticket for the Chapelle Impériale (same hours; €1.50), which stands across the courtyard from the museum. With its gloomy monochrome interior the chapel itself is unremarkable, and its interest lies in the crypt, where various members of the Bonaparte family are buried. It was the cardinal's dying wish that all the Bonaparte family be brought together under one roof, so the chapel was built in 1857 and the bodies – all except Napoleon's – subsequently ferried in.

Eating, drinking and nightlife

At mealtimes, the alleyways and little squares of Ajaccio's old town become one large, interconnecting restaurant terrace lit by rows of candles. All too often, however, the breezy locations and views of the gulf mask indifferent cooking and inflated prices. With the majority of visitors spending merely a night or two here in transit, only those places catering for a local clientele attempt to provide real value for money. Bars and cafés jostle for pavement space along cours Napoléon, generally lined with people checking out the promenaders, and on place de Gaulle, where old-fashioned cafés and salons de thé offer a still more sedate scene. If you fancy a view of the bay, try one of the flashy cocktail bars that line the seafront on boulevard Lantivy, which, along with the casino, a few cinemas and a handful of overpriced clubs, comprise the sum total of Ajaccio's nightlife.

Bars and cafés

Le Grand Café Napoléon 10 cours Napoléon, opposite the préfecture. Allegedly the oldest café in town, with Second Empire decor and a troisième âge clientele. The bar inside was the scene of a famous shootout during World War II, when a cell of key Resistance members was disturbed by the Italian carabinieri and forced to flee, guns blazing. The €16 lunch menu ranks among the best midday meal deals in town.

Au Grandval 4 rue Maréchal-Ornano. Lively neighbourhood bar that's famous for its collection of antique photos of Ajaccio (mostly evocative portraits). Only a couple of doors down from Le Jockey, which stays open later.

Le Jockey 1 rue Maréchal-Ornano. An Ajaccien institution, renowned above all for its extraordinary list of wines, which you can order by the glass or bottle: Saint Amar, Cantemerle, Morgon, Sancerre, Chasse-Spleen, Châteauneuf du Pâpe and all the local stars. The decor's a quirky but cosy hotch-potch of ephemera and old memorabilia, with a soundtrack to match.

Le Menestrel 5 rue Cardinal-Fesch. Dubbed "le rendez-vous des artistes" because local musicians play here most evenings after 7pm; café jazz, traditional mandolin and guitar tunes, with the odd chanson singalong number. Popular with bus parties of pensioners.

Le Trou dans le Mur square César-Campinchi. During the hot summer months this workaday café monopolizes the shade along the side of the market place, and serves as a popular chill-out spot for bleary-eyed clubbers on Sunday mornings.

Restaurants

 Le 20123 2 rue Roi-de-Rome
☎ 04.95.21.50.05. Decked out like a small hill village, complete with fontaine and parked Vespa, the decor here's a lot more frivolous than the food: serious Corsican gastronomy featured on a single €29 menu. Top-notch cooking, and organic AOC wine. Closed Mon, except in July & Aug.

 Altru Versu 2 rue Jean-Baptiste Marcaggi
☎ 04.95.50.05.22. Classy Corsican speciality place hosted by one of the island's top young chefs. The menu's a mouthwatering array of traditional fare given a gourmet twist: seabass soufflé with brocciu and fresh mint, clams in flaky pastry and Muscat sauce, chestnut tagliatelle. À la carte only (count on €40–45 per head, plus wine). Live Corsican music on Fri & Sat. Closed Sun.

Ariadne rte des Sanguinaires, near Barbicaja campsite ☎ 04.95.52.09.63. The oldest and most cheerful of Ajaccio's many beachside pailotes, with a terrace opening straight on to the sand. World cuisine dominates the menu and there's usually live music (salsa/reggae/soukous) from 8.30pm. Most main courses €15–20. Open Easter–Oct Tues–Sun. You can get there from place de Gaulle on bus #5.

Le Bilboq ("Chez Jean-Jean") av des Glacis, just off place Foch ☎ 04.95.51.35.40. The eponymous patron (a former fisherman and boxer) of this legendary seafood joint is Ajaccio's undisputed "lobster king", and there's no point in coming here to eat anything but local langouste, served grilled with spaghetti. You can dine al fresco on a narrow alley terrace, or inside, regaled by Tino Rossi music (which, unlike the lobster, is definitely an acquired taste). Count on €30 per head for three courses, plus wine.

Da Mamma passage Guinghetta
☎ 04.95.21.39.44. Tucked away down a narrow passageway connecting cours Napoléon and rue Cardinal-Fesch. Authentic but affordable Corsican cuisine – such as cannelloni al brocciu, roast kid and seafood – on set menus from €17 to €29.50, served either in a stone-walled dining room or under a rubber tree in a tiny courtyard.

Le Floride port de Plaisance Charles-d'Ornano
☎ 04.95.22.67.48. Sublime local seafood, stylishly prepared and served in an airy dining hall overlooking the marina. Weekday lunchtimes are dominated by business clients, but the suits and mobile phones peter out in the evenings. If your budget can stretch to it, go for their €39 menu poisson frais. Closed Sat & Sun lunchtimes.

U Cinnaronu rue Maréchal-Ornano
☎ 04.95.21.49.37. Small backstreet restaurant that's a Mecca for charcuterie enthusiasts across the island. You won't eat better figatellu, lonzu or coppa anywhere, and they also do pizzas and succulent grillades. Closed Sun.

Le Golfe de Valinco

From Ajaccio, the vista of whitewashed villas and sandy beaches lining the opposite side of the gulf may tempt you out of town when you first arrive. On closer inspection, however, Porticcio turns out to be a faceless string of leisure settlements for Ajaccio's smart set, complete with tennis courts, malls and flotillas of jet-skis. Better to skip this stretch and press on south along the Route Nationale (RN194) which, after scaling the Col de Celaccia, winds down to the stunning Golfe de Valinco. A vast blue inlet bounded by rolling, scrub-covered hills, the gulf presents the first dramatic scenery along the coastal highway. It also marks the start of militant and Mafia-ridden south Corsica, more closely associated with vendetta, banditry and separatism than any other part of the island. Many of the mountain villages glimpsed from the roads hereabouts are riven with age-old divisions, exacerbated in recent years by the spread of organized crime and nationalist violence. But the island's seamier side is rarely discernible to the hundreds of thousands of visitors who pass through each summer, most of whom stay around the small port of Propriano, at the eastern end of the gulf. In addition to offering most of the area's tourist amenities, this busy resort town lies within easy reach of the menhirs at Filitosa, one of the western Mediterranean's most important prehistoric sites, and the secluded fishing village of Campomoro, on the opposite shore of the gulf, from where you can strike out south on foot to explore one of Corsica's wildest stretches of coast.

The Golfe de Valinco region is reasonably well served by public transport, with buses running four times per day between Ajaccio and Bonifacio, via Propriano and Sartène. Note, however, that outside July and August there are no services along this route on Sundays.

Propriano (Pruprià)

Tucked into the narrowest part of the Golfe de Valinco, the small port of PROPRIANO, 57km southeast of Ajaccio, centres on a fine natural harbour that was exploited by the ancient Greeks, Carthaginians and Romans, but became a prime target for Saracen pirate raids in the eighteenth century, when it was largely destroyed. Redeveloped in the 1900s, it now boasts a thriving marina, and handles ferries to Toulon, Marseille and Sardinia. The town around the port has also grown in importance, largely under the direction of a powerful coalition of nationalist-backed politicians and shady Mafia figures, which has held at bay the kind of power struggles that have undermined other resorts of comparable size.

Propriano's underworld connections, however, in no way deter the tourists, who come here in droves for the area's beaches. The nearest of these, plage de Lido, lies 1km west, just beyond the Port de Commerce; it's patrolled by lifeguards during the summer and is much safer and more appealing than the grubby plage de Baracci, 1km north of town, where the undertow is precariously strong. Just 3km beyond the Baracci beach, the D157 branches off to the left and continues along the coast, which is built up with hotels and package-tour holiday blocks until Olmeto plage, 10km west, where an abundance of campsites are on offer (see below). You can reach Olmeto on the three daily buses from Propriano to Porto.

Practicalities

Ferries from the mainland and Sardinia dock in the Port de Commerce, ten minutes' walk from where the buses stop at the top of rue du Général-de-Gaulle, the town's main street. The SNCM office is on quai Commandant-L'Herminier (☎04.95.76.04.36), while the tourist office is down in the harbour master's office in the marina (June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 3–7pm; July & Aug daily 8am–8pm; Oct–May Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm; ☎04.95.76.01.49, 🌐www.propriano.net).

There's a reasonable choice of hotels in the centre of town, including the high-tech Lofit, 3 rue Camille-Pietri (☎04.95.76.17.48, ☎04.95.76.22.04; 📍), directly behind the port; and the Bellevue on avenue Napoléon (☎04.95.76.01.86, ☎04.95.76.38.94; 📍), overlooking the marina and with the cheapest central rooms. If you have a car, one other place worth trying is the Arcu di Sole, 3km northeast on the route de Baracci (☎04.95.76.05.10, 🌐www.arcudisole.fr.st; 📍), which has a pool and gourmet restaurant.

Campers are well provided for, although the best sites are well out of town: for the best facilities go to Camping Colomba (☎04.95.76.06.42, 🌐www.camping-colomba.com), 3km north along route de Baracci, which has a swimming pool.

Cafés and restaurants are concentrated along the marina's avenue Napoléon. For fresh seafood, though, you can't beat L'Hippocampe (☎04.95.76.11.01), tucked away behind the port on rue Pandolphi, where the good-value €18.50 and €32 menus are served indoors or on a flower-filled pavement terrace. On the opposite side of town, behind the marina, Le Tout Va Bien (☎04.95.76.12.14) is Propriano's classiest seafood restaurant, offering haute gastronomie on a terrace jutting over the marina. It's far from cheap, but they do offer affordable formules (€21–28) at lunchtime; otherwise, count on €55–65 à la carte, plus wine.

Filitosa

Set deep in the countryside of the fertile Vallée du Taravo, the extraordinary Station Préhistorique de Filitosa (Easter–Oct 9am–sunset, out of season by arrangement only; ☎04.95.74.00.91; €5), 17km north of Propriano, comprises a wonderful array of statue-menhirs and prehistoric structures encapsulating some eight thousand years of history. Vehicles can be left in the small car park in the hamlet of Filitosa, where you pay the entrance fee; from here it's a five-minute walk to the entrance, where you'll find a café, a small museum and a workshop producing reproduction prehistoric ceramics. There's no public transport to the site.

Filitosa was settled by Neolithic farming people who lived here in rock shelters until the arrival of navigators from the east in about 3500 BC. These invaders were the creators of the menhirs, the earliest of which were possibly phallic symbols worshipped by an ancient fertility cult. When the seafaring people known as the Torrèens (after the towers they built on Corsica) conquered Filitosa around 1300 BC, they destroyed most of the menhirs, incorporating the broken stones into the area of dry-stone walling surrounding the site's two torri, or towers, examples of which can be found all over the south of Corsica. The site remained undiscovered until a farmer stumbled across the ruins on his land in the late 1940s.

Filitosa V looms up on the right shortly after the main entrance to the site. The largest statue-menhir on the island, it's an imposing sight, with clearly defined facial features and a sword and dagger outlined on the body. Beyond a sharp left turn lies the oppidum or central monument, its entrance marked by the eastern platform, thought to have been a lookout post. The cave-like structure sculpted out of the rock is the only evidence of Neolithic occupation and is generally agreed to have been a burial mound. Straight ahead, the Torrèen central monument comprises a scattered group of menhirs on a circular walled mound, surmounted by a dome and entered by a corridor of stone slabs and lintels. Nobody is sure of its exact function.

Nearby Filitosa XIII and Filitosa IX, implacable lumps of granite with long noses and round chins, are the most impressive of the menhirs. Filitosa XIII is typical of the figures made just before the Torrèen invasion, with its vertical dagger carved in relief – Filitosa VII also has a clearly sculpted sword and shield. Filitosa VI, from the same period, is remarkable for its facial detail. On the eastern side of the central monument stand some vestigial Torrèen houses, where fragments of ceramics dating from 5500 BC were discovered; they represent the most ancient finds on the site, and some of them are displayed in the museum.

The western monument, a two-roomed structure built underneath another walled mound, is thought to have been some form of Torréen religious building. A flight of steps leads to the foot of this mound, where a footbridge opens onto a meadow that's dominated by five statue-menhirs arranged in a semicircle beneath a thousand-year-old olive tree. A bank separates them from the quarry from which the megalithic sculptors hewed the stone for the menhirs – a granite block is marked ready for cutting.

The museum is a downbeat affair, but the artefacts themselves are fascinating. The major item here is the formidable Scalsa Murta, a huge menhir dating from around 1400 BC and discovered at Olmeto. Like other statue-menhirs of this period, this one has two indents in the back of its head, which are thought to indicate that these figures would have been adorned with headdresses. Other notable exhibits are Filitosa XII, which has a hand and a foot carved into the stone, and Trappa II, a strikingly archaic face.

At the time of writing, work was nearing completion on a digital sound and light show, scheduled to open for business in 2007. Details of ticket prices and timings will be available from the tourist office in Propriano (see p.1243); or telephone the site direct on ☎04.95.74.00.91.

Campomoro

Isolated at the mouth of the Golfe de Valinco, CAMPOMORO, 17km south-west of Propriano, ranks among the most congenial seaside villages on the island. The main attraction here is a two-kilometre-long beach, overlooked by an immense and well-preserved Genoese watchtower. In late July and August, it's swamped by Italian families from the adjacent campsites, but for the rest of the year Campomoro remains a tranquil enough place, with barely enough permanent residents to support a post office.

Another incentive to venture out here is the wild and windswept stretch of coast south of Campomoro, which is punctuated by outlandish rock formations and a string of empty pebble beaches. The absence of a road into the area, recently designated a regional nature reserve, means the only way to explore it is by boat or on foot, via the waymarked coastal path that begins below Campomoro's watchtower. From here, the path is easy to follow for the first eighty minutes or so as it threads through a series of dramatic granite outcrops, eroded into phantasmagorical shapes. However, once you hit the anse d'Eccia, a sandy bottle-necked cove, the going gets tougher. Determined, well-equipped hikers can walk all the way to Tizzano, 20km down the coast, via the much-photographed Senetosa Tower, but to do so it's essential to take along a detailed map, plenty of fresh water and camping equipment in case you get lost. For additional route advice, contact the owner of Big Blue boat trips at his caravan near the tourist office in Propriano (☎04.95.76.35.27, @www.propriano.net/bigblue). He takes customers to anse d'Eccia by catamaran, and provides photographs to help you follow the trail back to Campomoro; the cost of this half-day trip is around €25.

Practicalities

There are no bus services to Campomoro, but hitching is fairly reliable once you've turned off the main Propriano–Bonifacio road. The village possesses a couple of campsites and two hotels: Le Ressay, about 100m behind the chapel (☎04.95.74.22.25; April–Oct; 5–7), a friendly family-run place with excellent views across the bay, is generally a better option than the more expensive, more formal Le Campomoro, overlooking the beach at the tower end of the village (☎04.95.74.20.89, ☎04.95.74.20.89; ⑥). Of the two campsites, Camping Peretto Les Roseaux, 300m from the post office towards the tower (☎04.95.74.20.52; May–Oct), is the more peaceful. For food, try the popular La Mouette café opposite the church (☎04.95.74.22.26), which serves a selection of filling salads for around €10 on its beachside terrace. More sophisticated Corsican cooking is served at Le Ressaç's restaurant, which offers Corsican standards such as cannelloni al brocciu, squid, and lamb stew on a good-value €19 menu; they also do pizzas (€7–9.50).

Sartène (Sartè) and around

Prosper Mérimée famously dubbed SARTÈNE “la plus corse des villes corses” (the most Corsican of Corsican towns), but the nineteenth-century German chronicler Gregorovius put a less complimentary spin on it when he described it as a “town peopled by demons”. Sartène hasn’t shaken off its hostile image, due in large part to a heavy presence of wealthy-looking godfather types. On the other hand it’s a smart, clean place, noticeably better groomed than many small Corsican towns, its principal income coming from Sartène wine, the best on the island. The main square doesn’t offer many diversions once you’ve explored the enclosed old town and prehistory museum, and the only time of year Sartène teems with tourists is at Easter for U Catenacciu, a Good Friday procession that packs the main square with onlookers.

Close to Sartène are some of the island’s best-known prehistoric sites, most notably Filitosa, the megaliths of Cauria and the Alignement de Palaggiu – Corsica’s largest array of prehistoric standing stones.

16

The Town

Place Porta – its official name, place de la Libération, has never caught on – forms Sartène’s nucleus. Once the arena for bloody vendettas, it’s now a well-kept square opening onto a wide terrace that overlooks the rippling green valley of the Rizzanese. Flanking the south side of place Porta is the church of Ste-Marie, built in the 1760s but completely restored to a smooth granitic appearance. Inside the church, the most notable feature is the weighty wooden cross and chair carried through the town by hooded penitents during the Easter Catenacciu procession.

A flight of steps to the left of the Hôtel de Ville, formerly the governor’s palace, leads past the post office to a ruined lookout tower, which is all that remains of the town’s twelfth-century ramparts. This apart, the best of the old town is to be found behind the Hôtel de Ville in the Santa Anna district, a labyrinth of constricted passageways and ancient fortress-like houses that rarely give any signs of life. Featuring few windows and often linked to their neighbours by balconies, these houses are entered by first-floor doors which would have been approached by ladders – dilapidated staircases have replaced these necessary measures against unwelcome intruders. To the left of rue des Frères-Bartoli are the strangest of all the vaulted passageways, where outcrops of rock block the paths between the ancient buildings. Just to the west of the Hôtel de Ville, signposted off the tiny place Maggiore, you’ll find the impasse Carababa, a remarkable architectural puzzle of a passageway cut through the awkwardly stacked houses.

Sartène’s only other cultural attraction is Musée de la Préhistoire Corse (closed at time of writing, pending a move to new premises across town; check with tourist office), Corsica's centre for archeological research. The museum contains a rather dry collection of mostly Neolithic and Torréen pottery fragments, with some bracelets from the Iron Age and painted ceramics from the thirteenth to sixteenth centuries.

Practicalities

Arriving in Sartène by bus, you'll be dropped either at the top of avenue Gabriel-Péri or at the end of cours Général-de-Gaulle. The tourist office, on cours Soeur Amélie (summer only Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2.30–6pm; ☎04.95.77.15.40), can help find accommodation in the area if the hotels listed below are full.

The only hotel in Sartène itself is Les Roches on avenue Jean-Jaurès, a large family-run place just below the old town (☎04.95.77.07.61, 🌐www.sartenehotel.fr; 📍); it commands panoramic views of the Vallée du Rizzanese and has a restaurant that serves hearty Corsican food. Otherwise try the Villa Piana, 1km out of town on the Propriano road (☎04.95.77.07.04, 🌐www.lavillapiana.com; 📍), an upmarket place, with a pool and tennis court, overlooking the Golfe de Valinco, or the even swankier, Swiss-owned U San Damianu (☎04.95.70.55.41, 🌐www.sandamianu.fr; 📍), just across the bridge from the vielle ville, beneath the convent of the same name. A three-star occupying a plum spot with spectacular views over the town, it offers all the comforts and amenities you'd expect for a hotel in this class, although it's a bit bland. The nearest campsite, U Farrandu, lies 1km down the main Propriano road (☎04.95.73.41.69; closed Nov–April).

As for restaurants, a dependable choice is the Restaurant du Cours (“Chez Jean”) at 20 cours Soeur Amélie (☎04.95.77.19.07), which serves wholesome, honest cuisine sartenaise (pork stews, stuffed courgettes and local liver sausage grilled over an open fire), as well as inexpensive pizzas, in a stone-walled inn. The house menus are priced around €20. For more refined local gastronomy, head down the mountainside to the Auberge Santa Barbara (☎04.95.77.09.66), 2km out of town on the Propriano road, where you can enjoy fine, authentic Sartenais dishes from both the coast and interior, served in a lovely garden. Seafood lovers should try the bream with aubergine caviar or cuttlefish in red wine; and leave room for the flan grandemère. Cafés cluster around place Porta, and are great places for crowd-watching.

The megalithic sites

Sparsely populated today, the rolling hills of the southwestern corner of Corsica are rich in prehistoric sites. The megaliths of Cauria, standing in ghostly isolation 10km southwest from Sartène, comprise the Dolmen de Fontanaccia, the best-preserved monument of its kind on Corsica, while the nearby alignments of Stantari and Renaggiu have an impressive congregation of statue-menhirs.

More than 250 menhirs can be seen northwest of Cauria at Palaggiu, another rewardingly remote site. Equally wild is the coast hereabouts, with deep clefts and coves providing some excellent spots for diving and secluded swimming.

The only public transport in this region is the twice-daily Ajaccio–Bonifacio bus.

Cauria

To reach the Cauria megalithic site, you need to turn off the N196 about 2km outside Sartène, at the Col de l'Albitrina (291m), taking the D48 towards Tizzano. Four kilometres along this road a left turning brings you onto a winding road through maquis, until eventually the Dolmen de Fontanaccia comes into view on the horizon, crowning the crest of a low hill amidst a sea of maquis. A blue sign at the parking space indicates the track to the dolmen, a fifteen-minute walk away.

Known to the locals as the Stazzona del Diavolu (Devil's Forge), a name that does justice to its enigmatic power, the Dolmen de Fontanaccia is in fact a burial chamber from around 2000 BC. This period was marked by a change in burial customs – whereas bodies had previously been buried in stone coffins in the ground, they were now placed above, in a mound of earth enclosed in a stone chamber. What you see today is a great stone table, comprising six huge granite blocks nearly 2m high, topped by a stone slab that remained after the earth eroded away.

The twenty “standing men” of the Alignement de Stantari, 200m to the east of the dolmen, date from the same period. All are featureless, except two which have roughly sculpted eyes and noses, with diagonal swords on their fronts and sockets in their heads where horns would probably have been attached.

Across a couple of fields to the south is the Alignement de Renaggiu, a gathering of forty menhirs standing in rows amid a small shadowy copse, set against the enormous granite outcrop of Punta di Cauria. Some of the menhirs have fallen, but all face north to south, a fact that seems to rule out any connection with a sun-related cult.

Palaggiu

To reach the Alignement de Palaggiu, the largest concentration of menhirs in Corsica, regain the D48 and head southwards past the Domaine la Mosconi vineyard (on your right, 3km after the Cauria turn-off), 1500m beyond which a green metal gate on the right side of the road marks the turning. From here a badly rutted dirt track leads another 1200m to the stones, lost in the maquis, with vineyards spread over the hills in the half-distance. Stretching in straight lines across the countryside like a battleground of soldiers, the 258 menhirs include three statue-menhirs with carved weapons and facial features – they are amidst the first line you come to. Dating from around 1800 BC, the statues give few clues as to their function, but it's a reasonable supposition that proximity to the sea was important – the famous Corsican archeologist Roger Grosjean's theory is that the statues were some sort of magical deterrent to invaders.

Bonifacio (Bonifaziu)

BONIFACIO enjoys a superbly isolated location at Corsica's southernmost point, a narrow peninsula of dazzling white limestone creating a town site unlike any other. The much-photographed haute ville, a maze of narrow streets flanked by tall Genoese tenements, rises seamlessly out of sheer cliffs that have been hollowed and striated by the wind and waves, while on the landward side the deep cleft between the peninsula and the mainland forms a perfect natural harbour. A haven for boats for centuries, this inlet is nowadays a chic marina that attracts yachts from around the Med. Separated from the rest of the island by a swathe of dense maquis, Bonifacio has maintained a certain temperamental detachment from the rest of Corsica, and is distinctly more Italian than French in atmosphere. The town retains Renaissance features found only here, and its inhabitants have their own dialect based on Ligurian, a legacy of the days when this was practically an independent Genoese colony.

Such a place has its inevitable drawbacks: exorbitant prices, overwhelming crowds in August and a commercial cynicism that's atypical of Corsica as a whole. However, the old town forms one of the most arresting spectacles in the Mediterranean, easily transcending all the tourist frippery that surrounds it, and warrants at least a day-trip. If you plan to come in peak season, try to get here early in the day before the bus parties arrive at around 10am.

Arrival, information and accommodation

Figari airport, 17km north of Bonifacio (☎04.95.71.10.10), handles flights from mainland France and a few charters from the UK. There's a seasonal bus service operated by Transports Rossi (☎04.95.71.00.11) that in theory should meet incoming flights, stopping at Bonifacio en route to Porto-Vecchio; otherwise, your only option is to take a taxi into town – around €45–50. If you're coming by bus from other parts of the island you'll be dropped at the car park by the marina, close to most of the hotels. The tourist office is up in the haute ville, in the Fort San Nicro at the bottom of rue F. Scamaroni (July–Sept daily 9am–8pm; Oct–June Mon–Fri 9am–12.30pm & 2–5.15pm; ☎04.95.73.11.88, 🌐www.bonifacio.fr); they can check for you which hotels have vacancies. Cars may be rented from Avis, quai Banda del Ferro ☎04.95.73.01.28; Citer, quai Noel-Beretti ☎04.95.73.13.16; Hertz, quai Banda del Ferro ☎04.95.73.06.41. All of the above also have branches at the airport. If you need to change money, note that Bonifacio's only ATM, at the Société Générale on the quai J. Comparetti, frequently runs out of cash, so get there early in the day or you'll be at the mercy of the rip-off bureaux de change dotted around the town. Bomiboom.com, also on quai Comparetti, offers pricey Internet access (€0.15/min).

Finding a place to stay can be a chore, as Bonifacio's hotels are quickly booked up in high season; for a room near the centre, reserve well in advance. Better still, save yourself the trouble, and a considerable amount of money, by finding a room somewhere else and travelling here for the day; tariffs in this town are the highest on the island. The same applies to the large campsites dotted along the road to Porto-Vecchio, which can get very crowded.

Hotels

La Caravelle 35 quai J. Comparetti
☎04.95.73.00.03, 🌐www.hotel-caravelle-corse.com. Long-established place in prime location on the quayside, whose standard rooms are on the small side for the price. 7

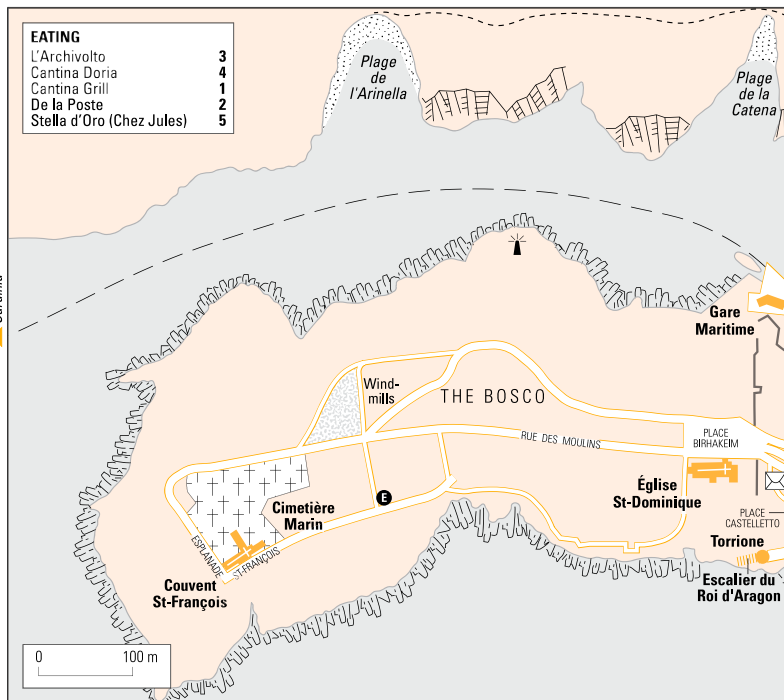

Centre Nautique on the marina ☎04.95.73.02.11,
🌐www.centre-nautique.com. Chic but relaxed

▲ Haute ville, Bonifacio

hotel on the waterfront, fitted out with mellow wood and nautical charts. All rooms are tastefully furnished and consist of two storeys connected with a spiral staircase. The best upmarket option in town. 7–8

Des Étrangers 4 av Sylvère-Bohn
☎04.95.73.01.09, ☎04.95.73.16.97. Simple rooms (the costlier ones have TV and a/c) facing the main road, just up the main Porto-Vecchio road from the port. Nothing special, but pretty good value for Bonifacio. April–Oct. 5

Le Roy d'Aragon 13 quai J. Comparetti ☎ 04.95.73.03.99, 🌐 www.royaragon.com. A pleasant three-star with contemporary furnishings overlooking the marina. Some of the rooms are small, but the pricier ones have sunny interconnecting terraces looking across the port; and they do better than average off-season discounts. 6

Santa Teresa quartier Saint-François ☎ 04.95.73.11.32, 🌐 www.hotel-santateresa.com. Large three-star on the cliff top overlooking Cimetière Marin, worth a mention for its stupendous views across the straits to Sardinia. Not all the rooms are sea-facing though, so ask for “vue mer avec balcon” when you book. 7

Campsites

L'Araguina av Sylvère-Bohn ☎ 04.95.73.02.96. Closest place to town, but unwelcoming, cramped in season, and with inadequate washing and toilet facilities. Avoid unless desperate. That said, it's undoubtedly the most convenient if you're back-packing. April–Sept.

Campo di Liccia 3km north towards Porto-Vecchio, ☎ 04.95.73.03.09. Well shaded and large, so you're guaranteed a place. April–Oct.

Pian del Fosse 4km out of town on the rte de Santa Manza ☎ 04.95.73.16.34. Big three-star site that recently had a makeover. Very peaceful and quiet in June and September, and well placed for the beaches. April to mid-Oct.

The Town

Apart from the cafés, hotels and restaurants of quai Comparetti, the only attraction in the villie basse is the marina's aquarium (daily: May, June, Sept & Oct 10am–8pm, July & Aug 10am–midnight; €4), where a solitary blue lobster is the star attraction. At the far end lies the port where ferries leave for Sardinia the inhabitants used to climb up a ladder which they would pull up behind them to prevent a surprise attack, while the ground floor was used as a stable and grain store.

Cutting across rue du Palais de Garde brings you to the church of Ste-Marie-Majeure, originally Romanesque but restored in the eighteenth century, though the richly sculpted belfry dates from the fourteenth century. The facade is hidden by a loggia where the Genoese municipal officers used to dispense justice in the days of the republic. The church's treasure, a relic of the True Cross, was saved from a shipwreck in the Straits of Bonifacio; for centuries after, the citizens would take the relic to the edge of the cliff and pray for calm seas whenever storms raged. The relic is kept in the sacristy, along with an ivory cask containing relics of St Boniface, and you'll only be able to get a glimpse if you can find someone to open the room for you.

South of here, rue Doria leads towards the Bosco (see below); at the end of this road a left down rue des Pachas will bring you to the Torrione, a 35-metre-high lookout post built in 1195 on the site of Count Bonifacio's castle. Descending the cliff from here, the Escalier du Roi d'Aragon's 187 steps (June–Sept daily 11am–5.30pm; €2) were said to have been built in one night by the Aragonese in an attempt to gain the town in 1420, but in fact they had already been in existence for some time and were used by the people to fetch water from a well.

The Bosco

To the west of the tower lies the Bosco, a quarter named after the wood that used to cover the far end of the peninsula in the tenth century. In those days a community of hermits dwelt here, but nowadays the limestone plateau is open and desolate. The only sign of life comes from the military training camp where young Corsicans sweat out their national service. The entrance to the Bosco is marked by the church of St-Dominique, a rare example of Corsican Gothic architecture – it was built in 1270, most probably by the Templars, and later handed over to the Dominicans.

Beyond the church, rue des Moulins leads on to the ruins of three mills dating from 1283, two of them decrepit, the third restored. Behind them stands a memorial to the 750 people who died when a troopship named Sémillante ran aground here in 1855, on its way to the Crimea, one of the many disasters wreaked by the notoriously windy straits.

The tip of the plateau is occupied by the Cimetière Marin, its white crosses standing out sharply against the deep blue of the sea. Open until sundown, the cemetery is a fascinating place to explore, with its flamboyant mausoleums displaying a jumble of architectural ornamentations: stuccoed facades, Gothic arches and classical columns. Next to the cemetery stands the Couvent St-François, allegedly founded after St Francis sought shelter in a nearby cave – the story goes that the convent was the town's apology to the holy man, over whom a local maid had nearly poured a bucket of slops. Immediately to the south, the Esplanade St-François commands fine views across the bay to Sardinia.

Eating, drinking and nightlife

Eating possibilities in Bonifacio might seem unlimited, but it's best to avoid the chintzy restaurants in the marina, few of which merit their exorbitant prices – the places in the haute ville are less pretentious. For a snack, try the boulangerie-pâtisserie Faby, 4 rue St-Jean-Baptiste in the haute ville, a tiny local bakery serving Bonifacien treats such as pain des morts (sweet buns with walnuts and raisins), fugazzi (galettes flavoured with eau de vie, orange, lemon and aniseed) and migliacci (buns made with fresh ewe's cheese), in addition to the usual range of spinach and brocciu bastelles, baked here in the traditional way – on stone. For a scrumptious Bonifacien breakfast you can buy a pain de morts warm out of the oven at the Pâtisserie Sorba (follow the smell of baking bread to the bottom of the Montée Rastello steps) and take it to Bar du Quai a couple of doors down.

The bars and cafés further along quai Comparetti are the social focus for the town and what little nightlife there is revolves around the terraces here. Bonifacio's only nightclub was blown up by nationalist bombers a couple of years back, so for a real nuit blanche you'll have to head for Porto-Vecchio.

Restaurants

L'Archivolto rue de l'Archivolto ☎ 04.95.73.17.48.

With its candlelit, antique- and junk-filled interior, this would be the most commendable place to eat in the haute ville were the cooking a little less patchy and the prices fairer. But it still gets packed out – advance reservation is recommended. Lunch menus around €15; evening à la carte only, around €28–30 for three courses. Open Easter–Oct.

 Cantina Doria 27 rue Doria ☎ 04.95.73.50.49. Down-to-earth Corsican specialities at down-to-earth prices. Their popular three-course €15 menu – which includes the house speciality, aubergines à la bonifacienne – offers unbeatable value for the haute ville, though you'll soon bump up your bill if you succumb to the temptations of the excellent wine selection.

 Cantina Grill quai Banda del Ferro ☎ 04.95.70.49.86. Same patron as the popular Cantina Doria in the citadelle, but down in the marina and with a better choice of seafood (octopus risotto, swordfish steaks, fish soup). They also do succulent grillades with a selection of different sauces. The food is dependably fresh, well prepared and presented, and the prices great value.

De la Poste 6 rue F. Scamaroni. A cheap and cheerful pizza place serving oven-baked lasagne, spaghetti al brocciu, stuffed mussels and delicious pizzas (€10).

Stella d'Oro (Chez Jules) 7 rue Doria, near église St-Jean-Baptiste. À la carte place with stone walls and wood beams, whose top-notch Corsican dishes include the definitive merrizzane (stuffed aubergine) – the local speciality. They also do a famous spaghetti in lobster sauce and ravioli brocciu. Midday menu at €22; count on €35 à la carte.

Around Bonifacio

There are impressive views of the citadelle from the cliffs at the head of the montée Rastello (reached via the pathway running left from the top of the steps), but they're not a patch on the spectacular panorama to be had from the sea. Throughout the day, a flotilla of excursion boats ferries visitors out to the best vantage points, taking in a string of caves and other landmarks only accessible by water en route, including the Îles Lavezzi, the scattering of small islets where the troop ship Sémillante was shipwrecked in 1855, now designated as a nature reserve. The whole experience of bobbing around to an amplified running commentary is about as touristy as Bonifacio gets, but it's well worth enduring just to round the mouth of the harbour and see the vieille ville, perched atop the famous chalk cliffs. The Lavezzi islets themselves are surrounded by wonderfully clear seawater, offering Corsica's best snorkelling. On your way back, you skirt the famous Île Cavallo, or "millionaire's island", where the likes of Princess Caroline of Monaco and other French and Italian glitterati have luxury hideaways. The boats leave from the east side of the marina: tickets cost €10–12 for trips to the caves, and around €20–25 for the longer excursions to Lavezzi.

The beaches along this part of the coast are generally smaller and less appealing than most in southern Corsica, although those fringing the Golfe de Santa Manza, to the north, are set amid some fine scenery. On the southernmost tip of the island, reached via a narrow but easily motorable road, a trio of small coves are the most popular beaches within easy reach of town. The first, plage de Pianterella, 7km east of Bonifacio, is also the dullest, backed by an unsavoury swamp. Walk south around the headland for fifteen minutes and you'll reach the more pleasant plage de Sperone, a pearl-white cove with calm, shallow water that's ideal for kids. However, this beach gets jam-packed in the summer and you may want to venture further along the coast to Calalonga, where you stand a better chance of escaping the crowds. To get there, head east out of town on the D58, and take the first turning right, after around 3km.

By far the most photogenic beach in this area is Rondinara, a perfect shell-shaped cove of turquoise water enclosed by dunes and a pair of twin headlands. Thankfully, it's well off the beaten track, although the recent appearance of a surfaced road all the way to the beach could well change that. To see it at its emptiest, get here early in the morning. The turning for Rondinara is signposted 10km north along the N198.

Porto-Vecchio and around

Set on a hillock overlooking a beautiful deep blue bay, PORTO-VECCHIO, 25km north of Bonifacio, was rated by James Boswell as one of "the most distinguished harbours in Europe". It was founded in 1539 as a second Genoese stronghold on the east coast, Bastia being well established in the north. The site was perfect: close to the unexploited and fertile plain, it benefited from secure high land and a sheltered harbour, although the mosquito population spread malaria and wiped out the first Ligurian settlers within months. Things began to take off mainly thanks to the cork industry, which still thrived well into the twentieth century. Today most revenue comes from tourists, the vast majority of them well-heeled Italians who flock here for the fine outlying beaches: spectacular stretches of shoreline lie to the south, with Palombaggia the most popular and Golfe de Santa Giulia coming a close second, while to the north, the deep inlet of the Golfe de Porto-Vecchio boasts some fine pine-backed strands. To the northwest, the little town of Zonza makes a good base for exploring the dramatic forest that surrounds the route de Bavella.

Around the centre of town there's not much to see, apart from the well-preserved fortress and the small grid of ancient streets backing onto the main place de la République. East of the square you can't miss the Porte Génoise, which frames a delightful expanse of sea and salt pans and through which you'll find the quickest route down to the modern marina, lined with cafés and restaurants.

Practicalities

Porto-Vecchio doesn't have a bus station; instead, the various companies who come here stop and depart outside their agents' offices on the edge of the old town. Coming from Bastia or the eastern plain, you'll be dropped at the Corsicatours office on 7 rue Jean-Jaurès; services to and from Ajaccio via Bonifacio, Sartène and Propriano stop outside the Trinitours office on rue Pasteur, just north of the citadelle; finally, the minibus connecting Porto-Vecchio with Ajaccio, via the chief villages of Bavella and Alta Rocca, pulls in at Île de Beauté Voyages, at 13 rue Général-de-Gaulle, near the post office. From here it's a five-minute walk to the main square, place de l'Hôtel-de-Ville, site of the efficient tourist office (June & Sept Mon-Sat 9am-1pm & 3-6pm; July & Aug Mon–Sat 9am–8pm, Sun 9am–1pm; Oct–May Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, Sat 9am–noon; ☎04.95.70.09.58, 🌐www.accueil-portovecchio.com), where you can consult timetables for local buses.

Accommodation is easy to come by except in high summer. One of the least expensive places is the Panorama, 12 rue Jean-Nicoli, just above the old town (☎04.95.70.07.96, 📞04.95.70.46.78; 📍), which isn't all that well maintained but offers the cheapest beds in the centre of town. Moving up a bracket, the San Giovanni (☎04.95.70.22.55, 🌐www.hotel-san-giovanni.com; 📍), a couple of kilometres south of Porto-Vecchio on the D659 towards Arca, has thirty comfortable chalet-style rooms set in landscaped gardens, with a pool and tennis courts. It's well run, peaceful and good value for money.

Of the many campsites in the area, Matonara (☎04.95.70.37.05, 🌐www.lamatonara.com), just north of the centre at the Quatre-Chemins intersection, is the most easily accessible. Lying within easy reach of the 'Hyper U' supermarket, it's large and shaded by stands of cork trees. Otherwise, try the better-equipped Arutoli on route de l'Ospedale, 2km northwest of town along the D368 (☎04.95.70.12.73, 🌐www.arutoli.com), which has an enormous pool.

For quality local food, try U Sputinu's copious grande assiette – a selection of quality charcuterie, cheese, spinach pasties (chassons herbes), savoury fritters (migliacciù) and mint omelettes (€14) – served on rustic wooden tables in the little square in front of the church. L'Antigu (☎04.95.70.39.33), on rue Borgo is a more gastronomic Corsican place with a wonderful terrasse panoramique surveying the gulf. It offers three menus (at €17, €21 and €35) of refined regional dishes using only locally sourced ingredients. Plenty of other places to eat are clustered around the marina and port de commerce, but none can rustle up pizzas more delectable than those served at U Corsu (☎04.95.70.13.91). Reserve early for a sea view on their pieds dans l'eau terrace.

Nightlife in Porto-Vecchio centres on the main square in the old town where, in the summer, hordes of Italians strut their stuff. The only bona fide club in the area is Via Notte (☎04.95.72.02.12, 🌐www.vianotte.com), a glitzy Italian-oriented place that stages top Euro DJs in July and August (when admission charges and drink prices go through the roof).

Golfe de Porto-Vecchio

Much of the coast of the Golfe de Porto-Vecchio and its environs is characterized by ugly development and hectares of swampland, yet some of the clearest, bluest sea and whitest beaches on Corsica are also found around here. The most frequented of these, Palombaggia and Santa Giulia, can be reached by bus from the town in summer, timetables for which are posted in the tourist office (see opposite); at other times you'll need your own transport. The same applies to the Casteddu d'Araggiu, one of the island's best-preserved Bronze Age sites, which stands on a ledge overlooking the gulf to the north of town.

Heading south of Porto-Vecchio along the main N198, take the turning signposted for Palombaggia, a golden semicircle of sand edged by short twisted umbrella pines that are punctuated by fantastically shaped red rocks. This might be the most beautiful beach on the island were it not for the crowds, which pour on to it in such numbers that a wattle fence has had to be erected to protect the dunes. A few kilometres further along the same road takes you to Santa Giulia, a sweeping sandy bay backed by a lagoon. Despite the presence of several holiday villages and facilities for windsurfing and other, noisier watersports, crowds are less of a problem here, and the shallow bay is an extraordinary turquoise colour.

North of Porto-Vecchio, the first beach worth a visit is San Ciprianu, a half-moon bay of white sand, reached by turning left off the main road at the Elf petrol station. Carry on for another 7km, and you'll come to the even more picturesque beach at Pinarellu, an uncrowded, long sweep of soft white sand with a Genoese watchtower and, like the less inspiring beaches immediately north of here, benefiting from the spectacular backdrop of the Massif de l'Ospédale.

The coast between Porto-Vecchio and Solenzara is also strewn with prehistoric monuments. The most impressive of these, Casteddu d'Aragiu, lies 12km north along the D759. From the site's car park (signposted off the main road), it's a twenty-minute stiff climb through maquis and scrubby woodland to the ruins. Built in 2000 BC and inhabited by a community that lived by farming and hunting, the casteddu consists of a complex of chambers built into a massive circular wall of pink granite, splashed with vivid green patches of lichen, from the top of which the views over the gulf are superb.

The route de Bavella

Starting from the picture-postcard-pretty mountain village of ZONZA, 40km northwest of Porto-Vecchio, and running northeast towards the coast, the D268 – known locally as the route de Bavella – is perhaps the most dramatic road in all Corsica. Well served by buses, it also affords one of the simplest approaches to the spectacular landscapes of the interior. The road penetrates a dense expanse of old pine and chestnut trees as it rises steadily to the Col de Bavella (1218m), where a towering statue of Notre-Dame-des-Neiges marks the windswept pass itself. An amazing panorama of peaks and forests spreads out from the col: to the northwest the serrated granite ridge of the Cirque de Gio Agostino is dwarfed by the pink pinnacles of the Aiguilles de Bavella; behind soars Monte Incudine.

Just below the pass, the seasonal hamlet of BAVELLA comprises a handful of congenial cafés, corrugated-iron-roofed chalets and hikers' hostels from where you can follow a series of waymarked trails to nearby viewpoints. Deservedly the most popular of these is the two-hour walk to the Trou de la Bombe, a circular opening that pierces the Paliri crest of peaks. From the car park behind the Auberge du Col (see below), follow the red-and-white waymarks of GR20 for 800m, then head right when you see orange splashes. Those with a head for heights should climb right into the hole for the dizzying panorama down the sheer 500m cliff on the other side. Even more amazing views may be had from the summit of the adjacent peak, Calanca Murata, which you can scale after a steep forty-minute haul from the head of the ravine just below Trou de la Bombe. Small stone cairns mark the route. At no stage do you need to climb, but the views, which take in the entire Bavella massif to the west and a huge sweep of the eastern plains, are on a par with those from any of the island's major peaks.

From Bavella, it's a steep descent through what's left of the Forêt de Bavella, which was devastated by fire in 1960 but still harbours some huge Laricio pines. The winding road offers numerous breathtaking glimpses of the Aiguilles de Bavella and plenty of places to pull over for a swim in the river.

The best place to stay locally is Zonza, which has a cluster of hotels, all with more than decent restaurants, such as Le Tourisme, set back on the west side of the Quenza road north of the village (☎04.95.78.67.72, 🌐www.hoteldutourisme.fr; 📍4-5; April–Oct), or L'Aiglon in the village centre (☎04.95.78.67.72, 🌐www.aiglonhotel.com; 📍4; April–Dec). For hikers, clean and comfortable dormitory accommodation is available at the Auberge du

Col (☎04.95.72.09.87, ☎04.95.72.16.48; 📍; April–Oct), the best set-up of the small gîtes d'étapes at Bavella. Regular buses run to Zonza from Ajaccio, Propriano, Sartène and Porto-Vecchio; for the current timetables ask at a tourist office.

Aléria

Built on the estuary at the mouth of the River Tavignano on the island's east coast, 40km southeast of Corte along the N200, ALÉRIA was first settled in 564 BC by a colony of Greek Phocceans as a trading port for the copper and lead they mined and the wheat, olives and grapes they farmed. After an interlude of Carthaginian rule, the Romans arrived in 259 BC, built a naval base and re-established its importance in the Mediterranean. Aléria remained the east coast's principal port right up until the eighteenth century. Little is left of the historic town except Roman ruins and a thirteenth-century Genoese fortress, which stands high against a background of chequered fields and green vineyards. To the south, a strip of modern buildings straddling the main road makes up the modern town, known as Cateraggio, but it's the village set on the hilltop just west of here that holds most interest. Aléria/Cateraggio can be reached on any of the daily buses running between Bastia and the south of the island via the east coast.

To sample the famous Nustale oysters hauled fresh each day from the nearby Étang de Diane lagoon, head 1.2km north and look for a signboard on the right (east) side of the road pointing the way down a surfaced lane to the Aux Coquillages de Diane restaurant (☎04.95.57.04.55). Resting on stilts above the water, it serves a great-value €21 seafood platter, featuring clams, mussels and a terrine made from dried mullet's eggs called poutargue – the kind of food one imagines the Romans must have feasted on when they farmed the étang two millennia ago.

The site

Before looking around the ruins of the ancient city, set aside an hour for the Musée Jérôme Carcopino (mid-May to Sept daily 8am–noon & 2–7pm; Oct to mid-May Mon–Sat 8am–noon & 2–5pm; €2), housed in the Fort Matra. It houses remarkable finds from the Roman site, including Hellenic and Punic coins, rings, belt links, elaborate oil lamps decorated with Christian symbols, Attic plates and a second-century marble bust of Jupiter Ammon. Etruscan bronzes fill another room, with jewellery and armour from the fourth to the second century BC.

A dusty track leads from here to the Roman site itself (closes 30min before museum; same ticket), where most of the excavation was done as recently as the 1950s, even though the French novelist Prosper Mérimée had noticed signs of the Roman settlement during his survey of the island in 1830. Most of the site still lies beneath ground and is undergoing continuous digging, but the balneum (bathhouse), the base of Augustus's triumphal arch, the foundations of the forum and traces of shops have already been unearthed.

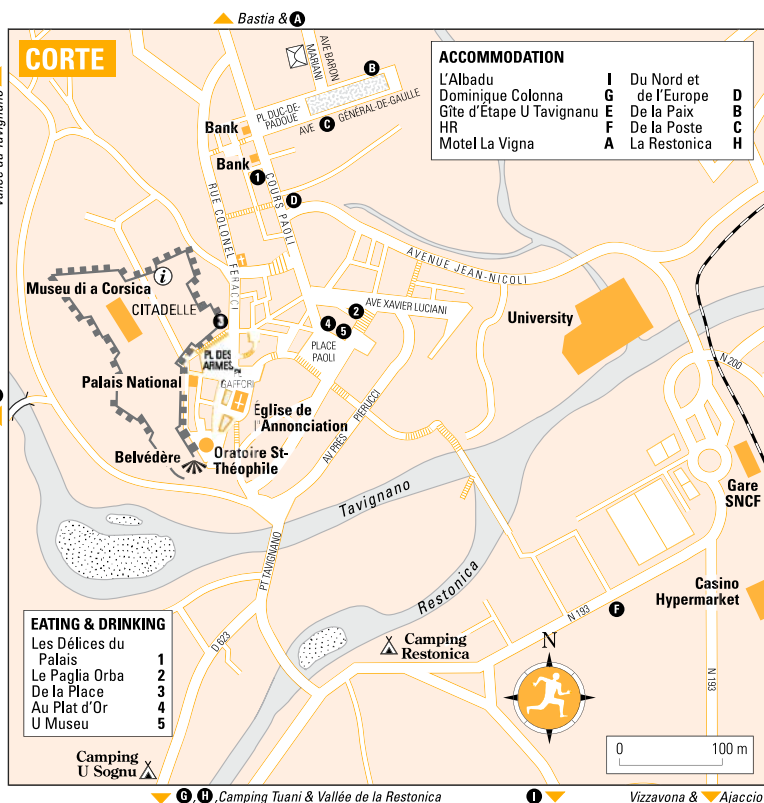

First discovered was the arch, which formed the entrance to the governor's residence – the praetorium – on the western edge of the forum. In the adjacent balneum, a network of reservoirs and cisterns, the caldarium bears traces of the underground pipes that would have heated the room, and a patterned mosaic floor is visible inside the neighbouring chamber. To the north of the site lie the foundation walls of a large house, while at the eastern end of the forum the foundations of the temple can be seen. At its northern edge, over a row of column stumps, are the foundations of the apse of an early Christian church.

Some traces of the Greek settlement, comprising the remains of an acropolis, have been discovered further to the east. It's believed that the main part of the town would have extended from the present site over to this acropolis and down to the Tavignano estuary. The port was located to the east of the main road, where the remnants of a second-century bathhouse have been found.

Corte (Corti)

Stacked up the side of a wedge-shaped crag against a spectacular backdrop of granite mountains, CORTE epitomizes l'âme corse, or "Corsican soul" – a small town marooned amid a grandiose landscape, where a spirit of dogged defiance and patriotism is never far from the surface. Corte has been the home of Corsican nationalism since the first National Constitution was drawn up here in 1731, and was also where Pascal Paoli, "U Babbu di u Patria" (Father of the Nation), formed the island's first democratic government later in the eighteenth century. Self-consciously insular and grimly proud, it can seem an inhospitable place at times, although the presence of the island's only university lightens the atmosphere noticeably during term-time, when the bars and cafés lining its long main street fill with students. For the outsider, Corte's charm is concentrated in the tranquil haute ville, where the forbidding citadelle – site of the island's premier museum – presides over a warren of narrow, cobbled streets. Immediately behind it, the Restonica and Tavignano gorges afford easy access to some of the region's most memorable mountain scenery, best enjoyed from the marked trails that wind through them.

Arrival, information and accommodation

Buses from Ajaccio and Bastia stop in the centre of town on avenue Xavier-Luciani; the gare SNCF (☎04.95.46.00.97) is at the foot of the hill near the university, a ten-minute walk from the centre and campsites. If you're driving, the best place to park is at the top of avenue Jean-Nicoli, the road which leads into town from Ajaccio. Corte's tourist office is situated just inside the main gates of the citadelle, near the museum (Jan–May & Oct–Dec Mon–Fri 9am–noon & 2–6pm, plus Sat in May; June & Sept Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–7pm; July & Aug daily 9am–8pm; ☎04.95.46.26.70, 🌐www.corte-tourisme.com). In the same building is the information office of the Parc Régional (same hours and phone number).

Finding a place to stay can be a problem from mid-June until early September, when it's advisable to book in advance. With three campsites in the town, and a couple a short drive away, tent space is at less of a premium, although the sites across the river get crowded in high season.

Hotels

 L'Albadu ancienne rte d'Ajaccio, 2.5km southwest of town ☎04.95.46.24.55, ☎04.95.46.13.08. Simply furnished rooms with showers (shared toilets) on a working farm-cum-equestrian centre. Warm family atmosphere, beautiful horses, fine views and top Corsican speciality food. Advance reservation essential. 2

Dominique Colonna vallée de la Restonica, 2km south of town ☎04.95.45.25.65, 🌐www.dominique-colonna.com. The more modern of this pair of jointly owned luxury auberges (see below) set amid pine woods next to the stream. With less character than its neighbour (see La Restonica below), but smart and efficient and with all the mod cons you'd expect of a three-star. Closed Nov to mid-March. 5–8

HR allée du 9-Septembre ☎04.95.45.11.11, 🌐www.hotel-hr.com. This converted concrete-block gendarmérie, 200m southwest of the gare SNCF, looks grim from the outside, but its 125 rooms are comfortable enough and its rates rock-bottom; bathroom-less options are the best deal. No credit cards. 2–3

Motel La Vigna chemin de Saint-Panrace ☎04.95.46.02.19. Tucked away on the leafy edge of town, this small but rather swish students' hall of residence is vacated between early June and the end of September and converted into a motel. The rooms are simple and lacking character by Corte standards, but clean and all en suite, with balconies. Open June–Sept. 3

Du Nord et de l'Europe 22 cours Paoli ☎04.95.46.00.33, 🌐www.hoteldunord-corte.com. Pleasant, clean place right in the centre. Despite recent renovation, the building has oodles of charm and the (variously priced) rooms are large for the tariffs. Reception in the Café du Cours next door. 6

De la Paix 1 av Général-de-Gaulle ☎04.95.46.06.72, 📧socoget@orange.fr. Large, smart and central, in an elegant part of town. Their pricier rooms have large balconies and TVs. No credit cards. 4

De la Poste 2 place du Duc-de-Padoue ☎04.95.46.01.37. The cheapest rooms in the centre, in a huge old building that opens onto a quiet square just off the main drag. Comfortable enough, but on the gloomy side. 2

 La Restonica vallée de la Restonica, 2km southwest from town ☎04.95.46.09.58, 🌐www.aubergestonica.com. Sumptuous comfort in a wood-lined riverside hotel set up by a former French national footballer, Dominique Colonna, who bought it after winning the lottery. There's a large pool and garden terrace. Good value in summer, but not such a great deal in winter, since rates are the same year round. 5

Hostels and campsites

L'Albadu 2.5km southwest of town
☎04.95.46.24.55. Perfect little camping à la ferme, situated on a hillside above Corte. Basic, but much nicer than any of the town sites, and well worth the walk.

Gîte d'Étape U Tavignano ("Chez M. Gambini") behind the citadelle ☎04.95.46.16.85. Run-of-the-mill hikers' hostel with small dorms and a relaxing garden terrace that looks over the valley. Peaceful, secluded, and the cheapest place to stay after the campsites. Follow the signs for the Tavignano trail (marked with orange spots of paint) around the back of the citadelle. €17 per bed (includes breakfast).

Restonica 500m south of the town centre. Middle-sized site on the riverside, close to town, with terraces close to the water plenty of shade and its own café-bar.

Tuani vallée de la Restonica, 7km south-east ☎04.95.46.11.62. Too far up the valley without your own car, but the wildest and most atmospheric of the campsites around Corte, overlooking a rushing stream, deep in the woods. Ideally placed for an early start on Monte Rotondo. Basic facilities, although they do have a cheerful little café serving good bruschettas and other hot snacks.

U Sognu rte de la Restonica ☎04.95.46.09.07. At the foot of the valley, a 15min walk from the centre. Has a good view of the citadelle, plenty of poplar trees for shade, and toilets in a converted barn. There's also a small bar and restaurant (in summer).

The Town

Corte is a very small town whose centre effectively consists of one street, cours Paoli, which runs from place Paoli at the southern end, a tourist-friendly zone packed with cafés, restaurants and market stalls, to place du Duc-de-Padoue, an elegant square of fin-de-siècle buildings.

The old haute ville is next to the cours Paoli, reached by climbing one of the cobbled ramps on the west side of the street or by taking the steep rue Scoliscia from place Paoli. Place Gaffori, the hub of the haute ville, is dominated by a statue of General Gian-Pietru Gaffori pointing vigorously towards the church. On its base a bas-relief depicts the siege of the Gaffori house by the Genoese, who attacked in 1750 when the general was out of town and his wife Faustina was left holding the fort. Their house stands right behind, and you can clearly make out the bullet marks made by the besiegers.

Opposite the house is the church of the Annunciation, built in 1450 but restored in the seventeenth century. Inside, there's a delicately carved pulpit and a hideous wax statue of St Theophilus, patron of the town, on his deathbed. The saint's birthplace – behind the church in place Théophile – is marked by the Oratoire St-Théophile, a large arcaded building which commands a magnificent view across the gorges of Tavignano and Restonica.

For the best view of the citadelle, follow the signs uphill to the viewing platform, the Belvédère, which faces the medieval tower, suspended high above the town on its pinnacle of rock and dwarfed by the immense crags behind. The platform also gives a wonderful view of the converging rivers and encircling forest – a summer bar adds to the attraction.

Just above the place Gaffori, left of the gateway to the citadelle, stands the Palais National, a great, solid block of a mansion that's the sole example of Genoese civic architecture in Corte. Having served as the seat of Paoli's government for a while, it became the Università di Corsica in 1765, offering free education to all (Napoleon's father studied here). In the spirit of the Enlightenment, Franciscan monks taught the contemporary social thought of philosophers such as Rousseau and Montesquieu as well as traditional subjects like theology, mathematics and law. The university closed in 1769 when the French took over the island after the Treaty of Versailles, not to be resurrected until 1981. Today several modern buildings have been added, among them the Institut Universitaire d'Études Corses, dedicated to the study of Corsican history and culture.

The Museu di a Corsica and citadelle

The monumental gateway just behind the Palais National leads from place Poilu into Corte's Genoese citadelle, whose lower courtyard is dominated by the modern buildings of Museu di a Corsica (April–June 19 & Sept 20–Oct daily except Tues 10am–6pm; June 20–Sept 19 daily 10am–8pm; Nov–March Tues–Sat 10am–6pm; €5.30), a state-of-the-art museum inaugurated in 1997 to house the collection of ethnographer Révérend Père Louis Doazan, a Catholic priest who spent 27 years amassing a vast array of objects relating to the island's traditional transhumant and peasant past. Gifted to the state in 1972, the three thousand pieces he collected remained in storage for nearly a quarter of a century until a suitable site could be found to exhibit them. The austere building certainly makes the most of its historically significant location at the heart of the island, but ultimately upstages the lacklustre selection of old farm implements, craft tools and peasant dress inside it.

The museum's entrance charge also admits you to Corte's principal landmark, the citadelle. The only such fortress in the interior of the island, the Genoese structure served as a base for the Foreign Legion from 1962 until 1984, but now houses a pretty feeble exhibition of nineteenth-century photographs. It's reached by a huge staircase of Restonica marble, which leads to the medieval tower known as the Nid d'Aigle (Eagle's Nest). The fortress, of which the tower is the only original part, was built by Vincentello d'Istria in 1420, and the barracks were added during the reign of Louis-Philippe (1830–48). These were later converted into a prison, in use as recently as World War II, when the Italian occupiers incarcerated Corsican Resistance fighters in tiny cells. Adjacent to the cells is a former watchtower which at the time of Paoli's government was inhabited by the hangman.

Eating and drinking

Corte has only three restaurants worthy of note, plus the usual handful of pizzerias and crêperies. As a rule of thumb, avoid anywhere fronted by gaudy food photographs and multilingual menus; their dishes may be cheap, but they offer poor value for money – for not much more you'll eat a lot better in one of the places listed below.

Cafés and bars

Les Délices du Palais cours Paoli. Frilly little crêperie-cum-salon-de-thé whose bakery sells a selection of delicious Corsican patisserie: try their colzone (spinach pasties), or brocciu baked in flaky chestnut-flour pastry.

De la Place place Paoli. On the shady side of the main square, this is the place to hole up for a spot of crowd-watching over a barquettes de frites (a pile of chips) and draught Pietra.

Restaurants

 U Museu rampe Ribanelle in the haute ville at the foot of the citadelle, 30m down rue Colonel-Feracci ☎04.95.61.08.36. Congenial and well-situated place. Try the €15 menu cose, featuring lasagne in wild boar sauce, trout, and tripettes (imaginatively translated as "trips"). Their hot goat's cheese (chèvre chaud) salad, filling enough for two, comes on a groaning bed of richly flavoured potatoes. Great value for money, atmospheric terrace and the house wines are local AOC.

Le Paglia Orba 1 av Xavier-Luciani ☎04.95.61.07.89. Quality Corsican cooking at very reasonable prices, served on a raised terrace overlooking the street. Most people come for their succulent pizzas (€6–8), but they also offer plenty of choice à la carte, particularly for vegetarians. Pan-fried veal served with stozapreti (nuggets of brocciu and herbs) is their plat de résistance. Menus from €16.

Au Plat d'Or place Paoli ☎04.95.46.27.16. The classiest option in Corte: Corsican specialities made from locally produced ingredients, and served under awnings on the shady side of place Paoli. Meat and seafood dishes are their forte, but they also do pizzas, pastas and home-made desserts. Menu for €23 (four courses). Closed Sun.

Central Corsica

Central Corsica is a nonstop parade of stupendous scenery, and the best way to immerse yourself in it is to get onto the region's ever-expanding network of trails and forest tracks. The ridge of granite mountains forming the spine of the island is closely followed by the epic GR20 footpath, which can be picked up from various villages and is scattered with refuge huts, most of them offering no facilities except shelter. For the less active there also are plenty of roads penetrating deep into the forests of Vizzavona, La Restonica and Rospa Sorba, crossing lofty passes that provide exceptional views across the island.

The most popular attractions in the centre, though, are the magnificent gorges of La Restonica and Tavignano, both within easy reach of Corte.

Gorges du Tavignano

A deep cleft of ruddy granite beginning 5km to the west of Corte, the Gorges du Tavignano offers one of central Corsica's great walks, marked in yellow paint flashes alongside the broad cascading River Tavignano. You can pick up the trail from opposite the Chapelle Sainte-Croix in Corte's haute ville and follow it as far as the Lac de Nino, 30km west of the town, where it joins the GR20. There's a refuge, A Sega, 15km along the route.

From the trailhead in Corte, the old mule track steadily climbs the steep left bank of the river across a bare hillside scarred with the remains of old farming terraces. Massive rocks border the river below, which you can scramble down to in places for a secluded swim. Some 5km into the walk, the gorge proper begins and the scenery becomes wilder, with rock faces surging up on each side. Passing through patches of dense maquis interspersed with evergreen oak and chestnut trees, you gradually rejoin the river, crossed at the Passarelle de Rossolino footbridge after around two and a half hours. Once on the right bank, the mountainside grows steeper as the path skirts the Ravin de Bruscu, swathed in forest that was severely damaged by fire in 2000, then winds gently above the stream to the refuge, reached after five and a half hours from Corte.

Gorges de la Restonica

The glacier-moulded rocks and deep pools of the Gorges de la Restonica make the D936 running southwest from Corte the busiest mountain road in Corsica – if you come in high summer, expect to encounter traffic jams all the way up to the car park at the Bergeries de Grotelle, 15km from Corte. Mini-buses run from Corte to the Bergeries, costing €12; taxis charge around €35. The gorges begin after 6km, just beyond where the route penetrates the Forêt de la Restonica, a glorious forest of chestnut, Laricio pine and the tough maritime pine endemic to Corte. Not surprisingly, it's a popular place to walk, picnic and bathe in the many pools fed by the cascading torrent of the River Restonica, easily reached by scrambling down the rocky banks.

From the bergeries, a well-worn path winds along the valley floor to a pair of beautiful glacial lakes. The first and larger, Lac de Melo, is reached after an easy hour's hike through the rocks. One particularly steep part of the path has been fitted with security chains, but the scramble around the side of the passage is perfectly straightforward, and much quicker. Once past Lac de Melo, press on for another forty minutes along the steeper marked trail over a moraine to the second lake, Lac de Capitello, the more spectacular of the pair. Hemmed in by vertical cliffs, the deep turquoise-blue pool affords fine views of the Rotondo massif on the far side of the valley, and in clear weather you can spend an hour or two exploring the surrounding crags, the haunt of rock pipits. Beyond here, the trail climbs higher to meet the GR20, and should only be attempted by well-equipped mountain-walkers.

Vizzavona and its forest

Monte d'Oro dominates the route south of Corte to VIZZAVONA, about 10km away. Shielded by trees, the village is invisible from the main road, so keep your eyes peeled for a turning on the right signposted for the train station. With its handful of gîtes d'étape and restaurants, Vizzavona is an ideal place to spend a few days walking in the forest, although it gets crowded in summer when it fills with hikers taking a break from the GR20, which passes nearby. The glorious forest of beech and Laricio pine surrounding the hamlet is among the most popular walking areas in Corsica, thanks to the easy access by main road or train. A lot of people come here to tackle the ascent of 2389-metre-high Monte d'Oro, but there are many less demanding trails to follow, among them the busy route to the Cascade des Anglais, connected to Vizzavona by the red-and-white waymarks of the GR20.

Among the accommodation options here, top of the range is I Larici (☎04.95.47.21.12, 🌐www.ilaricci.com; 📍; closed Nov–March) an old-fashioned alpine-style hotel with pitched roofs and charming Moroccan carpets decorating the walls of its dining room. In addition to comfortable en-suite rooms, they also have beds in dorms for walkers (€30 half board). A cheaper option is Resto-Refuge-Bar "De la Gare" (☎ & 📍04.95.47.22.20; €13.50 per dorm bed; May–Oct), directly opposite the station. When full, the dormitories here are stuffy and cramped; half board (€33) isn't obligatory, which is just as well as the food isn't up to much, either. For more atmosphere, head 3km further south along the main road to the hamlet of LA FOCE, where the venerable old Monte d'Oro (☎04.95.47.21.06, 🌐www.monte-oro.com; 📍–📍) occupies a prime spot overlooking the valley – with its period furniture and fittings, fin-de-siècle feel and magnificent terrace looking out onto the mountain, it ranks among the most congenial hotels in Corsica. Adjacent to the Monte d'Oro, on the main road, is a little gîte d'étape (☎04.95.45.25.27; 📍) that's nowhere near as gloomy as it looks and makes a handy fallback if the places down in the village are fully booked. The nearest bona fide campsite is the Savaggio, 4km north of Vizzavona (☎04.95.47.22.14; open year round); note that the train will make a special request stop at the site if you give the conductor plenty of warning.

Travel details

Note that the details apply to June–Sept only; during the winter both train and bus services are considerably scaled down.

Trains

Ajaccio to: Bastia (4 daily; 3hr 45min–4hr); Calvi (2 daily; 4hr 25min–5hr); Corte (4 daily; 1hr 45min–2hr); L'île Rousse (2 daily; 4hr); Vizzavona (4 daily; 1hr).
Bastia to: Ajaccio (2–4 daily; 3hr 10min–3hr 40min); Biguglia (2–4 daily; 20min); Calvi (2 daily; 3hr 15min); Corte (2–4 daily; 2hr); L'île Rousse (2 daily; 2hr 30min); Ponte Leccia (2–4 daily; 1hr); Vizzavona (2–4 daily; 2hr 10min).

Calvi to: Ajaccio (2 daily; 5hr 10min); Bastia (2 daily; 3hr 30min); Corte (2 daily; 3hr 15min); L'île Rousse (2–10 daily; 30min).

Corte to: Ajaccio (4 daily; 2hr); Bastia (4 daily; 1hr 50min); Calvi (2 daily; 2hr 30min); L'île Rousse (2 daily; 2hr 30min); Vizzavona (4 daily; 50min).

L'Île Rousse to: Ajaccio (2 daily; 4hr 30min); Bastia (2 daily; 2hr 50min); Corte (2 daily; 2hr 40min).

Vizzavona to: Ajaccio (4 daily; 55min); Bastia (4 daily; 3hr); Corte (4 daily; 1hr); Ponte Leccia (4 daily; 1hr 40min).

Buses

Ajaccio to: Bastia (2 daily; 3hr); Bonifacio (3 daily; 4hr); Cargèse (2–3 daily; 1hr 10min); Corte (2 daily; 1hr 45min); Évisa (1–3 daily; 2hr); Porto (1–2 daily; 2hr 10min); Porto-Vecchio (2–5 daily; 3hr 10min–3hr 45min); Propriano (2–6 daily; 1hr 50min); Sartène (2–6 daily; 2hr 15min); Vizzavona (2 daily; 1hr); Zonza (3 daily; 2hr 15min–3hr).

Aléria to: Bastia (2 daily; 1hr 30min); Corte (3 weekly; 1hr 25min); Porto-Vecchio (2 daily; 1hr 20min).

Bastia to: Ajaccio (2 daily; 3hr); Bonifacio (2–4 daily; 3hr 50min); Calvi (2 daily; 2hr 20min); Centuri (3 weekly; 2hr); Corte (2–3 daily; 1hr 15min); Erbalunga (hourly; 30min); L'Île Rousse (2 daily; 1hr 40min); Porto-Vecchio (2 daily; 3hr); St-Florent (2 daily; 1hr).

Bonifacio to: Ajaccio (2 daily; 3hr 30min–4hr); Bastia (2–4 daily; 3hr 35min); Porto-Vecchio (1–4 daily; 30min); Propriano (2–4 daily; 1hr 40min–2hr 10min); Sartène (2 daily; 1hr 25min–2hr).

Calvi to: Bastia (1 daily; 2hr 15min); L'Île Rousse (2 daily; 40min); Porto (1 daily; 2hr 30min); St-Florent (1 daily; 1hr 20min).

Cargèse to: Ajaccio (1–2 daily; 1hr 10min); Porto (2–3 daily; 1hr).

Corte to: Ajaccio (2 daily; 2hr); Bastia (2 daily; 1hr 15min); Évisa (4 daily; 2hr); Porto (4 daily; 2hr 30min).

Évisa to: Ajaccio (1–3 daily; 1hr 45min).

Porto to: Ajaccio (1–2 daily; 2hr); Calvi (1 daily; 3hr); Cargèse (2–3 daily; 1hr 15min).

Porto-Vecchio to: Ajaccio (2–4 daily; 3hr 30min); Bastia (2 daily; 3hr); Bonifacio (1–4 daily; 30min); Propriano (2–4 daily; 2hr 10min); Sartène (2–4 daily; 40min).

Propriano to: Ajaccio (2–4 daily; 1hr 35min–1hr 50min); Bonifacio (2–4 daily; 2hr 15min); Porto-Vecchio (2–4 daily; 2hr 10min); Sartène (2–4 daily; 20min).

Ferries

Marseille to: Ajaccio (3–7 weekly; 11hr overnight, or 4hr 35min NGV); Bastia (1–3 weekly; 10hr); L'Île Rousse (1–3 weekly; 11hr 30min overnight); Porto-Vecchio (1–3 weekly; 14hr 30min overnight); Propriano (1 weekly; 12hr overnight).

Nice to: Ajaccio (1–6 weekly; 12hr overnight); Bastia (1–12 weekly; 6hr, or 2hr 30min NGV); Calvi (2–5 weekly; 2hr 45min NGV); L'Île Rousse (1–3 weekly; 7hr overnight, or 2hr 45min NGV).

Toulon to: Ajaccio (1–4 weekly; 10hr overnight); Bastia (1–3 weekly; 8hr 30min overnight).

Contexts

Contexts

History.....	1267–1290
Art	1291–1304
Architecture.....	1305–1312
Cinema.....	1313–1327
Books.....	1328–1337

History

As a major European power, France has had a long and colourful history, exerting influence around the world, and what follows is necessarily a brief account of major events in the country's past. For more in-depth coverage see the choices given in "Books", p.1329.

Early civilizations

Traces of human existence are rare in France until about 50,000 BC. Thereafter, beginning with the stone tools of the Neanderthal "Mousterian civilization", they become ever more numerous, with an especially heavy concentration of sites in the Périgord region of the Dordogne, where, near the village of Les Eyzies, remains were discovered in 1868 of a late Stone Age people, subsequently dubbed "Cro-Magnon". Flourishing from around 25,000 BC, these cave-dwelling hunters seem to have developed quite a sophisticated culture, the evidence of which is preserved in the beautiful paintings and engravings on the walls of the region's caves.

By 10,000 BC, human communities had spread out widely across the whole of France. The ice cap receded, the climate became warmer and wetter, and by about 7000 BC, farming and pastoral communities had begun to develop. By 4500 BC, the first dolmens (megalithic stone tombs) showed up in Brittany, while dugout canoes dating back to the same epoch have been unearthed in Paris. Around 2000 BC, copper made its appearance; and by 1800 BC, the Bronze Age had arrived in the east and southeast of the country, and trade links had begun with Spain, central Europe and southern Britain.

Significant population shifts occurred, too, at this time. Around 1200 BC the Urnfield people, who buried their dead in sunken urns, began to make incursions from the east. By 900 BC, they had been joined by the Halstatt people who worked with iron and settled in Burgundy, Alsace and Franche-Comté near the principal ore deposits. At some point around 450 BC, the first Celts made an appearance in the region.

Pre-Roman Gaul

There were about fifteen million people living in Gaul, as the Romans called what we know as France (and parts of Belgium), when Julius Caesar arrived in 58 BC to complete the Roman conquest.

The southern part of this territory – more or less equivalent to modern Provence – had been a colony since 118 BC and exposed to the influences of Italy and Greece for much longer. Greek colonists had founded Massalia (Marseille) as far back as 600 BC. But even the inhabitants of the rest of the country, what the Romans called "long-haired Gaul", were far from shaggy barbarians. Though the economy was basically rural, the Gauls had established large hilltop towns by 100 BC, notably at Bibracte near Autun, where archaeologists have identified separate merchants' quarters.

The Gauls also invented the barrel and soap and were skilful manufacturers. By 500 BC, they were capable of making metal-wheeled carts, as was proved by the “chariot tomb” of Vix, where a young woman was found buried lying on a cart with its wheels removed and propped against the wall. She was wearing rich gold jewellery and next to her were Greek vases and black figure pottery, dating the burial at around 500 BC and revealing the extent of commercial relations. Interestingly, too, the Gauls’ money was based on the gold staters minted by Philip of Macedon, father of Alexander the Great.

Romanization

Gallic tribal rivalries made the Romans’ job much easier, and when at last they were able to unite under Vercingétorix in 52 BC, the occasion was their total and final defeat by Julius Caesar at the battle of Alésia.

This event was one of the major turning points in the history of France. Roman victory fixed the frontier between Gaul and the Germanic peoples at the Rhine. It saved Gaul from disintegrating because of internal dissension and made it a Roman province. During the five centuries of peace that followed, the Gauls farmed, manufactured and traded, became urbanized and educated – and learnt Latin. Roman victory at Alésia laid the foundations of modern French culture and established them firmly enough to survive the centuries of chaos and destruction that followed the collapse of Roman power.

Lugdunum (Lyon) was founded as the capital of Roman Gaul as early as 43 BC, but it was the emperors Augustus and Claudius who really set the process of Romanization going. Augustus founded numerous cities – including Autun, Limoges and Bayeux – built roads, settled Roman colonists on the land and reorganized the entire administration. Gauls were inducted into the Roman army and given citizenship; Claudius made it possible for them to hold high office and become members of the Roman Senate, blurring the distinction and resentment between colonizer and colonized. Vespasian secured the frontiers beyond the Rhine, thus ensuring a couple of hundred years of peace and economic expansion.

Serious disruptions of the Pax Romana only began in the third century AD. Oppressive aristocratic rule and an economic crisis turned the destitute peasantry into gangs of marauding brigands – precursors of the medieval jacquerie. But most devastating of all, there began a series of incursions across the Rhine frontier by various restless Germanic tribes, the first of which, the Alemanni, pushed down as far as Spain, ravaging farmland and destroying towns.

In the fourth century the reforms of the emperor Diocletian secured some decades of respite from both internal and external pressures. Towns were rebuilt and fortified, an interesting development that foreshadowed feudalism and the independent power of the nobles since, due to the uncertainty of the times, big landed estates or villae tended to become more and more self-sufficient – economically, administratively and militarily.

By the fifth century, however, the Germanic invaders were back: Alans, Vandals and Suevi, with Franks and Burgundians in their wake. While the Roman administration assimilated them as far as possible, granting them land in return for military duties, they gradually achieved independence from the empire. Many Gauls, by now thoroughly Latinized, entered the service of the Burgundian court of Lyon or of the Visigoth kings of Toulouse as skilled administrators and advisers.

The Franks and Charlemagne

By 500 AD, the Franks, who gave their name to modern France, had become the dominant invading power. Their most celebrated king, Clovis, consolidated his hold on northern France and drove the Visigoths out of the southwest into Spain. In 507 he made the until-then insignificant little trading town of Paris his capital and became a Christian, which inevitably hastened the Christianization of Frankish society.

Under the succeeding Merovingian dynasty the kingdom began to disintegrate until in the eighth century the Pepin family, who were the Merovingians' chancellors, began to take effective control. In 732, one of their most dynamic scions, Charles Martel, reunited the kingdom and saved western Christendom from the northward expansion of Islam by defeating the Spanish Moors at the battle of Poitiers.

In 754 Charles's son, Pepin, had himself crowned king by the pope, thus inaugurating the Carolingian dynasty and establishing for the first time the principle of the divine right of kings. His son was Charlemagne, who extended Frankish control over the whole of what had been Roman Gaul, and far beyond. On Christmas Day in 800, he was crowned emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, though again, following his death, the kingdom fell apart in squabbles over who was to inherit various parts of his empire. At the Treaty of Verdun in 843, his grandsons agreed on a division of territory that corresponded roughly with the extent of modern France and Germany.

Charlemagne's administrative system had involved the royal appointment of counts and bishops to govern the various provinces of the empire. Under the destabilizing attacks of Norsemen/Vikings (who evolved into the Normans) during the ninth century, Carolingian kings were obliged to delegate more power and autonomy to these provincial governors, whose lands, like Aquitaine and Burgundy, already had separate regional identities as a result of earlier invasions – the Visigoths in Aquitaine, the Burgundians in Burgundy.

Gradually the power of these governors overshadowed that of the king, whose lands were confined to the Île-de-France. When the last Carolingian died in 987, it was only natural that they should elect one of their own number to take his place. This was Hugues Capet, founder of a dynasty that lasted until 1328.

The rise of the French kings

The years 1000 to 1500 saw the gradual extension and consolidation of the power of the French kings, accompanied by the growth of a centralized administrative system and bureaucracy. These factors also determined their foreign policy, which was chiefly concerned with restricting papal interference in French affairs and checking the English kings' continuing involvement in French territory. While progress towards these goals was remarkably steady and single-minded, there were setbacks, principally in the seesawing fortunes of the conflict with the English.

Surrounded by vassals much stronger than themselves, Hugues Capet and his successors remained weak throughout the eleventh century, though they made the most of their feudal rights. As dukes of the French, counts of Paris and anointed kings, they enjoyed a prestige their vassals dared not offend – not least because that would have set a precedent of disobedience for their own lesser vassals.

At the beginning of the twelfth century, having successfully tamed his own vassals in the Île-de-France, Louis VI had a stroke of luck. Eleanor, daughter of the powerful duke of Aquitaine, was left in his care on her father's death, so he promptly married her off to his son, the future Louis VII.

Unfortunately, the marriage ended in divorce and immediately, in 1152, Eleanor married Henry of Normandy, shortly to become Henry II of England. Thus the English crown gained control of a huge chunk of French territory, stretching from the Channel to the Pyrenees. Though their fortunes fluctuated over the ensuing three hundred years, the English rulers remained a perpetual thorn in the side of the French kings, with a dangerous potential for alliance with any rebellious French vassals.

Philippe Auguste (1179–1223) made considerable headway in undermining English rule by exploiting the bitter relations between Henry II and his three sons, one of whom was Richard the Lionheart. But he fell out with Richard when they took part in the Third Crusade together. Luckily, Richard died before he was able to claw back Philippe's gains, and by the end of his reign Philippe had recovered all of Normandy and the English possessions north of the Loire.

For the first time, the royal lands were greater than those of any other French lord. The foundations of a systematic administration and civil service had been established in Paris, and Philippe had firmly and quietly marked his independence from the papacy by refusing to take any interest in the crusade against the heretic Cathars of Languedoc. When Languedoc and Poitou came under royal control in the reign of his son Louis VIII, France was by far the greatest power in western Europe.

G

CONTEXTS

History

The Hundred Years War

In 1328 the Capetian monarchy had its first succession crisis, which led directly to the ruinous Hundred Years War with the English. Charles IV, last of the line, had only daughters as heirs, and when it was decided that France could not be ruled by a queen, the English king, Edward III, whose mother was Charles's sister, claimed the throne of France for himself.

The French chose Philippe, Count of Valois, instead, and Edward acquiesced for a time. But when Philippe began whittling away at his possessions in Aquitaine, Edward renewed his claim and embarked on war. With its population of about twelve million, France was a far richer and more powerful country, but its army was no match for the superior organization and tactics of the English. Edward won an outright victory at Crécy in 1346 and seized the port of Calais as a permanent bridgehead. Ten years later, his son, the Black Prince, actually took the French king, Jean le Bon, prisoner at the battle of Poitiers.

Although by 1375 French military fortunes had improved to the point where the English had been forced back to Calais and the Gascon coast, the strains of war and administrative abuses, as well as the madness of Charles VI, caused other kinds of damage. In 1358 there were insurrections among the Picardy peasantry (the jacquerie) and among the townspeople of Paris under the leadership of Étienne Marcel. Both were brutally repressed, as were subsequent risings in Paris in 1382 and 1412.

When it became clear that the king was mad, two rival camps began to vie for power: the Burgundians, led by the king's cousin and Duke of Burgundy, Jean sans Peur, and the Armagnacs, who gathered round the Duke of Orléans, Charles' brother. The situation escalated when Jean sans Peur had Orléans assassinated, and when fighting broke out between the two factions, they both called on the English for help. In 1415 Henry V of England inflicted another crushing defeat on the French army at Agincourt. The Burgundians seized Paris, took the royal family prisoner and recognized Henry as heir to the French throne. When Charles VI died in 1422, Henry's brother, the duke of Bedford, took over the government of France north of the Loire, while the young French heir, the Dauphin Charles, ineffectually governed the south from his refugee capital at Bourges.

At this point Jeanne d'Arc (Joan of Arc) arrived on the scene. In 1429 she persuaded Charles to launch an aggressive campaign, helped raise the English siege of the crucial town of Orléans and had the Dauphin crowned at Reims as Charles VII. Joan fell into the hands of the Burgundians, who sold her to the English, resulting in her being tried and burnt as a heretic. But her dynamism and martyrdom raised French morale and tipped the scales against the English: except for a toehold at Calais, they were finally driven from France altogether in 1453.

By the end of the century, Dauphiné, Burgundy, Franche-Comté and Provence were under royal control, and an effective standing army had been created. The taxation system had been overhauled, and France had emerged from the Middle Ages a rich, powerful state, firmly under the centralized authority of an absolute monarch.

The Wars of Religion

After half a century of self-confident but inconclusive pursuit of military glory in Italy, brought to an end by the Treaty of Cateau-Cambresis in 1559, France was plunged into another period of devastating internal conflict. The Protestant ideas of Luther and Calvin had gained widespread adherence among all classes of society, despite sporadic brutal attempts by François I and Henri II to stamp them out.

Catherine de Médicis, acting as regent for her son, later Henri III, implemented a more tolerant policy, provoking violent reaction from the ultra-Catholic faction led by the Guise family. Their massacre of a Protestant congregation coming out of church in March 1562 began a civil War of Religion that, interspersed with ineffective truces and accords, lasted for the next thirty years.

Well organized and well led by the Prince de Condé and Admiral Coligny, the Huguenots – French Protestants – kept their end up very successfully, until Condé was killed at the battle of Jarnac in 1569. Three years later came one of the blackest events in the memory of French Protestants, even today: the massacre of St Bartholomew's Day. Coligny and three thousand Protestants who had gathered in Paris for the wedding of Marguerite, the king's sister, to the Protestant Henri of Navarre were slaughtered at the instigation of the Guises, and the bloodbath was repeated across France, especially in the south and west where the Protestants were strongest.

In 1584 Henri III's son died, leaving his brother-in-law, Henri of Navarre, heir to the throne, to the fury of the Guises and their Catholic league, who seized Paris and drove out the king. In retaliation, Henri III murdered the Duc de Guise, and found himself forced into alliance with Henri of Navarre, whom the pope had excommunicated. In 1589 Henri III was himself assassinated, leaving Henri of Navarre to become Henri IV of France. It took another four years of fighting and the abjuration of his faith for the new king to be recognized. “Paris is worth a Mass,” he is reputed to have said.

Once on the throne, Henri IV set about reconstructing and reconciling the nation. By the Edict of Nantes of 1598, the Huguenots were accorded freedom of conscience, freedom of worship in certain places, the right to attend the same schools and hold the same offices as Catholics, their own courts and the possession of a number of fortresses as a guarantee against renewed attack, the most important being La Rochelle and MontPELLIER.

Kings, cardinals and absolute power

The main themes of the seventeenth century, when France was largely ruled by just two kings, Louis XIII (1610–43) and Louis XIV (1643–1715), were, on the domestic front, the strengthening of the centralized state embodied in the person of the king; and in external affairs, the securing of frontiers in the Pyrenees, on the Rhine and in the north, coupled with the attempt to prevent the unification of the territories of the Habsburg kings of Spain and Austria. Both kings had the good fortune to be served by capable, hard-working ministers dedicated to these objectives. Louis XIII had Cardinal Richelieu and Louis XIV had cardinals Mazarin and Colbert. Both reigns were disturbed in their early years by the inevitable aristocratic attempts at a coup d'état.

Having crushed revolts by Louis XIII's brother Gaston, Duke of Orléans, Richelieu's commitment to extending royal absolutism brought him into renewed conflict with the Protestants. Believing that their retention of separate fortresses within the kingdom was a threat to security, he attacked and took La Rochelle in 1627. Although he was unable to extirpate their religion altogether, Protestants were never again to present a military threat.

The other important facet of Richelieu's domestic policy was the promotion of economic self-sufficiency – mercantilism. To this end, he encouraged the growth of the luxury craft industries, especially textiles, in which France was to excel right up to the Revolution. He built up the navy and granted privileges to companies involved in establishing colonies in North America, Africa and the West Indies.

In pursuing his foreign policy objectives, Richelieu adroitly kept France out of actual military involvement by funding the Swedish king and general, Gustavus Adolphus, to make war against the Habsburgs in Germany. When in 1635, the French were finally obliged to commit their own troops, they made significant gains against the Spanish in the Netherlands, Alsace and Lorraine, and won Roussillon for France.

The Sun King

Richelieu died just a few months before Louis XIII in 1642. As Louis XIV was still an infant, his mother, Anne of Austria, acted as regent, served by Richelieu's protégé, Cardinal Mazarin, who was hated just as much as his predecessor by the traditional aristocracy and the parlements. They considered him an upstart and were anxious that their privileges, including the collection of taxes, would be curtailed. Spurred by these grievances, which were in any case exacerbated by the ruinous cost of the Spanish wars, various groups in French society combined in a series of revolts, known as the Frondes.

The first Fronde, in 1648, was led by the parlement of Paris, which resented royal oversight of tax collection. It was quickly followed by an aristocratic Fronde, supported by various peasant risings round the country. All were suppressed easily enough. These were not so much revolutionary movements but, rather, the attempts of various groups to preserve their privileges in the face of the growing power of the state.

In 1659 Mazarin successfully brought the Spanish wars to an end. Two years later, Louis XIV reached his majority, declaring that he would rule without a first minister. He embarked on a long struggle to modernize the administration. The war ministers, Le Tellier and his son Louvois, provided Louis with a well-equipped and well-trained professional army that could muster some 400,000 men by 1670. But the principal reforms were carried out by Colbert, who set about streamlining and improving the state's finances and tackling bureaucratic corruption. He set up a free-trade area in northern and central France, continued Richelieu's mercantilist economic policies, established the French East India Company, and built up the navy and merchant fleets with a view to challenging the world commercial supremacy of the Dutch.

These were all policies that the hard-working king was involved in and approved of. But in addition to his love of an extravagant court life at Versailles, which earned him the title of the Sun King, he had another obsession, ruinous to the state – the love of a prestigious military victory. His campaigns were even more ruinously expensive than his lifestyle. They were, however, fairly successful. He embarked on a war against the Dutch in 1672, which ultimately resulted in the acquisition of Franche-Comté and a swathe of Flanders including the city of Lille. In 1681 he simply grabbed Strasbourg, and got away with it.

In 1685, under the influence of his very Catholic mistress, Madame de Maintenon, the king removed all privileges from the Huguenots by revoking the Edict of Nantes. The result was devastating. Many of France's most skilled artisans, its wealthiest merchants and its most experienced soldiers were Protestants, and they fled the country in huge numbers – over 200,000 by some estimates. The Huguenots took their talents with them to Protestant countries, who promptly combined under the auspices of the League of Augsburg to fight the French. Another long and exhausting war followed, ending, most unfavourably for the French, in the Peace of Rijswik (1697).

No sooner was this concluded than Louis became embroiled in the question of who was to succeed the moribund Charles II of Spain as ruler of the Hapsburg domains in Europe. William of Orange, now king of England as well as ruler of the Dutch United Provinces, organized a Grand Alliance against Louis. The so-called War of the Spanish Succession broke out and went badly for the French. A severe winter in 1709 compounded the hardships with famine and riots at home, causing Louis to seek negotiations. The terms were too harsh for him and the war dragged on until 1713, leaving the country totally impoverished. The Sun King, finally, was eclipsed. He died in 1715, after ruling for 72 years over a country that had grown to dominate Europe, and had become unprecedentedly prosperous, largely because of colonial trade. Louis XIV's power and control, however, had masked growing tensions between central government and traditional vested interests.

Louis XV and the parlements

Louis XIV had outlived both his son and grandson. His successor, Louis XV, was only 5 when his great-grandfather died. During the Regency, the traditional aristocracy and the parlements, who for different reasons hated Louis XIV's advisers, scrambled – successfully – to recover a lot of their lost power and prestige. An experiment with government by aristocratic councils failed, and attempts to absorb the immense national debt by selling shares in an overseas trading company ended in a huge collapse. When the prudent and reasonable Cardinal Fleury came to prominence upon the regent's death in 1726, the nation's lot began to improve. The Atlantic seaboard towns grew rich on trade with the American and Caribbean colonies, though industrial production did not improve much and the disparity in wealth between the countryside and the growing towns continued to increase.

In mid-century there followed more disastrous military ventures, including the War of Austrian Succession and the Seven Years War, both of which were in effect contests with England for control of the colonial territories in America and India – contests that France lost. The need to finance the wars led to the introduction of a new tax, the Twentieth, which was to be levied on everyone. The parlement, which had successfully opposed earlier taxation and fought the Crown over its religious policies, dug its heels in again. This led to renewed conflict over Louis' pro-Jesuit religious policy. The Paris parlement staged a strike, was exiled from Paris, then inevitably reinstated. Disputes about its role continued until the parlement of Paris was actually abolished in 1771, to the outrage of the privileged groups in society, which considered it the defender of their special interests.

The division between the parlements and the king and his ministers continued to sharpen during the reign of Louis XVI, which began in 1774. Attempts by the enlightened finance minister Turgot to cooperate with the parlements and introduce reforms to alleviate the tax burden on the poor produced only short-term results. The national debt trebled between 1774 and 1787. Ironically, the one radical attempt to introduce an effective and equitable tax system led directly to the Revolution. Calonne, finance minister in 1786, tried to get his proposed tax approved by an Assembly of Notables, a device that had not been employed for more than a hundred years. His purpose was to bypass the parlement, which could be relied on to oppose any radical proposal. The attempt backfired. He lost his position, and the parlement ended up demanding a meeting of the Estates-General, representing the nobles, the clergy and the bourgeoisie, as being the only body competent to discuss such matters. The town responded by exiling and then recalling the parlement of Paris several times. As law and order began to break down, it gave in and agreed to summon the Estates-General on May 17, 1789.

Revolution

Against a background of deepening economic crisis and general misery, exacerbated by the catastrophic harvest of 1788, controversy focused on how the Estates-General should be constituted, and whether they should meet separately as on the last occasion in 1614. This was the solution favoured by the parlement of Paris, a measure of its reactionary nature: separate meetings would make it easy for the privileged, namely the clergy and nobility, to outvote the Third Estate, the bourgeoisie. The king ruled that they should hold a joint meeting, with the Third Estate represented by as many deputies as the other two Estates combined, but no decisions were made about the order of voting.

On June 17, 1789, the Third Estate seized the initiative and declared itself the National Assembly. Some of the lower clergy and liberal nobility joined them. Louis XVI appeared to accept the situation, and on July 9 the Assembly declared itself the National Constituent Assembly. However, the king then tried to intimidate it by calling in troops, which unleashed the anger of the people of Paris, the sans-culottes (literally, “without trousers”).

On July 14 the sans-culottes stormed the fortress of the Bastille, symbol of the oppressive nature of the ancien régime (old regime). Similar insurrections occurred throughout the country, accompanied by widespread peasant attacks on landowners’ châteaux and the destruction of records of debt and other symbols of their oppression. On the night of August 4, the Assembly abolished the feudal rights and privileges of the nobility – a momentous shift of gear in the Revolutionary process, although in reality it did little to alter the situation. Later that month they adopted the Declaration of the Rights of Man. In December church lands were nationalized, and the pope retaliated by declaring the Revolutionary principles impious.

Bourgeois elements in the Assembly tried to bring about a compromise with the nobility, with a view to establishing a constitutional monarchy, but these overtures were rebuffed. Émigré aristocrats were already working to bring about foreign invasion to overthrow the Revolution. In June 1791 the king was arrested trying to escape from Paris. The Assembly, following an initiative of the wealthier bourgeois Girondin faction, decided to go to war to protect the Revolution.

On August 10, 1792, the sans-culottes set up a Revolutionary Commune in Paris and imprisoned the king. The Revolution was taking a radical turn. A new National Convention was elected and met on the day the ill-prepared Revolutionary armies finally halted the Prussian invasion at Valmy. A major rift swiftly developed between the more moderate Girondins and the Jacobins and sans-culottes over the abolition of the monarchy. The radicals carried the day. In January 1793, Louis XVI was executed. By June, the Girondins had been ousted.

Counter-Revolutionary forces were gathering in the provinces and abroad. A Committee of Public Safety was set up as chief organ of the government. Left-wing popular pressure brought laws on general conscription and price controls and a deliberate policy of de-Christianization, and Robespierre was pressed onto the Committee as the best man to contain the pressure from the streets.

The Terror began. As well as ordering the death of the hated queen, Marie-Antoinette, Robespierre felt strong enough to guillotine his opponents on both Right and Left. But the effect of so many rolling heads was to cool people’s faith in the Revolution; by mid-1794, Robespierre himself was arrested and executed, and his fall marked the end of radicalism. More conservative forces gained control of the government, decontrolled the economy, repressed popular risings, limited the suffrage, and established a five-man executive Directory (1795).

Napoleon

In 1799, General Napoleon Bonaparte, who had made a name for himself as commander of the Revolutionary armies in Italy and Egypt, returned to France and took power in a coup d'état. He was appointed First Consul, with power to choose officials and initiate legislation. He redesigned the tax system and created the Bank of France, replaced the power of local institutions by a corps of préfets answerable to himself, made judges into state functionaries – in short, laid the foundations of the modern French administrative system.

Though Napoleon upheld the fundamental reforms of the Revolution, the retrograde nature of his regime became more and more apparent with the proscription of the Jacobins, granting of amnesty to the émigrés and restoration of their unsold property, reintroduction of slavery in the colonies, recognition of the Church and so on. Although alarmingly revolutionary in the eyes of the rest of Europe, his Civil Code worked essentially to the advantage of the bourgeoisie. In 1804 he crowned himself emperor in the presence of the pope.

Decline, however, came with military failure. After 1808, Spain – under the rule of Napoleon's brother – rose in revolt, aided by the British. This signalled a turning of the tide in the long series of dazzling military successes. The nation began to grow weary of the burden of unceasing war.

In 1812, Napoleon threw himself into a Russian campaign, hoping to complete his European conquests. He reached Moscow, but the long retreat in terrible winter conditions annihilated his veteran Grande Armée. By 1814, he was forced to abdicate by a coalition of European powers, who installed Louis XVIII, brother of the decapitated Louis XVI, as monarch. In a last effort to recapture power, Napoleon escaped from exile in Elba and reorganized his armies, only to meet final defeat at Waterloo on June 18, 1815. Louis XVIII was restored to power.

Restorations and revolutions

The years following Napoleon's downfall were marked by a determined campaign, including the White Terror, on the part of those reactionary elements who wanted to wipe out all trace of the Revolution and restore the ancien régime. Louis XVIII resisted these moves and was able to appoint a moderate royalist minister, Decazes, under whose leadership the liberal faction that wished to preserve the Revolutionary reforms made steady gains. This process, however, was wrecked by the assassination of the Duc de Berry in an attempt to wipe out the Bourbon family. In response to reactionary outrage, the king dismissed Decazes. An attempted liberal insurrection was crushed and the four Sergeants of La Rochelle were shot by firing squad. Censorship became more rigid and education was once more subjected to the authority of the Church.

In 1824, Louis was succeeded by the thoroughly reactionary Charles X, who pushed through a law indemnifying émigré aristocrats for property lost during the Revolution. When the opposition won a majority in the elections of 1830, the king dissolved the Chamber and restricted the already narrow suffrage.

Barricades went up in the streets of Paris. Charles X abdicated and parliament was persuaded to accept Louis-Philippe, Duc d'Orléans, as king. On the face of it, divine right had been superseded by popular sovereignty as the basis of political legitimacy. The 1814 Charter, which upheld Revolutionary and Napoleonic reforms, was reaffirmed, censorship abolished, the tricolour restored as the national flag, and suffrage widened.

However, the Citizen King, as he was called, had somewhat more absolutist notions about being a monarch. In the 1830s his regime survived repeated challenges from both attempted coups by reactionaries and some serious labour unrest in Lyon and Paris. The 1840s were calmer under the ministry of Guizot, the first Protestant to hold high office, and it was at this time that Algeria was colonized.

Guizot, however, was not popular. He resisted attempts to extend the vote to enfranchise the middle ranks of the bourgeoisie. In 1846, economic crisis brought bankruptcies, unemployment and food shortages. Conditions were appalling for the growing urban working class, whose hopes of a more just future received a theoretical basis in the socialist writings and activities of Blanqui, Fourier, Louis Blanc and Proudhon, among others.

1848 and the Second Republic

When the government banned an opposition banquet – the only permissible form of political meeting – in February 1848, workers and students took to the streets. When the army fired on a demonstration and killed forty people, civil war appeared imminent. The Citizen King fled to England, a provisional government was set up and a republic proclaimed. The government issued a right-to-work declaration, set up national workshops to relieve unemployment and extended the vote to all adult males – an unprecedented move for its time.

All was not plain sailing, though. By the time elections were held in April, a new tax designed to ameliorate the financial crisis had antagonized the countryside. A massive conservative majority was re-elected, to the dismay of the radicals. Three days of bloody street fighting at the barricades followed, when General Cavaignac, who had distinguished himself in the suppression of Algerian resistance, turned the artillery on the workers. More than 1500 were killed and 12,000 arrested and exiled.

A reasonably democratic constitution was drawn up and elections called to choose a president. To everyone's surprise, Louis-Napoléon, nephew of the emperor, romped home. In spite of his liberal reputation, he restricted the vote again, censored the press and pandered to the Catholic Church. In 1852, following a coup and further street fighting, he had himself proclaimed Emperor Napoléon III.

Empire and Commune

Through the 1850s, Napoléon III ran an authoritarian regime whose most notable achievement was a rapid growth in industrial and economic power. Foreign trade trebled, the rail system grew enormously, and the first investment banks were established. In 1858, in the aftermath of an attempt on his life by an Italian patriot, the emperor suddenly embarked on a policy of liberalization, initially of the economy, which alienated much of the business class. Reforms included the right to form trade unions and to strike, an extension of public education, lifting of censorship and the granting of ministerial “responsibility” under a government headed by the liberal opposition.

Disaster, however, was approaching in the shape of the Franco-Prussian war. Involved in a conflict with Bismarck and the rising power of Germany, Napoléon III declared war. The French army was quickly defeated and the emperor himself taken prisoner in 1870. The result at home was a universal demand for the proclamation of a third republic. The German armistice agreement insisted on the election of a national assembly to negotiate a proper peace treaty. France lost Alsace and Lorraine and was obliged to pay hefty war reparations.

Outraged by the monarchist majority re-elected to the new Assembly and by the attempt of its chief minister, Thiers, to disarm the National Guard, the people of Paris created their own municipal government known as the Commune. However, it had barely existed two months before it was savagely crushed. On May 21, the “semaine sanglante” began in which government troops fought with the Communards street by street, massacring around 25,000, the last of them lined up against the wall of Père Lachaise cemetery and shot. It was a brutal episode that left a permanent scar on the country’s political and psychological landscape.

The Third Republic

In the wake of the Commune, competing political factions fought it out for control. Legitimists supported the return of a Bourbon to the throne, while Orléanists supported the heir of Louis-Philippe. Republicans, of course, would have none of either. Thanks in part to the intransigence of the Comte de Chambord, the Bourbon claimant who refused to accept a constitutional role – and in part to a corruption scandal surrounding the first President of the Third Republic, himself a monarchist – it was the Radicals and Socialists who came out on top. Minister Jules Ferry set out laws for free, secular education in 1881 and 1882, and the Crown Jewels were sold off in 1885.

From 1894, the Dreyfus Affair dramatically widened the split between right and left. Captain Dreyfus was a Jewish army officer convicted of spying for the Germans and shipped off to the penal colony of Devil’s Island. It soon became clear that he had been framed – by the army itself – yet they refused to reconsider his case. The affair immediately became an issue between the anti-Semitic, Catholic Right and the Republican Left, with Radical statesman Clemenceau, Socialist leader Jean Jaurès and novelist Émile Zola coming out in favour of Dreyfus. Charles Maurras, founder of the fascist Action Française – precursor of Europe’s Blackshirts – took the part of the army.

Dreyfus was officially rehabilitated in 1904, but in the wake of the affair the more radical element in the Republican movement began to dominate the administration, bringing the army under closer civilian control and dissolving most of the religious orders. In 1905 the Third Republic affirmed its anti-clerical roots by introducing a law on the separation of church and state.

In the years preceding World War I, the country enjoyed a period of renewed prosperity. Yet the conflicts in the political fabric of French society remained unresolved. With the outbreak of war in 1914, France found itself swiftly overrun by Germany and its allies, and defended by its old enemy, Britain. The cost of the war was even greater for France than for the other participants because it was fought largely on French soil. Over a quarter of the eight million men called up were either killed or injured; industrial production fell to sixty percent of the prewar level. This – along with memories of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870 – was the reason that the French were more aggressive than either the British or the Americans in seeking war reparations from the Germans.

In the postwar struggle for recovery the interests of the urban working class were again passed over, save for Clemenceau’s eight-hour-day legislation in 1919. An attempted general strike in 1920 came to nothing, and the left’s strength was again undermined by the irreversible split in the Socialist Party at the 1920 Congress of Tours – the pro-Lenin majority forming the newly named French Communist Party. As the Depression deepened in the 1930s and Nazi power across the Rhine became more menacing, fascist thuggery and antiparliamentary activity increased in France, culminating in a pitched battle outside the Chamber of Deputies in February 1934. The effect of this fascist activism was to unite the Left, including the Communists, in the Front Populaire – which won the 1936 elections with a handsome majority. Léon Blum became France's first socialist and first Jewish Prime Minister.

Frightened by the apparently revolutionary situation, the major employers signed the Matignon Agreement with Blum, which provided for wage increases, nationalization of the armaments industry and partial nationalization of the Bank of France, a forty-hour week, paid annual leave and collective bargaining on wages. These reforms were pushed through parliament, but when Blum tried to introduce exchange controls to check the flight of capital, the Senate threw the proposal out and he resigned. The Left remained out of power, with the exception of coalition governments, until 1981. Most of the Front Populaire's reforms were promptly undone.

World War II

The agonies of World War II were compounded for France by the additional traumas of occupation, collaboration and Resistance – in effect, a civil war.

After the lightning defeat of the Anglo-French forces in May–June 1940, Maréchal Pétain, a cautious and conservative veteran of World War I, emerged from retirement to sign an armistice with Hitler and head the collaborationist Vichy government, which ostensibly governed the southern part of the country, while the Germans occupied the strategic north and the Atlantic coast. Pétain's prime minister, Laval, believed it was his duty to adapt France to the new authoritarian age heralded by the Nazi conquest of Europe.

There has been endless controversy over who collaborated, how much and how far it was necessary in order to save France from even worse sufferings. One thing at least is clear: Nazi occupation provided a good opportunity for out-and-out French fascists to track down Communists, Jews, Resistance fighters, freemasons – all those who they considered “alien” bodies in French society.

While some Communists were involved in the Resistance right from the start, Hitler's attack on the Soviet Union in 1941 freed the remainder from ideological inhibitions and brought them into the movement on a large scale. Resistance numbers were further increased by young men taking to the hills to escape conscription as labour in Nazi industry. General de Gaulle's radio appeal from London on June 18, 1940 resulted in the Conseil National de la Résistance, unifying the different Resistance groups in May 1943.

Although British and American governments found him irksome, de Gaulle was able to impose himself as the unchallenged spokesman of the Free French, leader of a government in exile, and to insist that the voice of France be heard as an equal in the Allied councils of war. Even the Communists accepted his leadership. Thanks to his persistence, representatives of his provisional government moved into liberated areas of France behind the Allied advance after D-Day, thereby saving the country from localized outbreaks of civil war. It was also thanks to de Gaulle that Free French units, notably General Leclerc's Second Armoured Division, were allowed to perform the psychologically vital role of being the first Allied troops to enter Paris, Strasbourg and other emotionally significant towns in France.

△ General de Gaulle at Bayeux, June 14, 1944

The aftermath of war

France emerged from the war demoralized, bankrupt and bomb-wrecked. Almost half its population were peasants, living off the land, and its industry was in ruins. The only possible provisional government in the circumstances was de Gaulle's Free French and the Conseil National de la Résistance, which meant a coalition of Left and Right. As an opening move to deal with the mess, coal mines, air transport and Renault cars were nationalized. But a new constitution was required and elections, in which French women voted for the first time, resulted in a large Left majority in the new Constituent Assembly – which, however, soon fell to squabbling over the form of the new constitution. De Gaulle resigned in disgust. If he was hoping for a wave of popular sympathy, he didn't get it.

The constitution finally agreed on, with little enthusiasm in the country, was not much different from the discredited Third Republic. In the shadow of Vichy, the presidency was a weak institution, and the new Fourth Republic began its life with a series of short-lived coalitions. Nevertheless, the foundations for welfare were laid, banks nationalized and trade union rights extended. And thanks in part to American aid in the form of the Marshall Plan, France achieved enormous industrial modernization and expansion in the 1950s, its growth rate even rivalling that of West Germany at times. In foreign policy

France opted to remain in the US fold, but at the same time aggressively and independently pursued nuclear technology, finally detonating its own atom bomb in early 1960. France also took the lead in promoting closer European integration, a process culminating in 1957 with the creation of the European Economic Community.

Colonial wars

In its colonial policy, on the other hand, the Fourth Republic seemed firmly committed to nineteenth-century imperialism, despite the cosmetic reform of renaming the Empire the French Union.

On the surrender of Japan to the Allies in 1945, Vietnam, the northern half of the French Indochina colony, came under the control of Ho Chi Minh and his Communist organization Vietminh. Attempts to negotiate were bungled, and there began an eight-year armed struggle which ended with French defeat at Dien Bien Phu and partition of the country at the Geneva Conference in 1954 – at which point the Americans took over in the south, with well-known consequences.

In that year the government got embroiled in the Algerian war of liberation. The situation was complicated from the French viewpoint by the legal fiction that Algeria was a département, an integral part of France, and by the fact that there were a million or so settlers, or pieds noirs, claiming to be French, plus there was oil in the south. But by 1958, half a million troops, most of them conscripts, had been committed to the war. It was a bloody and brutal affair, characterized by torture and terrorism on both sides, and horrific loss of life. The Algerian government estimates the number of dead at almost a million, the French at roughly a third of that number.

When it began to seem in 1958 that the government would take a more liberal line towards Algeria, the hard-line Rightists among the settlers and in the army staged a putsch and threatened to declare war on France. General de Gaulle, waiting in the wings to resume his mission to save France, let it be known that in its hour of need and with certain conditions – ie stronger powers for the president – the country might call upon his help. Thus, on June 1, 1958, the National Assembly voted him full powers for six months and the Fourth Republic came to an end.

De Gaulle's presidency

As prime minister, then president of the Fifth Republic – with powers as much strengthened as he had wished – de Gaulle wheeled and dealt with the pieds noirs and Algerian rebels, while the war continued. In 1961, a General Salan staged a military revolt and set up the OAS (Secret Army Organization) to prevent a settlement. When his coup failed, his organization made several attempts on de Gaulle's life – thereby strengthening the feeling on the mainland that it was time to be done with Algeria.

An episode in the same year – covered up and censored until the 1990s – when between seventy and two hundred French Algerians were killed by the police in Paris, reinforced this feeling. This “secret massacre” began with a peaceful demonstration in protest against police powers to impose a curfew on any place in France frequented by North Africans. The police, it seems, went mad – shooting at crowds, batoning protesters and then throwing their bodies into the Seine. For weeks corpses were recovered, but the French media remained silent.

Eventually in 1962, a referendum gave an overwhelming yes to Algerian independence, and pieds noirs refugees flooded into France. Most of the rest of the French colonial empire had achieved independence by this time also, and the succeeding years were to see a resurgence of fascist and racist activity, among both the French “returnees” and the usual insular, anti-immigrant sectors. From the mid-1950s to the mid-1970s a French labour shortage led to massive recruitment campaigns for workers in North Africa, Portugal, Spain, Italy and Greece. People were promised housing, free medical care, trips home and well-paid jobs. When they arrived in France, however, these immigrants found themselves paid half as much as their French co-workers, accommodated in prison-style hostels and sometimes poorer than they had been at home. They had no vote, no automatic permit renewal, were subject to frequent racial abuse and assault and were forbidden to form their own organizations.

De Gaulle’s leadership was haughty and autocratic in style, more concerned with gloire and grandeur than the everyday problems of ordinary lives. His quirky strutting on the world stage greatly irritated France’s partners. He blocked British entry to the EC, cultivated the friendship of the Germans, rebuked the US for its imperialist policies in Vietnam, withdrew from NATO, refused to sign a nuclear test ban treaty and called for a “free Québec”. If this projection of French influence pleased some, the very narrowly won presidential election of 1965 (in which Mitterrand was his opponent) showed that a good half of French voters would not be sorry to see the last of the general.

May 1968

Notwithstanding a certain domestic discontent, the sudden explosion of May 1968 took everyone by surprise. Beginning with protests against the paternalistic nature of the education system by students at the University of Nanterre, the movement of revolt rapidly spread to the Sorbonne and out into factories and offices.

On the night of May 10, barricades went up in the streets of the Quartier Latin in Paris, and the CRS (riot police) responded by wading into everyone, including bystanders and Red Cross volunteers, with unbelievable ferocity. A general strike followed, and within a week more than a million people were out, with many factory occupations and professionals joining in with students and workers to march under radical slogans. Rather than demanding specific reforms, there was a general feeling that all French institutions – French society itself – needed overhauling.

De Gaulle seemed to lose his nerve and on May 27 he vanished from the scene. It turned out he had gone to assure himself of the support of the commander of the French army of the Rhine. On his return he appealed to the nation to elect him as the only effective barrier against left-wing dictatorship, and dissolved parliament. The frightened silent majority voted massively in his favour.

There were few radical changes as a result of May 1968, except perhaps in education. By and large, the formal, paternalistic and often authoritarian structures and institutions of France remained in place. But the failure of les événements – “the events”, as they were called – to bear fruit didn’t kill off French radicalism. For the next forty years, groups from feminists and ecologists to film-makers and outright anarchists would look back to May 1968 with mixed feelings of bitterness and inspiration. Many believe that the legacy of les événements is still being played out in French politics today.

Pompidou and Giscard

Having petulantly staked his presidency on the outcome of yet another referendum (on a couple of constitutional amendments) and lost, de Gaulle once more took himself off to his country estate and retirement. He was succeeded as president by his business-oriented former prime minister, Georges Pompidou.

The new regime was devotedly capitalist, and Pompidou hoped to eradicate the memory of 1968 in the creation of wealth, property and competition. His visions, however, had little time to attain reality. Having survived an election in 1972, Pompidou died, suddenly. His successor – and the 1974 presidential election winner by a narrow margin over the socialist François Mitterrand – was the former finance minister Valéry Giscard d’Estaing.

Having announced that his aim was to make France “an advanced liberal society”, Giscard opened his term of office with some spectacular media coups, inviting Parisian trash collectors to breakfast, visiting prisons in Lyon and addressing the nation on television from his living room every evening. But, aside from reducing the voting age to 18 and liberalizing divorce laws, the advanced liberal society did not make a lot of progress. In the wake of the 1974 oil crisis the government introduced economic austerity measures. Giscard fell out with his ambitious prime minister, Jacques Chirac, who set out to challenge the leadership with his own RPR Gaullist party. And in addition to his superior, monarchical style, Giscard further compromised his popularity by accepting diamonds from the (literally) child-eating emperor of the Central African Republic, Bokassa, and by involvement in various other scandals.

The Left seemed well placed to win the coming 1978 elections, when the fragile union between the Socialists and Communists cracked, the latter fearing their roles as the coalition’s junior partners. The result was another right-wing victory, with Giscard able to form a new government, with the grudging support of the RPR. Law and order and immigrant controls were the dominant features of Giscard’s second term.

The Mitterrand Era, 1981–95

When François Mitterrand won the presidential elections over Giscard in 1981, inaugurating the first Socialist government for decades, hopes and expectations were sky high. The government pledged to increase state control over industry, introduce higher taxes for the rich, devolve more power to local government, raise the living standards of the least well-off and pursue European integration. By 1984, however, the flight of capital, inflation and budget deficits had forced a complete turnaround. Prime minister Laurent Fabius presided over a cabinet of centrist to conservative “socialist” ministers, clinging desperately to power. The 1986 parliamentary election saw the Right, under Jacques Chirac, winning a clear majority in parliament, so beginning cohabitation – the head of state and head of government belonging to opposite sides of the political fence. As Prime Minister, Chirac embarked on a policy of privatization and monetary control.

The 1980s ended with the most absurd blow-out of public funds ever – the bicentennial celebrations of the French Revolution. They symbolized a culture industry spinning mindlessly around the vacuum at the centre of the French vision for the future. And they highlighted the contrast between the unemployed and homeless begging on the streets and the limitless cash available for prestige projects.

During this period, Jean-Marie Le Pen, extreme right-winger and leader of the racist Front National, began to attract support. In 1991, Mitterrand sacked Socialist prime minister Michel Rocard, and appointed Édith Cresson as France's first woman prime minister. Her brand of left-wing nationalist rhetoric combined with centrist pragmatism made her highly unpopular at home and abroad.

In 1992, Mitterrand staked his reputation on the Maastricht referendum on creating closer political union in Europe, as well as economic. The vote was carried by a narrow margin in favour. On the whole, poorer rural areas voted "No" while rich urbanites and political parties voted "Yes". Only the extreme end of the political spectrum, the Communists and the Front National remained determinedly anti-Europe.

Scandals over cover-ups and corruption culminated in the rout of the Socialists in the 1993 parliamentary elections, and the mysterious suicide a few months later of their last prime minister, Pierre Bérégovoy. Ushering in another period of cohabitation, Edouard Balladur, a fresh and fatherly face from the Right, was appointed prime minister. His government carried out a new privatization programme but soon lost the respect of its natural supporters after a series of U-turns following demonstrations by Air France workers, teachers, farmers, fishermen and school pupils, and the state's rescue of the Crédit Lyonnais bank after spectacular losses.

Mitterrand tottered on to the end of his presidential term, looking less and less like the nation's favourite uncle. Two months after Bérégovoy's suicide, René Bousquet, head of police in the Vichy government and responsible for the rounding up of Jews in 1942, was murdered. A personal friend of Mitterrand's, he was thought to have carried shady secrets about the president to his grave. A biography of Mitterrand, Le Grand Secret, stirred up further controversy about the president's war record as an official in the Vichy regime before he joined the Resistance.

Allegations of corruption against politicians and leading figures in industry were becoming an almost weekly occurrence. Several mayors ended up in jail, but it seemed as if the Paris establishment was above the law. Meanwhile, the country's profile abroad was also suffering. In 1994, France sent troops into Rwanda, whose previous murderous government they had supported and armed. French troops were accused of giving protection to French-speaking Hutus responsible for the genocide, and of acting too late to save any of the English-speaking Tutsis.

By the time Mitterrand finally stepped down, he had been the French head of state for fourteen years, during a period when crime rose and increasing numbers of people found themselves excluded from society by racism, poverty and homelessness. Corruption scandals touched the president, politicians of all parties and business chiefs and, as faith in old left-wing certainties foundered, support for extreme Right policies propelled the Front National from a minority faction to a serious electoral force. Despite this, when he died in January 1996, Mitterrand was genuinely mourned as a man of culture and vision, a supreme political operator, and an unwavering supporter of a united Europe.

Chirac's presidency

Elected as president in 1995 and winning a second mandate in 2002, Chirac has shown himself every bit as astute a politician as Mitterrand, and no less prone to scandal and controversy. One of the first decisions he took on election in 1995 was to delay signing the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty until France had carried out a new series of nuclear tests in the South Pacific – provoking almost universal condemnation.

On the home front, Chirac's Prime Minister, Alain Juppé, introduced austerity measures, designed to prepare France for European monetary union. Reforms to pensions and healthcare spending provoked a series of damaging strikes in 1995 and 1996, and led to growing popular disenchantment with the idea of closer European integration. The Front National played up their image of standing up for the small man against the corrupt political establishment, and at municipal elections in June 1995 gained control of three towns, including the major port of Toulon. The Algerian bomb attacks which rocked Paris in the mid-1990s – designed to punish France for supporting Algeria's anti-Islamist military government – further played into the hands of the far Right and diminished public confidence in the government as guardian of law and order. The interior minister, Charles Pasqua, tapped into the general feelings of insecurity and stepped up anti-immigration measures. As a result, around 250,000 people living and working in France had their legal status revoked.

Feeling increasingly beleaguered and unable to deliver on the economy, Chirac called a snap parliamentary election in May 1997. His gamble failed spectacularly as he saw the Right trounced by the Socialists. Chirac was forced into a weak cohabitation with the Socialists, headed by Lionel Jospin, who promptly introduced the 35-hour working week, a 50:50 gender quota for representatives of political parties and, in 1999, the Pacs or Pacte Civile de Solidarité, a contract giving cohabiting couples, particularly gay couples, almost the same rights as married people.

Jospin's government was soon hit by a series of scandals, however, including the resignation of internationally respected finance minister Dominique Strauss-Kahn over his alleged involvement in a party-funding scandal, though he was later acquitted. In 1999, Mitterrand-era cabinet ministers went on trial for involvement in the tainted blood scandal of the mid-1980s, in which four thousand transfusion recipients contracted AIDS. The court doled out acquittals and suspended sentences for the three main defendants, prompting outrage from the victims and their families, and ever-growing public cynicism.

Skeletons in the mayoral cupboard

The most persistent corruption scandals, however, have dogged the Right, rather than the Left, focusing on the finances of the Paris town hall dating back to the 1980s. In 1995 it was revealed that Alain Juppé had rented a luxury flat in Paris for his son at below-market rates, and in 1998 the conservative Paris mayor Jean Tiberi was implicated in a scandal involving subsidized real-estate and fake town-hall jobs – with real salaries – for party activists and relatives. The prosecutors edged ever closer to Chirac himself. In 2001 the president was accused of using some three million francs in cash from illegal sources to pay for luxury holidays, and in 2003 it was revealed that in eight years in office as mayor of Paris he and his wife had run up grocery bills of 2.2 million euros – over half of which had been reimbursed in cash. When investigating magistrates tried to question Chirac he claimed presidential immunity, a position that was upheld by France's highest court, though only as long as he remained in office.

What will happen when Chirac stands down, in 2007, is uncertain. An ominous note was sounded in 2004 when his right-hand man, Alain Juppé, was convicted of involvement in the town hall fake jobs scam. He was banned from office for ten years. In September 2006, critics accused Chirac of taking out insurance after he appointed his former legal adviser, Laurent de Mesle, as Paris's chief public prosecutor. The job will give De Mesle the task of deciding whether or not to press corruption charges when Chirac's presidential immunity finally ends.

The election earthquake

In the run-up to the presidential elections of 2002, everyone in France assumed that the race was between Jacques Chirac and his Socialist rival, Lionel Jospin. Other candidates were dismissed as marginal figures. The far left was as divided as ever, while the far-right vote had been damagingly split since 1996, when Bruno Mégret, the ambitious lieutenant of Front National leader Jean-Marie Le Pen, had formed a breakaway party. Le Pen himself had lost much support for punching a woman Socialist candidate in 1998.

Lionel Jospin's hopes had been bolstered by the election of Socialist Bertrand Delanoë as Mayor of Paris in March 2001 – the first time that the Socialists had won control of the capital since the bloody uprising of the Paris Commune in 1871. In the run-up to the elections, however, Jospin's lead over Chirac dwindled. The economy began to falter, unemployment was once more on the rise and fears over crime were widespread. Jospin was also hampered by his dowdy image. The backslapping, high-living Chirac, on the other hand, despite his scandal-mired background and poor record of achievement, had lost none of his ability to charm.

It was with utter shock that the country heard the announcement on the evening of April 21 that Jospin had been beaten into third place by Le Pen – leaving Chirac and Le Pen to stand against each other in the final run-off in May. The result, widely referred to as an “earthquake”, sent shockwaves throughout the country and abroad. Widespread voter apathy and disillusionment were blamed. Many voters had abstained or voted for marginal candidates as a way of protesting against the mainstream parties. It was also felt that Chirac unwittingly helped Le Pen by campaigning on immigration and law and order, thus giving credibility to the very issues which formed the core of Le Pen's manifesto. Le Pen himself had fought a canny campaign, toning down his racist rhetoric and making capital out of the mainstream parties' sleaze and remoteness from ordinary people.

It was a wake-up call to the nation. On May 1, 800,000 people packed the boulevards of Paris to protest against Le Pen and his anti-immigration policies, in the biggest demonstration the capital had seen since the student protests of 1968. Chirac's victory in the next round was assured, with the Socialists calling on their supporters to vote for Chirac in order to keep Le Pen out. Chirac duly swept the board, winning by an unprecedented 82 percent. With the parliamentary elections still to come, Chirac's supporters rallied round to create an umbrella grouping of right-wing parties, called the Union for a Presidential Majority, to try and win for Chirac the majority in parliament that he'd failed to secure in 1997. The Socialists, severely shaken by Jospin's earlier defeat, were no match and the Right swept to power with 369 of the 577 seats in the National Assembly. In an attempt to address widespread concerns about lack of representation and government accountability, one of Chirac's first measures was a devolution bill, giving more power to 26 regional assemblies and ending centuries of central government steadily accruing power to itself.

Iraq, Muslims and climate change

In 2003, a reinvigorated Chirac thrust himself into the international spotlight by adopting a remarkably intransigent stance over the Iraq war. As self-appointed spokesman for the no-sayers, Chirac declared in early March that he would wield France's Security Council veto if the US tried to table a resolution that contained an ultimatum leading to war. It was a bravura performance to an approving domestic crowd, the nationalist Right admiring Chirac's Gaullist flexing of France's international muscles and the Left reluctantly applauding his jaw-jutting opposition to American imperialism. Internationally, some interpreted France's stance as a principled defence of the UN and international law, others saw it as a test of the EU's diplomatic clout, and an assertion of France's power within Europe. Others still saw Chirac's actions as cynical political posturing.

Whether blamed on US bullishness or French pig-headedness, the result was an almighty farmyard scrap that left the US-led "coalition of the willing" exposed in Iraq without the diplomatic cover of definitive UN sanction. On either side of the Atlantic, the cherished Franco-American relationship suffered its worst spat ever. In France, American tourist numbers plummeted, and the nation indulged itself in an orgy of anti-Americanism.

One thing France's tough stance wasn't based on was any particularly pro-Arab or pro-Islamic bias, despite the presence of 5 million or more Muslims in France – the largest community in Europe. During 2003, Chirac presided over a government setting expulsion targets for illegal immigrants and enacting a hugely controversial bill – though it was backed by almost two thirds of the population and passed in parliament by 494 votes to 36 – banning "ostensibly religious" signs, notably Islamic headscarves, from schools and hospitals. Proposing the measure in December 2003, Chirac avowed that "Secularity is one of the republic's great achievements... We must not allow it to be weakened."

In 2003 climate change also bludgeoned its way onto the headlines, by indirectly causing the deaths of some 15,000 people over the norm. In Paris, temperatures in the first half of August were the hottest ever recorded, regularly topping 40°C (104°F) – more than ten degrees above the average maximum for that time of year. The authorities blamed lack of air-conditioning and the duration of the heatwave; the opposition blamed an ill-prepared health ministry. No one seemed willing to take responsibility for doing anything about it.

Reform and revolt

Faced with an ageing population, unemployment flatlining at around ten percent and a budget deficit persistently exceeding the eurozone's three-percent ceiling, the newly confident Right decided it would take on the public sector once and for all. Dubbed Agenda 2006, the reform programme's targets were loathed by economic liberalizers and loved by most of the French public in equal measure. First to go under the knife would be the state's generous pensions and unemployment benefits, then worker-friendly hiring and firing rights, and finally the world-leading health service.

The government of Prime Minister Jean-Pierre Raffarin insisted that there simply wasn't enough money to go round. But most of France saw the programme less as prudent milk-rationing and more as getting their sacred cow ready to be sent off to slaughter. In the spring of 2003 the country suffered wave after wave of public-sector strikes and marches rolled through the streets. By mid-May, two million workers were out on strike; and on May 26 half a million protested in the streets of Paris. And this was only in defence of pensions, never mind the health service.

By 2004, the government had curbed its ambitions, while still insisting that reform was essential. The slick and ambitious new finance minister, Nicolas Sarkozy, set out a programme of privatizations and public-sector parsimony. The health-care budget would be trimmed, but so would the defence budget, and the electorate would be further mollified by consumer-focused tax breaks. The public response was unequivocal. In the regional elections of March 2004 just one of the 22 mainland regional councils remained in the control of the centre-right. Overnight, the electoral map had turned a furious pink.

The electorate's anger was not aimed solely at the Right. In the referendum of May 2005, 55 percent of French voters rejected the proposed new EU constitution when the major political parties had all urged them to vote "Yes". Former Socialist leader Laurent Fabius was even expelled from his party for joining an alliance of Greens, far-leftists and extreme right-wingers to campaign for a "No" vote. Opponents of the draft constitution saw it as wedding France to an "Anglo-Saxon" Europe after the neoliberal economic model. Many were voting against globalization or political paternalism as much as against the constitution itself.

In the wake of his government's defeat, Chirac's popularity plummeted to new depths, but he survived by sacking Raffarin as Prime Minister and replacing him with the intellectual-minded Dominique de Villepin, the architect of France's opposition to war in Iraq. Nicolas Sarkozy – who had meantime got himself elected by a landslide as the new leader of Chirac's UMP party – was appointed Interior Minister. Both men were jockeying for position as Chirac's successor. And by the end of 2006, both men would have their reputations seriously undermined.

Civil unrest

Nicolas Sarkozy's test came with the wave of civil unrest that swept France's urban areas in November 2005. The initial cause was the accidental deaths of two teenagers, on 27 October. They were electrocuted in an electricity substation in Clichy-sous-Bois, a run-down area in the Paris banlieue, while running away from police they believed were chasing them. "The suburbs" doesn't begin to translate this word, banlieue. Great swathes of estates outlying the centre of major French cities suffer from poverty, social exclusion and government neglect on a scale unimaginable in bourgeois France.

Local anger led to numerous car-burnings and confrontations with police on three successive nights. By the fourth and fifth night, unrest had spread to other Parisian suburbs, and before a week was out localized rioting had spread to Dijon, Rouen and Marseille. Night after night, youths torched first cars, then buses, schools and police and power stations – anything associated with the state. The notorious, hardline response of "Sarko", as the Interior Minister was now dubbed, was to call the rioters racailles (a rabble) and to demand the neighbourhoods were cleaned with power-hoses. A state of emergency was declared and after three weeks, the banlieue seemed to have burned itself out. Almost 9000 vehicles and property worth €200 million had gone up in smoke, right across France, and almost over 2900 people had been arrested.

The causes of the unrest were hotly debated. A complete breakdown of relations between disaffected young people and the police was certainly the major factor. Right-wingers tried to blame Muslim radicals but this idea was quickly, and comprehensively, discredited. Young people who actually lived in the cités saw the main causes as anger at racism and exclusion from society, including exclusion from employment. Many of the worst-affected areas are home to communities of largely African or North-African origin, where youth unemployment runs as high as fifty percent – double the already high average among young people.

Youth and the CPE

Dominique de Villepin came out of the civil unrest with his career in better shape than that of his rival, Nicolas Sarkozy. But the issue of youth employment would soon put de Villepin, too, to the test. As part of his government's attempt to tackle France's stagnant growth and stubborn budget deficit, he launched new legislation giving small companies the right to dismiss new employees – those with under two years' service – without having to give cause. Labour-market flexibility was the goal. Such measures are by no means uncommon, but from the historical perspective of France's hard-won struggle for labour rights, they looked like an attack on the cherished French exception – the political status quo whereby the state protects workers' rights, the national agricultural and industrial base, and French culture generally, eschewing neoliberal or "Anglo-Saxon" capitalism. On 5 October, 2005, a million workers across the country marched against the new labour law, and polls showed that three-quarters of the population supported them.

In 2006, the laws were to be extended to all companies employing workers under the age of 26, as part of the Contrat première embauche (CPE), or first employment contract. The law was supposed to encourage firms to hire young people. Students and the young, however, saw it differently: why should they, uniquely, be denied the rights their elders took for granted? In March, students in Paris occupied the Sorbonne, in conscious imitation of May 1968. Once again, they were brutally driven out by riot police. And just as in 1968, people protested across France in their millions – only this time in the hope not that France would radically change, but that everything would stay the same. A notorious survey at this time concluded that the most desired job among young people in France was not that of film director or political activist, but of civil servant. Casseurs, or hooligans, blended in and sometimes clashed with the protestors – who seemed determined to back down. On April 10, Dominique de Villepin withdrew the law.

The 2007 presidential election

In the wake of the CPE debacle, Nicolas Sarkozy edged into the lead once more as Chirac's likely successor. De Villepin's fortunes took a further blow when newspapers alleged he had instructed judges to investigate Sarkozy's alleged role in the Clearstream scandal, in which French officials were said to have taken bribes as part of a 1991 deal to sell frigates to Taiwan. Sarkozy vigorously and successfully defended himself, even suggesting there was a plot to discredit him.

As it turns out, the ambitions of both men may yet come to nothing. Since 2002, the far-right candidacy of Le Pen cannot be discounted – and his popularity grew after the riots of 2005 and 2006. And as the elections approached, a new potential winner emerged: Ségolène Royal, of the opposition Socialist Party. Her campaign occupied a Blairite centre ground previously rare in French politics. On the one hand she promoted an anti-chauvinist agenda, while on the other she criticized the 35-hour week, and talked tough on law and order, thus edging into traditionally right-wing territory. It remains to be seen whether France – where women only got the vote in 1944 – is ready to accept its first female President.

Art

Since the Middle Ages, France has held – with occasional gaps – a leading position in the history of European painting, with Paris, above all, attracting artists from the whole continent. The story of French painting is one of richness and complexity, partly due to this influx of foreign painters and partly due to the capital's stability as an artistic centre.

Beginnings

In the late Middle Ages, the itinerant life of the nobles led them to prefer small and transportable works of art; splendidly illuminated manuscripts were much praised and the best painters, usually trained in Paris, continued to work on a small scale until the fifteenth century. In spite of the small size of the illuminated image, painters made startling steps towards a realistic interpretation of the world and in the exploration of new subject matters.

Many of these illuminators were also panel painters, foremost of whom was Jean Fouquet (c.1420–1481), born in Tours in the Loire valley and the central artistic personality of fifteenth-century France. Court painter to Charles VIII, Fouquet drew from both Flemish and Italian sources, utilizing the new fluid oil technique that had been perfected in Flanders, and concerning himself with the problem of representing space convincingly, much like his Italian contemporaries. Through this he moulded a distinct personal style, combining richness of surface with broad, generalized forms and, in his feeling for volume and ordered geometric shapes, laying down principles that became intrinsic to French art for centuries to come, from Poussin to Seurat and Cézanne.

Two other fifteenth-century French artists are worthy of brief mention, principally for the broad range of artistic expression they embody. Enguerrand Quarton (c.1410–c.1466) was the most famous Provençal painter of the time; his art, profoundly religious in subject as well as feeling, already shows the impact of the Mediterranean sun in the strong light that pervades his paintings. His Pietà in the Louvre is both stark and intensely poignant, while the Coronation of the Virgin that hangs at Villeneuve-lès-Avignon is a vast panoramic vision not only of heaven but also of a very real earth, in what ranks as one of the first city/landscapes in the history of French painting: Avignon itself is faithfully depicted and the Mont Ste-Victoire, later to be made famous by Cézanne, is recognizable in the distance.

The Master of Moulins, active in the 1480s and 1490s, was noticeably more northern in temperament, painting both religious altarpieces and portraits commissioned by members of the royal family or the fast-increasing bourgeoisie.

Mannerism and Italian influence

At the end of the fifteenth and the beginning of the sixteenth centuries, the French invasion of Italy brought both artists and patrons into closer contact with the Italian Renaissance.

The most famous of the artists who were lured to France was Leonardo da Vinci, spending the last three years of his life (1516–19) at the court of François 1er. From the Loire valley, which until then had been his favourite residence, the French king moved nearer to Paris, where he had several palaces decorated. Italian artists were once again called upon, and two of them, Rosso and Primaticcio, who arrived in France in 1530 and 1532 respectively, were to shape the artistic scene in France for the rest of the sixteenth century.

Both artists introduced to France the latest Italian style, Mannerism, a sometimes anarchic derivation of the High Renaissance of Michelangelo and Raphael. Mannerism, with its emphasis on the fantastic, the luxurious and the large-scale decorative, was eminently compatible with the taste of the court, and it was first put to the test in the revamping of the old Château de Fontainebleau.

There, a horde of French painters headed by the two Italians came to form what was subsequently called the School of Fontainebleau. Most French artists worked at Fontainebleau at some point in their career, or were influenced by its homogeneous style, but none stands out as a personality of any stature, and for the most part the painting of the time was dull and fanciful in the extreme.

Antoine Caron (c.1520–1600), who often worked for Catherine de Médicis, the widow of Henri II, contrived complicated allegorical paintings in which elongated figures are arranged within wide, theatre-like scenery packed with ancient monuments and Roman statues. Even the Wars of Religion, raging in the 1550s and 1560s, failed to rouse French artists' sense of drama, and representations of the many massacres then going on were detached and fussy in tone.

Portraiture tended to be more inventive. The portraits of Jean Clouet (c.1485–1541) and his son François (c.1510–72), both official painters to François 1er, combined sensitivity in the rendering of the sitter's features with a keen sense of abstract design in the arrangement of the figure, conveying with great clarity social status and giving clues to the sitter's profession. Though influenced by sixteenth-century Italian and Flemish portraits, their work remains, nonetheless, very French in its general sobriety.

The seventeenth century

In the seventeenth century, Italy continued to be a source of inspiration for French artists, most of whom were drawn to Rome – at that time the most exciting artistic centre in Europe, dominated by Italian painters such as Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggio and Annibale Carracci.

Some French painters like Moïse Valentin (c.1594–1632) worked in Rome and were directly influenced by Caravaggio; others, such as the great painter from Lorraine, Georges de la Tour (1593–1652), benefited from his innovations at one remove, gaining inspiration from the Utrecht Caravaggisti who were active at the time in Holland. Starting with a descriptive realism in which naturalistic detail made for a varied painted surface, La Tour gradually simplified both forms and surfaces, producing deeply felt religious paintings in which figures appear to be carved out of the surrounding gloom by the magical light of a candle. Sadly, his output was very small – just some forty or so works in all.

Lowlife subjects and attention to naturalistic detail were also important aspects of the work of the Le Nain brothers, especially Louis (1593–1648), who depicted with great sympathy, but never with sentimentality, the condition of the peasantry. He chose moments of inactivity or repose within the lives of the peasants, and his paintings achieve timelessness and monumentality by their very stillness. The other Italian artist of influence, the Bolognese Annibale Carracci (d. 1609), impressed French painters not only with his skill as a decorator but, more tellingly, with his ordered, balanced landscapes, which were to prove of prime importance for the development of the classical landscape in general, and in particular for those painted by Claude Lorrain (1604/5–82).

Claude, who started work as a pastry cook, was born in Lorraine, near Nancy. He left France for Italy to practise his trade, and worked in the household of a landscape painter in Rome, somehow persuading his master, who painted landscapes in the classical manner of Carracci, to let him abandon pastry for painting. Later he travelled to Naples, where the beauty of the harbour and bay made a lasting impression on him, the golden light of the southern port, and of Rome and its surrounding countryside, providing him with endless subjects of study, which he drew, sketched and painted for the rest of his life. Claude's landscapes are airy compositions in which religious or mythological figures are lost within an idealized, Arcadian nature, bathed in a luminous, transparent light which, golden or silvery, lends a tranquil mood.

Landscapes, harsher and even more ordered, but also recalling the Arcadian mood of antiquity, were painted by the other French painter who elected to make Rome his home, Nicolas Poussin (1594–1665). Like Claude, Poussin selected his themes from the rich sources of Greek, Roman and Christian myths and stories; unlike Claude, however, his figures are not subdued by nature but rather dominate it, in the tradition of the masters of the High Renaissance, such as Raphael and Titian, whom he greatly admired. During the working out of a painting Poussin would make small models, arrange them on an improvised stage and then sketch the puppet scene – which may explain why his figures often have a still, frozen quality. Poussin only briefly returned to Paris, called by the king, Louis XIII, to undertake some large decorative works quite unsuited to his style or character. Back in Rome he refined a style that became increasingly classical and severe.

Many other artists visited Italy, but most returned to France, the luckiest to be employed at the court to boost the royal images of Louis XIII and XIV and the egos of their respective ministers, Richelieu and Colbert. Simon Vouet (1590–1649), Charles Le Brun (1619–90) and Pierre Mignard (1612–95) all performed that task with skill, often using ancient history and mythology to suggest flattering comparisons with the reigning monarch.

The official aspect of their works was paralleled by the creation of the new Academy of Painting and Sculpture in 1648, an institution that dominated the arts in France for the next few hundred years, if only by the way artists reacted against it. Philippe de Champaigne (1602–74), a painter of Flemish origin, alone stands out at the time as remotely different, removed from the intrigues and pleasures of the court and instead strongly influenced by the teaching and moral code of Jansenism, a purist and severe form of the Catholic faith. The apparent simplicity and starkness of his portraits hides an unusually perceptive understanding of his sitters' personalities. But it was the more courtly, fun-loving portraits and paintings by such artists as Mignard that were to influence most of the art of the following century.

The early eighteenth century

The semi-official art encouraged by the foundation of the Academy became more frivolous and light-hearted in the eighteenth century. The court at Versailles lost its attractions, and many patrons now were to be found among the hedonistic bourgeoisie and aristocracy living in Paris. History painting, as opposed to genre scenes or portraiture, retained its position of prestige, but at the same time the various categories began to merge and many artists tried their hands at landscape, genre, history or decorative works, bringing aspects of one type into another. Salons, at which painters exhibited their works, were held with increasing frequency and bred a new phenomenon in the art world – the art critic. The philosopher Diderot was one of the first of these arbiters of taste, doers and undoers of reputations.

Possibly the most complex personality of the eighteenth century was Jean-Antoine Watteau (1684–1721). Primarily a superb draughtsman, Watteau's use of soft and yet rich, light colours reveals how much he was struck by the great seventeenth-century Flemish painter Rubens. The open-air scenes of flirtatious love painted by Rubens and by the fifteenth/sixteenth-century Venetian Giorgione provided Watteau with precedents for his own subtle depictions of dreamy couples (sometimes depictions of characters from the Italian Commedia dell'Arte) strolling in delicate, mythical landscapes. In some of these Fêtes Galantes and in pictures of solitary musicians or actors (Gilles), Watteau conveyed a mood of melancholy, loneliness and poignancy that was largely lacking in the works of his many imitators and followers (Nicolas Lancret, J.-B. Pater).

The work of François Boucher (1703–70) was probably more representative of the eighteenth century: the pleasure-seeking court of Louis XV found the lightness of morals and colours in his paintings immensely congenial. Boucher's virtuosity is seen at its best in his paintings of women, always rosy, young and fantasy-erotic.

Jean-Honoré Fragonard (1732–1806) continued this exploration of licentious themes but with an exuberance, a richness of colour and a vitality (The Swing) that was a feast for the eyes and raised the subject to a glorification of love. Far more restrained were the paintings of Jean-Baptiste-Siméon Chardin (1699–1779), who specialized in homely genre scenes and still lifes, painted with a simplicity that belied his complex use of colours, shapes and space to promote a mood of stillness and tranquillity. Jean-Baptiste Greuze (1725–1805) chose stories that anticipated reaction against the laxity of the times; the moral, at times sentimental, character of his paintings was all-pervasive, reinforced by a stage-like composition well suited to cautionary tales.

Neoclassicism

This new seriousness became more severe with the rise of Neoclassicism, a movement for which purity and simplicity were essential components of the systematic depiction of edifying stories from the classical authors. Roman history and legends were the most popular subjects, and though Jacques-Louis David (1748–1825), a pupil of an earlier exponent of Neoclassicism, J.M.Vien, conformed to that to a certain extent, he was different in that he was also keenly sensitive to the changing mood and philosophies of his time and to the reaction against frivolity and self-indulgence. Many of his paintings are reflections of republican ideals and of contemporary history, from the Death of Marat to events from the life of Napoleon, who was his patron. For the emperor and his family, David painted some of his most successful portraits – Madame Recamier is not only an exquisite example of David's controlled use of shapes and space and his debt to antique Rome, but can also be seen as a paradigm of Neoclassicism.

Two painters, Jean-Antoine Gros (1771–1835) and Baron Gérard (1770–1837), followed David closely in style and in themes (portraits, Napoleonic history and legend), but often with a touch of softness and heroic poetry that pointed the way to Romanticism.

Jean-Auguste-Dominique Ingres (1780–1867) was a pupil of David; he also studied in Rome before coming back to Paris to develop the purity of line that was the essential and characteristic element of his art. His effective use of it to build up forms and bind compositions can be admired in conjunction with his recurrent theme of female nudes bathing, or in his magnificent and stately portraits that depict the nuances of social status.

Romanticism

Completely opposed to the stress on drawing advocated by Ingres, two artists created, through their emphasis on colour, form and composition, pictures that look forward to the later part of the nineteenth century and the Impressionists. Théodore Géricault (1791–1824), whose short life was still dominated by the heroic vision of the Napoleonic era, explored dramatic themes of human suffering in such paintings as The Raft of the Medusa, while his close contemporary, Eugène Delacroix (1798–1863), epitomized the Romantic movement – its search for emotions and its love of nature, power and change.

Delacroix was deeply aware of tradition, and his art was influenced, visually and conceptually, by the great masters of the Renaissance and the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. In many ways he may be regarded as the last great religious and decorative French painter, but through his technical virtuosity, freedom of brushwork and richness of colours, he can also be seen as the essential forerunner of the Impressionists. For Delacroix there was no conflict between colour and design: David and Ingres saw these elements as separate aspects of creation, but Delacroix used colours as the basis and structure of his designs. His technical freedom was partly due to his admiration for two English painters, John Constable and his close friend, Richard Parkes Bonington, with whom he shared a studio for a few months. Bonington especially had a freshness of approach to colour and a free handling of paint, both of which had a strong impact on Delacroix. His numerous themes ranged from intimate female nudes, often with mysterious and erotic Middle Eastern overtones, to studies of animals and hunting scenes. Ancient and contemporary history supplied him with some of his most harrowing and dramatic paintings: The Massacre at Chios was based on an event that took place during the Greek War of Independence against the Turks, and Liberty Guiding the People was painted to commemorate the Revolution of 1830. Both paintings were his personal response to contemporary events and the human tragedies they entailed.

Other painters working in the Romantic tradition were still haunted by the Napoleonic legends, as well as by North Africa (Algeria) and the Middle East, which had become better known to artists and patrons alike during the Napoleonic wars. These were the subjects of paintings by Horace Vernet (1789–1863), Jean-Louis-Ernest Meissonier (1815–91) and Théodore Chassériau (1819–56).

Among their contemporaries was Honoré Daumier (1808–79): very much an isolated figure, influenced by the boldness of approach of caricaturists, he was content to depict everyday subjects such as a laundress or a third-class rail car – caustic commentaries on professions and politics that work as brilliant observations of the times.

Landscape painting and realism

Some painters of the first part of the nineteenth century were fascinated by other themes. Nature, in its true state, unadorned by conventions, became a subject for study, and running parallel to this was the realization that painting could be the visual externalization of the artist's own emotions and feelings. These two aspects, which until this time had only been very tentatively touched upon, were now more fully explored and led directly to the innovations of the Impressionists and later painters.

Jean-Baptiste-Camille Corot (1796–1875) started to paint landscapes that were fresh, direct and influenced as much by the unpretentious and realistic country scenes of seventeenth-century Holland as by the balanced compositions of Claude. His loving and attentive studies of nature were much admired by later artists, including Monet.

At the same time, a whole group of painters developed similar attitudes to landscape and nature, helped greatly by the practical improvement of being able to buy oil paint in tubes rather than as unmixed pigments. Known as the Barbizon School after the village on the outskirts of Paris around which they painted, they soon discovered the joy and excitement of plein-air (open-air) painting.

Théodore Rousseau (1812–67) was their nominal leader, his paintings of forest undergrowth and forest clearings displaying an intimacy that came from the immediacy of the image. Charles-François Daubigny (1817–78), like Rousseau, often infused a sense of drama into his landscapes.

Jean-François Millet (1814–75) is perhaps the best-known associate of the Barbizon group, though he was more interested in the human figure than simple nature. Landscapes, however, were essential settings for his figures; indeed, his most famous pictures are those exploring the place of people in nature and their struggle to survive. The Sower, for instance, was a typical Millet theme, suggesting the heroic working life of the peasant. As is so often the case for painters touching on new themes or on ideas that are uncomfortable to the rich and powerful, Millet enjoyed little success during his lifetime, and his art was only widely recognized after his death.

The moralistic and romantic undertone in Millet's work was something that Gustave Courbet (1819–77) strove to avoid. Courbet was a socialist and his frank, outspoken attitude led to his being accused of taking part in the destruction of the column in Paris's Place Vendôme after the outbreak of the Commune and, eventually, to his exile. After an initial resounding success in the Salon exhibition of 1849, he endured constant criticism from the academic world and patrons alike: scenes of ordinary life, such as the Funeral at Orléans, which he often chose to depict, were regarded as unsavoury and deliberately ugly.

But Courbet had a deep admiration for the old masters, especially for Rembrandt and the Spanish painters of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. This link with tradition was probably one of the underlying themes of his large masterpiece, The Studio, which was emphatically rejected by the jury of the 1855 Exposition Universelle, and in which Courbet portrayed himself, surrounded by his model, his friends, colleagues and admirers, among them the poet Baudelaire. Courbet subsequently decided to hold a private exhibition of some forty of his works, writing at the same time a manifesto explaining his intentions of being true to his vision of the world and of creating “living art”. Writing the word Realism in large letters on the door leading to the exhibition, he stated his intentions and gave a label to his art.

Impressionism

Like Courbet, Edouard Manet (1832–83) was strongly influenced by Spanish painters, whose works had become more easily accessible to artists when a large collection belonging to the Orléans family was confiscated by the state in 1848. Unlike Courbet, though, he never saw himself as a socialist or indeed as a rebel or avant-garde painter, yet his technique and interpretation of themes was quite new and shocked as many people as it inspired. Manet used bold contrasts of light and very dark colours, giving his paintings a forcefulness that critics often took for a lack of sophistication. And his detractors saw much to decry in his reworking of an old subject originally treated by the sixteenth-century Venetian painter, Giorgione, Le Déjeuner sur l’Herbe. Manet’s version was shocking because he placed naked and dressed figures together, and because the men were dressed in the costume of the day, implying a pleasure party too specifically contemporary to be “respectable”.

Manet was not interested in painting moral lessons, however, and some of his most successful pictures are reflections of ordinary life in bars and public places, where respectability, as understood by the late nineteenth-century bourgeoisie, was certainly lacking. To Manet, painting was to be enjoyed for its own sake and not as a tool for moral instruction – in itself an outlook on the role of art that was quite new, not to say revolutionary, and marked a definite break with the paintings of the past. With Manet, the basis of our present expectations and understanding of modern art was established.

From the 1870s, Manet began to adopt the Impressionist techniques of painting out-of-doors, and his work became lighter and freer. Although it is doubtful whether Manet either wanted or expected to assume the role of leader, he found himself a much-admired member of that group of painters, one of whom was Claude Monet (1840–1926). Born in Le Havre, Monet came into contact with Eugène Boudin (1824–98), whose colourful beach scenes anticipated the way the Impressionists approached colour. He then went to Paris to study under Charles Gleyre, a respected teacher in whose studio he met many of the people with whom he formulated his ideas. Monet soon discovered that, for him, light and the way in which it builds up forms and creates an infinity of colours was the element that governed all representations. Under the impact of Manet’s bright hues and his unconventional attitude (“art for art’s sake”), Monet soon began using pure colours side by side, blended together to create areas of brightness and shade.

In 1874, a group of thirty artists exhibited together for the first time. Among them were some of the best-known names of this period of French art: Degas, Monet, Renoir, Pissarro. One of Monet’s paintings was entitled Impression: Sun Rising, a title that was singled out by the critics to ridicule the colourful, loose and unacademic style of these young artists. Overnight they became, derisively, the “Impressionists”.

Camille Pissarro (1830–1903) was slightly older than most of them and seems to have played the part of an encouraging father-figure, always keenly aware of any new development or new talent. Not a great innovator himself, Pissarro was a very gifted artist whose use of Impressionist technique was supplemented by a lyrical feeling for nature and its seasonal changes. But it was really with Monet that Impressionist theory ran its full course: he studied endlessly the impact of light on objects and the way in which it reveals colours. To understand this phenomenon better, Monet painted the same motif again and again under different conditions of light, at different times of the day, and in different seasons, producing whole series of paintings such as Grain Stacks, Poplars and, much later, his Waterlilies. In the late 1870s and the early 1880s many other artists helped formulate the new style, though few remained true to its principles for very long.

Auguste Renoir (1841–1919), who started life as a painter of porcelain, was swept up by Monet's ideas for a while, but soon felt the need to look again at the old masters and to emphasize the importance of drawing to the detriment of colour. Renoir regarded the representation of the female nude as the most taxing and rewarding subject that an artist could tackle. Like Boucher in the eighteenth century, Renoir's nudes are luscious, but rarely, if ever, erotic. They have a healthy, uncomplicated quality that was, in his later paintings, to become cloyingly, almost overpoweringly, sickly and sweet. Better were his portraits of women fully clothed, both for their obvious and innate sympathy and for their keen sense of design.

Edgar Degas (1834–1917) was yet another artist who, although he exhibited with the Impressionists, did not follow their precepts very closely. The son of a rich banker, he was trained in the tradition of Ingres: design and drawing were an integral part of his art, and, whereas Monet was fascinated mainly by light, Degas wanted to express movement in all its forms. His pictures are vivid expressions of the body in action, usually straining under fairly exacting circumstances – dancers and circus artistes were among his favourite subjects, as well as more mundane depictions of laundresses and other working women.

Like so many artists of the day, Degas had his imagination fired by the discovery of Japanese prints, which could for the first time be seen in quantity. These provided him with new ideas of composition, not least in their asymmetry of design and the use of large areas of unbroken colour. Photography, too, had an impact, if only because it finally liberated artists from the task of producing accurate, exacting descriptions of the world.

Degas' extraordinary gift as a draughtsman was matched only by that of the Provençal aristocrat Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec (1864–1901). Toulouse-Lautrec, who had broken both his legs as a child, was unusually small, a physical deformity that made him particularly sensitive to free and vivacious movements. A great admirer of Degas, he chose similar themes: people in cafés and theatres, working women and variety dancers all figured large in his work. But, unlike Degas, Toulouse-Lautrec looked beyond the body, and his work is scattered with social comment, sometimes sardonic and bitter. In his portrayal of Paris prostitutes, there is sympathy and kindness; to study them better he lived in a brothel, revealing in his paintings the weariness and sometimes gentleness of these women.

△ Degas' L'Absinthe

Post-Impressionism

Though a rather vague term, as it's difficult to date exactly when the backlash against Impressionism took place, Post-Impressionism represents in many ways a return to more formal concepts of painting – in composition, in attitudes to subject and in drawing.

Paul Cézanne (1839–1906), for one, associated only very briefly with the Impressionists and spent most of his working life in relative isolation, obsessed with rendering, as objectively as possible, the essence of form. He saw objects as basic shapes – cylinders, cones, and so on – and tried to give the painting a unity of texture that would force the spectator to view it not so much as a representation of the world but rather as an entity in its own right, as an object as real and dense as the objects surrounding it. It was this striving for pictorial unity that led him to cover the entire surface of the picture with small, equal brush strokes which made no distinction between the textures of a tree, a house or the sky.

The detached, unemotional way in which Cézanne painted was not unlike that of the seventeenth-century artist Poussin, and he found a contemporary parallel in the work of Georges Seurat (1859–91). Seurat was fascinated by current theories of light and colour, and he attempted to apply them in a systematic way, creating different shades and tones by placing tiny spots of pure colour side by side, which the eye could in turn fuse together to see the colours mixed out of their various components. This pointillist technique also had the effect of giving monumentality to everyday scenes of contemporary life.

While Cézanne, Seurat and, for that matter, the Impressionists sought to represent the outside world objectively, several other artists – the Symbolists – were seeking a different kind of truth, through the subjective experience of fantasy and dreams. Gustave Moreau (1840–98) represented, in complex paintings, the intricate worlds of the romantic fairy tale, his visions expressed in a wealth of naturalistic details. The style of Puvis de Chavannes (1824–98) was more restrained and more obviously concerned with design and the decorative. And a third artist, Odilon Redon (1840–1916), produced some weird and visionary graphic work that especially intrigued Symbolist writers; his less frequent works in colour belong to the later part of his life.

The subjectivity of the Symbolists was of great importance to the art of Paul Gauguin (1848–1903). He started life as a stockbroker who collected Impressionist paintings, a Sunday artist who gave up his job in 1883 to dedicate himself to painting.

During his stay in Pont-Aven in Brittany, Gauguin worked with a number of artists who called themselves the Nabis, among them Paul Sérusier and Émile Bernard. He began exploring ways of expressing concepts and emotions by means of large areas of colour and powerful forms, and developed a unique style that was heavily indebted to his knowledge of Japanese prints and of the tapestries and stained glass of medieval art. His search for the primitive expression of primitive emotions took him eventually to the South Sea islands and Tahiti, where he found some of his most inspiring subjects and painted some of his best-known canvases.

A similar derivation from Symbolist art and a wish to exteriorize emotions and ideas by means of strong colours, lines and shapes underlies the work of Vincent Van Gogh (1853–90), a Dutch painter who came to live in France. Like Gauguin, with whom he had an admiring but stormy friendship, Van Gogh started painting relatively late in life, lightening his palette in Paris under the influence of the Impressionists, and then heading south to Arles where, struck by the harshness of the Mediterranean light, he turned out such frantic expressionistic pieces as The Reaper and Wheatfield with Crows. In all his later pictures the paint is thickly laid on in increasingly abstract patterns that follow the shapes and tortuous paths of his deep inner melancholy.

Both Gauguin and Van Gogh saw objects and colours as means of representing ideas and subjective feelings. Édouard Vuillard (1868–1940) and Pierre Bonnard (1867–1947) combined this with Cézanne's insistence on unifying the surface and texture of the picture. The result was, in both cases, paintings of often intimate scenes in which figures and objects are blended together in a series of complicated patterns. In some of Vuillard's works, people dressed in checked material, for example, merge into the flowered wallpaper behind them, and in the paintings of Bonnard, the glowing design of the canvas itself is as important as what it's trying to represent.

Fauvism, Cubism, Surrealism

The twentieth century kicked off to a colourful start with the Fauvist exhibition of 1905, an appropriately anarchic beginning to a century which, in France above all, was to see radical changes in attitudes towards painting. The painters who took part in the exhibition included, most influentially, Henri Matisse (1869–1954), André Derain (1880–1954), Georges Rouault (1871–1958) and Albert Marquet (1875–1947), and they were quickly nicknamed the Fauves (Wild Beasts) for their use of bright, wild colours that often bore no relation whatsoever to the reality of the object depicted. Skies were just as likely to be green as blue since, for the Fauves, colour was a way of composing, of structuring a picture, and not necessarily a reflection of real life. Raoul Dufy (1877–1953) used Fauvist colours in combination with theories of abstraction to paint an effervescent industrial age.

Fauvism was just the beginning: the first decades of the twentieth century were times of intense excitement and artistic activity in Paris, and painters and sculptors from all over Europe flocked to the capital to take part in the liberation from conventional art that individuals and groups were gradually instigating. This loose, cosmopolitan grouping of artists gradually became known as the Ecole de Paris, though it was never a “school” as such. Pablo Picasso (1881–1973) was one of the first to arrive in Paris – from Spain, in 1900. He soon started work on his first Blue Period paintings, which describe the sad and squalid life of itinerant actors in tones of blue. Later, while Matisse was experimenting with colours and their decorative potential, Picasso came under the sway of Cézanne and his organization of forms into geometrical shapes. He also learned from “primitive”, and especially African, sculpture, and out of these studies came a painting that heralded a definite new direction, not only for Picasso’s own style but for the whole of modern art – Les Femmes d’Alger (O. J. R. M.). Executed in 1907, this painting combined Cézanne’s analysis of forms with the visual impact of African masks.

It was from this semi-abstract picture that Picasso went on to develop the theory of Cubism, inspiring artists such as Georges Braque (1882–1963) and Juan Gris (1887–1927), another Spaniard, and formulating a whole new movement. The Cubists’ aim was to depict objects not so much as they saw them but rather as they knew them to be: a bottle and a guitar were shown from the front, from the side and from the back as if the eye could take in all at once every facet and plane of the object. Braque and Picasso first analysed forms into these facets (analytical Cubism), then gradually reduced them to series of colours and shapes (synthetic Cubism), among which a few recognizable symbols such as letters, fragments of newspaper and numbers appeared. The complexity of different planes overlapping one another made the deciphering of Cubist paintings sometimes difficult, and the very last phase of Cubism tended increasingly towards abstraction.

Spin-offs of Cubism were many: such movements as Orphism, headed by Robert Delaunay (1885–1941) and Francis Picabia (1879–1953), who experimented not with objects but with the colours of the spectrum, and Futurism, which evolved first in Italy, then in Paris, and explored movement and the bright new technology of the industrial age. Fernand Léger (1881–1955), one of the main exponents of the so-called School of Paris, had also become acquainted with modern machinery during World War I, and he exploited his fascination with its smoothness and power to create geometric and monumental compositions of technical imagery that were indebted to both Cézanne and Cubism.

The war, meanwhile, had affected many artists: in Switzerland, Dada was born out of the scorn artists felt for the petty bourgeois and nationalistic values that had led to the bloodshed, a nihilistic movement that sought to knock down all traditionally accepted ideas. It was best exemplified in the work of the Frenchman Marcel Duchamp (1887–1968), who selected everyday objects (“ready-mades”) and elevated them, without modification, to the rank of works of art simply by taking them out of their ordinary context and putting them on display – his most notorious piece was a urinal which he called Fontaine and exhibited in New York in 1917. His conviction that art could be made out of anything was to have a huge influence on later twentieth-century artists, especially conceptual artists, for whom “art as idea” was key.

Dada was a literary as well as an artistic movement, and through one of its main poets, André Breton, it led to the inception of Surrealism. It was the unconscious and its dark uncharted territories that interested the Surrealists: they derived much of their imagery from Freud and even experimented in words and images with free-association techniques. Strangely enough, most of the “French” Surrealists were foreigners, primarily the German Max Ernst (1891–1976) and the Spaniard Salvador Dalí (1904–89), though Frenchman Yves Tanguy (1900–55) also achieved international recognition. Mournful landscapes of weird, often terrifying images evoked the landscape of nightmares in often very precise details and with an anguish that went on to influence artists for years to come. Picasso, for instance, shocked by the massacre at the Spanish town of Guernica in 1936, drew greatly from Surrealism to produce the disquieting figures of his painting of the same name.

Towards Nouveau Réalisme

World War II knocked Paris from its position at the pinnacle of world art. At the outbreak of World War II many artists emigrated to the US, where the economic climate was more favourable. France was no longer the artistic melting pot of Europe, though Paris itself remained full of vibrant new work. Sculptors like the Romanian Brancusi (1876–1957) and the Swiss Giacometti (1886–1966) lived most of their lives in city. Reacting against the rigours of Cubism, many French artists of the 1940s and 50s opened themselves instead to the language and methods of American Abstract Expressionism, emanating from a vibrant New York. French painters such as Pierre Soulages (b.1919) and Jean Dubuffet (1901–1985) pursued Tachisme, also known as l'Art informel. Dubuffet was heavily influenced by Art Brut – that is, works created by children, prisoners or the mentally ill. He produced thickly textured, often childlike paintings, pioneering the depreciation of traditional artistic materials and methods, fashioning junk, tar, sand and glass into the shape of human beings. His work (which provoked much outrage) influenced both the French-born American, Arman (1928–2005), and César (1921–1998), both of whom made use of scrap metals – their output ranging from presentations of household debris to towers of crushed and compressed cars. Even more controversially, the Swiss Daniel Spoerri (b.1930) used the remnants – including the crockery – of his dinners and glued them onto a canvas.

These artists, among others, began to constitute what would be seen as the last coherent French art movement of the century: Nouveau Réalisme. A phenomenon largely of the late 1950s and 1960s, this movement rejected traditional materials and artistic genres, and concentrated instead on the distortion of the objects and signs of contemporary culture. It is often compared to Pop Art. Nouveau Réaliste sculpture is best represented by the works of the Swiss Jean Tinguely (1925–91), whose work was concerned mainly with movement and the machine, satirizing technological civilization. His most famous work, executed in collaboration with Niki de Saint-Phalle (1926–2002), is the exuberant fountain outside the Pompidou Centre, featuring fantastical birds and beasts shooting water in all directions.

Loosely associated with the Nouveaux Réalistes, though resisting all classification, Yves Klein (1928–1962) laid the foundations for several currents in contemporary art. He is seen as a precursor of Minimalism thanks to his exhibition “Le Vide” in 1958, in which he redefined the void and the immaterial as having a pure energy. He was fascinated by the colour blue, which he considered to possess a spiritual quality. He even patented his own colour, International Klein Blue, a deep and luminous blue which he used to execute a series of monochromes. He also used the colour in a series of “body prints”, in which he covered female models with paint and got them to leave their imprints on paper, prefiguring body and performance art.

Conceptual and contemporary

The chief legacy of Surrealism in 1960s France was the way avant-garde artists regularly banded together – and often quickly disbanded – around ideological or conceptual manifestos. These groups were not art schools as such, more conscious experiments in defining and limiting what art could be, in the search for political or theoretical meaning – in search, some would say, of coherence. One of the first such self-constituted groups of the 1960s, GRAV (Groupe de recherche d'art visuel) played with abstraction in the form of mirrors, visual tricks and kinetic art – which had a strong heritage in France from Duchamp and Alexander Calder. Among the leading figures were François Morellet (b.1926), who focused on geometric works, and the Argentine-born Julio Le Parc (b.1928). GRAV's goal, as its 1963 Manifesto declared, was to demystify art by tricking the spectator into relaxing in front of the artwork.

Perhaps the most significant group launched itself in January 1967, when Daniel Buren, Olivier Mosset, Michel Parmentier and Niele Toroni removed their own works from the walls of the Salon de la Jeune Peinture, in protest against the reactionary nature of painting itself – and, paradoxically, to reaffirm the relevance of painting as an art form existing in itself, without interpretation. It was an early taste of the politics of 1968. The works of BMPT – the name was taken from the four men's surnames – focused on abstract colour, often in regular patterns. The best-known of the four, Daniel Buren (b.1938), caused a furore in 1985–6 with his installation in the courtyard of the Palais Royal consisting of numerous black-and-white, vertically striped columns of differing heights. Now, however, the one-time enfant terrible of the art world has become one of France's most respected living artists – a status confirmed by a one-man show at the Pompidou Centre in 2002.

Following BMPT's lead, the geometrically abstract Supports-Surfaces group emerged in Nice in 1969, founded by the likes of Daniel Dezeuze (b.1942), Jean-Pierre Pincemin (1944–2005) and Claude Villat (b.1936). The group stressed the importance of the painting as object – as paint applied to a surface. As Villat put it, "Dezeuze painted stretchers without canvases, I painted canvases without stretchers".

The 1977 opening of the Musée Nationale d'Art Moderne, in Paris's Pompidou Centre, was a sign of the increased state support that French contemporary art was beginning to attract – a support that would be hugely boosted in the early 1980s by the active buying policy of the Socialist government. The landmark Pompidou exhibition of 1979, Tendances de l'art en France, showed artists in three groupings. The first was broadly abstract, the second, figurative. It was the third, however, which would look most prophetic of future directions; it focused on conceptual artists, many of them working with unconventional materials. This third group included the BMPT iconoclasts, along with three artists who would become landmark figures in French contemporary art: Christian Boltanski (b.1944) and Annette Messager (b.1943) – who were then husband and wife – and Bertrand Lavier (b.1949). All three work with found objects: Boltanski's often harrowing work has even employed personal property lost in public places, while Messager has drawn on toys and needlework to create unsettling works, often challenging perceptions of women. Lavier, meanwhile, is best-known for playing with art and reality – principally by applying paint to industrial objects.

A quintessentially French reaction to minimalist and conceptual art emerged in 1981 with Figuration Libre, a movement which absorbed comic-strip art and graffiti in an explosion of punk creativity. Among the key figures were Jean-Charles Blais (b.1956), Robert Combas (b.1957), François Boisrond (b.1959) and Herve di Rosa (b.1959). Despite such breakout movements, the juggernaut of conceptual art continued to roll on through the last two decades. Large-scale installation has become important, particularly in the works of Jean-Marc Bustamante (b.1952) and Jean-Luc Vilmout (b.1952), who have been known to co-opt buildings themselves, resulting in a blurring of the aesthetic and the functional. Artists crossing and recrossing generic boundaries is another ongoing theme. Bustamante, for example, also works with photography, and in the early 1980s he collaborated for three years with the sculptor Bernard Bazile (b.1952) under the name Bazile Bustamante.

A new generation of artists is using non-traditional media, including video, photography, electronic media and found objects. Recent work could hardly be more diverse, but a common thread seems to be the use of films and installations which explore the relationships between reality and fiction, between interiority and the exterior world. The current star of the scene is Pierre Huyghe (b.1962) who in 2005–06 had solo exhibitions at London's Tate Gallery and Paris's Musée de l'Art Moderne de la Ville de Paris. Huyghe is often associated with – and has worked with – the Algerian-born Philippe Parreno (b.1964), who in 2006 released a feature film which followed the footballer Zinédine Zidane for ninety minutes of relentless close-up. Two other associated artists are Dominique Gonzalez-Foerster (b.1965), who works with films, photographs, installations and even métro stations and shop windows to create worlds where fantasy and reality seem to overlap, and Claude Closky (b.1963), whose “books” and videos restructure everyday flotsam and jetsam. Closky has declared “My work bears on all that daily life has made banal, on things that are never called into question”. He won the Marcel Duchamp prize in 2006. Similarly eclectic in his choice of media is Fabrice Hybert (b.1961), who has created the world's largest-ever bar of soap (at 22 tons) and a working television studio. His playful, interactive work taps into what he describes as the “enormous reservoir of the possible”. Sophie Calle (b.1953) blends texts and photographs; among her most publicized works have been her intimate documentations of the lives of both strangers and – after she asked her mother to hire a private detective for the purpose – Calle herself.

In such a multimedia milieu, some critics have claimed that actual painting is moribund in France. In 2006, however, the Lyonnais painter Marc Desgrandchamps (b.1960), who has worked with traditional oil paints in recent years, was recognized with a solo exhibition in the Pompidou Centre. Another key contemporary figure whose work bucks the conceptual trend is the French-born American sculptor Louise Bourgeois (b.1911). Now in her nineties, but still prolific, she draws on the Surrealist heritage to create disturbing and sometimes erotic works, often with a powerfully feminist theme.

Architecture

France's architectural legacy is rich and important, reflecting the power and personality of successive kings, the Church and the state, vying to outdo their peers with bold, lavish statements in brick and stone. Many architectural trends filtered into France from Italy – Romanesque, Renaissance and Baroque – but they have been refined and developed by the French. Rococo grew from Baroque, Neoclassicism came from the Renaissance, and Art Nouveau was a brilliant, confused jumble of Baroque features combined with the newly developed cast-iron industry. Architecture in the twentieth century produced two great names – Auguste Perret and Le Corbusier – but France's contemporary scene is still thriving, with a host of new developments throughout the country.

The Romans

The south of France was colonized by the Romans by around 120 BC in order to expand their trading operations, and they set up substantial settlements at Marseille, Narbonne, Orange, Arles, Fréjus, Glanum near St-Rémy, and Nice, with a network of roads linking them.

The Romans were fine town-planners, linking complexes of buildings with straight roads punctuated by decorative fountains, arches and colonnades. They built essentially in the Greek style, and their large, functional buildings were concerned more with strength and solidity than aesthetics. A number of substantial Roman building works survive: in Nîmes you can see the Maison Carrée, the best-preserved Roman temple still standing, and the Temple of Diana, one of just four vaulted Roman temples in Europe. Gateways remain at Autun, Orange, Saintes and Reims, and largely intact amphitheatres can be seen at Nîmes and Arles. The Pont du Gard aqueduct outside Nîmes is still a magnificent and ageless monument of civil engineering, built to carry the town's fresh water over the gorge, and Orange has its massive theatre, with Europe's only intact Roman facade. There are excavated archeological sites at Glanum near St-Rémy, Vienne, Vaison-la-Romaine and Lyon.

Carolingian and Romanesque

The Carolingian dynasty of Charlemagne attempted a revival of the symbols of civilized authority by recourse to Roman or “Romanesque” (ninth to twelfth centuries) models. Of this era, practically nothing remains visible, though the motifs of arch and vault are carried on in their simplest forms, and the semicircular apse and the basilican plan of nave and aisles persist as the basis of the succeeding phases of Christian architecture. An interesting anomaly is the plan of the church of St-Front at Périgueux, a copy of St Mark's in Venice, brought by trading influence west along the Garonne in the early twelfth century.

Elsewhere development may be divided roughly north–south of the Loire. Southern Romanesque is naturally more Roman, with stone barrel vaults, aisleless naves and domes. St-Trophime at Arles (1150) has a porch directly derived from Roman models and, with the church at St-Gilles nearby, exhibits a delight in carved ornament peculiar to the south at this time. The cathedral at Angoulême typifies the use of all these elements.

The south, too, was the readiest route for the introduction of new cultural developments, and it's here that the pointed arch and vault first appear – from Spanish Muslim sources – in churches such as Notre-Dame at Avignon, the cathedral at Autun and Ste-Madeleine at Vézelay (1089–1206), which contains the earliest pointed cross vault in France.

In the north of the country, the nave with aisles is more usual, together with the development of twin western towers to mask the end of the aisles. The Abbaye aux Hommes at Caen (1066–77) is typical. It contains the elements later developed as “Gothic”, in piers, pillars, buttresses, arcades, ribbed vaults and spires. The best examples are found in Normandy, and it's from here, with the introduction of the pointed arch from the south, that the Gothic style developed.

Gothic

The reasons behind the development of the Gothic style (twelfth to sixteenth centuries) lie in the pursuit of the sublime; to achieve great height without apparent great weight would seem to imitate religious ambition. Its development in the north is partly due to the availability of good building stone and soft stone for carving, but perhaps more to the growth of royal aspiration and power based in the Ile de France, which, allied with the papacy, stimulated the building of the great cathedrals of Paris, Bourges, Chartres, Laon, Le Mans, Reims and Amiens in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries.

The Gothic phase began with the building of the choir of the abbey of St-Denis near Paris in 1140, and ran through to the end of the fifteenth century. Architecturally, it encompasses the development of wider, traceried windows of coloured glass, filling the wall spaces liberated by the refinement of vertical structure; the “rose” or wheel is an early and especially French feature in window tracery. The glass at Chartres shows better than anywhere the concerted architectural effect of these developments. Another distinctive element is the flying buttress outside the walls to resist the outward push of the vaulting.

In the south, as at Albi and Angers, the great churches are generally broader and simpler in plan and external appearance, with aisles often almost as high as the nave. Many secular buildings survive – some of the most notable in their present form being the work of Viollet-le-Duc, the pre-eminent nineteenth-century restorer – and even whole towns, for example Carcassonne and Aigues Mortes; Avignon has the bridge and the papal palace.

Castles, of necessity, lent themselves less to the disappearing walls of the Gothic style. The Château de Pierrefonds, as restored by Viollet, may be taken as typical. The walls of many others disappeared by force, not whim, as gunpowder made them obsolete and a more settled and subjugated order led to the development of château-palaces, such as Châteaudun and Blois. The Château de Josselin in Brittany is a marvellous example of the smaller fortresses that became common towards the end of the Gothic period. In addition, a series of colonial settlements, the bastides, or fortified towns, of the English occupation, remain in the Dordogne region and are a refreshing antidote to triumphal French bombast.

Renaissance

French military adventures in Italy in the early sixteenth century hastened the arrival of a new style borrowing heavily from the Italian Renaissance. Coupled with the persistence of Gothic traditions and the necessity of steep roofs and tall chimneys in the French climate, it appears immediately “Frenchified” rather than in its pure imported form. The châteaux of kings and courtiers in the area round Paris and in the Loire valley, such as Blois, Chambord and Chenonceau, exemplify this style, with their wholly un-Italian concentration of interest on the skyline and an elaboration of detail in the facades at the expense of the clear modelling of form. The wing of the Château de Blois containing the famous staircase designed for François 1er in 1515 shows a characteristic new emphasis on horizontal lines, but the many Italian motifs are still overlaid on a basically Gothic form. With the passing of time, however, the dominant style in France became more purely classical; an adjacent wing at Blois, designed by Mansart in 1635, is still distinctively French, but much more true to classical principles. Above all, the Louvre embodies the whole history of the classical style in France, having been worked over by all the grand names of French architecture from Lescot in the early sixteenth century, via François Mansart and Claude Perrault in the seventeenth, to the later years of the nineteenth century.

It's unfortunate that the Renaissance style in France is chiefly seen in giant structures such as the Louvre and Versailles, which because of their scale can scarcely be experienced as buildings. That this is the case is largely due to the developing despotism and concentration of power under Louis XIII and Louis XIV. But there was a lighter side. François Mansart, at Blois and Maisons Lafitte (1640), shows a certain suavity and elegance, attitudes that appear again in the eighteenth century in the town houses of the Rococo period. On the other hand, Claude Perrault (1613–88), who designed the great colonnaded east front of the Louvre, gives an austere face to the official architecture of despotism, magnificent but far too imperial to be much enjoyed by common mortals. The high-pitched roofs, which had been almost universal until then, are replaced here by the classical balustrade and pediment, the style grand but cold and supremely secular. Art and architecture were at the time organized by boards and academies, including the Académie Royale d'Architecture, and style and employment were strictly controlled by royal direction. Between 1643 and 1774 France was governed by two monarchs who both ruled by the same maxim – absolute power. With such a limitation of ideas at the source of patronage, it's hardly surprising that there was a certain dullness to the era.

Baroque

In a similar way to the preceding century, the churches of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries have a coldness quite different from the German, Flemish and Italian Baroque. When the Renaissance style first appeared in the early sixteenth century, there was no great need for new church building, the country being so well endowed from the Gothic centuries. St-Étienne-du-Mont (1517–1620) and St-Eustache (1532–89), both in Paris, show how old forms persisted with only an overlay of the new style.

It was with the Jesuits in the seventeenth century that the Church embraced the new style to combat the forces of rational disbelief. In Paris the churches of the Sorbonne (1653) and Val-de-Grâce (1645) exemplify this, as do a good number of other grandiose churches in the Baroque style, through Les Invalides at the end of the seventeenth century to the Panthéon of the late eighteenth century. Here is the Church triumphant, rather than the state, but no more beguiling.

The architect of Les Invalides was Jules Hardouin Mansart, a product of the Académie Royale d'Architecture, which harked back to the ancient, classical tradition. Mansart also greatly extended the palace of Versailles and so created the Cinemascope view of France with that seemingly endless horizon of royalty. As an antidote to this pomposity, the Petit Trianon at Versailles is as refreshing now as it was to Louis XV, who had it built in 1762 as a place of escape for his mistress. This is even more true of that other pearl formed of the grit of boredom in the enclosed world of Versailles – La Petite Ferme, where Marie-Antoinette played at being a milkmaid, which epitomizes the Arcadian and “picturesque” fantasy of the painters Boucher and Fragonard.

The lightness and charm that was undermining official grandeur with Arcadian fancies and Rococo decoration was, however, snuffed out by the Revolution. There's no real Revolutionary architecture, as the necessity of order and authority soon asserted itself and an autocracy every bit as absolute returned with Napoleon, drawing on the old grand manner but with a stronger trace of the stern old Roman. One architect, Claude Ledoux, was highly original and influential, both in England and Germany. And the visionary millennialist Boullée could also be said to be a child of Revolutionary times, though it's likely that such men were inspired as much by the rediscovered plainness of the Greek Doric order as by radical politics.

In Paris it was not the democratic Doric but the imperial Corinthian order that re-emerged triumphant in the church of the Madeleine (1806) and, with the Arc de Triomphe like some colossal paperweight, reimposed the authority of academic architecture in contrast to the fancy-dress structures of contemporary Regency England.

The nineteenth century

The restoration of legitimate monarchy after the fall of Napoleon stimulated a revival of interest in older Gothic and early Renaissance styles, which offered a symbol of dynastic reassurance not only to the state but also to the newly rich. So in the private and commercial architecture of the nineteenth century these earlier styles predominate – in mine-owners' villas and bankers' headquarters.

This traditional style was also favoured by Baron Haussmann (1809–1891), the architect who transformed Paris over a period of twenty years. He got rid of the city's narrow streets and cramped medieval buildings, and replaced them with wide boulevards, large squares and imposing edifices, largely creating the modern city we see today.

By the mid-nineteenth century, a neo-Baroque strain had established itself, a style exemplified by Charles Garnier's Opéra in Paris (1861–74), which, under the heading of Second Empire and with its associations of voluptuous good living, seductive painting and general “ooh-la-la”, provides probably the most persistent image of France among the non-French.

In addition to the correct, official Classicism and the robust, exuberant and commercial Baroque, there is a third strand running through the nineteenth century that was ultimately more fruitful. The rational engineering approach, embodied in the official School of Roads and Bridges and invigorated by the teaching of Viollet-le-Duc, who reinterpreted Gothic style as pure structure, led to the development of new techniques out of which “modern” architectural style was born. Iron was the first significant new material, often used in imitation of Gothic forms and destined to be developed as an individual architectural style in America. In the Eiffel Tower (1889), France set up a potent symbol of things to come.

A more significantly French development was in the use of reinforced concrete towards the end of the century, most notably by Auguste Perret, whose 1903 apartment house at 25 rue Franklin in Paris turns the concrete structure into a visible virtue and breaks with conventional facades. Changes in the patterns of work and travel were making the need for new urban planning very acute in such cities as Paris. Perret and other modernists were all for the high-rise buildings that were going to better the haphazard layouts in America by a rational integration to new street systems. Some of their designs for gigantic skyscraper avenues and suburban rings now look like totalitarian horror-movie sets. But it was tradition, not charity, that blocked their projects at the time.

The twentieth century and beyond

The greatest proponent of the super New York scale, who also had genuine if mistaken concern for how people lived, was Le Corbusier, the most famous twentieth-century French architect. His stature may now appear diminished by the ascendancy of a blander style in concrete boxing, as well as by the significant technical and social failures of his buildings and his total disregard for historic streets and monuments.

But while his manifesto, Vers une architecture moderne, sounds like a call to arms for a new and revolutionary movement, Le Corbusier should perhaps be more fairly assessed as the original, inimitable and highly individual artist he undoubtedly was. You should try to see some of his work – there’s the Cité Radiuse in Marseille and plenty of examples in Paris – to make up your own mind about the man largely responsible for changing the face and form of buildings throughout the world.

△ Von Spreckelsen's Grande Arche de la Défense, Paris

One respect in which Paris at the turn of the century lagged behind London, Glasgow, Chicago and New York was in underground transport. First proposed in the 1870s, it took twenty years of furious debate before the Paris métro was finally realized in 1900. The design of the entrances was as controversial as every other aspect of the system, but the first commission went to Hector Guimard, renowned for his variations on the then-current fashion in style. The whirling metal railings, Art Nouveau lettering and bizarre antennae-like orange lamps were his creation. Conservatives were less amused when it came to sites such as the Opéra. Charles Garnier, architect of that edifice, demanded classical marble and bronze porticoes for every station, and his line was followed, on a less grandiose scale, wherever the métro steps surfaced by a major monument, putting Guimard out of a job. Some of the early ones remain (Place des Abbesses is one), as do some of the white-tiled interiors, replaced after World War II in central stations by bright paint with matching seats and display cases.

Art Nouveau designs also found their way onto buildings – the early department stores in Paris, such as Printemps and La Samaritaine, are the best examples – but the new materials and simple geometry of the modern or International Style favoured the Art Deco look; again, you're most likely to come across them in the capital.

The miserable 1950s and 1960s buildings found all over the country are probably best skipped over. From the 1970s onwards, however, France again established itself as one of the most exciting patrons of international contemporary architecture. The Pompidou Centre, by Renzo Piano and Richard Rogers, derided, adored and visited by millions, maximizes space by putting the service elements usually concealed in walls and floors on the outside. The visible ducts, cables and pipes are painted in accordance with the colour code of architectural plans. You might think the whole thing is a professional in-joke, but the Pompidou Centre is one of the great contemporary buildings in western Europe – for its originality, popularity and practicality.

Paris was the focus of more innovative and exciting architecture in the 1980s with President Mitterand's grands projets ("grand projects"). One of his most ambitious projects was to extend the grand axis from the Louvre to the Arc de Triomphe westwards with the Grande Arche de la Défense, symbol of the new La Défense business district. Designed by Von Spreckelsen, the Grande Arche isn't really an arch but a huge hollow cube aligned with the Arc de Triomphe and conceived as an open gateway or window to the world. Mitterand also left his stamp at the other end of the grand axis with Ieoh Ming Pei's glass pyramid in the Cour Napoléon, the main entrance to the Louvre. Hugely controversial at first, it's now widely accepted and admired. The pyramid was just one part of a bigger project, the "Grand Louvre", designed to free up more exhibition space. As part of the reorganization, the Ministry of Finance moved out of their coveted offices, thus clearing the Richelieu wing of the Louvre for museum use. The Ministry decamped to a new building in Bercy designed by Paul Chemetov and nicknamed the "steamboat" because of its titanic length and its anchoring in the Seine. It's just one of many new buildings that have recently gone up in Bercy, formerly full of wine warehouses and now extensively redeveloped. The district's centrepiece is the Parc de Bercy, lined with neo-Haussmanian buildings and containing Frank Gehry's (architect of Bilbao's Guggenheim Museum) free-form, exuberant American Centre.

One of Mitterand's pet projects was the Opéra Bastille, intended as a "modern and popular" alternative to the Opéra Garnier. It was built by the young Uruguayan Carlos Ott, who was selected because his design seemed to make best use of the quirkily shaped site. The resulting building, divided into simple volumes, the most visible of which is the cylindrical extension housing the 2700-seat auditorium, met with mixed responses however, and was thought by many to be too large for the space. The building hasn't weathered particularly well either: bits of the facade's sheathing have started coming away and are being temporarily held in place with unsightly netting. The auditorium does have good acoustics however, nearly all the seats have frontal views of the stage and it's packed most nights.

Rather more successful is the Cité de la Musique, commissioned from acclaimed architect Christian de Portzamparc. The complex, which includes a grand concert hall, music conservatoire and museum, is designed, metaphorically, like a symphony, made up of many instruments and sounds to create a harmonious ensemble. The Cité is the finishing touch to the Parc de la Villette complex which was built under Giscard d'Estaing on the site of an old abattoir, and which also houses the Cité des Sciences and Bernard Tschumi's 21 "folies" of urban life. Perhaps the most outstanding of Mitterrand's grands travaux is the Institut du Monde Arabe by Jean Nouvel, France's most eminent contemporary architect, with a design which ingeniously marries high-tech architecture and motifs from traditional Arabic culture. In a reference to the decorative wooden sunscreens used in Islamic countries, the facade is patterned with geometric metal screens punctured with apertures that are supposed to work a bit like a camera lens, opening and closing in response to the amount of sunlight received (though, in fact, the computer-operating system is unreliable).

Mitterrand's last project was the Bibliothèque Nationale. Designed by Dominique Perrault, it's made up of four L-shaped tower blocks, resembling four open books, set around an inaccessible sunken garden. This apparently facile design is made up for by the complexity (and expense) of the detail. The aluminium shutters are covered in rare oukoumé reddish wood, which contrasts with the grey ipé and yellow doussié wood, to give the impression from a distance that the towers are bookshelves containing different bound volumes. Two-thirds of the library's 11 million books are stored in the basement; indeed, Perrault has likened his design to an iceberg, with much of its volume invisible beneath the towers. The Bibliothèque forms a central part of the Paris Rive Gauche project, a huge-scale redevelopment of the formerly industrial southern part of the 13^e arrondissement, alongside the Seine. The scheme is edging towards completion, with the University Paris 7 soon to be installed in the massive Grands Moulins de Paris and Halle aux Farines, and a new school of architecture – appropriately enough – about to take up residence in the handsomely arched, late nineteenth-century SUDAC building. The futuristically twisting double-ribbon of the Passarelle Bercy-Tolbiac, meanwhile, already bridges the Seine opposite the library.

Outside Paris, the latest state-funded projects confirm French seriousness about innovative design. In Marseille there's Will Alsop's mammoth seat of regional government, while the first cathedral to be built in France since the nineteenth century, the Cathédrale d'Évry, masterminded by Swiss Mario Botta and finished in 1995, is a huge cylindrical red-brick tower which, besides being a place of worship, houses an art centre, concert hall and cinema screen. Its roof is slanted at 45 degrees to receive more light, and is crowned by 24 trees emulating the laurel wreaths of Roman emperors Hadrian and Augustus. Its stained-glass window is at the foot of the building and symbolizes the roots of a tree. The new European Parliament building in Strasbourg, designed by the Architecture Studio group, was finished in 1997, and is a huge boomerang-shaped structure with a glass dome and metal tower. It sits across the river from the eccentric, high-tech Richard Rogers-designed European Court of Human Rights.

Museums continue to attract innovative architects. In Nîmes, Norman Foster's Carré d'Art modern art museum (1993), is characterized by its simple transparent design, while his Musée de Préhistoire des Gorges du Verdon (2001) in Provence uses local materials – part of the museum is folded into the landscape and blends on one side into an existing stone wall, while the entrance hall resembles the very caves the museum celebrates. Jean Nouvel's curving, light-filled Quai Branly museum (2006), on the banks of the Seine beside the Eiffel Tower, is set in a lush garden designed by Gilles Clément, who landscaped the Parc André Citroën.

In housing, new styles and forms are to be seen in city suburbs and vacation resorts, many of them disastrous and visually unappealing, but interesting to look at when you don't have to live there. One of the largest projects of recent years is the Neoclassical Antigone development in Montpellier, laid out by the Catalan architect Ricardo Bofill.

The country's ever-advancing transport network has provided sites for some of the most high-tech office buildings with state-of-the-art engineering in Europe, as in Roissy, around the Charles-de-Gaulle airport, and especially at Euralille, the large urban complex around Lille's TGV/Eurostar station, master-minded by Dutch architect Rem Koolhaas.

The French are also very good at preserving the past – too good, some would say. A passion for restoring “la patrimoine” results in many fine old buildings being practically rebuilt – the dominant restoration theory in France is to restore to perfection rather than halt decay. More often than not, restoration is carried out by the Maisons de Compagnonage, the old craft guilds, which have maintained traditional building skills, handing them down as of old from master to apprentice (and never to women), while also taking on new industrial skills.

Cinema

The first (satisfied) cinema audience in the world was French. Screened to patrons of the Grand Café, on Paris's boulevard des Capucines, in December 1895, Louis Lumière's single-reelers may have been jerky documentaries, but they were light-years ahead of anything that had come before. Soon after, Georges Méliès' magical-fantastical features were proving a big hit with theatre audiences, and the twin cinematic poles of Realism and Surrealism had been established. France took to cinema with characteristic enthusiasm and seriousness. Ciné-clubs were formed all over the country, journals were published, critics made films and film-makers became critics. The avant-garde wing of French cinema acquired the moniker of French Impressionism, a genre characterized by experimental directors such as Louis Delluc, Jean Epstein and Abel Gance, who used experimental, highly visual techniques to express altered states of consciousness. It was only a short step from here to the all-out Surrealism of the artist-polymath Jean Cocteau, and the Spanish director Luis Buñuel.

Towards the end of the 1920s, histrionic adaptations of novels, epic historical dramas and broad comedies attracted mass audiences, but the silent heyday ended abruptly with the advent of sound in 1929. Most silent stars faded into obscurity, but a number of directors successfully made the transition, notably Jean Renoir, the son of the painter, René Clair, Julien Duvivier, Jean Gremillon and Abel Gance. Among the newcomers were Jean Vigo, who died young in 1934, and Marcel Carné, who worked with the powerful scripts of the poet Jacques Prévert. The film-makers of the 1930s developed a bold new style, dubbed Poetic Realism for its pessimism, powerful visual aesthetic – high-contrast, often nocturnal – and devotion to “realistic”, usually working-class, settings.

In 1936 the collector Henri Langlois set up the Cinémathèque Française, devoted to the preservation and screening of old and art films – an indication of the speed with which the “septième art” had found its niche within the pantheon of French culture. Langlois played an important role in saving thousands of films from destruction during the war, but the Occupation had surprisingly little effect on the industry. Renoir and Clair sought temporary sanctuary in Hollywood, and domestic production dipped, but hundreds of films continued to be made in Vichy France at a time when audiences sought the solace and comfort of the cinema in record numbers.

Post-war and pre-television, the late 1940s and early 1950s was another boom time for French cinema. Poetic Realism morphed into film noir, whose emphasis on darkness and corruption gave birth in turn to the thriller, a genre exemplified by the films of Henri-Georges Clouzot and Jean-Pierre Melville. During this period the mainstream cinema industry became highly organized and technically slick, older directors such as Clair, Renoir and Jacques Becker making superbly controlled masterpieces spanning genres as diverse as thrillers, comedies and costume dramas.

The first shot of the coming revolution – a warning shot only – was fired by the acerbic young critic François Truffaut, writing in the legendary film magazine, Les Cahiers du cinéma, in the mid-1950s. In opposition to what he and fellow critics dubbed la tradition de qualité, Truffaut envisaged a new kind of cinema based on the independent vision of a writer-director, an auteur (author), who would make films in a purer and more responsive manner. Directors such as Melville and Louis Malle – who made his first film with the diver Jacques Cousteau – were beginning to make moves in this direction, but Truffaut’s vision was only fully realized towards the end of the decade, when the Nouvelle Vague (“New Wave”) came rolling in. Claude Chabrol’s Les Cousins, Truffaut’s own Les Quatre-cents Coups, Eric Rohmer’s Le Signe du Lion, Alain Resnais’ Hiroshima Mon Amour and Jean-Luc Godard’s À Bout de Souffle were all released in 1959. The trademark freedom of these auteur-directors’ films – loosely scripted, highly individualistic and typically shot on location – ushered in the modern era.

The 1960s was the heyday of the auteur. Truffaut established his pre-eminent status by creating an extraordinary oeuvre encompassing science fiction, thriller, autobiography and film noir, all his films characteristically elegant and excitingly shot. But the “new wave” hadn’t carried all before it: René Clément, Henri-Georges Clouzot and even Jean Renoir were still working throughout the decade, Jean-Pierre Melville continued shooting his characteristically noir films policiers (crime-thrillers), and the Catholic director Robert Bresson carried on making films on his favourite theme of salvation. And Jacques Tati, the maverick genius behind the legendary comic character M. Hulot, made two of his greatest and most radical quasi-silent films, Playtime and Trafic, at either end of the 1960s.

The 1970s is probably the least impressive decade in terms of output, but a shot in the arm was delivered in the 1980s by the Cinéma du Look, a genre epitomized in the films of Jean-Jacques Beineix, Luc Besson and Leos Carax. Stylish, image-conscious and postmodern, films such as Diva or Betty Blue owed much to the look of American pulp cinema and contemporary advertising. Meanwhile, throughout the 1980s and into the 1990s, high-gloss costume dramas – historical or adaptations of novels – were the focus of much attention. Often called Heritage Cinema, the best films of this genre are the superbly crafted creations of Claude Berri, though Jean-Pierre Rappeneau’s Cyrano de Bergerac is probably the internationally recognized standard-bearer. At the other end of the scale lies cinéma beur: naturalistic, socially responsible and low-budget films made by French-born film-makers of North African origin – les beurs in French slang. The newest trends in contemporary art cinema follow a related path of social realism. In recent years, a number of younger directors, notably Mathieu Kassovitz, have made films set in the deprived suburbs (la banlieue), creating a number of sub-genres that have been acclaimed variously as New Realism, cinéma de banlieue and le jeune cinéma (“young cinema”).

Today, France remains the second-largest exporter of films in the world. The industry’s continued health is largely due to the intransigence of the French state, which continues to protect and promote domestic cinema as part of its policy of l’exception culturelle – despite the complaints of the free-market-eers who would have the French market “liberalized”. Half of the costs of making a feature film in France are paid for by state subsidies, levied on television stations, box-office receipts and video sales. Currently, American-made films capture around 50 percent of the French market, while home-grown productions make up around 40 percent. But the future looks promising: recent years have seen the number of films made in France rise to almost two hundred a year, most of them domestically funded.

Note that the films reviewed below are only intended to give an overview of the landmarks of French cinema; we can’t review every Godard film or every much-loved classic, nor cover every significant director. Alternative English titles are given for those films renamed for the main foreign release. Films marked 🌟 are highly recommended.

The classic era

Silent films

Lumière and Méliès Early Lumière films such as L'Arrivée d'un train en gare (1895) don't have the same impact now as when they made audiences jump with fright, but L'Arroseur arrosé (1896) works around a tight narrative that is still entertaining – a boy plays a prank on a gardener doing the watering and is chased and punished. By contrast with Lumière's documentary approach, Méliès's early short films, such as Le Voyage dans la lune (1902), used studio sets to create groundbreaking magical-surreal effects.

Paris qui dort/The Crazy Ray René Clair, 1924. Clair's first feature was heavily indebted to Surrealism. An inventor activates a ray that suspends time across the entire city of Paris – giving Clair plenty of opportunities to try out trick photography. Only a few Parisians are unaffected, including the watchman on top of the Eiffel Tower. Liberated from their inhibitions, they go on a criminal rampage.

Nana Jean Renoir, 1926. Second son of the painter Auguste Renoir, the greatest of France's early directors began his career making silent movies, of which the best is this ambitious and complex adaptation of Zola's novel, Nana. Fans of Renoir's later work may find the film's style surprisingly mannered, especially the performance of his wife Catherine Hessling, which owes a lot to Expressionist cinema.

 Un Chapeau de paille d'Italie René Clair, 1927. As the film opens, the hero's horse eats the straw hat (chapeau de paille) of a young woman in the Bois de Boulogne, thus setting in motion a fast-paced and farcical chain of events as he attempts to find a replacement hat while simultaneously trying to get to his own wedding.

Napoléon vu par Abel Gance/Napoleon Abel Gance, 1927. This five-hour masterpiece is often called the greatest silent flick ever made, and not just because of its length. A histrionic thread of nationalism runs throughout, but the epic scale and use of experimental techniques such as split screen, superimposition and horseback-mounted camerawork – for chase scenes – make this one of the most ambitious films ever made.

La Passion de Jeanne d'Arc Carl Dreyer, 1927. Restricting himself to the events of Jeanne's trial and execution, Danish director Dreyer focuses on both the saint's physical and spiritual anguish at the hands of the intractable church authorities. Amidst bleached-out interiors, the slow tracking shots and unflinching close-ups – in particular of Renée Falconetti's extraordinarily expressive face – create an atmosphere of almost unbearable intensity.

 Un Chien andalou/An Andalusian Dog Luis Buñuel, 1929. Made in collaboration with Salvador Dalí, this short opens with a woman's eye being cut into with a razorblade. While it doesn't get any less weird or shocking for the rest of its twenty-minute length, it's surprisingly watchable – when it came out, it was a big hit at Paris's Studio des Ursulines cinema. Buñuel further developed his Surrealist techniques in the feature-length talkie L'Âge d'or (1930), which was banned shortly after its first screening at Montmartre's Studio 38.

Le Sang d'un poète/Blood of a Poet Jean Cocteau, 1930. A response to Buñuel's L'Âge d'or, this early, dreamy short by the poet-director mixes autobiographical events and documentary footage with mind-grabbing Surrealist images, leaving the viewer as unsure as the hero about what is real and what is fantasy. Indelibly stamped with Cocteau's hallmark camp morbidity.

Poetic Realism

Le Million René Clair, 1931. In 1930 Clair had made the first great French talkie, Sous les toits de Paris, using a montage of songs, sounds and images, but it wasn't until Le Million that the true musical film was born – there's more singing than dialogue. A hunt for a lost winning lottery ticket provides plenty of opportunity for madcap comedy, suspense and romance. Not exactly a Poetic Realist film, but essential 1930s viewing anyway.

 L'Atalante Jean Vigo, 1934. Aboard a barge, a newly married couple struggle to reconcile themselves to their new situation. Eventually, the wife, Juliette, tries to flee, but is brought back by the unconventional deck-hand, Père Jules, superbly portrayed by the great Michel Simon. This sensual and naturalistic portrait of a relationship was made just before Vigo died, and is his only feature film.

La Belle équipe/They Were Five Julien Duvivier, 1936. A group of unemployed workers wins the lottery and sets up a cooperative restaurant. The result depends on which version you see – the one with an upbeat conclusion that was such a hit with contemporary audiences, or the darker ending preferred by Duvivier himself. Jean Gabin stars as the defeated hero, as in Duvivier's other greats, La Bandéra (1935) and the cult classic, Pépé-le-Moko (1937).

La Bête humaine Jean Renoir, 1938. This dark adaptation of Zola's powerful story of erotic passion, violence and revenge was scripted by Renoir himself in just two weeks. Jean Gabin is superbly cast in the role of the homicidal engine driver, but the real hero is the steam train itself, which is thrillingly shot, especially in the classic five-minute opening sequence. A classic of the Poetic Realist genre, along with Renoir's Le Crime de Monsieur Lange (1936) and La Grande illusion (1937).

 Le Jour se lève/Daybreak Marcel Carné, 1939. This brooding classic from the Poetic Realist stable has Jean Gabin, the greatest star of the era, playing another of his iconic working-class hero roles. After shooting his rival, the villainous old music-hall star Valentin, François (Gabin) is holed up in a hotel bedroom. In the course of the night, he recalls the events that led up to the murder. Tragedy comes with the daybreak. Also stars the great female idol of the 1930s, Arletty, and a superb script by the poet Jacques Prévert. Carné's Hôtel du Nord (1938) and Quai des brumes (1938) are in a similar vein.

 La Règle du jeu/The Rules of the Game Jean Renoir, 1939. Now hailed as the foremost masterpiece of the prewar era, this was a complete commercial failure when it was released. The Marquis de la Chesnaye invites his wife, mistress and a pilot friend to spend a weekend hunting and partying in the countryside. Matching the four are a group of four servants with similarly interweaved love lives. Renoir himself plays Octave, who moves between the two groups. A complex, almost farcical plot based around misunderstanding and accusations of infidelity moves inexorably towards disaster.

Le Ciel est à vous/The Woman Who Dared Jean Grémillon, 1944. Praised for its positive outlook by Pétain and the Resistance alike, “The Sky is Yours” is an inspiring and moving portrait of a heroically determined but otherwise ordinary woman, played by Madeleine Renaud, who discovers a passion for flight. Grémillon’s career peaked with this film, and his post-war work is relatively disappointing.

 Les Enfants du Paradis Marcel Carné, 1945. Probably the greatest of the collaborations

Post-war cinema

La Belle et la bête/Beauty and the Beast Jean Cocteau, 1946. Cocteau’s theatrical rendition of the “Beauty and the Beast” tale teeters on the edge of the surreal. The sets are laden with self-referential symbols – clocks, mirrors, magical lamps – and the acting highly stylized, but the pace is as compelling as any thriller. Orphée (1950) is more widely considered to be Cocteau’s masterpiece, a surreal retelling of the Orpheus tale in a setting strongly redolent of wartime France.

 Les Vacances de Monsieur Hulot/Mr Hulot’s Holiday Jacques Tati, 1951. The slapstick comic mime Jacques Tati created his most memorable character in Hulot, the unwitting creator of chaos and nonchalant hero of this gut–wrenchingly funny film. So full of brilliantly conceived and impeccably timed sight gags that you hardly notice the innovative absence of much dialogue or plot. Groundbreaking cinema, and superlative entertainment. The later Mon oncle (1958) has an edgier feel, adopting a distinctly critical attitude to modern life.

Casque d’or/Golden Marie Jacques Becker, 1952. Becker’s first great film depicts an overwhelming and ultimately tragic romance between Carné and the poet-scriptwriter, Jacques Prévert, this film is set in the low-life world of the popular theatre of 1840s Paris. Beautiful and worldly actress Garance (the great Arletty) is loved by arch-criminal Lacenaire, ambitious actor Lemaître, and brilliant, troubled mime Baptiste – unforgettably played by the top mime of the 1940s, Jean-Louis Barrault. The outstanding character portrayals and romantic, humane ethos are reminiscent of a great nineteenth-century novel.

between a gang-member, Manda, and the beautiful, golden-haired prostitute Marie, nicknamed Casque d’or (“golden helmet”) – portrayed with legendary seductiveness by Simone Signoret. Underneath the love story, however, lies the murkiness and moral corruption of a brilliantly recreated turn-of-the-century Paris. Becker went on to make the seminal crime thriller, Touchez pas au grisbi/Honour Among Thieves (1953).

Les Jeux interdits René Clément, 1952. A small Parisian girl loses her parents and her dog in a Stuka attack on a column of refugees, and is rescued and befriended by a peasant boy. Together, they seek solace from the war by building an animal cemetery in an abandoned barn. This moving meditation on childhood and death extracted two remarkable performances from the child actors.

 Le Salaire de la peur/The Wages of Fear Henri-Georges Clouzot, 1953. This is the tensest, most suspense-driven of all the films made by the “French Hitchcock”, focusing on four men driving an explosive-laden lorry hundreds of miles to a burning, third-world oil field. Tight and shatteringly sustained right up to the magnificent finale.

 Un Condamné à mort s'est échappé/A Man Escaped

Robert Bresson, 1956. A prisoner, Fontaine (François Leterrier), calmly plans his escape from prison, working with a painstaking slowness that is brilliantly matched by the intensely absorbed, magnificent camerawork – a hymn to the close up. The sparing, precisely realistic sound creates an incredibly intense mood, even before there's any real action. Working with real locations and amateur actors, Bresson echoed the work of the Italian Neo-realists, and foreshadowed the work of the Nouvelle Vague directors. Sometimes entitled Le Vent souffle où il veut.

Et ... Dieu créa la femme/And God Created Woman

Roger Vadim, 1956. This film should be called “And Roger Vadim created Brigitte Bardot”, as its chief interest is not its harmless plot – love and adultery in St-Tropez – but its scantily clad main actress, who spends most of the time sunbathing and dancing in front of fascinated males. Deemed “obscene” by the moralizing authorities of the time, it helped liberate the way the body was represented in film.

Ascenseur pour l'échafaud/Elevator to the Gallows/Frantic

Louis Malle, 1957. This thriller is Louis Malle's remarkable debut. Two lovers (Jeanne Moreau and Maurice Ronet) murder the woman's husband but get trapped by a series of unlucky coincidences. Beautifully shot – especially when Jeanne Moreau wanders through the streets of Paris, accompanied by Miles Davis' superb original score – and as breathtaking as any Hitchcock film.

The modern era

The Nouvelle Vague

Les Cousins/The Cousins Claude Chabrol, 1959. The Balzac-inspired plot centres around Charles (Gérard Blain), an earnest provincial student, who comes to live in Neuilly with his glamorous cousin Paul (Jean-Claude Brialy). Despite its disappointing ending, the film is highly watchable as a near-caricature of the Nouvelle Vague – idle students in the Quartier Latin, extravagant parties, convertible cars and exciting music.

 Les Quatre-Cents coups/The 400 Blows

François Truffaut, 1959. A young cinéphile and critic turned filmmaker, François Truffaut triumphed at the 1959 Cannes film festival with this semi-autobiographical film, showing a Parisian adolescent (Jean-Pierre L aud) trying to escape his lonely, loveless existence, and slowly drifting towards juvenile delinquency. L aud's poignant performance, and Truffaut's sensitive, sympathetic observation, make this one of the most lovable films of the Nouvelle Vague.

 A bout de souffle/Breathless

Jean-Luc Godard, 1959. This is the film that came nearest to defining the Nouvelle Vague: insolent charm, cool music and sexy actors. Jean-Paul Belmondo is a petty criminal, Michel, while Jean Seberg plays Patricia, his American girlfriend. The film's revolutionary style, with its jerky, unconventional narrative, abrupt cuts and rough camerawork, proved one of the most influential of the twentieth century.

 Hiroshima, mon amour

Alain Resnais, 1959. On her last days of shooting a film in Hiroshima, a French actress (Emmanuelle Riva) falls in love with a Japanese architect (Eiji Okada). Gradually, she reveals the story of her affair with a German soldier during the Occupation, and her subsequent disgrace. Based on an original script by Marguerite Duras, Resnais' first film masterfully weaves together past and present in a haunting story of love and memory.

Jules et Jim François Truffaut, 1962. Jules (Oskar Werner) and Jim (Henri Serre) love the same woman, the fascinating Katherine (Jeanne Moreau), who proves unable to choose between them. This tragic story of impossible love spanning over twenty years contains some beautiful moments of pure joie de vivre, expressing Truffaut's yearning for a lost paradise of innocence and harmony.

Cléo de Cinq à Sept/Cleo from 5 to 7 Agnès Varda, 1962. In real time – the camera only leaves her twice – this visually impressive film documents ninety minutes in the life of a young and beautiful pop singer. While waiting for a hospital report, Cléo (Corinne Marchand) goes on a journey through the streets of Paris, where she encounters various friends and meets a conscript bound for the Algerian war. A subtle portrait of a woman moving from vanity and self-obsession to love, by the only female filmmaker of the Nouvelle Vague.

Comedies

Belle de jour Luis Buñuel, 1966. At first sight, this is a far cry from Buñuel's prewar collaborations with Dalí though as the action progresses, the film moves away from the initial acerbic comedy towards a bizarre surrealism where fantasy and reality merge. The subject matter is perfectly apt: Catherine Deneuve plays

Les Biches/The Does/The Girlfriends Claude Chabrol, 1968. In this classic exposition of French cinema's obsession with the ménage-à-trois, wealthy, sophisticated Frédérique (Stéphane Audran) picks up drifting young artist Why (Jacqueline Sassard) in a Paris street and takes her back to her bohemian home in St-Tropez. When local architect Paul (Jean-Louis Trintignant) comes between the two, it sets in motion a Hitchcockian nightmare of psychosis.

 Ma nuit chez Maude/My Night at Maud's Eric Rohmer, 1969. Rohmer's career-long obsessions with sexuality, conversation, existential choices and the love triangle are given free rein in this moody, lingering portrait of a flirtation. Jean-Louis Trintignant plays a handsome egotist who, during the course of one long night, is drawn into a strange and inconclusive relationship with his friend's friend, the hypnotically attractive Maude (Françoise Fabian).

 Le Rayon Vert/The Green Ray Eric Rohmer, 1986. It is summer, and a restless, lonely and undeniably flaky Delphine (Marie Rivière) has no one to go on holiday with. Using subtle, improvisatory techniques, Rohmer – who stayed true to the principles of the Nouvelle Vague throughout his career – masterfully lays the ground for the gently explosive finale.

Séverine, who lives out her sexual fantasies and obsessions in a brothel – thus (almost) fulfilling the fantasy of half the male cinemagoing population.

 Playtime Jacques Tati, 1967. Tati once more plays Hulot, cinema's most radical slapstick creation, but with a newly profound sense of purpose. From a simple premise – he is showing a group of tourists round a futuristic Paris – he creates an intimately observed and perfectly controlled farce. Just as the city has somehow been transformed into a refined and faceless world of glass and steel. Tati's comedy has become infinitely subtle and reflective.

 Zazie dans le métro/Zazie
Louis Malle, 1960. In one of his few comedies, Malle successfully rendered novelist Raymond Queneau's verbal experiments by using cartoon-like visual devices. Twelve-year-old Catherine Demongeot is perfect as the delightfully rude little girl driving everybody mad; and the film offers some great shots of Paris, climaxing in a spectacular scene at the top of the Eiffel Tower.

La Grande vadrouille Gérard Oury, 1966. Head and shoulders the biggest blockbuster in French cinema history, "The Big Jaunt" stars Bourvil and Louis de Funès as a conductor and a decorator. Set in wartime Paris, the comic plot sees three Allied soldiers parachuting down on the hapless pair. In their desperation to be rid of the parachutists, they end up leading them to the free zone.

La Cage aux folles/Birds of a Feather Edouard Molinaro, 1978. Renato runs a cabaret nightclub at which his boyfriend, Albin, is the headlining drag act. When Renato's son, Laurent, decides to get married, the couple are drawn into an escalating farce as they try to present themselves as a conventional mother-and-son couple to Laurent's conservative in-laws. A supremely camp international hit.

Trois Hommes et un couffin
Coline Serreau, 1985. "Three Men and a Cradle" was a giant box-office success even before it was trashily remade in Hollywood as Three Men and a Baby. In Serreau's film, the three friends live together in Paris when a bombshell arrives in the shape of the baby daughter of one of their ex-girlfriends. Cue lots of gender gags, along with a farcical sub-plot involving a nappy-hidden cache of heroin.

 Les Visiteurs/The Visitors
Jean-Marie Poiré, 1993. A medieval knight and his squire are transported to present-day France, where they discover their castle has been turned into a country hotel by their descendants. The earthily comic encounters between time-travellers and modern middle-classes make for an extremely funny comedy of manners. French audiences so loved being sent up that this became the third most successful film in French history.

Gazon maudit/French Twist
Josiane Balasko, 1995. "Cursed Lawn" – as the title translates literally – is a lesbian sex-comedy turned massive mainstream hit. It successfully milks the comic potential of butch urban lesbian Marijo's explosive entry into a ménage à trois with a hitherto straight, provincial couple. The resulting confusion of gender and sexual roles is a very watchable blend of slapstick and gentler social comedy.

Le Dîner de cons/The Dinner Game Francis Veber, 1998. In this light-hearted, straight-up farce, a group of friends compete as to who can invite the most ridiculous person to dinner. Inevitably, and hilariously, the tables are turned. Bravura performances from Thierry Lhermitte as the smug publisher whose life falls apart in front of Jacques Villeret, his buffoon-like guest.

Le Fabuleux destin d'Amélie Poulain/Amélie Jean-Pierre Jeunet, 2001. Known as plain Amélie outside

France, this sentimental, feel-good portrait of a youthful ingenue wandering around a romanticized Montmartre was a worldwide hit. Amélie (Audrey Tatou) is on a mission to help the world find happiness; her own is harder to fix up. Filmed on location, though it looks edible enough to be an idealized set.

Les Triplettes de Belleville/Belleville Rendez-vous Sylvain

Thrillers/films policiers

 Pierrot-le-fou Jean-Luc Godard, 1965. Godard's fascination with American pulp fiction is most brilliantly exploited in this highly charged and deeply sophisticated thriller. Accidentally caught up in a murderous gangland killing, Ferdinand (Jean-Paul Belmondo) flees with his babysitter (Godard's then-wife, Anna Karina) to the apparent safety of a Mediterranean island. The bizarre and tragic denouement is one of the great scenes of French cinema.

 Le Samouraï/The Samurai Jean-Pierre Melville, 1967. The main attraction of this modern-day film noir is Alain Delon, who gives a brilliantly impassive yet stylish performance as Jef Costello, an ice-cold hit man on the run. Hunted by both the police and his own employers, he responds with brilliant ingenuity and violence. One of the all-time great films policiers.

L'Armée des ombres/The Army in the Shadows Jean-Pierre Melville, 1969. A small group of Resistance fighters, played by Yves Montand, Simone Signoret and Jean-Pierre Meurisse, are betrayed, questioned and then released, free to enact their revenges and to continue their subversive activities. This is one of the most remarkable depictions of the Resistance in French cinema: the Chomet, 2003. Jacques Tati was clearly a major influence on this cheeky but thoughtful animation. A champion cyclist is kidnapped by the Mafia before the big race and carted off to the nightmarish city of Belleville; it is up to his grandmother, her dog and the singing Belleville sisters to rescue him. Acclaimed (or decried) as a satire on America, Chomet targets France just as acutely.

tight, minimalist style creates a suffocating tension that culminates in the unforgettable conclusion.

 Le Boucher/The Butcher Claude Chabrol, 1969. A young schoolteacher in a tiny southwest village lives in an apartment above her school. Her loneliness is eased by a surprising fledgling romance with the local butcher – a kindly yet sinister figure – until a sequence of schoolgirl murders sows doubt in her mind. This would be gripping as a portrayal of village life even without the underlying tension and lurking violence.

z/The Anatomy of a Political Assassination Costa-Gavras, 1969. In this stunningly filmed offering from Greek director Costa-Gavras, Yves Montand, an activist in a fascist-run country (Greece, though it's unnamed) is assassinated after giving an inflammatory speech. The great Jean-Louis Trintignant plays the rigorous investigating judge unravelling a complex police conspiracy. Won an Oscar for Best Foreign Film and single-handedly created a new genre, the political thriller.

Coup de Torchon/Clean Slate Bertrand Tavernier, 1981. The setting is colonial West Africa, 1938. Ineffective, humiliated police chief Cordier (Philippe Noiret) decides to take murderous revenge on his wife, her lover, his mistress's husband and the locals he views as uniformly corrupt. As much an extremely black comedy as a true thriller.

Monsieur Hire Patrice Leconte, 1989. A slow-moving, unsettlingly erotic psychological thriller based on a novel by Georges Simenon. Michel Blanc plays the spookily impassive Monsieur Hire, a voyeur who always watches his neighbour, Alice, undressing. One day he sees her boyfriend commit a murder. He becomes the prime suspect in the police's investigation, and is slowly drawn into Alice's world, with tragic consequences.

Irréversible Gaspar Noé, 2002. This is surely one of the most disturbing films ever made, and not just for the nightmarish – and infamous – anal rape scene but for the way it eviscerates the most terrifying elements of the male sexual psyche. A giddy, swooping camera traces the events of one horrific night backwards in time from a brutal murder in a gay sex dungeon to a post-coital couple (Vincent Cassel and Monica Bellucci) getting ready for a party.

36 Quai des Orfèvres Olivier Marchal, 2004. Two elite police squads, under rivals Vrinks (Daniel Auteuil) and Klein (Gérard Dépardieu), are in pursuit of a violent gang of bank robbers. This would be merely one of the best thrillers to come out of France recently – if it wasn't taken to another level by the revenge drama that emerges as the film's real theme.

 Caché/Hidden Michael Haneke, 2005. The smooth bourgeois life of literary TV presenter Georges (Daniel Auteuil) and his wife Anne (Juliette Binoche) is disrupted when they receive a chillingly innocuous videotape of their own home under surveillance. In what has been widely read as a metaphor for France's attitude to its own colonial past, Georges is forced to confront a childhood friend, Majid (Maurice Bénichou), and his own troubled conscience.

Films d'amour

 Les Parapluies de Cherbourg/The Umbrellas of Cherbourg Jacques Demy, 1964. Demy's most successful film also gave Catherine Deneuve one of her first great roles. It is an extraordinarily stylized musical, shot in bright, artificial-looking colours, and entirely sung rather than spoken. Demy disturbingly twists the traditional cheerfulness of the musical genre to give a dark, bitter ending to this story of love and abandonment, set during the Algerian war.

Un Homme et une femme/A Man and a Woman Claude Lelouch, 1966. An actress-widow (Anouk Aimée) and a racing-driver-widower (Jean-Louis Trintignant) meet by chance while visiting their children at a boarding school. Slowly and uncertainly at first, their relationship develops past the initial misunderstandings and things not said. A bittersweet but lyrical film about falling in love a second time, with a rapturous score.

 Baisers Volés/Stolen Kisses François Truffaut, 1968. The third of Truffaut's five-part semi-autobiographical sequence, which began with Les Quatre-cents coups, is probably the simplest and most delightful. Returning from military service, idealistic young Antoine Doinel (Jean-Pierre Léaud), mooches about Paris while working variously as a hotel worker, private detective and TV repairman. Through various amorous and bizarre adventures he slowly finds his way back towards the girl he loved and left behind.

La Maman et la putain/The Mother and the Whore Jean Eustache, 1972. Years after the revolutionary “events” of May 1968, Alexandre (Jean-Pierre Léaud) is still living the left-wing café life in St-Germain. He has an older girlfriend, but soon takes up with a young, unstable nurse, who also moves in. The tensions – sexual, emotional, political – between the three of them are explored at an excruciating pace and pitch. Eustache’s penultimate feature reprises many of the themes of the original “new wave”.

 Le Dernier métro/The Last Metro François Truffaut, 1980. This huge commercial success stars Catherine Deneuve and Gérard Depardieu as two actors who fall in love while rehearsing a play during the German Occupation. Wartime Paris is evoked through lavish photography and a growing feeling of imprisonment inside the confined space of the theatre. Swept the Césars that year, for Best Film, Director, Actor and Actress.

Loulou Maurice Pialat, 1980. In this tale of an “inappropriate” love affair Isabelle Huppert plays Nelly, a woman who abandons her husband and middle-class life to shack up with Loulou, a pleasure-loving slob played with great relish by Gérard Depardieu. Add the apparently improvised dialogue, and Pialat seems to have stumbled into Eric Rohmer territory, but this is a much less gentle world with an edge of violence and sexual obsessiveness that is never far from the surface.

L’Ami de mon amie/Boyfriends and Girlfriends Eric Rohmer, 1987. This is Rohmer at his most beguiling and apparently superficial, featuring a strangely symmetrical plot and a script that loads a seemingly inconsequential dialogue with emotional nuance. Two glossy young women in a flashy new town outside Paris – Cergy-Pontoise – become friends. While Blanche is away, Léa falls in love with Blanche’s boyfriend Alexandre; when Blanche comes back, she in turn falls in love with Léa’s boyfriend, Fabien. Behind the light comedy lurks a profound film about love and free will.

Le Mari de la coiffeuse/The Hairdresser’s Husband Patrice Leconte, 1990. Leconte’s film about a man who grows up obsessed with hairdressers, and ends up marrying one, epitomizes the best in French romantic film-making. A quirky, subtle and engagingly twisted portrait of an obsessive relationship.

 La Belle Noiseuse Jacques Rivette, 1991. Based loosely on a Balzac short story, “the beautiful troublemaker” originally stretched to four hours, though the more commonly screened “Divertimento” cut is half that length. A washed-out painter (the splendidly stuttering Michel Piccoli) lives in the deep south with his wife (Jane Birkin). An admiring younger painter offers his beautiful girlfriend (Emmanuelle Béart) as a nude model. Her fraught sittings become the catalyst for all the latent tensions in the two relationships to slowly, quietly explode.

Un Coeur en hiver/A Heart in Winter/A Heart of Stone Claude Sautet, 1992. In this thoughtful, fresh ménage à trois scenario, violinist Camille (Emmanuelle Béart) is paired first with Maxime (André Dussolier), a violin shop owner, and then with loner Stéphane (Daniel Auteuil), the chief craftsman. As the title “A Heart in Winter” suggests, this is a moody but ultimately sentimental film about love, and the fear of love.

 Trois Couleurs: Rouge/Three Colours: Red Krzysztof Kieslowski, 1994. The final part of Polish-born director’s Kieslowski’s

△ Still from The Beat that My Heart Skipped

“tricolore” trilogy is perhaps the most satisfying, though to get the most out of the powerful denouement, in which all the strands are pulled together through a series of chances and accidents, you really need to have watched Bleu and Blanc as well. A young model, Valentine (Irène Jacob), runs over a dog and traces its owner, a reclusive retired judge (Jean-Louis Trintignant) who assuages his loneliness by tapping his neighbours’ phone calls. The film’s “colour” is expressed through presiding red-brown tones and the theme of fraternité, the third principle of the French Republic.

De battre mon coeur s’est arrêté/The Beat that My Heart Skipped Jacques Audiard, 2005.

Romain Duris gives a compellingly intense performance as a young man struggling to escape his violent, semi-criminal life in Paris by retraining as a concert pianist. Despite being a remake of the 1978 film, Fingers, it won eight awards at the 2006 Césars, including Best Film.

Heritage cinema

Jean de Florette Claude Berri, 1986. This masterful adaptation of Marcel Pagnol’s novel began a new trend in French cinema, that of the rose-tinted cinéma du patrimoine. It drew on an idealized heritage – in this case, the gorgeous, rugged setting of inland, prewar Provence. Gérard Depardieu plays Jean, a bookish and deformed refugee from the city who is struggling to create a self-sufficient rural utopia. He is opposed by the shrewd peasant Papet (Yves Montand), who wants to create a lucrative orchard, and the simpleton Ugolin (Daniel Auteuil), who dreams of giant fields of carnations. The excellent sequel, Manon des Sources (1987), launched the stellar career of the improbably pouting Emmanuelle Béart.

Au Revoir les enfants/Goodbye, Children Louis Malle, 1987. Malle’s autobiographical tale is one of the finest film portraits of the war, and of school life in general. It is minutely observed, and desperately moving without being unduly sentimental. Three Jewish boys are hidden among the pupils at a Catholic boys' boarding school. Eventually, the Gestapo discover the ruse.

La Vie et rien d'autre/Life and Nothing But Bertrand Tavernier, 1989. The master of high-gloss heritage cinema here turns his hand to a grim film set in the aftermath of World War I. Philippe Noiret plays an army major charged with finding the right candidate for the memorial to the Unknown Soldier, under the Arc de Triomphe. During his search, he meets a rich Parisian woman who is trying to find her husband. They find consuming love amid the ashes.

 Cyrano de Bergerac Jean-Paul Rappeneau, 1990. It's hard to know what's finest about this

Cinéma du Look

Diva Jean-Jacques Beineix, 1980. Diva's glossy yet quirky feel established the presiding tone of the cinéma du look. Like many conventional crime thrillers, the story is set in motion by an accident: moped-riding postman Jules mixes up two tapes – a bootleg recording of an opera singer and a message from a prostitute linking a detective with a vice ring. But the film is much more about style than suspense, its beguiling depiction of a sexy, bohemian and youthful Paris contrasting with the operatic soundtrack.

Subway Luc Besson, 1985. The favoured urban-nocturnal setting of the cinéma du look is given its coolest expression in Subway. Like Diva, the action focuses on one man in possession of something he shouldn't have – in this case it's shock-headed Christophe Lambert, with a cache of documents. Hunted by police and extravagantly romantic film: Rostand's original story, set in seventeenth-century France, or Gérard Depardieu's landmark performance as the large-nosed swashbuckler-poet, Cyrano, who hopelessly loves the brilliant and beautiful Roxanne. The film's panache is made all the more magnificent by the ease with which the cast deliver the verse dialogue – brilliantly rendered into English subtitles by Anthony Burgess. Hilarious, exciting and, ultimately, sublimely weepy.

Indochine Régis Warnier, 1991. This sweeping colonial melodrama stars the mature Catherine Deneuve as a ruthlessly independent and sexually emancipated rubber baroness in prewar French Indochina (Vietnam). As the colony begins to crumble, so does her relationship with her adopted daughter, a scion of the Indochinese royal family.

criminals alike, he hides out in the Paris métro where he manages to form a rock band with a crowd of various low-lives – before being found by Isabelle Adjani. Film noir meets MTV.

 37² le matin/Betty Blue Jean-Jacques Beineix, 1986.

Pouty Béatrice Dalle puts on a compellingly erotic performance as Betty, a free-thinking girl who lives in a beach house with struggling writer Zorg. The film opens in romantic mood with a sustained and passionate sex scene but rapidly spirals towards its disturbing ending. The film's intense and sometimes weird stylishness, along with its memorable score, made it an international hit.

Nikita Luc Besson, 1990. More of a hit abroad than at home, Nikita is a sci-fi thriller buzzing with edgy cool. After killing a policeman in a gang shoot-out, the eponymous heroine is remanded to the Kafkaesque “Centre” where she is trained as a government assassin and sent on missions of dubious morality. Glossy on the surface, but underpinned by themes of anarchy versus fascism, and the tension between female star and male director/spectator. Leon (1994) finds a similar vein.

 Delicatessen Jean-Pierre Jeunet/Marc Caro, 1991. Set in a crumbling apartment block in a dystopian fantasy city – Occupation Paris meets comic book – a grotesque local butcher murders his assistants and sells them as human meat, until his daughter falls in love with the latest butcher boy and the subterranean vegetarian terrorists find out. Hilarious and bizarre in equal measure, with superb cameos from the neighbours.

Les Amants du Pont-Neuf Léos Carax, 1991. Homeless painter Michèle (Juliette Binoche) is losing her sight. One day, on Paris’s Pont-Neuf, she meets an indigent, fire-eating acrobat (Denis Lavant), and they tumble together into a consuming love, madly played out against the background of their life on the streets. An intense and beautiful film.

New Realism: Beur, Banlieue and Jeune

Le Thé à la menthe Abdelkrim Bahloul, 1984. In this funny and ultimately touching film, an Algerian immigrant living in the Barbès quarter of northern Paris writes home to his mother to let her know how successful he has become in his new life. In fact, he struggles to get by on minor scams and chancey ventures. When his mother makes a surprise visit, he foolishly tries to carry on the pretence – to great comic effect.

Le Thé au harem d’Archimède/ Tea In The Harem Mehdi Charef, 1985. A concrete housing wasteland is the harsh setting for this somewhat meandering story of a friendship between two young zonards from the Paris banlieue. Despite their different ethnicity – Madjid is a beur (French-born, of North African origin), Pat is white French – the two friends share much: delinquent habits, poverty and futile but potent dreams. Slow as buddy flicks go, but fascinating.

 Hexagone Malik Chibane, 1991. Shooting in just 24 days, and using amateur actors, Chibane somehow pulled off exactly what he planned: to raise the profile of the new generation of beurs. The story is a simple enough rite-of-passage tale focused on five young friends who get in trouble, but the recurring motif of the sacrifice of Abraham gives it a thoughtful twist. The street-slang peppered script and cinematography – strong on handheld shots of the inner city landscape – are superb.

Bye-Bye Karim Dridi, 1995. Two North African brothers living in France are told by their father that they must return to the family home in the Maghreb. Mouloud refuses, and drifts into delinquency, while Ismaël gets a job in a Marseille shipyard, where he has an affair with a white workmate’s girlfriend. Ultimately, the brothers decide to leave France anyway. Sympathetic characterization leavens the downbeat subject matter, and the raï and French hip-hop soundtrack is superb.

 La Haine/Hate Mathieu Kassovitz, 1995. The flagship film of the cinéma de banlieue, films of the tough suburbs, centres on three friends: Hubert, of black African origin; Said, a beur (from North Africa); and Vinz, who has white Jewish roots – and a gun. They spend a troubled night wandering Paris before heading back to the banlieue and a violent homecoming. Brilliantly treads the line between gritty realism and street cool – the fact that it's shot in black-and-white helps, as does the soundtrack from French rapper MC Solaar, among others.

Y aura-t-il de la neige à Noël?/Will It Snow For Christmas? Sandrine Veysset, 1996. This moving, sometimes painful depiction of a rural childhood comes in three separate sections – summer, autumn and winter. Veysset depicts the lives of seven children who work on a southern farm owned by their menacing, exploitative father. The unwaveringly realistic tone is a great antidote to the old cinematic clichés of the rural idyll, but fairytale moments of childish joy break through.

Documentaries

 Être et Avoir/To Be and To Have Nicolas Philbert, 2002. A low-budget documentary that became an international hit, this film follows the progress of a handful of children in a one-class primary school in a strikingly remote area in the Auvergne. The star is Georges Lopez, their soft-spoken but inspirational teacher who guides his charges with apparently effortless simplicity and endless patience.

La Ville est tranquille/The Town Is Quiet Robert Guédiguian, 2000. Notwithstanding its title, this harrowing film describes the dysfunctional society of a far-from-quiet city – Marseille – focusing on the hardships of Michèle (Ariane Ascaride), a 40-year-old woman working in a fish factory while fighting to save her heroin-addict daughter. After a series of light, happy tales, Robert Guédiguian magnificently turns here to a more realistic and political tone.

Comme une image/Look at Me Agnès Jaoui, 2004. Agnès Jaoui manages to be both sensitive and hard-hitting in this exploration of the dysfunctional relationship between a self-conscious, under-confident daughter (Marilou Berry) and her monstrously egotistical, literary lion of a father – a role played superbly by Jean-Pierre Bacri, who co-wrote the script with Jaoui.

James McConnachie and Eva Löchner

Books

Publishers are detailed below in the form of British publisher/American publisher, where both exist. Where books are published in one country only, UK or US follows the publisher's name. Books marked  are highly recommended. Abbreviations: o/p (out of print); UP (University Press).

Travel

Julian Barnes Something to Declare (Picador/Knopf, 2002). This journalistically highbrow collection of essays on French culture – films, music, the Tour de France, and of course Flaubert – wears its French-style intellectualism on its sleeve, but succeeds in getting under the skin anyway.

 Walter Benjamin The Arcades Project (Harvard, 2002). An all-encompassing portrait of Paris from 1830 to 1870, in which the passages are used as a lens through which to view Parisian society. Never completed, Benjamin's magnum opus is a kaleidoscopic assemblage of essays, notes and quotations, gathered under such headings as "Baudelaire", "Prostitution", "Mirrors" and "Idleness".

James Boswell An Account of Corsica (OUP, 2006). Typically robust and witty account of encounters with the Corsican people.

 Dorothy Carrington Granite Island (Penguin, 2004, o/p). By far the best study of Corsica ever written in English. A fascinating and immensely comprehensive book, combining the writer's personal experiences with an evocative portrayal of historical figures and events.

Stephen Clarke A Year in the Merde (Black Swan/Bloomsbury, 2006). In this semi-autobiographical comic novel of cultural miscomprehension, a young English entrepreneur moves to Paris – where he finds that everything is crap. Some find it hilarious, others crude and objectionable.

Julien Green Paris (Marion Boyars, 2005). A collection of very personal sketches and impressions of the city, by an American who has lived all his life in Paris, writes in French, and is considered one of the great French writers of the century. Bilingual text.

Richard Holmes Fatal Avenue (Pimlico/Trafalgar Square, o/p). The phrase is de Gaulle's, used to describe France's northeast frontier whose notorious topographical vulnerability has made it the natural route for invaders since time began. An exciting and informative read.

Richard Holmes Footsteps (Flamingo, 2004/Vintage, 1996). A marvellous mix of objective history and personal account, such as the tale of the author's own excitement at the events of May 1968 in Paris, which led him to investigate and reconstruct the experiences of the British in Paris during the 1789 Revolution.

Michael de Larrabeiti French Leave (Robert Hale, 2003). In the summer of 1949, aged just 15, Michael de Larrabeiti set off on his own by bicycle to Paris from the UK. This book provides a wonderfully evocative testimony to his love of France as he looks back over fifty years working and travelling throughout the country.

Laurence Sterne A Sentimental Journey Through France and Italy (Hackett, 2006). Rambling tale by the eccentric eighteenth-century author of Tristram Shandy who, despite the title, never gets further than Versailles.

Robert Louis Stevenson Travels with a Donkey (Penguin/Echo, 2006). Mile-by-mile account of Stevenson's twelve-day trek in the Haute Loire and Cévennes uplands with the donkey Modestine. Devotees of Stevenson's footpaths – and there are a surprising number in France – might be interested in his first book, Inland Voyage, on the waterways of the north.

Freda White Three Rivers of France (Pavilion/Faber, o/p), West of the Rhone (Faber, US, o/p), Ways of Aquitaine (Faber, o/p). Freda White spent a great deal of time in France in the 1950s before tourism came along to the backwater communities that were her interest. These are all evocative books, slipping in the history and culture painlessly, if not always too accurately.

History

General

 Alfred Cobban A History of Modern France (3 vols: 1715–99, 1799–1871 and 1871–1962; o/p). Complete and very readable account of the main political, social and economic strands in French history, from the death of Louis XIV to mid-de Gaulle.

 Alistair Horne Seven Ages of Paris (Pan, 2003/Vintage, 2004). Compelling and thoroughly readable account of the city's history, focusing on seven key ages, from the twelfth century to de Gaulle.

Andrew Hussey Paris, The Secret History (Penguin, 2007). An entertaining book that delves into some fascinating and little-known aspects of Paris's history, including occultism, freemasonry and the seedy underside of the city. Hussey is concerned above all with ordinary Parisians and shows how in large part the history of Paris is shaped by its citizens' suffering and frequent clashes with authority.

Colin Jones The Cambridge Illustrated History of France (CUP, 1999). A political and social history of France from prehistoric times to the mid-1990s, concentrating on issues of regionalism, gender, race and class. Good illustrations and a friendly, non-academic writing style.

 Colin Jones Paris: Biography of a City (Penguin, 2006). Jones focuses tightly on the actual life and growth of the city, from the Neolithic past to the future. Five hundred pages flow by easily, punctuated by thoughtful but accessible “boxes” on characters, streets and buildings whose lives were especially bound up with Paris's, from the Roman arènes to Zazie's métro. The best single book on the city's history.

Robert Tombs & Isabelle Tombs That Sweet Enemy: The British and the French from the Sun King to the Present (Pimlico/Arrow, 2007). A fascinating, original and mammoth study of a strangely intimate relationship. The authors are a French woman and her English husband, and they engage in lively debate between themselves. Covers society, culture and personalities, as well as politics.

France in literature

Listed below is a highly selective recommendation of works – mostly novels – that are rooted in the various French regions, and which would make good holiday reading.

Paris and around

Honoré de Balzac Old Goriot

Steven Barclay (ed) A Place in the World Called Paris

Charles Baudelaire Baudelaire's Paris, trans Laurence Kitchen

André Breton Nadja

Blaise Cendrars To the End of the World

Didier Daeninckx Murder in Memoriam

Charles Dickens A Tale of Two Cities

Gustave Flaubert A Sentimental Education

André Gide The Counterfeiters

Ernest Hemingway A Moveable Feast

Victor Hugo Les Misérables

Jack Kerouac Satori in Paris

Henry Miller Quiet Days in Clichy, Tropic of Cancer, Tropic of Capricorn

Anaïs Nin Journals 1917–1974

George Orwell Down and Out in Paris and London

Daniel Penac Monsieur Malaussène

Georges Perec Life: A User's Manual

Marcel Proust Remembrance of Things Past

Raymond Queneau Zazie dans le Métro

Paul Rambali French Blues

Jean Rhys Quartet, Good Morning Midnight

Jean-Paul Sartre Roads to Freedom trilogy

Georges Simenon Any Maigret thriller

Michel Tournier The Golden Droplet

Émile Zola Nana, L'Assommoir, La Bête Humaine, La Curée, Le Ventre de Paris

The north

Sebastian Faulks Birdsong

Julien Gracq A Balcony in the Forest, The Opposing Shore

Émile Zola Germinal, La Débâcle, La Terre

Alsace, Franche-Comté and Jura

John Berger Pig Earth

Bernard Clavel The Spaniard

Colette My Mother's House

Pierre Gascar Women and the Sun

Stendhal Scarlet and Black

△ Marcel Proust

Theodore Zeldin A History of French Passions: 1848–1945 (OUP, 1993). Brilliant and original set of books tackling French history by theme. Volume 1 covers Ambition and Love, Volume 2 Intellect and Pride, and so on. Highly readable and unusually stimulating.

The Middle Ages

Natalie Zemon Davis The Return of Martin Guerre (Harvard UP, 1984). A vivid account of peasant life in the sixteenth century and a perplexing and titillating hoax in the Pyrenean village of Artigat.

Normandy and Brittany

- Honoré de Balzac Les Chouans, Modeste Mignon
Colette Ripening Seed
Gustave Flaubert Madame Bovary
André Gide Strait is the Gate
Pierre Loti Pêcheur d'Islande
Guy de Maupassant Selected Short Stories
Jean Rouard Fields of Glory, Of Illustrious Men
Jean-Paul Sartre La Nausée

The Loire

- Honoré de Balzac Eugénie Grandet
Alain Fournier Le Grand Meaulnes
Joanne Harris Five Quarters of the Orange
Rabelais Gargantua and Pantagruel
George Sand The Devil's Pool

Burgundy

- Gabriel Chevallier Clochemerle, Atlantic Coast
François Mauriac Thérèse

The Pyrenees

- Pierre Loti Ramuntcho

Languedoc

- Hannah Closs High Are the Mountains

Rhône valley and Provence

- Lawrence Durrell The Avignon Quintet
Jean Giono The Horseman on the Roof, The Man Who Planted Trees, Joy of Man's Desiring Marcel Pagnol Jean de Florette, Manon des Sources
Émile Zola Fortune of the Rougons

Côte d'Azur

- Colette Collected Stories
Alexandre Dumas The Count of Monte Cristo
F. Scott Fitzgerald Tender is the Night
Graham Greene Loser Takes All, May We Borrow Your Husband?
Katherine Mansfield Selected Short Stories
Françoise Sagan Bonjour Tristesse

Corsica

- Prosper Mérimée Colomba

 J. H. Huizinga The Waning of the Middle Ages (Dover, 1999). Primarily a study of the culture of the Burgundian and French courts – but a masterpiece that goes far beyond this, building up meticulous detail to re-create the whole life and mentality of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries.

R. J. Knecht Renaissance Warrior and Patron: The Reign of Francis I (CUP, 1996). Fascinating account of one of the great Renaissance kings by a leading academic.

Emmanuel Le Roy Ladurie Montaillou (Penguin, 1989). Village gossip on who's sleeping with whom, tales of trips to Spain and details of work, all extracted by the Inquisition from Cathar peasants of the eastern Pyrenees in the fourteenth century, and stored away until recently in the Vatican archives. Though academic and heavy going in places, most of this book reads like a novel.

Nancy Mitford Madame de Pompadour (Penguin, 1995/New York Review, 2001). Mitford's unashamedly biased admiration for Pompadour – Louis XV's mistress and France's greatest art patron – makes this a fascinating read.

Stephen O'Shea The Perfect Heresy (Profile, 2001/Walker, 2000). Lively but partisan non-academic account of the history of the Cathars and their faith and the Catholic campaign mounted to wipe them out.

 Barbara Tuchman A Distant Mirror (o/p). The history of the fourteenth century – plagues, wars, peasant uprisings and crusades – told through the life of a sympathetic French nobleman whose career takes him through England, Italy and Byzantium and finally ends in a Turkish prison.

Marina Warner Joan of Arc (UCal Press, 2000). The most illuminating and erudite of all the books on Joan, placing her within a historical, spiritual and intellectual tradition and attempting to tease out the nuances of her historical context.

Eighteenth and nineteenth centuries

Rupert Christiansen Paris Babylon (Pimlico, 2003/Penguin, 2006). The compulsive and irresistible story of Paris in the last years of the Second Empire and the physical and social upheavals of the Prussian siege and the Commune. It combines a serious historical overview with tabloid-style detail.

Vincent Cronin Napoleon (HarperCollins UK, 1990). Enthusiastic and accessible biography.

 Christopher Hibbert The French Revolution (Penguin, 1982/Harper, 1999). Well-paced and entertaining narrative treatment by a master historian.

Alistair Horne The Fall of Paris (Pan, 2002). A very readable and humane account of the extraordinary period of the Prussian siege of Paris in 1870 and the ensuing struggles of the Commune.

 Philip Mansel Paris Between Empires (Orion, 2003/St Martin's Press, 2003). Passionate and meticulous account of Parisian politics and society in the fragile, revolution-bedevelled period between the end of Napoleon's empire and the beginning of Napoléon III's.

 Lucy Moore Liberty: The Lives and Times of Six Women in Revolutionary France (HarperCollins, 2006). This utterly engaging and original book follows the lives of six influential – and very different women – through the Revolution. Moore conjures the fervid atmosphere of the times superbly, taking in everything from sexual scandal to revolutionary radicalism. The book has a serious edge to it, too, exploring how the ideals of liberty and equality were betrayed – for women, at least.

Simon Schama Citizens (Penguin, 2004). Bestselling and highly tendentious revisionist history of the Revolution, which pretty well takes the line that the ideologues of the Revolution were a gang of fanatics who simply failed to see how good the ancien régime was. It reveals as much about the intellectual climate of conservative America in the 1980s as it does about 1789, but it's a well-written, racy and provocative book.

Ruth Scurr Fatal Purity: Robespierre And The French Revolution (Chatto & Windus/Metro-politan, 2006). This myth-busting biography of the “remarkably odd” figure of the man they called The Incorruptible, and who went on to orchestrate the notorious Terror, ends up being one of the best books on the Revolution in general.

Twentieth century

Marc Bloch Strange Defeat (Norton, 1999). Moving personal study of the reasons for France’s defeat and subsequent caving-in to fascism. Found among the papers of this Sorbonne historian after his death at the hands of the Gestapo in 1942.

Geoff Dyer The Missing of the Somme (Weidenfeld, 2001). Structured round the author’s visits to the war graves of northern France, this is a highly moving meditation on the trauma of World War I and the way its memory has been perpetuated.

Robert Gildea France Since 1945 (OUP, 2002). Pithy but serious contemporary history, with a particular interest in France’s national self-image.

Julian Jackson The Fall of France: The Nazi Invasion of 1940 (OUP, 2004). Fascinating and balanced account of May and June 1940, skilfully unpicking the cultural, political and military reasons behind France’s speedy defeat.

H. R. Kedward In Search of the Maquis: Rural Resistance in South France 1942–44 (Clarendon, 1994/OUP, 1995). Slightly dry style, but full of fascinating detail about the brave and often mortal struggle of the countless ordinary people across France who fought to drive the Germans from their country.

Chantal Thomas The Wicked Queen: The Origins of the Myth of Marie-Antionette (Zone, 2001). Scholarly but lively review of the muckraking of France’s most infamous queen, originally published in French in 1989. Draws in a host of colourful characters of aristocratic and revolutionary Paris, and contains translations of the sensationalist pamphlets which were written against the queen.

François Maspero Cat’s Grin (o/p). Semi-autobiographical novel about a young teenager in Paris during the war with his brother in the Resistance, his parents taken to concentration camps as Paris is liberated, and everyone else busily collaborating. An intensely moving and revealing account of the war period.

Irène Nemirowsky Suite Française (Vintage, 2007/Knopf, 2006). The author was transported to Auschwitz, where she died. Before she left, she deposited the notebooks containing these two extraordinary novellas with her daughter. They were only published in 2004. The part details the flight from Paris in June 1940; the second depicts life in a provincial town under German occupation.

Ian Ousby Occupation: The Ordeal of France 1940–1944 (Pimlico, 1999/Cooper Square, 2000). Revisionist 1997 account which shows how relatively late resistance was, how widespread collaboration was, and why. Good mix of salient events and how it felt to live through these times.

Barbara Tuchman The Proud Tower (Ballantine, 1996). A portrait of England, France, the US, Germany and Russia in the years

1890–1914. Written in Tuchman’s inimitable and readable style, it includes superb chapters on the extraordinary passions and enmities of the Dreyfus Affair, and on the different currents in the socialist movement in the run-up to World War I.

Paul Webster Pétain’s Crime: The Full Story of French Collaboration in the Holocaust (Pan, 2001). The fascinating and alarming story of the Vichy regime’s more than willing collaboration with the Holocaust and the bravery of those, especially the Communist resistance in occupied France, who attempted to prevent it.

Society and politics

John Ardagh France in the New Century: Portrait of a Changing Society (Penguin, 2000). Long-time writer on France gets to grips with the 1980s and 90s. Attempts to be a comprehensive survey, but gets rather too drawn into party politics and statistics.

Roland Barthes Mythologies (Vintage, 1993; Hill & Wang, 1972). Mythologies is a brilliant and witty structuralist critique on the socio-historical importance of myth and its signs in France today, based on a series of quirky examples.

Jean Baudrillard Selected Writings (Polity, 2001/Stanford UP, 2001). Essential reading to get an overview of the most interesting contemporary French philosopher and artist.

Simone de Beauvoir The Second Sex (Vintage, 1997/Everyman, 1993). One of the prime texts of Western feminism, written in 1949, covering women’s inferior status in history, literature, mythology, psychoanalysis, philosophy and everyday life. The style is dry and intellectual, but the subject matter easily compensates.

Denis Belloc Slow Death in Paris (o/p). A harrowing account of a heroin addict in Paris. Not recommended holiday reading but, if you want to know about the seedy underbelly of the city, this is the book.

Mary Blume A French Affair: The Paris Beat 1965–1998 (Plume, 2000). Incisive and witty observations on contemporary French life by the International Herald Tribune reporter who was stationed there for three decades.

Émilie Carles Wild Herb Soup (Orion UK, 1996). A moving and inspiring autobiography of a girl born and raised in a remote Alpine valley in the early twentieth century.

 Jonathan Fenby On the Brink (Abacus, 2002/Arcade, 2000). While France isn’t perhaps quite as endangered as the title suggests, this provocative book takes a long, hard look at the problems facing contemporary France.

 Mark Girouard Life in the French Country House (Knopf, 2000). Girouard meticulously recreates the social and domestic life that went on between the walls of French châteaux, starting with the great halls of early castles and ending with the commercial marriage venues of the twentieth century.

Faïza Guène Just Like Tomorrow (Chatto & Windus/Harvest, 2006). A simple, touching tale of a shy 15-year old Muslim girl in the Paris housing projects trying to make good. Published in the US with a literal translation of the original French title: Kiffé Kiffé Tomorrow.

Gisèle Halimi Milk for the Orange Tree (Quartet, 1991). A gutsy autobiographical story of a woman who was born in Tunisia, the daughter of an Orthodox Jewish family, and who ran away to Paris to become a lawyer, and defender of women's rights, Algerian FLN fighters and all unpopular causes.

 Bernard Henri-Lévy Adventures on the Freedom Road: The French Intellectuals in the 20th Century (o/p). Huge, clever and complex essays by the contemporary celebrity philosopher. Mercilessly analyses the response of all the great French thinkers, of Left and Right, to the key events of the century. Easy to dip into, surprisingly readable and very provocative.

Tim Moore French Revolutions: Cycling the Tour De France (Vintage, 2002/St Martin's, 2003). A whimsical bicycle journey along the route of the Tour by a genuinely hilarious writer. Lots of witty asides on Tour history and French culture.

Jim Ring Riviera: the Rise and Rise of the Cote d'Azur (John Murray, 2005). A fascinating portrait of France's most anomalous region, taking in its discovery by aristocratic pleasure-seekers in the nineteenth century, the golden years of the 1920s when it was the playground of artists, film stars and millionaires, and the inevitable fall from grace.

Gillian Tindall Célestine: Voices from a French Village (Minerva UK, 1996). Intrigued by some nineteenth century love letters left behind in the house she has bought in Chassignolles, Berry, Tindall researches the history of the village back to the 1840s. She produces a meticulous, thoughtful and moving portrait of rural French life and its slow but dramatic transformation. A brilliant piece of social history.

Eugen Weber My France (Harvard, 1992). A collection of essays, fascinating and offbeat, about numerous aspects of French culture and politics. Some prior knowledge of mainstream French history is needed to make the most of them.

 Theodore Zeldin The French (Harvill UK, 1997). A wise and original book that attempts to describe a country through the prism of the author's intensely personal conversations with a fascinating range of French people. Chapter titles include "How to be chic" and "How to appreciate a grandmother".

Art and poetry

John Berger The Success and Failure of Picasso (Vintage UK, 1993). The success is self-explanatory; the failure (and the tragedy) lies in Picasso's poverty of subject matter – or so Berger argues in this brief and highly persuasive book. Perhaps the best one-volume study of Picasso in English.

 Brassaï The Secret Paris of the Thirties (Thames & Hudson UK, 2001). Extraordinary photos of the capital's nightlife in the 1930s – brothels, music halls, street-cleaners, transvestites and the underworld – each one a work of art and a familiar world (now long since gone) to Brassai and his mate, Henry Miller, who accompanied him on his nocturnal expeditions.

 André Chastel French Art (Flammarion, France 1995–96). Authoritative, three-volume study by one of France's leading art historians.

Discusses individual works of art in some detail in an attempt – from architecture to tapestry, as well as painting – to locate the Frenchness of French art. With glossy photographs and serious-minded but readable text.

Kenneth J. Conant Carolingian and Romanesque Architecture, 800–1200 (Yale, 1992). Good European study with a focus on Cluny and the Santiago pilgrim route.

 John Richardson The Life of Picasso: Vol 1 1881–1906 (Pimlico, 1992/Random House, 1996) and Vol 2 1907–17 (Pimlico, 1997/Random House, 1996). No twentieth-century artist has ever been subjected to as much scrutiny as Picasso receives in Richardson's exhaustive and brilliantly illustrated biography. The author has taken many years to complete the first two volumes, and there's a risk he'll never reach the end, but the mould-breaking years have now been covered. Volumes 3 and 4 are in the pipeline.

 Stephen Romer (editor) 20th-Century French Poems (Faber, 2002). A collection of around 150 French poems spanning the whole of the century. Although there's no French text, many of the translations are works of art in themselves, consummately rendered by the likes of Samuel Beckett, T.S. Eliot and Paul Auster. An equally enjoyable read for the novice and those already familiar with modern French poetry.

Vivian Russell Monet's Garden (Frances Lincoln, 1995). Sumptuous colour photographs by the author, old photographs of the artist and reproductions of his paintings. Includes a detailed description of the garden's evolution and seasonal cycle that will delight serious gardeners.

Gertrude Stein The Autobiography of Alice B Toklas (Penguin UK, 2001). The goings-on at Stein's famous salon in Paris. The most accessible of her works, written from the point of view of Stein's long-time lover, gives an amusing account of the Paris art and literary scene of the 1910s and 1920s.

Guides

 David Abram Corsica Trekking GR20 (Trailblazer, 2007). Trailblazer's guide to the island's long-distance footpaths covers the GR20, Mare a Mare Nord & Sud and Mare e Monti Nord routes. Written by the author of our Corsica chapter, this is the most comprehensive book of its kind, with lively route descriptions, 67 hand-drawn maps and a full-colour field guide to Corsican flora.

James Bromwich The Roman Remains of Southern France (Routledge, 1996). The only comprehensive guide to the subject – detailed, well illustrated and approachable. In addition to accounts of the famous sites, it will lead you off the map to little-known discoveries.

Glynn Christian Edible France (Interlink, 1998). A guide to food rather than restaurants: regional produce, local specialities, markets and best shops for buying goodies to bring back home.

Cicerone Walking Guides (Cicerone, UK). Neat, durable guides with detailed route descriptions. Titles include Tour of Mont Blanc; Chamonix-Mont Blanc; Tour of the Oisans (GR54); French Alps (GR5); The Way of Saint James (GR65); Tour of the Queyras; The Pyrenean Trail (GR10); Walks and Climbs in the Pyrenees; Walking in the Alps.

 Elizabeth David French Provincial Cooking (Penguin, 1998). A classic cookery book, written in 1960 by the English expert on French food. The recipes are in fine prose rather than manual speak, with excellent detail and warnings about tricky processes or the need for particular skills; and they work, even with non-French ingredients.

 David Hampshire Living and Working in France (Survival Books, 2007). An invaluable guide for anyone considering residence or work in France; packed with ideas and advice on job hunting, bureaucracy, tax, health and so on. Usually updated every two years.

W. Lippert Fleurs des Montagnes, Alpagnes et Forêts (Nathan, France, 1991). Best palm-sized colour guide if you want something to pack away with your gear in the mountains.

Douglas Streatfeild-James & others Trekking in the Pyrenees (Trailblazer UK, 2005). The best English-language guide to the GR10 and its variants, also including choice bits of the Camino de Santiago and most of the GR11. Easy-to-use sketch maps, and plenty of practical details.

Patricia Wells The Paris Cookbook (Kyle Cathie, UK, 2003). American journalist and long-time resident of the capital, Patricia Wells takes her inspiration for these sophisticated recipes from her favourite Parisian restaurants, shops and markets.

Language

Language

Phrasebooks and courses.....	1341
Pronunciation.....	1341
Basic words and phrases	1342
Food and dishes.....	1346
Glossary.....	1354

French

French can be a deceptively familiar language because of the number of words and structures it shares with English. Despite this, it's far from easy, though the bare essentials are not difficult to master and can make all the difference. Even just saying “Bonjour Madame/Monsieur” and then gesticulating will usually get you a smile and helpful service. People working in tourist offices, hotels and so on, almost always speak English and tend to use it when you're struggling to speak French – be grateful, not insulted.

Phrasebooks and courses

The Complete Merde! The Real French You Were Never Taught at School (HarperCollins). More than just a collection of swearwords, this book is a passkey into the French people actually use. As such, it's an inspiring resource for anyone wishing to break out of school-level French, and get a window into French culture.

Breakthrough French (Palgrave Macmillan). One of the best teach-yourself courses, with three levels to choose from. Each comes with a book and CD-ROM.

Get Into French Course Pack (BBC Worldwide). Comes with an audio CD, a book and a CD-ROM which allows you to set up your own role-play situations. The BBC offers a whole range of French learning products – see @ www.bbc.co.uk/languages/french, which also offers a basic “Quick Fix”, with free mp3 downloads, and a free, 24-part, online audio course: “French Steps”.

Harrap's French Mini Dictionary (Harrap). This relatively comprehensive French–English and English–French dictionary also has a brief grammar and pronunciation guide.

Rough Guide French Phrasebook (Rough Guides). Mini dictionary-style phrasebook with both English–French and French–English sections, along with cultural tips and a menu reader.

Pronunciation

One easy rule to remember is that consonants at the ends of words are usually silent: the most obvious example is Paris, pronounced “Paree”, while the phrase pas plus tard (not later) sounds something like “pa-plu-tarr”. The exception is when the following word begins with a vowel, in which case you run the two together: pas après (not after) becomes “pazaprey”. Otherwise, consonants are much as in English, except that: ch is always “sh”, c is “s”, h is silent, th is the same as “t”, ll is like the “y” in yes, w is “v”, and r is growled (or rolled).

Vowels are the hardest sounds to get exactly right, but they rarely differ enough from English to make comprehension a problem. The most obvious differences are that au sounds like the “o” in “over”; aujourd'hui (today) is thus pronounced “oh-jor-dwi”. Another one to listen out for is oi, which sounds like “wa”; toi (to you) thus sounds like “twa”. Lastly, adding “m” or “n” to a vowel, as in en or un, adds a nasal sound, as if you said just the vowel with a cold.

Basic words and phrases

French nouns are divided into masculine and feminine. This causes difficulties with adjectives, whose endings have to change to suit the nouns they qualify – you can talk about un château blanc (a white castle), for example, but une tour blanche (a white tower). If you’re not sure, stick to the simpler masculine form – as used in this glossary.

Essentials

merci	thank you	petit	small
bonjour	hello (morning or afternoon)	plus	more bonsoir	hello (evening)	moins	less bonne nuit	good night	un peu	a little
au revoir	goodbye	beaucoup	a lot
s'il vous plaît	please	bon marché	cheap
pardon/Je m'excuse	sorry	cher	expensive
pardon	excuse me	bon	good
oui	yes	mauvais	bad
non	no	chaud	hot
d'accord	OK/agreed	froid	cold
au secours!	help!	avec	with ici	here	sans	without
là	there	entrée	entrance
ceci	this one	sortie	exit
celà	that one	un homme	man
ouvert	open	une femme	woman (pronounced “fam”)
fermé	closed
grand	big

Numbers

un	1	douze	12
deux	2	treize	13
trois	3	quatorze	14
quatre	4	quinze	15
cinq	5	seize	16
six	6	dix-sept	17
sept	7	dix-huit	18
huit	8	dix-neuf	19
neuf	9	vingt	20
dix	10	vingt-et-un	21
onze	11	vingt-deux	22

trente	30
quarante	40
cinquante	50
soixante	60
soixante-dix	70
soixante-quinze	75
quatre-vingts	80
quatre-vingt-dix	90
quatre-vingt-quinze	95

cent	100
cent-et-un	101
deux cents	200
trois cents	300
cinq cents	500
mille	1000
deux milles	2000
cinq milles	5000
un million	1,000,000

Time

aujourd'hui	today
hier	yesterday
demain	tomorrow
le matin	in the morning
l'après-midi	in the afternoon
le soir	in the evening

maintenant	now
plus tard	later
à une heure	at one o'clock
à trois heures	at three o'clock
à dix heures et demie	at ten-thirty à midi	at midday

Days and dates

janvier	January
février	February
mars	March
avril	April
mai	May
juin	June
juillet	July
août	August
septembre	September
octobre	October
novembre	November
décembre	December

dimanche	Sunday
lundi	Monday
mardi	Tuesday
mercredi	Wednesday
jeudi	Thursday
vendredi	Friday
samedi	Saturday
le premier août	August 1
le deux mars	March 2
le quatorze juillet	July 14
le vingt-trois novembre	November 23
deux mille sept	2007

Talking to people

When addressing people a simple bonjour is not enough; you should always use Monsieur for a man, Madame for a woman, Mademoiselle for a young woman or girl. This isn't as formal as it seems, and it has its uses when you've forgotten someone's name or want to attract someone's attention.

Parlez-vous anglais?	Do you speak English?
Comment ça se dit en français?	How do you say it in French?
Comment vous appelez-vous?	What's your name?
Je m'appelle...	My name is...
Je suis...	I'm...
...anglais[e]	...English

...irlandais[e]	...Irish
...écossais[e]	...Scottish
...gallois[e]	...Welsh
...américain[e]	...American
...australien[ne]	...Australian
...canadien[ne]	...Canadian
...néo-zélandais[e]	...a New Zealander
...sud-africain[e]	...South African

Je comprends	I understand
Je ne comprends pas	I don't understand
S'il vous plaît, parlez moins vite	Can you speak slower?
Comment allez-vous?/Ça va?	How are you?
Très bien, merci	Fine, thanks

Je ne sais pas	I don't know
Allons-y	Let's go
À demain	See you tomorrow
À bientôt	See you soon
Fichez-moi la paix!	Leave me alone (aggressive)
Aidez-moi, s'il vous plaît	Please help me

Finding the way

autobus/bus/car	bus
gare routière	bus station
arrêt	bus stop
voiture	car
train/taxi/ferry	train/taxi/ferry
bâteau	boat
avion	plane
navette	shuttle
gare (SNCF)	train station
quai	platform
Il part à quelle heure?	What time does it leave?
Il arrive à quelle heure?	What time does it arrive?
un billet pour...	a ticket to...
aller simple	single ticket
aller retour	return ticket
composez votre billet	validate your ticket
valable pour	valid for
vente de billets	ticket office
combien de kilomètres?	how many kilometres?
combien d'heures?	how many hours?
autostop	hitchhiking
à pied	on foot
Vous allez où?	Where are you going?
Je vais à ...	I'm going to...

Je voudrais descendre à ...	I want to get off at...
la route pour... près/pas loin	the road to... near loin	far
à gauche	left
à droite	right
tout droit	straight on à l'autre côté de	on the other side of à l'angle de	on the corner of à côté de	next to
derrière	behind
devant	in front of
avant	before
après	after
sous	under
traverser	to cross
pont	bridge
centre ville	town centre
toutes directions	all through roads (road sign)
autres directions	other destinations (road sign)
ville haute/haute ville	upper town
ville basse/basse ville	lower town
vieille ville	old town

Questions and requests

The simplest way of asking a question is to start with s'il vous plaît (please), then name the thing you want in an interrogative tone of voice. For example:

S'il vous plaît, la boulangerie?	Where is there a bakery?
S'il vous plaît, la route pour la tour Eiffel?	Which way is it to the Eiffel Tower?

Similarly with requests:
S'il vous plaît, une chambre pour deux?	Can we have a room for two
S'il vous plaît, un kilo d'oranges?	Can I have a kilo of oranges?

Question words

où?	where?
comment?	how?
combien?	how many/how much?

Accommodation

une chambre pour une/deux personne(s)	a room for one/two persons
un lit double	a double bed
une chambre avec douche	a room with a shower
une chambre avec salle de bain	a room with a bath
pour une/deux/trois nuits	for one/two/three nights
Je peux la voir?	Can I see it?
une chambre sur la cour	a room on the courtyard
une chambre sur la rue	a room over the street
premier étage	first floor
deuxième étage	second floor
avec vue	with a view
clef	key
repasser	to iron
faire la lessive	do laundry

Driving

garage	service station
service	service
garer la voiture	to park the car
un parking	car park
défense de stationner/ stationnement interdit	no parking
poste d'essence	petrol/gas station
essence	fuel
sans plomb	unleaded
super	leaded
gazole	diesel
faire le plein	(to) fill it up

quand?	when?
pourquoi?	why?
à quelle heure?	at what time?
quel est?	what is/which is?

draps	sheets
couvertures	blankets
calme	quiet
bruyant	noisy
eau chaude	hot water
eau froide	cold water
Est-ce que le petit déjeuner est compris?	Is breakfast included?
Je voudrais prendre le petit déjeuner	I would like breakfast
Je ne veux pas de petit déjeuner	I don't want breakfast
chambre d'hôte	bed and breakfast
On peut camper ici?	Can we camp here?
camping/terrain de camping	campsite
tente	tent
emplacement	tent space
foyer	hostel
auberge de jeunesse	youth hostel

huile	oil
ligne à air	air line
gonfler les pneus	put air in the tyres
batterie	battery
la batterie est morte	the battery is dead
bougies	plugs
tomber en panne	to break down
bidon	gas can
assurance	insurance
carte verte	green card
feux	traffic lights
feu rouge	red light
feu vert	green light

Health matters

médecin	doctor
Je ne me sens pas bien	I don't feel well
médicaments	medicines
ordonnance	prescription
Je suis malade	I feel sick
J'ai mal à la tête	I have a headache
mal à l'estomac	stomach ache

règles	period
douleur	pain
ça fait mal	it hurts
pharmacie	chemist/pharmacist
hôpital	hospital
préservatif	condom
pilule du lendemain	morning-after pill

Other needs

boulangerie	bakery
alimentation	food shop
charcuterie, traiteur	delicatessen
pâtisserie	cake shop
fromagerie	cheese shop
supermarché	supermarket
manger	to eat
boire	to drink
dégustation	tasting, eg wine tasting

camping gaz	camping gas
tabac	tobacconist
timbres	stamps
banque	bank
argent	money
toilettes	toilets
police	police
téléphone	telephone
cinéma	cinema
théâtre	theatre
réserver	to reserve/book

L

Food and dishes

Basic terms

l'addition	bill/check
beurre	butter
bio or biologique	organic
bouteille	bottle
chauffé	heated
couteau	knife
cru	raw
cuillère	spoon
cuit	cooked
emballé	wrapped
à emporter	takeaway
formule	lunchtime set menu
fourchette	fork
fumé	smoked
huile	oil

lait	milk
moutarde	mustard
oeuf	egg
offert	free
pain	bread
pimenté	spicy
plat	main course
poivre	pepper
salé	salted/savoury
sel	salt
sucre	sugar
sucré	sweet
table	table
verre	glass
vinaigre	vinegar

Snacks

un sandwich/une baguette	a sandwich	panini	toasted Italian sandwich
au jambon	with ham	tartine	buttered bread or open sandwich, often with jam
au fromage	with cheese	oeufs	eggs
au saucisson	with sausage	au plat	fried
au pâté (de campagne)	with pâté (country-style)	à la coque	boiled
croque-monsieur	grilled cheese and ham sandwich	durs	hard-boiled
croque-madame	grilled cheese and bacon, sausage, chicken or egg sandwich	brouillés	scrambled pain bagnat	bread roll with egg, olives, salad, tuna, anchovies and olive oil	omelette	omelette
		nature	plain
		aux fines herbes	with herbs
		au fromage	with cheese
		salade de tomates	tomato salad
		salade vert	green salad

Pasta (pâtes), pancakes (crêpes) and flans (tartes)

nouilles	noodles	panisse	thick chickpea flour pancake
pâtes fraîches	fresh pasta	pissaladière	tart of fried onions with anchovies and black olives
raviolis	pasta parcels of meat or chard à Provençal	tarte flambée	thin pizza-like pastry topped with onion, cream and bacon or other combinations
crêpe au sucre /aux oeufs	pancake with sugar /eggs
galette	buckwheat pancake
socca	thin chickpea flour pancake

Soups (soupes)

baudroie	fish soup with vegetables, garlic and herbs	potage	thick vegetable soup
bisque	shellfish soup	potée auvergnate	cabbage and meat soup
bouillabaisse	soup with five fish	rouille	red pepper, garlic and saffron mayonnaise served with fish soup
bouillon	broth or stock	soupe à l'oignon	onion soup with rich cheese topping
bourride	thick fish soup	velouté	thick soup, usually fish or poultry
consommé	clear soup
garbure	potato, cabbage and meat soup
pistou	parmesan, basil and garlic paste added to soup

Starters (hors d'œuvres)

assiette anglaise	plate of cold meats	hors d'œuvres	combination of the above often with smoked or marinated fish
assiette composée	mixed salad plate, usually cold meat and veg
crudités	dressed raw vegetables

Fish (poisson), seafood (fruits de mer) and shellfish (crustacés or coquillages)

aiglefin	small haddock or fresh cod	gambas	king prawns
anchois	anchovies	hareng	herring
anguilles	eels	homard	lobster
barbue	brill	huîtres	oysters
baudroie	monkfish or anglerfish	langouste	spiny lobster
		langoustines	saltwater crayfish (scampi)
bigourneau	periwinkle	limande	lemon sole
brème	bream	lotte de mer	monkfish
bulot	whelk	loup de mer	sea bass
cabillaud	cod	maquereau	mackerel
calmar	squid	merlan	whiting
carrelet	plaice	moules (marinière)	mussels (with shallots in white wine sauce)
claire	type of oyster	oursin	sea urchin
colin	hake	palourdes	clams
congre	conger eel	poissons de roche	fish from shoreline rocks
coques	cockles	praires	small clams
coquilles	scallops St-Jacques	raie	skate
crabe	crab	rouget	red mullet
crevettes grises	shrimp	saumon	salmon
crevettes roses	prawns	sole	sole
daurade	sea bream	thon	tuna
éperlan	smelt or whitebait	truite	trout
escargots	snails	turbot	turbot
favou(ille)	tiny crab	violet	sea squirt
flétan	halibut
friture	assorted fried fish

Fish dishes and terms

aïoli	garlic mayonnaise served with salt cod and other fish	beignet	fritter
anchoïade	anchovy paste or sauce	darne	fillet or steak
arête	fish bone	la douzaine	a dozen assiette de pêcheur	assorted fish	frit	fried friture	deep-fried small fish
		fumé	smoked
		fumet	fish stock

gigot de mer grillé	large fish baked whole grilled hollandaise	butter and vinegar sauce
à la meunière	in a butter, lemon and parsley sauce
mousse/mousseline pané	mousse breaded

poutargue raïto	mullet roe paste red wine, olive, caper, garlic and shallot sauce
quenelles thermidor	light dumplings lobster grilled in its shell with cream sauce

Meat (viande) and poultry (volaille)

agneau (de pré-salé)	lamb (grazed on salt marshes)
andouille andouillette	pork and tripe sausage tripe sausage
bavette	French cut of beef equivalent to flank
bifteck boeuf	steak beef
boudin blanc	sausage of white meats
boudin noir	black pudding
caille	quail
canard	duck
caneton	duckling
contrefilet	sirloin roast
coquelet	cockerel
dinde/dindon	turkey
entrecôte	rib steak
faux filet	sirloin steak
foie	liver
foie gras	(duck/goose) liver
gibier	game
gigot (d'agneau)	leg (of lamb)
grenouilles (cuisses de)	frogs' (legs)
grillade	grilled meat
hâchis	chopped meat or mince hamburger
langue	tongue

lapin/lapereau	rabbit/young rabbit
lard/lardons	bacon/diced bacon
lièvre	hare
merguez	spicy, red sausage mouton	mutton
museau de veau	calf's muzzle
oie	goose
onglet	French cut of beef that makes a prime steak
os	bone
poitrine	breast
porc	pork
poulet	chicken
poussin	baby chicken
rillettes	pork mashed with lard and liver
ris	sweetbreads
rognons	kidneys
rognons blancs	testicles
sanglier	wild boar
steak	steak
tête de veau	calf's head (in jelly)
tournedos	thick slices of fillet
tripes	tripe
tripoux	mutton tripe
veau	veal
venaison	venison

Meat and poultry dishes and terms

aïado	roast shoulder of lamb stuffed with garlic and other ingredients
aile	wing
au feu de bois	cooked over wood fire
au four	baked

baeckoffe	Alsatian hotpot of pork, mutton and beef baked with potato layers
blanquette, daube, estouffade, hochepôt, navarin, ragoût	types of stew

blanquette de veau	veal in cream and mushroom sauce
boeuf bourguignon	beef stew with Burgundy, onions and mushrooms
canard à l'orange	roast duck with an orange and wine sauce
canard pâté de périgourdin foie gras	roast duck with prunes and truffles
carré	best end of neck, chop or cutlet
cassoulet	casserole of beans, sausages and duck/goose choucroute	pickled cabbage with peppercorns, sausages, bacon and salami
civet	game stew
confit	meat preserve
côte	chop, cutlet or rib
cou	neck
coq au vin	chicken slow-cooked with wine, onions and mushrooms
cuisse	thigh or leg
épaule	shoulder
en croûte	in pastry
farci	stuffed

Terms for steaks

bleu	almost raw
saignant	rare
à point	medium rare

Garnishes and sauces

américaine	sauce of white wine, cognac and tomato arlésienne au porto	with tomatoes, onions, aubergines, potatoes and rice in port
auvergnat	with cabbage, sausage and bacon
béarnaise	sauce of egg yolks, white wine, shallots and vinegar

garni	with vegetables
gésier	gizzard
grillade	grilled meat
grillé	grilled
hâchis	chopped meat or mince hamburger
magret de canard	duck breast
marmite	casserole
médailion	round piece
mijoté	stewed
pavé	thick slice
pieds et paques	mutton or pork tripe and trotters
poêlé	pan-fried
poulet de Bresse	chicken from Bresse
râble	saddle
rôti	roast
sauté	lightly fried in butter
steak au poivre (vert/rouge)	steak in a black peppercorn sauce (green/red peppercorn)
steak tartare	raw chopped beef, topped with a raw egg yolk
tagine	North African casserole
tournedos rossini	beef fillet with foie gras and truffles
viennoise	fried in egg and breadcrumbs

bien cuit	well done
très bien cuit	very well done/ruined
brochette	kebab

beurre blanc	sauce of white wine and shallots, with butter
bonne femme	with mushroom, bacon, potato and onions
bordelaise	in a red wine, shallot and bone-marrow sauce
boulangère	baked with potatoes and onions

bourgeoise	with carrots, onions, bacon, celery and braised lettuce	fricassée	rich, creamy sauce
chasseur	sauce of white wine, mushrooms and shallots	mornay	cheese sauce
châtelaine	with artichoke hearts and chestnut purée	pays d'auge	cream and cider
diable	strong mustard seasoning	périgourdine	sauce with foie gras and possibly truffles
forestière	with bacon and mushroom	piquante	with gherkins or capers, vinegar and shallots
		provençale	sauce of tomatoes, garlic, olive oil and herbs
		savoyarde	with gruyère cheese
		véronique	sauce of grapes, wine and cream

Vegetables (légumes), grains (grains), herbs (herbes) and spices (épices)

ail	garlic	gingembre	ginger
anis	aniseed	haricots	beans
artichaut	artichoke	verts	green beans
asperge	asparagus	rouges	kidney beans
avocat	avocado	beurres	yellow snap beans
basilic	basil	laurier	bay leaf
betterave	beetroot	lentilles	lentils
blette/bette	Swiss chard	maïs	maize (corn)
cannelle	cinnamon	menthe	mint
capre	caper	moutarde	mustard
cardon	cardoon, a beet related to artichoke	oignon	onion
carotte	carrot	panais	parsnip
céleri	celery	pélandron	type of string bean
champignons, cèpes, ceps, girolles, chanterelles, pleurotes	mushrooms	persil	parsley
chou (rouge)	(red) cabbage	petits pois	peas
choufleur	cauliflower	piment rouge/vert	red/green chilli pepper
concombre	cucumber	pois chiche	chickpeas
cornichon	gherkin	pois mange-tout	mange-tout
échalotes	shallots	pignons	pine nuts
endive	chicory	poireau	leek
épinard	spinach	poivron (vert, rouge)	sweet pepper (green, red)
estragon	tarragon	pommes de terre	potatoes
fenouil	fennel	primeurs	spring vegetables
férigoule	thyme (in Provençal)	radis	radish
fèves	broad beans	riz	rice
flageolets	flageolet beans	safran	saffron
		sarrasin	buckwheat
		tomate	tomato
		truffes	truffles

Vegetable dishes and terms

alicot	puréed potato with cheese	jardinière	with mixed diced vegetables
allumettes	very thin chips	mousseline	mashed potato with cream and eggs
à l'anglaise	boiled	à la parisienne	sautéed potatoes, with white wine and shallot sauce
beignet	fritter	parmentier	with potatoes
duxelles	fried mushrooms and shallots with cream	petits farcis	stuffed tomatoes, aubergines, courgettes and peppers
farci	stuffed	râpée	grated or shredded
feuille	leaf	sauté	lightly fried in butter
fines herbes	mixture of tarragon, parsley and chives	à la vapeur	steamed gratiné	browned with cheese or butter	en verdure	garnished with green vegetables
à la grecque	cooked in oil and lemon

Fruit (fruit) and nuts (noix)

abricot	apricot	mangue	mango acajou	cashew nut	marron	chestnut
amande	almond	melon	melon
ananas	pineapple	mirabelle	small yellow plum
banane	banana	myrtille	bilberry
brugnon, nectarine	nectarine	noisette	hazelnut
cacahouète	peanut	noix	walnuts; nuts
cassis	blackcurrant	orange	orange
cérise	cherry	pamplemousse	grapefruit citron	lemon	pastèque	watermelon
citron vert	lime	pêche	peach
datte	date	pistache	pistachio
figue	fig	poire	pear
fraise (de bois)	strawberry (wild)	pomme	apple
framboise	raspberry	prune	plum
fruit de la passion	passion fruit	pruneau	prune grenade	pomegranate	raisin	grape
groseille	redcurrant	reine-claude	greengage

Fruit dishes and terms

agrumes	citrus fruits	fougasse	bread flavoured with orange-flower water or almonds (can be savoury)
beignet	fritter	frappé	iced
compôte	stewed fruit
coulis	sauce of puréed fruit
crème de marrons	chestnut purée
flambé	set aflame in alcohol

Desserts (desserts or entremets) and pastries (pâtisserie)

bombe	moulded ice-cream dessert	macaron	macaroon
brioche	sweet breakfast roll	madeleine	small sponge cake
calisson	almond sweet	marrons Mont Blanc	chestnut purée and cream on a rum-soaked sponge cake
charlotte	custard and fruit in lining of almond fingers	mousse au chocolat	chocolate mousse
chichi	doughnut shaped into a stick	omelette norvégienne	baked Alaska
clafoutis	heavy custard and fruit tart	palmier	caramelized puff pastry
crème Chantilly	vanilla-flavoured and sweetened whipped cream	parfait	frozen mousse, sometimes ice cream
crème fraîche	sour cream	petit-suisse	a smooth mixture of cream and curds
crème pâtissière	thick, eggy pastry-filling	petits fours	bite-sized cakes/pastries
crêpe Suzette	thin pancake with orange juice and liqueur	poires belle hélène	pears and ice cream in chocolate sauce
fromage blanc	cream cheese	tarte Tatin	upside-down apple tart
gaufre	waffle	tarte tropezienne	sponge cake filled with custard cream, topped with nuts
glace	ice cream	yaourt/yogourt	yoghurt
Île flottante /oeufs à la neige	whipped egg-white floating on custard

Glossary

alimentation food

appellation (d'origine) contrôlée government certification guaranteeing the quality of a French wine or cheese; often written AOC

arrondissement city borough

autoroute motorway/freeway

boulangerie baker's boulevard périphérique ring road

causse limestone plateau

centre ville town centre

chais warehouses

chambre d'hôte B&B accommodation in someone's house charcuterie butcher's

confiserie shop selling sweets, chocolate and sometimes ice cream

département administrative division of France, roughly equivalent to an English county dégustation tasting, as in wine tasting or gourmet food menu

formule lunchtime set menu

foyer residential hostel for young workers and students

fromagerie cheese shop

gare station

gare routière bus station

gare SNCF train station

gîte (d'étape) country cottage rentable by the week, or hikers' accommodation grands projets series of large-scale architectural projects initiated by Mitterrand in the 1980s

halles market

Hôtel de Ville town hall

mairie town hall

maquis French World War II Resistance movement, taking its name from the thick shrub found in coastal areas of the Mediterranean which provided cover for members

navette shuttle service

pâtisserie cake shop

plage beach

plats du jour daily specials

pont bridge

puy mountain formed from a volcano quartier district in a town or city

rue street

tobac tobacconist's, also selling bus/métro tickets and phone cards

table d'hôte a communal dining table in a restaurant

traiteur delicatessen

Architectural terms

These are either terms you'll come across in the Guide, or come up against while travelling around.

abbaye abbey

ambulatory passage round the outer edge of the choir of a church

apse semicircular termination at the east end of a church

Baroque High Renaissance period of art and architecture, distinguished by extreme ornateness

basse ville lower town

bastide walled town

Carolingian dynasty (and art, sculpture etc) named after Charlemagne; mid-eighth to early tenth centuries

château mansion, country house, castle

château fort castle

chevet east end of a church choir the eastern part of a church between the altar and nave, used by the choir and clergy

Classical architectural style incorporating Greek and Roman elements: pillars, domes, colonnades, etc, at its height in France in the seventeenth century and revived, as Neoclassical, in the nineteenth century clerestory upper storey of a church, incorporating the windows donjon castle keep église church

flamboyant florid form of Gothic
Gallo-Roman from the Roman era in France haute ville upper town
hôtel particulier mansion or town house
Merovingian dynasty (and art etc), ruling France and parts of Germany from sixth to mid-eighth centuries narthex entrance hall of church nave main body of a church porte gateway
Renaissance art/architectural style developed in fifteenth-century Italy and imported to France in the early sixteenth century

retable altarpiece
Roman Romanesque (easily confused with Romain-Roman) Romanesque early medieval architecture distinguished by squat, rounded forms and naive sculpture, called Norman in Britain stucco plaster used to embellish ceilings etc tour tower
transepts transverse arms of a church tympandum sculpted panel above a church door voussoir sculpted rings in arch over church door

Travel store

www.roughguides.com

DESTINATION:
W O N D E R

CHÂTEAU
ANDELOT

Rue de L'Eglise
39320 Andelot-les-St. Amour, FRANCE
Tel: (33) 03.84.85.41.49

WWW.CHATEAUANDELOT.COM

NORTH SOUTH TRAVEL

Great discounts

North South Travel is a small travel agent offering excellent personal service. Like other air ticket retailers, we offer discount fares worldwide. But unlike others, all available profits contribute to grassroots projects in the South through the NST Development Trust Registered Charity No. 1040656.

Great difference

For quotes or queries, contact Brenda Skinner or her helpful staff. Recent donations made from the NST Development Trust include support to Djoliba Trust, providing micro-credit to onion growers in the Dogon country in Mali; assistance to displaced people and rural communities in eastern Congo; a grant to Wells For India, which works for clean water in Rajasthan; support to the charity Children of the Andes, working for poverty relief in Colombia; and a grant to the Omari Project which works with drug-dependent young people in Watamu, Kenya.

Tel/Fax 01245 608 291.

Email brenda@northsouthtravel.co.uk

Website www.northsouthtravel.co.uk

North South Travel,
Moulsham Mill, Parkway,
Chelmsford,
Essex CM2 7PX,
UK

Head off in the right direction

Book your car hire before you go!

Save money and time by hiring your car with Skycars. Our fast, easy and friendly service provides rental in more than 3000 locations in over 30 countries worldwide.

Skycars International Ltd.
0870 789 7 789
www.skycars.com

GRC HUN IRL ITA MLT NLD NZL NOR POL PRT SVN ZAF ESP SWE CHE TUR
AUT BEL CAN HRV CYP CZE DNK FRA DEU GRC HUN IRL ITA MLT NLD ZAF

The world's finest map and travel bookshops

Explore Discover Inspire

Stanfords Flagship Store

12-14 Long Acre
Covent Garden
London
WC2 9LP
(T) 020 7836 1321

39 Spring Gardens
Manchester
M2 2BG
(T) 0161 831 0250

29 Corn Street
Bristol
BS1 1HT
(T) 0117 929 9966

International Mail Order Department

+44 (0)20 7836 1321

www.stanfords.co.uk

Maps • Travel Guides • Illustrated Books • Travel Literature
World Atlases • Globes • World Wall Maps • Climbing
Maps & Books • Maritime Maps & Books • Historical Maps Instruments • Children's

Inspiring exploration and discovery for 150 years

Small print and

Index

A Rough Guide to Rough Guides

Published in 1982, the first Rough Guide – to Greece – was a student scheme that became a publishing phenomenon. Mark Ellingham, a recent graduate in English from Bristol University, had been travelling in Greece the previous summer and couldn't find the right guidebook. With a small group of friends he wrote his own guide, combining a highly contemporary, journalistic style with a thoroughly practical approach to travellers' needs.

The immediate success of the book spawned a series that rapidly covered dozens of destinations. And, in addition to impecunious backpackers, Rough Guides soon acquired a much broader and older readership that relished the guides' wit and inquisitiveness as much as their enthusiastic, critical approach and value-for-money ethos.

These days, Rough Guides include recommendations from shoestring to luxury and cover more than 200 destinations around the globe, including almost every country in the Americas and Europe, more than half of Africa and most of Asia and Australasia. Our ever-growing team of authors and photographers is spread all over the world, particularly in Europe, the USA and Australia.

In the early 1990s, Rough Guides branched out of travel, with the publication of Rough Guides to World Music, Classical Music and the Internet. All three have become benchmark titles in their fields, spearheading the publication of a wide range of books under the Rough Guide name.

Including the travel series, Rough Guides now number more than 350 titles, covering: phrasebooks, waterproof maps, music guides from Opera to Heavy Metal, reference works as diverse as Conspiracy Theories and Shakespeare, and popular culture books from iPods to Poker. Rough Guides also produce a series of more than 120 World Music CDs in partnership with World Music Network.

Visit www.roughguides.com to see our latest publications.

Rough Guide travel images are available for commercial licensing at www.roughguidespictures.com

Rough Guide credits

Text editors: Edward Aves, Sarah Eno, James Smart, Helena Smith and Lucy White Layout: Ajay Verma
Cartography: Jai Prakash Mishra
Picture editor: Harriet Mills
Production: Katherine Owers
Proofreaders: Karen Parker, Madhavi Singh and Punita Singh
Cover design: Chloë Roberts
Photographers: David Abram, Jean-Christophe Godet, Michelle Grant, James McConnachie and Greg Ward

.....
Editorial: London Kate Berens, Claire Saunders, Ruth Blackmore, Polly Thomas, Richard Lim, Alison Murchie, Karoline Densley, Andy Turner, Keith Drew, Edward Aves, Nikki Birrell, Alice Park, Sarah Eno, Lucy White, Jo Kirby, Samantha Cook, James Smart, Natasha Foges, Roisin Cameron, Joe Staines, Duncan Clark, Peter Buckley, Matthew Milton, Tracy Hopkins, Ruth Tidball; New York Andrew Rosenberg, Steven Horak, AnneLise Sorensen, Amy Hegarty, April Isaacs, Ella Steim, Anna Owens, Joseph Petta, Sean Mahoney
Design & Pictures: London Scott Stickland, Dan May, Diana Jarvis, Mark Thomas, Jj Luck, Harriet Mills, Chloë Roberts, Nicole Newman;

Delhi Umesh Aggarwal, Ajay Verma, Jessica Subramanian, Ankur Guha, Pradeep Thapliyal, Sachin Tanwar, Anita Singh, Madhavi Singh
Production: Katherine Owers, Aimee Hampson
Cartography: London Maxine Repath, Ed Wright, Katie Lloyd-Jones; Delhi Jai Prakash Mishra, Rajesh Chhibber, Ashutosh Bharti, Rajesh Mishra, Animesh Pathak, Jasbir Sandhu, Karobi Gogoi, Amod Singh, Alakananda Bhattacharya, Athokpam Jotinkumar
Online: New York Jennifer Gold, Kristin Mingrone; Delhi Manik Chauhan, Narender Kumar, Rakesh Kumar, Amit Kumar, Amit Verma, Rahul Kumar, Ganesh Sharma, Debojit Borah
Marketing & Publicity: London Liz Statham, Niki Hanmer, Louise Maher, Jess Carter, Vanessa Godden, Anna Paynton, Rachel Sprackett; New York Geoff Colquitt, Megan Kennedy, Katy Ball; Delhi Reem Khokhar
Special Projects Editor: Philippa Hopkins
Manager India: Punita Singh
Series Editor: Mark Ellingham
Reference Director: Andrew Lockett
Publishing Coordinator: Megan McIntyre
Publishing Director: Martin Dunford
Commercial Manager: Gino Magnotta
Managing Director: John Duhigg

Publishing information

This tenth edition published May 2007 by Rough Guides Ltd,

80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL
345 Hudson St, 4th Floor,
New York, NY 10014, USA
14 Local Shopping Centre, Panchsheel Park,
New Delhi 110017, India

Distributed by the Penguin Group

Penguin Books Ltd,
80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL
Penguin Group (USA)
375 Hudson Street, NY 10014, USA
Penguin Group (Australia)
250 Camberwell Road, Camberwell,
Victoria 3124, Australia
Penguin Books Canada Ltd,
10 Alcorn Avenue, Toronto, Ontario,
Canada M4V 1E4
Penguin Group (NZ)
67 Apollo Drive, Mairangi Bay, Auckland 1310,
New Zealand

Help us update

We've gone to a lot of effort to ensure that the tenth edition of The Rough Guide to France is accurate and up to date. However, things change – places get “discovered”, opening hours are notoriously fickle, restaurants and rooms raise prices or lower standards. If you feel we've got it wrong or left something out, we'd like to know, and if you can remember the address, the price, the time, the phone number, so much the better. We'll credit all contributions, and send a copy of the next edition (or any other Rough Guide if you prefer) for the best letters. Everyone who writes

Cover concept by Peter Dyer.

Typeset in Bembo and Helvetica to an original design by Henry Iles.

Printed in Italy at LegoPrint

© Rough Guides 2007

No part of this book may be reproduced in any form without permission from the publisher except for the quotation of brief passages in reviews.

1396pp includes index

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

ISBN: 978-1-84353-797-7

The publishers and authors have done their best to ensure the accuracy and currency of all the information in The Rough Guide to France, however, they can accept no responsibility for any loss, injury, or inconvenience sustained by any traveller as a result of information or advice contained in the guide.

1 3 5 7 9 8 6 4 2

to us and isn't already a subscriber will receive a copy of our full-colour thrice-yearly newsletter. Please mark letters: “Rough Guide France Update” and send to: Rough Guides, 80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL, or Rough Guides, 4th Floor, 345 Hudson St, New York, NY 10014. Or send an email to mail@roughguides.com
Have your questions answered and tell others about your trip at www.roughguides.atinfopop.com

SMALL PRINT

Acknowledgements

Andrew Benson: Many thanks to Anna Trigona for her Mediterranean hospitality in a very un-Mediterranean city; to David Muller for all his help and support; and to all my friends in Alsace and Lorraine, locals and non-locals.

Brian Catlos thanks Elena Aznar, Caroline Berland (OT Montpellier), Lysiane Boissy d'Anglas (CDT Gard), Mélissa Buttelli (OT Toulouse), John Dagenais (UCLA), Myriam Journet-Fillaquier (CDT Aude), Patricia de Pouzilhac (CRT LR), Núria Silleras-Fernández, Valérie Crouineau (CDT Ariège) and Mélissa Buttelli (OT Toulouse).

Belinda Dixon: Huge thanks go to Ed and Lucy at Rough Guides; Amanda Monroe at Raileurope and to every tourist information officer, guesthouse owner, wine-maker and excellent chef (of which there are many) in Burgundy.

Marc Dubin would like to thank: Rob and Rachel Williamson in Barèges, Katie and Peter Lawton in Camon, and Luk and Micheline Peters at Thuès-entre-Valls for their hospitality and assistance; Peter Derbyshire in Luz-St-Sauveur for the usual inside tips; and Carol Coulter at Skycars for travel facilities.

Neville Walker thanks Geoff Hinchley and Kathryn Walker.

Nick Woodford wishes to thank La Maison de France and local tourist offices, in particular Brignoles, as well as Ed Aves for his editing guidance on the Alps and Louise Armstrong for proving that the Med isn't always a calm ocean.

Readers' letters

Thanks to all the readers who have taken the time to write in with comments and suggestions (and apologies if we've inadvertently omitted or misspelt anyone's name):

Alf Anderson, Stephen Bach, Alice Bailey and Stuart Gadsden, Iain Baird, Philip Barstow, Tony Bellworthy, Fiona Bennett, Dr Berger, Jenny Blackie, Graham Block, Caroline Bowden, Don Broadley, Brendan and Marc, Diana Brooke, Neville Browne, Clare and Gerald Chapman, Tim Claridge, Judith Cole and Nick Church, Stuart Connell, Olivier Couraud, Andrew Davidson, Peter Day, Thierry Desaga, Hans Deseure, Noemie and Cedric Dewavrin, John Fletcher, Margaret Gallery, Amanda Garrett and Holly Blue, Martin Gilges and Anja Plemper, Andrew Gillett, Jen Gold, Bill Goldman, Jenny Green, Roger Gregory, Barbara Guyon, Paul Hagman, Anne Hansen, Janie and Patrick Hapur, Sam Hardie, Dr Val Harris, Lisa Hartmann, P.L. Herlevi, Alan Hickey, Peter Hill, Imogen Hobbs, Annette Hope, Edo Huber, Cecile Hubert, Malcolm James, Ken Jones, Susan Kagan, Panu Kalmi, Rory Kelleher, Elizabeth, Malcolm and Rosina Lanyon, Katie Lawton, John

and Carole LeBrun, Marcus Loxton, Jonas Ludvigsson, Martin, Sue Martin, B. Marzen, John McCann, John Medforth, Peter Meijer, Alana Michael, Richard Mills, Lisa Muran, Martyn Nappleby, Anthony Nichols and Yves Jatteau, James Nitram, Timothy Nodder, Sarah Ottaway, Sally Pabst, David Pack, Kathy Parker, Charlie & Doug Pearman, Nik Petrovic, Philip Pool, Gwerfyl Price, Rupert Price, Steve and Gill Price, Mark Radnan, Steve Rock, Kevin Rogers, Eric and Sally Rowland, James Seidler, Rebecca Shtasel and Andy Player, Ben Siegel, Trevor Smith, Keith Spittlehouse, Philip Stanley and Baerbel Menke, Nicola Roberts, Yvonne Rogers, Tim Salmon, Veronica Simpson, Jan Smith, Jonathon Snicker, Anthony Steele, Vivienne Stott, J. Sweeney, Paul and Anne Taylor, Esther Thompson, Peter Thompson, Nancy Trasande, Mike Turner, Catherine Van de Wiele, Saija Vuola and Suvu Vainiomäki, Pam Walker, J. Wells, Matt Wiles, Tori Woodward, Chris Woollacott, Andrew Young.

Photo credits

All photos © Rough Guides except the following:

Introduction

- p.1 Spectators at the Tour de France © Stefano Rellandini/Reuters
- p.8 St-Cirq Lapopie, Lot valley © David Noton/Taxi/Getty Images
- p.10 Camargue horses © J.P. De Manne/Robert Harding
- p.11 Hôtel de Ville, Carentan © Edward Aves
- p.12 View from Roquebrune towards Nice © DK Images

Things not to miss

- 01 Harvesting grapes, Bordeaux © Peter Horree/Alamy
- 03 Fireworks, Bastille Day, Paris © Peter Turnley/Corbis
- 05 Pont d'Avignon and Palais des Papes © John Miller/Robert Harding
- 07 Amiens cathedral © DK Images
- 08 Final stage of the Tour de France, Paris © Reuters
- 10 The Concert of Angels from the Issenheim Altarpiece © Musée d'Unterlinden, Colmar/Giraudon/Bridgeman Art Library
- 13 Château de Chambord © James McConnachie
- 15 The GR20, Corsica © David Abram
- 16 Boats in the Calanque d'En Vau, near Cassis © Dylan Reisenberger
- 18 War cemetery at Ryes © Edward Aves
- 19 Fontenay Abbey © Roger Day/Alamy
- 20 Bayeux tapestry detail: King Harold II at sea © Gianni Dagli Orti/Corbis
- 21 Rock-climbing, Puy-de-Dôme © Agence Images/Alamy
- 22 Gordes © DK Images
- 23 Monpazier © Patrick Ward/Alamy
- 25 Café, Aix-en-Provence © Ian Dagnall/Alamy
- 26 Dom Perignon statue at Moët & Chandon champagne maison © Jack Sullivan/Alamy
- 27 Strasbourg cathedral © Geoff Renner/Robert Harding
- 28 Château de Peyrepertuse © Agence Images/Alamy
- 30 Skiing in the Alps © Agence Images/Alamy
- 31 Pont d'Arc © John Mottershaw/Alamy
- 32 Palais de l'Île, Annecy © John Miller/Robert Harding

Festive France colour section

- Fireworks, Menton © Sergio Pitamitz/Robert Harding
- Anna Torres performs at the Fête de la Musique, Paris © Amel Pain/Reuters/Corbis
- Scottish dancers at the Inter-Celtic Festival, Lorient © Valery Hache/AFP/Getty Images
- Camargue horse riders at the gypsy gathering, Les Stes-Maries-de-la-Mer © Cristian Baitg Reportage/Alamy
- Vieilles Charrues music festival, Carhaix © Andre Durand/AFP/Getty Images
- Marciazz Jazz Festival © Tor Eigeland/Alamy
- Dancers perform outside the Palais des Papes, Avignon © AP Photo/Claude Paris/EMPICS
- Eva Herzigova at the 59th Cannes Film Festival © Eric Gaillard/Reuters

Walking In France colour section

- Climbing Mont Blanc, Alps © Nick Woodford
- l'be in the Parc National de la Vanoise © Cyril Ruoso/JH Editorial/Minden Pictures/FLPA
- Gentians in the Parc Naturel de Vercors © Richard Becker/FLPA
- Path to the Cirque de Gavarnie © Ian Cumming/Axiom
- Cattle in the Monts du Cantal, Auvergne © Cephas Picture Library/Alamy
- Stone house in a lavender field, Bonnieux, Provence © Gallo/Getty Images
- Climbing down from Monte Cinto, Corsica © Ian Cumming/Axiom

Black and whites

- p.202 Statue of Louis XVI, Basilique St-Denis © DK Images
- p.212 Hall of Mirrors, Versailles © DK Images
- p.218 Lutyens' Memorial to the Missing, Thiepval © DK Images
- p.234 Nausicaá, Boulogne © Robert Haines/Alamy
- p.240 Boat near St-Valery-sur-Somme © Images of France
- p.249 Grand'Place, Lille © Axiom
- p.260 Vimy Ridge © Peter Titmuss/Alamy
- p.282 Troyes © DK Images
- p.294 Hôtel de Ville, Nancy © Robert Harding/Alamy
- p.306 Bierstub, Strasbourg © Stockfolio/Alamy

SMALL PRINT

Selected images from our guidebooks are available for licensing from:

ROUGHGUIDESPICTURES.COM

- p.314 Barbary macaque, La Montagne des Singes, Kintzheim © Morales/Superstock
- p.320 Bugatti at Schlumpf Automobile National Museum, Mulhouse © Mark Zylber/Alamy
- p.329 The river Moselle at Metz © Robert Harding/Corbis
- p.490 Château du Plessis-Bourré © James McConnachie
- p.505 Along the river Loire at Gien © James McConnachie
- p.526 Cyclists, Forêt de Chambord © James McConnachie
- p.538 Formal gardens at Villandry © J.P. De Mann © Robert Harding
- p.546 Saumur weekly market © Michael Juno/Alamy
- p.562 Fontenay Abbey © Malcolm Park/Alamy
- p.578 Castle and the Pont Joly, Semur-en-Auxois © Simon Batley/Alamy
- p.597 Church of Notre-Dame from rue de la Musette, Dijon © Hemis/Alamy
- p.616 River Sèvres near Coulon © Michael Busselle/Robert Harding
- p.633 Vieux port, La Rochelle © Ruth Tomlinson/Robert Harding
- p.651 Cognac distillery cellar © Peter Horree/Alamy
- p.664 Place de Parlement, Bordeaux © Ray Roberts/Images of France
- p.708 River Dordogne at Domme © Hugh Clancy
- p.756 Prehistoric cave art at Niaux © Jean-Marc Charles/Sygma/Corbis
- p.817 Mirepoix © Michael Busselle/Robert Harding
- p.900 Pont d'Arc © Images of France
- p.909 Puy de Dôme © Brian Harris/Alamy
- p.931 Conques © DK Images
- p.935 Grand Viaduc du Millau © Photolibary.com
- p.950 Church of St-Michel, Le Puy-en-Velay © Travel Library/Robert Harding
- p.958 View from Aiguille du Midi towards Grand Jorasses and Aiguille du Géant © Johanna Huber/4 Corners
- p.970 Vineyards near Lons-le-Saunier © Michael Busselle/Robert Harding
- p.989 Footbridge over the Thiou, Annecy © Ruth Tomlinson/Robert Harding
- p.1000 Cross-country skiing, Val d'Isère © Nick Woodford
- p.1006 Place Grenette, Grenoble © Jon Arnold Images/Alamy
- p.1024 Flamingos, La Camargue © DK Images
- p.1041 Bouchon, rue Mercière, Lyon © Hemis/Alamy
- p.1080 Bullfight, Arles © mediacolor's/Alamy
- p.1095 Market produce, Aix © DK Images
- p.1120 Port-Cros © DK Images
- p.1133 Le Corbusier's Unité d'Habitation, Marseille © Jack Hobhouse/Alamy
- p.1149 Collobrières © DK Images
- p.1280 Charles de Gaulle and crowd at Bayeux, 14 June 1944 © Bettmann/Corbis
- p.1289 Riot police near Notre-Dame cathedral after student demonstrations against the CPE youth jobs law, Paris, April 2006 © Charles Platiau/Reuters
- p.1298 Edgar Degas, L'Absinthe (c.1875–76; oil on canvas) © Musée d'Orsay, Paris, France/Giraudon/Bridgeman Art Library
- p.1309 Grande Arche de la Défense, Paris © DK Images
- p.1324 Still from De Battre Mon Coeur S'est Arrêté ("The Beat That My Heart Skipped") © Why Not Productions/Ronald Grant Archive
- p.1330 Portrait of Marcel Proust © Private Collection/Archives Charmet/Bridgeman Art Library

Index

Map entries are in colour.

A

Abbeville.....240
Abense-de-Haut.....779
Abri du Cap Blanc.....702
accommodation45–50
addresses in France.....44 adventure sports63
Agde.....858
Agen.....752
Agincourt, battle of.....238,
1271
Aigues-Mortes.....856
Aiguille du Midi.....986
Aiguilles Rouges.....987
Aiguines.....1106
Ailefroide.....1018
Ainhua.....772
airlines.....32
Aix-en-Provence.....22,
1094–1101
Aix-en-Provence.....
1096–1097
Aix, île d'.....642
Aix-les-Bains.....994
Ajaccio.....1235–1242
Ajaccio.....1236
Alain-Fournier.....527
Albert.....262
Albi.....888–891
Albi.....889
Albinhac.....920
Alençon.....400
Aléria.....1257
Alès.....946
Alésia.....576
Alésia, battle of.....1268
Alet-les-Bains.....819
Algeria ...1281, 1282, 1285
Alise-Ste-Reine.....576
Alliat.....811
Alps, the.....975–1022
Alps, the.....960
Alsace.....298–322
Alsace.....296–297
Alsatian language.....302
Ambert.....954
Amboise.....534–537
Amiens.....16, 241–244
Amiens.....242
Annéville.....331
ancien régime...1275, 1276
Angers 549–554

Angers.....550
Anglet.....767
Angoulême.....653–656
Angoulême.....654
Anecy.....24,
988–990, Festive France
colour section
Anecy.....988
Antibes.....1171–1175
Antibes.....1172
Anzy-le-Duc.....613
Apt.....1093
Aquitaine.....657–677
Aquitaine.....618
Arbois.....971
Arc valley.....1001–1003
Arcachon.....675
Arçais.....629
architecture...1305–1312,
1354
Ardenes, the.....289–291
Argelès.....829
Argentière-Les Grand
Montets.....987
Argentières.....1016
Arrière valley.....808–812,
Walking in France colour
section
Arles.....1077–1083
Arles.....1078
Arles-sur-Tech.....832
Armagnac.....894
Arman.....1302
Arnac-Pompadour.....726
Arras.....258
Arrens-Marsous.....796
Arromanches.....377
art.....1291–1304
Arudy.....794
Arvioux.....1019
Ascaïn.....772
Aspe valley.....789–794
Aste-Béon.....794
ATMs.....76
au pair work.....66
Aubenas.....947
Aubeterre-sur-Dronne...690
Aubrac, the.....924–927
Aubusson.....721
Auch.....894
Aucun.....797
Aude gorges.....820
Aude valley.....818
Audierne.....453

Audinghen.....232
Auguste, Philippe.....1270
Augustus, Caesar.....1268
Aulnay.....651
Aulus-les-Bains.....812
Aumont-Aubrac.....925
Aups.....1103
Aurillac...919–921, Festive
France colour section
Auron.....1114
Autoire.....731
Autun.....587–590
Autun.....588
Auvers-Sur-Oise.....204
Auxerre.....568–570
Auxerre.....568
avalanches.....998
Avallon.....580–582
Avallon.....581
Aven Armand.....938
Aven Marzal.....948
Aven Orgnac.....948
Aveyron, River...744–747
Avèze.....945
Avignon.....16,
1060–1070, Festive
France colour section
Avignon.....1062–1063
Avoriaz.....978
Avranches.....389
Axat.....820
Ax-les-Thermes.....811
Azay-le-Rideau.....539
Azincourt.....238

B

Bages.....868
Bagnères-de-Bigorre...804
Bagnoles-de-l'Orne.....401
Baie des Anges.....1175
Baie des Trépassés.....451
Baker, Josephine.....706
Balagne, the...1221–1228
Balladur, Edouard.....1284
Balleroy.....381
Bandoil.....1139
Banyuls-sur-Mer.....830
Barbazan.....806
Barbie, Klaus.....1036
Barbizon.....205, 1296
Barcelonnette.....1113

- Barèges 802
 Barfleur 385
 Barnenez, Cairn du 436
 Baroque architecture.. 1307
 Barr 312
Bastia 1207–1213
Bastia 1208
 bastides 21, 695, 1306
 Bastille Day.. 15, 200, Festive France colour section Bastille, the storming of 1275
 Batz, Île de 441
 Baume Bonne 1108
 Bavella 1256
Bayeux... 20, 375, 378–381
Bayeux 378
Bayonne 760–764
Bayonne 761
 Bazas 674
 Bazile, Bernard 1304
 Béarn des Gaves 785
 Beau Rivage 463
 Beaugency 501
 Beaujolais, the 611
 Beaulieu 1191
 Beaulieu-les-Loches 518
 Beaulieu-sur-Dordogne.. 712
 Beaumes-de-Venise... 1058
 Beaumont-Hamel 263
 Beaumont-le-Roger 394
Beaune 602–604
Beaune 602
 Beauvais 244
 Becket, Thomas ... 566, 571
 bed and breakfast 47
 Bédarieux 869
 Bédailhac 811
 Bedoin 1058
 Bedous 791
 Béhérobie 777
 Belfort 962
 Belle-Île (Brittany) 470
 Belvès 706
 Benedictine Distillery... 348
 Bénodet 458
 Bérégovoy, Pierre 1284
Bergerac 692–694
 Bergerac, Cyrano de ... 693
 Bergheim 315
 Bernard, Émile 1299
Besançon 965–967
 Bessans 1001
 Besse 918
 Besson, Luc 1314
 Bête du Gévaudan, the.. 927
 Beuvron-en-Auge 396
 Beynac-et-Cazenac..... 707
Béziers 863–865
Biarritz 764–767
Biarritz 765
 Bibracte 590
 Biguglia, Étang de 1214
 Bidarray 774
 Binic 431
 Biot 1175
 Biriadou 771
 Biron 696
 bistros... Cafés, bistros and brasseries colour section
 Blais, Jean-Charles ... 1303
 Blaye 670
 Bligny 281
Blois 519–522
Blois 520
 Blum, Léon 1279
 BMPT 1303
Bocage, the 402–405
 Bofill, Ricardo 1312
 Boisrond, François ... 1303
 Boltanski, Christian ... 1303
Bonifacio 1248–1253
Bonifacio 1250–1251
 Bonnard, Pierre 1300
 Bonneval-sur-Arc..... 1001
books 1328–1337, 1341
 Borce 793
Bordeaux 18, 657–666
Bordeaux 658–659
Bordeaux wine region 667–675
 Bories, Village des..... 1091
 Bormes-les-Mimosas... 1146
 Boschaud, abbaye de.. 691
 Botta, Mario 1311
 Boucher, François 1294
 Boudin, Eugène 1297
 Boule d'Amont 833
 boules 61
Boulogne-sur-Mer 232–235
Boulogne-sur-Mer 233
 Bourdeilles 689
 Bourg-Charente 653
 Bourg-en-Bresse 609
 Bourgeois, Louise..... 1304
Bourges 508–512
 Bourg-St-Maurice..... 997
 Bourré 515
 Boyardville 645
 Bracieux 526
 Brancusi 1302
 Brantôme 689
 Braque, Georges 1301
 brasseries Cafés, bistros and brasseries colour section
 Breagançon 1146
 Bréhat, Île de 432
Brest 445–447
 Bretenoux 712
 Breton language 412
 Brévent 987
 Briançon 1016
 Briare 507
 Briegogan-Plage 442
 Brionne 394
 Brissac-Quincé 555
Brittany 407–487
Brittany 410
 Brive-la-Gaillarde..... 724
 Brommat 920
 Brou 608
 Brouage 643
 Bruniquel 747
 Bugeat 723
 bullfighting... 61, 845, 1080
 Buñuel, Luis 1313
 Buren, Daniel 1303
Burgundy 561–614
Burgundy 564
 buses to France 31, 34
 buses within France 38
 Bustamante,
 Jean-Marc 1303

C

- Cabardès, the 878
 Cabasson 1146
 Cabourg 369
 Cabrerets 744
 Cadouin, abbaye de... 705
Caen 370–374
Caen 370
 Caesar, Julius 576, 1268
 cafés 19,
 Cafés, bistros and brasseries colour section
 Cagnac-les-Mines 891
 Cagnes 1175
Cahors 733–736
Cahors 734
Calais 226–229
Calais 226
 Calanches, the.. 1231, 1232
 calanques, the ... 19, 1136,
 Walking in France colour section
 Calle, Sophie 1304
Calvi 1223–1228
Calvi 1224
 Calvin, John 271
 Camaret 449
Camargue, the.. 1083–1089

- Camargue, the... 1084–1085
 Cambo-les-Bains 772
 Cambous 860
 Cambrai 256
 Camembert 397
 Camisards, the 859
 Camon 817
 Campagne 701
 Campan 804 camping 49
 Campomoro 1245
 canal trips 43
Canal de
Bourgogne 573–579
 Canal du Midi 15, 874
 Cancale 425
 Candes-St-Martin 549
 Canet-Plage 828
 Caninac 879
Cannes 1164–1168,
Festive France colour
 section
Cannes 1164–1165
 canoeing 64, 709, 737
Cap Corse 1214–1217
 Cap d'Agde 858
 Cap d'Antibes 1173
 Cap Ferret 676
 Capet, Hugues 1269 car rental 42
 carbon offsetting 29
Carcassonne.. 24, 872–876
Carcassonne: cité 873
Carcassonne: ville
basse 872
 Cardaillac 742
 Carennac 712
 Cargèse 1233
 Carhaix 462,
Festive France colour
 section
 Carlat 920
Carnac 16, 472–475
Carnac 472
 Carolingian dynasty... 1269
 Caron, Antoine 1292
 Carpentras 1059
 Carracci, Annibale 1293
 Carrouges 401
 Cars 723
 Carsac 699
 Casals, Pau (Pablo) 833
 Cascades du Hérisson.. 973
 Casernes 779
 Casse Déserte 1019
 Cassel 225
 Cassis 1136, Walking in
France colour section
 Casteddu d'Araggiu ... 1255
 Castellane 1108
 Castelnaudary 876
 Castres 892
 Cateraggio 1257
 Cateau-Cambrésis, Treaty of 1271
Cathar castles, the 22,
 821–824
 Cathars 815, 874
 Caudebec-en-Caux ... 354
 Caurel 463
 Cauria 1247
 Causse de Gramat 731
 Causse du Larzac 943
 Cauterets... 797, Walking in
France colour section
cave art, prehistoric ... 24, 701–703, 744, 811, 948 caves, troglodyte (Loire valley) 543, 545, 547
 caving 63
 Cazals 732
 Céle, River 743
 cellphones 78
 Centuri-Port 1217
 Cerdagne, the 836
 Céret 831
 Cerisy 381
 César 1302
 Cette-Eygun 793
Cévennes, Parc National
des .. 939–943, Walking in
France colour section
 Cézanne, Paul .. 1099, 1101,
 1299
 Chablais, the 977
 Chablis 571
 Châlons-en-
 Champagne Festive
France colour section
 Chalon-sur-Saône 604
 Châlus 719
Chambéry 992–994
 Chambord 18
 chambres d'hôtes 47
Chamonix 983–986,
Walking in France colour
 section
Chamonix 984
Champagne 271–288
Champagne 220–221
 champagne... 22, 273, 276, 279
 Champagnole 972
 Champagne, Philippe
 de 1293
 Channel Tunnel.. 29, 30, 34, 231
 Chantilly 206
 Chardin, Jean-Baptiste-
 Siméon 1294
Charente, the 648–657
Charente, the 618
 Charlemagne 1269
 Charles I 523
 Charles VII ... 359, 504, 508, 543
 Charles VIII 538
 Charles X 1276
 Charleville-Mézières ... 289
 Charollais, the 613
 Charolles 613
 Charter of 1814, the... 1276
Chartres 213–215
Chartres 214
 Chartreuses 1011
 Chassenon 719
 Chassériau, Théodore.. 1295
 Chassezac, River 948
 chateaux
 Abbadie, d' 770
 Agullar, d' 824
 Alleuze, d' 924
 Ancy-le-Franc, d' 574
 Beaugard 524
 Bonaguil 737
 Brézac 548
 Brissac 555
 Bussy-Rabutin 577
 Castelnau-Bretenoux 712
 Castelnau 707
 Châlus 720
 Chambord 18, 525
 Chaumont 523
 Chenonceau 512
 Chaverny 523
 Clos-de-Vougeot 604
 Fayrac 707
 Ferté-St-Aubin 502
 Fougères 524
 Hautefort 692
 If, d' 1132
 Joux 967
 Langeais 538
 Marqueyssac 707
 Meung 501
 Monbazillac 694
 Monbrun 719
 Montaigne 694
 Montrottier 992
 Moulin 527
 Peyrepertuse 823
 Plessis-Bourré 555
 Puyguilhem 691
 Quéribus 823
 Queyras 1020
 Roche-Jagu 434
 Serrant 555
 Tanlay 575
 Ussé, d' 540
 Usson, d' 820
 Valençay 516
 Villandry 537

- châteaux, visiting.. 500, 530
 Château-Chinon 586
 Châteaulin 462
 Châteauneuf-du-Pape .. 1055
 Château-Ville-Vieille... 1020 châteaux of the Loire .. 513
 Châtel-Guyon 911
 Châtillon 1011
 Châtillon-sur-Sienne..... 575
 Chatou, Île de 204
 Chaumont..... 286
 Chauvet-Pont d'Arc.... 948
 Chauvigny..... 624
 Chavannes, Puvis du.. 1299
 cheese 17, 52, 224, 341,
 397, 494, 563, 579, 760,
 903, 917, 961, 978, 1028,
 1204
 Chemin de Fer de la
 Provence..... 1109, 1179
 Chemin de la Mûture.... 793
 Chemin de
 Saint-Jacques .. 775, 785,
Walking in France colour
 section
 Cher, the 512–519
Cherbourg 382–385
Cherbourg..... 382
 children, travelling with... 69
Chinon 541–544
Chinon..... 542
Chirac, Jacques.. 89, 124,
 130, 148, 212, 723, 1283,
 1285–1290
 Ciboure 769
cinema 1313–1327,
Festive France colour
 section
 Ciran 503
 Circuit de Souvenir, the.. 263
 Cirque de Gavarnie 801
 Cirque de Navacelles .. 944
 Cirque de Troumouze .. 802
 Clairière de l'Armistice .. 270
 Clairvaux-les-Lacs..... 973
 Clamecy 584
 Claudius, Emperor..... 1268
 Clearstream scandal,
 the..... 1290
 Clécy 399
 Clermont-l'Hérault 861
Clermont-
Ferrand 904–908
Clermont-Ferrand..... 905 climate 12
 climate change 29, 1287
 climbing 62, 987
 Closky, Claude 1304
 Clos-Lucé..... 536
 Clouet, François 1292
 Clouet, Jean 1292
 Clovis the Frank 1269
 Cluny 610
 Cocteau, Jean .. 1198, 1313
 Cognac 651, Festive
France colour section
 Cogolin 1150
 Col d'Aubisque..... 796
 Col d'Izoard 1019
 Col de l'Iseran 1001
 Col de la Faucille..... 975
 Col de Vars 1020
 Col du Galibier 1014
 Col du Lautaret..... 1014
 Col du Midi..... 986
 Col du Tourmalet..... 803
 Colbert, Cardinal 1272,
 1273
 Colleville-sur-Mer 375
 Collioure 829
 Collobrières 1148
 Collonges-la-Rouge 726
Colmar..... 316–318
Colmar..... 316
 Colombey-les-Deux-
 Églises 287
 colonial wars 1281
 Combas, Robert 1303
 Combe du Queyras 1020
Commings, the .. 804–808
 Commune, the..... 1278
 Communism 1279
Compiègne 288–271
 Comus 816
Concarneau..... 459–461
Concarneau 459
 conceptual art 1303
 Conches-en-Ouche..... 394
 Condom 896
 Confolens 657
Conques 929–932
 consulates 73
 contraception 68
 Cordes..... 892
Corniche des
Maures..... 1146–1148
Corniches, the (Côte d'Azur)..... 1189–1191
Corniches, the (Côte
d'Azur)..... 1190
 Corot, Jean-Baptiste-
 Camille..... 1296
 corridas 1080
Corsica 1201–1264
Corsica..... 1205
Corte..... 1258–1261
Corte 1258
 Cosquer Cave 1136
 costs 70
Côte Basque, the.. 760–771
Côte d'Albâtre..... 346–350
Côte d'Argent..... 675–677
Côte d'Azur,
the 1119–1200
Côte d'Azur..... 1122
 Côte d'Émeraude 430
 Côte d'Opale 231
Côte d'Or..... 601–604
 Côte de Goëlo 431
Côte de Granit
Rose .. 433–435, Walking in
France colour section
Côte Vermeille,
the 829–831
Cotentin Peninsula,
the 381–389
 Cotignac 1103
 Coucy-le-Château-
 Auffrique 267
 Coulon 628
 Courbet, Gustave..... 968, 1296
 Courceau 577
 Cour-Cheverny 524 courses camarguaises..... 1080 courses, language 1341
 Cousteau, Jacques 1314
 Coutances 387
 CPE riots 1290
 Crécy 238, 1270
 credit cards 76
 Crémieu 1044
 Cresson, Édith..... 1284
 Crêt de Châtillon 992
 Crête d'Iparla..... Walking in
France colour section
 Créteil Festive France
 colour section
 Crèvecœur-en-Auge 396
 crime 70
Crozon peninsula,
the 447–449
Crozon peninsula, the.. 447
 Cubism 1301
 Cucugnan 823
 Cupservies..... 879
 currency exchange 76
 Cuzals 743
 cycling 43, 59, 62, 495, 963, 991

D

Dada.....1301
 Dalí, Salvador.....1301
 Dambach-la-Ville.....314
 Daoulas.....448
 Daubigny,
 Charles-François.....1296
 Daumier, Honoré.....1295
 David, Jacques-Louis...1294
 David-Neel, Alexandra..1109
D-Day beaches..374–378,
 386
D-Day beaches.....374
 Deauville.....368
 debit cards.....76
 Degas, Edgar.....1298
 Delacroix, Eugène.....1295
 Delanoë, Bertrand.....1286
 Delaunay, Robert.....1301
 Denezé-sous-Doué.....548
Dentelles, the..1058–1060
 Depression, the.....1279
 Derain, André.....1300
 Désert des Agriates....1220
 Desgrandchamps,
 Marc.....1304
 Dezeuze, Daniel.....1303
 Die.....1010
Dieppe.....342–346
Dieppe.....343
 Dignes-les-Bains.....1109
Dijon.....593–600
Dijon.....594–595
Dinan.....425–428
Dinan.....426
 Dinard.....429
 Diocletian.....1268
 disabled travellers.....71
 discount cards.....76
Disneyland Paris..207–209
 Dives.....369
 Dol-de-Bretagne.....419
 Dole.....968
 Domfront.....402
 Domme.....709
Dordogne, the.....683–713
Dordogne, Limousin and the Lot.....682
 Dorres.....837
 Douai.....254
 Douarnenez.....450
 Douaumont.....335
 Doubs, River.....964
 Doucier.....973
 Doussard.....991
 Drauguignan.....1102
 Dreyfus, Alfred....320, 1278

drink.....10, 14, 22, 52–54,
 224, 273, 276, 279, 298,
 311, 348, 411, 494, 563,
 601, 648, 651, 667, 668,
 894, 953, 961, 1011,
 1121, *Cafés, bistros and
 brasseries* colour section driving in France....39–43, 1345 driving to France.....30
Dronne valley.....688–691 drugs.....71
 Dubuffet, Jean.....1302
 Duchamp, Marcel.....1301
 Duilhac.....823
 Duingt.....991
 Dumas, Alexandre.....1132
 Dune du Pyla.....676
Dunkerque.....222–224

E

Eaux-Bonnes.....796
 Eaux-Chaudes.....794
 Ecole de Paris, the.....1300
 Ecomsée de
 Marquèze.....677
 Écrins, Parc National
 des.....1016, *Walking in
 France* colour section
 Edict of Nantes....485, 655,
 1272
 Edward III, King.....1270
 Egletons.....723
 Égliseneuve-
 d'Entraigues.....918
 Eleanor of Aquitaine...402,
 501, 548, 632, 711, 1270
 electricity.....72
 Elne.....829
 embassies.....73
 Embrun.....1019
 emergency phone numbers.....71
 Entraygues.....933
 Entrecasteaux.....1103
 Entre-Deux-Mers.....672
 entry requirements.....72
 Eperlecques.....230
Épernay.....22, 279–281
 Époisses.....578
 Erbalunga.....1215
 Ermitage de
 St-Antoine.....824
 Ernst, Max.....1301
 Erquy.....430
 Escalles.....231

Escolives-Ste-Camille..573
 Escouloubre-les-Bains..820
 Espace Killy.....999
 Espagnac-Ste-Eulalie...743
 Espalion.....933
 Espelette.....773
 Estaing.....933
 Estérençuby.....776
 Étapes.....237
 etiquette.....67,
*Cafés, bistros and
 brasseries* colour section
 Étretat.....349
 Etsaut.....793
 Eurostar.....29, 246
 Eurotunnel.....30, 34, 231
 Évian.....976
 Évisa.....1233
 Évreux.....394
 Eymoutiers.....724
 Eze.....1191

F

Fabius, Laurent.....1283
 Fabre, Jean-Henri.....1055
 Falaise.....398
Faucigny, the.....979–983
Faucigny, the.....979
 Fauvism.....1300
 Favières.....239
 feast days...Festive France
 colour section
 Fécamp.....348
 Fenioux.....650
 fermes auberges.....*Cafés,
 bistros and brasseries*
 colour section
 Fermont, Fort de.....334 ferries from the UK and Ireland.....31, 34
 ferries within France.....39 festivals.....56–58, *Festive
 France* colour section
 Fifth Republic, the.....1281
Figeac...740–742, *Walking
 in France* colour section
 Figuration Libre movement.....1303
 Filitosa.....1244
film.....1313–1327, *Festive
 France* colour section
 Finiels.....941
Finistère.....436–461
 fishing.....64
 Flaine.....980
 Flaran.....897

- Flégère.....987
 Fleury 335
 Fleury, Cardinal..... 1274
 flights
 to France from Australia, New Zealand and South Africa 28 to France from the UK and Ireland 27 to France from the US and Canada 28 within France 39
 Florac.....942
 Foissac 742
 Foix.....809
 Fondation Maeght 1177
 Fontainebleau 211
 Fontainebleau, School of.....1292
 Fontaine-de-Vaucluse.. 1090
 Fontenay abbaye de ... 19, 576
 Fontevraud, abbaye de.. 548
 Fontfroide 868
 Fontpédrouse 836
 Font-Romeu 837
food 10, 17, 50–52, 1346–1353, Cafés, bistros and brasseries colour section in Alsace 298
 in Brittany 411
 in Burgundy 563
 in Champagne 224
 in Corsica 1204
 in French Flanders 224
 in Normandy 341
 in Périgord 684
 in Provence 1028
 in the Alps and Jura 961 in the Basque country 760
 in the Côte d'Azur 1121 in the Loire valley 494 in the Massif Central 903 in the Rhône valley 1028 football 59
 Forêt d'Aitone 1233
 Forêt d'Iraty 778
 Forêt de Chinon 544
 Forêt de Compiègne 270
 Forêt de la Joux 972
 Forêt de Paimpont 416
 Forêt des Écrivains-Combattants..... 871
 Foster, Sir Norman 846, 935, 1108, 1312
 Foucault, Léon 136
 Fouesnant 459
 Fougax-et-Barrineuf 816
 Fougères 417
 Fouquet, Jean 1291
 Fouras 642
 Fourth Republic, the... 1280
 Fragonard, Jean-Honoré..... 1294
 Fraïsse-sur-Agout..... 871
 François I.... 512, 514, 521, 536
 Franco-Prussian war, the..... 1277
 Franks, the..... 1269
Fréjus 1159–1161
French language 1339–1353
 French Revolution ..88, 128, 1274
 Frondes, the 1273
 Front Populaire, the... 1279
 Fuissé 609
 Futurism 1301
 Futuroscope 623, 624
- G
- Gabas 795
 Gance, Abel..... 1313
 Ganges 860
 Garabit, Viaduc de..... 924
 Garnier, Charles..... 1310
 Gassin 1157
 Gaudin, Jean-Claude .. 1125
 Gauvain, Paul..... 1299
 Gaul, ancient 1267
Gaulle, General Charles de .. 148, 249, 1279–1282
Gavarnie 799–801
 Gave de Pau..... 797
 Gavrinis 479
 gay travellers 73
 Gèdre..... 799
 general strike (1968)... 1282
 Gênets 389
 Gérard, Baron..... 1295
 Géricault, Théodore... 1295
 Germigny-des-Près 503
Gers 893–897
 Gévaudan, Parc Zoologique du..... 927
 Giacometti 1302
 Gien 505
 Gigondas..... 1058
 Gimel 728
 Gincla 823
 Girolata..... 1228
 Girondins, the..... 1275
 Giscard d'Estaing, Valéry..... 1283
 gîtes 48
 gîtes d'étape 49
 Giverny 364
 Glanum 1075
 global warming 29
 glossary 1354
 Godard, Jean-Luc 1314
 golf 64
Golfe de Morbihan 479–481
Golfe de Morbihan 479
 Golfe de Porto-Vecchio 1255–1256
Golfe de Valinco 1242–1246
 Golinhac 933
 Gollet, Katell (Katherine the Damned) 438
 Gonzalez-Foerster, Dominique 1304
 Gordes..... 20, 1090
 Gorges d'Ehujarré 780
 Gorges d'Holzarte 779
 Gorges de Carança 836
 Gorges de Galamus 824
 Gorges de Kakuetta 779
 Gorges de l'Ardèche 23, 947
 Gorges de l'Infernet... 1013
 Gorges de la Fou..... 832
 Gorges de la Frau..... 816
 Gorges de la Restonica..... 1262
 Gorges de Madale..... 870
 Gorges de Spelunca.. 1232, Walking in France colour section
 Gorges du Fier..... 992
 Gorges du Tarn..... 938
 Gorges du Tavignano .. 1262
Gorges du Verdon.... 17, 1104–1107, Walking in France colour section
Gorges du Verdon 1105
 Gothic architecture..... 1306
 Gouffre de Padirac 730
 Gourdon 731
 Gourette 796
 Goya, Francisco 892
 GR20 .. 18, 1226, Walking in France colour section
 Grace of Monaco, Princess 1189, 1194, 1195
 Grand Viaduc du Millau.. 935
 Grand-Vabre 932
 Granges d'Astau 807
 Granville..... 388
Grasse 1169–1171
Grenoble..... 1003–1009

Grenoble 1003
 Greuze, Jean-Baptiste .. 1294
 Gréville-Hague..... 387
 Grimaud..... 1150
 Gris, Juan 1301
 Gros, Jean-Antoine 1295
 Grotte de Bédailhac 811
 Grotte de Clamouse..... 861
 Grotte de Dargilan 939
 Grotte de Font-de-Gaume..... 701
 Grotte de la Luire 1010
 Grotte de Lascaux.. 24, 704
 Grotte de Niaux..... 811
 Grotte de Notre Dame du Lac..... 992
 Grotte de Pech-Merle... 743
 Grotte de Villars 691
 Grotte des Combarelles.. 702
 Grotte des Demoiselles .. 860
 Grotte du Grand Roc... 703
 Grottes de Bétharram... 785
 Grottes de Choranche..... 1010
 Grottes de Cognac..... 732
 Grottes de Gargas..... 806
 Groupe de recherche d'art visuel (GRAV)..... 1303
 Gruissan 869
 Guérande 481
 Guesclin, Bertrand du .. 415, 427 guidebooks..... 1336
 Guillestre 1020
 Guimard, Hector..... 1310
 Guimiliau 438
 Guise family, the..... 1271
 Guizot 1277

H

Haig, Sir Douglas 262
 Haussmann, Baron 89, 1308
Haute Soule..... 777–780
 Hautecombe, abbaye d'..... 995
 Hauterives 1048
Haut Languedoc, Parc Naturel Régional du 869–872 Haut-Var villages 1102 health 73
 Héas 802
 Heliopolis (Île du Levant)..... 1145
 Hendaye 770
 Hennessy Cognac

Company..... 652
 Henri II 512, 536
 Henri III 521
 Henri of Navarre (Henri IV) 1271
 Henry II, King..... 711, 1270
 Henry V, King..... 1271
 Henry, Young King.. 711, 729
 Hergé 524
 Hesdin 238
 hiking see walking history..... 1267–1290
 Hoëdic 471
 Holy Roman Empire ... 1269
Honfleur 365–368
 Honto 775
 horse riding 63
 hostels 48
 hotels 45
 Houat 471
 Houlgate 369
 Huelgoat 462
 Hugo, Victor 129
 Huguenots..... 1271, 1273
 Hunawühr 315
 Hundred Years War 496, 1270
 Huyghe, Pierre..... 1304
 Hybert, Fabrice..... 1304
Hyères..... 1140–1142
Hyères, Îles de 1143–1146

I

Ilay 974
 Île Cavallo 1253
 Île d'Aix 642
 Île d'Oléron 644
 Île d'Ouessant 443, 444
 Île de Batz 441
 Île de Bréhat 432
 Île de Chatou 204
 Île de Molène 443, 444
 Île de Noirmoutier..... 630
 Île de Porquerolles..... 1144
 Île de Port-Cros 1145
 Île de Ré 638
 Île de Sein 453
 Île du Levant..... 1145
Îles d'Hyères ... 1143–1146
 Îles de Lérins 1168
 Îles Lavezzi 1253
 illuminated manuscripts..... 1291
 Impressionism 1297
 Ingres, Jean-Auguste-Dominique 1295
 insurance, car..... 39, 42, 74

Inter-Celtic Festival 468,
Festive France colour section
 Internet access 75
invasion beaches, Normandy.. 374–378, 386
invasion beaches, Normandy 374
 Irancy 573
 Iraq war 1287
Isère valley 996–1001
Isère valley, the upper.. 997
 Isola 1114
 Ispagnac 938
 Itxassou 773

J

Jacobins 1275
 Jardins d'Eyrignac..... 700
 Jarnac 653
 Jaurès, Jean 892
 Joan of Arc .. 275, 359, 361, 496, 498, 502, 504, 543, 1271
 Joigny 567
 Josephine, Empress..... 215
 Jospin, Lionel 1285
 Josselin 464
 Jouqueviel 929
 Juan-les-Pins 1173
 Julius Caesar..... 576, 1268
 Jumièges 354
 Juppé, Alain..... 1285, 1286
Jura, the 963–975
Jura, the..... 960

K

Kassovitz, Mathieu..... 1314
 Kaysersberg 315
 Kernaria-an-Isquit..... 431
 Kernascléden..... 463
 kinetic art..... 1303
 Kintzheim..... 314
 Klein, Yves..... 1302
 Koolhaas, Rem 1312

L

L'Aber-Wrac'h 442
 L'Almanarre 1142
 L'Alpe d'Huez 1012

L'Epau, abbaye de	560	France colour section	Le Corbusier....	1133, 1192, 1309
L'Espérou.....	943	Lac d'Artouste	796	Le Crestet.....	1057
L'Espinouse.....	871	Lac d'Espingo	808	Le Creusot.....	590
L'île Rousse	1221-1223	Lac d'Ilhéou.....	799	Le Croisic.....	483
La Bambouseraie	946	Lac d'Oô.....	807	Le Crotoy.....	239
La Bâtie	1017	Lac de Bious-Artigues..	795	Le Faou	448
La Baule	482	Lac de Chalain	973	Le Faouët	463
La Bourboule.....	915	Lac de Fabrèges	796	Le Fel.....	932
La Brèche de Roland ..	801	Lac de Serre-Ponçon .	1020	Le Gouffre.....	434
La Brée-les-Bains	645	Lac des Bouillousses ..	837	Le Grand Tureau	967
La Brigue	1116	Lac du Bourget.....	995	Le Grau-du-Roi	856
La Bussière	506	Lac Gentau.....	795	Le Havre	350-353
La Capte.....	1142	Lacaune.....	871	Le Havre	351
La Cavalerie.....	943	Lacaze	872	Le Laus	1019
La Chaise-Dieu.....	953	Lacrouzette.....	893	Le Lavandou.....	1147
La Chapelle	1010	Lacuoile.....	926	Le Lioran.....	919
La Chapelle-Aubareil ..	704	Lake Geneva	975-977	Le Mans	556-560
La Chapelle-sur-Vire....	404	Lamalou-les-Bains	869	Le Mans	557
La Ciotat.....	1137	Lamarque	669	Le Mas d'Azil.....	810
La Clusaz.....	982	Lamartine, Alphonse ..	607	Le Monétier-les-Bains ..	1015
La Cotinière	645	Lamotte-Beuvron	528	Le Mont-Dore.....	913
La Coupole	230	Lampaul	444	Le Moulinet.....	946
La Couvertoirade	943	Lampaul-Guimiliau	438	Le Nain, Louis	1292
La Croix-Valmer.....	1147	Landévennec	448	Le Palais	470
La Ferrière-sur-Risle ..	394	Langeais	538	Le Parc, Julio.....	1303
La Ferté-Fresnel	398	Langres	287	Le Pen, Jean-Marie	1286
La Foce.....	1263	language	1339-1355	Le Pont-de-Montvert....	941
La Forêt-Fouesnant	459	language courses..	66, 1341	Le Pouget.....	862
La Garde-Freinet	1150	Languedoc	839-898	Le Puy-en-Velay ..	949-953,
La Grande Motte	855	Languedoc	842-843	Walking in France colour section
La Grave	1014	Lannion	436	Le Puy-en-Velay	951
La Gurras.....	999	Lanslebourg.....	1002	Le Rozier	938
La Hague	387	Laon	265-267	Le Sidobre	893
La Maline	Walking in France colour section	La-Pierre-St-Martin	780	Le Struthof concentration camp	313
La Marana	1213	Larrau	778	Le Teich	676
La Maurienne.....	1014	Larressingle	897	Le Thot	704
La Pallice	639	Laruns.....	794	Le Touquet	236
La Palmyre	647	Lascaux	24, 704	Le Tour.....	987
La Palud-sur-Verdon ..	1106	Lassay-sur-Croisne	527	Le Tréport	346
La Plagne	998	Lastours	878	Le Val-Hulin	548
La Réole	673	Latour-de-Carol	837	Le Vigan	944
La Rhune	771	laundry	75	Lectoure	896
La Roche Maurice	439	Lauzerte.....	749	Ledoux, Claude	1308
La Rochelle	631-638	Lavelanet	814	Léger, Fernand	1301
La Rochelle	632	Lavezzi, Îles	1253	Lérins, Îles de	168
La Roque		Lavier, Bertrand	1303	Les Andelys	363
St-Christophe	703	Le Bec-Hellouin	393	Les Antiques.....	1075
La Roque-Gageac	707	Le Bleynard	941	Les Arcs.....	998
La Rouchefoucauld	656	Le Bourg	432	Les Arques	732
La Salvetat-sur-Agout .	871	Le Bourg-d'Oisans	1012	Les Aspres	833
La Sauve-Majeure	673	Le Bourget	210	Les Baux-de-Provence.....	1076
La Savinaz.....	999	Le Brévent.....	987, Walking in France colour section	Les Deux-Alpes.....	1013
La Targette	261	Le Brun, Charles.....	1293	Les Épesses	631
La Tournette	991	Le Casset	1015	Les Eyzies-de-Tayac	700
La Turbie.....	1191	Le Cateau-Cambrésis ..	257
Labouiche.....	810	Le Caylar	944
Lac Bersau	796	Le Château	645
Lac d'Anterne.....	Walking in	Le Conquet	442

Les Gets 978
 Les Goupillières 540
 Les Haras 789
 Les Hautes-Rivières 291
 Les Houches 987
 Les Landes 677
 Les Lecques 1138
 Les Milandes 706
 Les Rousses 974
 Les Sables-d'Olonne 629
 Les Salins d'Hyères 1143
Les Stes-Maries-de-la-Mer ... 1087–1089, Festive France colour section
 Les Trois Vallées 996
 Les Vans 949
 Les Vigneaux 1017
 lesbian travellers 73
 Lescun 791
 Leszczynski, Stanislas 325
 Levant, Île du 1145
 Lewarde 255
 Licq 779
Lille 246–253
Lille 247
 Limeuil 700
Limoges 713–717
Limoges 714
Limousin, the 713–728
Limousin, the 682
 Limoux 817
 Lisieux 395
 Livarot 397
 living in France 65
 Loches 517
 Locmariaquer 475
 Locronan 450
 Lodève 862
 Logibar 779
Loire châteaux 513
Loire valley, the ... 489–560
Loire valley, the ... 492–493
 Longueval 264
 Lons-le-Saunier 969
 Lorgues 1102
 Lorient 467, Festive France colour section
 Lorp-Sentaraille 814
 Lorrain, Claude 1293
Lorraine 322–336
Lorraine 296–297
Lot valley, the 728–754
Lot valley 738–739
 Loti, Pierre 641
 Loue, River 968
 Louis VII 501
 Louis XI 523
 Louis XIII 285, 525
 Louis XIII 1272

Louis XIV 148, 209, 212, 486, 514, 768, 1272, 1273
 Louis XV 212, 325, 1274
 Louis XVI 1274
 Louis XVIII 1276
 Louis-Philippe ... 131, 212, 536, 1276
Lourdes 787–789
 Luberon ... 1092, Walking in France colour section
 Luc 949
 Luchon 806
 Luçon 629
 Lugdunum
 Convenarum 805
 Lumière, August and
 Louis 1137, 1313
 Lutour valley 799
 Luzech 737
 Luz-St-Sauveur 799
Lyon 1029–1043
Lyon 1030–1031
Lyon and the Presqu'île, Vieux 1034

M

Maastricht referendum 1284
 Macinaggio 1215
 Mâcon 607
Mâconnais, the ... 609–611
 magazines 55
 Maginot Line 334
 mail 75
 Mailly-le-Château 573
 Malestroit 465
 Malle, Louis 1313
 Malmaison 215
 Malo-les-Bains 224
 Manet, Edouard 1297
 mannerism 1291
 Mansart, François 1307
 Mansart, Jules
 Hardouin 1308
 maps 75
 Marais Poitevin 628
 Marcadieu valley 798
 Marciac Festive France colour section
 Marcilhac-sur-Célé 743
 Marennes 644
 Margaux 669
 Margeride, the 923
 Mariana 1214
 Marquay 699

Marquenterre Bird
 Sanctuary 238
 Marquet, Albert 1300
Marseille 1123–1136
Marseille 1124
Marseille, Le Vieux Port 1128–1129
 Martel 711
 Martel, Charles 1269
 Marvejois 927
 Mas de la Pyramide ... 1075
 Mas Soubeyran 946
 Mas-Cabardès 879
Massif Central, the 899–956
Massif Central, the 902
 Massif de l'Estérel 1161
Massif des Maures 1148–1151
 Massif Montmirail-St-Armand 1058
 Master of Moulins, the 1291
 Matignon Agreement .. 1279
 Matisse, Henri .. 1177, 1186, 1300
 Mazarin, Cardinal 1272
 media 55, 58
 Médicis, Catherine de .. 512, 514, 521, 523, 1271
 Médoc, the 667
 megalithic sites .. 474, 1244, 1247
 Megève 982
 Meissonier, Jean-Louis-Ernest 1295
 Méliès, Georges 1313
 Mende 940–941
 Menthon-St-Bernard ... 991
Menton 1197–1199
 mercantilism 1272
 Mercantour, Parc National du 1113, Walking in France colour section
Mercantour, Parc National du 1112
 Méribel 996
 Merovingian dynasty .. 1269
 Messenger, Annette 1303
Metz 327–331
Metz 328
 Meudon 205
 Meymac 722
 Meyssac 727
 Michelin 904
 Mignard, Pierre 1293
 Mijanès 820
 Millau 934–937
 Millet, Jean-François .. 1296

Millevaches 721–724
 Minerve 877
 Mirepoix 816
 Mitterand, François 115, 580, 586, 653, 1283, 1310 mobile phones 78
 Modane 1002
 Moissac 750, *Walking in
 France* colour section
 Molène, Île de 443, 444
 Molière 865
 Moliqt-les-Bains 834
Monaco 1192–1197
Monaco 1194–1195
 Monastier-sur-Gazeille 955
 Monet, Claude 114, 204, 364, 1297
 money 70, 76
 Monflanquin 740
Monpazier 21, 694–696
 Mons (Languedoc) 870
 Mont Aigoual 942
Mont Blanc 983–988,
Walking in France colour
 section
Mont Blanc 979
 Mont d'Huisnes 375
 Mont de Marsan 677
 Mont Lozère .. 941, *Walking
 in France* colour section
 Mont Rond 975
 Mont Ste-Victoire 1101
Mont St-Michel 15,
 389–392
 Mont Ventoux 1058
 Montagne de la Clape 868
Montagne Noire .. 877–879
 Montauban 748
 Montbéliard 964
 Montcaret 694
 Montceaux-l'Étoile 613
 Mont-Dauphin 1019
 Monte d'Oro 1263
 Monte-Carlo 1193
 Montélimar 1050
 Monthermé 290
 Montignac 703
 Montigny-Sous-
 Chatillon 281
 Mont-Louis 837
 Montolieu 877
Montpellier 849–855
Montpellier 850
 Montreuil-sur-Mer 237
 Montrichard 514
Monts du Cantal,
the .. 918–924, *Walking in
 France* colour section
 Monts du Lyonnais 1043

Montsauche 586
Monts-Dore 913–918,
Walking in France colour
 section
 Montségur 815
 Montsoreau 549
 Moreau, Gustave 1299
 Morellet, François 1303
 Morez 974
 Morgat 448
 Morlaix 437
 Morteau 965
 Morvan, Parc
 Régional du 586
 Morzine 978 motorbikes 44
 Moulin, Jean 863
 mountain biking 963
 Mourèze 862
 Moustiers-Ste-Marie... 1107
 Moux 586
 Mozac 911
Mulhouse 319–322
 Munster 318
 Mur des Vaudois 1017
 Murat 921
 Mur-de-Barrez 920
 Murot 918
 Musée de Plein Air du
 Quercy 743
 Muslims in France 1287

N

Nabis, the 1299
 Najac 746
Nancy 323–327
Nancy 324
Nantes 483–487, *Festive
 France* colour section
Nantes 484
Nantes-Brest
Canal 461–466
 Napoleon Bonaparte 88,
 215, 516, 1238, 1239,
 1240, 1275, 1276
 Napoléon III ... 89, 327, 577,
 1277
Narbonne 866–868
 Nasbinals 925
 Navarrenx 787
Nebbio, the 1218–1221
 Neuville-St-Vaast 262
 Nevers 591
 newspapers 55
 Nexon 719
 Niaux 811

Nice 1179–1189
Nice 1180–1181
 Nietzsche, Friedrich... 1191
Nîmes 843–848
Nîmes 844
 Niort 627
 Niou 444
Nive, River 772–777
 Noirmoutier-en-l'Île 630
 Nolette 240
 Nonza 1217
Normandy 337–405
Normandy 340
 Normandy, Battle of ... 398, 403 north, the 219–292
north, the 220–221
 Nostradamus 1073
 Nouveau Réalisme 1302
 Nouvel, Jean... 1311, 1312
 Noyers-sur-Serein 572
 Noyon 270
 Nozeroy 972

O

Obernai 311
 ochre mines 1091
 Oger 281
 Olargues 870
 Oléron, Île de 644
 Oloron-Ste-Marie 790
 Omonville-la-Petite 387
 Onet-le-Château 928
 opening hours 77
 Operation Dynamo 223
 Oradour-sur-Glane 717
Orange 1052–1054,
Festive France colour
 section
Orange 1052
 Orb valley 869
 Orbec 397
 Orbiel valley 878
 Orival 915
 Orglandes 375
Orléans 495–501
Orléans 496
 Ornnans 968
 Orphism 1301
 Orthez 786
Ossau valley 794–797
 Oustréham 376
 Ouessant, Île d' ... 443, 444
outdoor activities... 20, 23, 61–64, 319, 936, *Walking
 in France* colour section

oysters 643

P

Paimpol 431

Paimpont 417

Paolive, Bois de 949

Palaggiu 1248

Palavas 856

Paradiski 998

paragliding 936

Paray-le-Monial 612

PARIS 83–201

Paris 86–87

accommodation 99–106

airports 90

Arc de Triomphe, the 111 arrival in Paris 89

Auteuil 154

bars 165–177

Bastille 131

Bastille 126–127

Beauborg 124

Beauborg 122

Beaux Quartiers 153

Belleville 161

Bercy 163

Bibliothèque Nationale ... 121, 153 boat trips 98, 99

Bois de Boulogne 154

Bois de Vincennes 164

buses 96 cabaret 182

cafés 164–177

campsites 106

Canal St-Martin 159

catacombs 151

Cathédrale de

Notre-Dame 108

Centre Georges

Pompidou 123, 1310

Champs-Élysées 110–114

Champs-Élysées 110–111

children's Paris 193

cinema 188

Cinémathèque 163

circus 194

Cité des Enfants 160, 193

Cité des Sciences et de l'Industrie 159

city transport 93

classical music 184

clubs 183

concert venues 184

Conciergerie 108

crypte archéologique 109 dance 190

department stores 196

disabled travellers 97

drinking 164–180

driving 97

eating 164–180

Eiffel Tower 146

ethnic restaurants 178

Eurostar 89, 91

festivals 185, 200

film 188

funfairs 194

Galeries nationales 113

gay Paris 185–187

gourmet restaurants 179

Goutte d'Or 158

Grand Palais 113

hostels 105

Hôtel de Ville 124

hotels 100–105

Île de la Cité 107–110

Île St-Louis 131

Île St-Louis 126–127

information 199

Institut du Monde Arabe... 133, 1311

Jardin d'Acclimatation 193

Jardin des Plantes 137

Jardin du Luxembourg 21,

141

Jewish quarter 128

kids' Paris 193

kilomètre zero 109

La Voie Triomphale... 110–111

Le Mémorial de la

Déportation 109

Les Halles 122–124

Les Halles 122

Les Invalides 148

lesbian Paris 185–187

listings 199

Louvre, the 23, 115–119,

1307, 1310

Madeleine, the 120

Marais, the 124

Marais, the 126–127

markets 198

Mémorial de la Shoah 130

Ménilmontant 161

metro, the 96

méto, the 94–95

Montmartre 156–160

Montmartre 156

Montparnasse 150

mosque 137

Moulin Rouge 155, 182

Musée Carnavalet 125

Musée d'Orsay 141

Musée de l'Armée 148

Musée de l'Erotisme 158

Musée de l'Histoire de

France 125

Musée du Louvre 12,

115–119, 1307, 1310

Musée du Quai Branly 147

Musée Jacquemart-

André 112

Musée Maillol 149

Musée National d'Art

Moderne 123

Musée National du Moyen-

Âge 133

Musée Picasso 128

Musée Rodin 149

Muséum National d'Histoire

Naturelle 137

museum pass 92

music 180–185

nightlife 180–185

Observatoire 151

opera 185

Opéra District 119–122

Opéra-Bastille 131,

185, 1310

Opéra-Garnier 120

Orangerie 114

Palais de Chaillot 143

Palais de Justice 108

Palais de Tokyo 143

Palais Royal 121

Panthéon 136

Parc de la Villette 159

Parc des Buttes-

Chaumont 160

Parc Floral 194

Parc Zoologique 194

parking 97

passages 120

Père-Lachaise cemetery .. 161

Père-Lachaise cemetery .. 162

Pigalle 158

place de la Concorde 113

place des Abbesses 155

place des Vosges 129

place du Tertre 156

place Vendôme 121

Pompidou Centre... 123, 1310

Pont-Neuf 107

Promenade Plantée 163

public transport 93

Quartier Latin 132–137

Quartier Latin 134–135

restaurants 164–180

Sacré-Coeur 157

Sainte-Chapelle 108

shopping 194–199

Sorbonne 133

sports 191

St-Étienne-du-Mont 136

St-Germain 137

St-Germain 138–139

St-Ouen flea market 157

St-Séverin church 132

student accommodation .. 105

student restaurants 176

taxis 96

theatre 189

tourist information 92

trains 89

Trocadéro 144–145

Ulieries 114

Union Centrale des Arts

Décoratifs 119

vegetarian restaurants 175

youth hostels 105

Paris, around 201–216

Paris, around 201

parlements, the 1274

Parnay 548

Parreno, Philippe 1304

- Parthenay 626
 Pasqua, Charles 1285
 Pasteur, Louis.....968, 971
 Patrimonio 1219
Pau 782–785
Pau 782
 Pauillac 669
Pays Basque, the..758–780
Pays d’Auge, the ..395–399
Pays de Sault, the 814–817
 Peace of Rijswijk 1273
 Pegasus Bridge 377
 Pei, I.M. 1310
 pelota 61
 Penne 747
 Penne-d’Agenais 739
 people 11
 Pepin 1269
 perfume (Grasse)..... 1170
Périgord 683–710
Périgord 682
Périgord Noir 697
Périgueux 684–688
Périgueux 685
 Pérols-sur-Vézère 723
 Péronne 264
 Pérouges 1044
Perpignan 825–828
Perpignan..... 826
 Perrault, Claude..... 1307
 Perret, Auguste...351, 1309
 Perros-Guirec 434
 Pétaïn, Maréchal..... 1279
 pétanque 61
 pets, travelling with 31
 Peyragudes 808
 Peyriac-de-Mer..... 868
 Peyrusse-le-Roc..... 742
 Pézenas 865
 Philippe, Count of Valois 1270
 phones 77
 Piana 1231
 Piano, Renzo 1310
 Pic Blanc 1013
 Pic Castérau..... 796
 Pic de la Sagette 796
 Pic du Canigou..... 835
 Pic du Midi d’Ossau..... 795
 Picabia, Francis 1301
 Picasso, Pablo... 128, 1101, 1171, 1300, 1301
 Pierrefonds 270
 Pinceman, Jean-Pierre..1303
 Pineau des Charentes .. 648
 Pissarro, Camille 1297
 Plouescat 441
 Plougrescant 434
 Plouha 431
 Ploumanac’h 434
 Point Sublime Walking in France colour section
 Pointe des Lessières.. 1001
 Pointe du Grouin 424
 Pointe du Raz 451
Poitiers 619–623
Poitiers 620
 Poitiers, battle of 1269, 1270
Poitou 619–631
Poitou-Charentes..615–678
Poitou-Charentes 618
 police 70
 Poligny 971
 Pompidou, Georges ... 1283
 Pont d’Arc 23, 947
 Pont d’Espagne..... 798
 Pont d’Ouilly 400
 Pont du Diable..... 831
 Pont du Gard..... 848
 Pontarlier 967
 Pont-Audemer 393
 Pont-Aven 461
 Pontigny 570
 Pontivy 464
 Pontorson 392
 popes, Avignon 1060
 Porquerolles, île de..... 1144
 Portalet, Fort du 793
 Port Grimaud..... 1157
 Port-Clos 432
 Port-Cros, île de..... 1145
Porto 1229–1231
 Porto-Vecchio 1254
 Portsall 442
 Port-Vendres 830
 post offices 75
 Post-Impressionism... 1299
 Pouilly 609
 Poussin, Nicolas..... 1293
 Pozières 264
 Prades 833
 Prafrance..... 946
 Prats-de-Mollo 832
 Presqu’île de Giens ... 1142
 Presqu’île de Quiberon.. 468
 Presqu’île de Rhuys 481
 Prieuré de Serrabona ... 833
 Primiticcio 1292
 Prissé 609
 Propriano 1243
Provence 1051–1118
Provence..... 1026–1027
Provence, northeast .. 1112 public holidays 77
 Puilaurens 822
 Pujols..... 739
 Puy Aillaud..... 1018
 Puy de Dôme..... 909
 Puy de Pariou..... 909
 Puy de Sancy 914,
Walking in France colour section
 Puy-l’Évêque 737
 Puylobier 1101
Pyrenees, the 755–838
Pyrenees, the..... 758–759
 Pyrénées, Parc National des..... 781
Pyrénées, Parc National des..... 792

Q

- Quarton, Enguerrand.. 1291
 Quénécan Forest..... 463
 Quéribus 823
 Quérigut 820
 Queyras, Parc Régional du..... 1020, Walking in France colour section Queyras, Parc Régional du 1021
Quiberon 468–470
 Quillan 820
Quimper 454–458
Quimper 455
 Quinéville 386
 Quinson 1108

R

- racism 71
 radio 55
 Raffarin, Jean-Pierre... 1288
 rail passes 30, 38
rail routes, France ... 36–37 rail travel to France 29–31, 34 rail travel within France 35–39
 Rainbow Tribe, the 706
 Rainier of Monaco, Prince 1192, 1194
 Ramatuelle..... 1157
 Rappeneau, Jean-Pierre 1314
 Rasteau 1058
 Ré, Île de 638
 Realism (in art)..... 1296
 Redon 466
 Redon, Odilon 1299

refuge huts 49
 Regency, the..... 1274
Région des Lacs (Haut Jura) 973–975
Reims 272–279
Reims 272
 religious wars 1271
 Renaissance
 architecture..... 1307
Rennes 413–417
Rennes 413
 Rennes-le-Château 819
 Renoir, Jean..... 1313
 Renoir, Pierre-
 Auguste ..142, 205, 1176,
 1298 Resistance, the..... 1279 restaurants..... Cafés,
 bistros and brasseries
 colour section
 Revel..... 878
 Revin 291
 Revolution, the French ..88,
 128, 1274
Rhône valley,
the 1029–1051
Rhône valley,
the 1026–1027
 Ribeauvillé 315
 Ribérac 690
 Richard the Lionheart..363,
 548, 711, 1270
 Richelieu, Cardinal 1272
 Richemont 653
 Rièges, Boise des 1086
 Riez..... 1107
 Rigny-Ussé..... 540
 Rimbaud, Arthur 289
 Riom 910
 Rioux 651
 Riquewihr..... 315
 river trips 43
Riviera, the
 French..... 1163–1199
 Rixheim..... 322
 Robespierre,
 Maximilien..... 1275
Rocamadour 728–730
 Rochechouart 718
Rochefort 640–642
 Rochefort-en-Terre 465
 Rochemenier 547
 Rocher Bonnevie..... 921
 Rocher Bredons 922
 Rodez 928
 Rodin, Auguste 149, 205
 Rogers, Richard.. 1310, 1312
 Rohmer, Eric..... 1314
 Roman architecture..... 1305

Romanesque
 architecture..... 1305
 Romans-sur-Isère..... 1048
 Romanticism (art) 1295
 Romorantin-Lanthenay.. 527
 Ronchamp 963
 Roquebrune..... 1192
 Roquefère..... 879
 Roquefixade 814
 Roquefort-sur-Soulzon.. 937
 Rosa, Henri di 1303
 Roscoff 439
 Rosheim 312
 Rosso 1292
 Rouault, Georges 1300
 Roubaix 253
Rouen 355–363
Rouen..... 356
 Rouffiac-des-Corbières...824
 Rougon..... 1106
 Rousse, Île de.. 1221–1223
 Rousseau,
 Jean-Jacques 994
 Rousseau, Théodore .. 1296
Roussillon..... 824–837
Roussillon 818
 Roussillon..... (village) 1091
 Route des Grandes
 Alpes..... 975, Walking in
 France colour section
 Route des Sapins..... 973
Route du Vin 311–315
 Route Napoléon 1109
 Routes des Pierres Fortes de Savoie..... 999
Roya valley 1115–1117
 Royal, Ségolène 1290
Royan 645–647
 Rue 239
 rugby 60
 Rustrel 1092
 Rwanda 1284
 Ryes 375

S

Sablét 1058
 Sablières..... 949
 Sabres 677
 safety 70, 71
 Saillac 727
 Saillagouse 837
 Saillant..... 917
 Saint-Phalle, Niki de... 1302
 Sainte-Foy-de-
 Tarentaise 999
Saintes 648–650

Saintes 649
 Saissac 877
 Salernes..... 1103
 Salers..... 921
 Salles-de-Béarn..... 786
 Samoëns 979
 Sancerre 507
 sans-culottes, the..... 1275
Saône valley, the.. 604–609
 Sare 772
 Sarkozy, Nicolas..... 1288
Sarlat 697–700
Sarlat..... 698
 Sarran..... 724
 Sarrance 791
 Sartène..... 1246
 Sartre, Jean-Paul..... 353
 Sarzeau 481
 Saulieu 585
Saumur 544–547
 Saunière, Abbé
 Bérenghier 819
 Sauternes 674
 Sauveterre-de-Béarn.... 786
 Sauveterre-de-
 Rouergue 929
 Sauzon 470
Saverne 308–310
 Savines-le-Lac..... 1020
 Scandola, Réserve Naturel de 1228, Walking in
 France colour section
 School of Roads and Bridges 1309
 scooters 44
 Second Republic, the.. 1277
 secret massacre
 (Algerians) 1281
 Sedan 291
 Ségala, the 929
 Séguret..... 1058
 Sein, Île de..... 453
 Sélestat 313
 self-catering 47
 Semnoz mountains..... 992
 Semur-en-Auxois 578
 Sénanque, Abbaye de .. 1091
Sens 565–567
 Senta 780
 Sérignan-du-Comtat .. 1055
 Serre Chevalier..... 1015
 Sérusier, Paul..... 1299
Sète..... 856–858
 Seurat, Georges 1299
 Seven Years War 1274
 Sèvres 210
 shopping 68,
 Sillans-la-Cascade 1103
 Silvacane, abbaye de. 1093

- Silvanès, abbaye de..... 937
 Sisteron 1110
 Sixt..... 980, Walking in France colour section skiing23, 62, 803, 808, 915, 963. 980, 981, 987, 1013
 smoking..... 67
 snowboarding..... 62
 Soissons 267
 Solignac 719
Sologne, the 526–528
 Solutré-Pouilly 609
Somme
battlefields 260–264
 Somme estuary 239
 Sommières 849
 Sorges 692
 Sospel 1115
 Souillac..... 710
 Soulages, Pierre 1302
 Souville, Fort de 334
 Spoerri, Daniel..... 1302
sports 59–64
 St Bartholomew's Day, massacre of..... 1271
 Stade de France 205
 St-Aignan 515
 St-André-des-Arques... 733
 St-Antonin-Noble-Val... 747
 St-Armand-de-Coly..... 705
 St-Benoît-sur-Loire..... 504
 St-Bertrand-de-Comminges 805
 St-Brieuc 430
 St-Brisson 586
 St-Céré 731
 St-Cirque-Lapopie..... 736
 St-Claude 974
 St-Cosme 533
 St-Dalmas-de-Tende.. 1116
St-Denis 202–206
St-Denis 203
 St-Émilien 671
 St-Estèphe..... 670
 St-Étienne 955
 St-Étienne-de-Baïgorry.. 774
 St-Étienne-de-Tinée... 1114
 St-Florent..... 1218
 St-Flour..... 922
 St-Gelven 463
 St-Georges-sur-Loire... 555
 St-Germain 210
 St-Germain-de-Confolens 657
 St-Girons 813
 St-Guilhem-le-Désert... 860
 St-Hippolyte 965
 St-Honorat..... 1168
 St-Jacques 481
 St-Jean-de-Côle..... 691
St-Jean-de-Luz... 767–769
 St-Jean-du-Gard 945
 St-Jean-le-Thomas..... 389
 St-Jean-Pied-de-Port... 775
 St-Junien 718
 St-Laurent-de-Médoc... 670
 St-Laurent-en-Grandvaux 974
 St-Léger-sous-Beauvray 589
 St-Léonard-de-Noblat.. 720
 St-Léon-sur-Vézère 704
 St-Lizier 814
 St-Lô 403
 St-Macaire 673
St-Malo 420–424
St-Malo 420
 St-Marcel 465
 St-Marsal..... 833
 St-Martin 639
 St-Martin-d'Ardèche... 947
 St-Martin-de-Londres... 859
 St-Martin-du-Canigou.. 834
 St-Martin-en-Haut..... 1044
 St-Martin-Vésubie..... 1115
 St-Maurice-Navacelles.. 944
 St-Maximin-de-la-Ste-Baume 1102
 St-Mihiel 335
 St-Nectaire 916
 St-Nizier-du-Moucherotte 1009
 St-Omer 229
 St-Papoul 878
 St-Paul-de-Mausole... 1075
 St-Paul-de-Vence..... 1177
 St-Père 583
 St-Pierre-de-Chartreuse..... 1011
 St-Pierre (île d'Oléron).. 645
 St-Pierre-la-Palud..... 1043
 St-Point 610
 St-Pol-de-Léon 441
 St-Pons-de-Thomières.. 870
 St-Quay-Portrieux 431
 St-Raphaël 1162
St-Rémy-de-Provence..... 1073–1075
 St-Romain-en-Gal..... 1046
 St-Sauveur-en-Puisaye.. 568
 St-Sauveur-sur-Tinée.. 1115
 St-Savin (Poitou) 625
 St-Savin (Pyrenees) 797
 St-Thégonnec 438
St-Tropez 1151–1156
St-Tropez 1152–1153
 St-Urcize..... 925
 St-Vaast-la-Hougue 386
 St-Valéry-en-Caux 347
 St-Valéry-sur-Somme... 239
 St-Véran..... 1021
 St-Viâtre 528
 St-Wandrille 354
 Ste-Anne d'Auray... Festive France colour section
 Ste-Engrâce 780
 Ste-Énimie 938
 Ste-Marguerite..... 1168
 Ste-Marie-de-Campan.. 804
 Ste-Marie-du-Mont 386
Ste-Maxime..... 1157–1159
 Stevenson, R.L. 939, 941, 955, Walking in France colour section
Strasbourg .. 22, 299–308
Strasbourg 300
 student accommodation.. 48
 studying in France 66
 Sully-sur-Loire 504
 Superbagnères..... 808
 Super-Besse..... 918
 Super-Lioran..... 919
 Supports-Surfaces group 1303
 surfing 63
 Surrealism..... 1301
 swimming 63
 Symbolists, the..... 1299

T

- Tachisme 1302
 Taillefer 992
 Tain-l'Hermitage 1047
 Taizé 611
 Talleyrand, Prince de... 516
 Talloires..... 991
 Talmont 647
 Tarniès 704
 Tanguy, Yves..... 1301
 Tapestry of the Apocalypse 551
 Tarbes 789
 Tati, Jacques 1314
 Tautavel 828
 Tavant 544
 teaching English 65
 Tech valley 831
 telephones 77
 television 58
 Tende..... 1116
 Terror, the..... 1275
 Tesse-Madeleine 402
 theft 70

Thiepval 264
 Thiers 954
 Thiezac 919
 Thines 949
 Third Estate, the 1275
Third Republic,
the 1277–1279
 Thiviers 691
 Thonac 704
 Thonon-les-Bains 975
 Thoronet, Abbaye du... 1102
 Thuès-entre-Valls 836
 Thury-Harcourt 399
 Tiberi, Jean 1285
 Tignes 999
 time 79
 Tinguely, Jean 1302
 Tintin 524
 tipping 67
 toilets 67
 Tonnerre 573
 Tonneville 387
 Torigni-sur-Vire 404
 Toulon 1139
Toulouse 879–888
Toulouse 880
 Toulouse-Lautrec,
 Henri 890, 1298
 Tour de France .. 16, 59, 191
 Tour des Cévennes 939
 Tour du Mont Blanc 987
 Tour, Georges de la 1292 tour operators 33
 tourist offices 79
 Tournus 606
Tours 528–534
Tours 529
 Tourtour 1103
 train passes 30, 38
train routes, France..36–37
trains to France..29–31, 34
trains within France 35–39
 Trascaon-sur-Ariège 810 travel agents 33
 Treasure of Vix 575
 Trébeurden 435
 Trégastal 435, Walking in
France colour section
 Tréguier 434, Walking in
France colour section
 Treignac 723
 Trémazan 442
 Trouville 368
Troyes 281–286
 Truffaut, François 1313
 Tulle 727
 Turenne 726
 Turquant 548

U

Urdos 794
 Urrugne 769
 Ussel 722
 Utah Beach 386
 Uzérche 725
 Uzès 848
 Uzeste 674

V

Vacqueyras 1058
 Vaison-la-Romaine 1056
 Val d'Enfer, the 1077
 Val d'Isère 1000
 Valance 1049
 Valcabrière 805
 Valdois, the 1018
 Valentin, Moise 1292
 Vallauris 1169
 Valleraugue 943
 Valloire 1014
 Vallon 947
 Vallouise 1017
 Valras 868
 Van Gogh, Vincent 204,
 1075, 1082, 1300

Vannes 476–478

Vannes 476

Vanoise, Parc National de la 1002, Walking in
France colour section

Vanoise, Parc National de la 997

Varengeville 347

Vassieux-en-Vercors... 1010

Vauvenargues 1101

Vauville 387

Vaux 573

Vaux, Fort de 335

Vaux-le-Vicomte 209

vegetarian food 52, 175

Venarey-les-Laumes.... 576

Vence 1177

Vendée, the 629–631

Vercingétorix 904, 1268

Vercors massif..1009–1011,
Walking in France colour
 section

Verdun 332–336

Verne, Jules 243

Vernet, Horace 1295

Vernet-les-Bains 834

Vernier, Pierre 968

Versailles ...211–213, 1273

Vézelay 582–584

Vézère valley, the..700–705

Via Domitia 849

Viam 723

Viaud, Julien 641

Vichy 911–913

Vichy government, the... 1279

Vic-sur-Cère 919

Vieillevie 932

Vienne.. 1044–1046, Festive
France colour section

Vietnam war 1281

Vigo, Jean 1313

Vilar, Jean 1061

Villa Kérylos 1191

Villandraut 674

Villard-de-Lans 1009

Villars 691

Villat, Claude 1303

Villocroze 1103

Villedieu-les-Poêles 404

Villefranche 611

Villefranche-de-
 Confient 835

Villefranche-de-

Rouergue 744–746

Villefranche-sur-Mer ... 1189

Villeneuve-lès-Avignon... 1071

Villeneuve-sur-Lot 738

Villeneuveville 862

Villepin, Dominique
 de 1288, 1289

Villers 965

Villers-Bretonneux 264

Vilmout, Jean-Luc 1303

Vimoutiers 397

Vimy Ridge 260

Vincelottes 573

Vinci, Leonardo da 536,
 1292

Vinzelles 609

Vire 404

visas 72

Vitrac 699

Vitré 418

Vix 575, 1268

Vizzavona 1263

Voie Sacrée, La ("Sacred Way") 335

Voiron 1011

Volcans d'Auvergne, Parc
Régional des .. 903–924

voltage 72

Volvic 911

Vosges

mountains 308–319

Vouet, Simon 1293

Vuillard, Édouard 1300

W

- walking61, 291, 319, 527, 775, 798, 803, 807, 904, 911, 915, 916, 987, 991, 1232, Walking in France colour section
- war cemeteries.....240, 259, 263, 375
- war memorials 19, 261, 264, 335, 373, 375
- War of Austrian Succession 1274
- War of the Spanish Succession 1273
- Wars of Religion ...88, 485, 536, 632, 1271
- water sports63
- water-jousting..... 857
- Waterloo, battle of..... 1276
- Watteau, Jean-Antoine..1294
- weather 12
- websites79
- White Terror, the 1276
- William the Conqueror 398
- windsurfing 63
- wine14, 52, 224, 273, 276, 279, 298, 311, 411, 494, 563, 571, 572, 601, 609, 611, 667, 668, 684, 694, 760, 961, 1028, 1055, 1058, 1204
- wine bars.....Cafés, bistros and brasseries colour section
- winter sports23
- Wissant231
- Wissembourg 310
- women travellers68
- working in France65
- World War I...256–264, 270, 327, 332–336, 1278
- World War II.....223, 259, 262, 313, 373, 374–378, 398, 403, 445, 586, 1279
- Wright, Wilbur.....558, 559

Y

- Yonne, River572
- youth hostels..... 48
- Yvoire.....976

Z

- Zola, Émile..... 647
- Zonza..... 1256

Map symbols

maps are listed in the full index using coloured text

	Chapter division boundary	★	Bus stop
	International boundary		Fuel station
	Regional boundary		Point of interest
	Autoroute	@	Internet café
	Major road		Tourist office/information point
	Minor road		Post office
	Pedestrianized street		Hospital
	Steps		Accommodation
	Underpass or long tunnel		Campsite
	Railway		Gîte d'Étape/Mountain refuge
	TGV line		Cave
	Funicular railway	∴	Ruin
	Footpath		Fort
	River		Battlefield
	Ferry		Lighthouse
	Wall/fortification		Swimming pool
	Gate	○	Statue/memorial
	Bridge/mountain pass		Monastery/abbey
	Cutting		Château
	Mountain range		Market
	Mountain peak		Building
	Rocks		Church
	Swamp		Stadium
	Viewpoint		Cemetery
	Airport		Park
	RER station		Beach
	Métro station		Forest
	Tram stop

We're covered. Are you?

ROUGH GUIDES Travel Insurance

Visit our website at www.roughguides.com/insurance or call:

- T UK: 0800 083 9507
- T Spain: 900 997 149
- T Australia: 1300 669 999
- T New Zealand: 0800 55 99 11
- T Worldwide: +44 870 890 2843
- T USA, call toll free on: 1 800 749 4922

Please quote our ref: Rough Guides books

Cover for over 46 different nationalities and available in 4 different languages.

Rough Guides was founded in 1982 and has offices in London, New York and Delhi. It publishes more than 350 regularly updated travel guides, reference books from iPods to Shakespeare, phrasebooks and maps, and has a list of more than 150 Rough Guide music CDs released by World Music Network.

"I usually take Rough Guides. In my opinion they are the best."

Bill Bryson

"Veritable bibles of what's hot and what's not"

Sunday Times, Johannesburg

"Reliable and intelligently written"

New York Times

Author Picks

Throughout this book, we've used the Rough Guides icon to highlight establishments our authors particularly recommend – a perfectly sited hotel, an atmospheric café, a special restaurant. Each has been sent a "Recommended by Rough Guides" display sticker. The same icon is also used to flag up film and book recommendations in the Contexts section. Please send us your own nominations, which our authors will be happy to check out for future editions.

Accommodation price codes

Hotels and guesthouses in this book have been categorized according to the following price codes, reflecting the price of the cheapest double room in high season. For more details see p.45.

- | | | |
|-------------|-----------|-------------|
| 1 Under €30 | 4 €55-70 | 7 €100-125 |
| 2 €30-40 | 5 €70-85 | 8 €125-150 |
| 3 €40-55 | 6 €85-100 | 9 Over €150 |

Front cover image: Food market, Burgundy © 4cornersimages

Back cover image: Cabanas, Nice © Alamy

Back inside cover image: Porte St-Martin, Paris © Rough Guides, photo by James McConnachie

Rough Guides • Broaden your horizons

Explore every corner of France using the clearest maps of any guide.

Choose where to go and what to see, inspired by dozens of photos.

Read expert background on everything from the wines of Burgundy to French Impressionism.

Rely on our selection of the best places to stay, eat and party, for every budget.

It's like having a local friend help plan your trip.

"Hugely practical . . . the fullest and most up-to-date coverage." Sunday Times, London

OTHER ROUGH GUIDES INCLUDE:

PHRASEBOOK WITH AUDIO FILES

MAP 1:1,100,000

www.roughguides.com

Published by Rough Guides

Distributed by The Penguin
Group