② USED WITH NOUNS DESCRIBING ACTIONS

③ OTHER VERB USES AND PHRASES

④ MODAL PHRASES

① have ◆◆◆ /həv, STRONG hæv/ (has , having , had)

In spoken English, forms of have are often shortened, for example I have is shortened to I've and has not is shortened to hasn't .

1 AUX You use the forms have and has with a past participle to form the present perfect tense of verbs. □ [AUX -ed] Alex has already gone. □ [AUX -ed] My term hasn't finished yet. □ [AUX -ed] What have you found so far? □ Frankie hasn't been feeling well for a long time.

2 AUX You use the form had with a past participle to form the past perfect tense of verbs. □ [AUX -ed] When I met her, she had just returned from a job interview.

3 AUX Have is used in question tags. □ [AUX n] You haven't sent her away, have you?

4 AUX You use have when you are confirming or contradicting a statement containing 'have', 'has', or 'had', or answering a question. □ 'Have you been to York before?'—'Yes we have.'

5 AUX The form having with a past participle can be used to introduce a clause in which you mention an action which had already happened before another action began. □ [AUX -ed] He arrived in San Francisco, having left New Jersey on January 19th.

② have ◆◆◆ /hæ v/ (has , having , had)

Have is used in combination with a wide range of nouns, where the meaning of the combination is mostly given by the noun.

1 VERB [no passive] You can use have followed by a noun to talk about an action or event, when it would be possible to use the same word as a verb. For example, you can say ' I had a look at the photos ' instead of 'I looked at the photos.' □ [v n] I went out and had a walk around. □ [v n] She rested for a while, then had a wash and changed her clothes. □ [v n] I'll have a think about that.

2 VERB [no passive] In normal spoken or written English, people use have with a wide range of nouns to talk about actions and events, often instead of a more specific verb. For example people are more likely to say ' we had ice cream ' or ' he's had a shock ' than 'we ate ice cream', or 'he's suffered a shock'. □ [v n] Come and have a meal with us tonight. □ [v n] She had an operation on her knee at the clinic. □ [v n] His visit had a great effect on them.

③ have ◆◆◆ /hæ v/ (has , having , had)

For meanings 1 to 4 , people often use have got in spoken British English or have gotten in spoken American English, instead of have . In this case, have is pronounced as an auxiliary verb. For more information and examples of the use of 'have got' and 'have gotten', see got .
